28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. That an applicant may have considered a nonmandatory, nonbinding guidance document setting forth uncodified, albeit recommended, standards does not turn the guidance document into applicable approval criteria. South Suburban Sanitary District v. Klamath County, 81 Or LUBA 811 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision requires that site design review be based upon consideration of the "[c]haracteristics of adjoining and surrounding uses," the local government does not err by characterizing adjoining and surrounding uses simply as farm uses, even where the adjoining and surrounding lands contain dwellings, where the lands are zoned for farm and forest uses, where the dwellings are allowed in conjunction with farm and forest uses, and where the purpose of the zones and the comprehensive plan is to protect and conserve farm and forest lands for farm and forest uses. Anderson v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 618 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision allows "public utility facilities, including substations and transmission lines," in a particular zone, the governing body does not err by concluding that a utility facility is "public" so long as it is necessary for the public health, safety, and welfare, even if it is not publicly owned; that a utility facility benefits the public health, safety, and welfare by increasing the overall capacity and redundancy within the larger utility system; and that a utility facility is "public" even if it benefits the public generally and not just residents of the local community. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 81 Or LUBA 633 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provides that a use not listed in a particular zone may be permitted in that zone if it is "of the same general character, or has similar impacts on nearby properties, as do other uses permitted in the zone," the governing body does not err by concluding that a particular use satisfies that criterion even if it has lesser negative impacts than permitted uses. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 81 Or LUBA 633 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a comprehensive plan provision allows "minor navigational improvements" in a particular zone, which it defines as "alterations necessary to provide water access to existing or permitted uses in conservation management units," an interpretation of that provision as not requiring that the use for which the alteration is needed and the alteration itself be located in the same zone is consistent with the provision's express language; however, an interpretation of that provision as allowing alterations that are needed for a use that is not located in a "conservation management unit" is inconsistent the provision's express language. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a comprehensive plan management objective allows "a limited boat dock for transient recreation craft tie-up" in a particular zone, and the uses and activities matrix for the zone allows "docks" without limitation, but a different comprehensive plan provision states that uses and activities matrices are "subordinate" to management objectives and that allowed uses and activities must be "consistent" with the management objectives, a local government errs by allowing nonlimited boat docks in the zone. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision requires that a "declaration of anticipated noise levels" be attached to certain land use approvals and that applicants incorporate noise abatement strategies where noise levels are anticipated to exceed a certain threshold, the word "declaration" anticipates more than a statement from the applicant's attorney, without supporting documents or studies, and a reasonable person would not rely on such statements alone to conclude that the noise threshold is not exceeded. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In considering an application for a relative farm help dwelling, a local government is not limited to considering the commercial farming operation occurring on the property on the date the application is filed, and the local government does not err by considering whether a new crop planted after the application is filed, either alone or in combination with the existing operation, is an "existing commercial farming operation" within the meaning of OAR 660-033-0130(9)(a). Wachal v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 561 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer errs in relying on a 2018 modification to the zoning ordinance which changed the scope of the similar use determination process to conclude that they are not permitted or required to review the merits of a 2017 similar use determination during a subsequent conditional use permit proceeding. Jones v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 448 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0005(5) allow a county to approve a forest template dwelling if, after applying a 160-acre template centered on the subject property, at least seven other "lots or parcels that existed on January 1, 1993, are" within the 160-acre area. A hearings officer's interpretation of a local code provision implementing the statute and the rule to conclude that an applicant failed to meet the seven-lot requirement because two parcels that existed on January 1, 1993, were later reconfigured pursuant to a major partition is inconsistent with the statute and the rule because the administrative rule history of the rule indicates that LCDC did not intend to prohibit an applicant from relying on a post-January 1, 1993 reconfiguration of a parcel so long as "the effect of" the later reconfiguration was not "to qualify a lot, parcel or tract for the siting of a dwelling." Tugaw v. Jackson County, 81 Or LUBA 458 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where comprehensive plan provisions provide, using mandatory language, that certain resource plan and zoning designations shall be used to conserve or protect fish and wildlife habitat from conflicting uses and that land use proposals that have undesirable impacts on those resources shall be reviewed during the plan and zone amendment processes, a local governing body errs in interpreting those provisions to conclude that it may apply nonresource plan and zoning designations to property mapped as fish and wildlife habitat and that any impacts may be evaluated and, if necessary, mitigated during subsequent review of development proposals. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 338 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county code provision provides that a nonconforming use may not be resumed if there is a "discontinuance" for a period greater than one year, the county board of commissioners does not err in interpreting the undefined term "discontinuance" by resorting to the dictionary definition and in applying that interpretation to conclude that a property owner who is actively pursuing permits to complete repairs and upgrades that are required for health and safety reasons, and who is actively responding to appeals of those permits, has not discontinued a nonconforming use. Such an interpretation and application of the term "discontinuance" in the county code provision is not contrary to the term "interruption" in ORS 215.130(7)(a). Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government concludes that certain provisions do not apply to an application merely because they are not "land use regulations," as that phrase is defined in ORS 197.015(11), LUBA will agree with the petitioner that the local government improperly construed the applicable law absent any other explanation from the respondents why the provisions do not apply. Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision requires that uses be conducted "wholly within an enclosed structure"; where the local code defines "structure" as both "[a]nything which is constructed, erected or built and located on or under the ground, or attached to something fixed to the ground," and "[a] walled and roofed building including a gas or liquid storage tank that is principally above ground"; where the first definition was in effect when the enclosed structure requirement was first enacted; and where the second definition was enacted as part of an ordinance that related to compliance with FEMA's requirements to participate in the National Flood Insurance Program, LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of the enclosed structure requirement, relying on the first definition of "structure," to allow a use that is surrounded by building walls, retaining walls, and fences. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local design guideline provides that "[p]rimary building entrances should be oriented toward and located in close proximity to public streets and public street intersections" and that "[p]roperty size, shape and topographical conditions should also be considered," LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of that guideline to allow the primary entrance to a proposed development to be located on the opposite side of the property and oriented away from public streets where the primary entrance would nevertheless be "in close proximity to" those public streets and connected to those public streets with multiple pedestrian connections, and where the triangular shape of the property and a partially adjacent high-speed on-ramp to a highway support the applicant's choice to cluster the proposed development toward the public streets and provide a primary entrance on the opposite side of the property. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision provides that a refinement plan for property within a master plan area must be consistent with the master plan; where the master plan contains an executive summary, a listing of principles, a discussion section after each principle heading, other sections discussing site features and infrastructure strategy, a variety of graphics, and several other exhibits and attachments; where another local code provision provides that the intent of the master plan is to identify the "goals and policies" for development within the master plan area, and where other local code provisions suggest that "goals" and "policies" are different things, a governing body errs in concluding that merely furthering the principles is sufficient to establish consistency with the master plan and in failing to address provisions of the master plan dictating the strategies that development is required to use in order to actualize the principles—that is, in concluding that a refinement plan need only be consistent with the principles as summarized by their headings. Mumper v. City of Salem, 81 Or LUBA 152 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision authorizes the adoption of refinement plans for areas not less than 40 acres in size, where another local code provision authorizes an adjustment of a development standard if the purpose underlying the standard is "equally or better met" by the proposed development, where the 40-acre standard is intended to avoid piecemeal development, where an applicant proposes a 14-acre refinement plan for an area adjacent to an existing refinement plan area, and where the proposed and existing refinement plan areas will be under common ownership and have physically connected elements, a local government does not err in concluding that the 14-acre refinement plan "equally or better" meets the 40-acre standard and, therefore, may be granted an adjustment. Mumper v. City of Salem, 81 Or LUBA 152 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.312(5)(a) does not provide an outright, unqualified entitlement to develop an accessory dwelling unit (ADU) on every property with a single-family dwelling; instead, that statute provides local governments some regulatory discretion in regulating ADUs that could have the effect of prohibiting an ADU on a particular property, so long as the regulation is reasonable and related to "siting and design." Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. For purposes of ORS 197.312(5)(a), which requires cities to allow accessory dwelling units (ADUs) "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," the word "siting" describes a regulation that allows the city to specify the location of an ADU on a site, and it does not allow the city to regulate where in each of the city's residential zones ADUs are allowed based on factors such as traffic, livability, and existing density. Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.312(5)(a), which requires cities to allow accessory dwelling units (ADUs) "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," while regulations prohibiting ADUs on alley access lots, requiring a minimum lot size for ADUs, requiring minimum lot dimensions for ADUs, and limiting ADU occupancy do not relate to "siting" or "design," regulations limiting the percentage of total lot area that can be vehicle use areas, limiting the number of garages or covered parking areas, limiting the dimensions of and requiring minimum setbacks for garages, and limiting driveway widths do relate to "siting" and "design." Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city code provision provides that "[t]he footprint of any other new structure or any horizontal addition requiring at least one footing in ocean bluff areas must be set back from the bluff" a certain distance; where the documents identified by the provision as the resources the city is to consult in order to identify the location of the bluff edge are documents reflecting historic conditions; where grading is not listed as exempt from the requirements of the chapter; where the code does not support the conclusion that the city may, in evaluating the required setback, sever the construction of a structure from the associated grading proposed as site preparation; where the material that the code requires be included in a geological hazard report supports the interpretation that the bluff edge is to be determined based upon existing conditions; and where the code allows variances to be considered to reduce the building setback if the variance helps lessen the risk of erosion or other hazard, an interpretation of the provision as providing that permitted development, such as grading and excavation, can occur prior to establishing the location of the bluff edge is inconsistent with the provision's express language and context for purposes of ORS 197.829(1). Kimbrell v. City of Lincoln City, 81 Or LUBA 10 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. For purposes of a local code provision requiring that a proposed conditional use not "alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties for the primary uses allowed in the zoning district(s) in which surrounding properties are located," the primary use allowed in the Rural Residential Farm Forest 5-Acre zone is the use and occupancy of a dwelling structure, and the local government does not misinterpret the provision in finding that passing by the proposed conditional use on the way to a residence does not limit that use. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision provides that a refinement plan for property within a master plan area must be consistent with the master plan; where the master plan contains an executive summary, a listing of principles, a discussion section after each principle heading, other sections discussing site features and infrastructure strategy, a variety of graphics, and several other exhibits and attachments; where another local code provision provides that the intent of the master plan is to identify the "goals and policies" for development within the master plan area, and where other local code provisions suggest that "goals" and "policies" are different things, a governing body errs in concluding that merely furthering the principles is sufficient to establish consistency with the master plan and in failing to address provisions of the master plan dictating the strategies that development is required to use in order to actualize the principles—that is, in concluding that a refinement plan need only be consistent with the principles as summarized by their headings. Mumper v. City of Salem, LUBA No 2019-106 (Feb 24, 2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision authorizes the adoption of refinement plans for areas not less than 40 acres in size, where another local code provision authorizes an adjustment of a development standard if the purpose underlying the standard is "equally or better met" by the proposed development, where the 40-acre standard is intended to avoid piecemeal development, where an applicant proposes a 14-acre refinement plan for an area adjacent to an existing refinement plan area, and where the proposed and existing refinement plan areas will be under common ownership and have physically connected elements, a local government does not err in concluding that the 14-acre refinement plan "equally or better" meets the 40-acre standard and, therefore, may be granted an adjustment. Mumper v. City of Salem, LUBA No 2019-106 (Feb 24, 2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. 28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.312(5)(a), which requires cities to allow accessory dwelling units (ADUs) "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," while regulations prohibiting ADUs on alley access lots, requiring a minimum lot size for ADUs, requiring minimum lot dimensions for ADUs, and limiting ADU occupancy do not relate to "siting" or "design," regulations limiting the percentage of total lot area that can be vehicle use areas, limiting the number of garages or covered parking areas, limiting the dimensions of and requiring minimum setbacks for garages, and limiting driveway widths do relate to "siting" and "design." *Kamps-Hughes v. 28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city code provision provides that "[t]he footprint of any other new structure or any horizontal addition requiring at least one footing in ocean bluff areas must be set back from the bluff" a certain distance; where the documents identified by the provision as the resources the city is to consult in order to identify the location of the bluff edge are documents reflecting historic conditions; where grading is not listed as exempt from the requirements of the chapter; where the code does not support the conclusion that the city may, in evaluating the required setback, sever the construction of a structure from the associated grading proposed as site preparation; where the material that the code requires be included in a geological hazard report supports the interpretation that the bluff edge is to be determined based upon existing conditions; and where the code allows variances to be considered to reduce the building setback if the variance helps lessen the risk of erosion or other hazard, an interpretation of the provision as providing that permitted development, such as grading and excavation, can occur prior to establishing the location of the bluff edge is inconsistent with the provision's express language and context for purposes of ORS 197.829(1). Kimbrell v. City of Lincoln City, LUBA No 2019-077 (Jan 8, 2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. For purposes of a local code provision requiring that a proposed conditional use not "alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties for the primary uses allowed in the zoning district(s) in which surrounding properties are located," the primary use allowed in the Rural Residential Farm Forest 5-Acre zone is the use and occupancy of a dwelling structure, and the local government does not misinterpret the provision in finding that passing by the proposed conditional use on the way to a residence does not limit that use. York v. Clackamas County, LUBA No 2019-081 (Jan 9, 2020).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A demonstration that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support" an approved commercial activity in conjunction with farm use under ORS 215.283(2)(a), such as a brewery, is not sufficient to demonstrate that the events are "necessary to support" an "existing commercial farm use of the tract," such as the growing of filberts, for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), even where revenue from the brewery "supplements" revenue from the growing of filberts. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In order to add land to a UGB, there must be a demonstrated need for land under the first Goal 14 need factor. Goal 14 prohibits a city from amending its UGB if the UGB has adequate capacity to satisfy the city's urban land needs for the next 20 years, and a city decision that approves a UGB amendment where the undisputed evidence in the record was that the city's UGB has adequate capacity to satisfy the city's urban land needs for the next 20 years must be reversed as prohibited by law. DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 80 Or LUBA 180 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. To the extent that LUBA's holding in Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73, 80, aff'd, 125 Or App 588, 865 P2d 1344 (1993), that the reasoning in Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), extends to a local government's interpretation of a prior land use decision, was correct, it was superseded by ORS 197.829(1), which requires LUBA to affirm "a local government's interpretation of its comprehensive plan and land use regulations" but does not require LUBA to affirm a local government's interpretation of a prior land use decision, findings adopted in support thereof, or conditions of approval attached thereto, which LUBA reviews under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D) to determine whether the local government "[i]mproperly construed the applicable law." M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a prior decision approved a plan amendment and zone change for the subject property and included a condition of approval limiting the type of future development to a "retail shopping center" and the size of future development to a certain square footage of gross leasable area, but where the prior decision approved no specific development, voluntary descriptions, statements, or representations made by the applicant during the prior proceeding regarding the particular store with which the shopping center would be developed are not binding on the applicant in a subsequent site plan review proceeding unless they were memorialized in conditions of approval for the prior decision. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In the context of an application to change the comprehensive plan designation of property to Rural Residential Exception Area, where a comprehensive plan provision provides that "any new Rural Residential Exception Areas need to be justified through initiating a non-resource plan amendment and zone change by demonstrating that the property does not meet the definition of agricultural * * * land," a county correctly determines that an applicant satisfies that provision by producing copies of the county's adopted and acknowledged agricultural lands inventories, which do not include the property. Even where an opponent submits an NRCS soils map into the record, which the opponent argues shows the property's soils constitute agricultural lands, where the NRCS website that the opponent used to prepare the soils map includes a disclaimer regarding the large scale of mapping, stating that "[e]nlargement of maps beyond the scale of mapping can cause misunderstanding of the detail of mapping and accuracy of soil line placement," a reasonable decision-maker would rely on the inventories to conclude that the property is not agricultural land, and a reasonable decision-maker could determine that the NRCS soils map is less credible than the inventories. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 252 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision requires that a minimum of 250 square feet of "outdoor area" be provided for each residential lot and specifically states that the outdoor area may include "decking" and a "covered patio," as long as that covered patio is not "fully enclosed," the local government does not err by concluding that a covered deck that is attached to the dwelling, but not enclosed, can satisfy the minimum outdoor area requirement. Bohan v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 263 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Arguments that a city decision approving a partition affects "livability of [an] existing house" and that the city ignored "impact on the neighborhood" provide no basis for reversal or remand where none of the criteria applicable to land divisions require the city to consider "privacy or livability" in determining whether to approve the land division. Bohan v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 263 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a design guideline for a historic district in a city requires that exterior alterations and additions to historic resources "be designed to be compatible primarily with the original resource, secondarily with adjacent properties, and finally * * * with the rest of the District," where the city council interprets the term "compatible" as not requiring uniformity, and where the petitioner has not demonstrated that that interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose, or underlying policy that provides the basis for that design guideline, LUBA will uphold the city council's conclusion that two proposed new buildings meet the design guideline because they are similar to a historic resource on the same property, to adjacent properties, and to the historic district with respect to some design elements, even where they are dissimilar to adjacent properties with respect to other design elements. NDNA v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 269 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county code provision allows "[p]arks, playgrounds, [and] community centers" in the Rural Residential (RR) zone, where the county code does not include a definition of "park," and where the board of county commissioners county relies upon the dictionary definition of "park" and the types of park uses recognized nationally and found in a nearby city park and in other county parks to conclude that the provision allows (1) year-round use of a portion of RR-zoned property for day camps, retreats, and environmental education programming for a maximum of 100 persons and a weeklong overnight camp serving youth, and (2) the use of another portion of the property "for small social gatherings of its members and guests of up to 500 persons in size for picnics, weddings, and memorials during the months of April through October weather permitting," LUBA will affirm the board of county commissioners' interpretation of the provision, even if a different interpretation might be better. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county code provision allows "campgrounds" in the Rural Residential (RR) zone but not "youth camps," and where the board of county commissioners relies on the definition of "youth camp" elsewhere in the code to conclude that a "youth camp" must be a permanent use, LUBA will affirm the board of county commissioners' interpretation of the provision to allow a weeklong youth overnight camp in the RR zone where the petitioners do not identify any provision of any statute or administrative rule with which the county's interpretation is inconsistent or establish that the county's interpretation is inconsistent with the express language of the county code or the underlying purpose of the RR zone. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A condition of approval requiring an applicant that has applied to site a solar facility in an area currently used for growing Christmas trees to offer a fire safety training course to the local fire district is inadequate to establish that "[t]he proposed use will not * * * significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) and local code provisions implementing that rule. Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision generally prohibits development and grading in "areas of land movement," LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of that provision to prohibit development and grading in "an area where a land slide or some other earth movement has already occurred—not an area where such activity could occur." Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government errs by finding that compliance with a local code provision prohibiting diversion of storm water into areas with steep slopes and "areas of land movement, slump or earth flow, and mud or debris flow" is satisfied by compliance with a separate local code provision requiring development to provide "[p]ositive drainage and adequate conveyance of surface water * * * from roofs, footings, foundations, and other impervious or near-impervious surfaces to an appropriate discharge point." Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. That an alteration to a proposed PAPA is required by LUBA's decision in a prior appeal and reduces the subject acreage does not mean as a matter of law that the proposed PAPA is not "altered to such an extent that the materials submitted no longer reasonably describe the proposed change," thereby requiring notice of the alteration to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(6). Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.610(6), if a proposed PAPA is altered to such an extent that the notice submitted to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) and (3) no longer reasonably describes it, the local government must submit notice of the alterations to DLCD at least 10 days before the final evidentiary hearing, which DLCD thereafter provides to the public. The larger statutory scheme at ORS 197.610 to 197.625 is intended to expand notice and participatory options for DLCD and a broader audience that may not receive local notice. A local government's errors under ORS 197.610(6) require remand where they are of a kind or degree that calls into question whether the ORS 197.610 to 197.625 process nevertheless performed its function. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where notice under ORS 197.610(6) is sent to DLCD 17 days after the final evidentiary hearing occurred and describes the "date of first evidentiary hearing" and the "date of final hearing" but does not identify the date of the "final evidentiary hearing," where there is a disparity between the text of the notice and the text of an ordinance included with the notice regarding the subject acreage, and where the notice is sent during a time when the record is left open only for evidence that is responsive to evidence that was submitted earlier, the totality of the errors in the submission of the notice and in the notice itself are of a kind and degree that make it doubtful that the ORS 197.610 to 197.625 process performed its function, and remand is required. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The planning commission's conclusion that the subject properties are subject to "site review requirements" is not supported by anything in the text of the Old Code, Ordinance 20224, or the New Code. Simons Investment Properties, LLC v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 458 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In the context of an application to construct a 94-unit apartment complex, where a local code provision defines "net density" to mean "the number of dwelling units per acre of land in actual residential use and reserved for the exclusive use of the residents in the development, such as common open space or recreation facilities," while a maintenance building and internal parking circulation areas are properly included in the net density calculation, a leasing office should be excluded from the acreage used to calculate net density. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 488 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision allows "interim access" to an arterial via private street, the time limit applicable to the interim access may be determined by the occurrence of an event, such as when alternative access becomes available, rather than a specific date. Norman v. Washington County, 80 Or LUBA 500 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city's interpretation of its former version of a city code requirement that required that an appeal request include either the appeal fee or a fee waiver that had been approved by the planning director prior to the appeal deadline, and LUBA affirmed the city's interpretation, but the city code has since been amended and the city's code no longer requires a fee waiver be approved prior to the appeal deadline, and instead allows a local appellant to submit a fee waiver request and appeal request together, the city is not bound by its prior code, nor its interpretation of its prior code, and prior LUBA case law applying prior city code is no longer controlling. Riverview Abbey Mausoleum Company v. City of Portland, 79 Or LUBA 38 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the Court of Appeals determines that LUBA's decision was "unlawful in substance" pursuant to ORS 197.850(9)(a) because LUBA affirmed the city's interpretation of Goal 8, Policy 1, and according to the court, the city's interpretation of Goal 8, Policy 1 is not affirmable under ORS 197.829(1) because the city's interpretation does not "plausibly account for the text and context of the policy," the appropriate disposition according to OAR 661-010-0071(2)(d) is for LUBA to remand the decision to the city for further proceedings, specifically for the city to adopt a sustainable interpretation of Goal 8, Policy 1, and apply that policy, as interpreted to the application before it. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 79 Or LUBA 77 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city's code lists a number of "factors" to be considered in approving an annexation, including "[a]dequacy and availability of public facilities and services to service potential development," but the city's code does not require that the city identify how infrastructure will be paid for, or by whom, as part of an annexation decision, and the city's findings suggest the city's capital improvement program (CIP) will be amended prior to development to list the new water main as a public facility, although the city does not intend to rely upon the CIP as a source of funding or authority for the new water main, petitioners have not established a CIP amendment must be required as a condition of approval or that the city otherwise erred in assigning a positive value to this factor in approving the proposed annexation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city rezones a portion of a property designated mixed use corridor (MUC) on the city's comprehensive plan, from FU-10 (future urban 10-acre) to NC (neighborhood commercial), and petitioners argue that the NC zone is inconsistent with the city's comprehensive plan which directs the city to "[f]ocus transit-oriented, higher intensity, mixed-use development along selected transit corridors," because the subject property is not near a transit corridor, petitioners' premise—that the MUC plan designation is used only where the city intends to promote transit-oriented development along transit corridors—is incorrect. The MUC plan designation is implemented by four commercial zoning districts: one of which is the NC zone, which is not a transit-oriented zone, and is clearly not intended to be placed along transit corridors. Therefore, the city's decision to rezone its property to NC is not inconsistent with the property's MUC comprehensive plan designation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners fail to establish that the city erred in concluding that rezoning a property to neighborhood commercial is consistent with Statewide Planning Goal 5 when the rezoning the subject property constitutes a PAPA for purposes of applying Goal 5, which provides that local governments are not required to apply Goal 5 in consideration of a PAPA unless the PAPA affects a Goal 5 resource by allowing new uses that "could be conflicting uses with a particular significant Goal 5 resource site on an acknowledged resource list." The city's PAPA is a very limited one, that in relevant part simply applies the zones implementing the city's comprehensive plan designations that the acknowledged comprehensive plan has already designated for the corresponding uses. Because the challenged PAPA simply implements that acknowledged plan designation choice with the exercise of little or no discretion, the PAPA does not authorize any "new uses" for purposes of OAR 660-023-0250(3) and Goal 5. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a parcel is lawfully created, but later divided unlawfully under ORS 215.750(1)(a), a county may rely on the parcel as it existed prior to the unlawful division in determining whether a unit of land qualifies for a forest template dwelling on January 1, 2003.

Under ORS 92.017, such parcel "remain[s] discrete" unless it is "further divided, as provided by law." Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 111 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local ordinance prohibits development within a floodway without a permit and provides an exemption for agricultural uses under which "temporary, removable structures should be allowed during drier months if their removal can be assured by late fall," but where the ordinance does not contain an express requirement that the structures be moved to or stored on the subject property, a hearings officer errs in deciding that such an exemption cannot be applied simply because the record does not include any evidence that the subject property contains a usable storage area outside the floodplain. Armstrong v. Jackson County, 79 Or LUBA 161 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a code provision states that the "provisions of this code shall be interpreted as minimum requirements. When this code imposes a greater restriction than is required by other provisions of law * * * the provisions of this code shall control," and petitioners argue that the city erred in applying the least restrictive, rather than the most restrictive interpretation of the city's code requirement that minimum lot size be determined by "slope," by allowing project applicants to measure slope after grading, rather than before grading, to maximize their potential minimum developable lot size, but petitioners do not identify what other provision of law imposes a lesser restriction as regards to minimum lot size that the city should have applied, petitioners have not provided a basis for reversal or remand. Estroff v. City of Dundee, 79 Or LUBA 189 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Even if a local government's interpretation of its code were less plausible than petitioners' preferred interpretation, the "existence of a stronger or more logical interpretation does not render a weaker or less logical interpretation 'implausible' under the Siporen [v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010)] standard." Mark Latham Excavation, Inc. v. Deschutes County, 250 Or App 543, 555, 281 P3d 644 (2012). Estroff v. City of Dundee, 79 Or LUBA 189 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city code defines "net density" to mean "the number of dwelling units per acre of land in actual residential use and reserved for the exclusive use of the residents in the development," and excludes public and private streets, the city did not err in including in the net density acreage calculation parking drives designed primarily to provide vehicular circulation to parking spaces in the apartment complex for resident and visitor parking and a leasing office and maintenance building. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 79 Or LUBA 218 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a cross-petitioner seeks a remedy not available to it by statute, it is an obstacle to LUBA's review of the cross-assignment of error. LUBA lacks authority to affirm in part, and reverse in part a local government's approval of cross-petitioner's project application. ORS 197.835(1). Even assuming that the city erred by applying Willamette Greenway standards to cross-petitioner's housing project application, because they are not "clear and objective," the city's decision approving the development could not be reversed because it is not "prohibited as a matter of law." If LUBA agreed with cross-petitioners, the correct disposition would be remand, except that remand was not requested and would have no effect on the city's decision approving the application. In such a situation, LUBA will consider the request a contingent cross-assignment of error. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 79 Or LUBA 218 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Goal 15 guidelines and county code requirements that require to "the greatest possible degree, necessary and adequate public access will be provided along the Willamette River by appropriate legal means," can be met where the city finds that current public access along the river provided by a public riverfront path is adequate, and the city does not err in construing the provision as requiring access only "along" the river instead of "to" the river. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 79 Or LUBA 218 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county's comprehensive plan is a working document that must be updated to reflect existing conditions and future planning obligations. Where nothing in the statewide planning goals or the county's comprehensive plan prohibits amendments to expand areas in the county to which certain plan designations may be applied, provided those areas meet all applicable statutory and rule requirements, such amendments do not provide grounds for remand or reversal. Counties have wide latitude to adopt and revise their comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances; amendments to the comprehensive plan need only comply with the statewide planning goals. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Goal 14 prohibits urban uses on rural lands. Where a county's text amendments to its comprehensive plan do not allow any urban uses on rural land, but merely expand the allowable locations in the county that could be the subject of an application to change the plan designation to rural industrial, and the text amendments require the applicant to demonstrate that the proposed use for which the rural industrial plan designation change is consistent with all statewide planning goals, including Goal 14, a petitioner's arguments that the amendments violate Goal 14 do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city council's interpretation of a local code provision which provides that, "[i]n the event of a tie [vote by the city council], the [planning commission's] decision which is the subject of appeal * * * shall stand," as not limiting the number of times that the city council may vote on a matter is not inconsistent with the express language of that provision and therefore affirmable under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Vannatta v. City of St. Helens, 79 Or LUBA 271 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government gives only one reason for denying an application, where LUBA concludes that that reason was based on inapplicable criteria, where the local government does not identify any applicable standards on appeal to LUBA that would require further review, and where the applicant does not challenge the conditions of approval that the local government would have otherwise imposed, LUBA will reverse the local government's decision pursuant to ORS 197.835(10)(a). Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 447 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government gives only one reason for denying an application, where LUBA concludes that that reason was based on inapplicable criteria, where the local government does not identify any applicable standards on appeal to LUBA that would require further review, and where the applicant does not challenge the conditions of approval that the local government would have otherwise imposed, LUBA will reverse the local government's decision pursuant to ORS 197.835(10)(a). Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 447 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the county approves an amendment to a planned development approval for a resort, golf course and aerial challenge course, and petitioner argues the county improperly construed the applicable provisions of the county's code, but petitioner has not ultimately challenged the board of county commissioners' interpretation, or otherwise explained why LUBA is not required to affirm that interpretation under ORS 197.829(1), petitioner has provided no basis for reversal or remand. Carkulis v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 610 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner argues the county committed a procedural error that prejudiced his substantial rights when the board of county commissioners failed to consider a written statement that petitioner submitted to the board of commissioners at the hearing, but petitioner does not establish that the board of county commissioners actually failed to consider petitioner's written statement, and petitioner failed to object to the alleged procedural error below, petitioner has not established that the county committed a procedural error or violated an applicable legal standard. Carkulis v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 610 (2019).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county's development ordinance provides that the county shall not approve a minor partition unless the proposal complies with the county's zoning ordinance that specifies that minimum parcel size for all new parcels in designated big game habitat "shall be 160 acres or larger if required by the underlying zone," the zoning ordinance does not provide any exceptions to the minimum parcel size requirement, and there is no dispute that the subject property is located within designated big game habitat, "considerations" such as existence of a farm dwelling, other structures, and intense farm use do not provide a legally sufficient basis for deviating from the minimum parcel size requirement, and such a partition is prohibited as a matter of law. ODFW v. Lake County, 78 Or 53 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners did not demonstrate that the county hearings officer erred where local county standards apply to development in "areas designated as floodways [as found on Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) maps] or by methods described" elsewhere in the code, and the county hearings officer determined that because the development was not located within the "floodway," those standards did not apply. This is so, even where petitioners argue the FEMA maps are inaccurate and another section of code authorizes the county floodplain administrator to determine where the floodway is currently located based on "actual field conditions," but the county administrator has chosen not to exercise the authority granted in that section. Meyer v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 150 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the county hearings officer agreed that the proposed project involved "the alteration of a watercourse" and that therefore standards applied which required the project applicant to show that the development "will not diminish the carrying capacity of a watercourse" by submitting "certification by an Oregon registered professional engineer," that in the engineer's opinion the watercourse "will not be diminished," the applicant has met those requirements by submitting the certification by a licensed engineer, even though another section of the county's code requires the applicant to "submit technical data" and a "Conditional Letter of Map Revision" from FEMA "when an alteration of a watercourse results in the expansion, relocation or elimination of the special flood hazard area [SFHA]" because the engineer certified that the project has not resulted in the expansion, relocation or elimination of the SFHA. Meyer v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 150 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioner's argument that a proposed detached accessory structure for an "art studio" is not a permissible "accessory" structure allowed in the Impacted Forest Lands (F-2) zone provides no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner cites to no local code, state statute or administrative rule governing forest lands, suggesting limitations on accessory structures to a primary dwelling that is otherwise allowed on forest lands under state law. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 272 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A petitioner's argument that locating an art studio several hundred feet from an existing dwelling on forest land instead of adjacent to the dwelling and within the dwelling's existing fire breaks does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the petitioner does not identify any rule or other requirement that an accessory structure be clustered with the existing dwelling. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 272 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reject petitioner's argument that a proposed "art studio" is in reality an "accessory dwelling" in the forest zone in violation of state and local law where the county hearings officer imposed several conditions intended to ensure that the proposed "art studio" would not be used as an "accessory dwelling," and petitioner's speculation that the applicant might violate one or more conditions of approval provides no basis for reversal or remand. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 272 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer's finding that land in the forest zone upon which development is proposed is "flat" is not supported by substantial evidence where the finding is supported only by the applicant's assertion that the relevant slope is "less than 3" percent, but the record includes two topographic maps that appear to show that the slope exceeds 10 percent, which if so triggers additional fire safety requirements. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 272 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although the county concedes it erred in denying a plan amendment and zone change application based on the belief that the subject property was, at the time the county made its decision, within a designated urban reserve area, when the LCDC's urban reserve designation regarding the subject property had not actually become final at the time in question, LUBA will not remand the decision if the county's decision identifies at least one valid basis for denial that is affirmed on appeal. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county's comprehensive plan policy provides that "areas" may be designated rural commercial when the areas (1) have a "historical commitment" to commercial uses, or (2) the "areas" are "located within an Unincorporated Community" and have "direct access to a road of at least collector classification," petitioner has not demonstrated that the county commissioners' findings regarding the meaning of "area" are inadequate or that the county's reliance on a previous interpretation as authority for interpreting the term "areas" as used in rezoning criteria to refer only to the property being considered for rezoning, and not also to include the surrounding area, was in error where petitioner cites to no contextual differences suggesting that the term "areas" should be interpreted differently than the same term used in similar rezoning standards, or authority suggesting the county has an obligation to adopt specific findings regarding the parties' alternative interpretations. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will uphold a county's interpretation of its own comprehensive plan policy regarding when a property may be designated rural commercial where the county evaluated the historic uses of the subject property and concluded that those uses did not demonstrate a "historical commitment to commercial uses," after concluding that (1) temporary commercial uses, (2) incidental or accessory commercial uses to permitted residential or farm uses on the property, and (3) the current unlawful commercial uses on the property were not sufficient to demonstrate "historical commitment" of the property to commercial use, where the county chose to focus on "commitment" which the county understood to require an inquiry into the nature of the historic uses on the property and a determination of whether commercial uses have constrained the scope of the uses on the property such that going forward only commercial uses are feasible, rather than defining commitment in terms of years of commercial use. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county's decision is "outside the range of discretion allowed the local government under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances," pursuant to ORS 197.835(10)(a)(A), where petitioner's application for marijuana production meets a county's clear and objective standards for marijuana production on EFU-zoned land, no evidence was submitted that contradicted petitioner's assertion that it could and would meet the county's marijuana production standards, and the county relied upon factors and considerations in denying petitioner's application that are not contained in the applicable approval criteria. Accordingly, the proper disposition of the county's denial is reversal with an order instructing the county to grant approval of the application. MJAI Oregon 5, LLC v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 366 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where in evaluating petitioner's zone verification request pursuant to Eugene Code (EC) 9.2741(2), the city failed to consider the ORS 197.312(5) requirement that all accessory dwellings must be allowed "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," the proper remedy is for LUBA to remand the decision to the city for the city to consider in the first instance whether EC 9.2741(2) is a "reasonable local regulation[] relating to siting and design" pursuant to ORS 197.312(5). Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 457 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner argues that the city erred by failing to apply a national historic trail master plan and national historic trail district guidelines to applicant's proposed project, presenting evidence that the city "effectively" adopted the master plan by "endorsing" it during planning commission meetings over the years, the city's "endorsement" does not amount to "adoption" of the plan and guidelines, nor does "incorporation by reference" transform an "ancillary" document into mandatory approval criteria. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 78 Or LUBA 463 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer's interpretation is inadequate for review before LUBA where the hearings officer finds that that a proposed bed and breakfast inn designed for occupancy by an employee caretaker and up to eight non-resident guests qualifies as a "bed and breakfast inn," without explaining how a caretaker occupancy is consistent with the county code which defines a bed and breakfast inn as an "owner-occupied" "single-family dwelling unit." Elenes v. Deschutes County, 78 Or LUBA 483 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county hearings officer errs in denying a forest template dwelling application on the sole basis that petitioner had not provided a fire safety inspection, where the applicable ordinance provision entitled "Wildfire Safety Requirements" requires "[o]ther measures as recommended by the fire agency commenting on the application or the County Fire Safety Inspector," and no fire agency recommended any measures or a fire inspection in any submitted comments. Blu Dutch LLC v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 495 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer correctly interprets ORS 215.740(3) in concluding that the minimum acreage requirement that applies to an application for a forest template dwelling is the minimum acreage for the applicant's tracts located in western Oregon where the forest template dwelling is proposed to be located, rather than the non-contiguous parcel located in an adjacent county designated as eastern Oregon. ORS 215.740 allows an owner seeking a dwelling on a tract that is located in western Oregon to rely on non-contiguous land in another adjacent county to meet the minimum acreage requirements; it does not require that the minimum acreage requirements for the non-contiguous county be the applicable standard. Blu Dutch LLC v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 495 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. That a county's amended Transportation System Plan (TSP) includes language recommending that the county acquire property to develop a transportation facility does not mean that whatever land use permits are required to actually construct the facility under the local code or state law are thereby waived. The county could choose to approve whatever land use permits are required under law at the same time it approves an amendment to its TSP, but the latter is not a substitute for the former, or vice versa. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A project applicant is not required to file and win a quiet title action in circuit court as a condition precedent to filing the application simply because another party disputes the applicant's title to the property on which the proposed development is to occur. When a party disputes the applicant's title under a legal theory that can only be resolved in circuit court, neither the county nor LUBA is in a position to resolve the legal dispute over whether the applicant/deed owner's title is good. For that reason, the county is also not obligated to adopt findings resolving the title dispute. In circumstances where consent or lack of ownership has a bearing on an approval criteria, we have held that the decision maker may be required to impose conditions to ensure that the required consent is obtained prior to construction. However, where ownership of the subject property is not an approval criterion, we have never held that the applicant has the obligation to quiet title in the subject property where some doubt is raised during the proceedings below as to the legality of that title, or that the decision maker is obliged to adopt findings addressing the likelihood that the applicant will prevail in a quiet title action. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. It is not sufficient for petitioners to simply point out that the sound study that was prepared to develop a Statewide Planning Goal 5 program to protect an aggregate resource site does not measure noise in precisely the manner required by the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) rules, without any attempt to show that any deviations from required sound measuring locations could have the effect of allowing noise levels that violate DEQ standards. Where the applicant's expert took the position that the selected sound measuring locations did not have the effect of inflating the ambient noise level or otherwise rendering those sound measurements inaccurate, at least some effort to challenge the expert's position is required to show the deviations may have led to inaccurate sound readings for purposes of determining if DEQ noise standards will be met. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The OAR 660-023-0180(1)(b) requirement to minimize conflicts does not require an absolute guarantee that a proposed mining operation will never violate Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) standards. A local government does not err by finding that DEQ noise standards will be met, based on the applicant's sound study, and by imposing a condition of approval that mining be monitored for noise in the future and any changes in mining be made in the future to fully comply with DEQ noise standards, without requiring that mining cease until the mine fully complies with DEQ noise standards. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. OAR 340-225-0040 and OAR 340-225-0050 modeling requirements to determine whether a proposed mining operation will comply with ambient air quality and new source air particulate standards are not mere procedural requirements an applicant is free to ignore. The applicant and local government must either perform the required modeling or demonstrate that the modeling is unnecessary to demonstrate the proposed mining will comply with the air particulate standards. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although a city code requires that the city's zoning map, the Metro Plan map and Metro Refinement Plan maps must be consistent, a city does not err by amending its zoning map and the Metro Plan map without adopting a conforming amendment to the Metro Refinement Plan map, where another code section provides that amendments to the Metro Plan map result in automatic conforming changes to the Metro Refinement Plan map by operation of law. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city commission's interpretation of a city manager's general authority to exercise "supervision over all city property" to be broad enough to include authority for the city manager to refuse to consent to a proposed historic landmark designation for city-owned property is not reversible under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D) ("[i]mproperly construed the applicable law"). McLoughlin Neighborhood Association v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 377 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The ORS 197.772(2) right to refuse to consent to historic designation of property, which is given to "property owners," is not limited to owners of private property. A city may refuse to consent to historic designation of city-owned property, where a neighborhood organization files an application to designate that city-owned property as an historic landmark. McLoughlin Neighborhood Association v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 377 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The Goal 5 rule, at OAR chapter 660, division 023, includes a "standard" process for inventorying, evaluating and protecting natural resources, at OAR 660-023-0030 through -050, that includes rules for evaluating the ESEE consequences for allowing, limiting, or prohibiting uses that conflict with a natural resource site. The Goal 5 rule also includes "special" standards and procedures for specific types of Goal 5 resources, including those that govern aggregate mineral resources, at OAR 660-023-0180. According to OAR 660-023-0020(1), sometimes both the standard process and a special process apply; sometimes the special process supersedes the standard process in whole, or in part, and in case of conflict the specific process controls. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a) requires the local government to identify conflicts with existing and approved uses located within a determined "impact area" limited in size to 1,500 feet from the boundaries of the mining area, unless factual information indicates "significant potential conflicts" beyond 1,500 feet. After deciding to allow mining under OAR 660-023-0180(5), the county must also go on to consider whether to allow, limit, or prevent new or future conflicting uses within the impact area pursuant to OAR 660-023-0180(7). For this limited inquiry, the county must conduct the analysis pursuant to the standard ESEE process in OAR 660-023-0040 and -0050. OAR 660-023-0040(3) requires local governments to "determine an impact area for each significant resource site. The impact area shall be drawn to include only the area in which allowed uses could adversely affect the identified resource," which means that unlike the impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), the impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0040(3) is not initially limited to 1,500 feet and the geographic extent of the impact area is determined by evaluating whether "allowed uses could adversely affect the identified resource," rather than evaluating whether there is factual information indicating "significant potential conflicts" beyond an initial 1,500 feet. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners have not established that a county's failure to determine an impact area for purposes of OAR 660-023-0180(7) pursuant to the standard ESEE process at OAR 660-023-0040(3) is more than harmless error, where it is not clear that an impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0040(3) would be larger or different than the one the county established under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), petitioners have not identified any new conflicting uses within a more expansive impact area that could adversely impact the mining site and that therefore should have been limited or prevented based on the arguably more sensitive OAR 660-023-0040(3) test, compared to the "significant potential conflict" test that the county employed under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), and because the applicant is the only party that could possibly be harmed by employing a potentially smaller impact area as determined under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), and the applicant is not challenging that potentially smaller impact area but rather is actively defending it on appeal. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In the context of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment to inventory a significant aggregate site and allow mining of that site under Goal 5, if the local government concludes based on its ESEE analysis that new conflicting uses should be allowed within the impact area under the existing comprehensive plan and land use regulations, the local government's program to achieve the goal in that regard may consist of simply relying on its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to protect the resource site from new conflicting uses pursuant to OAR 660-023-0040(2)(a). Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The city planning commission improperly construed the plain language of a code section that requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical" when it relied on the historical site plan and orientation of the existing house on the corner lot to designate the front lot line, because those considerations are not "topographical or access problems." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

28.8.5 28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a municipal code requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical," the city's decision was not supported by substantial evidence in the record pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) when it determined that the lack of sidewalks on the narrower frontage, and the absence of a door on the side of the house facing the narrower frontage were "access problems" that made designating the narrower street frontage the front lot line "impractical." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners seek reversal or remand of the city's decision pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071, and LUBA's decision agrees with petitioners that the city's decision improperly construed the municipal code and was not supported by substantial evidence in the record, but it is possible on remand that the petitioner's proposal could demonstrate compliance with the municipal code without significant changes to the proposed development, remand is the appropriate remedy. McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A site suitability characteristic that property must be 22 acres in size to allow development of a "Lifestyle Center" is not appropriate under Goal 14 and OAR 660-024-0060(5), where the city fails to explain why a general subregional need for between 27 and 37.9 acres of land for commercial development must be satisfied by the "Lifestyle Center" proposed by the UGB amendment applicant on a single 22-acre site. DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 76 Or LUBA 130 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Goal 14 and OAR 660-024-0060(5) do not permit use of a site suitability characteristic to reject alternative sites if those sites cannot be developed at a cost that is commensurate with the cost of developing a Lifestyle Center on a site owned by the UGB amendment applicant or simply because those alternative sites face development constraints. The correct inquiry is whether alternative sites "cannot reasonably * * * accommodate[]" the identified need. DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 76 Or LUBA 130 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Whether property is "available for purchase" is not a valid site suitability characteristic to be used to eliminate alternative sites that are already within the Urban Growth Boundary (UGB) from consideration, when determining whether a UGB amendment is necessary to add land to the UGB. Requiring sites to be currently available for purchase sets too low a threshold, impermissibly narrows the statutory, goal and rule alternatives analysis, and is not authorized pursuant to Goal 14 and OAR 660-024-0060(5). DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 76 Or LUBA 130 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city improperly rejected alternative sites already within the Urban Growth Boundary (UGB) pursuant to the Goal 14 and OAR 660-024-0060(5) alternatives analysis for determining whether a UGB amendment is necessary, when it rejected some sites because they were not already zoned commercial but the site the city ultimately selected was also not currently zoned commercial. DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 76 Or LUBA 130 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although OAR 660-024-0060(5) grants authority to local governments to consider "proximity" as a required alternative site characteristic when considering alternative sites under Goal 14 and OAR 660-024-0060(5) for a potential amendment to the Urban Growth Boundary (UGB), a city may not divide the city into four subregions and eliminate any requirement to consider alternative sites inside or outside the UGB for meeting identified subregional needs simply because those alternative sites are not located within the subregion. DLCD v. City of Klamath Falls, 76 Or LUBA 130 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city council does not err by failing to impose a condition requiring that a hotel be reduced in height to address potential land use conflicts, where the city council finds a shorter hotel is not needed to avoid potential land use conflicts. Whether a hotel of the height proposed will present land use conflicts with neighboring properties is a subjective determination, and where LUBA concludes the record establishes the city council's decision not to impose a condition was within its discretion, LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges the city council's failure to impose the condition. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A condition of approval that allows an applicant to pipe a portion of a creek required to extend sanitary sewer lines under a creek "only if it can demonstrate the necessity of doing so with a licensed engineering analysis as the only feasible means to connect wastewater service in this location" in order to locate Controlled Income Rent housing units, common areas, and infrastructure on property violates ORS 197.307(6)(2001)'s prohibition against applying special conditions that are not "clear and objective" to needed housing. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 75 Or LUBA 109 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A County Court's interpretation of a comprehensive plan residential density standard that limits residential density in deer winter range to one dwelling unit per 160 acres to only consider nonfarm dwellings when computing density is not affirmable under ORS 197.829(1)(a) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 261, 243 P3d 776 (2010), where there is no textual support in the wildlife density standard itself for only counting nonfarm dwellings in computing density and the comprehensive plan policies the density limit was adopted to implement also do not support distinguishing between farm and nonfarm dwellings in computing density. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 75 Or LUBA 186 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city council's decision to amend its zoning ordinance to treat transient occupancy vacation rental use of residences differently from the use of the same residences as second homes, long-term rentals or domiciles is not inconsistent with comprehensive plan policy to "preserve and maintain the predominately residential character of [the city] through appropriate zoning and land use development regulations," as the city interprets the policy. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A comprehensive plan policy to "maintain present residential density levels in established neighborhoods" has nothing to do with the number of days a residence is occupied. Therefore, a zoning ordinance amendment that favors year-round domicile and long-term rental use of residences, as opposed to short term vacation rental use, does not violate the residential density policy. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA need not address assignments of error alleging that a condition of approval requiring an applicant seeking a four-lot subdivision to construct a road violates the needed housing statutes or the Takings Clause of the U.S. Constitution, where LUBA has already concluded on sub-statutory and sub-constitutional grounds that the city erred in imposing the condition. Tokarski v. City of Salem, 74 Or LUBA 124 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city's development code permits only two extensions of tentative subdivision approval, and the city grants a third extension, the city's decision will be reversed where the city does not file a brief and intervenor-respondent concedes the city's interpretation that a third extension is permissible is not sustainable, even under the deferential standard of review required by ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 262, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Pinnacle Alliance Group LLC v. City of Sisters, 74 Or LUBA 265 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will remand rather than reverse a county decision that erroneously concludes that a 2005 permit is still valid to authorize issuance of building permits for what is now a nonconforming use, where the applicant originally filed for a vested rights determination, and planning staff originally evaluated the application as one for alteration of a nonconforming use, but those theories were not addressed in the county's final decision. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 299 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will deny an assignment of error that argues that an application fails to comply with provisions of a neighboring city's municipal code where the provisions of the neighboring city's code do not apply to the application. Martin v. City of Central Point, 74 Or LUBA 312 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the issue is whether a statute and corresponding code provision that both authorize agricultural buildings and prohibit their conversion to other uses was in effect when a horse barn/arena was constructed in 2000, and the statute and corresponding code provision were first enacted in 2014, LUBA will conclude that the statutory and code authorization and prohibition do not apply to the horse barn/arena. Kaplowitz v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 386 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of a code provision that prohibits the filing of an application within two years that is "substantially similar" to an application that the county denied as requiring a high degree of similarity. Under the rules of interpretation, LUBA will affirm the hearings officer's conclusion that an application to develop a 62-lot subdivision on land zoned R 10 is not substantially similar to a previously denied application to develop a 72-lot subdivision on land zoned R 10, where the new subdivision proposes approximately 15 percent fewer lots, an increase in average lot size of approximately 20 percent, a decrease of approximately 100 daily trips, an increase in on-street parking, and wider streets. Reinert v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 427 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of a code provision that requires the county to (1) incorporate tree preservation into a development plan "wherever feasible," and (2) balance the preservation of natural features with the needs of development provided such balancing shall not require a reduction in the number of lots or dwelling units that would otherwise be permitted, to not require additional trees beyond the 90 of 423 that were proposed to be preserved where preservation of the additional trees would require a reduction in the number of lots or dwelling units that would otherwise be permitted. Reinert v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 427 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city's plan designation as Employment and Industrial for 308 acres of land that is added to Metro's urban growth boundary is "derived from and generally consistent with" the original ordinance adding the area to the UGB, even though the original ordinance designated more than 308 acres of land as Employment and Industrial, where the original ordinance is later amended by a new Metro ordinance that decreases the amount of land designated Employment and Industrial, pursuant to a Metro Code provision that allows Metro to amend the regional plan designations from time to time based on revised employment forecasts. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 488 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner's assignment of error in an appeal of a county decision denying his request that the county reconsider a previously denied application for verification of a nonconforming use is directed at the merits of the original decision that denied his application for verification of a nonconforming use, rather than the merits of the subsequent county decision that denied petitioner's request to reconsider the same application that had earlier been denied, the assignment of error provides no basis for reversal or remand where the decision whether to reconsider the original decision is governed by different criteria than the original denial decision. Kartavykh v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 518 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a development code permits an applicant to resubmit the same application for verification of a nonconforming use less than two years after it was denied if the denial decision was based on a material mistake of fact, a hearings officer does not misconstrue the code in concluding that a denial decision that is based on conflicting evidence is not the same thing as a decision that is based on a material mistake of fact. Kartavykh v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 518 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Arguments that a local government incorrectly refused to accept documents for the record and that the local government was not sufficiently clear about which documents it was refusing to accept for the record are properly presented as assignments of error in a petition for review, and are not a basis for a record objection. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 633 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. It is likely that the Court of Appeals would not require that a land use hearings officer ruling on a request to alter a nonconforming use must apply the legal principle stated in Parks v. Tillamook Co. Comm./Spliid, 11 Or App 177, 196-97, 501 P2d 85 (1972), that nonconforming uses are disfavored and subject to strict scrutiny under state law. However, where it does not appear that the Parks principle played any role in the hearings officer's decision, the hearings officer's citation to Parks provides no basis for reversal or remand. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where an assignment of error itself can be read to allege that a hearings officer committed a particular analytical error in reviewing an application to alter a nonconforming use, but the arguments that are put forth in support of the assignment of error have nothing to do with that arguable analytical error, petitioners fail to adequately state and develop a challenge to the analytical error. In that circumstance, LUBA will limit its review to the arguments petitioners actually present. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 215.203(2)(a) provides that "farm use" includes the "preparation" of "products or by-products raised on * * * land for human or animal use[.]" A straw pressing operation that compresses straw that is initially baled in the field after it is cut such that the bales are easier to transport to their eventual end use as feed but that does not change the straw in any way or change the fact that it is ready for use as feed after it is baled and remains ready for use as feed after it is compressed is "preparation" of the straw within the meaning of ORS 215.203(2)(a). Gilmour v. Linn County, 73 Or LUBA 90 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where an assignment of error challenges an interpretation that the decision on appeal does not adopt, the assignment of error does not establish a basis for reversal or remand. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Notwithstanding statements that a hearings officer considered all documents in the record, where a hearings officer expressly declines to consider a proposed zoning diagram under the erroneous assumption that the diagram is not based on the adopted comprehensive plan map, remand is necessary for the hearings officer to consider the proposed diagram free of that mistaken assumption. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government correctly construes a local code provision as not requiring an existing street that provides access to a proposed planned unit development to be upgraded to meet the standards in the local code for streets that are dedicated to the public as part of a development approval, where the text of the provision and context provided by other provisions supports that construction. Trautman v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 209 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides the county to consider "[a]vailability of transit" and provides that "land within walking distance (approximately one-quarter mile) of a transit stop should be zoned for smaller lots," a hearings officer errs in concluding that land within approximately one-quarter mile of a transit stop is not within "walking distance" because sidewalks are not present. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the comprehensive plan sets out seven factors that "guide the determination of the most appropriate zone," a hearings officer errs in weighing some of the factors as less important than other factors without any support for that weighting in the express language of the factors or other parts of the comprehensive plan. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides the county to consider "proximity to jobs, shopping, and cultural activities" and guides that areas in proximity to jobs, shopping and cultural activities should be considered for smaller lots, a hearings officer errs in concluding that land that is proximate to jobs and shopping should not be zoned for smaller lots based on the hearings officer's negative assumptions about the quality of the jobs and shopping. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides that areas that have historically developed on large lots should "remain zoned consistent with the existing development pattern," and the hearings officer interprets the "existing development pattern" to be synonymous with the existing zoning, remand is required in order for the hearings officer to explain why a change from 10,000-square-foot lots to 8,500-square-foot lots in an area with some 8,500-square-foot lots is not "consistent with the existing development pattern." Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the comprehensive plan sets out seven factors that "guide the determination of the most appropriate zone," and the factors are not competing policies and do not work at cross purposes, a hearings officer errs in weighting some of the factors as less important than other factors without any support for that weighting in the express language of the factors or other parts of the comprehensive plan. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will deny an assignment of error that argues that a city is precluded from requiring review of the siting of an arterial street for compliance with applicable standards and criteria in the city's code merely because the city has previously accepted a dedication of the right-of-way for the arterial street, where the city code provisions that petitioner relies on do not provide that dedicated rights-of-way are exempted from land use review, but merely set out the procedure for and effect of a dedication. GPA 1, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 73 Or LUBA 339 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Language in a right-of-way dedication that grants the city a right-of-way for "road, pedestrian, drainage, and utility purposes, on, over, across, under, along, and within" the land described tends to support a conclusion that the interest conveyed is in the nature of an easement or right to use the property for those purposes and not a fee interest. Accordingly, the city is not the "owner" for purposes of a city code section that requires an "owner" of property to join in or file the application for development approval. GPA 1, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 73 Or LUBA 339 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the relevant code sections explain that a conceptual development plan provides general concepts for development on a site, and a detailed development plan provides the specifics for development on a site and is required following or simultaneously with approval of a conceptual development plan, an applicant for development of a road that is approved in a conceptual development plan is required to obtain approval of a detailed development plan for the road. GPA 1, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 73 Or LUBA 339 (2016).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city code requires that a development's sewer facilities must be consistent with the sewer master plan and the sewer master plan calls for an upgraded 15-inch sewer line in a street that adjoins the development, city findings that explain a temporary cross-basin connection to provide sewer service to the development is acceptable because sewer flows from the development are inadequate to result in a properly functioning 15-inch sewer line, and the development approval is conditioned on the development connecting to the adjacent 15-inch sewer line when it becomes available in the future, are adequate to explain why the temporary cross-basin connection is not inconsistent with the code and sewer master plan. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 72 Or LUBA 25 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA's scope of review under ORS 197.835(9) includes authority to determine whether the decision on review "[i]mproperly construed the applicable law[.]" Where LUBA has jurisdiction to review a land use decision, it also has jurisdiction to review challenges to that decision's construction of "applicable law," even if that "applicable law" is not a statewide planning goal, a comprehensive plan provision or a land use regulation. Carlsen v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 93, 98-100, aff'd in part, remanded in part on other grounds, 169 Or App 1, 8 P3d 234 (2000). Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. While local laws that do not qualify as land use laws might be so unrelated to land use laws that LUBA's scope of review to consider violations of "applicable law" would not include such laws, a city's business licensing regulations qualify as "applicable law" under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D), where those business licensing regulations are intertwined with the land use issues in a LUBA appeal. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will affirm a city council's conclusion that a retaining wall is a "foundation" as that term is defined in the city's land use regulations, where the evidence in the record supports a conclusion that the retaining wall provides primary support for a parking lot by transmitting the loads imposed by the parking lot to the earth. Knapp v. City of Jacksonville, 72 Or LUBA 299 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA may consider a challenge that a decision approving a conditional use permit is inconsistent with a resolution that bars extension of sewer outside a sewer district, even if the resolution is not itself a land use regulation, where the resolution qualifies as "applicable law," and is therefore within LUBA's scope of review. ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D). Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city council's findings appear to find that public sewer is a required public facility that is not available to property that is proposed for development, and the city council nevertheless approves development that will be served by an individual septic system without explaining why that action is consistent with a zoning standard that requires that all required public facilities have capacity and are available or can be made available to the development, remand is required. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a zoning ordinance requires a hydrology report and there is nothing in the record that is denominated as a hydrology report, LUBA will reject an argument that the decision should be remanded due to the lack of a hydrology report, where there is a geological/geotechnical report that appears to address the concerns that are identified in the zoning code requirement for a hydrology report. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A code requirement for a finding that it is "safe to build" need not be interpreted to require that there is absolutely no risk associated with development. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the zoning ordinance does not require that the city require implementation of all of a geology report's recommendations, a city's failure to impose a geology report's recommended prudent course of action as a condition of approval is not a basis for reversal or remand. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer is not required to interpret and apply a county code provision that is similar, but not identical, to a different county code provision that was at issue in a thirteen-year-old board of county commissioner's decision that applied to a different application and property in the same way that the board of commissioners previously applied the different code provision. Head v. Lane County, 72 Or LUBA 411 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA's review of planning commission interpretations is governed by ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D), rather than by ORS 197.829(1). And under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D), LUBA must determine whether the planning commission "[i]mproperly construed the applicable law," "without according the deference required by Clark[v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 515, 836 P2d 710 (1992)]." Gage v. City of Portland, 319 Or 308, 317, 877 P2d 1187 (1994). S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. After determining that a proposal to remove 500,000 cubic yards of rock constituted mining and that mining was not listed as an allowable use in the applicable zoning district, a city does not commit reversible or remandable error by then proceeding to consider whether the proposal could be allowed under development code standards that allow approval of unlisted uses. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a hearings officer's findings appear to substitute a common law nuisance standard for the applicable code standard, but the hearings officer never applies the identified common law nuisance standard, LUBA will view the findings as surplusage rather than an improper attempt to substitute an inapplicable standard for the applicable standard. Morton v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 7 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government errs in denying an application for approval of a "residential" development for failure to comply with an approval standard that applies to "commercial, institutional and office park uses." Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA concludes that applicable local nonconforming use law might not regulate a change from one conforming use to another conforming use in a nonconforming structure, but no party challenges a hearings officer's conclusion that local nonconforming use law does regulate such a change of use, LUBA will consider petitioner's challenge to the adequacy of the hearings officer's findings that an existing structure qualifies as a nonconforming use and that the proposal may be approved as an alteration of a nonconforming use. However, LUBA will not preclude the hearings officer from considering on remand whether the nonconforming use regulations apply in that circumstance. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. When faced with a highly subjective criterion that requires the city to identify and balance the advantages and disadvantages of a comprehensive plan amendment, a petitioner must do more than point to disagreement with the outcome of that balancing in order to successfully challenge the city's decision. Hess v. City of Corvallis, 70 Or LUBA 283 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where no provision of the city's code or comprehensive plan or any other law requires the city to base its decision on data provided by a local traffic study, and the Institution of Traffic Engineers (ITE) Manual describes the circumstances in which a local traffic study may be needed to validate the ITE trip generation rates in hortatory, rather than mandatory terms (the analyst "should" collect local data and establish a local rate"), the local government does not improperly construe the applicable law in failing to require a local traffic study to validate the trip generation estimates in the ITE Manual. Hess v. City of Corvallis, 70 Or LUBA 283 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Neither a biological assessment nor 44 CFR § 60.3(a)(2), which requires local governments that participate in the National Flood Insurance Program ensure that all necessary federal permits are obtained prior to issuance of a floodplain development permit, require the city to consider whether the proposal complies with the Endangered Species Act where the biological assessment does not impose mandatory obligations on the city, and where no floodplain development permit is sought. Hess v. City of Corvallis, 70 Or LUBA 283 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A conclusion that some historic types and levels of industrial uses of the property are part of the rural character of the area does not mean that the existing or proposed types and levels of industrial uses allowed under the Rural Industrial designation are consistent with the rural character of the area. Ooten v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 338 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer errs in concluding that a 1994 decision to rezone property also approved use of a road where nothing in the 1994 decision indicates that the county approved the use of the road, the decision did not approve any uses of the property and the road is located off of the property that was the subject of the 1994 rezoning decision, on property that was subject to different zoning and land use approval requirements. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 368 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer errs in concluding that a 1997 decision approving a site plan for aggregate extraction approved use of a road located on property that was not included on the site plan, where nothing in the language of the decision supports that conclusion. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 368 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An ordinance that contains language in its preface section that suggests that it is intended to be prospective is not retroactive, and the local government may not rely on the ordinance to revive and extend a void conditional use permit that expired by operation of law. Devin Oil Co. Inc. v. Morrow County, 70 Or LUBA 420 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An argument that a decision fails to comply with a Goal guideline provides no basis for reversal or remand. Guidelines to statewide planning goals are advisory and do not constitute mandatory standards that must be applied in making land use decisions subject to the goals. Reading v. Douglas County, 70 Or LUBA 458 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer errs in reading a code provision to include the word "tower" where the code provision as it was adopted by ordinance does not include the word "tower." It is not within the hearings officer's authority to correct even an unintentional omission of language by "insert[ing] what has been omitted[.]" ORS 174.010. Weston Kia v. City of Gresham, 70 Or LUBA 483 (2014).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A plan amendment that designates 33 acres for high-density residential development is not inconsistent with a plan policy requiring a minimum of 28 acres of high-density residential, including seven acres to provide public open space, notwithstanding the failure to specifically designate seven acres for open space, where the 33 designated acres can supply the required seven acres of open space. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county ordinance requiring setbacks for wind turbines from rural residences, UGBs and unincorporated communities is not preempted by state statutes and administrative rules that regulate energy development and siting, where the state statutes and rules do not evidence the legislature's express or implied intent to preempt the field of energy regulation, development and siting. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 68 Or LUBA 264 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county ordinance requiring setbacks for wind turbines from rural residences, UGBs and unincorporated communities is not preempted by state statutes and administrative rules that regulate energy development and siting, where the state statutes and rules explicitly recognize and provide a role for local comprehensive plan and land use regulations in demonstrating that an energy facility complies with the statewide planning goals. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 68 Or LUBA 264 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where identifying the intersections that must be included and studied in a transportation impact analysis is governing by the local government's code, and under the code an intersection should have been included and studied, a city decision that the intersection need not be studied because it was not identified at an earlier scoping stage is error. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Newport, 68 Or LUBA 318 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local code definition of "lot" as an "area of land owned by or under the lawful control and in the lawful possession of one distinct ownership" does not have the legal effect of aggregating adjacent, separately owned areas of land. Mackenzie v. Multnomah County, 68 Or LUBA 327 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will affirm as correct a hearings officer's interpretation that a local code provision that requires aggregation of contiguous parcels in common ownership for development of a "Lot of Record" in a particular zoning district is not self-effecting. Such a code provision does not have the effect of aggregating contiguous parcels in common ownership merely because the parcels were, for three years, included in the particular zoning district, where no development was proposed or completed during the three-year period when the property was included in the zoning district. Mackenzie v. Multnomah County, 68 Or LUBA 327 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will affirm as correct a hearings officer's conclusion that a prior dwelling approval for one property did not aggregate adjacent contiguous parcels in common ownership, where nothing in the local code criteria that applied to the prior dwelling approval required aggregation in order to obtain a development permit, and the dwelling approval was not conditioned on aggregation of the parcels. Mackenzie v. Multnomah County, 68 Or LUBA 327 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. City council statements that a proposed plan and zoning map amendment to allow higher density would be "a partial answer to global warming" and generate "affordable housing" and expressions of confidence that a good outcome could be negotiated between opponents and the applicant in design review provide no basis for reversal or remand even though they may have no bearing on whether applicable approval criteria are satisfied. Generally LUBA review is limited to the final, written decision and does not extend to comments that may be made during the proceeding that lead to that final written decision. Lowery v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 339 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not interpret a definition of "multi-dwelling structure" to preclude construction of a building that straddles a lot line, where the definition is written to distinguish "multi-dwelling structures" from attached dwellings which must be located on their own lot. Beaumont-Wilshire Neighbors v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 393 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county does not err in generally identifying the extent of the surrounding neighborhood for purposes of determining whether a proposed conditional use airport will have minimal impacts on the surrounding neighborhood, where the decision makes reasonably clear that the county considered impacts from the proposed airport on other residential properties from noise generated from the proposed airport and from the risk of air crash on take off or landing crashes, and the petitioner does not point to any property or area that the county failed to consider as part of the "surrounding neighborhood." Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.829(1)(d) effectively obligates a local government to interpret an ambiguous code provision if possible in a manner not contrary to the applicable statewide planning goals and administrative rules, not only where the code provision directly implements a goal or rule protecting resource lands, but also where the code provision is a general provision applicable to all zones, including resource zones, and is not intended to implement any particular goal or rule. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA determines that a local governing body's interpretation of particular requirements of its comprehensive plan is inconsistent with the express language of the comprehensive plan requirements, it is unnecessary for LUBA to also consider whether the interpretation is inconsistent with the purpose and underlying policy of the comprehensive plan requirements. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The fact that some changes to uses allowed in a zoning district that are adopted by a legislative land use regulation amendment could also have been accomplished through a quasi-judicial rezoning decision does not provide a basis for recharacterizing a legislative land use decision as a quasi-judicial land use decision. Stevens v. Clackamas County, 68 Or LUBA 490 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government errs in construing a previous decision that deferred finding compliance with an applicable approval criterion to final planned unit development stage to restrict the local government's obligation to determine whether the applicable criterion that was deferred is satisfied by only considering whether the information required by a condition of approval was submitted, where the previous decision makes clear that the local government completely deferred making a determination of compliance with the applicable criterion to the final PUD stage. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 33 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the applicable land use regulations do not require that the owner of the property that is the subject of a permit application sign the application or join in the application, a local government errs by denying the application on the basis that the property owner opposes the permit application. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government errs in finding that a previously approved variance is no longer legally effective, based on a finding that (1) the sign that was approved "can never exist" and (2) the facts that existed at the time of the variance was approved no longer exist, where the findings do not explain why a sign with the characteristics of the sign that was originally approved "can never exist,' or why the change in facts has the legal effect of making the variance legally ineffective. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where there is nothing in the applicable land use regulations that requires the applicant for a sign permit pursuant to a previously approved variance to demonstrate that it is not possible to construct a conforming sign, the local government errs in denying the sign permit based on the applicant's failure to demonstrate it is not possible to construct a conforming sign instead. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not consider whether a county has authority to approve conditional zoning where the applicant modified its proposal making conditional zoning unnecessary before the board of commissioners could make a decision about whether the county had such authority. Warren v. Josephine County, 67 Or LUBA 74 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. State law that generally makes EFSC the sole authority to determine what constitutes the "applicable substantive criteria" when EFSC evaluates an application for a wind power generation facility preempts a county code provision that purports to dictate the county code requirements that will be included in the "applicable substantive criteria" applied in EFSC proceedings. Iberdrola Renewables v. Umatilla County, 67 Or LUBA 149 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.829(1)(d) authorizes LUBA to reject an interpretation of a land use regulation that implements a statute, land use goal or rule, if the interpretation is contrary to a state statute, land use goal or rule that the comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation implements. ORS 197.829(1)(d) is not a vehicle to require LUBA to reject an interpretation of a land use regulation that does not implement any statute, land use goal or rule, even if the interpretation may be inconsistent with federal laws that the land use regulation implements. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 67 Or LUBA 278 (2013).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city decision's characterization of "townhouses" as single family dwellings, even if incorrect, provides no basis for reversal or remand where petitioners fail to establish that the city's characterization has some bearing on an applicable approval standard. Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Despite a reasonably strong textual and contextual argument in support of a different interpretation, a city's interpretation of the phrase "facilities operating at 1,000 watts [Effective Radiated Power] ERP or less " that ERP should be calculated by channel and not by antenna is not inconsistent with the express language of the city's regulation or with the purpose of the regulation, and is required to be affirmed, where the meaning of the key term used in the provision at issue, "facility," is not clear, is not defined in the code, and the dictionary definition of the word is not particularly helpful in discerning the intent of the city in enacting the provision. ORS 197.829(1)(a). Hill v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 250 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the Court of Appeals remands a decision to LUBA to address the proper application of the Transportation Planning Rule (TPR), at OAR 660-012-0060, and on remand to LUBA the parties dispute the meaning of a TPR provision, LUBA need not resolve that dispute when during the pendency of the appeal the TPR is amended to delete the disputed TPR provision, and the TPR as amended will govern the local proceedings on remand from LUBA. Setniker v. Polk County, 65 Or LUBA 49 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. There may be limits on a county's discretion to allow land use violations to continue without challenge, but where a petitioner cites no authority that a county committed legal error by deciding not to revoke a wind turbine operator's conditional use permit or take other action to correct a land use violation, petitioner fails to establish a basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Mingo v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 122 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where DEQ has determined that for budgetary reasons it will no longer enforce its noise regulations, counties are free to enforce those noise standards if they wish, but they are not required to do so. Mingo v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 122 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city code makes the planning commission the city's final decision maker, but limits the planning commission's review on appeal to errors committed by the hearings officer, the planning commission lacks authority to consider legal challenges to the city's appeal fee. In that circumstance, LUBA lacks authority to reverse or remand the planning commission decision to the planning commission based on a legal challenge to the city's local appeal fee. Treadmill Joint Venture v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 213 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Because the legislature in adopting ORS 197.829(1) both codified and modified the holding in Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), the legislature may have intended ORS 197.829(1) to be a comprehensive statement of the circumstances under which the Clark deferential standard of review is applied to a governing body's local code interpretations, and did not intend LUBA to extend the reasoning in Clark to circumstances not covered by the statute, such as a governing body's interpretation of the text of a prior land use decision adopted by the planning commission. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In order to allow effective review of an as-applied appeal fee challenge in circumstances where, due to local regulations, the delegated local final decision maker does not have authority to accept new evidence or to consider appeal fee challenges, the local final decision maker must allow the fee challenger to submit argument and evidence into the record so that LUBA can perform its review function. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 63 Or LUBA 75 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The validity of a conservation easement acquired by the city from the applicant's predecessor-in-interest as a condition of partition approval cannot be challenged in the context of a subsequent decision that relies on the easement to deny an application for development within the easement. Bundy v. City of West Linn, 63 Or LUBA 113 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a breeding kennel arguably qualifies as animal husbandry, and animal husbandry is a farm use, a local government interpretation that the breeding kennel qualifies as a farm use is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose and policy of the land use regulation. Siegert v. Crook County, 63 Or LUBA 379 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The doctrine of judicial estoppel is invoked in some circumstances to preclude a litigant from asserting a position in a judicial proceeding that is inconsistent with a position the litigant successfully asserted in a different judicial proceeding. Even if judicial estoppel could apply in a LUBA appeal, it would not apply so broadly as to prevent a local government from correcting an earlier erroneous interpretation of its land use regulations. Jacobsen v. City of Winston, 63 Or LUBA 405 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where free-standing signs are expressly prohibited by the applicable underlying zoning district, an unconstitutional content-based exemption in the sign regulations that would otherwise apply to allow free-standing signs in that zoning district provides no basis for allowing free-standing signs in that zoning district. Onsite Advertising Services LLC v. Washington County, 63 Or LUBA 414 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where sign regulations partially exempt regulated signs from underlying zoning requirements, including setback requirements, but the sign regulations are unconstitutional in their entirety due to a separate content-based exemption in the sign regulations, proposed signs must be denied if they violate setback requirements in the underlying zone because the exemption from those setback requirements is ineffective if the sign regulations are unconstitutional in their entirety. Onsite Advertising Services LLC v. Washington County, 63 Or LUBA 414 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where PUD modifications are subject to "the applicable criteria used for the initial approval," a city hearings officer errs in concluding that only the criteria that are specifically mentioned in the initial approval decision apply. Just because criteria are not specifically mentioned in the initial approval decision findings does not mean the unmentioned criteria were not "used" in granting the initial approval. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT) decision to adopt an interchange area management plan that calls for closure of a particular access without the additional formal review that is called for in an intergovernmental agreement between ODOT and a city may constitute a violation of the intergovernmental agreement, but it does not provide a basis for reversing or remanding ODOT's decision to adopt the an interchange area management plan. Parker Johnstone Wilsonville Honda v. ODOT, 62 Or LUBA 116 (2010).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under common law a property owner has a right of access to public thoroughfares. However, that common law right of access does not extend to a right to access of a particular type or at a particular location. Parker Johnstone Wilsonville Honda v. ODOT, 62 Or LUBA 116 (2010).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a petitioner fails to challenge all the reasons a hearings officer gives for finding that a proposed wind turbine facility will not force a significant change in or significantly increase the cost of accepted farm practices on nearby farms, petitioner's challenge to the adequacy of one of the reasons the hearings officer gave provides no basis for reversal or remand. Falls v. Marion County, 61 Or LUBA 39 (2010).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners assign error to a local government construction of applicable local land use law, the question for LUBA is whether the local government's interpretation must be sustained under ORS 197.829(1), not whether petitioners' interpretation is sustainable or a better interpretation than the local government's interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.829(1), Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), and Church v. Grant County, 187 Or App 518, 69 P3d 759 (2003), a local government's interpretation and LUBA's review of that interpretation are guided by the principles articulated in PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 859 P2d 1143 (1993). Where the local government's interpretation finds almost no support in the relevant text of the land use regulation and comprehensive plan, LUBA will not defer to that interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a petitioner simply alleges that a decision that amends a comprehensive plan policy is not consistent with the purposes of comprehensive plan growth management policies or Statewide Planning Goal 14 (Urbanization), but petitioner does not identify any comprehensive plan policy purposes or the allegedly inconsistent requirement of Goal 14, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Hildenbrand v. City of Adair Village, 58 Or LUBA 43 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the Court of Appeals adopts an interpretation of a city plan policy and the city's decision is remanded because the Court of Appeals concludes the city's and LUBA's interpretation of the plan policy in approving an urban growth boundary amendment was erroneous, the city is free following remand to amend the plan policy, and is not bound to reapply the plan policy to the urban growth boundary amendment as it was interpreted by the Court of Appeals. Hildenbrand v. City of Adair Village, 58 Or LUBA 43 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where it is not clear whether a county believes a prior county decision delineated the boundaries of a resort unincorporated community, but petitioners do not allege that the appealed county decision that adopts a large scale map that precisely delineated the resort unincorporated community boundaries violates the OAR 660-022-0020 standards that govern such delineations, petitioners provide no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 58 Or LUBA 284 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A division of land that creates an EFU-zoned parcel that is smaller than the 80-acre minimum set forth in ORS 215.780(1) violates that statute, and the land division is prohibited as a matter of law. Jouvenat v. Douglas County, 58 Or LUBA 378 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Reversal is warranted under ORS 197.835(10)(a)(B) where a city denies a partition application based on a code provision that is not an approval standard and that does not authorize denial of the application, and where no other code provision cited by the city provides a basis for denial. Denial under such circumstances is "outside the range of discretion allowed the local government under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances." Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA reverses a denial under ORS 197.835(10)(a) and orders the local government to approve the "application," the application includes any (1) applicant-proposed conditions of approval and (2) conditions imposed in an initial decision that the applicant has not objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. However, the "application" does not include conditions of approval that the applicant objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county adopted a comprehensive plan policy that called for a 160-acre minimum lot size to protect big game winter range, but subsequently amended its zoning ordinance to provide for an 80-acre minimum lot size in the same area, that inconsistency created a plan/zoning ordinance conflict. If the county wishes to eliminate the inconsistency in favor of the 80-acre minimum lot size, it must demonstrate that the 80-acre minimum lot size leaves the county's Goal 5 program to protect big game winter range consistent with Goal 5. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 25 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city applies a street vacation criterion that requires the city to find "a greater public benefit would be obtained from the vacation than from retaining the right-of-way in its present status" and finds the required benefit would be realized by the new secure parking area that would be constructed in the vacated right-of-way adjacent to a new Justice Center, remand is not required simply because petitioner would have applied that "greater public benefit" criterion differently and retained the right-of-way for transportation purposes. With such a subjective standard, different reasonable persons could easily reach different conclusions about the public benefit to be derived from the proposed street vacation. Olson v. City of Springfield, 56 Or LUBA 229 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. While it may be incorrect to refer to a 43-lot subdivision with many two-acre lots as "rural," simply because it is located outside an urban growth boundary, a county commits no error in referring to the subdivision as rural in applying a subdivision approval criterion that requires a finding that the subdivision "will not create urban-farm conflicts," where the county did not rely entirely on that characterization in applying the urban-farm conflicts standard. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A zoning regulation that neither authorizes nor prohibits road construction in exclusive farm use zones provides no basis for reversal or remand of a decision that approves a subdivision of exclusive farm use zoned land, pursuant to Ballot Measure 37 waivers, where that subdivision will require the construction of some roads. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the hearings officer's sole basis for denying an application was his erroneous conclusion that the applicant failed to demonstrate compliance with a provision of the county's land development ordinance that did not apply to the proposed development, but the petitioner does not explain why the decision warrants reversal rather than remand, LUBA will remand the decision. Curtain v. Jackson County, 55 Or LUBA 79 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA sustains an assignment of error because the county's approval of the subdivision application is "prohibited as a matter of law," reversal rather than remand is the appropriate disposition. Dunn v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 206 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reject a hearings officer's interpretation of local declaratory ruling provisions to permit the planning director to "initiate" a declaratory ruling application by joining an application improperly filed by a third party, where the text and context of the declaratory ruling provisions state that the planning director may only "initiate" an application by "filing an application" accompanied by the required information. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code requires the applicant for a declaratory ruling to carry the initial and ultimate burden of proof and persuasion regarding the question submitted, a hearings officer errs in allowing the applicant to simply demonstrate that there is an interpretative dispute and leave it to third parties to take positions on that dispute and provide the only information to resolve that dispute. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 92.017, which provides that a lawfully created lot remains a discrete lot until the lot lines are vacated, does not assist petitioner where LUBA concludes that lot lines were vacated as provided by law. McKeel v. Multnomah County, 55 Or LUBA 608 (2008).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer does not err in approving development notwithstanding that the applicant failed to comply with a code requirement to determine levels of service based on existing intersection signal timing, where the code contemplates that the city may vary from the strict letter of the code to address unusual situations, based on expert recommendations, and the hearings officer agreed with the applicant's experts that due to ongoing transportation construction in the area it would serve no purpose to consider existing signal timing. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although a city may deny a conditional use permit application on the basis that there is not substantial evidence to support findings that all applicable approval criteria are met, a city may not simply deny a conditional use permit application that has already been deemed complete under ORS 227.178(2) for failure to provide requested information. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a city gives notice that additional information is required in support of a conditional use permit application, but nevertheless continues to review and make a decision on that application despite the permit applicant's failure to provide the requested additional information, the local government may not simply cite that failure to provide the requested information as the basis for denying the permit application. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not defer to a local government's interpretation of the phrase

"necessary for and accessory to" forest management as meaning "convenient and efficient" to forest management, where such an interpretation is contrary to the plain meaning of the word "necessary," the express language of the provision at issue, and other language in the provision. Greenhalgh v. Columbia County, 54 Or LUBA 626 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government's failure to provide notice to the Department of Land Conservation and Development of a proposed amendment to the zoning map requires remand. NE Medford Neighborhood Coalition v. City of Medford, 53 Or LUBA 277 (2007).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners may not ignore a hearings officer's findings that particular adjustment/variance criteria do not apply in a particular circumstance and then argue only to LUBA that the proposal violates those adjustment/variance criteria. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners' assignment of error challenging a hearings officer's decision to consider whether the adjustment/variance criteria that had been applied from the beginning during the local proceedings were the correct adjustment/variance criteria will be denied, where petitioners fail to assign error to the hearings officer's explanation for why he reconsidered whether those criteria were the correct criteria to apply and petitioners make no effort to argue that the hearings officer's explanation is faulty in some way. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a zoning ordinance requires a "site specific investigation by a registered geologist or engineer," and the local government finds that a preliminary site evaluation prepared by a geologist was sufficient to constitute the required site specific investigation, a petitioner's objection that the preliminary site evaluation is insufficient will be rejected, where petitioner fails to challenge the city's findings that explain why the city viewed the preliminary site evaluation as sufficient. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 52 Or LUBA 435 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings official does not improperly substitute state agency permit approval criteria for a local subdivision drainage criterion, where she denies subdivision approval based on a finding that the applicant failed to demonstrate that proposed drywells that would be needed for adequate drainage could be approved by the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality or that there were alternative methods of drainage if the drywells could not be approved. Weiskind v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 753 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not consider an argument that an annexation is barred by a statute that was adopted and took effect after the annexation was approved, where LUBA would be required to consider extra-record evidence to do so, the local government objects to LUBA's consideration of that extra-record evidence and petitioner does not file a motion requesting an evidentiary hearing at LUBA. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 268.354(1), which provides that in addition to other statutory requirements "boundary changes within a metropolitan service district are subject to the requirements established by the district," is an adequate statutory grant of authority to allow the district to adopt legislation that delays the effective date of an annexation ordinance while the annexation ordinance is on appeal to the district. City of Happy Valley v. City of Damascus, 51 Or LUBA 141 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a review criterion that applies to a city boundary change on review by Metro unambiguously requires that the boundary change must be consistent with agreements between the city and other necessary parties, a memorandum of understanding to which the city is not a party could not provide a basis for Metro to deny the annexation ordinance under that review criterion. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Reversal, not remand, is the appropriate remedy where a challenged property line adjustment purports to reconfigure the lot lines of three adjacent lots of an existing subdivision to create two lots out of the pre-existing three lots, and the reconfiguration cannot be achieved through a single property line adjustment or through serial adjustments. Borton v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 478 (2006).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reject a petitioner's argument that a tree plan does not adequately protect trees, simply because the tree plan recognizes that during the development process trees slated for removal in the tree plan may be saved, where the local code merely requires that an applicant for development approval prepare a tree plan and states that "[p]rotection [of trees] is preferred over removal wherever possible." Frewing v. City of Tigard, 50 Or LUBA 226 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a petitioner shows that a county's findings are inadequate, but the quality of the evidentiary record and the findings that could reasonably be adopted based on that record are disputed, remand is the appropriate remedy where (1) petitioner does not show that a county's decision is "outside the range of discretion allowed the [county] under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances," which would require reversal of the county's decision and an order to approve the permit under ORS 197.835(10)(a) or (2) that the county's decision to deny the permit "violates a provision of applicable law and is prohibited as a matter of law," which would justify a decision by LUBA to reverse the county court's decision under OAR 661-010-0073(1)(c). Hellberg v. Morrow County, 49 Or LUBA 423 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will decline to interpret a local provision in the first instance under ORS 197.829(2), where the provision is subject to several potential interpretations, some of which, if adopted, would require reversing the decision. In such circumstances, remand is appropriate to allow the governing body to interpret the provision in the first instance. Moreland v. City of Depoe Bay, 48 Or LUBA 136 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not resolve a petitioner's challenge to a county's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy where, under the facts found by the county and affirmed by LUBA, the plan policy would be applied the same way under either petitioner's or the county's interpretation. Under such circumstances, the interpretative dispute between the parties is merely hypothetical, and the alleged misinterpretation provides no basis for reversal or remand. Doob v. Josephine County, 48 Or LUBA 227 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Code language that prohibits a city from requiring design changes that are "materially different from customary development in the area" is not properly interpreted to mandate that the city impose a roof height that is customary within the area, or prohibit the city from approving a roof height that is not customary. Carrigg v. City of Enterprise, 48 Or LUBA 328 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Regional plan amendments that will require a city to amend its zoning ordinance to include specific provisions to protect industrial land from being converted to office and commercial use do not violate a city's constitutional home rule authority. City of Sandy v. Metro, 48 Or LUBA 363 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Concern about the potential for conversion of industrially planned and zoned lands to commercial and office uses is a legitimate area of metropolitan concern within the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Service District. City of Sandy v. Metro, 48 Or LUBA 363 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a zoning ordinance requires preparation of a management plan to protect wildlife resources when siting a house in a significant wildlife habitat area and the local government approves the dwelling without the required management plan, remand is required, notwithstanding that there may be documents in the record from which the required management plan could be developed. Burton v. Polk County, 48 Or LUBA 440 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. While it might be error for a local government to rely on findings demonstrating compliance with a less rigorous "balancing" standard to demonstrate compliance with a more rigorous "no adverse impact" standard, the reverse is not necessarily true: the local government may be able to rely on findings of compliance with the more rigorous standard to demonstrate compliance with a less rigorous standard. Cadwell v. Union County, 48 Or LUBA 500 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reverse rather than remand a decision approving a property line adjustment, where the decision erroneously approves something other than a property line adjustment, and the decision and respondent offer no theory as to how the city could lawfully do what the decision purports to do. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A code provision that authorizes continuation of existing uses that are unlawful or in violation of applicable land use laws is inconsistent with such laws. Okray v. City of Cottage Grove, 47 Or LUBA 297 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city cites no authority for the city engineer to agree to reduce the speed limit for a proposed road rather than requiring that the road be constructed to city standards for vertical sag curves, LUBA will remand the city's decision. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county's approval of a five-acre-lot subdivision inside the UGB with a condition requiring that the applicant record CC&Rs that effectively prohibit further subdivision of those five-acre lots violates ORS 197.752. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. It is not within LUBA's scope of review to address whether existing code design review standards comply with the ORS 197.307(3)(b) requirement for "clear and objective" approval standards, in the context of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment that rezones property to allow uses that will be subject to approval under the existing design review standards, where the challenged decision does not amend the design review standards or attempt to bring any part of the city's code into compliance with ORS 197.307(3)(b). NWDA v. City of Portland, 47 Or LUBA 533 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where two pages of legal argument are attached to a local appellant's jurisdictional statement of the grounds for local appeal, and the county refuses to consider those two pages simply because they are unsigned and include a non-appellant's fax header, the county commits error. Burke v. Crook County, 46 Or LUBA 413 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where local appellants (1) sign a local appeal form, (2) indicate "see attached" in the part of the appeal form where the grounds for the local appeal are to be specified, and (3) attach two pages that identify alleged legal errors in the decision, it is error for the county to refuse to consider the attached pages simply because there is no signature at the bottom of those pages and the pages include the fax header of a non-appellant. Burke v. Crook County, 46 Or LUBA 413 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not assume a county rejected a local appeal, where petitioner and the county dispute whether the county rejected petitioner's attempted local appeal or whether petitioner voluntarily withdrew his local appeal to correct identified deficiencies and later failed to refile the local appeal, and the record does not establish that the county rejected the local appeal. Burke v. Crook County, 46 Or LUBA 413 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county's local appeal form invites five local appellants to utilize a single local appeal form and attach documents in support of the appeal to that local appeal form, the county may not impose additional signature and express incorporation requirements that are not reflected in the form to limit the right of individual local appellants to rely on attached documents to support their local appeal. Burke v. Crook County, 46 Or LUBA 413 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. For the purposes of ORS 197.830(3), a notice of hearing that explains that a county is considering the annexation of property to a sewer district adequately describes the proposed action to be taken by the county, even if the area described in the notice is later amended to delete one parcel. Miner v. Clatsop County, 46 Or LUBA 467 (2004).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code provision expressly requires that a proposed subdivision must "conform to" the comprehensive plan, the local government errs in interpreting the code to preclude the possibility that there are any comprehensive plan provisions that might apply directly to the subdivision proposal. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA concludes that relevant local code provisions make the comprehensive plan requirements potentially applicable to an application for subdivision approval and that a particular comprehensive plan provision applies and is not merely aspirational, and the local government approved the subdivision without addressing the comprehensive plan provision, the subdivision approval decision must be remanded. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government has adopted no local highway design safety standards, it commits no error by applying American Association of State Highway and Transportation Official standards to reject a subdivision opponent's intersection site distance concerns, notwithstanding that it has not adopted those standards and may have been laboring under the incorrect assumption that it had adopted those standards. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city code provision requires that a design review decision maker consider impacts on neighboring land values, and the code also grants discretion to the decision maker to modify a proposed site design to better conform to code standards, a city errs in failing to consider proposed modifications to a site design to minimize impacts to neighboring land values. Freeland v. City of Bend, 45 Or LUBA 125 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners' assignment of error is based on the erroneous assumption that a code standard that prohibits home occupations that are "objectionable due to [emissions]" prohibits any discernable emissions, and petitioners do not challenge city findings that the emissions that can be expected from a proposed home occupation will not be objectionable, the assignment of error provides no basis for reversal or remand. Roe v. City of Union, 45 Or LUBA 660 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government adopts unchallenged findings explaining that a demonstration that a proposed conditional use complies with all relevant zoning ordinance criteria is also sufficient to establish that the conditional use complies with the comprehensive plan, petitioners' challenge at LUBA that the conditional use is inconsistent with particular comprehensive plan provisions that are not specifically addressed in the conditional use decision provides no basis for reversal or remand. Roe v. City of Union, 45 Or LUBA 660 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. OAR 660-023-0180 establishes a comprehensive regulatory scheme for reviewing mining applications. A county errs when it denies an application for mining in part because it does not comply with local approval criteria that are unrelated to OAR 660-023-0180. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county may not approve a nonfarm dwelling on a parcel created after January 1, 1993, under ORS 215.284(2)(c), which requires that the parcel on which a nonfarm dwelling is to be located be created prior to January 1, 1993, in order to remedy what it perceives to be an injustice. Harris v. Jefferson County, 44 Or LUBA 205 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A decision that approves a nonfarm dwelling on EFU land notwithstanding that the application does not comply with the applicable criteria set out at ORS 215.284(2)(c) will be reversed. Harris v. Jefferson County, 44 Or LUBA 205 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county did not err in determining that for the purposes of tallying the number of parcels within a 160-acre template, "parcels" are not limited to those units of land created by partitioning, and include other units of land that qualify as "parcels" under the county's definition of the term. Testa v. Clackamas County, 44 Or LUBA 402 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that does not include the "text" of the proposed amendment as defined by OAR 660-018-0020(2) is inadequate to perform the notice function required by ORS 197.610(1). No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that includes the text of the proposed amendment as that term is defined in OAR 660-018-0020(2), but was submitted approximately 23 days prior to the city's initial evidentiary hearing is adequate to perform the notice function required by ORS 197.610(1). No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city has a process requiring that proposed amendments to a comprehensive plan and zoning code be subject to hearing and review by the planning commission and proposed design review guidelines be subject to hearing and review by the design commission, a notice of proposed amendment regarding the matters before the planning commission is not sufficient to apprise DLCD or others who receive notice pursuant to ORS 197.610(2) of the design review proceedings. No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that erroneously states that the initial evidentiary hearing had been held and does not indicate whether further opportunities to provide evidence are available is not adequate to satisfy ORS 197.610(1), which requires that notice of proposed post-acknowledgement land use amendments be submitted to DLCD at least 45 days prior to the initial evidentiary proceedings on those amendments. No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners may not argue that a city's decision to deny its application was for the purpose of avoiding the 120-day decision deadline set out at ORS 227.178, when the challenged decision was rendered five days after that deadline. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reverse rather than remand a decision, where the local government has twice denied development based solely on code interpretations that LUBA found to be clearly erroneous, and there is little likelihood that remand could result in a sustainable denial. Church v. Grant County, 43 Or LUBA 291 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Pursuant to ORS 197.830(3), a city decision maker must disclose all ex parte contacts at the first opportunity and must inform participants of their right to rebut the substance of the disclosure. However, a city's failure to inform a petitioner of his right to rebut the substance of an ex parte disclosure will not result in reversal or remand where (1) the disclosure of the ex parte contact was promptly made; (2) petitioner had more than one opportunity to object to the adequacy and the content of the disclosure; and (3) no party appears to dispute the facts alleged in the disclosure. DLCD v. City of Gold Beach, 43 Or LUBA 319 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA may not overlook the fact that a new land use regulation is facially noncompliant with a Metro standard that the regulation is intended to implement, simply because the regulation requires compliance with unspecified standards of a sewerage agency that allegedly comply with the Metro standard. Even if the sewerage agency standards comply with the Metro standard, it is questionable whether the city may adopt noncompliant regulations and rely on a separate local government or agency to ensure compliance with the Metro standard. Stallkamp v. City of King City, 43 Or LUBA 333 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not remand a decision based on an allegation that the decision maker failed to follow the consultation and coordination requirements of OAR 340-252-0060, where the record makes clear that all parties required by the rule to be consulted were aware of and actively participated in the process leading to the challenged decision, and any failure to follow the procedures set out by the rule was attributable to someone other than the decision maker. Witham Parts and Equipment Co. v. ODOT, 42 Or LUBA 435 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. OAR 660-004-0000(2) does not, as a matter of law, impose a requirement that an applicant for an exception to Goal 3 to permit a single-family dwelling on a 10-acre parcel first exhaust all other potential avenues to obtain approval for that single-family dwelling. DLCD v. Yamhill County, 42 Or LUBA 126 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a code criterion can be interpreted to impermissibly shift the burden of proof from an applicant to an appellant in a local land use appeal, but it is reasonably clear that the county did not apply the code criterion to shift the burden in that manner, petitioner's assignment of error that the county improperly shifted the burden of proof will be denied. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where it is not apparent that a county adopted one or more conditions of approval to address the impacts described in ORS 215.296(1), petitioner's argument that the county's conditions of approval are not "clear and objective," as is required by ORS 215.296(2), provides no basis for reversal or remand. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A post-acknowledgment amendment to an ordinance implementing Goal 5 must be remanded, where the city failed to provide the notice to DLCD required by ORS 197.610(1) and 197.615(1). Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 453 (2002).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A decision that only partially complies with a set of legal requirements that do not allow for partial compliance may be remanded on that basis. DLCD v. City of McMinnville, 41 Or LUBA 210 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city council's decision to allow the prevailing party to draft proposed findings in support of a decision to rezone property provides no basis for reversal or remand. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 41 Or LUBA 167 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A zoning ordinance provision that expresses a preference for nonstructural over structural solutions to erosion and flooding problems does not apply to an application for recreational vehicle park expansion that proposes erosion or flooding measures, at least where the proposal does not make structural erosion or flood control measures likely or inevitable. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 41 Or LUBA 130 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Any error that may have been committed by failing to provide a proposed comprehensive plan amendment to DLCD 45 days before the first evidentiary hearing was corrected on remand by offering to provide the proposal to DLCD more than 45 days before the evidentiary hearing on remand, where there is no contention that DLCD failed to receive the proposal or failed to provide notice of the proposal in accordance with ORS 197.610(1) and DLCD advises the county that it does not oppose the proposal. Donnell v. Union County, 40 Or LUBA 455 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although rezoning a 1.94-acre parcel from residential to commercial may not violate comprehensive plan policies that require an adequate supply of urban land to meet urban needs and support of transportation systems by locating housing near work and shopping areas, a local government errs in finding that those polices are irrelevant. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. While a development may have to eventually comply with federal laws, such as the Endangered Species Act, unless local approval criteria or federal law provisions require that the local decision that approves the development also demonstrate compliance with federal law, the decision need not do so. McNern v. City of Corvallis, 39 Or LUBA 591 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Any error in failing to comply with code provisions for amending the Metro UGB is harmless, where the pertinent code provisions are not based on statute, goal or rule; the provisions have been superseded by new standards that would apply on remand; and it is undisputed that the decision does not violate the new standards. Citizens Against Irresponsible Growth v. Metro, 39 Or LUBA 539 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local ordinance that institutes a process to remove property from a Goal 5 historic resources inventory but fails to include a method to determine whether the historic designation was "imposed" on the property, within the meaning of ORS 197.772(3), is inconsistent with that statute. Demlow v. City of Hillsboro, 39 Or LUBA 307 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government may not apply only local code provisions to an application to remove property from a historic resources inventory, where the local code provisions are inconsistent with statutory provisions permitting removal of certain properties from a historic resources inventory. Demlow v. City of Hillsboro, 39 Or LUBA 307 (2001).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. After a city has approved a permit application, the city may not apply code provisions to require that development occur within a particular time frame when the permit was initially approved without the application of those code provisions, and the city's past practice did not include the imposition of the development deadlines contained in those code provisions. Halvorson Mason Corp. v. City of Depoe Bay, 39 Or LUBA 193 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In reviewing land use decisions, LUBA's scope of review is not limited to arguments regarding the local government's application of land use regulations or other land use standards; LUBA may also consider arguments that the decision violates applicable non-land use standards. Carlsen v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 93 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the Court of Appeals directs LUBA to consider on remand an assignment of error directed at the local government's application of a policy that is not a land use regulation or otherwise a land use standard, LUBA will consider the policy to be "applicable law" for purposes of LUBA's scope of review under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D). Carlsen v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 93 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city does not err by failing to apply comprehensive plan annexation policies in reviewing an application for annexation, where those policies were adopted after the application for annexation was submitted and became complete. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An access road to a winery is an accessory use to the winery. When the zoning for the location of the proposed access road does not allow wineries, the access road cannot be established as an accessory use on that part of the property. Roth v. Jackson County, 38 Or LUBA 894 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. As long as the expansion of the public use airport continues to serve the same class of airplanes pursuant to OAR 660-012-0065, the expansion is considered to be consistent with Goals 3, 4, 11, and 14, and an exception to those goals is not required. Lentz v. Lane County, 38 Or LUBA 669 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city's code requires that connections to the city sewer be made within 90 days after receiving official notice to do so, a local government's decision to extend the deadline for compliance does not provide a basis for reversal or remand in the absence of a showing that the required official notice was given, or that the extension of the compliance deadline is otherwise prohibited. Reynolds v. City of Sweet Home, 38 Or LUBA 507 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. DEQ administrative rules do not require that restroom facilities be connected to a public sewer system. In the absence of such a requirement, the use of portable toilets rather than plumbed restrooms does not require the revocation of a conditional use permit for an RV park. Reynolds v. City of Sweet Home, 38 Or LUBA 507 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city's interpretation of its code to allow for modifications of conditions of approval is not "clearly wrong" where the code allows for modification of a conditional use and the city interprets the modification provision to allow for amendments to conditions where the use continues to meet the purpose of the conditional use provisions, or the permit holder has established a valid basis for extending the time period for compliance. Reynolds v. City of Sweet Home, 38 Or LUBA 507 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioner fails to establish error in approving a subdivision without environmental review required for development in an environmental zone, where the applicant proposes no development in an environmental zone and the only impact on an off-site environmental zone is the release of storm water at predevelopment rates. Bauer v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 432 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Failure to list applicable criteria in a pre-hearing notice in violation of ORS 197.763(3)(a) allows petitioner to raise issues at LUBA relating to the omitted criteria without having raised those issues before the local government. However, failure to list applicable criteria does not, in itself, provide a basis for reversal or remand. Ashley Manor Care Centers v. City of Grants Pass, 38 Or LUBA 308 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A neighborhood association's failure to provide specific notice to a permit applicant that the neighborhood association was going to consider appealing the applicant's permit approval at its regular meeting does not violate ORS 192.640(1) of the Public Meeting Law, where the permit approval was issued on the same day as the regular meeting, and the statute specifically authorizes consideration of principal subjects that are not included in the notice of public meeting. St. Johns Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 275 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A land use decision maker commits no error by failing to require that an applicant for approval of a transmission tower justify the proposed height of the tower, where the relevant statutes impose different approval criteria depending on the height of the tower but do not require that the proposed tower height be justified. Dierking v. Clackamas County, 38 Or LUBA 106 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county approves aggregate mining in an airport overlay zone under a standard that allows water impoundments that do not significantly increase bird strike hazards, but the county does not address another local standard that appears to flatly prohibit such impoundments, LUBA will remand the decision to the county to resolve the apparent conflict between the two standards. Jorgensen v. Union County, 37 Or LUBA 738 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a zoning ordinance standard requires consideration of residential appearance and function of an "area" in approving a bed and breakfast facility, and a hearings officer's selection of a two-block area for analysis is based on assumed walking distance to cars parked off-site and is no less plausible than petitioner's rationale for selecting a larger area for analysis, the hearings officer does not misconstrue the applicable law. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A petitioner's arguments that a zoning ordinance amendment violates a plan policy discouraging uses that are not water dependent provides no basis for remand, where the challenged decision raises the maximum building height and does not approve any particular use of the property. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. An argument that a city erred by failing to adopt findings addressing a plan policy that is 22 single-spaced pages long and broken down into many subparts is inadequately developed, where the city adopted findings addressing two parts of the policy and petitioner makes no attempt to explain what other parts of the policy petitioner believes are applicable. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA finds that an administrative rule provision is valid, and the appealed decision approves an application solely on the basis that the administrative rule is invalid, the appealed decision must be reversed. Bruggere v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 571 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city council's review of a planning commission decision is limited to whether the lower decision is supported by substantial evidence, and petitioner argues that the city council exceeded its review authority by reweighing the evidence, LUBA will deny the assignment of error where it concludes that the city council understood and applied the substantial evidence standard correctly. Ontrack, Inc. v. City of Medford, 37 Or LUBA 472 (2000).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Imposition of an ineffective condition as part of a comprehensive plan map amendment may result in remand where the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with a relevant approval criterion. However, such an ineffective condition does not provide a basis for reversal or remand where it is not shown that the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with plan map amendment approval criteria. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a decision maker discloses ex parte contacts at the beginning of the local proceedings, petitioners must request clarification of the ex parte contacts or otherwise object to the adequacy of the disclosure during the local proceedings. Because petitioner failed to object below, petitioner's assignment of error does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Wild Rose Ranch Enterprises v. Benton County, 37 Or LUBA 368 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the statute authorizing counties to permit home occupations is amended to remove the limitation that the home occupation be conducted entirely within a dwelling or accessory building, but the county's home occupation ordinance still reflects the former statute, the county is not required to apply its home occupation ordinance consistently with the stricter requirements of the former statute and case law interpreting that statute. Greer v. Josephine County, 37 Or LUBA 261 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not conclude that the statutory definition of high-value soils excludes soil complexes in which listed soils form the predominant part, where petitioner fails to establish a sufficient basis to form that conclusion. Tri-River Investment Co. v. Clatsop County, 37 Or LUBA 195 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Metro may adopt a functional plan with site-specific requirements without necessarily exceeding its authority under ORS 268.030(3) to "provide for those aspects of land use planning having metropolitan significance." Commercial Real Estate Economic Coalition v. Metro, 37 Or LUBA 171 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA rejects as a matter of law a county's erroneous interpretation of its comprehensive plan as imposing a 2.3-acre minimum residential density, procedural errors the county may have committed in considering evidence outside the record in reaching that erroneous interpretation provide no additional basis for remand. Columbia Hills Development Co. v. Columbia County, 36 Or LUBA 691 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government is not estopped from following the appeal procedure that is required by its code where it is unclear whether county staff (1) made any false statements to the applicant concerning appeal procedures, (2) were aware that any of their representations were incorrect, or (3) intended that the applicant take any action based on such representations; and the applicant does not identify how she was induced to act differently by the county's representations. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reverse a land use decision only where the decision is prohibited as a matter of law. Wood v. Crook County, 36 Or LUBA 143 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government's modification of standards applicable to a planned unit development rests on independent alternative grounds, petitioner's demonstration of error in one alternative ground provides no basis to reverse or remand the challenged decision where petitioner fails to challenge the other alternative ground. Hard Rock Enterprises v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 106 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a hearings officer's findings are inadequate to explain why a proposed use that qualifies as a permitted use as a "household" does not also fall within the definition of a "nursing home," which is only allowed as a conditional use, a remand would normally be required. However, where the facts are not disputed, and LUBA is presented with a straightforward question of law, it may consider whether the proposed use falls within the definition of "nursing home." Neels v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 54 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a county code applies the same "stability" standard that is required by ORS 215.284(1)(d) and (2)(d) for nonfarm dwellings to approval of recreational vehicle parks, it is not bound by case law that interprets and applies the statutory standard, where LUBA did not determine in its decision remanding the decision to the county that it must interpret the code standard in the same manner that the statute has been interpreted. Ray v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 45 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county code "stability" standard that does not implement the statutory nonfarm use "stability" standard is not subject to case law interpreting the statutory "stability" standard, but such a code "stability" standard necessarily connotes a temporal period and a scope of causative impact for analysis. However, a county's interpretation of the local "stability" standard as focusing on short-term effects and direct impacts rather than long-term and cumulative impacts is not clearly wrong and therefore must be affirmed by LUBA. Ray v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 45 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a plan policy provides that the purpose of a rural industrial zone is to allow industrial uses in close proximity to the resources upon which they rely, but it is not clear how that policy applies and the list of allowed uses in the rural industrial zone does not appear to be consistent with the policy, LUBA will remand the decision so that the local government can interpret the plan policy in the first instance. James v. Josephine County, 35 Or LUBA 493 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In determining whether to reverse or remand a land use decision, the question is whether it is the land use decision or the land use proposal that is defective. Angius v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 462 (1999).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A hearings officer's determination that an EFU-zoned property is not necessary to provide a proposed public service is not inconsistent with a drainage master plan and does not constitute an impermissible collateral attack on the drainage master plan, where the drainage master plan was not adopted in accordance with post-acknowledgment procedures and only identifies the site as a "preferred" site. Clackamas Co. Svc. Dist. No. 1 v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 374 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city does not err in regulating conditional uses differently from uses permitted outright even if a particular conditional use is similar to a use permitted outright. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although Oregon Laws 1997, chapter 859 (HB 2605) repeals two sections of the legislation that directed DLCD to adopt the Airport Planning Rule (APR), the 1997 legislation does not completely supersede the APR or DLCD's authority to adopt rules regarding airport planning. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 35 Or LUBA 30 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city cannot find it is feasible to comply with all approval criteria based on a site plan for only four of the total 15 lots and defer submission of a complete site plan, and the record does not clearly support a determination of compliance with the approval criteria where the complete site plan is not included in the record. Deal v. City of Hermiston, 35 Or LUBA 16 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government may approve a partition and defer determination of an applicable approval criterion, provided the subsequent approval process provides the same notice and opportunity for public input as the original proceeding and the approval criteria are not so dependent on each other that they must be applied together. Sunningdale-Case Heights Assoc. v. Washington Co., 34 Or LUBA 549 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. While petitioners may raise issues concerning compliance with approval criteria that are not identified in the local notice of hearing, petitioners must supply some explanation why they believe a "purpose statement" should be viewed as an approval criterion; petitioners may not simply assume that it is a criterion. Rouse v. Tillamook County, 34 Or LUBA 530 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Because a county's interpretation of its code to allow deferral of compliance with an approval criterion to a later stage with no opportunity for public hearing is contrary to ORS 197.763(2) and 215.416, LUBA owes that interpretation no deference under ORS 197.829(1). Tenly Properties Corp. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 352 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government misapplies the applicable law by prohibiting seasonal farmworker housing that is permitted by statute, LUBA will remand and not reverse where the statute permits the local government to condition and even deny an application for seasonal farmworker housing, and thus the result is not prohibited as a matter of law. Shadrin v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 154 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Fasano v. Washington Co. Comm., 264 Or 574, 507 P2d 23 (1973), does not establish procedural requirements independent of those required by state statute or local ordinance. St. Johns Neighborhood v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 46 (1998).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.835(10)(a)(B), which allows LUBA to reverse a local government's decision and order development approval when denial of the application was for the purpose of avoiding the 120-day limit of ORS 215.428, does not apply to good faith denials on the merits of the application, whether timely or untimely. Miller v. Multnomah County, 33 Or LUBA 644 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In adopting land use regulations, including emergency and temporary land use regulations, a city is bound by the substantive and procedural requirements established by ORS 197.610 and Statewide Planning Goals 1 and 2. These statutory and Goal requirements must be followed notwithstanding contrary city charter provisions. Western PCS, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 33 Or LUBA 369 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city's error in converting an appeal of a quasi-judicial decision into a de novo legislative proceeding is substantive rather than procedural, and its decision is prohibited as a matter of law. Anderson v. City of Shady Cove, 33 Or LUBA 173 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The word "shall," used in a regulation, expresses what is mandatory. A local government interpretation to the contrary is indefensible and will not be affirmed by LUBA. DLCD v. Tillamook County, 33 Or LUBA 163 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Mandatory code requirements cannot be subverted by a local government interpretation. DLCD v. Tillamook County, 33 Or LUBA 163 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a condition of approval requires that the developer shall provide a "turnaround" at the end of a platted street, and the existence of the turnaround will bring the street within the definition of a cul-de-sac under local code, the city's tentative plat approval must be remanded where it does not satisfy the applicable local criteria for a cul-de-sac. Wicks-Snodgrass v. City of Reedsport, 32 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the city's comprehensive plan expressly requires that new subdivisions shall have sidewalks, the city may not use the variance procedures of its subdivision ordinance in order to grant an exception to the comprehensive plan sidewalk requirement. Wicks-Snodgrass v. City of Reedsport, 32 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the county's interpretation of a local ordinance allows dog kennels that were in existence in 1986 to be established as permitted uses without a showing of compliance with the ORS 215.296 farm impact standards, the county's interpretation violates ORS 215.283(2). Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the county's interpretation of a local ordinance regarding nonconforming uses allows an abandoned nonconforming dog kennel use to be reinstated, that interpretation violates OAR 660-33-120, which prohibits new kennels on high-value farmland. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will defer to the county governing body's interpretation of a plan policy as being applicable when development approval is sought rather than when the plan map is amended. Helvetia Community Assoc. v. Washington County, 31 Or LUBA 446 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioner's conjecture regarding one hypothetical development scenario does not provide a basis for a determination that the city's decision does not conform to the applicable criteria. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 410 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Statements made by individual decision makers during local government hearings that express erroneous interpretations of law or legally improper reasons for adopting a land use decision provide no basis for reversal or remand unless such statements are adopted in the final written decision or findings supporting the written decision. Fraley v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 566 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Local governing body may not determine an appeal to be moot and reinstate an earlier, rescinded decision, based on petitioner's collateral challenge to the authority of the planning director to rescind that earlier decision, when the rescission decision was not timely appealed. Petterson v. Klamath County, 31 Or LUBA 402 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Application of a local zoning ordinance to allow a nonconforming use that has been interrupted or abandoned to be resumed, violates ORS 215.130(7) and must be reversed. Moore v. Coos County, 31 Or LUBA 347 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The city's failure to address aspirational criteria stated in the city's comprehensive plan does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Stewart v. City of Brookings, 31 LUBA 325 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner does not establish that alleged inadequacies in the findings relate to any applicable approval criteria, petitioner has provided no basis for reversal or remand. Stewart v. City of Brookings, 31 LUBA 325 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a county recognizes a citizens planning advisory committee (CPAC) chosen in violation of election procedures previously adopted by resolution and incorporated by reference in its comprehensive plan, it ignores a substantive violation of its plan and land use regulations, and the CPAC is a nullity. Boom v. Columbia County, 31 Or LUBA 318 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a comprehensive plan policy is couched in mandatory terms, but does not state an approval standard, the county's failure to address that policy in its decision is not error. Friends of Indian Ford v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 248 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a hearings officer's interpretation that the county's street frontage requirement mandates street frontages be on a public road or street is contrary to the plain language of the county's zoning ordinance, a denial of a partition based solely on that interpretation will be reversed. Miller v. Clackamas County, 31 Or LUBA 104 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If the local government's interpretation of its own code regarding the scope of a proposed partition contravenes the express language of the code, LUBA will not defer to that interpretation. Tognoli v. Crook County, 30 Or LUBA 272 (1996).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the inapplicability of a local code provision is clear on its face, or petitioner's challenge to its applicability is so untenable as to obviate the need for the local government's authoritative interpretation, a remand for such purpose is unnecessary. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 30 Or LUBA 17 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although LUBA may not itself order a local government to refund a fee charged for a local appeal, local fee payment issues are part of the land use appeals structure, capable of violating applicable legal standards and providing a basis for remand. Gensman v. City of Tigard, 29 Or LUBA 505 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners fail to identify any applicable legal standard allegedly violated by the county's decision, petitioners have supplied no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Collier v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 462 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a code provision simply provides the decision maker "may require" an applicant to submit a traffic capacity analysis, but petitioners identify no legal standard arguably requiring such an analysis in the instant case or establishing standards for local government decisions on whether to require such an analysis, the local government's failure to require such an analysis does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Jackman v. City of Tillamook, 29 Or LUBA 391 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although LUBA owes no deference to a hearings officer's interpretation of a local enactment, LUBA may remand a challenged decision in cases where the interpretation at issue is not explained in the findings or differs from an earlier interpretation, in order to give the hearings officer an opportunity to interpret the local enactment in the first instance. Moore v. Clackamas County, 29 Or LUBA 372 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.829 governs this Board's scope of review in reviewing local government governing bodies' interpretations of local enactments. ORS 197.829(4) has nothing to do with whether a particular statutory provision applies directly as an approval standard for a local government land use decision. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. When reviewing a local governing body's decision, LUBA cannot interpret local enactments in the first instance. Where petitioners challenge a local governing body's decision on the basis of failure to comply with certain arguably applicable comprehensive plan and code provisions, and the challenged decision contains neither an interpretation of the applicability of the plan and code provisions, nor a determination of whether they are satisfied, the challenged decision must be remanded. McCrary v. City of Talent, 29 Or LUBA 110 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government does not identify specific provisions in its comprehensive plan which it contends provide the basis for challenged land use regulation amendments, under ORS 197.835(5)(b), LUBA is required to reverse or remand the land use regulation amendments if they do not comply with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where respondents do not identify specific provisions in the applicable comprehensive plan, which they contend provide the basis for challenged zone changes, under ORS 197.825(5)(b) LUBA is required to reverse or remand the zone changes if they do not comply with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals or their implementing rules. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner alleges the local government's notice of public hearing violates local code requirements, but petitioner fails to provide LUBA with the local code requirements allegedly violated, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. There can be no possible rational dispute that an adjustment changing the number of parking spaces required for a proposed development does not violate a code prohibition against adjustments that are "exception[s] to the procedural steps of a procedure or to change assigned procedures." Champion v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 618 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In reviewing a decision adopted by the local governing body, LUBA must review the governing body's interpretation of local code provisions and may not interpret the local code in the first instance, unless there is "no possible rational dispute" regarding the correct interpretation of the local code. Foster v. Coos County, 28 Or LUBA 609 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA is not required to defer to a hearing's officer's interpretation of the local code under ORS 197.829 or Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 515, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Rather, LUBA's review of a hearings officer's interpretation is to determine whether the interpretation is reasonable and correct. Ellison v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the record demonstrates that two city council members had numerous ex parte contacts with the applicant and failed to disclose those contacts and provide an opportunity for rebuttal, as required by ORS 227.180(3), remand is required. Smith v. City of Phoenix, 28 Or LUBA 517 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The "public need" standard formerly imposed on quasi-judicial zone changes under Fasano v. Washington Co. Comm., 264 Or 574, 507 P2d 23 (1973), does not apply to comprehensive plan amendments, unless the applicable comprehensive plan or land use regulations impose such a "public need" standard. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the challenged decision is adopted by the governing body, LUBA may not interpret the applicability of arguably applicable comprehensive plan policies. Rather, the governing body must interpret the applicability of such plan policies in the first instance. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the local government determined comprehensive plan objectives are mandatory approval standards in a recently appealed local decision, it may not later determine that plan objectives are mere guidelines and not mandatory approval standards in a different decision appealed to LUBA, in the absence of some explanation for the disparity. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the local code simply provides the planning director may reject an application concerning a property where a violation of local or state law is found to exist, but does not require that the planning director do so, petitioner's allegations concerning improper or fraudulent past actions by the local government concerning the property fail to provide a basis for reversal or remand. Scholes v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 407 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Read together, ORS 215.263(7) and ORS 215.284(2)(c) prohibit the further division of an EFU-zoned parcel created before January 1, 1993, on which a nonfarm dwelling has already been approved. Therefore, a county decision approving division of such a parcel is erroneous as a matter of law and must be reversed. Harrell v. Baker County, 28 Or LUBA 260 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a challenged decision was not adopted by the governing body of the local government, LUBA owes no deference to the interpretations of local enactments expressed in that decision. Pickrell v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 103 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Assignments of error that contend disputed conditions of approval either exceed a local government's authority under, or improperly construe, applicable law, if sustained, provide a basis for reversal or remand of a challenged decision, regardless of whether the challenged decision is a land use decision or limited land use decision. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government does not exceed its authority under a code section authorizing it to control "the nature and scale of development" by prohibiting development of two lots, as configured in a proposed seven-lot subdivision. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a challenged decision determines certain comprehensive plan policies are mandatory approval standards applicable to the proposed action, but LUBA cannot determine from the decision what the local government believes those policies require, the decision must be remanded for the local government to interpret the policies. Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where comprehensive plan and zoning map amendments simply change the designation and zone of a county park to ones that allow parks as a conditional use, the amendments are not inherently inconsistent with an existing dedication of the subject property for public use as a park. Therefore, that the amendments may not comply with statutory requirements for vacation of such a dedication provides no basis for reversal or remand. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a challenged decision adopts a new plan policy stating the city will allow a particular commercial-designated area to be developed "to serve both neighborhood commercial needs and as a community commercial center," but declines to change a plan policy that commercial development of the area should be at an intensity consistent with General Office or Neighborhood Commercial zoning, LUBA will remand the decision for the city to interpret the relevant plan and code provisions in the first instance. Graville Properties, Ltd. v. City of Eugene, 27 Or LUBA 583 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. When LUBA reviews land use decisions for compliance with relevant approval standards, it does not matter whether the challenged decision is consistent with prior decisions, so long as the decision correctly interprets and applies the applicable standard. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 497 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a challenged decision incorrectly concludes arguments based on an arguably applicable comprehensive plan provision are precluded by the acknowledgment of an earlier decision, and does not interpret that plan provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret the plan provision in the first instance. Rea v. City of Seaside, 27 Or LUBA 443 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA lacks authority to interpret local comprehensive plan provisions in the first instance. Where certain comprehensive plan policies are arguably applicable to a development application and the challenged decision approving or denying that application does not include an interpretation of those policies, LUBA must remand the decision so the local government can interpret and apply its plan policies. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the applicability of local comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions is ambiguous, the local government is entitled to considerable deference in determining their applicability. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government interpretation of its comprehensive plan and zoning code, that approval of a school at a particular site requires compliance with a plan policy concerning schools, is not so wrong as to be reversible under ORS 197.829, notwithstanding that the relevant zoning district lists schools as a permitted use at the subject site. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend a land use regulation amendment fails to comply with the statewide planning goals and implementing rules, and respondents fail to identify specific provisions in the local comprehensive plan that provide the basis for the challenged amendment, LUBA will assume no such provisions exist, and under ORS 197.835(5)(b) LUBA has authority to reverse or remand the land use regulation amendment if it does not comply with the statewide planning goals or implementing rules. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Marion County, 27 Or LUBA 303 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Statements by individual decision makers made early in the local proceedings, that granting adjustments to code requirements would have a negative impact on the neighborhood, do not show the decision makers ignored applicable criteria in later adopting a final written decision granting the adjustment. It is the final written decision that is subject to LUBA review. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners' allegations that an applicant cannot simultaneously seek the benefit of two separate local code provisions allowing deviations from code height and setback requirements provide no basis for reversal or remand, where nothing in the code precludes seeking approval under both provisions. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city has a population of less than 2,500 people, the city's comprehensive plan and land use regulations do not implement the "needed housing" provisions of either ORS 197.307(6) or Goal 10 and, therefore, the city's interpretation of its plan and land use regulations is not subject to reversal or remand on the basis of inconsistency with statutory and goal standards relating to "needed housing." Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government denies an application based on noncompliance with certain comprehensive plan housing policies, petitioners' argument that other plan housing policies should also be applied provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioners fail to establish how the local government's failure to apply the other policies undermines its decision to deny the application based on the policies it did apply. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend the challenged decision does not demonstrate compliance with an applicable comprehensive plan policy, but fail to explain how the findings adopted by the local government addressing that policy are inadequate, LUBA will reject their contention. Dorgan v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 64 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If petitioners contend the challenged decision fails to demonstrate compliance with certain local comprehensive plan and code provisions that are not addressed in the challenged decision, and those provisions are capable of being interpreted as approval standards under the permissive scope of review standard of ORS 197.829, LUBA must remand the decision to the local government to interpret and apply the plan and code provisions in the first instance. Dorgan v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 64 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. It is questionable whether a local government could ever be equitably estopped from requiring compliance with applicable comprehensive plan and land use regulation requirements. DLCD v. Benton County, 27 Or LUBA 49 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Even if misstatement of material fact can provide a basis for equitable estoppel against a local government requiring compliance with applicable comprehensive plan and land use regulation requirements, an erroneous legal conclusion cannot provide a basis for such an equitable estoppel. DLCD v. Benton County, 27 Or LUBA 49 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. After Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), it is not clear whether general rules of statutory construction are relevant in LUBA review of local government interpretations of their own comprehensive plans and land use regulations. Even if they are, general rules of statutory construction are not absolute. Zippel v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 11 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will defer to local government decisions giving different interpretations to the same language appearing in different sections of its code, where there are related code provisions that provide some justification for the different construction of such identical code language. Zippel v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 11 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government operates within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829 when it interprets a code requirement that a proposed conditional use "fully accords with all applicable standards of the County and State Laws or regulations" to be satisfied, where the applicant demonstrates during the local proceedings that there are "no unusual circumstances or conditions which would prevent [subsequent] issuance of required regulatory approvals." Zippel v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 11 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA is not required to remand a decision for a local government interpretation of its code, where the interpretive issue raised by petitioner is so untenable that LUBA can reject it without an authoritative determination by the local decision maker. Towry v. City of Lincoln City, 26 Or LUBA 554 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government interpretation of its sign ordinance that regardless of whether a sign is an awning, fascia or other sign type, it is subject to certain measurement requirements, is not contrary to the express words, policy or context of the ordinance, and LUBA will defer to it. Heath Northwest, Inc. v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 535 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.829, it is unclear whether LUBA is to defer to a local government interpretation of a prior local government decision or whether LUBA is required to determine whether the local government interpretation is reasonable and correct. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Allegations that the local decision maker failed to disclose ex parte contacts, as required by ORS 215.422(3), provide no basis for reversal or remand where there is no admission by the decision maker or other evidence, either in the record or offered through a motion for evidentiary hearing pursuant to ORS 197.830(13)(b), that an ex parte contact occurred. Eppich v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 498 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Allegations that a local code provision consolidating commonly owned parcels conflicts with ORS 92.017, which provides that a lawfully created lot or parcel shall remain a discrete lot or parcel, are rendered moot and provide no basis for reversal or remand, where the parcels in question were combined in an approved and recorded plat. Van Veldhuizen v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 468 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA may not interpret a local government's enactments, in the first instance, to determine what constitutes the local approval standards for, and how those standards apply to, a challenged decision. Rather, LUBA is required to review the local government's interpretation of its own enactments. Rea v. City of Seaside, 26 Or LUBA 444 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the local code makes filing a transcript of the initial local hearing an essential part of perfecting a local appeal, and contains no provision providing procedures or standards for granting an extension of time to file such transcript, LUBA will affirm a local government's decision to dismiss a local appeal because the transcript was not filed within the required time. Bjerk v. Deschutes County, 26 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A petitioner's assignment of error will be rejected where it simply alleges code violations, without supplying any supporting argument, or alleges inconsistent findings and lack of substantial evidence, without identifying the challenged findings. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend the challenged decision does not demonstrate compliance with an applicable approval standard, and the decision does not interpret the standard sufficiently for LUBA to review that interpretation and consider petitioners' arguments, LUBA will remand the decision to the local government. Bottum v. Union County, 26 Or LUBA 407 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Failure to determine the cumulative impacts of a proposal provides no basis for reversal or remand of a decision unless petitioner establishes that some legal standard requires a determination of cumulative impacts. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In the absence of a legal requirement that a local government determine an applicant's intent with regard to a development proposal, a local government has no obligation to determine such intent or to examine an applicant's prior history of compliance with land use or other regulations. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner fails to identify applicable legal standards regarding wetlands or explain why the proposal violates such applicable legal standards, petitioner supplies no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. 1993 Oregon Laws, chapter 792, section 43, codifies Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), with the exception that LUBA is not required to defer to a local government's interpretation of its regulations if that interpretation is contrary to a state statute, statewide planning goal or administrative rule which the regulations implement. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under Oregon Laws 1993, chapter 792, section 43(4), LUBA is not required to affirm a local government's interpretation of its own code provision if that interpretation is "contrary to a state statute, land use goal or [administrative] rule that the [code provision] implements." Pacific Rivers Council, Inc. v. Lane County, 26 Or LUBA 323 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county may not amend its transportation plan in ways which conflict with the Oregon Bicycle Bill requirements set out at ORS 366.514(1), even though those statutory requirements would apply in any event. Bicycle Transportation Alliance v. Washington Co., 26 Or LUBA 265 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reject an assignment of error alleging a local government transportation plan conflicts with Oregon Bicycle Bill requirements concerning provision of bicycle trails, where petitioner fails to show any of the 27 roadway designations included in the transportation plan are incapable of accommodating some form of bicycle trail where ORS 366.514(1) requires that bicycle trails be provided. Bicycle Transportation Alliance v. Washington Co., 26 Or LUBA 265 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a local government does not provide notice to DLCD of a post-acknowledgment comprehensive plan or land use regulation amendment, as required by ORS 197.610 and 197.615, it improperly construes substantive provisions of applicable law and, under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(D), the challenged post-acknowledgment amendment decision must be remanded. Oregon City Leasing, Inc. v. Columbia County, 26 Or LUBA 203 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA cannot interpret a local government's ordinances in the first instance, but rather must review the local government's interpretation of its ordinances. Consequently, the failure of the local government to make the initial interpretation of local ordinance provisions is a basis for remand. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend the local government may not rely on particular plan provisions in denying a plan map amendment, but the local government did not rely upon those provisions in denying the requested plan map amendment, petitioners' challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand. Ericsson v. Washington County, 26 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend certain information required by the local code "prior to the approval of subdivisions" must be in the record at the time of tentative plat approval, and the challenged tentative plat approval decision does not interpret the local code with regard to at what stage of the subdivision approval process the required information must be submitted to the county, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret its code in the first instance. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 26 OR LUBA 139 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a question of proper interpretation of a comprehensive plan provision is raised during local proceedings, the interpretation required for LUBA review of the decision on appeal must be provided in the decision. The local government may not supply the interpretation in its brief on appeal. Eskandarian v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(D) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), LUBA must defer to a local government's interpretation of "applicable law" adopted by the local government, regardless of whether that applicable law is a zoning ordinance or conditions of approval imposed by a prior quasi-judicial order. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local decision erroneously concludes a previous local decision did not grant conditional use approval for a nonfarm dwelling where (1) the previous decision states it approves a nonfarm dwelling, and (2) the local government treated the previous application as requesting nonfarm dwelling approval. Rodriguez v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 50 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government decision determines the effect of a previous decision, LUBA may not review the legal sufficiency of the previous decision. Rodriguez v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 50 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a member of a decision making body fails to disclose an ex parte contact until after the evidentiary record is closed, ORS 227.180(3) is violated, and LUBA must remand the decision. Derry v. Douglas County, 26 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Use of comprehensive plan forestland division standards as an aide in determining whether a property includes sufficient forestland to be designated in the comprehensive plan for forest uses under Goal 4 is not an improper use of the forestland division standards. Westfair Associates Partnership v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 729 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioner argues the local government erred by approving a conditional use permit without the consent of all owners of the subject property, but identifies no plan, code or other legal standard requiring that such consent be obtained, LUBA cannot grant relief. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The proper interpretation of state statutes is a question of law for LUBA to decide, and is not subject to the limitations that Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992) places on LUBA's review of interpretations of local enactments. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a city decision maker receives an ex parte contact, failure to follow the procedures required by ORS 227.180(3) constitutes a basis for remand by LUBA, regardless of whether the party seeking remand objected during the proceedings below. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 25 Or LUBA 656 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Findings supporting approval of a PUD that determine there are solutions available to various landslide, drainage and related problems affecting the subject property, and that those solutions are possible, likely and reasonably certain to succeed, are adequate to establish that the local government did not improperly defer compliance with relevant PUD standards. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 601 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the challenged decision includes contradictory findings regarding compliance with an applicable local code approval standard, LUBA cannot interpret the standard itself, but rather must remand the decision to the local government to interpret the standard in the first instance. Larson v. Wallowa County, 25 Or LUBA 537 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. That an existing garage violates lot line setback requirements provides no basis for denial of a requested subdivision of the adjoining property to be served by a private roadway running along the lot line in front of the existing garage. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Arguments that a proposed subdivision roadway alignment violates a Fire Bureau policy provides no basis for reversal or remand of the subdivision approval decision, where the Fire Bureau policy is not a mandatory subdivision approval standard. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The fact that a challenged local government decision does not include an interpretation of a particular local code provision, alleged to be applicable by petitioners, does not provide a basis for reversal or remand if the code provision in question is not ambiguous or susceptible to different sustainable interpretations. Gage v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 449 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the local code defines "traveler's accommodations" to include an establishment rented to travelers for a fee, on a daily or weekly basis, and the local government interprets that code definition as not excluding cabins that are occupied by owners for less than 36 days per year, such an interpretation is not clearly contrary to the local code, and LUBA will defer to it. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 25 Or LUBA 411 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA is required to defer to a local government's interpretation of its own ordinances, so long as the proffered interpretation is not clearly wrong. Oregon Raptor Center v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 401 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Petitioners' contention that the local government erred in finding the statewide planning goals do not apply to the challenged decision provides no basis for reversal or remand where the challenged decision also adopts alternative findings addressing the goals, and petitioners do not challenge the adequacy of those findings. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 283 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A local government's failure to establish compliance with aspirational plan provisions which "encourage" and provide guidance about what a local government should do, is not a basis for LUBA to reverse or remand a challenged decision. Neuharth v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 267 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. ORS 197.279(2) establishes the procedures required for adoption of a wetland conservation plan. A local government's failure to adopt a wetland conservation plan, provides no basis for reversal or remand of a challenged decision, because local governments are not required to adopt such plans. Clarke v. City of Hillsboro, 25 Or LUBA 195 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Although ORS 92.010 to 92.190 do not specifically envision a subdivision approval process that combines approval of a subdivision and a lot line adjustment, neither do those statutes prohibit such a process. Absent such a prohibition, a local government commits no error in following such a combined process. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA is required to defer to a local government's interpretation of its own ordinances, unless that interpretation is contrary to the express words, policy or context of the local enactment. LUBA may not interpret a local government's ordinances in the first instance, but rather must review the local government's interpretation of its ordinances. O'Mara v. Douglas County, 25 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a relevant ordinance provision is capable of more than one meaning, the challenged decision does not expressly interpret the ordinance provision, and LUBA cannot infer the local government's interpretation from the decision, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret the provision in the first instance. O'Mara v. Douglas County, 25 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government determines that a recreational cattle roping use was lawfully established on the date restrictive zoning was applied, because it constituted a farm use allowed outright by the subject zone, LUBA will defer to that interpretation so long as it is not clearly contrary to the express words, policy or context of the ordinance. Smith v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 1 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the term "vacant" in a local government's code is undefined, but the code states that undefined terms have their "normal dictionary meaning," the local government may adopt one of the available ordinary dictionary definitions of the term "vacant," and LUBA will defer to that definition of the term so long as it is not clearly contrary to the context of the code provision in which the term "vacant" is found. Rhine v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 557 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will reject a petitioner's contention that a comprehensive plan map amendment does not comply with a plan policy requiring preservation of water quality, where the petitioner fails to challenge findings addressing that plan policy and argues only that a specific development proposal, which is not the subject of the challenged decision, does not comply with that plan policy. Trumper v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 552 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA may not interpret a local government's ordinances in the first instance, but rather must review a local government's interpretation of its ordinances, and the local government interpretation must be adequate for LUBA's review. Leabo v. Marion County, 24 Or LUBA 495 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a local government has interpreted the local code in the challenged decision, LUBA must defer to that interpretation unless it is clearly contrary to the enacted language or the apparent purpose or policy of the provision. Leabo v. Marion County, 24 Or LUBA 495 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA lacks authority to invalidate LCDC administrative rules. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where LUBA must determine whether an ambiguous code provision (i.e., one that is capable of more than one sustainable interpretation) is applicable to a challenged decision, and the challenged decision does not contain a reviewable interpretation of that provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret the provision in the first instance. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend a local government erred in failing to apply a code provision to the challenged decision, and the decision contains no interpretation of that code provision, but the code language unambiguously establishes that the provision in question is not applicable to the challenged decision, LUBA is not required to remand the decision so the local government can interpret its code in the first instance. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In reviewing a local government's interpretation of its own ordinance, the question LUBA must resolve is not whether the local government interpretation is "right," but rather whether it is "clearly wrong." Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. If a challenged permit decision misconstrues an acknowledged land use regulation, that provides a basis for reversing or remanding the decision under ORS 197.835(6) and (7)(a)(D). It does not mean the challenged decision is a land use regulation amendment. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), the question for LUBA to resolve is not whether a local government interpretation of its own code is "right," but rather whether it is "clearly wrong." Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA may not interpret a local code in the first instance, but rather must review a local government's interpretation of its code. However, a local government interpretation of its code must be adequate for LUBA's review and may not consist of a mere conclusory statement. DLCD v. Crook County, 24 Or LUBA 393 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In rendering a decision on a permit, a city is required to hold at least one public hearing or provide notice of the decision and an opportunity for an appeal. A city's failure to do so requires that the decision be remanded. Hood River Sand v. City of Mosier, 24 Or LUBA 381 (1993).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. In the absence of a statutory policy pertaining to forestlands that, like the statutory policy concerning EFU land, requires the preservation of forestland in large blocks, LUBA cannot require that a local government interpret and apply its nonforest use "generally unsuitable" land approval standard in the same manner as the similarly worded statutory standard pertaining to nonfarm uses on EFU land. DLCD v. Coos County, 24 Or LUBA 349 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code requires a proposed nonforest dwelling site to be on land generally unsuitable for forest uses, that standard can be interpreted to mean either that the proposed nonforest dwelling site itself, or that the entire forest parcel, must be generally unsuitable for forest uses. LUBA will defer to the local government's choice between those permissible interpretations. DLCD v. Coos County, 24 Or LUBA 349 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners do not explain why specific provisions of a comprehensive plan designation or zoning district applied to forestlands are inconsistent with Goal 4 or the Goal

4 rule, petitioners provide no basis for reversal or remand. Gonzalez v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 251 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local code requires that one of several considerations must be "achieved" to approve a setback reduction request, and there are adequate findings that one of those considerations is achieved, it provides no basis for reversal or remand that other considerations may not also be achieved. Barker v. City of Cannon Beach, 24 Or LUBA 221 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners fail to cite any applicable standard prohibiting the cutting of trees in a comprehensive plan "Distinctive Natural Area," their assertion that cutting trees is inconsistent with the subject parcels' Distinctive Natural Area designation provides no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Forest Highlands Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 24 Or LUBA 215 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation of its code so long as the proffered interpretation is not "clearly contrary to the enacted language," or "inconsistent with express language of the ordinance or its apparent purpose or policy." An interpretation of a local code provision to require that in order to be recognized as separately developable, a parcel must have been in separate ownership on a particular date, is not "clearly contrary" to the terms of, or "inconsistent with the express language" or "apparent purpose or policy" of, the code provision. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. It is the local government which, in the first instance, should interpret its own enactments. Where a local government has not interpreted and applied applicable provisions of its code, and it is not clear how those code provisions apply to the subject application, LUBA will remand the challenged decision so that the local government may do so. Gage v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 47 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the record establishes that a proposed street will have the characteristics of both a local street and minor collector street, the question of the proper street designation is debatable, and the choice of which designation to apply is within the local government's discretion. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 23 Or LUBA 565 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government neither adopts findings demonstrating compliance with a permit approval standard, nor finds it is feasible to comply with that standard, but instead defers the required determination of compliance with that standard to a later stage of the approval process where only the applicant has a right to notice and to participation and to appeal the decision, the decision must be remanded. Rhyne v. Multnomah County, 23 Or LUBA 442 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Under ORS 197.835(5)(b), an amendment to a local government land use regulation is subject to reversal or remand for failure to comply with the Statewide Planning Goals, unless the comprehensive plan contains "specific policies * * * which provide the basis for" the amended regulation. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 291 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where, under the correct interpretation of an approval standard and the undisputed relevant facts in the record, the subject application cannot satisfy the approval standard, LUBA will reverse a challenged local government decision approving the application. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 23 Or LUBA 85 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. To the extent an LCDC enforcement order establishes "applicable law" for a land use decision, LUBA is authorized to determine whether the land use decision properly interprets and applies that law. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 23 Or LUBA 40 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The prohibition in ORS 271.725(1) against condemnation of conservation easements does not bar a local government from achieving, through its plan and land use regulations, some of the same objectives that it could achieve through conservation easements. Dodd v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 711 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Absent zoning ordinance provisions to the contrary, a PUD preliminary master plan approval is a "development permit" and where the zoning ordinance requires that an environmental assessment "be filed prior to the issuance of any development permit," it is error to approve a PUD preliminary master plan prior to the filing of the required environmental assessment. Gerl v. City of Lincoln City, 22 Or LUBA 512 (1992).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A city permit decision rendered without providing the public hearing or notice of decision and opportunity for local appeal required by ORS 227.175(3) and (10) must be remanded so that the city may comply with the statutory requirements. Citizens Concerned v. City of Sherwood, 22 Or LUBA 390 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government erroneously failed to apply a somewhat ambiguous code provision to the challenged decision, LUBA will remand the decision for the local government to interpret and apply its code provision in the first instance. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 360 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government erroneously concluded the proposed use is not subject to regulation under its code and, therefore, did not interpret or apply applicable code provisions, LUBA must remand the challenged decision to the local government, so it can interpret its own code in the first instance. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 166 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. That a nonconforming use is inconsistent with comprehensive plan provisions that did not exist or apply on the date the use became nonconforming provides no basis for reversal or remand, because ORS 215.130(5) provides the use may continue notwithstanding such inconsistency. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Erroneous expressions of plan or code interpretation by the decision maker, whether expressed before or after the decision is reduced to writing and becomes final, provide no basis for reversal, if such erroneous expressions are not included in the written decision or findings supporting the written decision. Waker Associates, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 588 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where erroneous plan and code interpretations are not included in a land use decision maker's written decision, they do not constitute a procedural error or irregularity warranting reversal or remand under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(B) or an evidentiary hearing under ORS 197.830(13)(b). Waker Associates, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 588 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government approves a conditional use permit for a use that LUBA determines is allowed by neither the local code nor applicable statutes, the decision must be reversed. Greuner v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 329 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. LUBA will not conclude that a hearings officer, in reviewing a request for conditional use approval, improperly relied on prior land use violations by the applicant to refuse to consider approval with conditions, unless such refusal is clearly stated in the decision. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where the local government failed to interpret and apply a local approval standard to a permit application, and LUBA is unable to determine, as a matter of law, the correct application of the approval standard, LUBA will remand the appealed decision so the local government can interpret and apply the approval standard in the first instance. Lung v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 302 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government finds that otherwise applicable street width standards need not be satisfied in a proposed subdivision under a local code provision allowing narrower roads where consistent with "a plan for the neighborhood," and petitioners do not challenge that finding, petitioners' arguments that the subdivision violates street width requirements must be rejected. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Allegations of violation of federal requirements governing National Environmental Policy Act requirements provide no basis for reversal or remand of a decision governed exclusively by state law. Seto v. Tri-Met, 21 Or LUBA 185 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where an applicable approval criterion only requires that the challenged decision identify certain adverse impacts and consider mitigation measures that could be imposed at subsequent approval stages, the local government is not required to adopt mitigation measures as part of the challenged decision. Seto v. Tri-Met, 21 Or LUBA 185 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where petitioners contend that under ORS 215.428(3), the county erred by applying standards adopted after their permit application was initially filed, petitioners claim the county "improperly construed the applicable law." ORS 197.835(7)(a)(D). McCaw Communications, Inc. v. Polk County, 20 Or LUBA 456 (1991).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Comprehensive plan policies which contain aspirational language regarding goals to be implemented through the adoption of land use regulations are not mandatory approval criteria for individual permit applications and, therefore, it is unnecessary for LUBA to determine whether a decision approving a permit complies with such plan policies. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 20 Or LUBA 246 (1990).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Absent an argument specifically challenging a local government's findings that a plan amendment and zone change will allow only a rural level of development on the subject rural land, LUBA has no basis to conclude that the county erred in determining its decision complies with Goal 14. DLCD v. Klamath County, 19 Or LUBA 459 (1990).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. Where a local government uses a two-stage approval process and determines whether a proposed zoning map amendment complies with applicable goal, plan and land use regulations in the first stage, petitioners may not fail to appeal the first stage approval decision and later assert goal, plan and land use regulation violations in a challenge of the local government's decision granting approval of the second stage. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

28.8.5 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. The meaning of local legislation is a question of law which must be decided by LUBA on appeal. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 18 Or LUBA 587 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. For purposes of evaluating whether the shipping associated with the proposed terminal would substantially interfere with the public trust rights of other waterway users, current navigation rules (e.g., those providing that a fishing boat must move out of a tanker's course as necessary to prevent collision) do not provide relevant context. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 81 Or LUBA 839 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government approves a liquefied natural gas (LNG) terminal to and from which tankers will be required to transit an estuary, and where the United States Coast Guard declares that it will impose a mobile "security zone" around each tanker, extending 500 yards on each side, from which all other vessels are generally excluded, findings that the security zone will not substantially interfere with public trust rights in the estuary are inadequate where they do not address testimony that two jetties at the mouth of the estuary form a relatively narrow channel and that tankers and large fleets of fishing vessels may need to transit the mouth of the estuary at the same time, at or near high tide. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 81 Or LUBA 839 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In the absence of countervailing expert testimony, LUBA will accept farmers' contention that compliance with an EPA rule prescribing an Application Exclusion Zone (AEZ) for outdoor pesticide application is an accepted farm practice for purposes of the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1), regardless of whether it is applicable law, and a county errs by not analyzing the impacts of approving a recreational area on EFU land with respect to the EPA AEZ. Schrepel v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 895 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Recitals that the planning commission accepted the applicant's responses to each criterion as findings of fact and, with the findings in the staff report, recommended approval of the application to the governing body, which in turn approved the planning commission's recommendation, are insufficient to incorporate either the findings in the staff report or the findings prepared by the applicant into the governing body's final decision. Jacobus v. Klamath County, 81 Or LUBA 785 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government's findings that there is adequate existing storage capacity to accommodate a modest growth in fossil fuel demand and, therefore, that a prohibition on establishing new fossil fuel terminals (FFTs) and expanding existing FFTs will "[l]imit fossil fuels distribution and storage facilities to those necessary to serve the regional market" are (1) inadequate where natural gas falls under a local government's definition of fossil fuels and where the findings do not address natural gas needs and (2) unsupported by an adequate factual base where the record establishes that natural gas demand will increase and where there is no evidence of the amount of terminal and storage capacity needed for natural gas generally. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 81 Or LUBA 683 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government's findings that a prohibition on establishing new fossil fuel terminals (FFTs) and expanding existing FFTs will "[m]aintain and strengthen [the local government's] comparative economic advantages including access to a high-quality workforce" because the prohibition will apply to only one type of business are inadequate where they fail to consider the relationship between the FFTs, any products they make locally available to other businesses, and any resulting impact on the workforce. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 81 Or LUBA 683 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings concluding that an aggregate quarry would be compatible with an adjacent grazing operation and periodic logging are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence without an explanation of the manner in which the grazing operation is run—for example, whether it is seasonal or includes accessory activities such as breeding or calving—and the nature of the periodic logging. Currie v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 602 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings concluding that an aggregate quarry satisfies the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence where the county identifies grazing as the only surrounding farm or forest use but does not verify that the grazing operation is in fact limited to grazing, without other uses such as breeding, or establish that logging on the grazing property, government ownership of surrounding forest lands, or maintaining of surrounding forest land as a timber investment do not involve protected forest activity. Currie v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 602 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code provision requires that site design review be based upon consideration of the "[c]haracteristics of adjoining and surrounding uses," the local government does not err by characterizing adjoining and surrounding uses simply as farm uses, even where the adjoining and surrounding lands contain dwellings, where the lands are zoned for farm and forest uses, where the dwellings are allowed in conjunction with farm and forest uses, and where the purpose of the zones and the comprehensive plan is to protect and conserve farm and forest lands for farm and forest uses. Anderson v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 618 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal or Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a governing body concludes that a proposed hotel complies with a comprehensive plan provision requiring that such proposals have "no adverse impact" on the function of a nearby wildlife refuge, arguments at LUBA that the governing body improperly focused on impacts related to the operation of the hotel and did not consider impacts associated with demolition of an existing motel and construction of the new hotel provide no basis for reversal or remand where the petitioner did not clarify why demolition and construction were relevant or specify the adverse impacts of concern in their local appeal statement. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Bandon, 81 Or LUBA 285 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The mere existence of residential uses near a property proposed for an irrevocably committed exception to Goal 4 does not demonstrate that such property is necessarily committed to nonresource use, and findings that the subject property is enclosed on three of its sides by existing residential development and that use of the subject property for a forestry operation could be potentially disruptive to that residential community are inadequate to describe the relationship of the subject property to adjacent lands, as required by OAR 660-004-0028(2)(c), where the findings do not address the relationship of the subject property to adjacent forest and resource land that are in timber production and forest use and/or that possess soils suitable for forestry production, or the potential for resource use of the subject property in conjunction with the adjacent forest-zoned properties. Dooley v. Wasco County, 81 Or LUBA 44 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The correct standard under OAR 660-004-0028(3) for an irrevocably committed exception to Goal 4 is not whether commercial forestry operations are practicable on the subject property—counties must consider forest operations that are smaller in scale and generate less revenue than commercial forestry operations—and findings that focus on alleged conflicts with nearby residential uses from conducting commercial forestry on the property are inadequate to demonstrate that forest uses are "impracticable," as required by OAR 660-004-0028(3), where the findings do not consider whether forest operations that are smaller in scale would create similar conflicts that render forest use of the property impracticable; where, given the soil types on the property, the findings do not establish that forest use of the property is impracticable or explain why trees could not be planted on the property; and where the findings rely on conflicts with residential uses resulting from spraying, which are not sufficient, in themselves, to justify an irrevocably committed exception. Dooley v. Wasco County, 81 Or LUBA 44 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings and argument that forest uses are "impractical" on the subject property due to existing development and due to fire buffers that would be required along some of the property's borders and around some of the existing development do not demonstrate that the property is "physically developed to the extent that it is no longer available" for forest uses, as required by ORS 197.732(2)(a) and OAR 660-004-0025(1) for a physically developed exception to Goal 4, and such a conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence where at least 87 percent of the property's area is available for forestry and where the applicant does not attempt to quantify the amount of buffer that would be required to conduct forest uses or the amount by which that buffer would decrease the property available for forest uses. Dooley v. Wasco County, 81 Or LUBA 44 (2020).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts a post-acknowledgment plan amendment creating a new zone that allows 20-acre lots, an argument that DEQ rules indicate that properties of 10 or more acres in size are generally able to support on-site wastewater systems is not sufficient to establish compliance with Goal 11 with respect to wastewater where those rules appear for the first time in the response brief, where there are no findings or evidence in the record addressing wastewater, and where there is no evidence in the record that the rule is accurate within the portion of the local government's jurisdiction at issue. Similarly, references to the proximity of the majority of candidate lands to fire districts, to evidence that more demand for funds would not be created in one of the districts, to 10 years of data indicating that less than two percent of fires resulted from residential structures, and to local fire protection standards with which future development would be required to comply are not sufficient to establish compliance with Goal 11 with respect to fire protection where there is no analysis of the likelihood of increased fire as more residences are potentially introduced into the area or discussion of the capacity of the existing fire service organizations to provide more service. DLCD v. Douglas County, 80 Or LUBA 98 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government legislatively decreases the height limit in one part of a historic district and increases the height limit in another part of the historic district, findings that focus on the importance of creating incentives for development of vacant parcels in the historic district, determine that the new height limits are lower than those outside the historic district, and conclude that "the issue of consistency [is] best left to the Landmarks Commission who remain charged with reviewing future development proposals" are not adequate to explain how the new height limits comply with a comprehensive plan policy that requires the local government to "preserv[e] and complement[] historic resources." Restore Oregon v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 158 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. While applying pesticides and herbicides in a manner that causes overspray or drift onto adjoining properties is not an accepted farm practice for purposes of the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1), where the labels for some pesticides and herbicides effectively require a setback from certain sensitive uses regardless of whether drift or overspray occurs, a county will likely have to make specific factual findings about the specific setbacks required by particular chemicals on particular farming operations on surrounding farmlands, based on application methods, and whether the operation of each setback would force a significant change in farm practices. Van Dyke v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 348 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A condition of approval requiring that an applicant construct a proposed fence between a proposed trail and adjoining farms; specifying only that the proposed fence must be "capable of preventing dogs and people from entering adjacent farm fields"; punting all determinations regarding fence design, materials, construction, etc. to a subsequent master planning process that offers no opportunity for a public hearing or other public input; and allowing adjacent landowners to opt out of installing a fence on their property line is inadequate where the county relies on the proposed fence to address a wide variety of different potential impacts, which might require different fence designs, materials, construction techniques, and maintenance routines in order to ensure that the trail will not cause significant impacts on farm practices for purposes of the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1). Such a condition is also not clear and objective for purposes of ORS 215.296(2). Van Dyke v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 348 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code provision requires a finding that "[t]he proposed use is appropriate, considering the adequacy of public facilities and services existing or planned for the area affected by the use," and where the record includes undisputed expert testimony that fire and emergency access are inadequate unless a proposed trail and its bridges are built to certain standards, it is insufficient for the local government to state, without any supporting evidence, that it is "feasible" to design the trail and bridges to provide adequate fire and emergency access and then punt all determinations regarding trail and bridge design to a subsequent master planning process. Van Dyke v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 348 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicant proposes a planned development, and where a local code provision requires the local government to "seek to determine that the development * * * will not create a drainage or pollution problem outside the planned area," the local government errs by not adopting findings determining whether the construction of a road extension that is proposed as part of and that would provide access to the planned development will create a drainage or pollution problem outside the planned area. Lundeen v. City of Waldport, 80 Or LUBA 450 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate to explain how a proposed adjustment to the minimum lot size to allow a duplex on a corner lot will not "allow an increase in density in the [applicable] zone" under a local code provision where the findings merely conclude that the adjustment "does not result in an increase in density associated with the proposed use of the development site." Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 79 Or LUBA 265 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county determines that a property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750 because at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, based on a statement of the applicant, a recollection of the prior owner of one of the surrounding dwellings, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings, and a statement by the tax assessor that its records showed a dwelling in place on January 1, 1993, but where LUBA concludes that the county erred in accepting the email, where LUBA cannot determine whether the county would have reached the same conclusion without the email, and where the county's findings failed to address evidence that the tax rolls indicate existence of the dwelling as of July 1993 rather than January 1993, LUBA will remand for the county to adopt adequate findings. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Absent a legal definition for how the center point of a property must be established for purposes of determining whether it qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, a county errs by not explaining the basis for its conclusion that its chosen method is the most appropriate and by not addressing opponents' arguments challenging that method. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county determines that a property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750 because at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, based on a statement of the applicant, a recollection of the prior owner of one of the surrounding dwellings, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings, and a statement by the tax assessor that its records showed a dwelling in place on January 1, 1993, but where LUBA concludes that the county erred in accepting the email, where LUBA cannot determine whether the county would have reached the same conclusion without the email, and where the county's findings failed to address evidence that the tax rolls indicate existence of the dwelling as of July 1993 rather than January 1993, LUBA will remand for the county to adopt adequate findings. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Absent a legal definition for how the center point of a property must be established for purposes of determining whether it qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, a county errs by not explaining the basis for its conclusion that its chosen method is the most appropriate and by not addressing opponents' arguments challenging that method. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the county approves an amendment to a planned development approval for a resort, golf course and aerial challenge course, and petitioner argues the county improperly construed the applicable provisions of the county's code, but petitioner has not ultimately challenged the board of county commissioners' interpretation, or otherwise explained why LUBA is not required to affirm that interpretation under ORS 197.829(1), petitioner has provided no basis for reversal or remand. Carkulis v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 610 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner argues the county committed a procedural error that prejudiced his substantial rights when the board of county commissioners failed to consider a written statement that petitioner submitted to the board of commissioners at the hearing, but petitioner does not establish that the board of county commissioners actually failed to consider petitioner's written statement, and petitioner failed to object to the alleged procedural error below, petitioner has not established that the county committed a procedural error or violated an applicable legal standard. Carkulis v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 610 (2019).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's comprehensive plan policy provides that "areas" may be designated rural commercial when the areas (1) have a "historical commitment" to commercial uses, or (2) the "areas" are "located within an Unincorporated Community" and have "direct access to a road of at least collector classification," petitioner has not demonstrated that the county commissioners' findings regarding the meaning of "area" are inadequate or that the county's reliance on a previous interpretation as authority for interpreting the term "areas" as used in rezoning criteria to refer only to the property being considered for rezoning, and not also to include the surrounding area, was in error where petitioner cites to no contextual differences suggesting that the term "areas" should be interpreted differently than the same term used in similar rezoning standards, or authority suggesting the county has an obligation to adopt specific findings regarding the parties' alternative interpretations. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will uphold a county's interpretation of its own comprehensive plan policy regarding when a property may be designated rural commercial where the county evaluated the historic uses of the subject property and concluded that those uses did not demonstrate a "historical commitment to commercial uses," after concluding that (1) temporary commercial uses, (2) incidental or accessory commercial uses to permitted residential or farm uses on the property, and (3) the current unlawful commercial uses on the property were not sufficient to demonstrate "historical commitment" of the property to commercial use, where the county chose to focus on "commitment" which the county understood to require an inquiry into the nature of the historic uses on the property and a determination of whether commercial uses have constrained the scope of the uses on the property such that going forward only commercial uses are feasible, rather than defining commitment in terms of years of commercial use. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the city code initially requires the city to choose from low density residential (LDR), medium density residential (MDR) and high density residential (HDR) plan map designations based on which designation's criteria "clearly apply or predominate," it does not necessarily follow that the LDR criteria could not predominate simply because three of the four MDR criteria are met and five of the six HDR criteria are met, because the criteria for the three map designations are not mutually exclusive and most or all of the LDR criteria appear to be met. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where every residential plan map designation criterion is written so that it applies to an "area," and the term "area" is not defined and application of the criteria can produce dramatically different results depending on the meaning of "area," remand is required for the decision maker to explain its interpretation of the term "area." Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the city code initially requires the city to choose from low density residential, medium density residential and high density residential plan map designations based on which designation's criteria "clearly appl[y]" or "predominate," that determination is sufficiently ambiguous and subjective that remand is required whether the decision maker does not explain its understanding of what it means to "clearly appl[y]" or "predominate." Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where two of three different residential plan map designation criteria require proximity to a "transit transfer station," but the code does not define the term "transit transfer station," and the decision applies those criteria without adopting interpretive findings to explain the decision maker's understanding of the meaning of the term "transit transfer station," remand is required. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's failure to expressly interpret ambiguous code language is not, by itself, a basis for remand, where the hearings officer's decision primarily addressed a different issue raised by petitioner and LUBA agrees with the interpretation of that code language that is included in the county's response brief. Brannon v. Multnomah County, 77 Or LUBA 275 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer's interpretive findings in support of his conclusion that a front setback and height standard qualify as "site-related development standards" are inadequate, LUBA will nevertheless affirm the hearings officer's decision where the hearings officer's decision is (1) consistent with prior hearings officer decisions, (2) consistent with prior city council decision, (3) consistent with relevant purpose statements, and (4) consistent with the relevant legislative history. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's findings cannot be faulted for failing to address the impacts of a modification (variance) on petitioner's nearby residence, where the findings expressly address those impacts and the relationship between the proposed structure and petitioner's residence and point out that the proposed structure is downslope and offset from petitioner's residence. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's failure to adopt findings that address potential impacts of a proposed building on one nearby dwelling in granting a maximum height modification (variance) is not a basis for remand, where the "on balance" nature of the modification (variance) approval standard does not necessarily require individual findings for every nearby residence, a public walkway between that dwelling and the proposed dwelling reduces any legitimate expectation of privacy, and the topography and scale of the proposed building is such that where the two structures adjoin each other they will be of similar height. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local governing body commits no error in requesting that a prevailing party prepare written findings for it to adopt. And the governing body commits no error in adopting written findings that deviate from statements made at the final evidentiary hearing, and it is those written findings and not the oral statements that are subject to LUBA review on the merits. Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings of fact and law are the decision; they are not evidence. A local governing body commits no error in adopting new findings following a LUBA remand for inadequate findings, without reopening the evidentiary record. Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In applying a vacation rental dwelling (VRD) standard that prohibits a VRD that would alter the character of the surrounding area so as to substantially limit permitted uses in the zoning district, the size of the residence, in and of itself, is largely irrelevant where a house of any size is permitted outright in the zone so long as it is occupied by the owner or leased on a long-term basis. Remand is required where the findings denying the VRD focus almost exclusively on the size of the dwelling rather than the proposed VRD use. Gu v. City of Bandon, 77 Or LUBA 535 (2018).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a legislative text amendment prohibiting new fossil fuel export terminals when nothing in the city's decision or the record explains how the amendment is consistent with the city's comprehensive plan policy requiring the city to "support multimodal freight transportation improvements to provide competitive regional access to global markets." Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city adopts a legislative text amendment prohibiting expansion of existing fossil fuel terminals without considering consistency with a subarea plan policy objective to "foster a business and policy environment that promotes continued private and public sector investments in infrastructure, facilities, equipment and jobs," LUBA will remand the decision to the city to consider whether prohibiting expansion of fossil fuel terminals is consistent with the objective. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a city adopts a legislative text amendment prohibiting expansion of existing fossil fuel terminals, without addressing consistency with a subarea plan policy objective to "maintain, protect and enhance private transportation investments" in the subarea, "including rail and marine terminals, to ensure continued viability as a major center for the import and export of industrial products in the State of Oregon." Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In granting design review approval, whether the use for which design review approval is a permitted use in the applicable zoning district is a relevant issue, and when that issue is raised and the city fails to address that issue in its findings, remand is required for the city to adopt findings addressing the issue. Glenwood 2006, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 76 Or LUBA 162 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicant for a historic landmark designation advances three arguments why a property owner may not refuse to consent under ORS 197.722(1) and thereby terminate consideration of the application, the historic review board errs by terminating consideration of the application without adopting findings that respond to those arguments. McLoughlin Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Oregon City, Or LUBA 180 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city council has clear authority under a development code to impose conditions of approval to address potential land use conflicts and traffic congestion, and the city council appears to fail to impose conditions requested by project opponents because it was advised by county staff that it lacked authority to impose such conditions of approval, remand is required to the city council to consider imposition of any conditions of approval that it finds are warranted to mitigate any such potential land use conflicts or traffic congestion. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a code "principle" is worded as alternative actions an applicant "should" take, and some of the "standards" that follow that "principle" are clearly worded as mandatory, while others are clearly worded as non-mandatory considerations, where the challenged decision does not address the disputed "principle," remand is required for the city council to determine if the disputed "principles" are mandatory and, if so, to ensure one of the mandatory alternatives is satisfied. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the hearings officer did not determine whether property is "buildable land" as defined in ORS 197.295, and the Buildable Lands Inventory (BLI) adopted by Metro that identifies lands on the BLI is not in the record of the proceeding before the county and does not provide an obvious answer to the question of whether all or part of the property is on the BLI, LUBA will remand the decision for further findings on the buildable land issue. Warren v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 295 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a county vacates a public easement based in part on the applicant's proposal to provide a replacement public easement, but the findings do not address issues raised below regarding the safety of the replacement easement. Even though the vacation criteria do not require a replacement easement or evaluation of the safety of a replacement easement, the proposed replacement easement was an essential justification for vacating the existing easement, and the county therefore must address issues raised below regarding its safety and suitability. Neighbors for Smart Growth v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 319 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's ESEE analysis relies on an inflated estimate of the number of acres of big game habitat added to its Goal 5 inventory and greater existing residential densities in an area to justify allowing significantly increased residential densities on big game habitat in that area, remand is required for a better explanation of the county's rationale for increasing those residential densities. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 76 Or LUBA 396 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where state agencies took the position before the county that two different county EFU zones were equally valuable for big game habitat, and without explanation the county amended its comprehensive plan Goal 5 protection program to allow significantly increased residential densities in one of those zones, remand is required for an explanation of the county's rationale. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 76 Or LUBA 396 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A 2,000-acre study area may be appropriate for calculating residential density for purposes of a density standard applied in inventoried big game habitat. But where the adequacy of that study area is questioned, and the county simply relies on an overbroad reading of a LUBA decision in an appeal of a prior quasi-judicial decision, remand is required. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 76 Or LUBA 396 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where parties raise legitimate questions about how a study area will be used to calculate residential density and the local government fails to address those questions when it adopts the amendments governing use of the study area, the study area does not comply with the OAR 660-023-0050(1) requirement for "specific standards," or the OAR 660-023-0050(2) requirement for "clear and objective" standards. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 76 Or LUBA 396 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county repeals an existing comprehensive plan policy to protect upland game bird habitat, without any explanation for doing so, remand is required. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 76 Or LUBA 396 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a code provision allows a property line adjustment as long as the adjustment does not result in an unbuildable parcel being made buildable, but the record includes no evidence regarding whether the adjusted parcel had one or more buildable sites prior to the adjustment, and the findings on that point are conclusory and not supported by substantial evidence. Lowell v. Jackson County, 75 Or LUBA 251 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA remands a county's decision adopting an ordinance so that the county can provide the published notice of the board of county commissioners' hearing that ORS 215.060 requires, considering petitioners' arguments directed at the ordinance would be inconsistent with sound principles of judicial review when a different ordinance may be adopted as a result of LUBA's remand. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Clatsop County, 75 Or LUBA 277 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A findings and evidentiary challenge to a county's decision that wind turbines will not be so noisy as to violate a "substantial impact on the neighborhood" standard will be rejected, where the county found that the wind turbines would be no noisier than a "refrigerator," an "average home," a "quiet bedroom," or a "quiet library," and petitioner makes no specific challenge to those findings or their evidentiary support. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 75 Or LUBA 350 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner challenges the adequacy of a county's findings that a small wind turbine is of the same general character as "communication towers, utility substations and transmission lines," arguing that the findings do not address the wind turbines' moving propellers, which the other uses do not have, but the findings in fact do address the moving propellers and provide a reason why the county did not believe that difference makes the wind turbines of a different "general character," LUBA will reject petitioner's findings challenge. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 75 Or LUBA 350 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city is not required to adopt findings addressing Goal 8 when adopting a zoning ordinance amendment to prohibit and strictly regulate transient occupancy vacation rentals where the city's comprehensive plan includes no indication that the city relied on transient occupancy vacation rental dwellings to meet its Goal 8 "recreational facilities" obligations under Goal 8. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where comprehensive plan policy requires the city to protect "residential neighborhoods," and a residential neighborhood has been historically been made up of year-round domiciles, long-term rentals, second homes and transient occupancy vacation rentals, a city is not required to adopt findings to define "residential neighborhoods," to adopt an zoning ordinance amendment to strictly regulate transient occupancy vacation rental dwellings, where the findings explain the motivation for the new restrictions is the dramatic increase in transient occupancy vacation rentals with internet-based marketing. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's findings challenge that replacing short-term vacation rental use with long-term rental and use of residences as domiciles will increase the annual loading on septic systems challenges a finding the city did not make, where the city's finding is addressing summer month loading and petitioner is addressing annual loading. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city council's findings that identify the adverse impacts of a significant increase in the use of residences as vacation rental dwellings adequately identifies a "public need" in order to justify amendments to the city's zoning ordinances which prohibit and severely restrict vacation rental dwelling use. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In adopting an exception to Goal 14 based on commitment to urban levels of development, a county must do more than address all the factors set out at OAR 660-014-0030(3) and adopt findings of fact. OAR 660-014-0030(4) requires "a statement of reason explaining why the facts found support the conclusion that the land in question is committed to urban uses and urban level development rather than a rural level of development." Where that explanation for why the facts the county found support a conclusion that the property is committed to urban use is entirely missing, LUBA will sustain the challenge to the Goal 14 exception. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 156 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer finds that the only evidence on a key legal issue regarding required mitigation for the impacts of a destination resort was presented by permit opponents, but the record makes it clear that the applicant also submitted conflicting evidence on that legal issue, remand is required. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a decision concluding that a unit of land is a legal lot of record based on a county building permit for a dwelling on an adjoining unit of land, where the findings fail to explain or establish how a building permit approval can create a discrete unit of land, much less a legal lot of record. Grimstad v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 360 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a code provision requires that development with multiple access points take access from the lower classification street, unless "physical conditions preclude" taking access from the lower classification street, and the city approves the development with access to a higher classification street without any evidence or explanation in the record demonstrating the code provision is complied with or that the exception applies. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a code standard requires that a percentage of the "frontage" be occupied by buildings, but the city approved development with 50 feet of frontage occupied by no buildings without any explanation in the record or decision why the standard is met. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is required where a city approves development based on a calculation of a lot's frontage along a cul-de-sac with the frontage measured in a straight line across the cul-de-sac, instead of along the property line, without any explanation in the record or decision for why measuring the frontage in that manner is consistent with code definition of frontage: the portion of the lot abutting a street. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Imprecision in a hearings officer's findings regarding the distance between a proposed asphalt batch plant and a greenway and trail and neighboring mobile home park provides no basis for reversal or remand, where there is evidence in the record showing those proximities and the imprecision in the findings do not establish that the hearings officer was under any misapprehension about how close the asphalt batch plant would be to the mobile home park or greenway and trail. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that efforts over the last 100 years to address landslide danger to water reservoirs have been "Herculean," is an expression of opinion, rather than a necessary finding of fact, and need not be supported by substantial evidence. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a hearings officer determines that a proposed zone change is consistent with a comprehensive plan map that is not property-specific by matching a single survey line with a road depicted on the plan map, but fails to consider other matchups between survey lines and features on the map that might provide a more accurate alignment of the zoning boundary with the comprehensive plan map, absent an explanation for why the additional survey lines matchups are unreliable. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An ordinance that amends the width and features of a buffer area between urban and rural lands is properly viewed as a legislative rather than quasi-judicial decision, where the ordinance was adopted as part of a legislative process that was not bound to result in a decision, the modified buffer affects over 135 acres of land that stretch over one mile in length, and the amendments potentially affect hundreds of property owners. Forest Park Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 193 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides that areas that have historically developed on large lots should "remain zoned consistent with the existing development pattern," and the hearings officer interprets the "existing development pattern" to be synonymous with the existing zoning, remand is required in order for the hearings officer to explain why a change from 10,000-square-foot lots to 8,500-square-foot lots in an area with some 8,500-square-foot lots is not "consistent with the existing development pattern." Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where findings identify an applicable conditional use standard that requires that conditional uses must not impair permitted uses on surrounding property, but the decision includes no findings of fact or findings explaining why the decision maker believed proposed wind turbines satisfied that standard, remand is required for adequate findings. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Under ORS 197.835(11)(b), LUBA may overlook inadequate findings where the evidence makes a finding of compliance with the criteria obvious or inevitable. But ORS 197.835(11)(b) generally will not apply where the criteria are subjective and does not apply in a case where an applicant for approval of wind turbines relies on one kind of evidence, opponents rely heavily on a different kind of evidence, and the decision makes no attempt to identify which evidence the decision maker found persuasive or why. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a relevant issue is adequately raised in a land use proceeding, the findings supporting the final decision must address the issue and where the findings do not do so, remand is required. Space Age Fuel, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 72 Or LUBA 92 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. ORS 197.835(11)(b) authorizes LUBA to overlook "defective" findings regarding a relevant legal standard, if a party can identify evidence that "clearly supports" a decision that the standard is met. But where the legal standard requires completion of a condition within a "reasonable time," there are no findings addressing the "reasonable time" standard, and the evidence falls far short of clearly supporting a decision that a 10-year delay in completing the condition was a "reasonable time," ORS 197.835(11)(b) does not apply. Space Age Fuel, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 72 Or LUBA 92 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an ordinance that modified access spacing standards was conditioned so that it would not become effective until a development agreement for construction of roadway improvements specified in the ordinance was executed, execution of a development agreement for improvements that vary significantly from the improvements called for in the ordinance is not sufficient to make the ordinance effective. Space Age Fuel, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 72 Or LUBA 92 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code provision provides that minimum lot width may be reduced if "[o]n balance, the proposed lots will have dimensions that are consistent with the purpose of this section," it is remandable error where the local code provides for nine purposes to be considered, but the decision maker considers only some of the nine purposes, and concludes without explanation, that "on balance, the applicant has not demonstrated that the proposal is consistent with the purpose of the lot dimension regulations." In this context, such findings are inadequate because an "on balance" determination requires the city to adopt findings explaining how it balances the different purposes. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code provision regulating minimum lot size requires a determination of whether a proposal is consistent with purposes of the code section, and an applicable code section is intended to ensure that "[e]ach lot has enough room for a reasonably-sized attached or detached house[,]" a finding that the applicants have not demonstrated that "each parcel has enough room for a reasonably sized detached house[,]" is conclusory, because it fails to explain what constitutes a "reasonably-sized" house. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand rather than reversal is the appropriate disposition when LUBA sustains an assignment of error to correct the city's procedural error in failing to provide petitioners with an opportunity to propose conditions in response to new evidence. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the applicant for a temporary use permit raised an issue concerning whether its vendors would qualify for a blanket exemption from temporary business license fees, and in its brief the city takes the position that the city intended to reject the applicant's position, but in its decision the city did not address the issue, remand is required for responsive findings. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county identifies three related reasons why introduction of inconsistent uses in an area is justified, but the petitioner challenges the findings and evidentiary support for only one reason, the failure to challenge the remaining two reasons is not a basis to reject petitioner's challenge, where the three reasons are not stated as independent alternatives, and the challenged reason appears to underpins the other two reasons. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a county fails to address whether a comprehensive plan policy requiring the county to ensure that incompatible uses are not established "adjacent" to historic sites is violated by a proposal to run heavy trucks close to, but not across, a historic bridge, based on testimony that the truck traffic would make it unsafe for tourists and school groups to park and visit the bridge. Because there is no local interpretation of what "adjacent" means, and remand is required for other reasons, LUBA will remand the decision for the county to interpret the plan policy in the first instance, rather than interpret the plan policy on its own. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. OAR 660-023-0040(1) provides that an ESEE analysis "should enable reviewers to gain a clear understanding of the conflicts and the consequences to be expected" when developing a program to protect Goal 5 resources. A challenge to this "clear understanding" requirement that challenges the summary of the ESEE analysis rather than the adopted ESEE analysis itself provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the ESEE analysis identifies conflicts and consequences and identifies possible mitigation measures. ODFW v. Crook County, 72 Or LUBA 316 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. OAR 660-023-0040(5)(b) requires that when allowing conflicting uses fully the local government must show why measures to protect the resource to some extent should not be provided. Where a local government adopts a lengthy discussion regarding the extremely poor quality of a site for wildlife habitat and how wildlife that may be attracted to the site pose a serious risk of danger to airplanes landing and taking off from the airport, the decision adequately explains why the site should not be protected to some extent for wildlife habitat under Goal 5. ODFW v. Crook County, 72 Or LUBA 316 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city council's findings appear to find that public sewer is a required public facility that is not available to property that is proposed for development, and the city council nevertheless approves development that will be served by an individual septic system without explaining why that action is consistent with a zoning standard that requires that all required public facilities have capacity and are available or can be made available to the development, remand is required. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A board of county commissioners does not err in failing to address a petitioner's argument that is inconsistent with a thirteen-year-old board of commissioners' interpretation of a different LC provision. Head v. Lane County, 72 Or LUBA 411 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner argues below that the proposal is not consistent with the comprehensive plan for reasons that are relevant considerations under several applicable comprehensive plan policies, the petitioner may challenge the adequacy of the findings that were ultimately adopted to establish consistency with those plan policies, even if the petitioner failed to cite the plan policies specifically. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding of compliance with a zone change standard requiring consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that higher density residential uses be sited "near employment" is inadequate, where the finding does not address proximity to employment at all, other than state that the property is adjacent to a small convenience commercial node. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that higher density residential use be sited in locations with "good access" to arterials is inadequate, where the finding states only that the site is located near an arterial, but without attempting to evaluate whether the site has or will in fact have good access to the arterial. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that residential densities maintain a proper relationship between public facilities and services and population distribution is inadequate, where the finding merely recites that proposed higher density residential development will comply with the density requirements in the code, but without explaining how density will maintain the proper relationship between public facilities and population distribution. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan provision requiring that future development shall respect the character of the existing area is inadequate, where the finding simply states that the general character of the area is "residential," without evaluating whether placing higher density residential development in the middle of an area zoned and developed with low density residential development is consistent with respecting the character of the existing area. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zone change standard requires a finding that adequate transportation networks to support the use are presently provided or planned to be provided concurrently with development of the property, a finding that this standard is met because future development will be subject to subdivision and site design review is inadequate to establish that the subject site has required secondary access or that such access is planned to be provided concurrently with development of the property. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner fails to establish that findings that a zone change is justified based on evidence of change in the community, where the findings identify two changes in the community that justify the zone change, but the petitioner challenges only the adequacy and evidentiary support for the findings regarding one of the identified changes. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts alternative findings to address disjunctive statutory requirements for annexation, any inconsistency between the alternative findings is not a basis for remand. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Brookings, 71 Or LUBA 14 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will reject a petitioner's challenges to a local government's conclusion that evidence of mere intent and capability to provide training or issue certifications is sufficient to demonstrate that the facility qualifies as a "firearms training facility" under ORS 197.770, where the petitioner does not acknowledge or challenge the local government's alternative findings that the facility had in fact provided training and issued certification sufficient to demonstrate that the facility qualifies as a "firearms training facility." H.T. Rea Farming Corp. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 125 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zoning ordinance is deeply ambiguous regarding whether a previously approved resort master plan continues to have regulatory effect after a new Resort Community Zone is applied to the property, with parts of the ordinance, its supporting findings and the comprehensive plan supporting opposite conclusions, it is appropriate for LUBA to remand for the hearings officer to first address all of the conflicting language. Widgi Creek Homeowners Association v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 321 (2015).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where conditional use approval requires a finding of compliance with a three-pronged standard that "the proposed use will not alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties," and the decision maker only addresses the "precludes" prong in granting approval, remand is required to address the other two prongs. Morton v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 7 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An assignment of error challenging a local government's modification of a previously imposed condition of approval must be denied where there is an unchallenged finding that the condition was not imposed to ensure compliance with any applicable approval criterion. McCaffree v. Coos County, 70 Or LUBA 15 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a governing body adopts findings that were prepared by others, those findings become the findings of the governing body, and it does not matter who prepared or previously adopted the findings. Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicant identifies seven land use regulation standards and takes the position that they are not "clear and objective," and for that reason may not be applied to deny its application for approval of "needed housing," a city errs by applying those standards to deny the request for approval of needed housing without explaining in its findings why the city believes it is entitled to apply those standards to deny the application for needed housing. Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government errs in denying an application for permit approval because it fails to provide adequate parking facilities, where there is no standard that requires "adequate parking facilities" and the local government finds that the proposal complies with the applicable off-street parking requirement. Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county governing body's unexplained decision to rely on the on-line Merriam-Webster Dictionary definition of the term "penstock" does not constitute an interpretation that is adequate for review, where the governing body's decision does not show it was a considered choice between possible definitions. Pacificorp v. Deschutes County, 70 Or LUBA 89 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will deny an assignment of error that alleges that the city's findings are inadequate to explain why a proposed PUD is "reasonably compatible and harmonious with adjacent nearby land uses" where the assignment of error fails to challenge all of the city's findings and instead selectively quotes and challenges only portions of the findings. Oakleigh-McClure Neighbors v. City of Eugene, 70 Or LUBA 132 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the final decision consists of a single page stating that the application is "approved with conditions" and an attached staff report, which includes findings of compliance with approval standards and recommended conditions of approval, LUBA will conclude that the final decision adopts the staff report as incorporated findings and conditions. Knapp v. City of Jacksonville, 70 Or LUBA 259 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where the decision fails to adopt any findings addressing an applicable standard that limits fill to 20 feet of the "edge of the shoulder of driveways," even if the city implicitly adopted the applicant's position that the edge of a parking lot constitutes the edge of the shoulder of a "driveway," where the site plan appears to show fill placement more than 20 feet from the edge of the parking lot. Knapp v. City of Jacksonville, 70 Or LUBA 259 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The local governing body is entitled to some latitude in reconciling competing plan policies that address different but related needs regarding residential land use and housing, and findings are not inconsistent merely because they recognize some tension between the policies. Hess v. City of Corvallis, 70 Or LUBA 283 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A challenge to a single sentence that expresses a very broad view of the words "public need" in a comprehensive plan policy does not alone provide a basis for reversal or remand where the local government's decision is supported by almost three single-spaced pages of findings that explain the local government's reasoning. Hess v. City of Corvallis, 70 Or LUBA 283 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate to explain why fire protection standards are met where the findings do not address whether the standards are met or why the evidence in the record supports a conclusion that it is feasible to meet the standards, particularly where the only evidence in the record is that the fire district is concerned about wildfires and will perform the required inspections. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 368 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate to explain why the hearings officer concluded that a proposed aggregate operation will not force a significant change in or significantly increase the cost of accepted farming practices where the decision fails to consider whether the standard is met but rather relies on a determination that a haul road that opponents argue will force a significant change in farming practices was authorized in previous decisions. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 368 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where, based on Natural Resources Conservation Service data, opponents take the position that the water table lies two feet below the surface of a proposed topsoil mining operation, but the local government accepts the applicant's position that the water table lies 125 feet below the surface, but no party identifies the evidence the applicant and local government relied on for the 125-foot estimate, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt findings explaining the large discrepancy in the two estimates and why it accepted the 125-foot estimate. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the location, nature and height of an earthen berm that a hearings officer relied on to find that a proposed top soil mining operation complies with screening and sound mitigation standards is unclear, LUBA will remand for the hearings officer to adopt findings that more clearly identify the location, nature and height of the required berm. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a city deletes two refinement plan policies requiring protection of existing manufactured dwelling parks, and zones the parks to make them non-conforming uses, but the findings do not explain how the amendments are consistent with a comprehensive plan policy requiring conservation of existing affordable housing. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is required where the hearings officer's findings either do not address an applicable approval criterion at all, or rely on findings from a different decision made more than 10 years prior to the challenged decision that appear to be addressing a different approval criterion. Vesper Park v. Washington County, 68 Or LUBA 106 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's final decision includes adequate findings and a code interpretation adequate for review, where the final decision adopts a planning staff decision as its own, and the planning staff decision embodies a code interpretation that is adequate for review. Sellwood-Moreland Improvement League v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 213 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are adequate to demonstrate that in determining that a proposed conditional use airport is compatible with the neighborhood, the county considered "other related impacts" from the airport, including testimony from neighbors regarding safety and the risk of crash, and imposed conditions of approval that require that addressed those safety concerns. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate to explain why a tentative planned unit development (PUD) and subdivision will not be a significant risk to public health and safety, where evidence in the record demonstrates that the portions of the property that will be developed with roads, parking lots, and sewer, water and electrical lines contain loose soils. In that circumstance, where the findings do not conclude that the public health and safety standard does not apply to roads, parking lots, and sewer, electrical and water lines, and there is no finding that these aspects of the proposed PUD and subdivision can be constructed on those loose soils without causing unreasonable or significant public health and safety concerns, the findings are inadequate. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 33 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The findings denying an application for a quasi-judicial zoning and comprehensive plan map amendment are adequate, where they explain that the two commissioners who participated in the decision could not agree whether the application satisfied two approval criteria and that by operation of law that failure to achieve a majority vote in favor of the application results in denial. The county was not required to adopt findings that are adequate to deny the application on the merits, where the decision does not deny the application on the merits. Warren v. Josephine County, 67 Or LUBA 74 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Even if there is no statutory or other legal requirement that a building permit must in all cases be supported by findings, the record must be sufficient for LUBA or Court of Appeals review if the building permit qualifies as a land use decision. But the initial burden in an appeal to LUBA of such a building permit is to establish an arguable legal error. Once that is done, if the record is not sufficient to establish that the local government correctly applied the law, remand may be required. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will not consider whether a city erred in the way it applied the roof height measuring method it applied, where petitioner only argues that a different roof height measuring method should have been used and LUBA concludes that the city applied the correct roof height measuring method. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that batching operations on property zoned exclusive farm use that would be prohibited under ORS 215.301(2) are authorized under ORS 215.301(2) and a 1981 permit are inadequate where the findings do not respond to arguments that a 1997 permit modified the 1981 permit to disallow batching operations. Poto v. Linn County, 67 Or LUBA 162 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings official's expressions of misgivings about the quality of evidence submitted by an applicant do not mean the hearings officer required the applicant to meet an impermissible "absolute certainty" burden of proof. Teen Challenge v. Lane County, 67 Or LUBA 300 (2013).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Notwithstanding that a city erroneously determined that a particular section of the development code exempted a permit applicant from development code buffer requirements, where another section of the development code cited by the petitioner clearly does exempt the permit applicant from the buffer requirements, LUBA will affirm the city's decision. ORS 197.835(11)(b). Nielsen v. City of Gresham, 66 Or LUBA 24 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city is required upon annexation to apply the city zoning district that "most closely approximates" the county zoning district and the city applies a city zoning district that treats 13 uses much differently than another city zone that appears to regulate those 13 uses in the same way the county zoning district regulates those 13 uses, remand is required because the city's findings inadequately explain why the zoning district the city applied nevertheless "most closely approximates" the county zoning district it replaces. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the city takes the position during the initial proceedings below that an adopted plan is an applicable approval criterion, but reverses that position during the multi-hearing proceedings before the city council and takes the position that the adopted plan is not an applicable approval criterion because it is not yet effective, a city does not commit error in failing to adopt findings that confirm that the plan is not a source of approval criteria. Vest v. City of Molalla, 66 Or LUBA 155 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Substantial evidence in the record supports a city's finding that a proposed cell tower location is the only feasible location where the evidence demonstrates that (1) alternative sites are located outside of the search area identified by applicant for meeting its coverage objectives, (2) the tower cannot reasonably be located within a right-of-way because there is not sufficient area within the right-of-way to locate all of the necessary equipment, (3) co-location is not feasible because the heights of existing towers are inadequate, and (4) co-location on an existing rooftop facility is not feasible due to inadequate structural integrity of the rooftop. Hill v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 250 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where on remand of a decision that amends a county zoning ordinance, the county adopts a new ordinance with new amendments, but does not explicitly or implicitly re-adopt the original ordinance, on appeal to LUBA of the new ordinance the petitioner cannot challenge the original ordinance or the findings adopted on remand that are intended to support the original ordinance. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 265 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The absence of findings addressing whether an ordinance adopted on remand is consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies is not a basis for reversal or remand, where the ordinance merely deletes text from the original ordinance subject to remand, on remand the county adopted findings concluding that the original ordinance is consistent with the plan policies, and the petitioner identifies nothing in the deletions accomplished by the remand ordinance that might cause the county to reach a different conclusion with respect to the remand ordinance. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 265 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A challenge that the local government's findings are inadequate to identify potential conflicts under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(b) from a proposed aggregate mining operation provides no basis for reversal or remand of a decision where the petitioner's argument reads in isolation two sentences from 77 pages of findings while ignoring several pages of findings that make clear that the local government considered all conflicts required to be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(b), and where the petitioner does not identify with any specificity a particular source of conflict that the local government failed to consider. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 291 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate to explain why a prohibition on constructing a berm within a floodway is not applicable, where the decision relies on construction of a noise berm to be located partially within a floodway to minimize noise conflicts with sensitive uses. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 291 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's arguments that the local government misconstrued OAR 660-012-0070(5) and (6) and adopted inadequate findings not supported by substantial evidence do not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where OAR 660-012-0070(7) governs the local government's decision instead of OAR 660-012-0070(5) and (6), and the two sets of rules have different substantive terms, requirements and standards. Storm v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 415 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Remand is necessary where a county adopts standards that impose limitations on development of wind energy facilities, but the record includes no findings or other indications that the county considered whether the amendments are consistent with comprehensive plan policies that encourage the county to promote development of alternative energy sources. Cosner v. Umatilla County, 65 Or LUBA 9 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In approving a property line adjustment between two EFU-zoned parcels to facilitate a proposed farm dwelling, under a standard that requires that the adjusted parcel "qualifies for a homesite," a county may rely on a concurrent county decision approving a farm dwelling on the adjusted parcel to conclude that the "qualifies for a homesite" standard is met, and need not require farm income evidence or adopt findings as part of the adjustment decision that again demonstrate that the adjusted parcel qualifies for a farm dwelling. Louks v. Jackson County, 65 Or LUBA 58 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's finding that a code requirement that a proposed kennel be compatible with surrounding uses is met where the kennel is required to satisfy applicable DEQ noise standards is inadequate, where the findings do not explain why the hearings officer concluded that compliance with the applicable DEQ noise standards necessarily means that the proposed use is compatible with surrounding residential uses. Butcher v. Washington County, 65 Or LUBA 263 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's finding that a proposed kennel operation is compatible with surrounding uses is inadequate and is not based on substantial evidence in the record, where the findings do not explain the basis for assuming that impacts from the noise and traffic associated with the kennel operation will be limited to the kennel's historic operating levels, and no condition of approval limits the operation to its historic levels. Butcher v. Washington County, 65 Or LUBA 263 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a decision where the findings are inadequate to explain why a hearings officer interprets setback provisions that require a 100-foot setback to apply only to a proposed new kennel building and to not apply to outdoor dog play areas. Butcher v. Washington County, 65 Or LUBA 263 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A comprehensive plan policy that requires a city to "adopt a program to improve maintenance of septic systems for the benefit of all residents" does not specify how the program will improve septic system maintenance and therefore does not necessarily require that a city septic system maintenance system must be mandatory and regulatory, as opposed to voluntary and educational, so long as the program will improve maintenance of septic systems. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although there is no general legal requirement that all legislative land use decisions must be supported by findings, where the scope and meaning of at least some applicable comprehensive plan policies are unclear, it is highly unlikely that a decision to replace an existing mandatory, regulatory program to improve septic system maintenance with a voluntary, educational program to achieve the same goal will be defensible on appeal without adequate findings. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a permit extension criterion requires a local government to find that the permit applicant was not responsible for its failure to complete the development authorized by the permit within the term of the permit, a local government errs in finding that its determination concerning whether the applicant was responsible for that failure need not be supported substantial evidence. And while an applicant's claim that it could not have completed development within the term of the term of the original permit due to a historic downturn in the economy might be substantial evidence if that is the only evidence in the record, that unsubstantiated claim is not substantial evidence if there is other evidence that the applicant was seeking an alternate development proposal during the term of the original permit. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. General findings that address some of the impacts of a proposal on the surrounding neighborhood are inadequate to explain how the proposal satisfies specific conditional use criteria that apply to the proposal. Poe v. City of Warrenton, 63 Or LUBA 20 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county land use code enforcement proceeding is initiated by a "complaint" rather than "an application for a land use decision," and the procedures followed by the county were its procedures for code enforcement proceedings rather than the quasi-judicial land use hearing procedures set out at ORS 197.763, the ORS 197.763(1) and 197.835(3) "raise it or waive it" rule does not apply, and petitioner's failure to raise an issue below does not prevent petitioner from raising the issue for the first time at LUBA. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the critical finding in a hearings officer's decision in a code enforcement proceeding is that petitioner had a longstanding regular practice of mowing grass and blackberry bushes in the riparian zone on his property, the only evidence that supports that finding is the testimony of the code enforcement officer based on field notes regarding conversations he had with petitioner that are not part of the record, petitioner testifies in the hearings before the hearings officer that he mowed in the riparian area on only one occasion, and it is not clear that the hearings officer even recognized that the testimony of petitioner and the code enforcement officer conflicted on the critical issue, remand is required. The hearings officer may be able to explain why he believed the code enforcement officer over petitioner, but without any explanation his decision is not supported by substantial evidence. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer's order appears to require that a property owner submit a plan to the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife to replant a significant area of petitioner's property with native vegetation and the factual and legal basis for that requirement is not apparent in the hearings officer's decision, the decision must be remanded so that the hearings officer may explain the factual and legal basis for the order. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicable comprehensive plan policy allows a local government to approve a partition of a property that is located partially within an urban growth boundary (UGB) along the UGB line if the property is "legally created," remand is required where the local government's findings fail to explain how the dividing an approximately 30-acre parent parcel in 1973 without review under applicable land partition regulations results in a "legally created" property. Jacobsen v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 1 (2010).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioners argue the city erroneously assumed that future industrial development would result in 10 employees per acre in arriving at an estimate of the gross buildable acres needed, but it is clear from the city's findings that its estimate of gross buildable acres needed did not rely on that assumption, petitioner's assignment of error provides no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Yamhill County v. City of Newberg, 62 Or LUBA 5 (2010).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where audio recording of the hearing at which a motion to adopt a proposed plan was passed discloses that the motion also was sufficient to adopt a separate supporting findings document, the fact that the motion described in the minutes of that hearing makes no mention of the separate findings document provides no basis for remand. Parker Johnstone Wilsonville Honda v. ODOT, 62 Or LUBA 116 (2010).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's argument that the city failed to comply with a transportation system plan policy that requires that the city hold a public meeting with affected property owners before selecting a roadway alignment provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the city adopted findings that the cited policy does not apply to the kind of decision on appeal and was satisfied even if it did apply, and petitioner fails to assign error to or otherwise challenge those findings. Reeves v. City of Wilsonville, 62 Or LUBA 142 (2010).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government decision that determines that an entire property is located on a foredune and denies an application for a dwelling based on that determination will be remanded where the findings do not explain why the local government reached the conclusion it reached and the conclusion is not supported by any evidence in the record identified by the local government. Rudell v. City of Bandon, 62 Or LUBA 279 (2010).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's objection to a hearings officer's finding that the portion of a site that is within a designated potential landslide area is "relatively small" provides no basis for reversal or remand where the finding is accurate and supported by the record and the finding has no apparent effect on the hearings officer's application of the applicable landslide hazard regulation. Gravatt v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 382 (2011).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county considers a variety of evidence in concluding that a tract is not suitable for commercial forest use but does not consider the cf/ac/yr of wood fiber data that must be considered in inventorying lands that are suitable for commercial forest use under OAR 660-006-0010 and 660-006-0005(2), remand is required. Just v. Linn County, 60 Or LUBA 74 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government's findings rely heavily on particular factors set out in OAR 660-033-0020(1)(a)(B) to conclude that land does not qualify as "other lands" that are suitable for farm use under OAR 660-033-0020(1)(a)(B), and petitioner waived his right to challenge the findings concerning those particular factors because petitioner raised no issue below concerning those particular factors, LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges the adequacy of the county's OAR 660-033-0020(1)(a)(B) findings. Just v. Linn County, 60 Or LUBA 74 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county's conclusory finding that a subdivision applicant does not have a vested right to complete a subdivision under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49 provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the county had adopted a decision that reached the same conclusion over one month earlier and that separate decision had not been judicially challenged and was therefore final. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner assigns error under OAR 660-012-0060, arguing that the county inadequately mitigated for the traffic impacts of a proposed destination resort, but petitioner neither assigns error to the county's finding that the destination resort will not "significantly affect" the transportation facilities within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0060 nor challenges the legal reasoning that the county adopted in support of that finding, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Eder v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 204 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although a local government land use decision maker is entitled to choose between conflicting believable expert testimony, where the decision maker does not demonstrate that it recognized the conflicting expert testimony and chose to believe one expert's testimony rather than the other expert's testimony, remand is required. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Absent a local or specific statutory requirement that legislative land use decisions be supported by findings, such decisions need not be supported by findings as long as LUBA and the appellate courts with the aid of the parties and the record can perform their review function. Friends of Umatilla County v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 12 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In challenging a finding that a city adopted in support of its decision to vacate certain rights-of-way, a petitioner must do more than allege the challenged finding is false. Bowers v. City of Eugene, 58 Or LUBA 51 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. ORS 197.829(2) permits LUBA to interpret a local code provision in the first instance where there is a missing or inadequate governing body interpretation, but does not permit LUBA to supply missing findings of compliance with applicable approval criteria. Holbrook v. City of Rockaway Beach, 58 Or LUBA 179 (2009).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicable comprehensive plan policy and intergovernmental agreement provision require a city to determine that adequate public services are available to a property that is proposed to be annexed, a city errs in failing to adopt findings regarding the availability of police protection. Bowler v. City of Cave Junction, 56 Or LUBA 152 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that describe the only forest practice that adjoining timber operators identified as impacted by proposed mining on forest land are adequate for purposes of a code significant change/increase standard, where the code standard does not implement the statutory significant change/increase standard, and the petitioners do not explain why the code standard requires an exhaustive description of all forest practices on nearby lands. Comden v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 214 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. While a county's failure to describe accepted farming practices on nearby lands would likely require remand under the ORS 215.296(1) significant change/increase standard or a code provision implementing that standard, such a failure is not necessarily reversible error under a similar code significant change/increase standard that does not implement the statute. Any failure to describe accepted farming practices under the code standard is harmless, where the county adopted unchallenged findings, supported by substantial evidence, that the proposed mining will not significantly affect any farm or forest practices. Comden v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 214 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a street vacation standard required the city to find "a greater public benefit would be obtained from the vacation than from retaining the right-of-way in its present status" and the city adopts findings that, among other things, explain that the vacation will cause minimal out of direction travel, petitioner must do more than quote parts of the city's findings and claim they are preposterous. Olson v. City of Springfield, 56 Or LUBA 229 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city applies a street vacation criterion that requires the city to find "a greater public benefit would be obtained from the vacation than from retaining the right-of-way in its present status" and finds the required benefit would be realized by the new secure parking area that would be constructed in the vacated right-of-way adjacent to a new Justice Center, remand is not required simply because petitioner would have applied that "greater public benefit" criterion differently and retained the right-of-way for transportation purposes. With such a subjective standard, different reasonable persons could easily reach different conclusions about the public benefit to be derived from the proposed street vacation. Olson v. City of Springfield, 56 Or LUBA 229 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A code provision stating that where a planned development standard and the underlying zone conflict, the planned development standard controls does not resolve conflicts between planned development standards and other code provisions that are not part of the underlying zone. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A criterion that requires a county to find that a proposed subdivision is "consistent with the general nature of the area" is very subjective. Where the county's findings cite the existence of many existing small parcels in the area that are similar in size to the proposed subdivision lots and petitioners merely cite concerns about possible interference with farming operations and a wildlife refuge, the concerns that petitioners cite are not so overwhelming that the county was obligated to acknowledge and expressly address those concerns in its findings. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city "overrides" code provisions requiring that a subdivision developer construct sidewalks without identifying a basis in the city's code or comprehensive plan to waive or vary the sidewalk requirement, LUBA will remand the decision for the city to adopt findings explaining what authority allows the city to override the sidewalk requirement. Soares v. City of Corvallis, 56 Or LUBA 551 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where two 25-foot test pits show an aggregate layer that is at least 20 feet deep and shows no sign of diminishing and the decision maker does not seem to have appreciated that the test pits were consistent with the first 25 feet of two deep borings located elsewhere on the site that showed an aggregate layer of far more than the 25-foot width required to qualify as a significant aggregate resource site under OAR 660-023-0180(3)(d)(B)(ii), remand is required so that the county can make it clearer that it understood the significance of the two 25-foot test pits. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA determines that three county findings regarding the significance of an aggregate site are not supported by substantial evidence, are inadequately explained, or fail to appreciate the significance of certain evidence in the record, remand is required where LUBA cannot assume the findings were minor or unimportant parts of the county's ultimate decision that the applicant failed to demonstrate that the aggregate site qualifies as "significant," under OAR 660-023-0180(3). Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a decision approving a broadcast tower that requires an above-ground water storage tank but does not require that the tank be screened as required by site design approval criteria. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a comprehensive plan categorizes lands within the urban growth boundary according to suitability for development, a county errs by denying a request for rezoning on the basis that the requested rezoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, where the findings identify nothing in the comprehensive plan that supports a conclusion that the property's low suitability rating precludes the requested rezoning. Sperber v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 763 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a rezoning standard requires a finding that the rezoning "will not seriously interfere with permitted uses on other nearby parcels," a county's findings that the standard is not met due to "access and fire safety concerns" are inadequate, where those findings address concerns with development on the rezoned property and have no obvious bearing on interference with development on nearby parcels. Sperber v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 763 (2008).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the dispute during local proceedings on remand regarding a visual impact approval criterion centered on whether photographic evidence submitted by broadcast tower opponents simulated six-foot diameter microwave antennas or much larger antennas, the hearings officer's unexplained decision to allow microwave antennas to be sited on the towers without additional review so long as they did not exceed eight feet in diameter requires remand so that the hearings officer can explain her selection of the eight-foot parameter. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 12 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's decision to incorporate a "safe harbor" in her approval of broadcast towers that would allow additional microwave antennas to be sited on the towers in the future without additional review against visual impact approval criteria so long as they were not sited higher than 150 feet is erroneous, where the decision included no explanation for why the 150-foot parameter was selected. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 12 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's findings note that property contains a spring and a road and that adjacent lands contain dwellings, but do not otherwise explain why the spring and the road and the adjacent dwellings make resource use of the property impracticable, the county's findings are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with OAR 660-004-0028(2). Gordon v. Polk County, 55 Or LUBA 57 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's failure to find that it is feasible to construct a driveway without encroaching on adjacent property is not a basis for remand, where the applicable criteria require no finding of feasibility, and the petitioner identifies no physical or other impediment to constructing the driveway without encroachment. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 55 Or LUBA 350 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner does not explain why challenged findings are inadequate, but rather disagrees with the conclusion reached in those findings, petitioner's challenge to the findings will not be sustained. Knapp v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 376 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. To obtain remand of development approval based on evidentiary grounds, it is insufficient to simply cite the evidence that the hearings officer rejected and argue that the evidence undermines the hearings officer's ultimate evidentiary choice. The petitioner must also challenge and establish error in the findings in which the hearings officer explained why he found petitioner's evidence unreliable. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that it is feasible to incorporate design features into a turn lane to render it safe is an insufficient basis to conclude that the turn lane complies with applicable criteria, where the hearings officer fails to impose any conditions requiring that such design features be used. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Petitioner's argument that a finding is not supported by substantial evidence provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner does not establish that the finding is required to address a relevant legal standard. Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 124 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's findings in support of its decision to deny permit approval must adequately interpret and apply the criteria the city relies on to deny the application in a way that is consistent with the language of the criteria and must provide a coherent explanation for why the city believes the proposal does not comply with the criteria. A city decision will be remanded where its findings do not comply with these minimum requirements for adequate findings. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city's decision focuses largely or entirely on the water tower that proposed cellular antennae would be sited on, and the antennae rather than the water tower are the subject of the conditional use application, the city's decision will be remanded. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where it is clear that an ordinance that was adopted to replace a previously adopted ordinance was relying on the findings that were adopted to support the previously adopted ordinance, a county's failure to expressly state that it was relying on those findings to support the replacement ordinance provides no basis for reversal or remand. Thompson v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 531 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A planning staff decision that a proposed crematory expansion to a nonconforming mortuary use is an outright permitted use in a residential zone will be remanded, where the decision does not explain the basis for that conclusion and the city's code appears to prohibit expansions of nonconforming uses. Hallowell v. City of Independence, 53 Or LUBA 165 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government errs in imposing a condition of approval limiting the maximum number of lots when that number was lower than the number of lots proposed by the applicant and the density allowed in the zone is consistent with the number of lots proposed by the applicant. Gunzel v. City of Silverton, 53 Or LUBA 174 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government rejects an engineer's report supporting the applicant's proposed lot sizes as not being "adequate documentation" under a local code provision allowing the applicant's proposed lot sizes based on that documentation, it is error for the city to fail to fully explain why the report is inadequate. Gunzel v. City of Silverton, 53 Or LUBA 174 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A broadcast tower approval criterion that requires a decision maker to determine whether identified "public benefits outweigh any impacts which cannot be mitigated" is subjective. In assessing a findings and evidentiary challenge to a decision maker's weighing of public benefits, the question is whether that weighing is (1) inadequately explained (necessitating a remand for additional findings) or (2) unreasonable (and therefore not supported by substantial evidence). Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city council adopts a staff report as supporting findings and the staff report quotes the applicant's proposed findings verbatim, but inserts the words "applicant states" at the beginning of each finding, LUBA will reject a challenge that the findings are inadequate to express what the city council found where: (1) the findings are worded as findings, (2) the findings immediately follow the criteria the findings address, and (3) it is sufficiently clear from the decision that the city council intended to adopt the applicant's findings as its own. Ettro v. City of Warrenton, 53 Or LUBA 485 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a rezoning opponent specifically cites and quotes comprehensive plan policies and argues the proposed rezoning is inconsistent with those policies, it is generally risky for a local government to approve the rezoning without specially addressing the cited comprehensive plan policies. However, where the petitioner makes no attempt to tie his substantive arguments to the cited plan policies and the city's responsive findings adequately address petitioner's substantive arguments, the city's failure to tie its responsive findings to the cited plan policies is not important. Ettro v. City of Warrenton, 53 Or LUBA 485 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner challenges a city council's findings concerning a screening and buffering criterion, but fails to challenge a finding that the city council adopted by reference, and that finding addresses and finds that the proposal complies with that criterion, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Ettro v. City of Warrenton, 53 Or LUBA 485 (2007).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where planned unit development subdivision opponents argued before the city that the proposal was inconsistent with a number of comprehensive plan provisions, and it is not clear why at least some of those comprehensive plan requirements are not relevant approval requirements, the city erred by not addressing those comprehensive plan provisions in its findings and explaining why they do not apply as approval requirements or why the proposal is consistent with those requirements if they do apply. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city adjustment committee lacks authority to consider a legal issue, the adjustment committee does not err by failing to address that legal issue in its findings, even though petitioners raised the legal issue below. O'Brien v. City of Portland, 52 Or LUBA 113 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA frequently analyzes findings challenges and evidentiary challenges separately and generally analyzes findings challenges first, because LUBA's resolution of the findings challenge frequently affects its resolution of the evidentiary challenge or makes it unnecessary to decide the evidentiary challenge. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. It is not unreasonable for a local decision maker to cite issues raised regarding the evidence submitted by an applicant's engineers that were not responded to, and to rely on opponents' experts' testimony to find that the applicant failed to carry its burden of proof. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where specific criticisms of a transportation impact analysis are made, silence or continued support of the transportation impact analysis by the city engineer and Oregon Department of Transportation engineers is not sufficient to refute those issues. Ignoring issues is not the same thing as implicitly refuting those issues. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Under a variance standard requiring that the "hardship" not be "self-created," a finding that the "applicant's desire to partition his property" created the "hardship" is an insufficient basis to deny the variance request, where the hardship is the lack of alternative access to the proposed parcel and there is no explanation in the findings how petitioner's desire to partition his property created the lack of alternative access to the proposed parcel. Krishchenko v. City of Canby, 52 Or LUBA 290 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where (1) a hearings officer clearly recognizes a flooding issue, (2) the hearings officer thoroughly analyzes the issue, (3) LUBA can see no obvious flaws in the hearings officer's analysis, and (4) petitioners neither acknowledge nor make any attempt to challenge the findings, petitioners fail to allege error that would provide a basis for reversal or remand. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zoning map amendment criterion requires the applicant to demonstrate that the uses allowed in the new zone would not "materially and/or adversely affect the character of the neighborhood," selection of too small an area for analysis could frustrate the purpose of the criterion. However, where petitioners do not show that the area selected was too small and the city's findings explain that the residential to commercial rezoning is in an area that is already a mixed commercial and residential area, petitioners do not demonstrate a basis for remand. Cornelius First v. City of Cornelius, 52 Or LUBA 486 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county signs a land use compatibility statement certifying that a state agency permit applicant's proposal complies with all applicable local land use regulations, but fails to include any findings to support that certification, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt the required findings. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 52 Or LUBA 536 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner may not fail to assign error to a finding that certain issues were not preserved and are not within the hearings officer's scope of review, and instead on appeal to LUBA, simply assign error with respect to the same issues that the hearings officer found were not preserved. Franzke v. Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 761 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That a city's decision is based in part on an erroneous interpretation of applicable law provides no basis for remand where its decision is separately based on findings that correctly interpret and apply the applicable law. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city's decision was sustained in a prior appeal based on an interpretation that a comprehensive plan goal would be applied at the time a building permit was issued for the property, and the building permit is subsequently issued without addressing the comprehensive plan goal, LUBA will remand for the city to adopt findings addressing the comprehensive plan goal. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 51 Or LUBA 93 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where there are several ways a site may qualify as a geologic hazard area and a permit is issued in which the city considers some but not all of those ways, LUBA will remand so that the city can adopt the required findings. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 51 Or LUBA 93 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city is required by the Metro Code to prepare and release a report prior to annexation that describes how the annexation is consistent with agreements that the city is not a party to, but the Metro Code review criteria that govern review of the annexation on appeal do not require that the annexation be consistent with agreements the city is not a party to, Metro may not deny the annexation ordinance based on the city's failure to comply with the report requirement without explaining why that violation of the report requirements has the same status as a violation of one of the review criteria and provides a basis for denial. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county finds that an original mining plan did not "minimize" turbidity impacts within the meaning of OAR 660-023-0180(5)(c) and 660-023-0180(1)(g), the county is not barred by the waiver principle in Beck v. City of Tillamook, 313 Or 148, 153-54, 831 P2d 678 (1992), from revisiting that turbidity impact minimization question where the county's decision regarding the original mining plan is remanded for other reasons and on remand a revised and more limited mining plan is proposed. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county denies an application for a mineral and aggregate zoning overlay because the applicant failed to supply a certificate that the mine would not result in an increase in flood elevations, the county's decision must identify the legal requirement that the certificate be submitted at the time the zoning overlay is approved. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a variance criterion allows a variance if topography makes strict compliance with the lot depth requirement an unreasonable hardship and the city's findings granting the variance for four lots do not explain why a proposed roadway could not be relocated slightly to make four lots comply with the lot depth requirement, remand is required. Lockwood v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 334 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. If the argument included in support of an assignment of error clearly alleges that findings are not supported by substantial evidence, the fact that an assignment of error that challenges the adequacy of the city's findings does not expressly include a substantial evidence challenge does not preclude LUBA review of the substantial evidence arguments that follow that assignment of error. Neighbors 4 Responsible Growth v. City of Veneta, 51 Or LUBA 363 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a variance criterion requires the city to find that "public need" outweighs "adverse impacts" of developing wetlands and a party argues there is no market demand for the commercial development that the variance would allow, the city must address in its findings the role, if any, that market demand plays under the variance criterion and explain why the public need, as the city interprets those words, outweighs the identified potential adverse impacts. Neighbors 4 Responsible Growth v. City of Veneta, 51 Or LUBA 363 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a variance criterion requires the city to find that "public need" outweighs "adverse impacts" of developing wetlands and a party identifies many potential adverse impacts of such development, a city's findings must do more than explain how the potential adverse impacts will be mitigated; the findings must explain why the public need outweighs the potential adverse impacts, as they may be mitigated. Neighbors 4 Responsible Growth v. City of Veneta, 51 Or LUBA 363 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county finding that there is "nothing in the record" that would lead the county to believe that a proposed mining operation would cause a risk of traffic accidents does not demonstrate that the county ignored evidence that petitioners submitted to show the mine could cause such a risk, where there are other findings that show the county merely was not persuaded that petitioners' testimony outweighed the testimony submitted by the applicant. Lindsey v. Josephine County, 51 Or LUBA 383 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where intervenors provide in their response brief an alternative theory for affirming the challenged decision in the event necessary findings are found not to be supported by substantial evidence, and that alternative theory does not appear in the challenged findings, LUBA will decline to affirm on that basis, and will remand to allow the local government to consider that alternative theory in the first instance. Anderson v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 454 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings demonstrating compliance with an approval criterion that requires that a proposed RV park be compatible with surrounding residential areas based, in part, on vegetative screening are not sufficient to demonstrate compliance with a comprehensive plan policy requiring buffer zones between residential areas and conflicting land uses. Jacobsen v. City of Winston, 51 Or LUBA 602 (2006).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Technical revisions to a tentative subdivision plan need not be decided with public participation, and a condition of tentative subdivision plan approval requiring that, prior to submittal of the final plat, county staff will "red-line" the plat and return to applicant's surveyor for corrections is not an impermissible deferral of findings to the second step of a two-step process. Angius v. Washington County, 50 Or LUBA 33 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Petitioner's arguments do not provide a basis for remand where petitioner fails to challenge a county's interpretation that a criterion that the "land must have adequate carrying capacity to support the densities and types of uses allowed by the proposed plan and zone designations" is satisfied where the land has adequate carrying capacity for uses and densities authorized by the challenged decision, rather than for all possible uses allowed in the zone. Doob v. Josephine County, 49 Or LUBA 113 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner shows that a county's findings are inadequate, but the quality of the evidentiary record and the findings that could reasonably be adopted based on that record are disputed, remand is the appropriate remedy where (1) petitioner does not show that a county's decision is "outside the range of discretion allowed the [county] under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances," which would require reversal of the county's decision and an order to approve the permit under ORS 197.835(10)(a) or (2) that the county's decision to deny the permit "violates a provision of applicable law and is prohibited as a matter of law," which would justify a decision by LUBA to reverse the county court's decision under OAR 661-010-0073(1)(c). Hellberg v. Morrow County, 49 Or LUBA 423 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an interpretation of an ambiguous code standard that bars variances in some circumstances is needed to explain why the local government believes that standard did not bar an approved variance, and the appealed decision does not include either an express or implied interpretation of the code standard, remand is required. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although LUBA is authorized to interpret ambiguous local land use legislation in the first instance if the local government fails to adopt a needed interpretation, where interpreting the land use legislation in a way that would be consistent with the local government's decision is problematic, LUBA will not attempt to interpret the legislation in the first instance. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. If a local government wishes to interpret and apply traditional variance standards differently than those standards have traditionally been interpreted and applied, it must articulate an interpretation of those standards that is sufficient for review. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Annexation of a portion of road with one owner, though not required to result in a decision, is quasi-judicial, and therefore must be supported by findings addressing applicable standards. Patterson v. City of Independence, 48 Or LUBA 155 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The conclusory nature of a finding that faults the applicant for failing to present any evidence or evaluation of adverse impacts does not provide a basis for remand, where the hearings officer interpreted the code to require at least some evidence or evaluation of adverse impacts, and the applicant provided none. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 47 Or LUBA 21 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – inadequate Findings. Where a finding is ambiguous and could be read to misinterpret a code provision, but read in context it is reasonably clear that the local government did not intend the erroneous interpretation petitioner ascribes to it, and in fact intended an interpretation consistent with the code provision, petitioner's arguments based on that ambiguous finding do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Wynn v. Polk County, 47 Or LUBA 73 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When a petitioner raises an issue concerning a specific comprehensive plan provision, a local government is obligated to explain the extent to which, if any, the provision applies to the decision. Doob v. Josephine County, 47 Or LUBA 147 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Failure to adopt findings addressing a comprehensive plan policy requiring provision of preferential carpool and vanpool parking for new commercial uses is not a basis for remand, where the code leaves details of parking lot construction and striping to the city engineer at building permit review, the challenged decision requires the applicant to comply with all code parking requirements, and the petitioner offers no reason that the city engineer cannot require the applicant to provide carpool and vanpool parking as part of building permit review. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city transportation plan assigns responsibility to the city engineer to determine the scope of a traffic study necessary to assess development impacts on "nearby key intersections," the city engineer's decision to limit the traffic study to intersections adjacent to the subject property and not to require study of intersections five blocks away is not a basis for reversal or remand, absent an explanation from petitioners as to why those intersections are both "nearby" and "key." Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although all legislative decisions need not be supported by findings when the local government can supply argument and citation to the record in its brief to demonstrate compliance with the applicable criteria, such arguments must be based on evidence contained in the record rather than created out of whole cloth. Naumes Properties, LLC v. City of Central Point, 46 Or LUBA 304 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county does not fulfill its obligation under the local code to consider the effect of proposed fill on "aquatic life and habitat, and wildlife habitat" by simply finding that the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife's failed to express any concern regarding the proposal. However, where other county findings addressing a similar standard make it clear the county was relying on the relatively small amount of fill proposed and the impacted nature of the affected wetlands, to approve the requested fill, the county's finding regarding the agency's lack of concern provides no basis for reversal or remand. Bonnett v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 318 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code standard requires that an applicant seeking to place fill in a wetland for a driveway consider whether there are practical alternatives to placing fill in wetlands, and the record indicates there may be a practical building site that could be reached by a shorter driveway that would not require filling the wetland that was not considered by the county based on a misconstruction of the local code standard, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can consider whether the site is a practical building site. Bonnett v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 318 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's failure to address subjective language in a sign code criterion does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the petitioner also argues that applying that code language to approve or deny a sign application would be inconsistent with Article I, section 8, of the Oregon Constitution. Cotter v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 612 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An adjoining property owner who faces loss of his only current access in the future and assigns error to a city council's decision not to require a subdivision applicant to provide access presents no basis for reversal or remand, where the city council interprets a local code provision that requires subdivision applicants to provide access to adjoining properties not to apply where the adjoining properties currently have access and the property owner fails to demonstrate how the city council's interpretation is erroneous under ORS 197.829(1). McFall v. City of Sherwood, 46 Or LUBA 735 (2004).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA concludes that relevant local code provisions make the comprehensive plan requirements potentially applicable to an application for subdivision approval and that a particular comprehensive plan provision applies and is not merely aspirational, and the local government approved the subdivision without addressing the comprehensive plan provision, the subdivision approval decision must be remanded. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county's finding that proposed mining activities are not minimized sufficiently to avoid conflicts with identified riparian resources is not adequate, where the riparian area is located near water courses that will receive water diverted from mining cells and the county adopted other findings that mining will not affect identified wetlands that are located between the riparian area and presumably would be more susceptible to fluctuations in water levels than the riparian areas. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a code provision appears to require analysis of cumulative impacts of development proposals, but the city's decision does not address cumulative impacts and the city's response brief fails to explain why no cumulative impact analysis is required or why the existing findings adequately address such impacts, LUBA will remand for the city to provide that explanation. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA cannot determine from the appealed decision or the record whether an approved parkway corridor crosses an inventoried Goal 5 significant vegetation and wildlife area, the decision must be remanded. Friends of Eugene v. City of Eugene, 44 Or LUBA 239 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zoning ordinance requirement that a site have 150 feet of frontage could apply in a number of different ways to a site with multiple road frontages, and the local government's findings are inadequate to explain why the city applied that requirement in the way that it did, LUBA will remand for the city to interpret the zoning ordinance requirement in the first instance. Miles v. City of Florence, 44 Or LUBA 411 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a decision where petitioner identifies a discrepancy between the county zoning map and the map the county relied upon to approve a rezoning application, where the discrepancy may affect the county's determination that coastal shorelands are not affected by the rezoning, and the county's findings do not explain why the county did not rely on the county zoning map to establish the zoning boundary. Doty v. Coos County, 44 Or LUBA 448 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. There is no inconsistency in a city council subdivision approval decision that (1) refuses to delay approval or require setbacks for a possible future freeway, (2) requires elimination of a proposed subdivision access to the existing roadway that might be displaced by the possible future freeway, and (3) eliminates a planning commission requirement for pedestrian access to the roadway that might be displaced by the possible future freeway where (a) the possible future freeway is not yet included in the city's comprehensive plan, (b) the decision to eliminate the proposed roadway connection is based on an Oregon Department of Transportation policy that would preclude approval of the roadway connection, and (c) a code provision excuses pedestrian connections where they are found to be "infeasible or inappropriate" and the city council adopts an unchallenged finding that the pedestrian connection is "not necessary." Baida v. City of Medford, 44 Or LUBA 473 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where no code, statute or condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval requires that the city resolve an issue regarding an alleged encroachment before granting final subdivision plat approval, the city's failure to resolve such issues do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Jordan v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 586 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A challenge to the adequacy of a finding that concludes that a local ordinance provision regarding the developability of nonstandard lots does not apply to a determination regarding lot legality provides no basis for reversal or remand, where LUBA decides that the disputed ordinance provision clearly does not apply. Bear Creek Corporation v. Jackson County, 44 Or LUBA 685 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. City findings that specifically respond to a petitioner's interpretational challenge and address the only comprehensive plan goal that petitioner cites in support of that interpretational challenge are adequate to overcome petitioner's challenge that the city's findings are inadequate. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 44 Or LUBA 698 (2003).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An assignment of error challenging the evidentiary support for an alleged finding that a private bridge is not available to serve a proposed residential development provides no basis for remand where the decision is not based on the alleged finding and petitioner fails to challenge the findings that the city did make in support of its decision. Oregon Diverse Industries v. City of Jacksonville, 43 Or LUBA 135 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that a proposed Head Start program is not a school is inadequate, where it does not answer the relevant the question under the code, which is whether the proposed use is a "public building." Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local approval criterion requires a finding that a proposed use will have a minimal adverse impact on surrounding uses compared to the impact of development permitted outright, a city may not limit its impact analysis to only one permitted use, where other permitted uses in the zone may have impacts similar to those of the proposed use. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local approval criterion requires a finding that a proposed use will "preserve assets of particular interest in the community," a city council's finding that the proposed use does not satisfy the criterion is inadequate where the finding merely sets out a series of concerns about the proposed use without explaining why those concerns are "assets of particular interest" that the proposed use will not preserve. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will remand a city decision denying a partition application where it is not clear what documents make up the local decision and the documents that are identified as containing the final land use decision do not set out the city's rationale for denying the application. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 43 Or LUBA 354 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's legislative decision changes the comprehensive plan designation for a property from Industrial to Primary Agriculture, and the record does not reflect that the county considered other potentially suitable designations or explained why other potentially suitable designations should not be applied, the decision and record are insufficient to demonstrate that applicable criteria were considered. Manning v. Marion County, 42 Or LUBA 56 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where it is unclear who would own a proposed "personal use airport" in an EFU zone, and whether the uses that the owner plans to make of the airport would be consistent with the uses allowed under ORS 215.283(2)(h), the owner must be identified and the county's findings must explain why it concludes that the proposed uses fall within the uses allowed with a personal use airport. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that a proposed use complies with a code criterion requiring a demonstration that the use be consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies is inadequate where it merely summarizes the applicable comprehensive plan policies, and does not address issues raised regarding compliance with particular policy provisions. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Petitioner's challenge to the adequacy of findings that conclude that, as conditioned, a proposed personal use airport will not result in a "significant adverse impact on the livability, value or appropriate development" of an abutting use will be sustained where the findings fail to address testimony that, notwithstanding the mitigating conditions of approval, the proposed airport will result in significant adverse impacts to an adjoining national monument. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings official adopts detailed findings concerning the nature of the "surroundings" in applying a local approval criterion that requires that a proposed use be compatible with its surroundings, geographic ambiguity about the outer reach of the "surroundings" that were considered by the hearings official will provide no basis for remand, where petitioners identify no uses that they believe fall within the relevant "surroundings" and were not considered by the hearings official. Knight v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 279 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local "compatibility" standard is extremely subjective and reasonable persons could draw different conclusions from the record about whether a proposed 90-foot cellular tower would be compatible with its mixed residential and commercial surroundings, a hearings official's decision that the tower would be compatible will not be reversed on appeal simply because petitioners would reach the opposite conclusion. Knight v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 279 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although local governments are required to address legitimate issues that are raised in a quasi-judicial land use proceeding concerning relevant approval criteria, local governments are not required to address in their findings every conflict in the evidence or every criticism that is made of particular evidence. Knight v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 279 (2002).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's challenge to a finding that rezoning of a property is warranted to satisfy a commercial land need will be denied, where the need for commercial land is only one of several reasons given for the rezoning and the other reasons given are not challenged. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 41 Or LUBA 167 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner does not explain why approval criteria for fill in a floodplain and coastal shoreland necessitated precise delineation of the floodplain boundaries and precise knowledge about the location, amount and nature of the fill, the local government's failure to precisely delineate and describe the floodplain and fill provides no basis for remand. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 41 Or LUBA 130 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner raises issues regarding whether a proposed site design complies with potentially applicable approval criteria, the local government's decision must respond by either (1) determining that the cited provisions are not applicable approval criteria or (2) demonstrating that the proposal complies with such provisions. Elliott v. City of Redmond, 40 Or LUBA 242 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges a decision for failing to make findings regarding applicable criteria when the decision properly incorporates additional findings that do address the applicable approval criteria, and the incorporated findings are not inadequate on their face. McNern v. City of Corvallis, 39 Or LUBA 591 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an approval criterion requires that a proposed cellular phone tower must not alter the character of the surrounding area, petitioner's arguments that the criterion is violated provide no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner challenges findings that the county did not adopt and fails to challenge the findings that the county did adopt. Pereira v. Columbia County, 39 Or LUBA 575 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner challenges a finding that an amended approval criterion does not apply, but petitioner does not challenge alternative findings that the city adopted to address the amended approval criterion in the event it were found to apply, petitioner presents no basis for reversal or remand. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner only expressed disagreement with assumptions included in a transportation impact study and repeats evidentiary arguments he made to the city council without attempting to challenge the findings the city adopted to respond to those arguments, petitioner presents no basis for reversal or remand. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city adopts findings addressing issues raised by petitioner during local proceedings, petitioner presents no basis for reversal or remand by repeating those issues at LUBA without challenging the findings the city adopted to address those issues. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a site design review criterion requires that, "wherever possible," direct driveway access to arterial streets not be allowed, and the challenged decision approves a site plan with direct driveway access onto an arterial street and a collector street without explaining why it is not possible to limit access to the collector street, the decision must be remanded. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although LUBA may overlook a city's failure to adopt findings addressing an approval criterion for signs under ORS 197.835(11)(b) where the record clearly supports the decision, where the record provides only an idea of what the signs will look like and the criterion requires a highly subjective judgment, application of ORS 197.835(11)(b) is not appropriate. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although a decision maker is required to adopt findings that respond to relevant issues that are raised in quasi-judicial land use hearings, the decision maker is not necessarily required to adopt findings addressing particular items of evidence, provided LUBA is able to conclude that a reasonable decision maker could reach the disputed decision based on all the evidence. Schwerdt v. City of Corvallis, 38 Or LUBA 174 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner challenges the adequacy and evidentiary basis for a local government's decision determining that a proposed development "is or will be compatible" with the land use development pattern in the vicinity of the request, LUBA will analyze the findings to determine (1) whether the findings are adequate; (2) whether there is substantial evidence in the record to support a finding that, absent some conditions of approval, the compatibility standard is met; and (3) if conditions of approval are necessary to establish compatibility, whether the local government adopted such conditions. DLCD v. City of Warrenton, 37 Or LUBA 933 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The Portland City Code does not require that the city adopt findings of fact to support its legislative decisions. Therefore, on appeal to LUBA, the city may rely upon citations to the comprehensive plan, code, the record and arguments in its brief to demonstrate that the legislative decision is consistent with applicable plan and code provisions. Home Depot, Inc. v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 870 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's arguments that amended land use regulations violate a comprehensive plan policy by increasing housing costs and discouraging infill development provide no basis for remand, where the plan policy encourages both infill and preserving neighborhood livability and the city's findings explain that the regulations are needed to ensure that infill housing development can be accommodated in neighborhoods without eroding livability. Homebuilders Association v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 707 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an issue was raised below concerning whether a proposed bed and breakfast facility violated a plan policy regulating commercial development and is not addressed in a hearings officer's decision and the policy itself and related plan and land use regulation provisions are unclear whether the policy applies, LUBA will remand the decision. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zoning ordinance standard requires consideration of residential appearance and function of an "area" in approving a bed and breakfast facility, and a hearings officer's findings use different areas in applying that criterion so that the analysis is internally inconsistent, the findings are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with the standard. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a zoning ordinance standard requires that the transportation system be capable of serving the proposed and existing uses and the findings addressing that standard focus exclusively on the relatively small traffic generating impact of the proposal without ever addressing the adequacy of the transportation system, the findings are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with the standard. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city does not err by failing to address a comprehensive plan policy that requires an impact assessment for in-water structures, where the decision does not approve any in-water structures. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's findings are adequate to identify accepted farming practices on lands surrounding a proposed aggregate mining operation but do not explain why they will not be significantly affected by the mining operation, the county's decision must be remanded. Turner Community Association v. Marion County, 37 Or LUBA 324 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a party argues that the decision is supported by substantial evidence, but fails to identify where in the record that evidence is located, LUBA will not search the record for such evidence. DLCD v. Wallowa County, 37 Or LUBA 105 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the staff report identifies an approval criterion and the final decision fails to demonstrate compliance with the criterion or take the position that the criterion does not apply, the decision will be remanded. Latta v. City of Joseph, 36 Or LUBA 708 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that the soils on the subject property are unsuitable for farm use is an inadequate, unexplained conclusion where the subject property is predominantly Class VI soils and the comprehensive plan provides that such soils have significant importance for grazing. Pekarek v. Wallowa County, 36 Or LUBA 494 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A committed-exception zone-change decision that acknowledges the existence of Goal 5 resources on the subject property, but concludes that the county's existing Goal 5 plan provisions will address any conflicts, is not adequate to demonstrate compliance with Goal 5, where the findings do not state which of the county's existing Goal 5 plan provisions ensure continued compliance once the exception is taken, and the findings do not consider whether the zone change may introduce the possibility of new conflicting uses. Pekarek v. Wallowa County, 36 Or LUBA 494 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A finding that a proposed planned unit development will "reduce" site disturbance is inadequate to demonstrate compliance with a standard that requires that the proposed development shall be designed to avoid unnecessary site disturbance. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will not exercise its authority under ORS 197.835(11)(b) to affirm a decision notwithstanding inadequate findings, where the local government fails to adopt findings of compliance with a criterion requiring that planned unit development be designed to minimize the number and size of cuts and fills, and it is not obvious from evidence in the record that the PUD design minimizes cuts and fills. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will reject an assignment of error that alleges findings are inadequate but fails to explain why the disputed findings are critical to the county's decision. Cotter v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 172 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Exercise of LUBA's authority under ORS 197.829(2) to interpret local land use law in the first instance is not appropriate where the relevant code provision prohibiting reduction of acreage available for farm use could refer to reduction (1) of acreage on adjacent lands or (2) of acreage on the subject property that is available for use in conjunction with farm uses on adjacent lands. Where both interpretations are plausible and it is disputed factually whether the relevant lands could be used in conjunction with adjacent lands, a remand to the county to render its interpretation in the first instance is appropriate. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the county approves a golf course expansion without adopting findings addressing a comprehensive plan provision that prohibits approval of urban uses outside urban growth boundaries, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt findings addressing whether the subject golf course is "urban" and whether the proposed expansion of the golf course is consistent with the comprehensive plan provision. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city council interprets a code standard that excuses a permit applicant from providing required parking where "special circumstances exist constituting a hardship" as being satisfied where the cost of providing the one additional parking site that is possible on the property will constitute an "economic hardship out of proportion to the gain of parking spaces," and petitioner does not specifically challenge the city council's findings, LUBA will affirm that interpretation unless it exceeds the city's interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1). Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 68 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An assignment of error challenging the adequacy of findings that an approval criterion is met must be denied, where the decision maker also adopts alternative findings that the approval criterion does not apply to the challenged permit application and those alternative findings are not challenged. Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 68 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An assignment of error criticizing a city council for not discussing conflicting evidence will be rejected, because it is the written decision rather than oral deliberations where the decision maker is required to explain its choice between conflicting evidence. Moreover, where LUBA can determine that a reasonable decision maker would rely on the evidence the decision maker relied on, findings specifically addressing the conflicting evidence are not necessary. Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 68 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Petitioner's assignment of error will not be rejected solely because petitioner failed to challenge alternative findings that state law might preempt the county regulations at issue in the assignment of error, where the hearings officer's alternative finding does not clearly conclude that state law preempts. Neels v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 54 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer's findings are inadequate to explain why a proposed use that qualifies as a permitted use as a "household" does not also fall within the definition of a "nursing home," which is only allowed as a conditional use, a remand would normally be required. However, where the facts are not disputed, and LUBA is presented with a straightforward question of law, it may consider whether the proposed use falls within the definition of "nursing home." Neels v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 54 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county fails to justify amending its UGB to include commercial land at a freeway interchange where, although the interchange land would have advantages over lands further from the freeway but already inside the UGB, the county fails to demonstrate a particular need for commercial land at the interchange or that the lands inside the UGB are unsuitable for commercial development. DLCD v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 26 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's findings do not establish that a need for commercial land can only be satisfied at a freeway interchange, its findings considering alternatives outside the UGB are also inadequate where those findings fail to consider Class II through VI agricultural or nonresource lands simply because they are not close to a freeway interchange. DLCD v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 26 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Factor 3 of Goal 14 is not met if the public facilities and services have to be upgraded to serve land that is added to its UGB and alternative sites within the UGB that could accommodate identified needs already have public facilities and services. DLCD v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 26 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The ultimate issue in LUBA's review of a decision adopting a committed exception under OAR 660-004-0028 is whether the adopted findings that are relevant and supported by substantial evidence are sufficient to demonstrate compliance with the standard of ORS 197.732(1)(b) that uses allowed by the goal are impracticable. Lovinger v. Lane County, 36 Or LUBA 1 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In considering whether farm uses are impracticable, a county may not limit its consideration to "traditional" agricultural uses, where the feasibility of "nontraditional" agricultural uses is raised as an issue before the county. However, where the county's findings nevertheless address the feasibility of "nontraditional" uses, the county's possible misunderstanding of the scope of the required analysis provides no basis for reversal or remand. Lovinger v. Lane County, 36 Or LUBA 1 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county's conclusory finding that goals protecting housing are not violated by rezoning rural residential property for industrial use because proximity of the property to commercial and industrial uses and an interstate highway makes use of the property for rural residential uses impracticable is inadequate, where the record includes no evidence of conflicts with those uses that might make rural residential uses impracticable. James v. Josephine County, 35 Or LUBA 493 (1999).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's land use decision approving a forest template dwelling consists of a single-page form that contains blanks for the subject property's legal description, zoning, size and the names and addresses of the applicant and any representatives plus signature lines, the decision is not supported by adequate findings. Krieger v. Wallowa County, 35 Or LUBA 305 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a city's decision adopts more restrictive land use regulations affecting residential lands, it must consider the impact of those regulations on unincorporated lands inside the UGB, if the city relies on such land to meet its identified housing needs. Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's failure to adopt findings specifically addressing a plan criterion is not error where the substance of the plan policy is addressed in the city's findings. Hannah v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA 1 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a sentence in a decision can be read to adopt an improperly narrow interpretation of a code, but when that sentence is read in context with the rest of the decision it is clear that the improper interpretation was not adopted, LUBA will assume the improper interpretation was not intended. Hannah v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an applicable approval criterion requires storm drainage plans that meet certain standards, the local government may not approve a land division without such storm drainage plans, or without finding that such plans are feasible and delegating the required evaluation to a sewerage agency. Sunningdale-Case Heights Assoc. v. Washington Co., 34 Or LUBA 549 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer interprets an approval criterion to require an explanation of resource practices on the property, the applicant may not rely on a lack of evidence of impacts on resource practices to establish that there will be no such adverse impacts. Parsley v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 540 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that were not adopted by the decision maker in support of the challenged decision provide no basis for reversal or remand, even if the findings are inadequate. Rouse v. Tillamook County, 34 Or LUBA 530 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where specific issues are raised concerning compliance with an approval criterion, the findings supporting the decision must respond to those issues. Rouse v. Tillamook County, 34 Or LUBA 530 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where local standards require that there be a "demonstrated public need" for a proposed subdivision of five-acre lots, letters from real estate agents describing the lack of listings for five-acre parcels do not "clearly support" a finding of demonstrated public need for the subdivision absent evidence relating the lack of listings to an identified need. Turrell v. Harney County, 34 Or LUBA 423 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that the applicant has testified that applicable criteria will be met are conclusory and inadequate because they fail to identify the review standards, set out the facts relied upon or explain how those facts led to the decision. Turrell v. Harney County, 34 Or LUBA 423 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where it is not apparent that provision of water to a rural subdivision merely constitutes attachment to an existing proximate water supply rather than an "extension" of the water system, which is prohibited by Goal 11, LUBA will remand the decision for Goal 11 findings. DeShazer v. Columbia County, 34 Or LUBA 416 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city's error in not including findings addressing certain conditions of preliminary subdivision and PUD plan approval provides no basis for reversal or remand where the parties identify evidence in the record that clearly shows compliance with the conditions. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner contends that findings are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, but fails to identify any particular criterion and only expresses disagreement with the city's evaluation of the evidence, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Kelley v. City of Cascade Locks, 34 Or LUBA 374 (1998).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When a challenged decision fails to incorporate a staff report or council minutes as findings, LUBA's review of the challenged decision for adequate findings is limited to the decision itself. Hackler v. City of Hermiston, 33 Or LUBA 755 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government decision appears to authorize a nonconforming use and additional dwelling without notice or findings to support those approvals, LUBA will remand the decision. DLCD v. Curry County, 33 Or LUBA 728 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although LUBA may interpret a local ordinance, it is not required to do so. Opp v. City of Portland, 33 Or LUBA 654 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. To comply with OAR 660-06-025(5)(a), a local government's findings must describe the farm or forest practices on adjacent and nearby forest lands, as well as explain why the proposed use does not significantly affect those practices. Findings that do not address all nearby lands and that simply refer to an adjacent property as a "woodlot" where a "small flock of sheep" is raised are inadequate. Donnelly v. Curry County, 33 Or LUBA 624 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where visual impact, noise and safety issues are relevant to compliance with applicable standards and are raised by petitioner below, the local government must adequately address those issues, and conclusory findings unsupported by substantial evidence are inadequate. Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 33 Or LUBA 613 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer's findings incorporate staff report findings that are inconsistent concerning one issue, LUBA will not remand the hearings officer's decision where it is clear that the hearings officer's findings superseded the staff report on that issue. Central Bethany Dev. Co. v. Washington County, 33 Or LUBA 463 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The county's findings of compliance with applicable criteria are inadequate where they do not identify the relevant approval standards, set out the facts relied upon, or explain how the facts lead to the conclusion that applicable standards are satisfied. Harcourt v. Marion County, 33 Or LUBA 400 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. There is no legal requirement that a local government address in its findings conflicting evidence upon which it chooses not to rely. Where a petitioner presents conflicting evidence to the city during a local appeal, but does not raise new issues, the city may rely on findings prepared prior to the local appeal. Tandem Development Corp. v. City of Hillsboro, 33 Or LUBA 335 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the city makes a determination that it is feasible to comply with a local code standard requiring that each lot in a proposed subdivision be buildable, it may defer addressing engineering details to a later date. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A hearings officer's finding that other residentially zoned property "may not be developable" does not factually justify the conclusion that "there are no non-agricultural lands" with priority for development. Alliance for Responsible Land Use v. Deschutes County, 33 Or LUBA 12 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A county's findings are inadequate where an applicable criterion for a zone change requires a finding that the need will be best served by changing the classification of the property in question as compared with other available property, and the county's findings do not provide any express comparison of the subject property to other available property. Alliance for Responsible Land Use v. Deschutes County, 33 Or LUBA 12 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The county's findings classifying livestock sales and shows as a "farm use" rather than as "stockyard and animal sales" are inadequate when the challenged decision does not relate the general findings to the property at issue, and therefore does not establish that the proposed use complies with the approval standards. Collins v. Klamath County, 32 Or LUBA 338 (1997).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Allegations that amount to no more than a disagreement with the local government's ultimate conclusion in its findings provide no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Richards-Kreitzberg v. Marion County, 32 Or LUBA 76 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings provide no basis for reversal or remand when they are not necessary to support an applicable criterion. Richards-Kreitzberg v. Marion County, 32 Or LUBA 76 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the county attempts to apply a rural residential zoning density in an irrevocably committed exception area, a conclusory finding that redesignation of the subject parcel will not cause adjacent resource lands to satisfy working paper guidelines for irrevocably committed exceptions does not substitute for the actual analysis required under OAR 660-04-018(2)(b)(B) regarding the potential commitment of adjacent resource lands to nonresource use. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings adopted by the county approving a committed exception to Goals 3 and 4 are inadequate where they contain no discussion or explanation of how the existing uses on adjacent parcels make resource use on the subject property impracticable. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The county's reliance on the existence of adjacent non-resource parcels in justifying a committed exception is impermissible under OAR 660-04-028(6)(c)(A) where the findings do not adequately establish how or when the adjacent parcels were created. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the county's findings regarding parcel size and ownership patterns on lands adjacent to a proposed exception area contain no reference to the analysis required by OAR 660-04-028(6)(c)(A), and do not suggest that the county is relying upon separate incorporated documents to provide that analysis, the county's incorporation of the entire application does not provide a sufficient reference to the specific documents relied upon by the county to satisfy the applicable criteria. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The county's findings fail to demonstrate that the proposed use requires the use of resource land, as required by OAR 660-04-020(2)(a), where the findings only indicate that the proposed racetrack requires (1) low density, (2) varied topography with dirt base, and (3) 15-to-17-acre minimum size. Middleton v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 423 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the county's findings regarding the alternative sites analysis required by OAR 660-04-020(2)(b) offer little or no support for the conclusions drawn, LUBA will remand the county's decision on that basis alone, and need not reach the substantial evidence challenges. Middleton v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 423 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When a city's final decision does not contain an interpretation of a comprehensive plan provision, LUBA need not remand for an interpretation, but may itself determine whether the city's decision is correct. Stewart v. City of Brookings, 31 LUBA 325 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings are inadequate when they rely on a consultant's summary conclusions which are not based on evidence in the record. Friends of Metolius v. Jefferson County, 31 Or LUBA 160 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a hearings officer's interpretation of an applicable code provision is inadequate for review because it omits necessary analytical steps, this Board may make the determination of whether the county's decision is correct. Miller v. Clackamas County, 31 Or LUBA 104 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local decision is subject to reversal, rather than remand, when the local government cannot demonstrate compliance with an applicable approval criterion. When a significant factual issue remains, the resolution of which could determine whether compliance is possible, the decision must be remanded. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 31 Or LUBA 90 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. County findings are inadequate when they fail to interpret an applicable local regulation, and fail to identify facts upon which the county relied in reaching its conclusions. LUBA will not overlook such inadequacies in the findings when no party cites evidence in the record that compels the interpretation and conclusion made by the county. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 31 Or LUBA 90 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In the absence of adequate findings, LUBA may affirm a local government's conclusion that a particular criterion is satisfied when facts in the record clearly support the conclusion. However, when there are no findings of compliance with a particular criterion, which was identified as applicable by the local staff and raised as an issue during the local proceedings, LUBA will not consider whether disputed facts could support findings of compliance. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 31 Or LUBA 90 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When the county relies on a 1979 conditional use permit to find that a proposed partition satisfies the county's approval criteria, the county must make affirmative findings that the conditional use permit is valid. Tognoli v. Crook County, 30 Or LUBA 272 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A 1B designation on the county's Goal 5 inventory means that inadequate information exists on the site to determine its nature and, therefore, a county cannot rely on a site being listed as a 1B site to conclude that aggregate uses are allowed outright. Tognoli v. Crook County, 30 Or LUBA 272 (1996).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local decision approving a replacement dwelling does not make specific findings regarding the applicability of a local ordinance establishing a legal access requirement, and does not indicate whether legal access is a mandatory approval standard, the decision must be remanded for appropriate findings. Drake v. Polk County, 30 Or LUBA 199 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. While ORS 197.835(9) requires LUBA to affirm a local government decision in the absence of adequate findings if the parties identify evidence that "clearly supports" the decision, "clearly supports" will be interpreted narrowly to mean "makes obvious" or "makes inevitable." Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although ORS 197.829(2) allows LUBA, in certain circumstances, to interpret a local ordinance to the extent necessary to determine whether a local land use decision is correct, it is still the local government's responsibility to interpret its own comprehensive plan and land use regulations in the first instance, and LUBA is not required to do so. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. ORS 197.835(9)(b) and 197.829(2) authorize LUBA to remedy minor oversights and imperfections in local government land use decisions, but do not permit or require LUBA to assume the responsibilities assigned to local governments, such as the weighing of evidence, the preparation of adequate findings and the interpretation of comprehensive plans and local land use regulations. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When a local ordinance requires a determination that its specific requirements can be satisfied by the imposition of conditions, the city must make findings, supported by substantial evidence, with respect to feasibility. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county code provision requires that a temporary mobile home be connected to an existing septic system "if feasible" and the county acknowledges the applicants have not applied for the authorization necessary to determine such feasibility, the county's findings are inadequate to establish compliance with the applicable code provision. Collier v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 462 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government's conclusion that required netting will have limited visual impacts on adjacent properties is unacceptably conclusory when unsupported by findings concerning how much netting is required or how high the netting must be. Moore v. Clackamas County, 29 Or LUBA 372 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Failure of local government findings to address a specific issue raised by a party below, which is relevant to compliance with applicable approval standards, is a basis for remand. Moore v. Clackamas County, 29 Or LUBA 372 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When the evidence in the record is conflicting, and the local government's findings fail to explain the basis for its conclusion or state which evidence it finds persuasive, LUBA must remand the decision for additional findings. Moore v. Clackamas County, 29 Or LUBA 372 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994), and J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 131 Or App 615, 887 P2d 360 (1994), findings in support of a condition requiring an applicant for site plan approval for a fast food restaurant to construct certain street and frontage improvements must compare traffic and other effects of development to required improvements. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner challenges the adequacy of one set of local government findings addressing a particular approval criterion for a comprehensive plan map change, but does not challenge a different set of local government findings also addressing the same criterion, petitioner's assignment of error will be denied. Mitchell v. City of Medford, 29 Or LUBA 158 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner seeks remand because the challenged decision fails to include findings on specific relevant issues raised in testimony below, petitioner must explain why the cited testimony is relevant to an applicable approval standard. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. The absence of findings in support of a legislative decision is not in itself a basis for reversal or remand. It is possible for respondents to defend against a challenge to a legislative decision through argument in their briefs and citations to plan provisions, code provisions and evidence in the record. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That the findings supporting the challenged decision are similar or identical to those adopted in a previous local government decision based on a different site plan does not, of itself, provide a basis for reversal or remand. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 28 Or LUBA 632 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. There is no statutory or administrative law requirement that all legislative decisions be supported by findings. However, where there is a local code provision requiring that findings be adopted in support of legislative decisions, the absence of such findings, or the adoption of purely conclusory findings, can provide a basis for reversal or remand. Foster v. Coos County, 28 Or LUBA 609 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts finding which, among other things, explain how a proposed road alignment will reduce traffic delay and congestion and thereby minimize air quality impacts as required by a plan policy, and petitioner merely cites testimony that the proposed alignment will increase trips and pollution but does not specifically challenge the local government's findings, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner alleges a realigned minor arterial will in fact operate as a major arterial, but fails to challenge the local government's findings explaining why it believes the realigned roadway is properly classified as a minor arterial, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA cannot determine which portions of a lower level local decision maker's decision are incorporated into the challenged governing body decision, the governing body's decision must be remanded. Ellis v. City of Bend, 28 Or LUBA 332 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a challenged permit decision is not supported by any findings, the decision must be remanded. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 274 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA is not required to remand a decision for a local government to interpret its comprehensive plan in the first instance unless petitioners offer some explanation for why they believe the plan provision the local government failed to address in its decision applies in the circumstances presented in the appeal. Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local governing body's findings are unclear with regard to whether the local government interprets the provisions of the local code's unstable slopes overlay district as applicable to approval of a subdivision preliminary plat, the challenged decision does not contain an interpretation adequate for review and must be remanded. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 28 Or LUBA 263 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where respondent contends the findings challenged by petitioner are not critical to the appealed decision, and petitioner identifies no approval standards to which the challenged findings are relevant, the challenged findings, even if defective, provide no basis for reversal or remand. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings need not be perfect, and conditions may be imposed to assure compliance with approval standards. However, LUBA must be able to determine from the findings, conditions and evidence in the record that the relevant approval standards are met. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts a number of different findings addressing a code standard requiring protection of the visual character of the area, and petitioners challenge some but not all of those findings, but make no attempt to explain why the findings taken as a whole are inadequate, petitioners provide no basis for reversal or remand. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioners challenge planning commission findings addressing a standard requiring that the proposed use not force a significant change in farm or forest practices on adjoining lands, but do not challenge findings adopted by the county court which go beyond the planning commission findings, petitioners fail to provide a basis for reversal or remand. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government decision identifies a number of comprehensive plan provisions as approval standards for a request to cut trees, it may not approve the request without adopting findings demonstrating that the application complies with the identified plan policies. Gettman v. City of Bay City, 28 Or LUBA 116 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where one of the local government's critical findings depends on the scope of the term "houseboat," and the term is not defined in the local code or in the challenged decision, the decision must be remanded for the local government to supply the needed explanation of the scope of the term. Cole v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 62 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Even if a local code provision requiring that six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision be dedicated for open space is properly interpreted as a minimum rather than a maximum requirement, a decision requiring dedication of much more than six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision must be remanded so that the local government may adopt findings explaining that interpretation and showing the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard is satisfied. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That a legislative land use decision is not supported by findings is not, in itself, a basis for reversal or remand, because no applicable legal standard requires that all legislative land use decisions be supported by findings. Redland/Viola/Fischer's Mill CPO v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 560 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. If the local government interpretation of an applicable comprehensive plan provision expressed in a challenged decision is unclear, such that LUBA cannot determine whether the findings supporting the decision are adequate to demonstrate compliance with that plan provision, LUBA will remand the decision to the local government to clarify its interpretation. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 546 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Arguments that approval of a fill permit violates local code provisions on fill in drainageways provide no basis for reversal or remand where (1) the local government adopted findings that the disputed fill was not placed in a drainageway, (2) those findings are supported by substantial evidence, and (3) petitioner does not specifically challenge the findings. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 480 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner fails to challenge a local governments' findings that fill is not located in a drainageway or floodway and that the fill will not endanger adjoining properties, as required by local code and plan standards governing fill, but rather expresses disagreement with the local government based in part on evidence not the record, petitioner's challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 480 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the local code's definition of "northern lot line" is ambiguous and recognizes there can be more than one northern lot line on any given piece of property, and the challenged decision determining compliance with solar access setback requirements simply contains a conclusory statement that a flag lot has only one northern lot line, LUBA will remand the decision for adoption of interpretive findings. Sullivan v. City of Ashland, 27 Or LUBA 411 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. If local government findings addressing different approval standards conflict with each other, and this conflict is not reconciled in the challenged decision, the conflict may undermine the findings sufficiently to render them inadequate to support the local government's determinations of compliance. Doob v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 293 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government fails to adopt findings identifying and applying applicable criteria, it is not possible for LUBA to perform its review function. Laine v. City of Rockaway Beach, 26 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A petitioner's assignment of error will be rejected where it simply alleges code violations, without supplying any supporting argument, or alleges inconsistent findings and lack of substantial evidence, without identifying the challenged findings. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Petitioner's argument that the county failed to address evidence that escaped dogs can cause great damage in rural areas provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the county found the proposed kennel will comply with a code standard requiring no significant increase in the cost of accepted farm and forest practices because the design of the kennel will result in no dogs escaping from the facility. Larry Kelly Farms, Inc. v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 401 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a comprehensive plan contains no existing inventory of significant aggregate resource sites and imposes different standards for plan amendments, depending on whether the amendment is a plan text or a plan map amendment, the local government must explain in its decision its rationale in processing and approving a request to amend the plan to designate a site as a significant aggregate resource site as a plan text amendment. Nathan v. City of Turner, 26 Or LUBA 382 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner lists a number of apparently relevant comprehensive plan policies and argues the local government erred by not addressing the policies in its decision, petitioner's argument is sufficiently developed for LUBA review, and the decision must be remanded so that the local government can address those policies in its findings. Waugh v. Coos County, 26 Or LUBA 300 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision refers to a staff report and the applicant's proposed findings and explicitly incorporates those documents by reference, and those documents are attached as exhibits to the decision, the decision adequately adopts those documents as findings in support of the decision. Lucier v. City of Medford, 26 Or LUBA 213 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Although the small size of a property may limit the size and impacts of a proposed development, and therefore provide a basis for explanatory findings demonstrating compliance with approval standards limiting development impacts, the decision approving such development may not simply cite the small size of the property and conclude the standards are met. Lucier v. City of Medford, 26 Or LUBA 213 (1994).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision does not identify the characteristics of a proposed "soil remediation" use, or compare those characteristics with those of the listed, permitted uses in the applicable zone, the findings are inadequate to demonstrate the proposed "soil remediation" use is similar to the listed, permitted uses in the applicable zone. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision fails to explain whether an arguably relevant comprehensive plan provision imposes limitations on the kinds of uses allowed in the applicable zone, LUBA must remand the decision for such an interpretation. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioners raised an issue below concerning whether a particular code provision is an applicable approval standard, and the challenged decision contains no interpretation explaining that code provision is either inapplicable or satisfied, LUBA must remand the challenged decision. Hixson v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 159 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioners contend the local government failed to adopt findings addressing standards that appear to be relevant to the challenged decision, and the challenged decision includes only a conclusory statement that applicants have adequately demonstrated compliance with such standards, LUBA will remand the decision for lack of adequate findings. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 26 OR LUBA 139 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision applies some design review standards to an application for conditional use permit approval, but fails to explain why other apparently applicable design review standards are inapplicable to the conditional use permit stage, the challenged decision must be remanded for the local government to adopt findings addressing the applicability of these other design review standards. Moore v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 40 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the local code requires that a proposed driving range not alter the character of the surrounding area "in a manner which substantially limits, impairs or precludes the use of surrounding properties" for listed permitted uses, and findings acknowledge safety as a relevant consideration but simply rely upon the striking areas being more than 300 yards from adjacent properties to satisfy that safety consideration, the findings are inadequate to explain how the code standard is satisfied. Moore v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 40 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a challenged decision states certain findings supersede other inconsistent findings, a general challenge that findings adopted to support the decision are internally inconsistent provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner fails to explain why the findings are inadequate to establish consistency with particular approval criteria or explain why alleged inconsistencies are not resolved by the designated superseding findings. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An erroneous finding that the local government cannot impose a condition of subdivision approval requiring measures to mitigate off-site traffic impacts, provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the local government adopts superseding findings explaining why it believes such measures are not warranted and the local government's authority to require such measures is permissive rather than mandatory. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a challenged decision grants subdivision approval, petitioner's challenge to a finding that the property is located in two residential zones provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner makes no attempt to explain why the zoning of the property is critical to the decision and both zones impose the same minimum lot area. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county code provision requires that there be no other "feasible location" for a proposed use, county findings that do not explain why identified alternative sites are not "feasible locations" for the proposed use are impermissibly conclusory, and LUBA will remand the challenged decision unless "the parties identify relevant evidence in the record which clearly supports" the county's decision in this regard. Simmons v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 647 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings supporting approval of a PUD that determine there are solutions available to various landslide, drainage and related problems affecting the subject property, and that those solutions are possible, likely and reasonably certain to succeed, are adequate to establish that the local government did not improperly defer compliance with relevant PUD standards. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 601 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision lacks adequate findings of compliance with a relevant approval standard, LUBA will not reverse or remand if the parties cite evidence in the record that "clearly supports" a determination of compliance with the standard. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioner cites an apparently applicable standard, and respondents do not cite any findings of compliance with that standard, LUBA will remand the decision for the local government to adopt findings of compliance with the standard or an explanation of why the standard is inapplicable. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In denying a request for permit approval, ORS 215.416(9) requires that a county provide an explanation of why the county believes the request fails to satisfy applicable standards. Where the required explanation is missing, LUBA will remand the decision. Ball and Associates v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 525 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a subdivision approval standard simply requires connection with a storm drainage system, and there is no allegation that the subdivision cannot be connected to a storm drainage system, allegations that the challenged decision fails to find the storm drainage system will be adequate to handle storm water provide no basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That a challenged decision granting subdivision approval fails to demonstrate feasibility of compliance with an approval condition requiring that a subdivision street provide "no worse" access to an adjoining property than is currently provided to that adjoining property provides no basis for reversal or remand, where assuring "no worse" access is not required by any applicable approval standard. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Under ORS 215.448(1)(c), home occupations must be operated in dwellings or other buildings normally associated with uses permitted in the applicable zone. Where the county adopts no findings addressing this requirement, the decision must be remanded for findings of compliance with the requirement. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA may not interpret a local government's comprehensive plan in the first instance, rather the local government must interpret its own plan, and LUBA may review that interpretation. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 25 Or LUBA 367 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. No statute or appellate court case requires that all legislative land use decisions be supported by findings. Absent allegations by petitioner that a legislative decision violates particular legal standards, a local government's failure to adopt findings in support of that legislative decision addressing the statewide planning goals and local comprehensive plan is not, of itself, a basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Oregon City Leasing, Inc. v. Columbia County, 25 Or LUBA 129 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where findings state facts relevant to whether a proposed nonfarm use will interfere with accepted farming practices, but do not identify the types of farming occurring in the area, and those findings are challenged as inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, LUBA will sustain the challenge in the absence of any attempt by respondents to defend the findings or identify evidence supporting the findings. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a decision recites facts that might provide a basis for explaining why a proposed nonfarm use will not materially alter the land use pattern of the area, but the findings do not identify the relevant area, examine uses existing in the area, or explain why the proposed use will not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern of the area, the findings are inadequate. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that a parcel lacks water rights and does not produce sufficient forage for livestock without supplemental feed are inadequate to demonstrate the parcel is generally unsuitable land for agricultural production, where the parcel is large, has two active springs and is currently leased for grazing. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county approves a 120 unit PUD on rural land, but fails to address plan policies limiting the provision of urban public services on rural land, a remand is required so that the county may adopt findings explaining why these standards are not violated by the proposed PUD. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. When a party raises a relevant issue below concerning whether a perceived surplus of classroom seats is in fact not a surplus due to the effects of already approved development, the local government must address that issue in its findings. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 25 Or LUBA 43 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where unchallenged findings adopted by a local government are sufficient to demonstrate that an applicable approval standard is not met, petitioner's challenge to other findings of nonconformance with that approval standard provide no basis for reversal or remand. Lardy v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 567 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Allegations that amount to no more than a disagreement with the ultimate conclusion reached by the local government in its findings, provide no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 24 Or LUBA 540 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings that a proposed comprehensive plan map designation will offer more protection for resources identified in certain comprehensive plan policies than the existing plan map designation are adequate to support the change in plan designation, absent some explanation of why those findings are inadequate. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged findings are not necessary to the decision and do not purport to be binding on future proceedings, they provide no basis for reversal or remand. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government fails to adopt any findings addressing apparently applicable statewide planning goal, administrative rule and comprehensive plan criteria, the local government may not avoid a remand by arguing petitioner failed to preserve its ability to raise the issue of compliance with those provisions by not raising the issue with sufficient specificity during the local proceedings. In such circumstances, it is the failure to adopt findings that necessitates remand. ODOT v. City of Waldport, 24 Or LUBA 344 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That there are no findings establishing that the local government independently verified the evidence submitted by an applicant provides no basis for reversal or remand of the local government's decision. Giesy v. Benton County, 24 Or LUBA 328 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will not consider a challenge to the adequacy of or evidentiary support for particular findings supporting a land use decision, where petitioner fails to include sufficient argument explaining why those findings are critical to the challenged decision. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner alleges a zoning map amendment violates plan policies and an LCDC administrative rule, a local government is obligated to adopt findings explaining either why the plan policies and rule do not apply to the disputed zone change or why the zone change is consistent with the plan policies and rule. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a decision maker does not clearly identify in its decision the portions of a document that it adopts by reference as findings, it runs a risk that LUBA will not be able to identify and review any portion of such document as findings of the decision maker. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 98 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government's determination of compliance with a code standard requiring that adequate water service be provided to a proposed development is based entirely on the use of surface water, whether there are sufficient findings and evidence to demonstrate the adequacy of ground water to serve the proposed resort does not provide a basis for reversal or remand of the local government's decision. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts findings specifically addressing an approval standard, petitioners may not fail to challenge the adequacy of the local government's findings, or their evidentiary support, and simply allege reasons why they believe the standard might be violated. Mercer v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 608 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Inadequate findings concerning one of the bases for denying a permit application provide no basis for reversal or remand where there are other adequate findings of noncompliance with applicable approval standards. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government commits no error by failing to adopt findings addressing the impacts of a comprehensive plan transportation map amendment on an inventoried Goal 5 resource site, where the record shows the resource site is located outside the area affected by the challenged plan transportation map amendment. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 23 Or LUBA 565 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. City decisions granting preliminary and final subdivision plat approvals which are not supported by findings which identify the relevant approval standards and explain why those standards are met must be remanded for adoption of the required findings. ORS 227.173(2). Warren v. City of Aurora, 23 Or LUBA 507 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A challenged land use decision must contain findings addressing the applicable approval standards. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 515 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government neither adopts findings demonstrating compliance with a permit approval standard, nor finds it is feasible to comply with that standard, but instead defers the required determination of compliance with that standard to a later stage of the approval process where only the applicant has a right to notice and to participation and to appeal the decision, the decision must be remanded. Rhyne v. Multnomah County, 23 Or LUBA 442 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government adopts findings expressing alternative bases for concluding a particular approval criterion is met, and petitioner challenges only the findings addressing one of the bases, the assignment of error will be denied. Avgeris v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 124 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner challenges a decision approving a nonforest dwelling on the basis of past bug infestations, but makes no attempt to demonstrate any connection between the proposed dwelling and the likelihood of additional bug infestations, and the local government adopted unchallenged findings that the dwelling would reduce the likelihood of such infestation, petitioner's challenge will be rejected. Camp v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 6 (1992).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings which are not essential to the challenged decision, even if erroneous in some way, do not provide a basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Marson v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 497 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. That a finding is impermissibly conclusory, or is without evidentiary support in the record, is a basis for reversal or remand only if that finding is essential to the challenged decision. Therefore, where petitioners challenge the adequacy of or evidentiary support for a specific finding, they must also explain why that finding is essential to demonstrating compliance with an applicable approval standard. Brandt v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 473 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a county's findings in support of a decision approving a division of an EFU-zoned farm parcel into two farm parcels fail to distinguish between commercial and noncommercial agricultural enterprises in the area, the decision must be remanded. Still v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 331 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government fails to adopt findings explaining why an amendment to its acknowledged comprehensive plan complies with the statewide planning goals, LUBA relies on respondents to provide argument and citations to the record in response to a petitioner's allegations concerning goal violations. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 307 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where there is no applicable standard requiring a demonstration that there is a need for the proposed use, that findings stating there is a need for the proposed use are inadequate or not supported by substantial evidence provides no basis for reversal or remand. Murray v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 247 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision includes findings which appear sufficient to meet an applicable approval criterion, and petitioners offer no explanation of why the findings are inadequate, petitioners provide no basis for reversing or remanding the decision. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where findings are inadequate to allow review of a local government's decision, LUBA will remand the decision. Seger v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 162 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. While LUBA does not reverse or remand on the basis of inadequate findings if the local government cites evidence in the record to "clearly support" the challenged decision, where the evidence in the record is conflicting, such evidence does not "clearly support" the challenged decision. Cummins v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 129 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In amending its urban renewal plan, a city is not required to adopt a financial analysis for an unsubsidized headquarters hotel or find that an unsubsidized headquarters hotel is financially feasible under ORS 457.085(3)(g) and 457.095(6) where (1) the original urban renewal plan included a subsidized headquarters hotel as an authorized project, and (2) the amendment to the urban renewal plan does not presently withdraw authorization for a public subsidy for the headquarters hotel. Holladay Investors, Ltd. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 90 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA does not reverse or remand a decision on the basis of inadequate findings where the parties cite evidence in the record which clearly supports the decision. Kirkpatrick v. Jackson County, 22 Or LUBA 3 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where the challenged decision incorrectly states that certain issues are not relevant to the applicable approval criteria, but also includes findings addressing those issues, there is no basis for reversal or remand of the decision unless petitioners establish that the findings are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with the applicable approval standards. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An incorrect finding does not provide a basis for reversal or remand where there is no indication in the challenged decision that the decision maker relied on the incorrect finding in determining compliance with applicable approval criteria. Reynolds v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 412 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where petitioners provide no explanation of why detailed findings addressing particular approval standards are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with those standards, LUBA will not sustain petitioner's assignment of error. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local code standard provides blocks may not exceed 1,000 feet unless topography or location of adjoining streets justifies an exception, and an issue is raised during the local proceedings concerning a proposed block in excess of 1,000 feet, the local government must adopt findings explaining why a block in excess of 1,000 feet is justified. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government finds that otherwise applicable street width standards need not be satisfied in a proposed subdivision under a local code provision allowing narrower roads where consistent with "a plan for the neighborhood," and petitioners do not challenge that finding, petitioners' arguments that the subdivision violates street width requirements must be rejected. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Challenges to findings that are not necessary to show compliance with applicable approval standards provide no basis for reversal or remand. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where LUBA upholds one or more bases for a county's decision denying a request for land use approval, findings concerning an additional basis for denying approval provide no basis for reversal or remand, even if such findings are erroneous. Carsey v. Deschutes County, 21 Or LUBA 118 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a local government's findings are inadequate to establish that a proposed homeless shelter will not provide "care," but the record contains evidence which clearly supports such a determination, LUBA will affirm the local government's determination. Smith v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 111 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. An assignment of error which simply alleges that findings addressing approval standards are conclusory will be rejected, even though some of the challenged findings are conclusory, if other findings addressing the approval standards are not conclusory and petitioner provides no additional argument in support of his allegations. Wethers v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 78 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a necessary finding is technically defective in that it does not identify the facts upon which the decision relies, but the respondent identifies evidence in the record "which clearly supports" the decision, the defective finding provides no basis for reversal or remand. ORS 197.835(9)(b). Wethers v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 78 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a petitioner alleges a local government failed to address specific plan policies in approving plan and zone map amendments, and the local government neither identifies findings addressing those plan policies nor claims the cited plan policies are inapplicable, the decision must be remanded so the local government can adopt findings explaining why its decision is consistent with the plan policies. Wethers v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 78 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Findings addressing land use standards may or may not be required to support a legislative land use decision. However, the absence of such findings has no bearing on whether a decision actually is a land use decision. Jentzsch v. City of Sherwood, 20 Or LUBA 575 (1991).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. If findings in support of a denial of quasi-judicial land use approval adequately explain a sufficient basis for denial, they will be upheld. Forest Park Estate v. Multnomah County, 20 Or LUBA 319 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Allegations regarding the adequacy of the local government's findings to establish compliance with a particular comprehensive plan policy provide no basis for reversal or remand of the local government's decision if that policy is not an approval standard. Thormahlen v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 218 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where a challenged finding is conclusory and inadequate, but clearly relies on the preceding finding which is much more detailed, and petitioner does not challenge the preceding finding, the inadequacy of the challenged finding itself provides no basis for reversal or remand. Keudell v. Union County, 19 Or LUBA 394 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. LUBA will only reverse or remand a challenged decision on the basis of inadequate findings if the findings are necessary to the decision. Lowrie v. Polk County, 19 Or LUBA 363 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where respondent does not cite evidence in the record in support of its contention that there is evidence in the record which clearly supports the findings it failed to make, LUBA cannot deny a challenge to the adequacy of the findings on the basis of ORS 187.835(9)(b). Chambers v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. In addition to demonstrating that a challenged finding is inadequate or unsupported by substantial evidence, a petitioner must demonstrate the challenged finding is necessary to support the challenged decision. Griffith v. City of Milwaukie, 19 Or LUBA 300 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A challenge to the adequacy of and evidentiary support for a finding that a modification of a previously imposed condition of land use approval is justified based on changed circumstances provides no basis for reversal or remand, where none of the applicable criteria require that modifications of conditions of approval be based on changed circumstances. Griffith v. City of Milwaukie, 19 Or LUBA 300 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A city decision to require, as a condition of approval, dedication of a right-of-way to improve street system efficiency and to provide future access to interior developable parcels is supported by adequate findings and substantial evidence in the record where the city's findings and the evidentiary record are sufficient to show a legitimate planning purpose is furthered by requiring the right-of-way dedication. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an existing plaza fully satisfies a code requirement for at least one plaza in excess of five percent of the area of the block, no "adjustment" was required to grant a requested development approval which includes a plaza of less than five percent of the block's area. Because no "adjustment" was required, even if the findings explaining the justification for the "adjustment" are inadequate, they provide no basis for remand. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. Where an ordinance provision requires that a proposed conditional use be consistent with the comprehensive plan, and petitioners contend an apparently relevant plan provision was not addressed, the county must identify findings establishing, or evidence "clearly supporting," a determination that either (1) the plan provision does not apply, or (2) the proposed conditional use is consistent with the plan provision. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 18 Or LUBA 820 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. OAR 660-04-020(2)(a) requires that the amount of land included in a goal exception be justified. Where a county's findings make no attempt to justify the number of acres included in an exception for a landfill, the county's decision must be remanded so that findings justifying the amount of acreage included in the exception can be adopted. Dyke v. Clatsop County, 18 Or LUBA 787 (1990).

28.8.6 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Inadequate Findings. A local government is not required to explain in its findings why it chose not to rely on certain evidence, as long as LUBA can conclude a reasonable decision maker could decide as the local government did, in view of all the evidence in the record. Douglas v. Multnomah County, 18 Or LUBA 607 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A county's conclusion that a pesticide or herbicide label requires no setback from recreational areas, and, therefore, that approving a recreational area on EFU land will not force a significant change in accepted farm practices on surrounding lands devoted to farm use for purposes of the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1), is not supported by substantial evidence where farmers and the Oregon Department of Agriculture interpret the label as requiring a setback that could preclude application of the herbicide in significant portions of farmland adjacent to the proposed recreational area and where there is no expert testimony supporting the county's interpretation. Schrepel v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 895 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to be on-site during events to assist with general coordination, parking, and other activities, and where conditions of approval make the applicant responsible for operational matters such as maintaining the event calendar to comply with limits on the number of events as well as monitoring noise and sign removal, substantial evidence exists to support a conclusion that the applicant will "operate[]" the home occupation, within the meaning of ORS 215.448(1)(a), even where they plan to have no full-time employees and to allow customers to hire their own contractors, as necessary. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU explains how events can be conducted with no more than five employees on-site at one time by scheduling activities, preparing food off-site, utilizing buffet-style service, and planning and making arrangements in advance, and where a condition of approval limits the home occupation to no more than five employees on-site, substantial evidence exists to support a conclusion that the applicant will "employ on site no more than five full-time or part-time persons," within the meaning of ORS 215.448(1)(b), even given the complex planning and implementation that a 300-guest wedding entails. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to renovate an existing barn by adding restrooms and "Brides and Grooms rooms" and by eliminating horse stalls, substantial evidence does not exist to support a conclusion that the renovated barn would "otherwise be allowed in the zone," for purposes of ORS 215.448(3). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to construct a new, free-standing restroom building with septic system capacity to serve 300 people per event, substantial evidence does not exist to support a conclusion that the new restroom building would be accessory to or customarily associated with an existing dwelling on EFU land. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. An affidavit of the owner of the subject property stating that a particular structure is removable does not establish, as a matter of law, that the structure is removable where photographs depict the structure as being located on the subject property during the rainy season over many years. Armstrong v. Jackson County, 81 Or LUBA 651 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Findings concluding that an aggregate quarry would be compatible with an adjacent grazing operation and periodic logging are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence without an explanation of the manner in which the grazing operation is run—for example, whether it is seasonal or includes accessory activities such as breeding or calving—and the nature of the periodic logging. Currie v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 602 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Findings concluding that an aggregate quarry satisfies the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence where the county identifies grazing as the only surrounding farm or forest use but does not verify that the grazing operation is in fact limited to grazing, without other uses such as breeding, or establish that logging on the grazing property, government ownership of surrounding forest lands, or maintaining of surrounding forest land as a timber investment do not involve protected forest activity. Currie v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 602 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code provision requires that a "declaration of anticipated noise levels" be attached to certain land use approvals and that applicants incorporate noise abatement strategies where noise levels are anticipated to exceed a certain threshold, the word "declaration" anticipates more than a statement from the applicant's attorney, without supporting documents or studies, and a reasonable person would not rely on such statements alone to conclude that the noise threshold is not exceeded. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code provision prohibits development, including fill, in certain special flood hazard areas unless the cumulative effect of the development, when combined with all other existing and anticipated development, will not increase the base flood elevation (BFE) more than one foot, a reasonable person would not rely on a letter from a professional engineer, which provides that the "minimal amounts of fill placed below the BFE" would have no measurable effect on the BFE, to conclude that the provision is satisfied, where the letter does not quantify the amount of fill associated with the development or address the cumulative effects of all other existing and anticipated development. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A reasonable person would rely on an applicant's testimony regarding their activities managing a farm and their status as the state license holder for an industrial hemp-growing operation to conclude that the applicant is a farm operator and continues to play the "predominant role" in management and farm use of the farm, for purposes of OAR 660-033-0130(9)(a), even where they have hired another company to prepare the farmland for planting hemp seed and to provide consultation regarding hemp growing. Wachal v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 561 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the applicable law does not expressly require expert testimony to establish compliance, while a reasonable decision-maker might not be able to rely on lay testimony where the record contains contrary expert testimony, a reasonable decision-maker might be able to rely on lay testimony where the record contains no contrary expert testimony. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 400 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code provision implementing OAR 660-006-0029 requires the decision-maker "to identify the building site" for a forest template dwelling by "weigh[ing] together" (1) the requirement to minimize the amount of forest lands used and (2) fire-safety development design standards, written testimony previously submitted in a different land use proceeding by lay individuals with personal knowledge that suggests that serious slope issues have prevented improving one alternative access route because of inability or expense of meeting local road design standards is substantial evidence that improving that alternative access route is impracticable where no contrary evidence is introduced into the record in the current proceeding. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 400 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Findings and argument that forest uses are "impractical" on the subject property due to existing development and due to fire buffers that would be required along some of the property's borders and around some of the existing development do not demonstrate that the property is "physically developed to the extent that it is no longer available" for forest uses, as required by ORS 197.732(2)(a) and OAR 660-004-0025(1) for a physically developed exception to Goal 4, and such a conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence where at least 87 percent of the property's area is available for forestry and where the applicant does not attempt to quantify the amount of buffer that would be required to conduct forest uses or the amount by which that buffer would decrease the property available for forest uses. Dooley v. Wasco County, 81 Or LUBA 44 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A negative claim can be proved by negative evidence—that is, evidence that suggests that something is missing—where adequate research or observations have been made so that the negative evidence is evidence upon which a reasonable person would rely. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Evidence of absence (e.g., the record contains affirmative observations that something is missing) may be substantial evidence, but the absence of evidence (e.g., the record contains no evidence that something is not missing) may not. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the record contains evidence that the fire safety measures required for a proposed solar facility exceed those required for an existing Christmas tree farm and extensive observations of fires involving solar panels but no evidence of incidents of injury to fire suppression personnel from electrified solar panels, a conclusion that the solar facility will not "significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) is supported by substantial evidence, even though electrical equipment is present on a solar facility and not present on a Christmas tree farm. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a decision-maker relies on 40-foot contour maps in the record, sourced from county data, to determine the slopes on the subject property, an argument that the decision-maker erred by disregarding finer-scale, two-foot contour maps that petitioners submitted provides no basis for reversal or remand where the decision-maker reasoned that petitioners' contour maps were "not reliable, accurate or trustworthy evidence" because they were not signed by a registered professional surveyor and because they contained an incorrect scale, and where the petitioners have not otherwise established that credible evidence weighs overwhelmingly in favor of their description of the slopes on the subject property or that the evidence upon which the decision-maker did rely was not substantial evidence. Velasquez v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 1 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local government adopts a post-acknowledgment plan amendment creating a new zone that allows 20-acre lots, an argument that DEQ rules indicate that properties of 10 or more acres in size are generally able to support on-site wastewater systems is not sufficient to establish compliance with Goal 11 with respect to wastewater where those rules appear for the first time in the response brief, where there are no findings or evidence in the record addressing wastewater, and where there is no evidence in the record that the rule is accurate within the portion of the local government's jurisdiction at issue. Similarly, references to the proximity of the majority of candidate lands to fire districts, to evidence that more demand for funds would not be created in one of the districts, to 10 years of data indicating that less than two percent of fires resulted from residential structures, and to local fire protection standards with which future development would be required to comply are not sufficient to establish compliance with Goal 11 with respect to fire protection where there is no analysis of the likelihood of increased fire as more residences are potentially introduced into the area or discussion of the capacity of the existing fire service organizations to provide more service. DLCD v. Douglas County, 80 Or LUBA 98 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a neighbor describes observing, from their living room view, minimal orchard, meadow, and garden-related activity on the property and, other than horses belonging to some of the owners of the property, never seeing any livestock or other animals on the property between 1970 and 2004, and where the neighbor subsequently reiterates that there was no farm use, such as cattle or crops, between 1978 and 1983 and that, during the 1980s, owners of the property kept their show horses on the property, a local government may reasonably conclude that the property was "not managed for three of the five calendar years preceding January 1, 1983, as part of a farm operation that produced $20,000 or more in annual gross income" for purposes of former ORS 197.247(1)(a) (1991), even where the record includes (1) aerial photos from 1979 and 1982, (2) a 1979 permit for a new barn, (3) a 1987 farm dwelling approval, and (4) testimony from other area residents contradicting the neighbor's testimony, where the record does not disclose the proximity of the other area residents' properties to the subject property or whether those area residents had made firsthand observations of the subject property during the relevant statutory period. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. For purposes of designating marginal lands under former ORS 197.247 (1991), it is not enough for an applicant to provide a list of the allegedly qualifying lots or parcels; the applicant must provide foundational evidence that the lots or parcels are lawful and that lots or parcels that were in common ownership on July 1, 1983, are not overcounted. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. An attorney-land-use-consultant-prepared ESEE analysis including numerous plans, reports, and other documents supporting the redesignation and rezoning of protected habitat from forest land to marginal land under former ORS 197.247 (1991) is not sufficient to rebut expert testimony including (1) a letter authored by an ODFW biologist that generally discusses the cumulative impact of development on habitat and (2) general ODFW guidance related to levels of residential density in areas of peripheral big game habitat absent evidence of the attorney land use consultant's expertise. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In the context of an application to remove property from a county's Goal 5 inventory of significant aggregate resources, where the county has previously determined, in two separate final, acknowledged decisions—one based on area-specific soils mapping and the other based on periodic review which resulted in an updated inventory—that the property should not be included on the county's Goal 3 inventory of agricultural lands; where the county zoned the property for surface mining, a zone that does not implement Goal 3, after one of those previous determinations; and where the ESEE analysis for the property does not specify a post-mining zoning designation or use, a conclusion that the property is not agricultural land is supported by substantial evidence. The county, having previously determined that the property is not agricultural land, is not required to revisit whether the property is agricultural land. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 252 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In the context of an application to change the comprehensive plan designation of property to Rural Residential Exception Area, where a comprehensive plan provision provides that "any new Rural Residential Exception Areas need to be justified through initiating a non-resource plan amendment and zone change by demonstrating that the property does not meet the definition of agricultural * * * land," a county correctly determines that an applicant satisfies that provision by producing copies of the county's adopted and acknowledged agricultural lands inventories, which do not include the property. Even where an opponent submits an NRCS soils map into the record, which the opponent argues shows the property's soils constitute agricultural lands, where the NRCS website that the opponent used to prepare the soils map includes a disclaimer regarding the large scale of mapping, stating that "[e]nlargement of maps beyond the scale of mapping can cause misunderstanding of the detail of mapping and accuracy of soil line placement," a reasonable decision-maker would rely on the inventories to conclude that the property is not agricultural land, and a reasonable decision-maker could determine that the NRCS soils map is less credible than the inventories. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 252 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a city bureau manages the city's transportation system, including private uses in the city right-of-way, and where bureau staff have special expertise in the safe and efficient use of the right-of-way and various demands on streets, including traffic, parking, and loading, statements from the bureau (1) that studio apartments have lower turnover rates, less need for unloading large furniture, and, thus, less need for a loading space, and (2) that signed, infrequent on-street loading will not have a negative effect on the traffic safety or other transportation functions of the abutting right-of-way are evidence that would permit a reasonable person to find that an on-street loading space is adequate for a proposed studio apartment building's loading needs such that the development continues to meet the intended purpose of, and, therefore, qualifies for an adjustment to, an off-street loading space requirement, even where there is testimony in the record from an opponent of the development regarding anticipated negative congestion and safety impacts of off-street loading. NDNA v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 269 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a city within Metro's jurisdiction adopts its portion of an intergovernmental concept plan into its comprehensive plan and applies an industrial zoning designation to a portion of the planning area with slopes greater than 10 percent, that Metro's previous decision to include the planning area in its UGB stated that land needed for industrial uses should generally have slopes of less than 10 percent and that a previous Metro housing need projection anticipated almost 600 more housing units than the industrial zoning designation would allow provide no basis for reversal or remand where Metro's previous UGB decision is not evidence, an applicable approval criterion, or a relevant consideration for the city in determining the correct zoning designation for the property and where Metro's previous housing need projection has been superseded by a later decision to remove the property from its inventory of buildable residential lands. Watts v. City of Tualatin, 80 Or LUBA 339 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an approved site plan indicates that a replacement dwelling will be sited on an adjacent property, but where the building permit for the replacement dwelling allows a replacement dwelling "in the same footprint as the original home," and where an ArcGIS map marked with distances and existing development indicate that the footprint of the original dwelling was located on the subject property, a conclusion that the subject property does not "include[] a dwelling" for purposes of forest template dwelling approval under ORS 215.750(4)(d) is not supported by substantial evidence. Bielefeld v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 480 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will not second-guess a decision-maker's choice between conflicting evidence, including expert testimony, so long as a reasonable person could decide as the decision-maker did. Fairmount Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 551 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit (CUP) requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," a local government decision granting a CUP is not supported by substantial evidence where it does not identify and describe all of the existing and permitted uses on adjacent properties and where it fails to analyze or measure the extent of the potential impacts of the proposed use and instead proceeds straight to mitigation measures. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Noncompliance with Applicable Law. A county fails to correctly apply the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) where it concludes that there are only a few farm or forest uses in the area but does not identify and discuss each farm or forest use, where it does not describe the operations on each of the surrounding properties devoted to farm or forest use, where it does not identify evidence of the unmitigated impacts of the proposed nonfarm use, and where it concludes that such impacts will be reduced but does not identify evidence that significant impacts are avoided. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a county's comprehensive plan policy provides that "areas" may be designated rural commercial when the areas (1) have a "historical commitment" to commercial uses, or (2) the "areas" are "located within an Unincorporated Community" and have "direct access to a road of at least collector classification," petitioner has not demonstrated that the county commissioners' findings regarding the meaning of "area" are inadequate or that the county's reliance on a previous interpretation as authority for interpreting the term "areas" as used in rezoning criteria to refer only to the property being considered for rezoning, and not also to include the surrounding area, was in error where petitioner cites to no contextual differences suggesting that the term "areas" should be interpreted differently than the same term used in similar rezoning standards, or authority suggesting the county has an obligation to adopt specific findings regarding the parties' alternative interpretations. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will uphold a county's interpretation of its own comprehensive plan policy regarding when a property may be designated rural commercial where the county evaluated the historic uses of the subject property and concluded that those uses did not demonstrate a "historical commitment to commercial uses," after concluding that (1) temporary commercial uses, (2) incidental or accessory commercial uses to permitted residential or farm uses on the property, and (3) the current unlawful commercial uses on the property were not sufficient to demonstrate

"historical commitment" of the property to commercial use, where the county chose to focus on "commitment" which the county understood to require an inquiry into the nature of the historic uses on the property and a determination of whether commercial uses have constrained the scope of the uses on the property such that going forward only commercial uses are feasible, rather than defining commitment in terms of years of commercial use. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Even though an applicant provides evidence of ownership of 200 or more acres in western Oregon after the application is deemed complete, a hearings officer correctly concludes that an application for a forest template dwelling satisfies ORS 215.740(3), where nothing in the statute or local development ordinances requires an applicant for a large tract forest dwelling to prove ownership of the parcel at the time an application is submitted. Blu Dutch LLC v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 495 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's decision that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to grow up to 18 marijuana plants for medical purposes under the Oregon Medical Marijuana Act is supported by substantial evidence in the record, and LUBA will reject an assignment of error that argues that the hearings officer's decision is not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record, where (1) the record includes copies of at least twelve cards issued by the Oregon Health Authority (OHA), administrator of the medical marijuana program, some of which are expired, duplicates, or outside of the relevant consideration dates; (2) the hearings officer relied on some of those OHA cards to reach his conclusion about the number of plants allowed; (3) the hearings officer adopted eight pages of findings explaining his decision and his understanding of the evidence; and (4) petitioner fails to challenge those findings or explain why the evidence supports his application. Feetham v. Jackson County, 77 Or LUBA 296 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where county code requires a building in which marijuana is grown to be "equipped with an effective odor control system" which must "prevent unreasonable interference of neighbors' use and enjoyment of their property," and the odor control system is deemed permitted only after the applicant submits "a report by a [licensed] mechanical engineer * * * demonstrating that the system will control odor so as not to unreasonably interfere with neighbors' use and enjoyment of their property," a board of county commissioners' conclusion that the application satisfies these requirements is supported by substantial evidence where it relies upon an engineers' report which demonstrates that the applicant's proposed odor control system "will control" odor as designed. The odor control system need not be actually built prior to the project receiving approval. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will deny a petitioner's challenges to a county board of commissioners' conclusion that a project application satisfies the county code requirement that "[s]ustained noise" generated from a building in which marijuana is grown "shall not exceed 30 dB(A)," based upon statements made in the applicant's engineers' report where petitioner argues the engineer reports failed to adequately describe the system as built, did not consider site-specific characteristics or address allegations that the odor control systems will generate noise in excess of 30 dB(A), but petitioner failed to point to any evidence in the record that calls into question the engineer's statements that the operation will not produce "sustained" noise that exceeds permissible levels. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will deny a petitioner's challenge to a county board of commissioners' conclusion that a marijuana production project applicant had satisfied the requirement to provide proof that water is available to the property by providing a "statement that water is supplied from a public or private water provider," by providing a letter from a private company stating it would supply water to the property where petitioner argues the letter is insufficient because the private water provider does not hold a water right. Based on its plain language, the county code does not require such a statement, but only requires a statement from a "private water provider" that they will provide water for the operation. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will deny petitioner's challenge that the provider of water must have "an authorized source of water under Oregon Water Law" where county code requires an applicant for marijuana production to provide proof that water is available to the property by providing a statement that "water is supplied from a public or private water provider," the county code does not further define "provider of water," and the county imposed a condition of approval requiring "the use of water from any source for marijuana production shall comply with all applicable state statutes and regulations including ORS 537.545 and OAR 690-340-0010." King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A motion to take evidence under OAR 661-010-0045 is warranted only for one or more of the limited bases set out in OAR 661-010-0045(1). If granted, the motion allows new evidence to be admitted into LUBA's record only for those limited purposes; such evidence is not admitted into the local evidentiary record and cannot be cited to support or undermine findings of compliance with applicable approval criteria. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 547 (2018).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a municipal code requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical," the city's decision was not supported by substantial evidence in the record pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) when it determined that the lack of sidewalks on the narrower frontage, and the absence of a door on the side of the house facing the narrower frontage were "access problems" that made designating the narrower street frontage the front lot line "impractical." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners seek reversal or remand of the city's decision pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071, and LUBA's decision agrees with petitioners that the city's decision improperly construed the municipal code and was not supported by substantial evidence in the record, but it is possible on remand that the petitioner's proposal could demonstrate compliance with the municipal code without significant changes to the proposed development, remand is the appropriate remedy. McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A finding that city streets have adequate capacity to accommodate traffic generated on annexed land is not supported by substantial evidence, where the finding cites and relies only upon extra-record street capacity data found in the transportation system plans of three nearby cities, rather than any evidence in the record. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is necessary where a code provision allows a property line adjustment as long as the adjustment does not result in an unbuildable parcel being made buildable, but the record includes no evidence regarding whether the adjusted parcel had one or more buildable sites prior to the adjustment, and the findings on that point are conclusory and not supported by substantial evidence. Lowell v. Jackson County, 75 Or LUBA 251 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A finding that the noise created by wind turbines site on top of a building located next to a bay will be mitigated by ocean noise and noise generated by nearby sewage pumps is not supported by substantial evidence, where the record includes no evidence concerning how loud the ocean and sewage pumps are at the site of the building. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 75 Or LUBA 350 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A findings and evidentiary challenge to a county's decision that wind turbines will not be so noisy as to violate a "substantial impact on the neighborhood" standard will be rejected, where the county found that the wind turbines would be no noisier than a "refrigerator," an "average home," a "quiet bedroom," or a "quiet library," and petitioner makes no specific challenge to those findings or their evidentiary support. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 75 Or LUBA 350 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. City comprehensive plan goals, other adopted city plans and sub-plans, Metro Regional Framework and Regional Transportation Plans, and the Oregon Transportation Plan and Oregon Freight Plan are subject to judicial notice under ORS 40.090(4) or (7). However, LUBA will not consider "adjudicative facts" or facts found within judicially cognizable documents that are asserted for an "adjudicative" purpose, i.e., to provide evidentiary support or countervailing evidence with respect to an applicable approval criterion in an adjudicatory setting. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 75 Or LUBA 552 (2017).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is required where the county standards provide that a parcel created by land sale contract is a legal lot of record only if the contract is (1) dated and signed by the parties, (2) includes a separate legal description, and (3) does not include more than one legal description, but the county concluded that a parcel is as a legal lot of record based on an incomplete copy of a land sale contract without signatures that did not provide a separate legal description for the subject parcel. Grimstad v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 360 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. ORS 197.835(11)(b) is a limited vehicle that does not allow LUBA to affirm a decision based on an alternative legal theory not considered below, if that alternative theory requires significant, discretionary legal and evidentiary determinations regarding which instrument created a disputed parcel, and whether the resulting parcel is a legal lot of record. Grimstad v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 360 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA's standard of review of evidentiary challenges to a limited land use decision under ORS 197.828(2)(a) is arguably less rigorous than the standard of review of a land use decision under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C). Reinert v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 427 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is necessary where a code provision requires that development with multiple access points take access from the lower classification street, unless "physical conditions preclude" taking access from the lower classification street, and the city approves the development with access to a higher classification street without any evidence or explanation in the record demonstrating the code provision is complied with or that the exception applies. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is necessary where a code standard requires that a percentage of the "frontage" be occupied by buildings, but the city approved development with 50 feet of frontage occupied by no buildings without any explanation in the record or decision why the standard is met. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is required where a city approves development based on a calculation of a lot's frontage along a cul-de-sac with the frontage measured in a straight line across the cul-de-sac, instead of along the property line, without any explanation in the record or decision for why measuring the frontage in that manner is consistent with code definition of frontage: the portion of the lot abutting a street. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The standard of review that LUBA applies in reviewing substantial evidence challenges to critical findings of fact is not particularly demanding. City findings that a landslide poses a danger to water reservoirs, which are supported by the testimony of two engineers, one of them a geotechnical engineer, are supported by substantial evidence where the contrary evidence is not sufficient to call the testimony of the engineers into question. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city finding that the reinforcing bars on a nineteenth century reservoir are spaced 10 feet apart is supported by substantial evidence, where a building assessment, a Natural Register Narrative and testimony by an engineer all take the position that the reinforcing bars are spaced 10 feet apart. A petitioner's substantial evidence challenge, which relies on poor quality, inconclusive, old black and white photos is not sufficient to call the reliability of the evidence the city relied on into question. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's conclusion that the transportation systems are adequate to support a proposed mining use is not supported by substantial evidence in the record where the hearings officer relies on a county road engineer's statement that is not supported by any estimates or actual measurements of traffic volumes or capacity, and are conclusory statements based on a traffic impact statement that does not address capacity of the public roads to serve the proposed use. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 301 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's conclusion that proposed mining activities will not increase the risk of fire is not supported by substantial evidence in the record where the hearings officer relies on a letter from the Oregon Department of Forestry that does not evaluate the fire hazard from transporting hot asphalt from the batch plant in trucks on a haul road. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 301 (2016).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A reasonable decision maker could rely on planning staff testimony that with zoning ordinance provisions allowing transfer of density, it is not necessary to remove 500,000 cubic yards of rock from a five-acre site to permit the site to be developed residentially. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Evidence in the record consisting of (1) a permit issued in 1992 authorizing an aggregate processing operation on a site that is included on the county's inventory, and (2) subsequent annual review letters from the county confirming that the conditions of the permit are met and renewing the permit are substantial evidence supporting a county's conclusion that the aggregate processing operation is "currently approved" within the meaning of OAR 660-023-0180(5)(g). Pioneer Asphalt, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 65 (2015).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The difference between substantial evidence review of a limited land use decision under ORS 197.828(2)(a) and the more rigorous substantial evidence review of a land use decision at ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) is legally irrelevant where LUBA concludes that the evidence in the record is evidence a reasonable decision maker would rely on under the more rigorous ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) "substantial evidence in the whole record" standard of review. Truth in Site Coalition v. City of Bend, 71 Or LUBA 348 (2015).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A reasonable person could find based on the evidence in the record that where only a modest increase in vehicle trips is created by a PUD, the PUD is "reasonably compatible with adjacent and nearby land uses," particularly given the inherently subjective nature of the criterion. Oakleigh-McClure Neighbors v. City of Eugene, 70 Or LUBA 132 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Based on evidence in the record that (1) no level of service deficiencies would occur based on new trips added to the area and (2) the PUD will not generate additional traffic above the threshold required for a TIA, A reasonable person could find, that a PUD will have minimal impact on traffic off-site, particularly given the inherently subjective nature of the criterion. Oakleigh-McClure Neighbors v. City of Eugene, 70 Or LUBA 132 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Land use proceedings are not governed by rules of evidence, and a local government may rely in part on a planner's testimony regarding a phone conversation with the fire district chief, among other evidence, to conclude that the water supply is sufficient for fire suppression, notwithstanding that the fire district chief did not submit direct testimony. Foland v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 247 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will reject an argument that a hearings officer errs in approving a variance from a 22-foot street width standard to allow an 18-foot width because the narrower width does not provide the same level of access as the required width, where the variance criteria do not require the varied road width to provide the same level of access. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 278 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that the applicant for a road width variance had exhausted all practical methods to construct the road to code-required width, where the evidence shows that only one of several adjoining landowners was willing to sell the right-of-way necessary for the code-required width. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 278 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A decision that redesignates a proposed new driveway as an industrial use based on "a historical commitment to industrial uses" is not supported by substantial evidence in the record where there is no evidence that the portion of the property on which the new driveway will be located has a "historical commitment to industrial uses." Ooten v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 338 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where, based on Natural Resources Conservation Service data, opponents take the position that the water table lies two feet below the surface of a proposed topsoil mining operation, but the local government accepts the applicant's position that the water table lies 125 feet below the surface, but no party identifies the evidence the applicant and local government relied on for the 125-foot estimate, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt findings explaining the large discrepancy in the two estimates and why it accepted the 125-foot estimate. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the evidence in the record demonstrates that an applicant for a destination resort map amendment's consultant compared the entirety of the applicant's ownership of land within the county, based on the county's ownership database, to the properties proposed for inclusion on the map of eligible lands, and disqualified several properties from inclusion on the map that included ineligible lands and did not comply with ORS 197.435(7) (the 30 percent rule), a reasonable person could rely on that evidence to conclude that the remaining properties included on the map comply with ORS 197.435(7) and that the proposed map amendment is supported by an adequate factual base. Root v. Klamath County, 68 Or LUBA 124 (2013).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where identifying the intersections that must be included and studied in a transportation impact analysis is governing by the local government's code, and under the code an intersection should have been included and studied, a city decision that the intersection need not be studied because it was not identified at an earlier scoping stage is error. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Newport, 68 Or LUBA 318 (2013).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Substantial evidence in the record supports a decision that noise from a conditional use airport will have minimal impact on the surrounding neighborhood where the only evidence in the record is a noise study submitted by the applicant that provides an accurate measurement of the airplane noise. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city's decision that it has the required majority of consents to annex an area is supported by substantial evidence, where the contract consents have been executed and recorded and there is nothing on the face of the documents that calls their validity into question. Not-yet-litigated contentions of the consenting landowners that the contract consents are invalid because they were obtained through coercion or that the contract consents have been revoked do not so undermine the contract consents that they can no longer be viewed as substantial evidence. Roads End Water District v. City of Lincoln City, 67 Or LUBA 452 (2013).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Given the subjectivity of a criterion requiring that the proposed comprehensive plan map amendment be "in the public interest with regard to neighborhood or community concerns," a reasonable person could rely on the testimony of industrial businesses adjacent to the property that a proposed mixed-use apartment building located along a heavily used truck route could create conflicts between the residents and truck traffic to support a finding of that the proposed change is not in the public interest. Vest v. City of Molalla, 66 Or LUBA 155 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Unless presented with some evidence to the contrary, a city decision maker could reasonably assume that proposed residential development will generate negligible air and noise pollution. Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Substantial evidence in the record supports a city's finding that a proposed cell tower location is the only feasible location where the evidence demonstrates that (1) alternative sites are located outside of the search area identified by applicant for meeting its coverage objectives, (2) the tower cannot reasonably be located within a right-of-way because there is not sufficient area within the right-of-way to locate all of the necessary equipment, (3) co-location is not feasible because the heights of existing towers are inadequate, and (4) co-location on an existing rooftop facility is not feasible due to inadequate structural integrity of the rooftop. Hill v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 250 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where none of the applicable approval criteria require that evidence must be provided by an engineer licensed in Oregon or require the city's decision to be based solely on the testimony of a licensed engineer, the fact that the engineer is not licensed in Oregon, by itself, is not a basis to reverse or remand the decision. Hill v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 250 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A petitioner's arguments that the local government misconstrued OAR 660-012-0070(5) and (6) and adopted inadequate findings not supported by substantial evidence do not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where OAR 660-012-0070(7) governs the local government's decision instead of OAR 660-012-0070(5) and (6), and the two sets of rules have different substantive terms, requirements and standards. Storm v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 415 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. It is the local government that determines—either explicitly or implicitly—whether the party with the burden of proof has carried his or her burden of proof. A local government decision must conclude that the governing criteria are satisfied—presumably because the party with the burden of proof carried his or her burden. Once that decision is made, it is subject to LUBA review to determine whether the local government's decision is supported by substantial evidence. Mingo v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 122 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A county is entitled to rely on a wind turbine operator's expert's testimony regarding alleged noise violations where the opponent's expert's criticisms of that testimony fall substantially short of demonstrating that a reasonable person would not rely on the operator's expert's testimony. Mingo v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 122 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A petitioner's challenge to a city's local appeal fee, on the grounds that the record does not include evidence establishing that the fee is consistent with ORS 227.180(1)(c), is not a basis for reversal or remand, where the city's final decision maker lacks authority under the city code to develop an evidentiary record regarding the appeal fee. Treadmill Joint Venture v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 213 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's decision that it is feasible for a proposed kennel operation to comply with DEQ's applicable noise standard is not supported by substantial evidence in the record, where an engineer's report concludes that noise from dogs barking in the outdoor kennel play area could exceed the DEQ hourly noise level limits on the property directly to the east and there is nothing in the record that rebuts that conclusion. Butcher v. Washington County, 65 Or LUBA 263 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Arguments that a proposed system for controlling odor and leachate will not in fact control odor and leachate generated by the proposed use are insufficient to demonstrate that the decision is not supported by substantial evidence where nothing in the record calls into question the efficacy of the proposed odor and leachate system. Cottonwood Capital Property Mgmt. LLC v. City of Portland, 65 Or LUBA 370 (2012).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the critical finding in a hearings officer's decision in a code enforcement proceeding is that petitioner had a longstanding regular practice of mowing grass and blackberry bushes in the riparian zone on his property, the only evidence that supports that finding is the testimony of the code enforcement officer based on field notes regarding conversations he had with petitioner that are not part of the record, petitioner testifies in the hearings before the hearings officer that he mowed in the riparian area on only one occasion, and it is not clear that the hearings officer even recognized that the testimony of petitioner and the code enforcement officer conflicted on the critical issue, remand is required. The hearings officer may be able to explain why he believed the code enforcement officer over petitioner, but without any explanation his decision is not supported by substantial evidence. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearing official's failure to require that the applicant for a group care home show exactly where the proposed home would be located within a proposed 7,700-square-foot footprint, how large the home would be and what it would look like provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the applicable approval standard only requires that the home not have significant adverse impacts, and the hearing official explains that the potential number of residents and other operational characteristics of the home are known and the impacts of the home are more likely to be attributable to the operational characteristics than the design, size and location of the home. Phillips v. Lane County, 62 Or LUBA 92 (2010).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Although a hearing official is entitled to rely on the expert opinion of a county sanitarian that a required septic drain-field expansion is feasible, where opponents offer a detailed explanation for why the subject property may not be able to accommodate the required expansion and replacement drain-field, the county sanitarian must supply more than an unexplained expression of belief that the needed expansion is feasible. Phillips v. Lane County, 62 Or LUBA 92 (2010).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government decision that determines that an entire property is located on a foredune and denies an application for a dwelling based on that determination will be remanded where the findings do not explain why the local government reached the conclusion it reached and the conclusion is not supported by any evidence in the record identified by the local government. Rudell v. City of Bandon, 62 Or LUBA 279 (2010).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The lack of evidence in the record regarding depth or location of contaminated groundwater on a mining site and the possibility that groundwater might enter the adjacent river is not a basis to reverse or remand under a code provision requiring consideration of impacts on conflicting uses within 250 feet of the property, where the only conflicting use identified is a city water intake located 3,500 feet upstream of the mining site beyond the head of tide, and the petitioner cites no evidence or argument suggesting how contaminated groundwater from the site could migrate upstream above the head of tide to impact the municipal water intake. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Although a local government land use decision maker is entitled to choose between conflicting believable expert testimony, where the decision maker does not demonstrate that it recognized the conflicting expert testimony and chose to believe one expert's testimony rather than the other expert's testimony, remand is required. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Erroneous information, if relied upon by a city council in rendering a land use decision, might result in a decision that is not supported by substantial evidence. But where petitioner fails to identify any erroneous information, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Bowers v. City of Eugene, 58 Or LUBA 51 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the permission of an adjoining private landowner is necessary to provide access to proposed development, the applicant need not submit evidence that the adjoining landowner has granted permission or that it is feasible for the landowner to grant permission, as long as such permission is not precluded as a matter of law and the local government imposes conditions ensuring that permission will be obtained prior to final development approval. Holbrook v. City of Rockaway Beach, 58 Or LUBA 179 (2009).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A county errs in taking "official notice" of evidence that is not in the record where it purports to take official notice of the scenic qualities of an area and the decision relies on those qualities. Hegele v. Crook County, 56 Or LUBA 1 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Arguments that merely cite to opposing testimony and contend that that testimony should be believed over the evidence the local government chose to rely upon are insufficient to demonstrate that the decision is not supported by substantial evidence. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 56 Or LUBA 240 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A criterion that requires a county to find that a proposed subdivision is "consistent with the general nature of the area" is very subjective. Where the county's findings cite the existence of many existing small parcels in the area that are similar in size to the proposed subdivision lots and petitioners merely cite concerns about possible interference with farming operations and a wildlife refuge, the concerns that petitioners cite are not so overwhelming that the county was obligated to acknowledge and expressly address those concerns in its findings. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where two 25-foot test pits show an aggregate layer that is at least 20 feet deep and shows no sign of diminishing and the decision maker does not seem to have appreciated that the test pits were consistent with the first 25 feet of two deep borings located elsewhere on the site that showed an aggregate layer of far more than the 25-foot width required to qualify as a significant aggregate resource site under OAR 660-023-0180(3)(d)(B)(ii), remand is required so that the county can make it clearer that it understood the significance of the two 25-foot test pits. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Failure to submit required information in the application materials is not necessarily a basis for remand, if the respondent identifies other evidence in the record that is sufficient to support a finding of compliance with the approval criteria, or at least explains why required information is not necessary to support the decision. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 55 Or LUBA 350 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners' evidence contradicted the applicant's expert's assumptions and conclusions regarding the projected volume of sewage and the adequacy of the proposed treatment methods, and nothing in the record responded to or rebutted that evidence, it was not reasonable for the county to rely on intervenor's evidence in light of petitioners' contradictory and unrebutted evidence. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 55 Or LUBA 545 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Remand is necessary where the city concludes based on petitioner's traffic impact analysis that proposed development will cause intersection performance to fall below the minimum standard, but the city misconstrues the analysis, which indicates that the proposed development will not cause the intersection to fall below the minimum performance standard. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. To obtain remand of development approval based on evidentiary grounds, it is insufficient to simply cite the evidence that the hearings officer rejected and argue that the evidence undermines the hearings officer's ultimate evidentiary choice. The petitioner must also challenge and establish error in the findings in which the hearings officer explained why he found petitioner's evidence unreliable. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's partial reliance on an ambiguous easement to determine that an applicable approval criterion was not met was not unreasonable in light of the easement's confusing language and other evidence in the record regarding that language. Adams v. Jackson County, 54 Or LUBA 103 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer is not obligated to disregard evidence placed in the record by an applicant that creates a question about whether an applicable approval criterion is met, even if the applicant later repudiates or explains some of that evidence, where other evidence remains unexplained. Adams v. Jackson County, 54 Or LUBA 103 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In resolving an evidentiary challenge, LUBA will not consider evidence supporting the application (1) that was submitted as part of final legal argument after the evidentiary record closed, and (2) that the hearings officer declined to consider for that reason. Lenox v. Jackson County, 54 Or LUBA 272 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a hearings officer's evaluation of the evidence is based in part on a considered assessment that one set of witnesses is more credible or reliable than others with respect to a disputed factual issue, it will be a rare circumstance where LUBA has a basis to overturn that credibility judgment. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer does not err in determining that property that is accessed directly from a county road meets a code requirement for access for a home occupation permit, even though adjoining property owners may possess a right to use that access as well. Merrill v. Clackamas County, 54 Or LUBA 713 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city's findings that applicable transportation criteria were satisfied based on an applicant's transportation impact analysis (TIA) is supported by substantial evidence, notwithstanding the TIA's reliance on some traffic counts that were more than 12 months old, where the requirement that traffic counts be less than 12 months old was not absolute and some of the traffic counts used in the TIA were less than 12 months old. Lubischer v. City of Hillsboro, 53 Or LUBA 143 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A broadcast tower approval criterion that requires a decision maker to determine whether identified "public benefits outweigh any impacts which cannot be mitigated" is subjective. In assessing a findings and evidentiary challenge to a decision maker's weighing of public benefits, the question is whether that weighing is (1) inadequately explained (necessitating a remand for additional findings) or (2) unreasonable (and therefore not supported by substantial evidence). Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a land use approval criterion requires that the applicant demonstrate that a proposed off-road vehicle and bicycle park in a forest zone will not "significantly increase fire hazards," A local government's decision that the applicant failed to carry his burden because he failed to accurately identify where proposed fire access roads would be located in relation to park trails is supported by substantial evidence. Gillette v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The party who puts forth the larger effort to produce evidence regarding a land use application is not necessarily entitled to prevail under a substantial evidence review solely by virtue of that larger effort. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The critical issue for the local decision maker will generally be whether any expert or lay testimony offered by permit opponents raises questions or issues that undermine or call into question the conclusions or supporting documentation that are presented by the applicant's experts and, if so, whether any such questions or issues are adequately rebutted by the applicant's experts. LUBA's role on review is to determine if a reasonable person would have answered those questions as the local decision maker did, in view of all of the evidence in the record. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local decision maker may assign some additional significance to the testimony of the city engineer or Oregon Department of Transportation engineers regarding transportation system impacts based on their neutrality regarding the merits of the development proposal itself. But that process of assigning any extra weight necessarily calls for a case by case determination by the local decision maker, with LUBA deferring to any such assignments of extra weight that are reasonable, based on the evidence in the whole record. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA's role on review is not to determine which side's evidence LUBA believes to be weightier. LUBA is limited to determining whether the local decision maker's decision to rely on some experts' testimony rather than others is reasonable, in view of all of the evidence. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA frequently analyzes findings challenges and evidentiary challenges separately and generally analyzes findings challenges first, because LUBA's resolution of the findings challenge frequently affects its resolution of the evidentiary challenge or makes it unnecessary to decide the evidentiary challenge. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. It is not unreasonable for a local decision maker to cite issues raised regarding the evidence submitted by an applicant's engineers that were not responded to, and to rely on opponents' experts' testimony to find that the applicant failed to carry its burden of proof. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government's decision is supported by substantial evidence despite the fact that a wetlands delineation report and a biological assessment that were discussed during the local proceedings are not included in the record, where parts of the wetlands delineation report are quoted in the application and there is a great deal of other evidence in the record that the local government relied on. Neighbors 4 Responsible Growth v. City of Veneta, 52 Or LUBA 325 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In an evidentiary challenge to a hearings officer's denial of proposed development, the applicant can prevail only if the applicant demonstrates that no reasonable person could reach the conclusion the hearings officer did, considering the evidence in the whole record. Ehler v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 663 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In reviewing a petitioner's contention that the evidence submitted by its multi-disciplinary team was such that the county's decision to rely on the testimony of opponent's expert was unreasonable, LUBA must avoid improperly reweighing the evidence and limit its role to determining whether the evidence is such that a reasonable decision maker could have decided as it did. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where there is conflicting expert testimony regarding the location of a river channel migration zone and the probability that the river channel might migrate to capture a proposed floodplain mining site causing river turbidity, the county's decision to believe the larger channel migration zone should apply is supported by substantial evidence. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. If the argument included in support of an assignment of error clearly alleges that findings are not supported by substantial evidence, the fact that an assignment of error that challenges the adequacy of the city's findings does not expressly include a substantial evidence challenge does not preclude LUBA review of the substantial evidence arguments that follow that assignment of error. Neighbors 4 Responsible Growth v. City of Veneta, 51 Or LUBA 363 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A county finding that there is "nothing in the record" that would lead the county to believe that a proposed mining operation would cause a risk of traffic accidents does not demonstrate that the county ignored evidence that petitioners submitted to show the mine could cause such a risk, where there are other findings that show the county merely was not persuaded that petitioners' testimony outweighed the testimony submitted by the applicant. Lindsey v. Josephine County, 51 Or LUBA 383 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Largely unchallenged testimony of a county engineer who is a professional engineer, but not a traffic engineer, may constitute substantial evidence concerning the safety of a proposed intersection. Ghena v. Josephine County, 51 Or LUBA 681 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Petitioners may not rely on evidence that post-dates the decision on appeal to argue that a board of county commissioners' decision that relies on testimony by the county engineer is not supported by substantial evidence. Ghena v. Josephine County, 51 Or LUBA 681 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Even assuming a county correctly interprets local code provisions designed to implement OAR 660-033-0130(4)(c)(B) regarding the general suitability for the production of farm crops to refer to the grapes and not the vines, its determination that the portion of the property is generally unsuitable for growing grapes is not supported by substantial evidence where there is no evidence that the vines on that portion do not produce grapes. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 51 Or LUBA 699 (2006).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Hearings officer's conclusion that it is feasible to comply with local grading permit review standards is not supported by substantial evidence where the conclusion is based on testimony of county staff, and the staff report provides only that staff will review the grading permit for compliance with those review standards prior to commencement of on-site improvements. Angius v. Washington County, 50 Or LUBA 33 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city's decision to annex property as an "island" annexation pursuant to ORS 222.750 is supported by substantial evidence although the record does not include ordinances approving previous annexations, or an explanation of how the territories being annexed are "surrounded" under ORS 222.750, where the record includes an annexation map depicting the city limits and the previously annexed properties that create the island. Costco Wholesale Corporation v. City of Beaverton, 50 Or LUBA 476 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the evidentiary record is not clear about whether 1000 dwelling units can be developed on a site without damaging wetlands and jeopardizing endangered western lilies that occupy some of those wetlands, and it appears that a hydrologic assessment is necessary to determine if the wetlands would be damaged in ways that jeopardize continued recovery of the western lily, the city's decision to approve a master plan of development for the 1000 dwelling units without first requiring the hydrologic assessment is error. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant's expert and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service disagree about the adequacy of the expert's survey of endangered western lilies on the site of a proposed development, LUBA will defer to the city's choice to believe the applicant's expert. While the United States Fish and Wildlife Service may ultimately prevail in future federal permitting proceedings, a city's choice between conflicting testimony at the city's master plan of development approval stage presents no basis for reversal or remand. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the decision maker adopts application fee increases but fails to recognize that doing so inadvertently increases local appeal fees, remand is necessary for the local government to take evidence and adopt findings demonstrating that the increased appeal fees are consistent with ORS 227.180(1). Doty v. City of Bandon, 49 Or LUBA 411 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a petitioner shows that a county's findings are inadequate, but the quality of the evidentiary record and the findings that could reasonably be adopted based on that record are disputed, remand is the appropriate remedy where (1) petitioner does not show that a county's decision is "outside the range of discretion allowed the [county] under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances," which would require reversal of the county's decision and an order to approve the permit under ORS 197.835(10)(a) or (2) that the county's decision to deny the permit "violates a provision of applicable law and is prohibited as a matter of law," which would justify a decision by LUBA to reverse the county court's decision under OAR 661-010-0073(1)(c). Hellberg v. Morrow County, 49 Or LUBA 423 (2005).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings official decision that a proposed chiropractic home occupation that would generate eight client trips per day does not constitute "excessive traffic" on a short, dead-end unimproved residential street that serves a relatively small number of existing residences is supported by substantial evidence. Revoal v. City of Eugene, 47 Or LUBA 136 (2004).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will reject a challenge to the evidentiary support for a finding that mining traffic will significantly conflict with agricultural practices, within the meaning of OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(E), where there is evidence that (1) truck traffic from the mine will cause the level of service for vehicles entering and exiting a nearby farm stand to be reduced from LOS C to LOS D, (2) truck traffic will interfere with the use of the road for the transport of agricultural equipment, and the applicant has not demonstrated that those conflicts will be minimized. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 46 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A hearings officer's decision that a road existed in 1992 is supported by substantial evidence where the record includes conflicting expert and lay testimony regarding the existence of the road in 1992 and the road need not have been improved to any particular standard and was the kind of primitive road that a reasonable person might or might not have recognized as a road. Bonnett v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 318 (2004).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. An arborist's and professional engineer's testimony is not substantial evidence that it is impracticable to save two groves of mature trees in constructing a discount superstore and parking, where the arborist and professional engineer do not consider the practicability of reducing the building footprint or the area of the site that will be developed with parking. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hillsboro, 46 Or LUBA 680 (2004).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The lack of evidence supporting findings that the subject property has no physical features that might limit development is not a basis for reversal or remand, where no party contended below that any physical features of the property limit development. Bruce Packing Company v. City of Silverton, 45 Or LUBA 334 (2003).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will not remand a county decision for failing to include a sample of light-green visqueen to support a finding that the material is nonreflective, where the challenged decision is not based on such a finding. Lorenz v. Deschutes County, 45 Or LUBA 635 (2003).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The absence of required information or analysis in an application is not necessarily viewed as a procedural error, and may be a basis for reversal or remand even without a showing of prejudice to petitioner's substantial rights, where the information or analysis is necessary to determine compliance with approval criteria. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where LUBA cannot determine from the appealed decision or the record whether an approved parkway corridor crosses an inventoried Goal 5 significant vegetation and wildlife area, the decision must be remanded. Friends of Eugene v. City of Eugene, 44 Or LUBA 239 (2003).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a decision approving a subdivision that finds it is infeasible to extend a road from the proposed subdivision to an adjoining property and a petitioner at LUBA argues that the finding is not supported by substantial evidence, LUBA will remand where the respondent cites no evidence that supports the finding. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 44 Or LUBA 493 (2003).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a finding concerning traffic safety is not supported by substantial evidence in the record, but it is clear that traffic safety was at most a peripheral concern and other findings addressing a general "adversely affects neighborhoods" standard make it clear that the county's focus was on roadway and intersection capacity rather than traffic safety per se, the lack of evidence supporting the disputed traffic safety finding provides no basis for reversal or remand. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 42 Or LUBA 30 (2002).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a petitioner only expressed disagreement with assumptions included in a transportation impact study and repeats evidentiary arguments he made to the city council without attempting to challenge the findings the city adopted to respond to those arguments, petitioner presents no basis for reversal or remand. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will reverse a city's annexation approval where a city fails to establish that the minimum number of informed consents have been received to allow the city to approve an annexation without holding an election. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 39 Or LUBA 377 (2001).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city's finding that the portion of a dwelling exceeding a code-mandated height limit adversely affects the ocean view of a neighboring property is supported by substantial evidence where the record includes photographs, a videotape and drawings that show the subject dwelling blocking the view of ocean water from the neighboring property, notwithstanding that the photographs, videotape and drawings show that the subject dwelling blocks only a tiny sliver of ocean water view. Rivera v. City of Bandon, 38 Or LUBA 736 (2000).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A petitioner fails to demonstrate a decision is not supported by substantial evidence where only some of the evidence that the city relied upon is challenged, and the decision is supported by unchallenged documentary and testimonial evidence. Schwerdt v. City of Corvallis, 38 Or LUBA 174 (2000).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner challenges the adequacy and evidentiary basis for a local government's decision determining that a proposed development "is or will be compatible" with the land use development pattern in the vicinity of the request, LUBA will analyze the findings to determine (1) whether the findings are adequate; (2) whether there is substantial evidence in the record to support a finding that, absent some conditions of approval, the compatibility standard is met; and (3) if conditions of approval are necessary to establish compatibility, whether the local government adopted such conditions. DLCD v. City of Warrenton, 37 Or LUBA 933 (2000).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city's conclusion that additional parking is needed is supported by substantial evidence notwithstanding contrary evidence contained within a parking study, where the city found the parking study is limited in scope and does not account for certain variables, and there is also evidence that parking is unavailable during peak times and that persons avoid a particular store because of a perceived lack of parking. Douglas v. City of Lake Oswego, 37 Or LUBA 826 (2000).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an applicant submits evidence that an intersection will operate at level of service C but later submits evidence showing the intersection will operate at level of service E, a finding that the intersection will operate at level of service C is not supported by substantial evidence. Where the finding concerning the intersection is a necessary part of the decision, the decision must be remanded. Turner Community Association v. Marion County, 37 Or LUBA 324 (1999).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In addressing a substantial evidence challenge, where the response brief provides no transcripts or partial transcripts and provides no assistance in locating the portion of the audio tapes in the record where relevant testimony is located, LUBA will not search for testimony on audio tapes. Best Buy in Town, Inc. v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 446 (1999).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA does not independently analyze the evidence, but reviews evidence in the record solely to determine whether it was reasonable for the decision maker to rely on that evidence in making a decision. Where the written evidence is conflicting and a video tape makes it clear that only small remnants of past farming or Christmas tree growing efforts on the subject property remain among the piles of debris that have been scattered over the subject property, it is reasonable for a hearings officer to conclude there is no current farm use of the property. Best Buy in Town, Inc. v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 446 (1999).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a land use decision is challenged on evidentiary grounds, LUBA relies on the parties to direct it to relevant evidence in the record so that LUBA can determine whether there is substantial evidence in the record to support the challenged decision. Johns v. City of Lincoln City, 35 Or LUBA 421 (1999).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA does not duplicate the role of a local hearings officer. Where the evidence is conflicting such that a reasonable decision maker could reach different conclusions based on that evidence, the choice of which evidence to believe and which conclusion to reach is for the hearings officer. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a hearings officer gives several reasons why she was not persuaded by affidavit testimony submitted by a permit applicant, petitioner does not establish that the applicant carried his burden of proof as a matter of law. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A permit applicant with the burden of demonstrating compliance with an off-site odor standard may not rely on the lack of odor-based complaints in an earlier code enforcement proceeding to establish compliance with the odor standard, where the record includes testimony about possible off-site odor problems. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A county's improper reliance on poor past management practices in concluding a property is not suitable for commercial forest use provides no basis for reversal or remand, where there is other evidence in the record that a reasonable person could rely on to reach that conclusion. Dept. of Transportation v. Coos County, 35 Or LUBA 285 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government's reliance on a traffic study using a method not currently preferred but nonetheless required by the state Department of Transportation (ODOT) does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where traffic analysis under either of two methods recognized by ODOT supports the conclusion reached by the local government. Citizens for Florence v. City of Florence, 35 Or LUBA 255 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a site plan depicting setbacks was before the county decision maker, and was inadvertently not submitted to LUBA, testimony discussing the measurements and setbacks depicted on the site plan is evidence that may support the county's s findings regarding setbacks, notwithstanding that the site plan is itself absent from the record. Thomas v. Wasco County, 35 Or LUBA 173 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A condition of approval limiting the hours of operation is supported by substantial evidence where the city council found that loading and unloading of vehicles next to an adjoining residential area during irregular hours would create a nuisance and the Oregon State Police impose a similar limitation on towing of impounded vehicles. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A condition requiring a drainage plan for a towing facility is supported by substantial evidence notwithstanding the owner's claim that towed vehicles would be drained of fluids, where the record showed the city council questioned the owner's claim and it was not clear where the drained fluids would be stored. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the city's decision is based on a well-reasoned analysis that reaches the conclusion that a state road crossing a lot is located on an easement rather than on land owned in fee by the state, the city's determination that the lot may include the area occupied by the state road in determining whether the lot meets minimum lot size requirements is supported by substantial evidence. Marshall v. City of Yachats, 35 Or LUBA 82 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a code criterion requires that a 79-unit residential development must not have adverse impacts on public facilities, the local government cannot make findings of compliance with that code criterion and its findings cannot be supported by substantial evidence where there is no information in the record concerning potential traffic impacts from the proposal. Deal v. City of Hermiston, 35 Or LUBA 16 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a hearings officer interprets an approval criterion to require an explanation of resource practices on the property, the applicant may not rely on a lack of evidence of impacts on resource practices to establish that there will be no such adverse impacts. Parsley v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 540 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner contends that findings are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, but fails to identify any particular criterion and only expresses disagreement with the city's evaluation of the evidence, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Kelley v. City of Cascade Locks, 34 Or LUBA 374 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a county finds that the subject property's soils constitute "high-value farmland" as that concept is defined by statute, but there is no evidence in the record that supports that ultimate conclusion, the decision must be remanded. Corp. of Presiding Bishop v. Klamath County, 34 Or LUBA 131 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Findings concerning the size and density of a proposal which simply cite to assessor's records as the basis for the findings are not supported by substantial evidence, where the record does not include the assessor's records or any other evidence that supports the findings. Johnston v. City of Albany, 34 Or LUBA 32 (1998).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners assert that a local government decision is not supported by substantial evidence, and no party cites evidence in the record to support the local government's decision, LUBA will not search the record to find supporting evidence. Fjarli v. City of Medford, 33 Or LUBA 451 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A two-acre minimum lot size on property located within two miles of a UGB, in combination with the provision of an urban water system and access to public schools, raises valid concerns about the impacts of a proposed subdivision on the UGB, and a finding that consists solely of a city administrator's opinion that the city has no concerns regarding the impact of the proposed subdivision is not substantial evidence to support the county's conclusion that the proposed subdivision will not affect the UGB. Brown v. Jefferson County, 33 Or LUBA 418 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Unsupported statements and assurances that a proposed dwelling will comply with local roof height and pitch standards do not constitute substantial evidence. Pekarek v. Wallowa County, 33 Or LUBA 225 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Selected portions of an engineer's letter, cited to support a finding that water supply is adequate, do not constitute substantial evidence where that finding is undermined by the engineer's letter taken as a whole and by other conflicting evidence. Pekarek v. Wallowa County, 33 Or LUBA 225 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In reviewing evidence, LUBA may not substitute its judgment for that of the local decision maker, but must consider and weigh all evidence in the record to determine if the local decision maker's conclusion is supported by substantial evidence. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will defer to a local government's choice between conflicting evidence if it concludes a reasonable person would have reached the decision the local government made in view of all of the evidence in the record. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will remand the county's expansion of a nonconforming use where the county fails to make the requisite findings regarding the level of intensity of use that existed when the use became nonconforming, and the level of intensity that has continued, uninterrupted, since that time. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government decision approving an irrevocably committed exception under OAR 660-04-028 to Goals 3 and 4 will be remanded where it does not include findings supported by substantial evidence establishing that uses allowed by Goals 3 and 4 are impracticable. DLCD v. Columbia County, 32 Or LUBA 221 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government decision approving a physically developed exception under OAR 660-04-025 to Goals 3 and 4 will be remanded where the findings do not establish that the property is physically developed with non-resource uses. DLCD v. Columbia County, 32 Or LUBA 221 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. There is insufficient evidence in the county's findings to support a conclusion of compatibility with farm use where the findings do not include evidence regarding the surrounding farm uses in the area, and do not explain how the proposed nonfarm dwelling will be compatible with the identified farm uses. Le Roux v. Malheur County, 32 Or LUBA 124 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The county's findings lack evidentiary support for the conclusion that a proposed dwelling will not materially alter the stability of the surrounding area where there is inadequate evidence regarding the surrounding area, inadequate evidence regarding the uses existing in the area, and no evidence regarding how the proposed dwelling will not alter the stability of those uses in the selected area. Le Roux v. Malheur County, 32 Or LUBA 124 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the county's factual findings determine that the subject parcel contains soils that are presumptively suitable for farm use, but then conclude that the proposed dwelling is situated on land that is unsuitable for farm use, the county's conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence in the record. Le Roux v. Malheur County, 32 Or LUBA 124 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A demonstration that a particular tax lot will be ineligible for a nonfarm dwelling for three years is not substantial evidence that supports a finding that the tax lot has no real potential for a nonfarm dwelling. Lett v. Yamhill County, 32 Or LUBA 98 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Without information concerning the nature and duration of the lease, the use of a particular tax lot as a leased tax-exempt watershed is not substantial evidence which supports a finding that the lot will remain ineligible for a nonfarm dwelling during a term that is reasonable for purposes of a stability analysis. Lett v. Yamhill County, 32 Or LUBA 98 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the resume of a soil scientist does not establish his credentials to determine forest productivity and the only scientific data in the record are the results of soil tests, the soil scientist's conclusions with respect to forest productivity are not substantial evidence. DLCD v. Curry County, 31 Or LUBA 503 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the county's conclusion that two parcels are not contiguous for purposes of OAR 660-04-028(6)(c)(B) is not factually established in the record and is inconsistent with evidence relied upon by the county regarding nonresource use on adjacent parcels, the county's finding is not supported by substantial evidence in the record. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a petitioner challenges percentages relied upon by the county in support of a finding, the petitioner must provide citations to the record where the data upon which it relies to calculate its own percentages can be found. Helvetia Community Assoc. v. Washington County, 31 Or LUBA 446 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. There is no general requirement that survey evidence supporting a consultant's calculation of area be included in the record; instead, LUBA must determine whether, considering all relevant evidence in the record, a reasonable person could rely on the consultant's calculations. Squires v. City of Portland, 31 Or LUBA 335 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In considering the substantiality of evidence supporting a Goal 3 reasons exception for realignment of a highway, LUBA must look at the evidence supporting the challenged decision for the entire four-mile stretch of highway and all the impacted properties, not just the evidence of effects on one of the properties. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 31 Or LUBA 57 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Petitioners' challenge of the reliability of an environmental impact statement (EIS) that was relied upon by the county in its decision is insufficient where the challenge is based solely on the age of the EIS, without identification of other evidence in the record that undermines the EIS. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 31 Or LUBA 57 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a standard requires a comparison of the traffic or parking generated by a proposed use to the traffic or parking that normally occurs in the district, and the findings contain no such comparison or other factual support to establish the basis upon which the county reached its conclusion that the standard is satisfied, the findings are inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence. Canfield v. Yamhill County, 31 Or LUBA 25 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA's review of a local decision is based upon the local record. Where petitioners do not show that they presented evidence during the local hearings process to establish compliance with each factor of an applicable code provision, a recitation in the petition for review of how each factor is satisfied is insufficient to establish such compliance. Canfield v. Yamhill County, 31 Or LUBA 25 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will not substitute its judgment for that of the local decision maker. Without references to conflicting evidence in the record that so undermines the evidence upon which the county based its conclusion as to compel a conclusion that a reasonable person could not have reached the county's conclusion, LUBA will not find the county's findings lack substantial evidence. Canfield v. Yamhill County, 31 Or LUBA 25 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. When petitioner's objections below were not directed to the relevant criteria, they do not support a claim that the hearings officer's factual conclusions were erroneous. Martin v. Jackson County, 30 Or LUBA 317 (1996).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Because the city's decision does not explain, based on evidence in the record, how the city reached its conclusion that a certain ordinance criterion was satisfied, LUBA must remand. Noble v. City of Fairview, 30 Or LUBA 180 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. An unsupported statement in an application is not evidence, and an estimate of a geologist as to resource quantity, made without reference to evidence of any kind, is not substantial evidence. Palmer v. Lane County, 29 Or LUBA 436 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The county's finding, made as part of its Goal 5 ESEE analysis, that an aggregate site located within a Big Game Habitat Range is not uniquely suited to wildlife must be supported by substantial evidence, not just a statement that the wildlife can "freely relocate" to other parts of the Big Game Habitat Range. Palmer v. Lane County, 29 Or LUBA 436 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. When the evidentiary support for imposition of a condition of approval is challenged, LUBA must determine whether the evidence in the record would lead a reasonable person to conclude there is a need for the condition to further a relevant planning purpose. Carter v. Umatilla County, 29 Or LUBA 181 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where LUBA concludes a reasonable person could reach the decision made by a local government, in view of all the evidence cited in the record, LUBA will defer to the local government's choice between conflicting evidence. Carter v. Umatilla County, 29 Or LUBA 181 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner does not challenge the local government's determination that even if the subject property was not created by a minor land partition, the proposed single family dwelling is permissible, petitioner's challenge to the evidentiary support for the determination that the subject property was created by minor partition does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Sullivan v. City of Ashland, 28 Or LUBA 699 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local government adopts finding which, among other things, explain how a proposed road alignment will reduce traffic delay and congestion and thereby minimize air quality impacts as required by a plan policy, and petitioner merely cites testimony that the proposed alignment will increase trips and pollution but does not specifically challenge the local government's findings, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners challenge the evidentiary support for findings addressing an applicable approval standard, and no party cites any evidence in the record to support such findings, the challenged decision must be remanded. Neuman v. City of Albany, 28 Or LUBA 337 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a finding that the gravel extraction rate at a proposed site will not change from historic rates is not supported by substantial evidence, and the finding appears to play a significant role in the local government's finding of compliance with a code "compatibility" requirement, the challenged decision approving a conditional use permit for a gravel operation is not supported by substantial evidence. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Arguments that approval of a fill permit violates local code provisions on fill in drainageways provide no basis for reversal or remand where (1) the local government adopted findings that the disputed fill was not placed in a drainageway, (2) those findings are supported by substantial evidence, and (3) petitioner does not specifically challenge the findings. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 480 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a petitioner fails to challenge a local governments' findings that fill is not located in a drainageway or floodway and that the fill will not endanger adjoining properties, as required by local code and plan standards governing fill, but rather expresses disagreement with the local government based in part on evidence not the record, petitioner's challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 480 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners contend a challenged decision is not supported by substantial evidence in the record, LUBA relies on the parties to provide it with citations to evidence in the record that supports their positions. Where no party cites any evidence in the record supporting findings challenged for lack of supporting evidence, LUBA will sustain the assignment of error. DLCD v. Polk County, 27 Or LUBA 345 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners assert that findings supporting a local government determination of compliance with an applicable approval standard lack evidentiary support, and no party cites evidence in the record to support the local government's determination, LUBA will not search the record to find supporting evidence and will sustain petitioners' assignment of error. Doob v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 293 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. There is no requirement that an expert witness explain the basis for all assumptions underlying the expert's evidence, or that evidence supporting the expert's assumptions be included in the record. Under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C), where petitioners argue an assumption underlying an expert's conclusions is undermined by other evidence, LUBA must determine whether, considering all relevant evidence in the record, a reasonable person could rely on the expert's conclusions. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 141 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In deciding whether a challenged decision is supported by substantial evidence in the whole record, LUBA is required to consider whether supporting evidence is refuted or undermined by other evidence in the record, but cannot reweigh the evidence. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 106 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local decision maker's order denying rehearing (1) indicates evidence submitted with the request for rehearing was considered only for the limited purpose of determining whether to grant the request for rehearing, and (2) does not amend or add to the original decision, the evidence submitted with the request for rehearing, although in the local record submitted to LUBA, is not part of the evidentiary record supporting the challenged decision. Eppich v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 498 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. It is reasonable for a local government decision maker to rely upon statements made by representatives of the Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT) stating that ODOT's requirements are met, even though the evidence underlying the ODOT representatives' statements is not included in the local record. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 26 Or LUBA 458 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A general allegation that a decision is not supported by substantial evidence is insufficient for review by LUBA. Collins v. Klamath County, 26 Or LUBA 434 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A petitioner's assignment of error will be rejected where it simply alleges code violations, without supplying any supporting argument, or alleges inconsistent findings and lack of substantial evidence, without identifying the challenged findings. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners contend the challenged decision is not supported by substantial evidence concerning the impacts of the proposed use on nongame wildlife, but do not challenge the local government's determination that the relevant approval standards do not require consideration of impacts on nongame wildlife, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Bottum v. Union County, 26 Or LUBA 407 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The responsibility for weighing and determining what evidence to believe lies with the local government. LUBA's scope of review is limited to determining whether the challenged decision is supported by evidence in the record that a reasonable person could rely upon to reach the conclusions in the challenged decision. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner cites evidence that certain approval standards are not satisfied and respondent fails to identify evidence in the record in support of the decision, LUBA will remand the decision for lack of substantial evidence. LUBA will not independently search the record for supporting evidence. Lucier v. City of Medford, 26 Or LUBA 213 (1994).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. It is the parties' responsibility to identify the evidence in the record that supports their positions. Where parties cite large documents in their entirety, and do not identify where in these documents relevant material is located, LUBA will not search through the documents looking for supporting evidence. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government's decision that a proposed plan map amendment would negatively impact groundwater quantity and violate an applicable plan criterion is supported by substantial evidence where there is conflicting lay and expert testimony, and the expert testimony concedes the uncertainty of the proposal's impacts. Ericsson v. Washington County, 26 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA may not reweigh evidence or substitute its judgment for that of a local government concerning a proposal's compliance with applicable standards. Hixson v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 159 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner cites evidence in the record that at least some golf ball striking areas are proposed to be closer than 300 yards from nearby properties, and the county cites no evidence to undermine this evidence, findings that the nearest golf ball striking area is more than 300 yards from adjacent properties are not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record. Moore v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 40 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Under ORS 197.830(13)(a), LUBA's review is limited to the record of the proceedings below. Statements in a local government comprehensive plan background and inventory document, that are not included in the record, cannot constitute substantial evidence in support of a challenged decision. Fleck v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 745 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C), LUBA is authorized to reverse or remand a challenged decision on evidentiary grounds only when there is not substantial evidence in the whole record to support the decision. Arguments that the application and the applicants' statements do not provide sufficient evidence to support the decision do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a decision is challenged on evidentiary grounds, LUBA relies on the parties to provide it with record citations to the supporting or countervailing evidence on which their argument depends. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Determining compatibility is inherently subjective. Where there is conflicting believable evidence concerning a proposed PUD's compatibility with the surrounding neighborhood, LUBA will not disturb the local government's determination that the height of the proposed buildings is compatible with the surrounding neighborhood. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 601 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the governing body ratifies an act of another local government official in the challenged decision, that aspect of the challenged decision is itself substantial evidence that the local official possessed authority to accomplish the disputed act. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will defer to a local government's choice between conflicting believable evidence. Cemper v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 486 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioners challenge the evidentiary support for a finding, but fail to show the finding is critical to the decision, the challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. That a particular finding is not supported by substantial evidence provides a basis for reversing or remanding a challenged decision only if that finding is critical to demonstrating compliance with an applicable approval standard. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the local code includes a broad definition of the term "wetland," and the local government denies a permit application because it determines evidence in the record establishes that petitioner's grading activities on the subject property created a "wetland" within the meaning of the local code, LUBA cannot say that the local government's determination is wrong as a matter of law. Annett v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 111 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where findings state facts relevant to whether a proposed nonfarm use will interfere with accepted farming practices, but do not identify the types of farming occurring in the area, and those findings are challenged as inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, LUBA will sustain the challenge in the absence of any attempt by respondents to defend the findings or identify evidence supporting the findings. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Under ORS 197.828(2)(a), when the evidentiary support for a condition of approval is challenged, LUBA must determine whether the evidence in the record could lead a reasonable person to conclude that considering the impacts of the proposed development, there is a need for the condition to further a legitimate planning purpose. Sherwood Baptist Church v. City of Sherwood, 24 Or LUBA 502 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. That a particular finding is not supported by substantial evidence, of itself, provides no basis for remanding a decision, unless the finding is critical to the decision. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. While LUBA must consider all relevant evidence in the record cited by the parties in reviewing a substantial evidence challenge, including evidence that detracts from the challenged decision as well as evidence that supports it, LUBA may not reweigh the evidence. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where LUBA concludes a reasonable person could reach the decision made by the local government, in view of all the evidence in the record, it defers to the local government's choices between conflicting evidence and of reasonable conclusions to be drawn from the evidence. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where there is conflicting believable evidence, the choice of which evidence to believe belongs to the local government. Giesy v. Benton County, 24 Or LUBA 328 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Lack of substantial evidence in an application does not provide grounds for LUBA to reverse or remand a decision. LUBA is authorized to reverse or remand a land use decision on evidentiary grounds only if it is not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 296 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In reviewing an evidentiary challenge, LUBA relies on the parties to identify the evidence in the record that supports their positions. Todd v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 289 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a golf course adjoining an orchard will force alterations in accepted farming practices and increase the costs associated with such practices, the relevant question under ORS 215.296(1) is whether such alterations and increased costs will be significant. Where there is evidence in the whole record that would allow a local government decision maker to answer that question either way, LUBA is required by ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C) to defer to the local government's judgment. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA will not consider a challenge to the adequacy of or evidentiary support for particular findings supporting a land use decision, where petitioner fails to include sufficient argument explaining why those findings are critical to the challenged decision. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where findings are not essential to the challenged decision, it is not necessary for LUBA to determine whether those findings are supported by substantial evidence in the record. Thatcher v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Lack of evidentiary support for a finding provides a basis for reversal or remand only if the finding is essential to the decision. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 98 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a reasonable person would not conclude, based on the evidence cited in the record, that the proposed use will comply with an applicable approval standard, the local government's determination of compliance with that approval standard is not supported by substantial evidence. Reynolds v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 14 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The choice between different reasonable conclusions, based on the evidence in the record, belongs to the local government decision maker. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local government finds that approval criteria will be met if certain conditions are imposed, and those conditions are requirements to obtain state agency permits, a decision approving the subject application simply requires that there be substantial evidence in the record that the applicant is not precluded from obtaining such state agency permits as a matter of law. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local government's determination of compliance with a code standard requiring that adequate water service be provided to a proposed development is based entirely on the use of surface water, whether there are sufficient findings and evidence to demonstrate the adequacy of ground water to serve the proposed resort does not provide a basis for reversal or remand of the local government's decision. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA is authorized to reverse or remand a challenged local government decision on evidentiary grounds only if the local government made a decision not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record. ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C). Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. That findings are not supported by substantial evidence provides a basis for reversal or remand only if the findings are essential to the challenged decision. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Allegations that local government decision makers gave testimony by certain persons undue credibility provide no basis for reversal or remand. Reed v. Benton County, 23 Or LUBA 486 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the record does not contain information on the quality of the aggregate resource at other aggregate sites already on the county plan's inventory, the county cannot perform the comparison of relative value of Goal 5 resource sites required by OAR 660-16-000(3) in making its required determination of resource quality. Calhoun v. Jefferson County, 23 Or LUBA 436 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the relevant facts are not in dispute, the choice between different reasonable conclusions based on the undisputed evidence in the record belongs to the local government. Dority v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 384 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA's review is limited by ORS 197.830(13)(a) to the record of the proceeding below, except in instances where an evidentiary hearing is authorized by ORS 197.830(13)(b). Therefore, local government enactments of which LUBA takes official notice under OEC 202 do not thereby become part of the local record which may provide evidentiary support for the challenged decision. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 291 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C) does not require a legislative land use decision to be supported by substantial evidence. Where petitioners cite no independent basis for a requirement that the challenged legislative land use decision be supported by substantial evidence, petitioners provide no basis for reversal or remand. Cope v. City of Cannon Beach, 23 Or LUBA 233 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA may take official notice of state legislative or administrative history to aid in interpretation of state statutes or administrative rules. However, where such documents are not part of the local record, statements of fact in the documents cannot constitute evidentiary support for the challenged decision. Adkins v. Heceta Water District, 23 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where conflicting evidence does not so undermine the evidence relied upon by the local decision maker that it is unreasonable for the decision maker to rely upon it, the choice between such conflicting believable evidence belongs to the local government decision maker and LUBA will not disturb that choice. Harwood v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 191 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Substantial evidence challenges directed at findings which are not critical to the challenged decision, provide no basis for reversal or remand. Neste Resins Corp. v. City of Eugene, 23 Or LUBA 55 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. ORS 197.835(7)(a)(C) does not impose a substantive requirement that legislative land use decisions be supported by substantial evidence in the whole record. Alexiou v. Curry County, 22 Or LUBA 639 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Substantial evidence is evidence a reasonable person would rely on in reaching a decision. Where a reasonable person could reach the decision made by the local government, in view of all the evidence in the record, LUBA defers to the local government's choice between conflicting evidence. Angel v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 649 (1992).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. That a finding is impermissibly conclusory, or is without evidentiary support in the record, is a basis for reversal or remand only if that finding is essential to the challenged decision. Therefore, where petitioners challenge the adequacy of or evidentiary support for a specific finding, they must also explain why that finding is essential to demonstrating compliance with an applicable approval standard. Brandt v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 473 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In order to overturn, on evidentiary grounds, a local government's determination that an applicable approval criterion is not met, it is not sufficient for petitioner to show there is substantial evidence in the record to support his position. Rather, the evidence must be such that a reasonable trier of fact could only say that petitioner's evidence should be believed. Samoilov v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 446 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. No purpose would be served by determining whether inadequate findings are supported by substantial evidence in the record. Forster v. Polk County, 22 Or LUBA 380 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Findings that transportation systems are adequate to serve proposed housing for elderly persons who walk with the assistance of canes or walkers, are not supported by substantial evidence where the evidence establishes that the only access to public transportation is by walking down a road dangerous to pedestrians. Murray v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 247 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where there is no applicable standard requiring a demonstration that there is a need for the proposed use, that findings stating there is a need for the proposed use are inadequate or not supported by substantial evidence provides no basis for reversal or remand. Murray v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 247 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. When the evidentiary support for imposition of a condition of approval is challenged, what LUBA must determine is whether the evidence in the record would lead a reasonable person to conclude that there is a need for the condition to further a relevant planning purpose. Wastewood Recyclers v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 258 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. If the challenged decision does not explain the purpose of a condition, it is more difficult for LUBA to conclude imposition of the condition is supported by substantial evidence in the record. Wastewood Recyclers v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 258 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Substantial evidence is evidence a reasonable person would rely upon in reaching a decision. In determining whether a decision is supported by substantial evidence, LUBA considers all the evidence in the record to which it is cited, including evidence that refutes or detracts from that relied on by the local government decision maker. Eckis v. Linn County, 22 Or LUBA 27 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A petitioner's substantial evidence challenge will be rejected where only one type of evidence relied upon by a local government decision maker is challenged and there are other types of unchallenged believable evidence in the record which support the decision. Wentland v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 15 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the local government's findings are inadequate, no purpose would be served by determining whether they are supported by substantial evidence. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code requires that a conditional use not substantially limit or impair use of petitioner's property, and the local government concedes that the proposed use will cause negative impacts on the use of petitioner's property, but cites no evidence in the record that (1) these impacts will not substantially limit or impair use of petitioner's property, or (2) required mitigation measures will sufficiently reduce these impacts, LUBA will uphold petitioner's evidentiary challenge. Reynolds v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 412 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. While a local government cannot rely upon evidence of changed circumstances since adoption of its comprehensive plan to justify noncompliance with plan approval criteria for plan and zone map amendments, it may be able to rely upon evidence of changed circumstances as a basis for finding compliance with applicable plan and zone map amendment approval criteria. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the applicant for a nonconforming use determination presents evidence which is inconsistent and vague, such evidence is not substantial evidence to establish the existence of a nonconforming use. Smith v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 228 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where findings are not essential to the challenged decision, it is unnecessary for LUBA to determine whether those findings are supported by substantial evidence in the record. Lung v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 302 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a U.S. Census Bureau form was not placed before the local decision maker before it adopted the appealed decision, the form has no bearing on the issue raised in the petition for review of whether there is sufficient evidence in the local record to support the challenged decision. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where findings are not essential to the challenged decision, it is not necessary for LUBA to determine whether those findings are supported by substantial evidence in the record. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. That a board of county commissioners' findings are inconsistent with findings previously adopted by the county hearings officer provides no basis for reversal or remand so long as the board of county commissioners' findings are supported by substantial evidence. Carsey v. Deschutes County, 21 Or LUBA 118 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where there is evidence in the record to "clearly support" the challenged decision, there is also necessarily "substantial evidence" in the record to support the decision. Smith v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 111 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Although a local government is not legally obligated to identify or discuss in its findings evidence it chooses not to believe, it may be that without such an explanation LUBA will be unable to determine that the findings the city does adopt are supported by substantial evidence. Wethers v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 78 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. No purpose is served by LUBA reviewing the evidentiary support for inadequate findings. Washington Co. Farm Bureau v. Washington Co., 21 Or LUBA 51 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where conflicting evidence in the record does not so undermine the evidence relied upon by the local government as to make it unreasonable for the local government to rely upon that evidence, the choice between such conflicting believable evidence belongs to the local government and will not be disturbed by LUBA. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 21 Or LUBA 18 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. If a decision which relies on evidence from site observations by local decision makers is appealed to LUBA and challenged on substantial evidence grounds, LUBA will review the evidentiary support for that decision, including evidence from such site observations and rebuttal evidence, to determine whether it would be reasonable to rely upon it. Angel v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 1 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner makes an evidentiary challenge, but LUBA must in any case remand the appealed decision for further local proceedings which will include the submittal of additional evidence, LUBA will not determine whether there is substantial evidence in the existing record to support the appealed decision. Angel v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 1 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. To overturn on evidentiary grounds a local government's determination that an applicable approval standard is not met, it is not enough for a petitioner to show that there is substantial evidence in the record to support his position. Rather, the evidence must be such that a reasonable trier of fact could only say the petitioner's evidence should be believed. West v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 433 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. The choice between different reasonable conclusions, based on the evidence in the whole record, belongs to the local government. West v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 433 (1991).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where the findings are inadequate, no purpose would be served by determining whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. If a plan policy is not an approval standard for the challenged decision, it is of no consequence that there is not substantial evidence in the record to support a determination of compliance with that policy. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a purpose statement in the local code's conditional use provisions states general objectives only, and does not purport to act as an independent approval standard, petitioners' contention that evidence in the record establishes the proposed use is not in compliance with that purpose statement provides no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision approving a conditional use permit. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 20 Or LUBA 178 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Whether statements in the county's decision which are not findings of fact, but rather are recitations of evidence and argument submitted by the applicant, are supported by substantial evidence in the record is of no consequence. Shirley v. Washington County, 20 Or LUBA 127 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where LUBA determines the local government's findings are inadequate to establish compliance with relevant approval standards, no purpose is served by determining whether those findings are supported by substantial evidence. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where a local code provision is not an approval standard for the appealed zone change, inadequacy of the evidence supporting local government findings addressing that provision provides no basis for reversal or remand. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In addition to demonstrating that a challenged finding is inadequate or unsupported by substantial evidence, a petitioner must demonstrate the challenged finding is necessary to support the challenged decision. Griffith v. City of Milwaukie, 19 Or LUBA 300 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A challenge to the adequacy of and evidentiary support for a finding that a modification of a previously imposed condition of land use approval is justified based on changed circumstances provides no basis for reversal or remand, where none of the applicable criteria require that modifications of conditions of approval be based on changed circumstances. Griffith v. City of Milwaukie, 19 Or LUBA 300 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where an ordinance requires that site plans be prepared by persons with designated credentials and the planning director is delegated responsibility for determining the qualifications of a person to prepare a site plan, a party wishing to challenge the planning director's decision to accept a site plan must offer some explanation, to the local government or to LUBA, why the person preparing the site plan is not qualified. If a party fails to do so, LUBA will not find the local government committed error because the record lacks substantial evidence that the person preparing the site plan was qualified to do so. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A city decision to require, as a condition of approval, dedication of a right-of-way to improve street system efficiency and to provide future access to interior developable parcels is supported by adequate findings and substantial evidence in the record where the city's findings and the evidentiary record are sufficient to show a legitimate planning purpose is furthered by requiring the right-of-way dedication. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where LUBA concludes a reasonable person could reach the decision adopted by the local government, in view of all the evidence in the record, LUBA defers to the local government's choice between conflicting evidence. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Where petitioner's traffic engineer and the city engineer present conflicting testimony concerning which sight distance standards apply and the correct method of calculating sight distances, the city may properly rely on its engineer's testimony. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In determining whether there is substantial evidence in the record to support a local government decision, LUBA considers all relevant evidence in the record cited by the parties, including both that which supports the local government decision and that which detracts from it. Eckis v. Linn County, 19 Or LUBA 15 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Just as the choice between reasonable conflicting evidence belongs to the local decision maker, the choice between different reasonable conclusions, based on undisputed evidence in the whole record, also belongs to the local decision maker. Where the decision maker's conclusions are among the reasonable conclusions which could be drawn from the evidence in the record, LUBA will conclude the decision is supported by substantial evidence. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 18 Or LUBA 820 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. Although city findings concerning the percentage effect of up to two hours of shading on solar heating effectiveness are not supported by substantial evidence, LUBA will affirm the city's decision that a standard requiring mitigation of adverse affects through design treatment is met where other findings and evidence are adequate to show the shading impacts are mitigated. Sunburst II Homeowners v. City of West Linn, 18 Or LUBA 695 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. In determining whether evidence is substantial, LUBA must consider the evidence in the whole record, both evidence which supports and evidence which detracts from the challenged decision. ORS 197.837(7)(a)(C); Younger v. City of Portland, 305 Or 346, 356, 752 P2d 262 (1988). Weist v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 627 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA does not substitute its judgment for that of a local government where the evidence in the record is conflicting, and reasonable persons could adopt different findings or reach conflicting conclusions. In such circumstances, LUBA will affirm a local government's choice between conflicting, but supported, findings or conclusions, even though a reasonable person could also have adopted different findings or conclusions based on the evidence in the record. Douglas v. Multnomah County, 18 Or LUBA 607 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. A local government is not required to explain in its findings why it chose not to rely on certain evidence, as long as LUBA can conclude a reasonable decision maker could decide as the local government did, in view of all the evidence in the record. Douglas v. Multnomah County, 18 Or LUBA 607 (1990).

28.8.7 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Unsupported by Substantial Evidence. LUBA need not review the evidentiary support for findings which are not essential to the decision below. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 18 Or LUBA 587 (1990).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A local government's erroneous statement in the findings that it was not required to consider the petitioner's testimony does not establish that the local government committed procedural error where other findings establish that the local government did consider that testimony. ODOT v. Grant County, 80 Or LUBA 192 (2019).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA concludes that a local government's conclusion that an application did not meet an applicable approval criterion was a valid basis for denial, although any error committed with respect to alternative or independent bases for denial would generally not provide a basis for reversal or remand, remand is nonetheless required where LUBA also concludes that the local government failed to address a threshold argument from the applicant that, if correct, would prevent the local government from applying criteria that would prohibit approval of the application. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where petitioner argues the city governing body's finding regarding the applicability of a zoning ordinance was erroneous, and the city concedes the finding is erroneous, but when the error is not critical to the city council's interpretation or ultimate conclusions, the error does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 78 Or LUBA 509 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Petitioner's argument that the county hearings officer's failure to adopt findings of compliance with a county code provision (Washington County Development Code (CDC 421-7.8)) is not a position presented "without probable cause" sufficient to entitle an award of attorney fees against a non-prevailing party, where LUBA agreed with petitioner that the hearings officer's failure to adopt any findings explicitly addressing CDC 421-7.8 would warrant remand, unless, as occurred here, other findings with respect to other standards (CDC 422) in the hearings officer's decision were sufficient to address the substantive standards set forth in CDC 421-7.8, and therefore the hearings officer's failure to adopt findings addressing CDC 421-7.8 was harmless error. McAndrew v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 1094 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Any error in a planning commission's finding that the petitioner lacked standing to file a local appeal is harmless, where on appeal to the board of commissioners the board disposed of petitioner's appeal on the merits and did not rely on standing as a basis to deny the appeal. Richards v. Jefferson County, 77 Or LUBA 152 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The Goal 5 rule, at OAR chapter 660, division 023, includes a "standard" process for inventorying, evaluating and protecting natural resources, at OAR 660-023-0030 through -050, that includes rules for evaluating the ESEE consequences for allowing, limiting, or prohibiting uses that conflict with a natural resource site. The Goal 5 rule also includes "special" standards and procedures for specific types of Goal 5 resources, including those that govern aggregate mineral resources, at OAR 660-023-0180. According to OAR 660-023-0020(1), sometimes both the standard process and a special process apply; sometimes the special process supersedes the standard process in whole, or in part, and in case of conflict the specific process controls. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a) requires the local government to identify conflicts with existing and approved uses located within a determined "impact area" limited in size to 1,500 feet from the boundaries of the mining area, unless factual information indicates "significant potential conflicts" beyond 1,500 feet. After deciding to allow mining under OAR 660-023-0180(5), the county must also go on to consider whether to allow, limit, or prevent new or future conflicting uses within the impact area pursuant to OAR 660-023-0180(7). For this limited inquiry, the county must conduct the analysis pursuant to the standard ESEE process in OAR 660-023-0040 and -0050. OAR 660-023-0040(3) requires local governments to "determine an impact area for each significant resource site. The impact area shall be drawn to include only the area in which allowed uses could adversely affect the identified resource," which means that unlike the impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), the impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0040(3) is not initially limited to 1,500 feet and the geographic extent of the impact area is determined by evaluating whether "allowed uses could adversely affect the identified resource," rather than evaluating whether there is factual information indicating "significant potential conflicts" beyond an initial 1,500 feet. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Petitioners have not established that a county's failure to determine an impact area for purposes of OAR 660-023-0180(7) pursuant to the standard ESEE process at OAR 660-023-0040(3) is more than harmless error, where it is not clear that an impact area determined under OAR 660-023-0040(3) would be larger or different than the one the county established under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), petitioners have not identified any new conflicting uses within a more expansive impact area that could adversely impact the mining site and that therefore should have been limited or prevented based on the arguably more sensitive OAR 660-023-0040(3) test, compared to the "significant potential conflict" test that the county employed under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), and because the applicant is the only party that could possibly be harmed by employing a potentially smaller impact area as determined under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a), and the applicant is not challenging that potentially smaller impact area but rather is actively defending it on appeal. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. In the context of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment to inventory a significant aggregate site and allow mining of that site under Goal 5, if the local government concludes based on its ESEE analysis that new conflicting uses should be allowed within the impact area under the existing comprehensive plan and land use regulations, the local government's program to achieve the goal in that regard may consist of simply relying on its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to protect the resource site from new conflicting uses pursuant to OAR 660-023-0040(2)(a). Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 452 (2018).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Remand is necessary where two city councilors disclose the existence, but not the substance, of an ex parte communication, and the record includes no basis to conclude that the substance of the communications was incidental or immaterial. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if a local government errs in failing to place a letter from the applicant to the city attorney into the public record of the application, the procedural error does not prejudice the petitioner's substantial right or provide a basis for remand under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(B), where the letter was never placed in front of or relied upon by the final decision maker, and the letter includes no arguments or evidence intended to demonstrate compliance with approval criteria. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A city may err in introducing a copy of the application into the record after the close of the evidentiary record before the city council, the final decision maker. However, the procedural error does not provide a basis for remand under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(B) where the petitioner does not demonstrate that the procedural error played a role in the final decision, or otherwise prejudiced the petitioner's substantial rights. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A city council's erroneous finding that zoning ordinance text amendments are non-substantive provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner fails to show the Mischaracterization of the nature of the text amendments led the city to fail to address applicable law. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will reject an argument that, without a master plan map, a local government cannot determine exactly how many lots exist within the master plan area or whether existing development exceeds a maximum number of dwelling units imposed in the master plan, where the county adopted findings identifying how many dwellings currently exist within the master plan area, and the petitioner fails to challenge those findings. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's erroneous statement that a portion of a meander channel that the State of Oregon quitclaimed to an adjoining property owner in 1985 was "in existence" prior to 1985 is harmless error, where the remainder of the hearings officer's findings make it clear that he was not finding that the quitclaimed portion of land existed as a discrete and lawful unit of land prior to 1985, but that the meander channel as a whole existed as, or as part of, a discrete unit of land owned by the state since statehood in 1859. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 473 (2017).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a local government arguably erred by refusing to accept certain evidence, but the local government also takes the position that the evidence is irrelevant, and a petitioner at LUBA assigns error only to the local government's refusal to accept the evidence without also challenging the local government's finding that the evidence is irrelevant, any error the county may have made in refusing to accept the evidence is harmless. Wood v. Crook County, 74 Or LUBA 278 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's incorrect statement regarding the applicability of a code provision is harmless error where the petitioner's argument about the meaning of the code provision is simply incorrect and accordingly, remand would serve no purpose. Reinert v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 427 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. It is likely that the Court of Appeals would not require that a land use hearings officer ruling on a request to alter a nonconforming use must apply the legal principle stated in Parks v. Tillamook Co. Comm./Spliid, 11 Or App 177, 196-97, 501 P2d 85 (1972), that nonconforming uses are disfavored and subject to strict scrutiny under state law. However, where it does not appear that the Parks principle played any role in the hearings officer's decision, the hearings officer's citation to Parks provides no basis for reversal or remand. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's error in identifying 1984 instead of 1962 as the date a composting operation became nonconforming, for purposes of verifying the lawful existence of the proposed nonconforming use, is harmless error, where the hearings officer concluded, based on substantial evidence, that a composting operation did not exist at all on the property until 1990. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's error in identifying 1984 instead of 1962 as the date a composting operation became nonconforming did not prejudice the applicant's substantial rights to present evidence regarding the lawful existence of the use prior to the date the use became nonconforming. Any remand to correct the erroneous citation to 1984 would focus on the correct date of nonconformity, 1962, and the applicant had a full opportunity to present evidence that the operation lawfully existed in 1962. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will not consider the parties' arguments about whether a city erred by faulting an applicant for referring to proposed open space as a park, where the accuracy of the applicant's description of the open space was not a basis for the city's denial of the permit application. J. Conser and Sons, LLC v. City of Millersburg, 73 Or LUBA 57 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The lack of evidentiary support for a finding that a vegetative buffer is superior to a distance buffer at reducing visual incompatibilities is not harmless error, where the only evidence on that point is to the contrary, and under the local government's interpretation of the compatibility standard whether one buffer method is better at reducing or minimizing adverse visual impacts than another method appears to be a legitimate consideration. Forest Park Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 193 (2016).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A city council's erroneous interpretation that the maximum 180-day period for a temporary use permit must begin on the date the permit is issued is harmless error, and provides no basis for remand, where the applicant never asked that the 180 period begin on a date after the permit was issued. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a city council adopts alternative interpretations of a disputed standard that allows building height increases, and approves a proposed building height increase under both interpretations, the city's decision must be affirmed where the petitioner at LUBA only assigns error to one of the city council's interpretations. Preserve the Pearl, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 261 (2015).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's decision to deny verification of an asphalt batch plant does not amount to a decision to approve and verify the "nature and extent" of a previously existing concrete batch plant on the same property, where the hearings officer's findings that cite evidence regarding the previously existing concrete batch plant are not essential to the decision to deny the application before the hearings officer to verify an asphalt batch plant. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 71 Or LUBA 148 (2015).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. That a local government may have erroneously found that a natural gas pipeline is not a water-related use provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the county does not rely on that finding in denying the application for permit approval for the pipeline. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A notice of decision's characterization of a decision as legislative when it is actually a quasi-judicial decision does not, in itself, warrant remand so long as the relevant criteria were applied and there were no procedural errors that prejudiced petitioner's substantial rights. Warren v. Josephine County, 67 Or LUBA 74 (2013).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Failure to assign error to the county's primary finding, pursuant to ORS 197.835(7), that the text amendment is consistent with "specific policies" in the county's comprehensive plan that are the basis for the amendment, makes it unnecessary to address the petitioner's challenge to the county's alternative findings that the amendment is consistent with the statewide planning goals. Waste Not of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 65 Or LUBA 142 (2012).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if the record does not include evidence supporting a county's declaration that an emergency exists, allowing an ordinance to take effect immediately rather than 90 days later, the lack of evidentiary support for the declaration does not provide a basis to reverse or remand the ordinance, where the only identified consequence is that the ordinance became effective 90 days later instead of on adoption, and in either case the ordinance is effective at the time of LUBA's review. Waste Not of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 65 Or LUBA 142 (2012).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A petitioner's challenge to alternative findings that a parcel being rezoned was legally created does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the petitioner fails to challenge the county's primary finding that the rezoning standards do not require a finding that the parcel was legally created. O'Brien v. Lincoln County, 65 Or LUBA 286 (2012).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A finding expressing an erroneous understanding of the local decision-maker's standard of evidentiary review is harmless error at best, where no party identifies any findings addressing the approval criteria or evidence in which the decision-maker applied that erroneous standard of review. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a county's decision that land is not suitable for commercial forest use misapplies the test that LUBA determined must be applied in an earlier appeal, but the county also properly applies and adequately explains why the land does not qualify as suitable for commercial forest uses under the correct test, the county's misapplication of the test does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Anderson v. Coos County, 62 Or LUBA 38 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An allegedly erroneous and overbroad code interpretation that all commercial uses allowed in any commercial zone are allowed under the use category "retail and wholesale trade facilities" in an airport overlay zone does not warrant reversal or remand, where the interpretative error, if any, does not undermine the governing body's principal interpretation that the proposed travel plaza is a "retail and wholesale trade facility." Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 62 Or LUBA 247 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a local government approves a cell tower based on the demonstrated coverage needs of a particular cellular provider, a finding suggesting that the tower could also serve the needs of another provider who did not submit evidence of coverage needs is an extraneous finding, and at most harmless error. Oberdorfer v. Deschutes County, 62 Or LUBA 296 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. It is harmless error to rely on new evidence that is accepted after the close of the record regarding water quality impacts of a proposed alteration to a nonconforming use, where the hearings officer also denied the proposed alteration based on fire safety impacts, and the petitioner/applicant does not challenge that basis for denial. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's alleged failure to process a permit application under "Type II" procedures, which provide for a de novo hearing on appeal of an administrative decision, does not provide a basis for remand, where the county initially processed the application under "Type I" procedures that provide for a hearing limited to the issues raised in the appeal petition, but in fact the county provided a de novo hearing on the appeal not limited to the issues raised in the appeal petition. Jensen Properties v. Washington County, 61 Or LUBA 155 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's error in quoting and applying superseded code provisions in its decision is harmless error, where the petitioner fails to identify any substantive difference between the superseded and current code standards. Jensen Properties v. Washington County, 61 Or LUBA 155 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a local government provides the decision maker with the original subdivision application narrative but fails to provide the decision maker with the amended application narrative, where the differences between the two narratives are such that LUBA cannot determine whether the local government's failure to provide the amended application narrative to the decision maker was harmless error, remand is required. Montgomery v. City of Dunes City, 60 Or LUBA 274 (2010).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will not resolve arguments that a $660 fee to conduct a hearing on remand is inconsistent with ORS 215.422, where the county notified the petitioner/applicant of the hearing fee but ultimately held the remand hearing without requiring petitioner to pay the fee. Under these circumstances, LUBA's resolution of the issue would be advisory. Easterly v. Polk County, 59 Or LUBA 417 (2009).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. ORS 197.829(2) permits LUBA to interpret a local code provision in the first instance where there is a missing or inadequate governing body interpretation, but does not permit LUBA to supply missing findings of compliance with applicable approval criteria. Holbrook v. City of Rockaway Beach, 58 Or LUBA 179 (2009).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA has affirmed a county's determination to waive certain road improvement standards under a local code provision prohibiting the county from requiring road improvements that are not roughly proportional to the impact of proposed development, any error the county may have made in also granting variances to those road improvement standards under general variance standards is harmless error. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's error in failing to identify which farm practices on nearby lands are excluded from the significant change/increase analysis because they are part of "hobby farms" and are not intended to generate a profit is harmless error, where the governing body adopted unchallenged planning commission findings that discuss impacts of the proposed mining on farm practices without distinguishing between "hobby farms" and other farms, and conclude that any impacts on farm practices will be insignificant. Comden v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 214 (2008).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. While a county's failure to describe accepted farming practices on nearby lands would likely require remand under the ORS 215.296(1) significant change/increase standard or a code provision implementing that standard, such a failure is not necessarily reversible error under a similar code significant change/increase standard that does not implement the statute. Any failure to describe accepted farming practices under the code standard is harmless, where the county adopted unchallenged findings, supported by substantial evidence, that the proposed mining will not significantly affect any farm or forest practices. Comden v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 214 (2008).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if a local government erred in concluding that noise and air quality standards are "performance standards" rather than approval criteria applicable to a proposed transportation center, that error is harmless where the noise and air quality standards apply only to specified uses, and the specified uses do not include anything resembling the proposed transportation center. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 56 Or LUBA 240 (2008).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a subdivision approval standard was waived under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), a hearings officer's findings addressing that standard in approving a subsequent application for subdivision approval could not provide a basis for remand of the subdivision decision, even if those findings were defective in some way. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the petitioner raises a number of issues, some directed at a remanded decision that is not before the city, and others at the application that is before the city, and the city prudently adopts findings addressing all issues raised, the findings that address issues regarding an application that is not before the city are surplusage and not binding on the city or parties, and LUBA will not address challenges to those findings. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 55 Or LUBA 350 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's finding that can be read to conclude that a code provision does not apply is not a basis for remand, where the hearings officer adopted a planning director's decision that clearly applies the code provision and determines that the application complies with it, and petitioners do not challenge the director's findings. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 1 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Remand is necessary where a hearings officer misunderstood the applicant's argument regarding a critical piece of evidence, that misunderstanding played a significant role in denying the application, and LUBA cannot determine if the hearings officer's misunderstanding was harmless error. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An erroneous interpretation that appears in the prefatory section of a hearings officer decision is harmless error, where the hearings officer never applied the interpretation in the body of the decision and there is no indication that the erroneous interpretation made any difference in evaluating the evidence. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's conclusion that OAR 660-010-0010 does not apply to a decision designating forest land as marginal lands under ORS 197.247 (1991) is harmless error, where the decision is supported by an analysis that is based on objective, empirical measurements of forest productivity consistent with the rule's requirements. Herring v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 417 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An alleged inconsistency between the oral decision by the governing body and the final written decision signed on the governing body's behalf by the planning director is at most harmless error and is not itself a basis for remand, where the governing body's decision must be remanded for additional findings in any case, and the decision on remand will supersede the challenged decision, rendering any error moot. O'Rourke v. Union County, 54 Or LUBA 614 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's erroneous finding that designating forest land as marginal lands under ORS 197.247 (1991) is not subject to OAR 660-006-0010, which governs the inventory of forest lands, is harmless error, where the county's decision nonetheless complies with the substantive requirements of the rule. Anderson v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 669 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's statements on matters beyond the application before him are dicta and harmless error, where the statements appear to play no role in the decision before the hearings officer, and have no binding or presumptive effect on other decisions. Chackel Family Trust v. City of Bend, 53 Or LUBA 385 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer had authority to modify a prior permit's condition of approval requiring a perimeter fence, notwithstanding a code provision that prohibits a modification that is a "substitute for an appeal," where the requested modification is to approve a different fence location following a court order two years after the permit decision, and thus the modification could not have been the subject of an appeal. Chackel Family Trust v. City of Bend, 53 Or LUBA 385 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where in adopting a committed exception under OAR 660-004-0028 the local government includes findings addressing some of the standards for adopting a reasons exception under OAR 660-004-0020(2), LUBA will remand to the local government to either delete those findings or explain what relevance they have to the committed exception. Friends of Linn County v. Linn County, 53 Or LUBA 420 (2007).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Any error in adopting findings concluding that omission of information in the application can never constitute a "misstatement of fact," for purposes of determining whether to refer a revocation request to a hearing, is harmless error, where the planning director nonetheless adopted findings addressing whether particular omissions were material misstatements of fact. Emami v. City of Lake Oswego, 52 Or LUBA 18 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a hearings officer reopens the evidentiary record to allow parties to present arguments and evidence concerning whether a different adjustment/variance criterion than had been applied before should be applied to an application for an adjustment/variance, and petitioners do not argue that the hearings officer's actions failed to provide petitioners with an adequate opportunity to present their arguments on the merits concerning which adjustment/variance criterion should apply, petitioners fail to demonstrate that the hearings officer's action resulted in prejudice to their substantial rights or that any substantive error on the hearings officer's part was not harmless error. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A plan amendment provision stating that the applicant for an amendment must state "compelling reasons" why the amendment should be considered at this time, rather than as part of periodic review, is not an approval criterion requiring a particular finding. To the extent a finding is required, where the petitioner does not dispute that the application stated a compelling reason to proceed immediately, the failure to adopt a finding to that effect is harmless error. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 471 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA need not resolve the parties' legal dispute over whether a condition of subdivision approval requiring construction of a street through a neighboring development is consistent with conditions, covenants and restrictions governing that neighboring development, where only the circuit court has jurisdiction to finally resolve that dispute, and the local government has adequately established an alternative basis to impose the condition regardless of how that legal dispute is resolved. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will not affirm a decision under the harmless error doctrine or ORS 197.835(11)(b) notwithstanding failure to adopt findings applicable to conditional uses allowed in the zone, based on findings adopted to address similar site review standards, where it is not clear that the zoning district provides for the proposed use at all. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 52 Or LUBA 582 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. That a city's decision is based in part on an erroneous interpretation of applicable law provides no basis for remand where its decision is separately based on findings that correctly interpret and apply the applicable law. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if a hearings officer's assumption that the applicant could legally conduct both an outdoor mass gathering and a smaller gathering during the same three month period is erroneous, any error is harmless and not a basis to reverse or remand the decision, where a proposal for outdoor gatherings was not part of the application, and the hearings officer's statement was merely dicta, not binding on the parties in any way. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The fact that a local government could have reached the decision it did without considering and relying on improperly received evidence does not make that error harmless. When a local government relies on evidence not properly before it to render a decision, it violates the parties' substantial rights. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Oregon City, 50 Or LUBA 87 (2005).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. That a county theoretically could have adopted a rezoning decision by resolution as a zoning map "correction" under a code process that would not require written notice to petitioner does not mean that the county's failure to provide written notice to petitioner as required under the code process it did use was harmless error. Sullivan v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 543 (2005).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a land use decision expressly incorporates a particular document, that document is incorporated whether or not it is attached to the challenged decision when mailed. That the local government inadvertently attached the wrong document to the decision when mailing it does not have the legal effect of incorporating the attached document, and the act of attaching the wrong document is harmless error. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 746 (2005).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's error in finding that ORS 215.253 imposes an absolute bar on adopting and applying local land use regulations to farm uses provides no basis for remand of land use decision approving a feedlot, where petitioners identify no existing, applicable local land use regulations that apply to county approval of a feedlot. Friends of Jefferson County v. Jefferson County, 48 Or LUBA 107 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A land use hearings officer's findings that a radio tower proposal would not increase radio frequency interference would provide no basis for remand, even if the findings are inadequate and the findings are not supported by substantial evidence, where the local government's authority to regulate radio frequency interference is preempted by federal law. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will not resolve a petitioner's challenge to a county's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy where, under the facts found by the county and affirmed by LUBA, the plan policy would be applied the same way under either petitioner's or the county's interpretation. Under such circumstances, the interpretative dispute between the parties is merely hypothetical, and the alleged misinterpretation provides no basis for reversal or remand. Doob v. Josephine County, 48 Or LUBA 227 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A local government's failure to adequately identify documents it intends to incorporate by reference as findings, and its adoption of testimony as findings, are not by themselves a basis for reversal or remand. Instead, the attempted incorporation fails and the city may not rely on such documents or testimony to provide "findings" in support of the decision. If the city has adopted other findings that adequately support the decision, the failed incorporation and improper attempt to adopt testimony as findings are harmless error. Staus v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a decision cites three reasons for rejecting an alternative building location proposed by a permit opponent, under a code provision authorizing the local government to require alternative building locations to protect scenic views from adjoining properties, potential flaws in two of the three reasons are not a basis for reversal or remand, where the third reason is an independent and sufficient basis to reject the proposed alternative. Carrigg v. City of Enterprise, 48 Or LUBA 328 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A local government's failure to address issues raised regarding whether a enhanced wetland project is consistent with the purpose of the EFU zone is at most harmless error, where petitioners do not explain why the purpose statement is an approval criterion. Cadwell v. Union County, 48 Or LUBA 500 (2005).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A city's alleged misinterpretation of a code provision does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the only significance petitioner attaches to the misinterpretation relates to an issue that was not raised below and is therefore beyond LUBA's review. Comrie v. City of Pendleton, 47 Or LUBA 38 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a planning commission fails to formally appoint a three-person citizens' advisory committee from the community at large when considering major land use regulation amendment, as required by an applicable citizen involvement comprehensive plan requirement, that failure does not constitute reversible error where the planning commission in fact seeks the advice of four members of the city's design review committee who are citizens of the community. Where no party disputes that the design review committee members are members of the community at large, the planning commission's decision to seek input from the design review committee either constitutes de facto compliance with the citizen involvement requirement or renders any failure to formally appoint a citizens advisory committee a procedural error that resulted in no prejudice to the petitioner or other citizens of the community. Dobson v. City of Newport, 47 Or LUBA 267 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even assuming a county errs in "rounding up" rather than "rounding down" in calculating the number of developable and undeveloped acres under a standard that requires one undeveloped acre for every developed acre, that error provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the result of rounding up is consistent with the purpose of the standard, to ensure that the number of developed acres does not exceed the number of undeveloped acres. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if it was error for the city to refer to proposed reconfigurations of existing lots as "tracts," where petitioners identify no reason why the erroneous reference provides a basis for reversal or remand, the reference is at most harmless error and does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. South v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 558 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if a finding that an existing sign is illegal is erroneous, that error is harmless and does not provide a basis for remand, where the legality of the existing sign plays no role in approving the sign expansion under the applicable approval criteria. Cotter v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 612 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Any error in a hearings officer's conclusion that the terms of an easement allow a public utility to file a land use application without the property owner's signature is harmless, where the code allows a public utility with condemnation authority to sign land use applications, and there is no dispute that the applicant is a public utility with condemnation powers under applicable statutes. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA affirms one of two independent bases for not requiring a subdivision applicant to provide access to an adjoining property owner's property, petitioner's challenge to the other basis for the city's decision can provide no basis for remand and LUBA will not consider the challenge. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 46 Or LUBA 735 (2004).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An erroneous assumption in a supplemental study regarding traffic impacts of development under proposed zoning for purposes of OAR 660-012-0060(2)(d) is harmless error, where the initial traffic study reached the same conclusion of compliance with the rule using the correct assumption, and petitioner offers no reason to believe that remand to correct the erroneous assumption in the supplemental study will alter that ultimate conclusion. Friends of Marion County v. City of Keizer, 45 Or LUBA 236 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if a city erroneously applied its zoning ordinance standards for lots or parcels to an applicant's request for a lot line adjustment, that error provides no basis for reversal or remand where the city's decision to deny the lot line adjustment request was not based on those standards. Smith v. City of St. Paul, 45 Or LUBA 281 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The lack of evidence supporting findings that the subject property has no physical features that might limit development is not a basis for reversal or remand, where no party contended below that any physical features of the property limit development. Bruce Packing Company v. City of Silverton, 45 Or LUBA 334 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Remand to adopt specific findings addressing a local criterion requiring that comprehensive plan amendments be "in the public interest and will be of general public benefit" is not warranted where the findings and narrative text of the amendments make it abundantly clear that the local government believes that the amendments are in the public interest and will benefit the public. City of Woodburn v. Marion County, 45 Or LUBA 423 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. LUBA will not affirm a county decision that must otherwise be reversed on an alternative ground that was not considered by the county and for which there is no evidentiary support. Perkins v. Umatilla County, 45 Or LUBA 445 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An applicant's failure to submit a farm management plan, as required by the county code, provides no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner's argument is that the farm management plan is required to compare the income that will be generated by a proposed hunting preserve with the income that is generated by the commercial farm on the property and LUBA affirms the county's interpretation of the code that relevant approval criteria do not require a comparison of hunting preserve and commercial farm incomes. Underhill v. Wasco County, 45 Or LUBA 566 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's erroneous finding that land is currently employed for nursery stock production is harmless error, where petitioners do not establish that nursery stock production must precede issuance of a permit that is necessary to construct an accessory greenhouse. Lorenz v. Deschutes County, 45 Or LUBA 635 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's erroneous application of an "adequate herbaceous forage" stand ard in approving a nonfarm partition is not harmless error, where the county focused preponderantly on that standard and failed to adopt findings addressing the required considerations under the correct standard. Hanna v. Crook County, 44 Or LUBA 386 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where five tax lots make up one parcel, a hearings officer's erroneous finding that the tax lots make up two parcels is not a basis for reversal or remand of a permit for a forest dwelling under ORS 215.750(1) if there are a sufficient number of parcels within the 160-acre template to satisfy the approval standard without considering those five tax lots. Testa v. Clackamas County, 44 Or LUBA 402 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA's remand requires the county to resolve an issue regarding three tax lots, but the county on remand accepts evidence on broader issues, the county's error, if any, in confining its final decision to resolving the dispute regarding the three tax lots is harmless, given that the county could have initially chosen to confine the remand proceeding to the basis for LUBA's remand. CCCOG v. Columbia County, 44 Or LUBA 438 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. That certain documents may not have been provided to the planning commission provides no basis for remand, where the planning commission decision was appealed to the city governing body, the governing body adopted the city's final decision and there is no contention that the disputed documents were provided to the city governing body. Lord v. City of Oregon City, 43 Or LUBA 361 (2002).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA finds that a local government correctly determined that a particular conditional use approval criterion applies, but LUBA disagrees with the local government's reasons for concluding that the criterion applies, the local government's erroneous reasons for correctly concluding that the criterion applies provide no basis for reversal or remand. Dundas v. Lincoln County, 43 Or LUBA 407 (2002).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where persons other than the resident will participate in a home occupation, but the county cites the wrong zoning code provision that is violated by such participation by nonresidents, LUBA will not remand the decision for the county to address the correct code provision where the decision includes other bases for denial of the application. Hick v. Marion County, 43 Or LUBA 483 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where LUBA cannot tell if the local government simply weighed conflicting evidence, or instead impermissibly rejected the opponent's evidence for failure to satisfy a nonexistent burden of proof, the local government's error in explicitly shifting the burden of proof to the opponents is not harmless. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Even if evidence is improperly accepted by the local government, remand is not appropriate where petitioners fail to demonstrate that the improperly accepted evidence is potentially relevant to an approval criterion. Evidence regarding development of a neighborhood plan, ownership patterns in the neighborhood, and whether a proposed hotel can meet height limitations is not potentially relevant to a criterion that requires a proposed hotel to be consistent with regard to "building size, height, color, material and form" with other structures in the neighborhood. Terra v. City of Newport, 40 Or LUBA 286 (2001).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. It is error for a member of a local governing body to announce that he is close friends with the parties and will not participate in the decision on a variance request, but nevertheless later make the motion to approve the written decision and vote on the written decision. However, the error is harmless where the member of the governing body does not participate in the evidentiary hearing or the 4-0 oral vote at the conclusion of the evidentiary hearing to approve the variance. Reagan v. City of Oregon City, 39 Or LUBA 672 (2001).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Any error in failing to comply with code provisions for amending the Metro UGB is harmless, where the pertinent code provisions are not based on statute, goal or rule; the provisions have been superseded by new standards that would apply on remand; and it is undisputed that the decision does not violate the new standards. Citizens Against Irresponsible Growth v. Metro, 39 Or LUBA 539 (2001).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A county's inadequate findings of compliance with inapplicable approval criteria are harmless error, and provide no basis to reverse or remand the challenged decision. Wolverton v. Crook County, 39 Or LUBA 256 (2000).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a permit application omits required information, the omitted information is not contained elsewhere in the record, and the omitted information is necessary to demonstrate compliance with an applicable approval standard, the failure to provide the required information is not harmless procedural error and provides a basis for reversal or remand. Hausam v. City of Salem, 39 Or LUBA 51 (2000).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A lack of supporting information in an application does not provide a basis for reversal or remand when the missing information is not necessary to determine compliance with a specific approval standard. Roth v. Jackson County, 38 Or LUBA 894 (2000).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. It is inconsistent with ORS 215.296(1) to arbitrarily limit the scope of analysis to properties within 500 feet of the subject property, where doing so results in failure to consider substantial evidence in the record of significant impacts from the proposed use to accepted farming practices on lands beyond 500 feet. However, where petitioners fail to challenge a finding that there are no significant impacts within 500 feet, and an extrapolation of that finding to lands beyond 500 feet, the county's error does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Wilbur Residents v. Douglas County, 37 Or LUBA 156 (1999).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a county code provision requires a de novo review and a hearings officer's decision includes language that suggests the hearings officer erroneously believed a de novo review was not required, there is no basis for reversal or remand where record makes it clear that the hearings officer nevertheless conducted the requisite de novo review. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a local government decision does not incorporate a new city but erroneously applies LCDC's rules concerning incorporation of new cities in the course of taking an exception to Goal 14, the error is harmless and provides no basis for reversal or remand. James v. Josephine County, 35 Or LUBA 493 (1999).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where an approval criterion requires compliance with two off-site impact standards and a hearings officer finds that neither impact standard is met, the possibility that the hearings officer's finding concerning one of the impact standards is defective provides no basis for remand where the finding concerning the other impact standard is upheld and is sufficient by itself to support permit denial. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the zoning ordinance requirements for giving notice of permit hearings are inconsistent with statutory requirements, the statutory conflict is not rendered harmless error by a zoning code requirement that the county give "any other notice required by law." Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Goal 14 does not apply to property within a city's limits, and therefore a city's conclusory finding of compliance with Goal 14 is harmless error. Larvik v. City of La Grande, 34 Or LUBA 467 (1998).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The omission of information required by a local code from a development application is harmless procedural error if the required information is located elsewhere in the record. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The failure of the notices of the city and county planning commission hearings to include a listing of applicable review criteria from the city and county zoning ordinances and plans is not an error justifying remand where the criteria were listed in the staff report, the parties were provided an opportunity to comment on the staff report at the hearing at which it was presented, the parties were provided almost two weeks to submit written comments on the staff report and petitioners have not demonstrated substantial prejudice. Concerned Citizens v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 70 (1997).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Allegations that the planning director provided allegedly erroneous advice to the planning commission cannot provide a basis for reversal or remand, where there is no indication in the record that the planning commission agreed with the allegedly erroneous advice and the challenged decision is the city council's decision affirming the planning commission decision. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. The omission of required information from an application constitutes harmless procedural error if the required information is located elsewhere in the record. However, where such information is not located elsewhere in the record and such information is necessary for a determination of compliance with relevant approval standards, such an error is not harmless and warrants reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Shapiro v. City of Talent, 28 Or LUBA 542 (1995).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. That a local code's definition of the term "taking" neither accurately nor completely reflects the opinions of appellate courts and LUBA regarding what constitutes a "taking" of private property for public use under the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution or Article I, section 18, of the Oregon Constitution provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the term "taking" is not used elsewhere in the code. DLCD v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 459 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A local government determination that an inapplicable code standard is satisfied is harmless error, and provides no basis for reversal or remand. Gettman v. City of Bay City, 28 Or LUBA 116 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A hearings officer's reliance on a dictionary definition of "in conjunction with" without providing the dictionary definition relied upon is harmless error, where it is apparent from the decision that the hearings officer interpreted the code term to require establishment of a customer/seller or seller/customer relationship between the proposed commercial use and timber and farm uses in the community. Stroupe v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 107 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where an application for subdivision tentative plan approval does not contain information on the location of driveways and easements required by the code, but petitioners fail to establish the missing information is relevant to any applicable approval standard, the error is harmless and does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a decision approving a planned development states in one place that it grants detailed development plan approval, but it is clear from the decision and findings as a whole that it grants conceptual development plan approval, the single erroneous reference is a harmless error and provides no basis for reversal or remand. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 27 Or LUBA 243 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the applicability of certain comprehensive plan policies was debated during the local proceedings, and petitioners had opportunities to and did present argument concerning these policies, the local government's failure to list the policies as applicable approval standards, as required by ORS 197.195(3)(c)(C), is harmless and provides no basis for reversal or remand. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An applicant's failure to include particular information required by the local code on a permit application provides no basis for reversal or remand, unless petitioner explains why the missing information is necessary to determine compliance with specific applicable approval standards. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 27 Or LUBA 94 (1994).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. In order for a petitioner to obtain reversal or remand by LUBA of a challenged decision because information required by the local code is missing from the subject land development application, petitioner must argue that the missing information is not found elsewhere in the record and explain why the missing information is necessary to determine compliance of the proposed development with applicable approval standards. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 312 (1993).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the date when a challenged ordinance would have become effective without an emergency clause has passed, any error by the local government in adopting such emergency clause is harmless, and provides no basis for reversal or remand. City of La Grande v. Union County, 25 Or LUBA 52 (1993).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where county regulations establish different approval standards for major and minor partitions, a county's error in treating an application as being for a minor partition, rather than for a major partition, is not harmless. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 24 Or LUBA 58 (1992).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where a local government adopted a definition of "contiguous" during the proceedings below, but did not rely on that definition in making the challenged decision, any errors in the substance of the definition, or the procedures by which it was adopted, provide no basis for reversal or remand. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Unlike a local government, LUBA is specifically required by statute to consider arguments that a local government decision is unconstitutional and to reverse or remand an unconstitutional decision. Therefore, procedural errors a local government may have committed in considering constitutional issues during local proceedings are harmless errors. Dodd v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 711 (1992).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where an application for a conditional use permit for a mobile home park includes neither a site plan nor other specific information required under the local code, and the site plan and specific information are relevant to determining compliance with applicable approval criteria, their omission is not a harmless procedural error. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the challenged decision incorrectly states that certain issues are not relevant to the applicable approval criteria, but also includes findings addressing those issues, there is no basis for reversal or remand of the decision unless petitioners establish that the findings are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with the applicable approval standards. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. An incorrect finding does not provide a basis for reversal or remand where there is no indication in the challenged decision that the decision maker relied on the incorrect finding in determining compliance with applicable approval criteria. Reynolds v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 412 (1991).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where the local decision maker correctly determines that a proposed zone change does not comply with a comprehensive plan policy, his erroneous speculation about what would satisfy the plan policy provides no basis for reversal or remand. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 238 (1990).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. A local government commits harmless error by mischaracterizing and reviewing a "major partition" as though it were a "subdivision," as those terms are defined in the city's code, where petitioner fails to identify any approval criteria which impose different standards on major partitions and subdivisions. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Findings that address consistency with a policy not yet adopted by the city, but which do not purport to base imposition of a disputed condition on that policy, are surplusage and provide no basis for reversal or remand. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

28.8.8 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Harmless Error. Where an existing plaza fully satisfies a code requirement for at least one plaza in excess of five percent of the area of the block, no "adjustment" was required to grant a requested development approval which includes a plaza of less than five percent of the block's area. Because no "adjustment" was required, even if the findings explaining the justification for the "adjustment" are inadequate, they provide no basis for remand. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will reject a county's interpretation of its code—that a code provision which sets forth approval criteria regarding an application for a variance to the minimum lot size requirements within the county's urban growth area may not apply to the county's decision because it only applies to decisions made by the county's planning director but not to decisions made by the planning commission or board of county commissioners—that was made for the first time in its response brief, because that interpretation is not reflected in the decision and is therefore not an interpretation by the local government. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where the county approved a proposed variance to the 20-acre minimum lot size for two one-acre parcels, pursuant to a county code provision that provides that the county planning director may approve a variance for a proposed project if the city does not object to the variance, LUBA will reverse the county's decision as "prohibited as a matter of law" pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071(c) where the county approved the variance as "consistent with the * * * city's comprehensive plan," but the city objected to the proposed variance because of the proposal's inconsistency with the city's comprehensive plan. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Although the county concedes it erred in denying a plan amendment and zone change application based on the belief that the subject property was, at the time the county made its decision, within a designated urban reserve area, when the LCDC's urban reserve designation regarding the subject property had not actually become final at the time in question, LUBA will not remand the decision if the county's decision identifies at least one valid basis for denial that is affirmed on appeal. Stafford Investments, LP v. Clackamas County, 78 Or LUBA 320 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When petitioners do not seek relief from any conditions imposed or any aspect of the city's planned unit development (PUD) approval under the general track and LUBA's only option is to affirm, reverse, or remand, the petitioners are asking LUBA to issue what is essentially an advisory opinion regarding the present case. LUBA lacks express statutory or cited judicial authority to issue an advisory opinion on the legal matters presented in the petition and issuing such an advisory opinion would be contrary to one of the express statutory purposes of LUBA's review: that our review should be consistent with "sound principles governing judicial review." ORS 197.805. Dreyer v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 391 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where LUBA sustains petitioner's assignment of error and remands a local government's decision denying petitioner's application, LUBA will address an intervenor's contingent cross assignments of error in a cross petition for review, where those cross-assignments of error raise issues that might provide additional bases for remanding the decision, in order to correct other alleged errors on remand. Blu Dutch LLC v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 495 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A hearings officer errs in failing to include a condition approval limiting mining activities to five acres at any one time and requiring reclamation of each five-acre area prior to mining the next five-acre area, given the importance of the proposed five-acre limit to the hearings officer's conclusion that the mining activities would not have a significant impact on wildlife habitat. Martucci v. Jackson County, 77 Or LUBA 252 (2018).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where LUBA has affirmed a local government's primary interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy, supporting the local government's decision to deny the application, LUBA need not resolve challenges to independent, alternative interpretations supporting denial. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Arguments that future construction of a potential pedestrian trail within a subdivision tract will violate applicable environmental review standards are not a basis to reverse or remand the subdivision decision that creates the tract, where the subdivision decision before LUBA does not approve the pedestrian trail or conduct environmental review, but defers those determinations to a future application for environmental review, when and if the applicant proposes to construct the pedestrian trail. Frewing v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 59 (2016).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will not affirm a hearings officer's decision based on a legal theory that application of a rural industrial zone to rural property does not require an exception to Goal 14, where the hearings officer did not adopt that theory and instead approved an exception to Goal 14 to apply the rural industrial zone. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 156 (2016).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where a petitioner's arguments under an assignment of error are entirely derivative of arguments made under other assignments of error, such derivative arguments provide no independent basis for reversal or remand. Seabreeze Associates Limited Partnership v. Tillamook County, 71 Or LUBA 218 (2015).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Under ORS 197.829(2), LUBA is authorized to interpret county land use regulations in the first instance in cases where the local government has failed to do so. Where a party raises an argument that a building used to board horses is authorized as a permitted use under the zoning and development ordinance, and the hearings officer does not consider the argument and does not adopt findings in response to the party's argument, LUBA may interpret the zoning ordinance and determine whether the building used to board horses is a permitted or conditional use in the zone. Stavrum v. Clackamas County, 71 Or LUBA 290 (2015).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will not entertain arguments based on equitable estoppel unless the proponent first provides a sufficient basis to conclude that the legislature granted LUBA the authority to reverse or remand a land use decision based on equitable doctrines. Macfarlane v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 126 (2014).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A county decision that requires an applicant to secure an easement over property that may be owned by petitioner does not result in a taking of petitioner's property. If the easement is not obtained, then the condition will not be satisfied and no construction will occur. Reading v. Douglas County, 70 Or LUBA 458 (2014).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A county decision that approves an application to partition a 41-acre parcel located within a deer winter range overlay zone into two approximately 20-acre parcel, where the minimum parcel size for properties located in the deer winter range overlay zone is 80 acres, is "prohibited as a matter of law" under OAR 661-010-0071(1)(c). ODFW v. Klamath County, 66 Or LUBA 92 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. That a city may have posted an inaccurate copy of its comprehensive plan on its website during permit proceedings does not provide a basis for remand of the decision that followed those permit proceedings. Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Granting a motion for voluntary remand over a petitioner's objection is consistent with the legislative policy in ORS 197.805 that LUBA is to conduct its review proceedings "consistently with sound principles governing judicial review," where LUBA concludes the voluntary remand will give the local government an opportunity to eliminate some contested legal issues, facilitate focused arguments on any contested legal issues that remain, and thereby facilitate any required final appellate disposition of a land use dispute. Dexter Lost Valley Community Assoc. v. Lane County, 66 Or LUBA 350 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will grant a motion for voluntary remand over a petitioner's objection where there is no reason to suspect that the county's request is made for any reason other than to have a second chance to adopt a defensible response to the issues that petitioner raises in the petition for review. Voluntary remand is not appropriate if motivated by a desire to create delay, or other improper reasons. Dexter Lost Valley Community Assoc. v. Lane County, 66 Or LUBA 350 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Bias on the part of a decision maker in a quasi-judicial land use proceeding may be a basis for remand. However, in a LUBA appeal of a city council decision that followed de novo review of a planning commission decision, allegations of bias on the part of a single planning commissioner will provide a basis for remand only if the petitioner shows the alleged bias of the planning commissioner tainted the record that was reviewed by the city council. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 66 Or LUBA 474 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A petitioner's motion for an evidentiary hearing to establish bias on the part of a planning commissioner will be denied where (1) the decision on review is a city council decision that followed a de novo review of a planning commission decision, (2) the only claim of impropriety on the part of the planning commission that might have tainted the record on review was a planning commission majority vote to refuse to consider evidence offered by petitioner, and (3) the allegedly biased planning commissioner voted with the planning commission minority to accept the evidence offered by petitioner. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 66 Or LUBA 474 (2012).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. In a county code enforcement proceeding before a hearings officer, petitioner's complaints that a county code enforcement officer improperly interfered with pending civil litigation between petitioner and his neighbor and improperly contacted the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife regarding the county hearings officer's decision in the code enforcement proceeding after the hearings officer's decision was entered provide no basis for reversing or remanding the hearings officer's decision. The alleged improprieties by the county code enforcement officer may be actionable in a different forum, but they provide no basis for remanding the county hearings officer's decision. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. The exclusive remedy for an alleged failure by a county code enforcement officer to produce requested public records is to petition the county district attorney for relief under ORS 192.460. Where the disputed photographs and the substance of the disputed field notes were made part of the record before a hearings officer in a land use code enforcement proceeding and petitioner was permitted to submit contrary evidence and cross examine the code enforcement officer in the hearing before the hearings officer, there was no prejudice to petitioner's substantial rights and no basis for remand. Wigen v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 490 (2011).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Even assuming LUBA has authority to reject an otherwise meritorious exhaustion/waiver challenge based on the argument that the county is equitably estopped from asserting exhaustion/waiver due to alleged erroneous advice from county planning staff in accepting the local notice of appeal, the argument fails where based on petitioners' affidavits the best that can be said with confidence is that there was mutual misunderstanding and miscommunication regarding the sufficiency of the local notice of appeal and what issues petitioners wished to raise therein. Wellet v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 372 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When a motion for voluntary remand is filed either for the purpose of allowing an applicant to withdraw its application or after an applicant has withdrawn the application, a local government need not represent that it will address all of the issues presented by a petitioner in order for that motion to be granted. Jacobsen v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 461 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When in reviewing an application to expand a nonconforming campground to permit installation of 13 new park model recreational vehicle (RV) units, a hearings officer also concludes that 22 park model RV units previously installed pursuant to county building permits require goal exceptions to be lawful, that conclusion is non-binding dictum and does not provide a basis for remand, where the decision does not purport to revoke or invalidate the building permits, or impose any conditions or make binding determinations with respect to the 22 previously installed RV units. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. That a park model recreational vehicle (RV) is defined in the state building code as one type of recreational vehicle does not mean that the permanent installation of park model RVs on rural forest land is equivalent to temporary campground use by self-propelled or pull-behind RVs, under Oregon's statewide planning goals, administrative rules, and implementing land use regulations. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When repair or replacement of windows in a historic district requires permit approval from a review body, any alleged failure of local government staff to respond to inquiries about the process or alleged knowledge of and failure to take action on unauthorized replacement cannot possibly substitute for the required approval process or constitute a de facto approval of the required permit. West v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 166 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Equitable estoppel cannot arise from the actions of local government officials who purport to waive the provisions of a mandatory law or otherwise exceed their authority. West v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 166 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will deny a city's voluntary motion to remand where the petition for review has not yet been filed and motion does not explicitly state that the city will address all of petitioner's issues regarding the appealed decision. Jacobsen v. City of Winston, 61 Or LUBA 536 (2010).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where the findings identify issues that the local government thinks were not properly preserved for appeal under local code provisions requiring a notice of appeal to specify the grounds for appeal, and petitioners do not challenge those findings, any assignments of error in the petition for review that raise issues that the city found were waived provide no basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Citizens for Responsible Development v. City of The Dalles, 59 Or LUBA 369 (2009).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Failure to disclose ex parte communications that have no bearing on applicable approval criteria or to issues material to approving or denying a land use application does not necessarily warrant remand. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. General expressions of support or opposition to a proposed annexation are not ex parte contacts within the meaning of ORS 227.180(3), because they include no factual or legal assertions that bear on approval criteria or on any issue material to approval of the annexation that could possibly be rebutted. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where LUBA sustains an assignment of error and remands a county decision, and the county hearings officer adopts approximately two pages of findings on remand addressing that assignment of error, it is the hearings officer's reasoning in rejecting the assignment of error that is before LUBA in a subsequent appeal. Where a petitioner merely re-alleges the assignment of error and makes no meaningful attempt to challenge the hearings officer's reasoning in rejecting the assignment of error, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Kipfer v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 436 (2009).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will grant a motion for voluntary remand over a petitioner's objections where the appeal concerns both a property line adjustment and a conditional use permit and although it appears the property line adjustment might be subject to reversal, it is not clear whether the property line adjustment is essential to the conditional use permit approval. Fenn v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 261 (2008).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will grant a motion for voluntary remand of a property line adjustment decision over a petitioner's objections where the statutes governing property line adjustments recently changed and although the property line adjustment decision appears to violate the statutes that were in effect when the decision was rendered, it is unclear whether the property line adjustment would be barred by the amended statutes. Fenn v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 261 (2008).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where LUBA determines that three county findings regarding the significance of an aggregate site are not supported by substantial evidence, are inadequately explained, or fail to appreciate the significance of certain evidence in the record, remand is required where LUBA cannot assume the findings were minor or unimportant parts of the county's ultimate decision that the applicant failed to demonstrate that the aggregate site qualifies as "significant," under OAR 660-023-0180(3). Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Although there might be circumstances where LUBA could reverse or remand a land use decision based on equitable estoppel principles, where a petitioner fails to demonstrate that the elements of equitable estoppel set forth in Coos County v. State of Oregon, 303 Or 173, 734 P2d 1348 (1973), are present, LUBA will not sustain an assignment of error based on an equitable estoppel argument. Chaves v. Jackson County, 56 Or LUBA 643 (2008).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will remand a decision approving a broadcast tower that relies in part on a "safe harbor" approach the hearings officer adopted in a different permit proceeding, where LUBA has remanded that other permit decision to resolve an issue under that approach but the county has taken no action on remand and the challenged decision does not resolve the issue. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When the arguments presented in support of an assignment of error are so poorly stated and developed that the overwhelming majority of the assignment of error cannot reasonably responded to, LUBA will not require respondents to respond to every disjointed argument presented in the assignment of error. Sommer v. Josephine County, 54 Or LUBA 507 (2007).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. In the absence of a reviewable interpretation by a local government of its code, LUBA is authorized under ORS

197.829(2) to interpret the local government's code in the first instance. Munkhoff v. City of Cascade Locks, 54 Or LUBA 660 (2007).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A local government errs in approving a development that proposes multiple duplex and fourplex buildings on one lot where the definition of those buildings and the context of that definition establishes that the local government's code allows only one building per lot. Munkhoff v. City of Cascade Locks, 54 Or LUBA 660 (2007).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Remand is necessary to either withdraw a condition of approval requiring fencing around a property or explain what criterion it relates to and what purpose it serves, where the decision approves development in part and denies it in part, and it is not clear whether the condition of approval relates to approved or denied aspects of the proposed development. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where an assignment of error relies exclusively on an allegation that the challenged decision contains no findings regarding a particular approval criterion, and in fact findings addressing the approval criterion do exist, but the petitioner fails to challenge those findings, the assignment of error fails to provide a basis to reverse or remand the challenged decision. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 51 Or LUBA 699 (2006).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. To obtain voluntary remand over a petitioner's objections, the local government must demonstrate only that it will review all of the issues raised in the petition for review. Voluntary remand requires no confession of error, and petitioner is not guaranteed a particular result. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 50 Or LUBA 510 (2005).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Voluntary remand is warranted where the local government states that it will either address all issues raised in the petition for review or revoke the decision in its entirety. At least where the petitioner seeks to reverse or nullify the challenged decision, petitioner is not entitled to dictate the basis on which the local government revokes a remanded decision. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 50 Or LUBA 510 (2005).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will reverse a city council decision that interprets its code provisions regarding accessory uses to include a tennis facility that includes four grass courts, bleachers, restrooms and shower facilities and parking and camping areas as accessory uses to a single-family dwelling, where the code permits "service clubs, lodges and other public uses" as a conditional use in the zone, and the tennis facility appears to fall squarely within that category. McCormick v. City of Baker City, 46 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review a decision by the Department of Land Conservation and Development approving a county periodic review work task. Colony v. Wallowa County, 46 Or LUBA 586 (2004).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will remand a city's zoning designation decision, where the decision is dependent on the validity of a concurrent annexation decision that LUBA has concluded does not comply with applicable law. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. In applying local legislation to grant a permit holder's request to extend a two-year forest template dwelling permit for one additional year, a county commits reversible error in providing that the permit will expire if the dwelling is not completed within that three-year period where ORS 215.417(1) and OAR 660-033-0140(5)(a) require that a forest template dwelling permit be honored for four years. Where the county concedes on appeal to LUBA that it erroneously failed to apply OAR 660-033-0140(5)(a), LUBA will reverse the county's decision even though the permit opponent does n ot assign error to that aspect of the county's decision. Butori v. Clatsop County, 45 Or LUBA 553 (2003).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. That a county may have required hunting preserve buffers in other decisions that approve hunting preserves does not necessarily mean that the county errs in not requiring a hunting preserve buffer in an appealed decision, where there may have been factual differences or different evidence in the proceedings that led to the appealed deci sion that explain the different results. Underhill v. Wasco County, 45 Or LUBA 566 (2003).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where LUBA and the Court of Appeals have already decided that local ordinance provisions require that an applicant for a lot line adjustment demonstrate that the proposed use of the property after the lot line adjustment is served by adequate public facilities and is compatible with comprehensive plan policies, a city may not interpret those same provisions in such a way as to relieve an applicant of that burden. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 44 Or LUBA 308 (2003).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Even though granting a motion for voluntary remand would give a local government a second chance to respond to issues that it failed to respond to in the appealed decision, a motion for voluntary remand will not be denied for that reason alone, because forcing the local government to defend a decision that it does not believe is defensible would not serve the ORS 197.805 goal of quickly reaching finality in land use matters. Doob v. Josephine County, 43 Or LUBA 130 (2002).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Denial of a motion for voluntary remand may be warranted if it is shown that a local government is making only half-hearted attempts to respond to relevant issues and then seeking serial voluntary remands to correct those half-hearted attempts. Doob v. Josephine County, 43 Or LUBA 130 (2002).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where all of the assignments of error in petitioner's petition for review challenge a condition of approval for a planned unit development that requires a 5,000-square-foot minimum lot size, and the local government moves for a voluntary remand to consider all of petitioners' assignments of error and reconsider whether it can impose the minimum lot size, LUBA will grant the motion for voluntary remand over petitioner's objection. In that circumstance, the possibility that the city will again impose the minimum lot size condition of approval is not, in and of itself, a sufficient reason to deny the motion. OTAK, Inc. v. City of Sherwood, 40 Or LUBA 218 (2001).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A city's discretionary decision to not continue a hearing is reviewable by LUBA for an abuse of discretion. Reeder v. City of Oregon City, 37 Or LUBA 794 (2000).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where a local appeal is on the record, and the issues to be considered are limited to those raised in the notice of appeal, and there is likely to be a significant delay in the resolution of the appeal if a hearing is continued, a city does not abuse its discretion by denying an applicant's request for a continuance. Reeder v. City of Oregon City, 37 Or LUBA 794 (2000).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Residents of annexation territory who signed consents to annexation to obtain city water and sewer services were not coerced into doing so, even though their consents were given because their wells were contaminated and septic tanks were failing. The city did not cause the contamination, nor did the city require the extraterritorial residents to connect to city systems. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A local government is not estopped from following the appeal procedure that is required by its code where it is unclear whether county staff (1) made any false statements to the applicant concerning appeal procedures, (2) were aware that any of their representations were incorrect, or (3) intended that the applicant take any action based on such representations; and the applicant does not identify how she was induced to act differently by the county's representations. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will grant a city's motion for a voluntary remand in order to reconsider its Goal 5 determinations in light of petitioner's concerns, even though LUBA would owe no deference to the city's interpretation and application of Goal 5. Hribernick v. City of Gresham, 35 Or LUBA 329 (1998).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Petitioner is not denied the right to have its record objection reviewed by a superior tribunal if LUBA grants the city's request for a voluntary remand. Any error that LUBA may have committed in resolving the record objection may be raised if petitioner appeals the city's decision on remand, and appellate review is available to challenge any LUBA decision in such a subsequent appeal. Hribernick v. City of Gresham, 35 Or LUBA 329 (1998).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. An evidentiary hearing to establish decision makers' "personal interest" in a proposal due to their ownership of proximate property is not warranted because, even if true, such a "personal interest" could not provide a basis for reversing or remanding the decision. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 34 Or LUBA 797 (1998).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where a necessary interpretation of a local ordinance is absent or inadequate, LUBA will decline to interpret the local provision in the first instance, pursuant to ORS 197.829(2), when multiple interpretations are possible, and neither the county nor the applicant files a response brief. Wodarczak v. Yamhill County, 34 Or LUBA 453 (1998).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A county is not bound by "issue" or "claim" preclusion to a prior finding of noncompliance with an approval criterion in a prior land use proceeding. Femling v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 328 (1998).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where more than one site plan appears in the record, a local government errs if its decision does not adequately identify which site plan is approved. Brown v. City of Portland, 33 Or LUBA 700 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where petitioner fails to demonstrate that its substantial rights have been prejudiced, a motion for voluntary remand filed by the local government one week prior to oral argument will be allowed. Smith v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 682 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When petitioner objects to a motion for voluntary remand by a local government, petitioner must identify circumstances that make a LUBA decision on the merits clearly more important than remanding to first allow the local government to address the issues raised in the petition for review. Smith v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 682 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A party challenging a local land use decision must provide some particularized basis for showing it to be subject to remand or reversal. Laurance v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. A voluntary remand is appropriate if the local government agrees to reconsider all of the issues raised by the petitioners. It is not necessary for the local government to confess error. Village Properties, L.P. v. Oregon City, 33 Or LUBA 206 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. The failure of a city council expressly to consider denial of an application is not a basis for reversal or remand when the city council concluded the record supported approval. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. In the absence of a reviewable interpretation concerning the applicability of a possibly relevant zoning code provision, LUBA will remand for an interpretation. DeBates v. Yamhill County, 32 Or LUBA 276 (1997).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Under ORS 197.829(2), enacted in 1995, LUBA is not required to remand decisions for local government interpretations of local provisions when LUBA is able to make the necessary interpretations. Friends of Metolius v. Jefferson County, 31 Or LUBA 160 (1996).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When a petitioner requests a voluntary remand over the objections of an intervenor after the time allowed for a voluntary remand under ORS 197.830(12)(b), and the county's agreement to consider all issues on remand is equivocal, LUBA will deny the motion for a remand. Brugh v. Coos County, 30 Or LUBA 467 (1996).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When a county approves one exception area, LUBA cannot select and approve certain parts of that exception area while remanding for further action on the balance. DLCD v. Coos County, 30 Or LUBA 229 (1995).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. When a petitioner mistakenly bases a challenge on zoning variance criteria rather than applicable, very similar subdivision variance criteria, LUBA will consider arguments to the extent they can be related to the applicable criteria. Williams v. City of Philomath, 30 Or LUBA 5 (1995).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. That an applicant's objective is reasonable is not relevant to whether the city adjustment committee erred in applying the city's zoning ordinance sign adjustment criteria to deny requested sign height adjustment. Blue Beacon International v. City of Portland, 29 Or LUBA 536 (1995).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Under OAR 661-10-021, a local government has a unilateral right to withdraw a decision for reconsideration if the notice of withdrawal is filed on or before the date the record is due. A motion for voluntary remand may be filed after the record is filed and, if granted by LUBA, is not governed by the provisions of OAR 661-10-021, including the 90-day deadline specified in that rule for decisions on reconsideration. Sanchez v. Clatsop County, 29 Or LUBA 26 (1995).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Code provisions that provide interim resource protection to property not on a local government's acknowledged Goal 5 resource inventories, until the Goal 5 planning process can be carried out, do not implement Goal 5. Therefore, local interpretations of such code provisions are not subject to reversal by LUBA under ORS 197.829(4). Gage v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 307 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. During the local proceedings, the applicant for development approval bears the burden of proof to establish its application satisfies relevant approval standards. Where the local government shifted that burden to opponents of the development application, the challenged decision must be remanded. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 274 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. ORS 197.835(8) applies only where LUBA determines a local government made a land use decision exceeding the local government's discretionary authority under applicable comprehensive plan and land use regulation provisions, not where LUBA determines the local government misconstrued its permissible scope of review on remand from a previous LUBA appeal. Louisiana Pacific v. Umatilla County, 28 Or LUBA 32 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. While ORS 197.830(12)(b) grants a local government the unilateral power to withdraw an appealed decision for reconsideration before the date the record is due, it does not eliminate the discretion LUBA has under ORS 197.835 and 197.805 to grant a motion for voluntary remand after the record is filed, in accordance with sound principles of judicial review. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 27 Or LUBA 45 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where the sole issue raised in the petition for review concerns the proper interpretation of a local government regulation, and the challenged decision does not contain an interpretation of that regulation for LUBA to review, proceeding with the appeal can do nothing to narrow the issues on remand, and LUBA will grant a motion for voluntary remand over petitioner's objections. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 27 Or LUBA 45 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Even though LUBA might agree with a county's argument in its brief that the purpose section of its EFU zoning district is not an approval standard for a farm dwelling permit application, if the challenged decision itself does not interpret the code provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the county to interpret the provision in the first instance. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA cannot interpret a local government's ordinances in the first instance, but rather must review the local government's interpretation of its ordinances. Consequently, the failure of the local government to make the initial interpretation of local ordinance provisions is a basis for remand. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where findings adopted by the initial local decision maker interpreted a local ordinance provision, but those findings were replaced by findings adopted by the local governing body which do not include an interpretation of the ordinance provision, LUBA must remand the decision to the local government to interpret the provision in the first instance. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where the challenged local government decision is not included in the record submitted to LUBA, LUBA must remand the decision. Lathrop v. Wallowa County, 25 Or LUBA 693 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. In considering an applicant's request for voluntary remand of a decision granting development approval, where petitioner objects to the request, LUBA will not infer bad faith or improper motives from the potential economic return the applicant may receive if the proposed development is ultimately approved. Hastings Bulb Growers, Inc. v. Curry County, 25 Or LUBA 558 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Unless the particular circumstances of a case make narrowing the issues on remand clearly more important than allowing a local government's request for a voluntary remand of its decision to address each of the issues raised in the petition for review, a motion for voluntary remand should be granted. Hastings Bulb Growers, Inc. v. Curry County, 25 Or LUBA 558 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will not deny a request for voluntary remand of a challenged land use decision, simply because different approval criteria may apply on remand. Petitioners are entitled to obtain review by LUBA to assure a correct decision is rendered, whatever approval criteria may be applicable. Hastings Bulb Growers, Inc. v. Curry County, 25 Or LUBA 558 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA owes local governments no deference in interpreting state law. However, where a number of the issues raised in the petition for review do not turn on interpretation of state law, the presence of questions of state law does not, alone, make a voluntary remand inappropriate. Hastings Bulb Growers, Inc. v. Curry County, 25 Or LUBA 558 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where petitioner fails to establish a false representation was made, and also fails to establish that the representation made was made by a person with authority to bind the local decision maker, petitioner has not adequately alleged estoppel against the local decision maker. DLCD v. Wasco County, 25 Or LUBA 529 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where petitioner asserts the local government is estopped from denying his application, but fails to allege the facts establishing the elements of estoppel, petitioner has not provided a basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Cemper v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 486 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where a local government concedes one of petitioner's 10 assignments of error and agrees to address petitioner's remaining assignments of error on remand, remand is appropriate so that the local government may consider petitioner's arguments in the first instance and provide any required interpretations of local law. Weeks v. City of Tillamook, 117 Or App 449, 844 P2d 914 (1992). Fechtig v. City of Albany, 24 Or LUBA 577 (1993).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. LUBA will grant a motion to remand a challenged decision that is submitted after the petition for review is filed, over the objections of petitioners, regardless of whether the motion is submitted by the respondent or intervenor-respondent, so long as the respondent represents to the Board that it will consider and address on remand all issues raised in the petition for review. Mulholland v. City of Roseburg, 24 Or LUBA 240 (1992).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. Where a petition for review has been filed, granting a local government request for remand of an appealed decision, over petitioner's objection, is consistent with the statutory policy favoring complete and expeditious review only if the local government demonstrates that the proceedings on remand will be capable of providing petitioner with the relief it would otherwise be entitled to receive from LUBA. Hollywood Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 267 (1991).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. To establish a claim of bias sufficient to result in reversal or remand of a challenged decision, a petitioner is required to clearly demonstrate that the public officials charged with bias are incapable of making a decision on the basis of the evidence and argument presented. Cummins v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 129 (1991).

28.8.9 LUBA Scope of Review – Grounds for Reversal/Remand – Other. If a local government request for remand of its decision does not demonstrate that all of the allegations of error made by petitioner in the petition for review will be addressed on remand, LUBA will not remand the decision over petitioner's objections. Angel v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 541 (1991).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. Where DEQ has determined that for budgetary reasons it will no longer enforce its noise regulations, counties are free to enforce those noise standards if they wish, but they are not required to do so. Mingo v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 122 (2012).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. It would be inconsistent with the purpose of former OAR 660-025-0040 to review a county's approval of an amendment to a city's urban growth boundary (UGB) for compliance with the statewide planning goals or statutes, rules, or local ordinances implementing those goals, where in periodic review the Land Conservation and Development Commission reviewed the very same UGB amendment and determined that it complied with applicable goals and rules. Gordon v. Polk County, 54 Or LUBA 721 (2007).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. Under former OAR 660-025-0040(2), LUBA has jurisdiction over issues that do not involve compliance with the statewide planning goals. Gordon v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 618 (2007).

28. 9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. In lieu of judicial review by the Court of Appeals of an order of the Columbia River Gorge Commission regarding any action of a county pursuant to the Columbia River Gorge Scenic Area Act, the county's decision may be appealed to LUBA. Such an appeal must be filed within 21 days after the Columbia River Gorge Commission decision becomes final and LUBA may not consider any issue concerning interpretation or implementation of the Columbia River Gorge Scenic Act. Lois Thompson Housing Project v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 580 (2000).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. An appeal to LUBA of a county decision under the Columbia River Gorge Scenic Act, prior to the date the Columbia River Gorge Commission issues a final decision reviewing the county decision, is premature and will be dismissed. Appellate jurisdiction for review of such a county decision in the first instance lies with the Columbia River Gorge Commission. Lois Thompson Housing Project v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 580 (2000).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. Petitioner's sole remedy on appeal from a DSL approval of a fill permit, stated in ORS 196.835, is to request a contested case hearing and, if desired, to appeal to the Court of Appeals from the order issued following the hearing. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. If a DSL finding of compatibility is not based on a final land use decision made by the city, LUBA lacks jurisdiction over the appeal from the finding of compatibility. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. A DSL finding of compatibility that relies on the separate opinions of two city planners and the city attorney is not based on a final land use decision made by the city. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. Although OAR 660-31-035(1), which governs Class A permits, does not require that an affected local government's compatibility determination either be in writing or be supported by written findings in order to be relied upon by a state agency issuing a permit, the absence of a writing raises the question of whether there actually is a local government determination. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

28.9 LUBA Scope of Review – State Agency Decisions. Two factors govern whether a local government's determination of compatibility with its acknowledged plan and regulations, made as part of a state agency approval process, is a "final" decision applying the local government's plan and regulations: (1) the state agency must be required by statute, rule or other authority, to assure that the proposal is compatible with the local government plan and regulations; and (2) the state agency must be authorized by statute, rule or other legal authority to rely on the local government's determination. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Where a prior decision approved a plan amendment and zone change for the subject property and included a condition of approval limiting the type of future development to a "retail shopping center" and the size of future development to a certain square footage of gross leasable area, but where the prior decision approved no specific development, voluntary descriptions, statements, or representations made by the applicant during the prior proceeding regarding the particular store with which the shopping center would be developed are not binding on the applicant in a subsequent site plan review proceeding unless they were memorialized in conditions of approval for the prior decision. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Where a city bureau manages the city's transportation system, including private uses in the city right-of-way, and where bureau staff have special expertise in the safe and efficient use of the right-of-way and various demands on streets, including traffic, parking, and loading, statements from the bureau (1) that studio apartments have lower turnover rates, less need for unloading large furniture, and, thus, less need for a loading space, and (2) that signed, infrequent on-street loading will not have a negative effect on the traffic safety or other transportation functions of the abutting right-of-way are evidence that would permit a reasonable person to find that an on-street loading space is adequate for a proposed studio apartment building's loading needs such that the development continues to meet the intended purpose of, and, therefore, qualifies for an adjustment to, an off-street loading space requirement, even where there is testimony in the record from an opponent of the development regarding anticipated negative congestion and safety impacts of off-street loading. NDNA v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 269 (2019).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. ORS 197.195(1) prohibits a local government from directly applying comprehensive plan requirements as a basis for its decision on an application for limited land use decision approval, where the comprehensive plan requirements have not been incorporated into the local government's land use regulations. That prohibition is simply inapplicable to the city's business license regulations, and ORS 197.195(1) does not prohibit a local government from conditioning its approval of a limited land use decision on compliance with its business licensing requirements. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. ORS 197.828(2)(b) authorizes LUBA to reverse or remand a limited land use decision that "does not comply with applicable provisions of the land use regulations[.]" A petitioner's argument that a limited land use decision fails to comply with a notation on a recorded plat provides no basis for reversal or remand of the decision where the petitioner fails to establish that the recorded plat is a "land use regulation" as defined in ORS 197.015(11). Truth in Site Coalition v. City of Bend, 71 Or LUBA 348 (2015).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. LUBA's standard of review of evidentiary challenges to a limited land use decision is not the same as the standard of review of a land use decision. For limited land use decisions, LUBA may not reverse or remand a limited land use decision unless "the decision is not supported by substantial evidence in the record." Under ORS 197.828(2)(a), in determining whether the decision is "supported by substantial evidence in the record[]" LUBA may not remand a decision on the basis that there exists evidence in the record supporting a different decision. Truth in Site Coalition v. City of Bend, 71 Or LUBA 348 (2015).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. The difference between substantial evidence review of a limited land use decision under ORS 197.828(2)(a) and the more rigorous substantial evidence review of a land use decision at ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) is legally irrelevant where LUBA concludes that the evidence in the record is evidence a reasonable decision maker would rely on under the more rigorous ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) "substantial evidence in the whole record" standard of review. Truth in Site Coalition v. City of Bend, 71 Or LUBA 348 (2015).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. A decision to "incorporate" comprehensive plan policies into a local government's land use regulations, to make those policies criteria directly applicable to a limited land use decision, must be accomplished by as post - acknowledgment plan amendment that expressly makes specific policies applicable approval criteria for limited land use decisions. The mere adoption of land use regulations to implement comprehensive policies does not "incorporate" such policies into land use regulations as directly applicable criteria. SCAN v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 468 (2014).

28.10. LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. A city council's interpretation of its land use legislation that a general incorporation of the city's comprehensive plan into its zoning ordinance is not sufficient under ORS 197.195 to make individual comprehensive plan policies decision making approval criteria for limited land use decisions is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Johnson v. City of Gladstone, 65 Or LUBA 225 (2012).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review - Limited Land Use Decisions. ORS 227.175(10)(a)(E)(ii), which was adopted in response to the Court of Appeals' decision in Johns v. City of Lincoln City, 146 Or App 594, 933 P2d 978 (1997), and specifically provides that a de novo appeal of a permit decision under 227.175(10)(a) may not be limited to issues raised in the local notice of appeal, does not apply to appeals of limited land use decisions. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

28.10. LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. The fact that a local decision is properly described as a limited land use decision does not mean that the decision may be directly appealed to LUBA, where the local government establishes a process where an initial limited land use decision must first be appealed to a local hearings officer. Southeast Neighbors v. City of Eugene, 43 Or LUBA 286 (2002).

28.10. LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review a limited land use decision, where petitioner failed to timely appeal an initial decision by the planning director to a local hearings officer pursuant to local code provisions that allow for local appeals of limited land use decisions. Southeast Neighbors v. City of Eugene, 43 Or LUBA 286 (2002).

28.10. LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. An allegation that a city mischaracterized its decision as a limited land use decision does not itself provide a basis for reversal or remand, absent a further allegation that the city failed to follow the procedures applicable to the decision and that petitioners' substantial rights were prejudiced by that failure. Crowley v. City of Bandon, 41 Or LUBA 87 (2001).

28.10. LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Whatever prejudice to petitioners' substantial rights might have occurred before the initial decision maker, when the city arguably failed to provide petitioners an adequate opportunity to comment before the planning commission on whether a proposed design complied with applicable criteria, was cured by providing petitioners an opportunity to present testimony directed at applicable criteria in a subsequent appeal to the city council. Crowley v. City of Bandon, 41 Or LUBA 87 (2001).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Where petitioners do not explain how the city's failure to conduct a public hearing (if one was required under local code) prejudiced their substantial rights, there is no basis for reversal or remand pursuant to ORS 197.828(2)(d). Venable v. City of Albany, 33 Or LUBA 1 (1997).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Contrary to the contention that limited land use decisions require only cursory findings, ORS 227.173(2), which states the requirement for findings in support of a city permit approval, makes no distinction between land use decision findings and limited land use decision findings. Design Home Construction v. City of Silverton, 32 Or LUBA 452 (1997).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. There is no meaningful difference between ORS 197.195(3)(c)(B) and 197.763(1) "raise it or waive it" requirements. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Where a local government provides public hearings before the planning commission and city council before making a limited land use decision, petitioner's allegations that the notice preceding the city council hearing fails to comply the requirements of ORS 197.195(3)(b) for notice of the application provide no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner fails to challenge the adequacy of the notice of hearing that preceded the planning commission hearing. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. LUBA's review of limited land use decisions is limited to issues raised before the local government, unless (1) the local government did not satisfy the procedural requirements of ORS 197.195, or (2) the limited land use decision adopted differs significantly from the proposal described in the local notice of proposed action. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 28 Or LUBA 263 (1994).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Assignments of error that contend disputed conditions of approval either exceed a local government's authority under, or improperly construe, applicable law, if sustained, provide a basis for reversal or remand of a challenged decision, regardless of whether the challenged decision is a land use decision or limited land use decision. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. The term "permits," as used in Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7, refers to all decisions defined as "permits" when that law was enacted. The subsequent amendment to the ORS 227.160(2) definition of "permit" to exclude limited land use decisions does not apply. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. LUBA applies statutory waiver requirements to limited land use decisions the same way it applies them to land use decisions. LUBA's review of limited land use decisions is limited to issues raised below unless (1) the local government did not satisfy the procedural requirements of ORS 197.195, or (2) the limited land use decision adopted differs significantly from that described in the local notice of proposed action. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. If a party contends an issue petitioners seek to raise before LUBA in an appeal challenging a limited land use decision was not raised during the local proceedings, and petitioners neither identify where in the record the issues were raised below nor claim the local government failed to follow the procedures required by ORS 197.195, petitioners may not raise the issue for the first time before LUBA. Dorgan v. City of Albany, 27 Or LUBA 64 (1994).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. In LUBA's review of alleged procedural errors, the substantial rights referred to in ORS 197.828(2)(d) concerning limited land use decisions are the same rights referred to in ORS 197.835(7)(a)(B) concerning land use decisions. Mannenbach v. City of Dallas, 25 Or LUBA 136 (1993).

28.10 LUBA Scope of Review – Limited Land Use Decisions. Under ORS 197.828(2)(d), in determining whether remand is appropriate where a local government commits procedural error, LUBA must determine whether the substantial rights of the parties were prejudiced by the error. The substantial rights of parties include the rights to an adequate opportunity to prepare and submit their case and a full and fair hearing. Warren v. City of Aurora, 25 Or LUBA 11 (1993).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). LUBA has jurisdiction to review decisions that post-date and rely on Ballot Measure 37 waivers, if those decisions apply land use laws that were not waived under Ballot Measure 37. However, in those appeals LUBA's scope of review does not include challenges to the underlying Ballot Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). Decisions under ORS 197.352(8) about whether land use laws should be or can be waived under Ballot Measure 37 are not land use decisions and are not reviewable by LUBA. But where questions arise about the scope of previously issued Ballot Measure 37 waivers in subsequent land use decisions that rely on those Ballot Measure 37 waivers, LUBA's scope of review includes resolving any ambiguities about the scope of a previously issued Ballot Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). LUBA will remand a decision approving a subdivision pursuant to a Ballot Measure 37 waiver where the county fails to address arguments raised below that the subdivision is inconsistent with a 1959 subdivision ordinance that predated the claimants' date of acquisition and that was not waived under the state and local waivers. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). Where the Ballot Measure 37 claimant dies prior to receiving development approval and the property is transferred by operation of law to his heirs, the county errs in approving development on land no longer owned by the Ballot Measure 37 claimant, pursuant to waivers that grant only the claimant the right to develop the property free of the goals, statutes and rules specified in the waiver. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). Where the state specifically waives only Goal 3 and related statutes and administrative rules, an argument that the state should also have waived Goals 7, 11 and 14 is beyond LUBA's scope of review and must be asserted in a different forum. The only question LUBA may decide is which goals and regulations the state actually waived. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

28.11 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 37 Waiver (ORS 197.352). LUBA has authority to interpret ORS 197.352, or any other statute, as may be necessary in the context of reviewing a land use decision that is subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Welch v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 697 (2007).

28.12 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 49 (ORS 195.300 to 195.336). Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas Cty., 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589, 214 P3d 821 (2009), where an application for subdivision relies on Ballot Measure 37 waivers, those waivers qualify as "standards and criteria" under the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal-post statute, and the subdivision application is not subject to subsequently enacted standards and criteria. But Ballot Measure 49, which post-dates Ballot Measure 37 and is inconsistent with the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal-post statute overrides the goal-post statute and limits the Ballot Measure 37 subdivision applicant to one of the three remedies specified in Ballot Measure 49. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

28.12 LUBA Scope of Review – Effect of Ballot Measure 49 (ORS 195.300 to 195.336). In an appeal of a subdivision decision that relies on Ballot Measure 37 waivers and a Ballot Measure 49 vested rights decision, LUBA's scope of review includes resolving questions about the scope of the previously issued Ballot Measure 37 waiver. A decision about the scope of a previously issued Ballot Measure 37 waiver is not a decision about the "nature and extent of [just] compensation" under Measure 49 (ORS 195.305(7)) and is therefore subject to LUBA review. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

29.1.1 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Generally. There is no internal comprehensive plan conflict if lands that were previously added to a comprehensive plan map under prior mapping standards are allowed to remain on that map after the county adopts new mapping standards that those lands do not satisfy, so long as the county intended the new mapping standards to apply prospectively. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

29.1.1 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Generally. A regional parks, recreation and open space plan that the controlling regional plan requires to be adopted at least in part as a refinement of the controlling regional plan may not be adopted as a purely aspirational document that is binding on no one. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 341 (2006).

29.1.1 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Generally. Any parks and recreation planning obligation that is imposed by the ORS 197.015(6) definition of "comprehensive plan" does not necessarily have to "indicate specific locations of any [recreational] area, activity or use." Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 341 (2006).

29.1.1 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Generally. Goal 8 is "[t]o satisfy the recreational needs of the citizens of the state and visitors and, where appropriate, to provide for the siting of necessary recreational facilities including destination resorts." While it might be consistent with Goal 8 to do so, Goal 8 does not mandate that comprehensive plans include a list of park, open space and recreation facilities that will be constructed during the planning period or include an estimate of the costs of such facilities. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 341 (2006).

29.1.2 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Procedure. ORS 215.060 provides that action regarding a comprehensive plan shall have no effect, unless 10 days' advance public notice of each hearing is published in a newspaper of general circulation. Where the required 10 days' notice is given, the county's subsequent decision to adopt different parts of the proposed comprehensive plan amendments by separate ordinances does not require new notice under ORS 215.060. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

29.1.2 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Procedure. An indication on the notice of adoption furnished to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) that the Statewide Planning Goals do not apply to a proposed plan or code amendment or a new land use regulation is a ministerial act without independent significance, not a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Petersen v. Columbia County, 33 Or LUBA 253 (1997).

29.1.2 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Procedure. ORS 215.503(2)(a), requiring all legislative acts related to comprehensive plans or zoning adopted by a county governing body to be by ordinance, applies to legislative decisions adopting or amending comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances, not to quasi-judicial plan or zone changes. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

29.1.3 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Standards. ORS 197.610(1) requires that the Land Conservation and Development Commission be given notice at least 45 days before the first evidentiary hearing on adoption of a post-acknowledgment comprehensive plan amendment. Where the required notice is given, a second notice is not required under ORS 197.610(1) simply because the local government decides to adopt different parts of the proposed comprehensive plan amendment by separate ordinances. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

29.1.3 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Standards. Background reports, which typically contain data and information that describe a community's resources and features and address the topics specified in the applicable Statewide Planning Goals, are not the equivalent of comprehensive plans, which set forth the community's long-range objectives and the policies by which it intends to achieve them. Mount Hood Stewardship Council v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 284 (1997).

29.1.3 Comprehensive Plans – Adoption – Standards. A former comprehensive plan that is "retained [by a local government] as resource and background documents" for its current comprehensive plan, does not establish approval standards for land use decisions. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 296 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. That an alteration to a proposed PAPA is required by LUBA's decision in a prior appeal and reduces the subject acreage does not mean as a matter of law that the proposed PAPA is not "altered to such an extent that the materials submitted no longer reasonably describe the proposed change," thereby requiring notice of the alteration to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(6). Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Under ORS 197.610(6), if a proposed PAPA is altered to such an extent that the notice submitted to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) and (3) no longer reasonably describes it, the local government must submit notice of the alterations to DLCD at least 10 days before the final evidentiary hearing, which DLCD thereafter provides to the public. The larger statutory scheme at ORS 197.610 to 197.625 is intended to expand notice and participatory options for DLCD and a broader audience that may not receive local notice. A local government's errors under ORS 197.610(6) require remand where they are of a kind or degree that calls into question whether the ORS 197.610 to 197.625 process nevertheless performed its function. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where notice under ORS 197.610(6) is sent to DLCD 17 days after the final evidentiary hearing occurred and describes the "date of first evidentiary hearing" and the "date of final hearing" but does not identify the date of the "final evidentiary hearing," where there is a disparity between the text of the notice and the text of an ordinance included with the notice regarding the subject acreage, and where the notice is sent during a time when the record is left open only for evidence that is responsive to evidence that was submitted earlier, the totality of the errors in the submission of the notice and in the notice itself are of a kind and degree that make it doubtful that the ORS 197.610 to 197.625 process performed its function, and remand is required. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A county's comprehensive plan is a working document that must be updated to reflect existing conditions and future planning obligations. Where nothing in the statewide planning goals or the county's comprehensive plan prohibits amendments to expand areas in the county to which certain plan designations may be applied, provided those areas meet all applicable statutory and rule requirements, such amendments do not provide grounds for remand or reversal. Counties have wide latitude to adopt and revise their comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances; amendments to the comprehensive plan need only comply with the statewide planning goals. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Goal 14 prohibits urban uses on rural lands. Where a county's text amendments to its comprehensive plan do not allow any urban uses on rural land, but merely expand the allowable locations in the county that could be the subject of an application to change the plan designation to rural industrial, and the text amendments require the applicant to demonstrate that the proposed use for which the rural industrial plan designation change is consistent with all statewide planning goals, including Goal 14, a petitioner's arguments that the amendments violate Goal 14 do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A petitioner's challenge to a county's amendments to its comprehensive plan that expand the allowable locations in the county that could be the subject of an application to change the plan designation to rural commercial and rural industrial, that argue that the county's adopted and acknowledged rural commercial and rural industrial zones impermissibly allow urban uses in contravention of Goal 14 are an impermissible collateral attack on an acknowledged land use regulation where no provisions of the county's code were amended by the challenged decision. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Department of Transportation v. Douglas County, 157 Or App 18, 24-25, 967 P2d 901 (1998), does not stand for the broad proposition that in an appeal of an amendment to an existing acknowledged comprehensive plan a petitioner may challenge both the amended and unamended parts of the comprehensive plan. Department of Transportation was a case where the county was attempting to bring its entire comprehensive plan into compliance with the transportation planning rule, and in that circumstance LUBA review was not limited to the amendment. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 75 Or LUBA 38 (2017).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. LUBA will reject an assignment of error based on OAR 660-012-0035(3)(b), where petitioner makes no attempt to explain why the OAR 660-012-0035(3)(b) transportation system planning obligation has any bearing on or relevance to a quasi-judicial comprehensive plan and zoning map amendment that makes no changes to the city's acknowledged transportation system plan. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 75 Or LUBA 38 (2017).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. In considering whether new comprehensive plan and zoning map designations are consistent with statewide planning goal, comprehensive plan and code requirements of adequate and safe transportation facilities, a city does not err by concluding the new designations will have no impact on those facilities because the new designations include a condition that development under the new designations be suspended as soon as it generates the same traffic impact that would be generated under the existing acknowledge comprehensive plan and zoning map designations. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 75 Or LUBA 38 (2017).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. ORS 215.431 expressly authorizes county governing bodies to allow planning commissions and hearing officers to make final decisions on some types of comprehensive plan amendments. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. That a comprehensive plan map amendment may be quasi-judicial, and therefore potentially approvable by a planning commission, does not mean relevant statutes may not require that action be taken by the governing body before the map amendment can become final and effective. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The Court of Appeals' decision in Colwell v. Washington County, 79 Or App 82, 718 P2d 747 (1986), which held that a final decision by the governing body is necessary to make a comprehensive plan map amendment final and effective, was based on several statutes, some of which apply to counties only and some of which apply to both cities and counties. Absent a statutory exception, a final decision by a city's governing body is necessary to make a comprehensive plan map amendment final and effective. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A petitioner is not required to appeal a planning commission decision approving a comprehensive plan map amendment to the city council, where under applicable law a decision by the city council is required in any event to make the comprehensive plan map amendment final and effective. In that circumstance, a petitioner is not required by ORS 197.825(2)(a) to exhaust a remedy that would do no more than require the city council to do what applicable statutes and Goal 2 already require the city council to do. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. There is no internal comprehensive plan conflict if lands that were previously added to a comprehensive plan map under prior mapping standards are allowed to remain on that map after the county adopts new mapping standards that those lands do not satisfy, so long as the county intended the new mapping standards to apply prospectively. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Although amendments to county standards for mapping sites that are eligible for destination resort siting are comprehensive plan amendments, and therefore potentially could result in significant affects on transportation facilities that could implicate OAR 660-012-0060, altering the standards for adding sites to the map in the future has no impact on transportation facilities. It is the future map amendments themselves that might significantly affect a transportation facility and implicate OAR 660-012-0060, and a county must consider OAR 660-012-0060 at the time those comprehensive plan amendments are adopted in the future. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. In land use regulation, grandfather clauses shield land use rights that were gained under old land use laws from the application of new land use laws so that the new land use laws are only applied prospectively. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A city does not err in determining that a golf course can support open space values when considering whether existing or proposed comprehensive plan designations better support various comprehensive plan policies. Haertl Development Company v. City of Portland, 59 Or LUBA 69 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When determining what comprehensive plan designation is more appropriate, a local government may consider evidence regarding wildlife habitat protection, recreation, need for parkland, water quality preservation, noise and air pollution, and tree preservation with respect to the entire property at issue in deciding that open space is the proper designation. The consideration is not limited to inventoried habitat and riparian areas. Haertl Development Company v. City of Portland, 59 Or LUBA 69 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. An ordinance that adds a destination resort overlay to a number of acres that were not included on the originally adopted destination resort overlay map "amends" the destination resort overlay map. That the county may have intended to include those acres within the destination resort overlay when the map was originally adopted does not make the map "amendment" something other than an "amendment." Remington Ranch, LLC v. Crook County, 59 Or LUBA 361 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. An ordinance that repeals an existing comprehensive plan and zoning map and replaces it with a revised map is an "amendment" of the existing comprehensive plan and zoning map. Remington Ranch, LLC v. Crook County, 59 Or LUBA 361 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When an applicant files a consolidated set of applications for: (1) a comprehensive plan amendment; (2) a zone change that is dependent on that plan map amendment; and (3) a development permit that is dependent on that zone change, the goal post rule at ORS 197.427(3)(a) does not apply to "freeze" in place the standards and criteria that applied to that development permit as of the date the applications were filed. Instead the standards and criteria that apply are those supplied by the new plan and zoning designations. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 190 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where the challenged decision only creates a new zoning district without applying that zoning district to any property, a petitioner's argument that future development proposals may violate the new zoning district's requirement that new commercial development be small-scale and low impact is premature. Carver v. Deschutes County, 58 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a petitioner argues that a comprehensive plan amendment is inconsistent with a comprehensive plan policy, but the cited comprehensive plan policy has been repealed, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Carver v. Deschutes County, 58 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. While an annexation must be made in compliance with a city's acknowledged comprehensive plan, no statute or administrative rule requires that in annexing territory the city must contemporaneously amend its comprehensive plan map to depict the new city boundaries. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where part of a subarea plan is adopted by one ordinance and part of that subarea plan is adopted by a second ordinance, and the first ordinance is remanded by LUBA but the second ordinance is affirmed, the part of the subarea plan adopted by the second ordinance may provide the comprehensive plan basis for a parking garage. Where the second ordinance adopts a subarea plan parking policy and zoning code amendments that specifically authorize parking garages on certain specified properties and a city subsequently issues a decision approving a parking garage pursuant to the policy and zoning code, the city's decision will be affirmed on appeal notwithstanding that the first ordinance was remanded, where petitioners identify no other comprehensive plan provisions that are inconsistent with approval of the parking garage. NWDA v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 533 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Miles v. City of Florence, 190 Or App 500, 79 P3d 382 (2003), did not overrule or modify Colwell v. Washington County, 79 Or App 82, 91, 718 P2d 747 (1986), and similar cases holding that the ORS 197.825(2)(a) exhaustion requirement does not require a petitioner to file a local appeal of a lower body's initial comprehensive plan amendment decision to the governing body, because applicable statutes require the governing body to conduct a hearing on the amendment in any event. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 58 Or LUBA 638 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Notwithstanding that a county's code provides that the planning commission's decision on a comprehensive plan amendment is "final" unless a local appeal is filed, under ORS 215.060 the county governing body must hold a public hearing on the plan amendment and take final action, and therefore the planning commission's initial decision on the plan amendment is not "final" in any meaningful sense. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 58 Or LUBA 638 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Even where a county's code provides for local appeal as one of three possible paths by which a governing body will review the planning commission's initial decision on a comprehensive plan amendment, because ORS 215.060 requires the governing body to hold a public hearing on a plan amendment at which testimony and issues can be raised, in that circumstance a petitioner before LUBA is not required to file a local appeal and specify issues in a notice of local appeal in order to exhaust administrative remedies or avoid waiver under Miles v. City of Florence, 190 Or App 500, 79 P3d 382 (2003). Wetherell v. Douglas County, 58 Or LUBA 638 (2009).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When ORS 197.620(1) was first adopted, the requirement that a person must have "participated" during the local proceedings that led to adoption of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment required that an appellant have done more than make a bare neutral appearance during the local proceedings. Century Properties, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 51 Or LUBA 572 (2006).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The text, context and statutory history of ORS 197.620(1) and 197.830(2) establish that while a bare neutral appearance will satisfy the standing requirement under ORS 197.830(2) that an appellant must have "appeared," such a bare neutral appearance will not satisfy the standing requirement under ORS 197.620(1) that an appellant must have "participated." To have participated under ORS 197.620(2), an appellant must have asserted a position on the merits. Century Properties, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 51 Or LUBA 572 (2006).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. While deviations from the post acknowledgment plan amendment notice requirements at ORS 197.610(1) may constitute procedural errors that will not provide a basis for remand absent prejudice to a petitioner's substantial rights, a complete failure to provide notice to the Department of Land Conservation and Development under ORS 197.610(1) is a substantive error and requires remand without regard to whether the failure prejudiced petitioner's substantial rights. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Language in the notice of a plan amendment that can be read to say that the plan designation of a parcel was changed from General Industrial to Light Industrial is not a basis to conclude at a later date that the parcel is designated Light Industrial rather than General Industrial, where the plan amendment itself does not change property's plan designation to Light Industrial. Status v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A city does not err in failing to follow comprehensive plan amendment procedures in approving an annexation, where the annexation decision does not amend the city's comprehensive plan. Morsman v. City of Madras, 47 Or LUBA 80 (2004).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A comprehensive plan citizen participation provision that requires appointment of a three-person citizens' advisory committee when the planning commission is considering a major change to the local government's land use regulations is not correctly interpreted to give the planning commission unlimited discretion in deciding what changes constitute major changes. Dobson v. City of Newport, 47 Or LUBA 267 (2004).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A post-acknowledgement plan amendment that redesignates more than two acres for commercial use must follow one of the three courses of action set out at OAR 660-009-0010(4). Although one of those permissible courses of action is to demonstrate that the post-acknowledgement plan amendment is consistent with the part of the acknowledged comprehensive plan that was adopted to implement the Goal 9 administrative rule, where the proposed action appears to be inconsistent with implementation strategies in the plan, the city must amend its acknowledged comprehensive plan following the planning requirements of OAR 660-009-0015 through 660-009-0025 and in doing so it must prepare an economic opportunities analysis. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 134 (2004).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A city may rely on the residential buildable lands inventory in its acknowledged comprehensive plan and need not update that inventory when adopting a post-acknowledgment plan amendment. Where that inventory shows a surplus of residential buildable lands both before and after a plan amendment that designates some of those lands to allow other uses, the city may rely on that remaining surplus to find the plan amendment is consistent with Goal 10 housing planning requirements. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 134 (2004).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. An assignment of error that challenges a county's failure to apply code criteria governing zoning map amendments provides no basis for reversal or remand where the assignment of error contends the zoning code criteria should have been applied to a comprehensive plan map amendment. Doherty v. Morrow County, 44 Or LUBA 141 (2003).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A comprehensive plan policy that allegedly was adopted to clarify that certain county soils that had never been rated for forest productivity were assumed to be non-forest soils was ineffective to accomplish that purpose, where the plan policy also provided an alternative procedure for determining the suitability of soils for forest use to be applied where "a determination cannot be made" using the county's soil rating system. Doob v. Josephine County, 41 Or LUBA 303 (2002).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. OAR 660-018-0010(11) and 660-018-0010(13), read together, exempt small tract zoning map amendments from the requirement, at OAR 660-018-0020 and ORS 197.610, that DLCD be notified of proposed plan or land use regulation amendments. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a county fails to provide 45 days' advance notice to the Department of Land Conservation and Development prior to the first hearing on a post acknowledgment plan amendment, and provides no explanation for why emergency circumstances warrant shorter notice, the county's decision must be remanded. Donnell v. Union County, 39 Or LUBA 419 (2001).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. ORS 215.050(2) requires that zoning amendments shall implement the adopted comprehensive plan. When a local government adopts a zone change but does not adopt a contemporaneous comprehensive plan change, resulting in plan map/zoning map inconsistency, the decision must be remanded. DLCD v. Klamath County, 38 Or LUBA 769 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Read in conjunction with the "safe harbor" provisions of OAR 660-013-0140, the requirement at OAR 660-013-0160(5) that a local government achieve full compliance with the Airport Planning Rule in amending its comprehensive plan and land use regulations applies only when the local government amends its plan or land use regulations to add different requirements than the plan or land use regulations previously imposed. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 38 Or LUBA 291 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The "air, rail, water and pipeline transportation plan" required by OAR 660-012-0020(2)(e) to be included in a local government's Transportation System Plan need not include any information other than that specified in the rule, i.e., the location and extent of existing or planned facilities. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 38 Or LUBA 291 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A demonstration of need for a UGB amendment must be based upon and consistent with the local government's planning documents adopted pursuant to the Goal 2-mandated planning process. In order to amend the UGB based on different population and capacity projections than those in the local government's comprehensive plan, the local government must amend the plan to include those different projections. Residents of Rosemont v. Metro, 38 Or LUBA 199 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A local government's failure to adopt a transportation system plan (TSP) by the date required by OAR 660-012-0055 does not preclude the local government from amending the transportation element of its comprehensive plan until it adopts a TSP, where it is clear under the comprehensive plan that the transportation element is a separate policy document than the TSP, and the amendments to the transportation element are not intended to and do not have the effect of adopting a TSP. Volny v. City of Bend, 37 Or LUBA 493 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A comprehensive plan amendment that changes a minor arterial to a major arterial changes the functional classification of a transportation facility and thus requires findings of compliance with OAR 660-012-0060. Volny v. City of Bend, 37 Or LUBA 493 (2000).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a city approves a development plan for a university district as part of a quasi-judicial proceeding, but does not incorporate it into the city's comprehensive plan or land use regulations, the development plan is not a comprehensive plan or land use regulation, and thus amendments to that plan are not subject to review for compliance with statewide planning goals or the Transportation Planning Rule. Brome v. City of Corvallis, 36 Or LUBA 225 (1999).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A local government does not violate the Goal 2 consistency requirement by using updated population projections instead of population projections in its comprehensive plan to determine the size of the urban land need under the urban reserve rule, OAR 660-021-0030, where the two projections serve different purposes and use of the updated projections does not undermine or conflict with the comprehensive plan or implementing regulations. D.S. Parklane Development, Inc. v. Metro, 35 Or LUBA 516 (1999).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The Transportation Planning Rule, OAR 660-012-0060, requires that when a plan amendment "significantly affects" a transportation facility the local government must either ensure that the amendment is consistent with its transportation plan or amend its plan. Citizens for Florence v. City of Florence, 35 Or LUBA 255 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When a land use allowed by a comprehensive plan amendment would "significantly affect" a transportation facility, a local government may not avoid the requirements of the Transportation Planning Rule, OAR 660-012-

0060, by conditioning the amendment on improvements that maintain the facility above the thresholds provided in OAR 660-012-0060(2). Citizens for Florence v. City of Florence, 35 Or LUBA 255 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. If a local government's watershed is already in violation of applicable state environmental standards, it may not amend its comprehensive plan to allow future development that will compound that violation without either finding that the amendment is consistent with Goal 6 or taking an exception to Goal 6. Citizens for Florence v. City of Florence, 35 Or LUBA 255 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Goal 11 applies when a local government redesignates land to allow for more intensive uses that place greater demand on public facilities than uses allowed under an existing designation. Goal 11 is not implicated when a local government redesignates land to allow a shopping center that will place fewer demands on public facilities than the residential uses allowed under the current designation. Citizens for Florence v. City of Florence, 35 Or LUBA 255 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The Transportation Planning Rule requirements set forth at OAR 660-012-0045(2) by their terms apply directly to local codes, not local comprehensive plans. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The OAR 660-012-0045(2)(g) requirement that local governments adopt "regulations assuring that amendments to land use designations, densities, and design standards are consistent with the functions, capacities and levels of service of facilities identified in the TSP" is not satisfied by a plan provision that fails to refer to the Transportation Planning Rule by name or number and that imposes a different threshold for application of the rule standard than is required by the rule. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. LUBA has no jurisdiction to review provisions of an acknowledged comprehensive plan for compliance with the Transportation Planning Rule, where those plan provisions are not amended by the challenged decision and are not affected by the challenged decision in a way that affects their compliance with the statewide planning goals. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The requirement of OAR 660-012-0015(2)(a) that regional TSPs be consistent with the state TSP is violated by a comprehensive plan amendment that purports to require that ODOT provide access under circumstances that are not consistent with ODOT policies. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where petitioners' arguments are directed at unamended provisions of an acknowledged comprehensive plan rather than the comprehensive plan amendments adopted by the challenged decision, petitioners present no basis for reversal or remand. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – mendment – Generally. An amendment to a future streets plan does not significantly affect a transportation facility, and the TPR does not apply, where the record demonstrates that the decision does not change a functional classification or any standards relating to functional classifications and traffic levels would not be increased. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where the local code permits the city council to "delete, add or modify any of the provisions" of a legislative proposal, the city council does not err by adopting an option that is different from the option that was provided to the city council. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a comprehensive plan does not provide for a proposed expansion of a mining site, a conditional use permit is insufficient to permit the expansion. In that circumstance, OAR 660-023-0180 requires a post-acknowledgment plan amendment and Goal 5 analysis. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. LUBA's scope of review is not precluded or affected when petitioner assigns error to a plan amendment but fails to assign error to a corresponding zone change. Under ORS 197.175(2)(b) and 197.835(7)(b), zoning ordinances must conform to and comply with the local government's comprehensive plan, therefore a remand on the basis of error respecting the plan amendment would necessarily invalidate the corresponding zone change. Geaney v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 189 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A plan amendment redesignating land as commercial on the basis of a nonconforming use is subject to review for compliance with applicable statewide planning goals, notwithstanding an acknowledged comprehensive plan policy that directs designation of such land as commercial rather than recognizing the nonconforming use, where a goals compliance challenge to the amendment is not an indirect compliance challenge to the comprehensive plan policy itself. Geaney v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 189 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Goal 14 is applicable to a plan amendment redesignating rural land as commercial, where the land is outside the UGB and the commercial designation would permit any commercial use of any size or intensity, including large commercial uses such as a Wal-Mart store that are urban in character and intensity. Geaney v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 189 (1998).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Application of criteria included in an acknowledged comprehensive plan governing redesignation of resource lands does not obviate the requirement that comprehensive plan and land use regulation amendments comply with the statewide planning goals. DLCD v. Curry County, 33 Or LUBA 728 (1997).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When a change in the type or intensity of an existing use is proposed for an exception area, the county must (1) make findings showing either that Goal 14 does not apply or the proposal complies with an existing Goal 14 exception; or (2) take a new Goal 14 exception. Leathers v. Marion County, 31 Or LUBA 220 (1996).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When an earlier acknowledged comprehensive plan amendment imposes a condition that any proposed conditional use or use variance shall require a revised exception to the Statewide Planning Goals, a new plan amendment is required before additional conditional uses can be allowed, since taking an exception necessitates a plan amendment. Leathers v. Marion County, 31 Or LUBA 220 (1996).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Under the county's comprehensive plan, ODOT's initiation of eminent domain proceedings gave it the requisite "ownership" interest in property to file an application for a plan amendment regarding the property, and that interest was not affected, for purposes of the plan amendment, by dismissal of the eminent domain proceeding after the agency's application was deemed complete. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 31 Or LUBA 57 (1996).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. If it is obvious from the record that a particular goal does not apply to a proposed comprehensive plan amendment, it is not a basis for remand that the local government has not actually stated in its written decision that the goal does not apply. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. When the city does not deliver notice of a comprehensive plan map amendment and facilities plan amendment to DLCD, as required by ORS 197.615(1), the amendments will not be deemed acknowledged under ORS 197.625(1) by the passage of time. DLCD v. City of St. Helens, 29 Or LUBA 485 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. All comprehensive plan amendments must comply with the Statewide Planning Goals. When adopting a comprehensive plan amendment, it is the local government's obligation to explain in its findings why the plan amendment complies with the goals or why arguably applicable goal standards need not be addressed and satisfied. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where the local code provides petitioner has a right to initiate a minor comprehensive plan amendment, but only the local government can initiate a major plan amendment, and that the local government may refuse to do so for any reason, the process for local government-initiated plan amendments is not an administrative remedy petitioner is required to exhaust before seeking LUBA review of a local government decision that petitioner's proposed plan amendment is a major plan amendment. Cone v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 133 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government decision to classify petitioner's proposed comprehensive plan amendment as "major" is final, and denies petitioner a right he would otherwise have under the local code to have his proposed amendment reviewed on its merits, the local government's decision is a land use decision as defined in ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A)(iii) and is subject to review by LUBA. Cone v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 133 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where amendments to a local government's comprehensive plan or land use regulations do not amend or affect the local government's acknowledged Citizen Involvement Program (CIP), the only way a petitioner can demonstrate a violation of Goal 1 is by demonstrating a failure to comply with the acknowledged CIP. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. An amendment to a "refinement plan" that is part of a local government's comprehensive plan is a comprehensive plan amendment and is reviewable for compliance with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals and their implementing rules. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Legislative changes to acknowledged comprehensive plans or land use regulations that reduce a local government's supply of industrially designated land must be supported by (1) findings demonstrating the remaining industrially designated land is adequate to satisfy the requirements of Goal 9, (2) argument establishing compliance with Goal 9 based on plan provisions, code provisions and evidence in the record, or both. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The "public need" standard formerly imposed on quasi-judicial zone changes under Fasano v. Washington Co. Comm., 264 Or 574, 507 P2d 23 (1973), does not apply to comprehensive plan amendments, unless the applicable comprehensive plan or land use regulations impose such a "public need" standard. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. In adopting post-acknowledgment comprehensive plan amendments, other than amendments to the plan's acknowledged Goal 5 inventory itself, a local government is entitled to rely on its acknowledged Goal 5 inventory and need not consider possible impacts on alleged Goal 5 resource sites that are not included on the Goal 5 inventory. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a proposed transportation facility includes open space and pedestrian and bicycle facilities to satisfy comprehensive plan policies implementing Goal 8, petitioner's speculation that those facilities might be eliminated in the future in favor of more traffic lanes provides no basis for reversal or remand. Such changes would require a plan amendment and a demonstration that the altered facility complies with the plan policies. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A comprehensive plan amendment must comply with the statewide planning goals. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where the only inventory of historic structures maintained by a city has not been adopted as part of the city's acknowledged comprehensive plan, a post-acknowledgment decision not to designate an inventoried building as a historical landmark is not a de facto post-acknowledgment plan amendment, even though the decision may ultimately allow the building to be demolished. Historical Development Advocates v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 617 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. ORS 215.503(2)(a), requiring all legislative acts related to comprehensive plans or zoning adopted by a county governing body to be by ordinance, applies to legislative decisions adopting or amending comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances, not to quasi-judicial plan or zone changes. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. An amendment to a "refinement plan" that is part of a local government's comprehensive plan is a comprehensive plan amendment. Graville Properties, Ltd. v. City of Eugene, 27 Or LUBA 583 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A comprehensive plan amendment is quasi-judicial in nature if it results from a private development application, must comply with criteria in the Statewide Planning Goals and the plan itself, and affects a specific area, involving one property owner and a single property. Graville Properties, Ltd. v. City of Eugene, 27 Or LUBA 583 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a challenged decision adopts a new plan policy stating the city will allow a particular commercial-designated area to be developed "to serve both neighborhood commercial needs and as a community commercial center," but declines to change a plan policy that commercial development of the area should be at an intensity consistent with General Office or Neighborhood Commercial zoning, LUBA will remand the decision for the city to interpret the relevant plan and code provisions in the first instance. Graville Properties, Ltd. v. City of Eugene, 27 Or LUBA 583 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Providing notice of a post-acknowledgment plan or land use regulation amendment to the Department of Land Conservation and Development under ORS 197.610(1) is inadequate to satisfy a local government's coordination obligations. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. City of North Plains, 27 Or LUBA 372 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where the acknowledged county comprehensive plan includes a methodology for rating forest soil types, a decision identifying and applying a soil type not included in the acknowledged plan provisions, to support a plan map amendment and zone change to nonresource designations, has the effect of improperly amending the acknowledged plan without following post-acknowledgment amendment procedures. Doob v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 293 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where LUBA has remanded a city decision annexing certain property, a subsequent city decision amending the comprehensive plan and zoning designations for that property, in reliance on the annexation, exceeds the city's authority. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Comprehensive plan and zone amendments which lessen the impacts or demands that goal, plan and code standards were adopted to address are likely to be consistent with those goal, plan and code standards. McInnis v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a comprehensive plan contains no existing inventory of significant aggregate resource sites and imposes different standards for plan amendments, depending on whether the amendment is a plan text or a plan map amendment, the local government must explain in its decision its rationale in processing and approving a request to amend the plan to designate a site as a significant aggregate resource site as a plan text amendment. Nathan v. City of Turner, 26 Or LUBA 382 (1994).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Prior to local government action to designate new or existing plans and regulations as its Transportation System Plan (TSP), in the manner required by OAR 660-12-010(2), any challenge to adoption of a plan or regulation amendment based on failure to comply with the TSP requirements of OAR 660-12-010 through 660-12-050 is premature. Pacific Rivers Council, Inc. v. Lane County, 26 Or LUBA 323 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where property is not included on the inventory of Goal 5 resource sites in a county's acknowledged comprehensive plan, the county is not required to consider in a post-acknowledgment plan map amendment proceeding whether the subject property ought to be added to the Goal 5 inventory. Waugh v. Coos County, 26 Or LUBA 300 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A county may not amend its transportation plan in ways which conflict with the Oregon Bicycle Bill requirements set out at ORS 366.514(1), even though those statutory requirements would apply in any event. Bicycle Transportation Alliance v. Washington Co., 26 Or LUBA 265 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A local government may not amend its comprehensive plan to allow location of roadway alignments anywhere within one-mile-wide corridors without demonstrating the selected alignment complies with the statewide planning goals or that the local code standards applicable to such alignment decisions are sufficient to assure compliance with the statewide planning goals. Bicycle Transportation Alliance v. Washington Co., 26 Or LUBA 265 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. It is impermissible for a local government to amend a land use ordinance or comprehensive plan provision in the guise of interpreting either. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government's final decision is not to adopt a legislative amendment to its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations, ORS 197.830(2) and 197.620(1) deny standing to appeal such a final decision to LUBA. ODOT v. Klamath County, 25 Or LUBA 761 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Although the statewide planning goals apply when an acknowledged comprehensive plan is amended, an appeal challenging a postacknowledgment plan amendment may present goal compliance questions that either were or should have been raised prior to acknowledgment and, therefore, are foreclosed by acknowledgment. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Findings that a proposed comprehensive plan map designation will offer more protection for resources identified in certain comprehensive plan policies than the existing plan map designation are adequate to support the change in plan designation, absent some explanation of why those findings are inadequate. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Plan text and map amendments and zoning text and map amendments are not "permits," as that term is defined in ORS 215.402(4). Leonard v. Union County, 24 Or LUBA 362 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. That a local government may have provided inadequate notice of a post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendment to the Department of Land Conservation and Development (DLCD) will not excuse a person's failure to file a notice of intent to appeal that decision with LUBA within 21 days after the decision became final, where the person was not entitled to receive notice of the challenged decision from DLCD. Leonard v. Union County, 24 Or LUBA 362 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. LUBA does not apply land use decision making approval criteria in the first instance. It is the local government's responsibility to consider the evidentiary record, identify the applicable standards, make the decision in the first instance and explain the basis for its decision in its findings. ODOT v. City of Waldport, 24 Or LUBA 344 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. A local code requirement that a comprehensive plan amendment be "necessary to fulfill an identified public need" would be satisfied if, pursuant to the Goal 5 planning process, the local government determined that the subject site is a significant resource site and should be protected. Gonzalez v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 251 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where Statewide Planning Goals are apparently applicable to a comprehensive plan amendment, a local government must either explain in its decision why the amendment complies with such apparently applicable goals, explain why those goals do not apply to the proposed plan amendment or explain why an exception to those goals is justified. ODOT v. City of Newport, 23 Or LUBA 408 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. To adopt a quasi-judicial plan amendment, a local government must make findings establishing the proposed amendment is in compliance with the Statewide Planning Goals. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 370 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. In amending its comprehensive plan, it is error for a local government to neither explain in its decision why apparently applicable

Statewide Planning Goals do not apply, adopt findings demonstrating compliance with such goals, nor take an exception to such goals. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 370 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. To adopt a quasi-judicial comprehensive plan amendment, a local government must adopt findings establishing the proposed amendment is in compliance with the Statewide Planning Goals. Klein v. City of Hubbard, 23 Or LUBA 367 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. In amending its comprehensive plan, it is a local government's obligation to explain in its findings why apparently applicable Statewide Planning Goal standards need not be addressed and satisfied. It is error for a local government to neither identify any goals applicable to a proposed plan amendment nor explain why apparently applicable goals are satisfied. Klein v. City of Hubbard, 23 Or LUBA 367 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. The applicant for comprehensive plan and zone map amendments has the burden of establishing compliance of the proposed amendments with the applicable approval standards. Hess v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 343 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Amending an acknowledged multi-jurisdictional metropolitan area comprehensive plan so that it is inconsistent with an unamended city "refinement plan" is permissible where the comprehensive plan (1) recognizes such conflicts may exist, (2) provides that all such conflicts are resolved in favor of the comprehensive plan, and (3) recognizes that amendments to refinement plans needed to make them consistent with the comprehensive plan may be delayed. Neste Resins Corp. v. City of Eugene, 23 Or LUBA 55 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Unless a county can establish that its acknowledged comprehensive plan somehow obviates its obligation under ORS 197.175(2)(a) and 197.835(4) and Goal 14, it must either amend its comprehensive plan to include the subject property within an urban growth boundary or adopt an exception to Goal 14, before it may plan and zone rural land for urban uses. Caine v. Tillamook County, 22 Or LUBA 687 (1992).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Inconsistencies between a decision made by two service districts and a county comprehensive plan and land use regulations do not make the service districts' decision a decision by the county or a de facto amendment to the county comprehensive plan. Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 807 (1991).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. ORS 197.615(2)(a) requires that a local government give notice of decisions amending its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to persons who participate during the local proceedings and request such notice in writing. Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government has no rules establishing specific procedures or forms for persons participating in post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendment proceedings to utilize in making a written request for notice under ORS 197.615(2)(a)(B), and has no rules establishing to whom requests for such notice must be directed, a request for a copy of the city's final decision directed to the city attorney is sufficient to satisfy ORS 197.615(2)(a)(B). Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

29.2.1 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government provides a party with a copy of the decision amending its comprehensive plan and land use regulations, but fails to advise the party of the date the challenged decision became final or of the requirements for appealing the decision to LUBA, the notice requirements of ORS 197.615(2)(b)(B) and (D), applicable to post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendments, are not satisfied. Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where petitioner alleges a local government failed to meet its obligations under ORS 227.186 to provide notice of a comprehensive plan amendment, a zone change, or a change in a land use regulation that may affect the permissible uses of property to be mailed to the owner of each lot or parcel that the ordinance proposes to rezone or that would be affected by a change in the permissible uses of the property, petitioner fails to allege a basis for reversal or remand when petitioner fails to allege the "procedural error" prejudiced petitioner's "substantial rights." Deumling v. City of Salem, 76 Or LUBA 99 (2017).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. A county fails to comply with ORS 215.060, which requires "the governing body" to (1) conduct at least one hearing; and (2) conduct those hearings after at least 10 days' advance notice of "each of the hearings" is published in a newspaper of general circulation, where the county fails to publish in a newspaper of general circulation the notice of the public hearing before the board of county commissioners regarding proposed text amendments to a comprehensive plan. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Clatsop County, 75 Or LUBA 277 (2017).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that does not include the "text" of the proposed amendment as defined by OAR 660-018-0020(2) is inadequate to perform the notice function required by ORS 197.610(1). No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that includes the text of the proposed amendment as that term is defined in OAR 660-018-0020(2), but was submitted approximately 23 days prior to the city's initial evidentiary hearing is adequate to perform the notice function required by ORS 197.610(1). No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where a city has a process requiring that proposed amendments to a comprehensive plan and zoning code be subject to hearing and review by the planning commission and proposed design review guidelines be subject to hearing and review by the design commission, a notice of proposed amendment regarding the matters before the planning commission is not sufficient to apprise DLCD or others who receive notice pursuant to ORS 197.610(2) of the design review proceedings. No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. An initial notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment amendment submitted to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(1) and OAR 660-018-0020(1) that erroneously states that the initial evidentiary hearing had been held and does not indicate whether further opportunities to provide evidence are available is not adequate to satisfy ORS 197.610(1), which requires that notice of proposed post-acknowledgement land use amendments be submitted to DLCD at least 45 days prior to the initial evidentiary proceedings on those amendments. No Tram to OHSU v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 647 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Although a complete failure to provide advanced published notice pursuant to ORS 215.060 renders an ordinance of "no legal effect," if published notice is provided, challenges to the adequacy of that notice are analyzed as procedural errors and provide a basis for reversal or remand if such errors prejudice a petitioner's substantial rights. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 44 Or LUBA 722 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. ORS 215.503 (2003) requires a county to provide mailed written notice of the first hearing on an ordinance to property owners whose property could be rezoned due to a comprehensive plan amendment, but it does not require additional public notice every time LUBA remands an ordinance. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 44 Or LUBA 722 (2003).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Because ORS 215.060 specifically provides that a county's failure to provide notice of an action regarding its plan as required by the statute shall result in the county's action having "no legal effect," LUBA may not overlook a county's failure to provide the notice required by ORS 215.060, notwithstanding that the lack of notice did not prejudice petitioner's substantial rights. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Mailing individual notice of a proposed comprehensive plan amendment to affected property owners is not sufficient to meet the requirement under ORS 215.060 that a county publish notice of such action in a "newspaper of general circulation" or "in the territory * * * concerned." Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. ORS 216.060 provides that a county may give notice of a plan amendment by mail, radio, television or other means in addition to publishing notice in a "newspaper of general circulation," but the statute does not allow a county to provide notice by such other means instead of by publication in a newspaper. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. OAR 660-018-0010(11) and 660-018-0010(13), read together, exempt small tract zoning map amendments from the requirement, at OAR 660-018-0020 and ORS 197.610, that DLCD be notified of proposed plan or land use regulation amendments. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Because a local government's proceedings on remand from LUBA are a continuation of its original proceedings and not a new proceeding, a local government that has sent notice of a proposed post-acknowledgment plan amendment to DLCD as required by ORS 197.610 is not required under the statute or rules implementing the statute to send additional notice of the proposed amendment during the remand proceedings. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 38 Or LUBA 291 (2000).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. A pro forma declaration of "emergency circumstances," unaccompanied by stated reasons directed at the necessity for expedited review, is insufficient to satisfy ORS 197.610. Cited concerns about unregulated development in the floodplain constitute a sufficient declaration of emergency under ORS 197.610 to allow expedited adoption proceedings. Barnard Perkins Corp. v. City of Rivergrove, 34 Or LUBA 660 (1998).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. ORS 215.060, which requires notice and public hearings prior to action by the governing body of a county "regarding the plan," does not apply to a statement on a notice of adoption to DLCD that the Statewide Planning Goals do not apply to a newly adopted land use regulation. Petersen v. Columbia County, 33 Or LUBA 253 (1997).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where the city code requires public hearings before the planning commission and the city council prior to the adoption of a legislative amendment to the city's comprehensive plan, the failure to hold any hearings is a substantive violation of the city code which affects the rights of anyone who might have appeared and commented. Concerned Citizens v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 70 (1997).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. The city's failure to comply with ORS 197.610(1) in not submitting proposed comprehensive plan amendments to LCDC or DLCD is a substantive error that requires remand. Concerned Citizens v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 70 (1997).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. An unrecorded meeting between DLCD staff and intervenors' representative is insufficient to notify DLCD that a proposal submitted under ORS 197.610 has been modified. DLCD v. Yamhill County, 31 Or LUBA 488 (1996).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where petitioners allege the planning commission denied them an opportunity to submit evidence relevant to a proposed comprehensive plan amendment, but petitioners were able to submit the evidence during a de novo hearing on the proposed plan amendment before the governing body, the alleged error in the planning commission proceedings was cured by the governing body's de novo review. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where the local code requires the governing body to review the planning commission's recommendation on a proposed comprehensive plan amendment, but does not limit the governing body's authority to adopt a plan amendment to instances where the planning commission recommendation is free from error, that there was an error in the procedures by which the planning commission arrived at its recommendation does not deprive the governing body of jurisdiction over the proposed plan amendment. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

29.2.2 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. If the local governing body's interpretation of its comprehensive plan as not already designating the subject property as a 1B aggregate resources site, or providing a method of doing so without amending the acknowledged plan, is not clearly wrong, LUBA will defer to the governing body's interpretation. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendments – Text Amendments: Standards. A city's conclusion that zoning ordinance text amendments are consistent with the city's comprehensive plan policy which requires city to "maximize * * * intermodal transportation linkages" because the amendments will not affect the city's supply of land zoned for economic or industrial use is not responsive to the language of the comprehensive plan policy objective. On its face, a city's zoning ordinance which prohibits new and expanded intermodal fossil fuel transportation facilities appears to be inconsistent with the comprehensive plan policy objective language, and this apparent inconsistency requires some analysis and a direct explanation. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. When a county amends a zoning ordinance to require a particular study area when applying a maximum residential density standard within that zoning district, the county cannot rely on an earlier LUBA decision that allowed use of a similar study area in a quasi-judicial decision affecting a single property. Instead, the county must establish in amending the zoning ordinance that mandating the particular study area in all cases in that zone in the future is consistent with the maximum residential density standard and Goal 5, which the maximum residential density standard was adopted to implement. ODFW v. Crook County, 72 Or LUBA 316 (2015).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county must justify its decision to replace an ambiguous existing maximum residential density standard with a similarly worded but much more methodologically precise maximum residential standard and may not simply rely on the similar wording to conclude that the new standard is consistent with the county's comprehensive plan and Goal 5. ODFW v. Crook County, 72 Or LUBA 316 (2015).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. In adopting zoning that makes existing manufactured dwelling parks non-conforming uses in a high-density residential zone, a city is not required to consider in isolation a comprehensive plan policy requiring conservation of existing affordable housing, but may consider and balance other plan policies that promote competing policy objectives. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Remand is necessary where a city deletes two refinement plan policies requiring protection of existing manufactured dwelling parks, and zones the parks to make them non-conforming uses, but the findings do not explain how the amendments are consistent with a comprehensive plan policy requiring conservation of existing affordable housing. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county's population projection is supported by an adequate factual base when it relies on a massive supply of groundwater in the regional aquifer and future acquisition of rights to the aquifer in order to meet future water needs for population growth. Friends of Deschutes County v. Deschutes County, 49 Or LUBA 100 (2005).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. While population forecasts may eventually be used to provide a partial basis for a local government to take future actions that might have an effect upon farmland, the forecasts do not have an effect on farmland, and therefore do not implicate Goal 3. Friends of Deschutes County v. Deschutes County, 49 Or LUBA 100 (2005).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A local government may take past and future annexations into account in determining its future growth rate. Friends of Deschutes County v. Deschutes County, 49 Or LUBA 100 (2005).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Including "public or private racetracks" among the uses allowed in a new public/quasi-public plan designation and parks and recreation zone is not inconsistent with general comprehensive plan language requiring "sensitivity to natural features" and encouragement of mixed development. Okray v. City of Cottage Grove, 47 Or LUBA 297 (2004).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A post-acknowledgement plan amendment that redesignates more than two acres for commercial use must follow one of the three courses of action set out at OAR 660-009-0010(4). Although one of those permissible courses of action is to demonstrate that the post-acknowledgement plan amendment is consistent with the part of the acknowledged comprehensive plan that was adopted to implement the Goal 9 administrative rule, where the proposed action appears to be inconsistent with implementation strategies in the plan, the city must amend its acknowledged comprehensive plan following the planning requirements of OAR 660-009-0015 through 660-009-0025 and in doing so it must prepare an economic opportunities analysis. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 134 (2004).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Unless the requirements of a periodic review remand order are embodied in a city's comprehensive plan or other applicable regulations, an allegation that a proposed comprehensive plan amendment and zone change are inconsistent with that periodic review remand order is not a basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Marion County v. City of Keizer, 45 Or LUBA 236 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county does not exceed the authority granted under ORS 195.025(1) or 197.005(3) by adopting county comprehensive plan amendments that inform cities what considerations will suffice to gain county concurrence in UGB amendments or other decisions requiring county concurrence. City of Woodburn v. Marion County, 45 Or LUBA 423 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. ORS 195.036 does not require a county to employ any particular methodology to project future population, and is silent with respect to whether different methodologies may be used for different areas of the county. As long as the county's choice of methodology is supported by an adequate factual base, the county may choose to use different methodologies in different areas of the county. Tipperman v. Union County, 44 Or LUBA 98 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A reasonable factfinder would not rely on 1990-2000 building permit data to project a higher than historic population increase through the year 2020, where the analysis of building permit data assumes without any basis that each building permit resulted in construction of a permanent non-seasonal dwelling, and fails to adequately take into account the number of abandoned, demolished, removed or replaced dwellings. Tipperman v. Union County, 44 Or LUBA 98 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A reasonable factfinder would not assume that every new job and student slot created in the county over the next 20 years will be filled by a new immigrant to the county, for purposes of projecting county population increase, particularly given the relatively high rate of unemployment in the county, and the unlikelihood that all new jobs will be full-time or family-wage jobs likely to induce in-migration. Tipperman v. Union County, 44 Or LUBA 98 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county's choice to allocate a higher than historic rate of growth to one city, in coordinating the county's 20-year population projection among cities and unincorporated areas, is supported by an adequate factual base, where the record includes evidence that the city was the fastest growing city in the county in the 1990s and is likely to annex rural residential land at a higher rate than other cities. Tipperman v. Union County, 44 Or LUBA 98 (2003).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. OAR 660-018-0010(11) and 660-018-0010(13), read together, exempt small tract zoning map amendments from the requirement, at OAR 660-018-0020 and ORS 197.610, that DLCD be notified of proposed plan or land use regulation amendments. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county's 2020 population projection is supported by an adequate factual base, notwithstanding that it is based on 1991-1997 population figures that differ from official state estimates for those years, where a reasonable person could conclude that, when the two sets of figures are adjusted to cover the same period of time, the difference between the county and state figures falls within a statistically acceptable margin of error. DLCD v. Douglas County, 37 Or LUBA 129 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county population projection is supported by an adequate factual base, notwithstanding that it is based on assumptions regarding economic growth that are inconsistent with the county's historic economic growth patterns, where a reasonable person could conclude that those historic economic growth patterns are not indicative of the county's long-term economic prospects. DLCD v. Douglas County, 37 Or LUBA 129 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county plan amendment imposing a "sequencing" requirement that proposed attached housing be built before completing proposed detached housing is supported by an adequate factual base, where a reasonable decision maker could conclude, based on testimony in the record, that the sequencing requirement is necessary to forestall attempts to underbuild attached housing, which may subvert the county's minimum density standard. West Hills Development Co. v. Washington County, 37 Or LUBA 46 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Petitioners fail to demonstrate that a county's plan amendment lacks an adequate factual base and is inconsistent with Goal 10 where petitioners merely speculate that the county's plan amendment, which requires that proposed attached housing be built at a site before completing proposed detached housing, will adversely affect the county's buildable lands inventory. West Hills Development Co. v. Washington County, 37 Or LUBA 46 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Petitioners fail to demonstrate that a county's minimum density standard lacks an adequate factual base or is inconsistent with Goal 10 where petitioners merely speculate that application of the standard will make it impossible to develop certain lands at lower densities. Even if petitioners' speculations are correct, the only probable result is that those lands will be developed at higher densities, which is not inconsistent with Goal 10. West Hills Development Co. v. Washington County, 37 Or LUBA 46 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A decision to remove 40 acres of land from a city's inventory of multi-family residential land must be shown to be consistent with the inventory of buildable lands in the housing element of the city's comprehensive plan. A general finding that there are other available lands that would satisfy residential needs is inadequate to explain why the city's inventory of multi-family residential land remains adequate to meet the city's needs despite a decision to remove 40 acres from that inventory. Mulford v. Town of Lakeview, 36 Or LUBA 715 (1999).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Approval standards for approval of "development" do not apply to a legislative amendment of a future streets plan. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A local government is not required to select the most favorable or logical future streets plan where the applicable criterion simply requires that the streets plan provide logical extension, continuation and interconnection. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A legislative comprehensive plan amendment must comply with the statewide planning goals, and that requirement is not met simply because subsequent development applications would be reviewed pursuant to acknowledged criteria. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. An amendment to an acknowledged comprehensive plan must be reviewed for compliance with the statewide planning goals, notwithstanding that the acknowledged plan has an acknowledged process for amending the plan, where the amendment can be reviewed for compliance with the statewide planning goals without necessarily challenging the acknowledged process itself. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Findings that state aggregate sites already on the comprehensive plan inventory are being depleted faster than expected, conclude there is a need to preserve additional aggregate sites to provide for long-term supply at multiple sites to protect the competitive nature of the aggregate market and explain why it is in the public interest that a competitive aggregate market be maintained, are sufficient to satisfy a code requirement that there be a "public need" to add the subject site to the plan inventory. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a legislative comprehensive plan amendment adopts policies arguably relevant to OAR 660-12-060, either the decision must be supported by findings addressing OAR 660-12-060 or respondents must demonstrate, through arguments in their briefs and citation to provisions of the local government's plan and regulations or the record, that the challenged policies comply with OAR 660-12-060. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where an applicable standard requires a determination that a proposed plan amendment complies with the plan, findings that state only that the proposal "appears" to satisfy the plan are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with that standard. Makepeace v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 370 (1993).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Comprehensive plan amendments must comply with the statewide planning goals. Neuharth v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 267 (1993).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A process included in an acknowledged comprehensive plan for correcting scrivener's errors does not excuse a local government from demonstrating that a substantive amendment to the plan complies with the statewide planning goals. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 307 (1991).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. In amending an acknowledged comprehensive plan, a local government is required by statute to assure the plan as amended complies with the statewide planning goals and the amendment does not create a conflict with the unamended portions of the acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 307 (1991).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Even if a particular standard in an acknowledged comprehensive plan goes beyond what is required by Goal 3 or the EFU zoning statutes, it does not necessarily follow that what is left after the plan is amended to delete that standard is sufficient to comply with Goal 3. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 307 (1991).

29.2.3 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Although the provision of ORS 197.160(1)(b) requiring local government citizen involvement programs to provide for a citizen advisory committee(s) may establish an approval standard for the adoption or amendment of local government citizen involvement programs, it does not establish substantive or procedural requirements for the review of other types of plan amendments. Wade v. Lane County, 20 Or LUBA 369 (1990).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. That an alteration to a proposed PAPA is required by LUBA's decision in a prior appeal and reduces the subject acreage does not mean as a matter of law that the proposed PAPA is not "altered to such an extent that the materials submitted no longer reasonably describe the proposed change," thereby requiring notice of the alteration to DLCD pursuant to ORS 197.610(6). Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 422 (2019).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Although a city code requires that the city's zoning map, the Metro Plan map and Metro Refinement Plan maps must be consistent, a city does not err by amending its zoning map and the Metro Plan map without adopting a conforming amendment to the Metro Refinement Plan map, where another code section provides that amendments to the Metro Plan map result in automatic conforming changes to the Metro Refinement Plan map by operation of law. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. While an annexation must be made in compliance with a city's acknowledged comprehensive plan, no statute or administrative rule requires that in annexing territory the city must contemporaneously amend its comprehensive plan map to depict the new city boundaries. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A decision that amends the comprehensive plan and zoning maps for a 20-acre parcel in single ownership is properly viewed as a quasi-judicial decision under Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers, and therefore the county erred in conducting the hearing and adopting the decision under legislative procedures, which do not provide written notice to adjoining landowners. Sullivan v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 543 (2005).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Although a complete failure to provide advanced published notice pursuant to ORS 215.060 renders an ordinance of "no legal effect," if published notice is provided, challenges to the adequacy of that notice are analyzed as procedural errors and provide a basis for reversal or remand if such errors prejudice a petitioner's substantial rights. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 44 Or LUBA 722 (2003).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. ORS 215.503 (2003) requires a county to provide mailed written notice of the first hearing on an ordinance to property owners whose property could be rezoned due to a comprehensive plan amendment, but it does not require additional public notice every time LUBA remands an ordinance. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 44 Or LUBA 722 (2003).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Because ORS 215.060 specifically provides that a county's failure to provide notice of an action regarding its plan as required by the statute shall result in the county's action having "no legal effect," LUBA may not overlook a county's failure to provide the notice required by ORS 215.060, notwithstanding that the lack of notice did not prejudice petitioner's substantial rights. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Mailing individual notice of a proposed comprehensive plan amendment to affected property owners is not sufficient to meet the requirement under ORS 215.060 that a county publish notice of such action in a "newspaper of general circulation" or "in the territory * * * concerned." Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. ORS 216.060 provides that a county may give notice of a plan amendment by mail, radio, television or other means in addition to publishing notice in a "newspaper of general circulation," but the statute does not allow a county to provide notice by such other means instead of by publication in a newspaper. Ramsey v. Multnomah County, 43 Or LUBA 25 (2002).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a county has a unified zoning map and comprehensive plan map, any application for a zoning map amendment is by necessity also an application for a comprehensive plan map amendment. A combined zoning and comprehensive plan map amendment application is not one of the three kinds of land use applications described in ORS 215.427(1), and for that reason the fixed goal post rule at ORS 215.427(3) does not apply. Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 565 (2002).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Neither Goal 2 nor ORS 197.175(2) require that zoning ordinance amendments that are necessary to implement a comprehensive plan map amendment be adopted at the same time as the plan amendment. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Findings that express confidence that particular existing zoning districts could be applied to implement a conditional plan map amendment are legally irrelevant, where the decision to amend the zoning map to implement the new plan map designation is deferred to a later date. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Imposition of an ineffective condition as part of a comprehensive plan map amendment may result in remand where the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with a relevant approval criterion. However, such an ineffective condition does not provide a basis for reversal or remand where it is not shown that the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with plan map amendment approval criteria. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Goal 2 does not forbid a comprehensive plan map amendment that will revert in two years to the previously existing acknowledged plan map designations, under specified conditions. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a comprehensive plan map amendment adopts a plan map designation that authorizes several zoning districts, LUBA will assume the city will later apply the zoning districts that will comply with housing goals, rather than zoning districts that might violate those housing goals. If inappropriate zoning districts are applied later, the decisions adopting those zoning districts can be corrected through an appeal of those zoning map decisions. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Substantial evidence supports a city council's finding that the planning commission, rather than a neighborhood association, "initiated" a plan and zone map change as required by local ordinance, where the planning commission was informed of the ordinance requirement, and voted to conduct proceedings on the request of the neighborhood association to consider the map change. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A quasi-judicial plan and zone map amendment initiated by the city planning commission is an "application for a land use decision," for purposes of the notice requirements of ORS 197.763(3), and thus the city's notice of hearing must list the applicable criteria from its ordinance and plan. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

29. 2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. When the city does not deliver notice of a comprehensive plan map amendment and facilities plan amendment to DLCD, as required by ORS 197.615(1), the amendments will not be deemed acknowledged under ORS 197.625(1) by the passage of time. DLCD v. City of St. Helens, 29 Or LUBA 485 (1995).

29. 2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. There is no requirement that a legislative land use decision redesignating numerous properties include findings specifically setting out the justification for the change in designation made for each affected property. McInnis v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Changing acknowledged plan map designations for industrially designated lands to allow a combination of industrial, commercial and residential uses does not violate the Goal 9 requirement that a local government have sufficient suitable industrially designated sites, where the local government will have more than enough constraint-free industrially designated land to meet projected needs, notwithstanding the plan map amendments. Neste Resins Corp. v. City of Eugene, 23 Or LUBA 55 (1992).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A local government may not condition approval of zoning and comprehensive plan map amendments on an applicant's agreement to relinquish a right granted in a prior land use decision, unless there is a sufficient connection between the requested map amendments and the prior land use decision. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Although detailed findings are not always required to justify conditions of land use approval, the evidentiary record must be sufficient to demonstrate a connection between the condition imposed and the planning purpose served by the condition. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

29. 2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where the evidentiary record demonstrates that the proposed expansion of a medical clinic is needed to provide adequate facilities for existing patients and staff and would not result in additional patients or staff, the local government improperly conditioned approval of required plan and zoning map amendments on the clinic's agreement to relinquish a previously granted approval for parking lot egress onto an adjoining street. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

29.2.4 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. ORS 215.431 does not apply to designated forestlands and, therefore, comprehensive plan amendments concerning such forestlands must be adopted by the county governing body. Wickwire v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 278 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where comprehensive plan provisions provide, using mandatory language, that certain resource plan and zoning designations shall be used to conserve or protect fish and wildlife habitat from conflicting uses and that land use proposals that have undesirable impacts on those resources shall be reviewed during the plan and zone amendment processes, a local governing body errs in interpreting those provisions to conclude that it may apply nonresource plan and zoning designations to property mapped as fish and wildlife habitat and that any impacts may be evaluated and, if necessary, mitigated during subsequent review of development proposals. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 338 (2020).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where comprehensive plan and local code provisions provide that the comprehensive plan may be amended only when "[t]here is a demonstrated public need for the change," the governing body may rely on a 12-acre deficit of High Density Residential (HDR) land identified in its acknowledged Buildable Lands Inventory (BLI) to conclude that that there is a "public need" to approve an application to redesignate six acres of land to HDR, even where, subsequent to the adoption and acknowledgment of its BLI, the governing body has approved applications to rezone other lands, totaling 92 acres, to HDR. Carson Property LUBA Appeal, Inc. v. City of Corvallis, 81 Or LUBA 175 (2020).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where comprehensive plan and local code provisions provide that the comprehensive plan may be amended only when "[t]here is a demonstrated public need for the change," and where another comprehensive plan provision states that the desired land use pattern in the urban growth boundary includes "[n]eighborhoods with a mix of uses, diversity of housing types, pedestrian scale, a defined center and shared public areas," the governing body does not err in concluding that that there is a "public need" to redesignate the subject property to High Density Residential (HDR) because the property is in a neighborhood of low- and medium-density housing and because introducing HDR zoning into the area will allow higher-density housing in a new location within the jurisdiction and potentially increase housing supply and diversity, even where the jurisdiction's acknowledged Buildable Lands Inventory and other, more recent data indicate that there is no deficit of HDR land in the jurisdiction. Carson Property LUBA Appeal, Inc. v. City of Corvallis, 81 Or LUBA 175 (2020).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Although a city code requires that the city's zoning map, the Metro Plan map and Metro Refinement Plan maps must be consistent, a city does not err by amending its zoning map and the Metro Plan map without adopting a conforming amendment to the Metro Refinement Plan map, where another code section provides that amendments to the Metro Plan map result in automatic conforming changes to the Metro Refinement Plan map by operation of law. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the city code initially requires the city to choose from low density residential (LDR), medium density residential (MDR) and high density residential (HDR) plan map designations based on which designation's criteria "clearly apply or predominate," it does not necessarily follow that the LDR criteria could not predominate simply because three of the four MDR criteria are met and five of the six HDR criteria are met, because the criteria for the three map designations are not mutually exclusive and most or all of the LDR criteria appear to be met. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A county does not err in approving an application to correct an error in the original the plan and zone map designations of an existing mine from its original "Forest" plan map and zoning designation to Quarry and Mine Operations (QM), where the county's program to achieve Goal 5 is the QM designation and the mine was included on the county's inventory of significant aggregate sites when the initial plan and zone error occurred in 1984. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 474 (2018).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Nothing in the definition of "tract" in ORS 197.435(7) or any other statute or rule requires a map that shows in totality the locations of an applicant's land ownership within the county for purposes of satisfying the last sentence of ORS 197.435(7), the destination resort "30% Rule." Root v. Klamath County, 68 Or LUBA 124 (2013).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Although amendments to county standards for mapping sites that are eligible for destination resort siting are comprehensive plan amendments, and therefore potentially could result in significant affects on transportation facilities that could implicate OAR 660-012-0060, altering the standards for adding sites to the map in the future has no impact on transportation facilities. It is the future map amendments themselves that might significantly affect a transportation facility and implicate OAR 660-012-0060, and a county must consider OAR 660-012-0060 at the time those comprehensive plan amendments are adopted in the future. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a plan amendment standard requires a finding that the change conforms to "applicable goals and polices" in the comprehensive plan, the city's findings address those plan goals and policies the city deemed "applicable," and on appeal petitioner argues generally that the city failed to address all plan goals and policies but does not identify any "applicable" goals or policies not addressed, LUBA will reject the argument. Smith v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 87 (2010).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A code provision requiring that a neighborhood plan "shall be the basis for any neighborhood recommendation" to the city council on a comprehensive plan map amendment may govern the neighborhood association, but is not an approval criterion that the city council is required to address, and the neighborhood association's alleged failure to base its recommendation on the neighborhood plan is not a basis for reversal or remand of the city council's decision. Smith v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 87 (2010).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan provision prohibiting application of a Rural Residential plan designation to land that is currently designated farm or forest "unless an exception to the applicable Goal 3 or 4 is justified" could be interpreted such that the prohibition does not apply to nonresource land that is not subject to either goal. However, the stronger textual reading is that the qualifier "applicable" simply reflects that the subject property is currently designated under either Goal 3 or Goal 4, whichever is applicable, and an exception to the applicable goal is required in order to redesignate the property to Rural Residential. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A Metro decision to amend the urban growth boundary to include 308 acres for Industrial development that was based on an assumption that only 120 acres of the 308 acres would be developed for Industrial use likely would provide a basis for the local government to plan all but 120 acres of the 308 acres for non-industrial uses. But where the 120 acres the local government designates for industrial uses include acres that were already within the UGB, the local government's comprehensive plan mapping is inconsistent with Metro's map designation for the 308 acres. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where Metro has designated 308 acres for industrial development, a city decision to plan only 120 of those acres for industrial development based on a finding that Metro only intended 120 acres to be developed industrially must be remanded where the record does not include substantial evidence that Metro only intended 120 of the 308 acres to be developed industrially. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. LUBA will remand a decision redesignating non-resource land to rural residential, where it is unclear whether the comprehensive plan limits the rural residential plan designation to lands for which an exception to resource goals is taken, the plan includes a different designation, Rural Use, that is specifically intended for nonresource lands, and the county's findings do not address the issue or provide an interpretation of the relevant plan provisions. Lofgren v. Jackson County, 55 Or LUBA 126 (2007).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A plan amendment provision stating that the applicant for an amendment must state "compelling reasons" why the amendment should be considered at this time, rather than as part of periodic review, is not an approval criterion requiring a particular finding. To the extent a finding is required, where the petitioner does not dispute that the application stated a compelling reason to proceed immediately, the failure to adopt a finding to that effect is harmless error. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 471 (2006).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a plan provision allowing plan amendments when "necessary to correct an identified error in application of the plan," to include not only instances where the plan was erroneous when first implemented, but also instances where circumstances have changed over time. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 471 (2006).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A plan amendment standard requiring consideration of specified "compatibility factors" does not require the local government to assume that the property will be developed with the most intensive use that could theoretically be approved on the property, given that steep slopes and other development limitations make it highly unlikely that the most intensive use could be developed on the property. Mason v. City of Corvallis, 49 Or LUBA 199 (2005).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A post-acknowledgement plan amendment that redesignates more than two acres for commercial use must follow one of the three courses of action set out at OAR 660-009-0010(4). Although one of those permissible courses of action is to demonstrate that the post-acknowledgement plan amendment is consistent with the part of the acknowledged comprehensive plan that was adopted to implement the Goal 9 administrative rule, where the proposed action appears to be inconsistent with implementation strategies in the plan, the city must amend its acknowledged comprehensive plan following the planning requirements of OAR 660-009-0015 through 660-009-0025 and in doing so it must prepare an economic opportunities analysis. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 134 (2004).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A proposal to swap plan designations for two portions of a single parcel does not require separate findings addressing each portion, where the applicable plan amendment criteria do not necessarily require separate findings, and petitioner does not identify any meaningful difference between the two areas that would require separate consideration. Excelsior Investment Co. v. City of Medford, 44 Or LUBA 553 (2003).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Absent some requirement to the contrary, a local government need not choose the most minimal means to accomplish its objective, and may choose to amend the comprehensive plan map and zoning map to allow a proposed use, notwithstanding that a zoning map amendment alone might accomplish the same objective. Excelsior Investment Co. v. City of Medford, 44 Or LUBA 553 (2003).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards In determining whether there is an adequate supply of commercial land within the city, a city does not err in failing to consider the supply of land outside the city but within the urban growth boundary that might be designated for commercial uses once annexed, where the city's comprehensive plan does not designate any lands outside the city but within the UGB for commercial uses. Walker v. City of Dayton, 44 Or LUBA 766 (2003).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards In determining whether the comprehensive plan map should be amended to provide for additional land designated for residential use, the relative scarcity of land zoned under one of three residential zoning districts in the city is not enough to establish that the supply of land designated on the comprehensive plan map for residential use is insufficient. Walker v. City of Dayton, 44 Or LUBA 766 (2003).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards In determining whether the comprehensive plan map should be amended to provide additional land designated for residential use, the city does not err in considering lands outside city limits but within the urban growth boundary, where the city's comprehensive plan designates much of the area outside city limits but within the UGB for residential uses. Walker v. City of Dayton, 44 Or LUBA 766 (2003).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. An application to change a unified comprehensive plan and zoning map does not in itself require a "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is therefore not an application for a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.402(4). Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 565 (2002).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a county's legislative decision changes the comprehensive plan designation for a property from Industrial to Primary Agriculture, and the record does not reflect that the county considered other potentially suitable designations or explained why other potentially suitable designations should not be applied, the decision and record are insufficient to demonstrate that applicable criteria were considered. Manning v. Marion County, 42 Or LUBA 56 (2002).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. LCDC's 1985 acknowledgement of a county's rural residential zone has the legal effect of establishing that the rural residential zoning district may be applied consistent with Goal 14 to rural lands outside a UGB. However, the 1985 acknowledgment does not have the legal effect of establishing that all future applications of the zoning district to particular properties, no matter what the circumstances, will necessarily comply with Goal 14. DLCD v. Klamath County, 40 Or LUBA 221 (2001).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The existence of vacant land that is planned and zoned for multi-family residential use does not mean there can be no need for additional multi-family residential designated land, where there is a specific multi-family residential need identified and none of the land that is already designated for multi-family residential use is suitable for that specific need. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether rezoning of land from multi-family to single-family residential uses is consistent with Goal 10 and the city's obligation to provide for multi-family dwellings, the relevant inquiry is not limited by the amount of land designated for multi-family residential uses. The city can take into account multi-family dwellings that have been approved in other zones in determining whether the proposed rezoning is consistent with the city's obligation to provide a sufficient number of multi-family dwellings. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Approval standards for approval of "development" do not apply to a legislative amendment of a future streets plan. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government is not required to select the most favorable or logical future streets plan where the applicable criterion simply requires that the streets plan provide logical extension, continuation and interconnection. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A legislative comprehensive plan amendment must comply with the statewide planning goals, and that requirement is not met simply because subsequent development applications would be reviewed pursuant to acknowledged criteria. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. An amendment to an acknowledged comprehensive plan must be reviewed for compliance with the statewide planning goals, notwithstanding that the acknowledged plan has an acknowledged process for amending the plan, where the amendment can be reviewed for compliance with the statewide planning goals without necessarily challenging the acknowledged process itself. Fogarty v. City of Gresham, 34 Or LUBA 309 (1998).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In approving comprehensive plan and zoning map amendments, the county's findings must demonstrate that Goal 14 is satisfied without reliance on past practices or on plan and code provisions that are subject to revision during periodic review. Brown v. Jefferson County, 33 Or LUBA 418 (1997).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In approving a comprehensive plan amendment, the county's analysis and findings regarding potential effects of an aggregate operation on surrounding lands are sufficient to support a 1B listing on the county's Goal 5 inventory. Because listing the site as a potential aggregate resource does not actually permit a mining operation, the county is not required to address the requirements of ORS 215.296 as part of its decision. O'Rourke v. Union County, 32 Or LUBA 447 (1997).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The county's approval of a minor amendment to its rural comprehensive plan meets the applicable local code criteria when it sets forth specific reasons why the redesignation of the property as rural residential is "desirable, appropriate and proper." Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A county cannot rely on findings regarding water quality and quantity on other parcels to satisfy criteria in its comprehensive plan that require a site-specific evaluation of the water supply on the subject parcel, absent a determination that the conditions on surrounding lands can be relied upon to determine the water quality and quantity on the subject parcel. Doob v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 275 (1996).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where an ordinance changing the plan and zone designations of the subject property provides the property will revert to its former designations if a final order denying a conditional use permit (CUP) for a mobile home park is issued, the local governing body acts within its interpretive discretion in deciding the contingency is not met when LUBA remands a local government decision approving a CUP for a mobile home park and the local government does not take further action on that application. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where petitioner challenges the adequacy of one set of local government findings addressing a particular approval criterion for a comprehensive plan map change, but does not challenge a different set of local government findings also addressing the same criterion, petitioner's assignment of error will be denied. Mitchell v. City of Medford, 29 Or LUBA 158 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. By definition, all land outside an acknowledged UGB and not the subject of an exception to Goal 14 is "rural" land. When amending its acknowledged comprehensive plan and zone designations for such land, a local government must demonstrate that the new plan and zone designations comply with Goal 14 or adopt an exception to Goal 14. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In adopting a quasi-judicial comprehensive plan and land use regulation amendment, a local government is obligated either to demonstrate compliance with the Transportation Planning Rule (TPR) or, alternatively, establish that the TPR does not apply. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a comprehensive plan amendment adopts a map indicating a street may be considered to receive a "Green Street" classification in the future, and future application of the "Green Street" classification will itself require a plan amendment, petitioners' challenge to the plan amendment based on Goal 12 and the Transportation Planning Rule is premature. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When adopting post-acknowledgment plan and zone map amendments affecting residentially designated land within an urban growth boundary, a local government must demonstrate that it continues to satisfy its Goal 10 obligation to maintain an adequate inventory of buildable lands. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local comprehensive plan map amendment standard requires that there be no suitable alternative sites in the "vicinity" of the proposed use, the local governing body may interpret "vicinity" to mean a reasonable area around the site of the proposed use, rather than the entire market area served by the proposed use. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When adopting a comprehensive plan map amendment, a city can rely on its acknowledged plan and regulations as providing a sufficient number of large parcels of industrially designated land to comply with a plan policy requiring the designation of a sufficient number of such parcels, where the plan map amendment does not affect the inventory or use of such parcels. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Goal 9 does not require that a post-acknowledgment plan amendment changing the designation of urban land from Industrial-Commercial to Industrial be supported by a demonstration that the proposed industrial use of the land is necessary to the local economy or will provide products that existing producers cannot supply. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government decision changing the comprehensive plan and zone designations of land with identified Goal 5 resources, must identify conflicting uses potentially allowable under the proposed new designations. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether land subject to a proposed comprehensive plan and zone map change is composed of predominantly Class I-IV soils, as required by OAR 660-33-020(1)(a)(A), it is permissible for a local government to examine only the acreage under consideration. DLCD v. Curry County, 28 Or LUBA 205 (1994).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether land subject to a proposed comprehensive plan and zone map change is (1) suitable for farm use, (2) necessary to permit farm use on other agricultural land, or (3) intermingled with lands of Class I-IV soils; as required by OAR 660-33-020(1)(a)(B) to (C) and (b); a local government's analysis must include all property in common ownership with the subject land. DLCD v. Curry County, 28 Or LUBA 205 (1994).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan policy governing "establish[ment] and change" of an urban growth boundary is not applicable to a local government decision amending the plan and zoning map designations of property that is entirely within the urban growth boundary. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government can show an amendment to its acknowledged comprehensive plan and zoning maps complies with Goal 12 (Transportation) by establishing either (1) there is a safe and adequate transportation system to serve development under the proposed map designations, or (2) development of the property under the proposed designations will not create greater or different transportation demands and impacts than development under the existing, acknowledged designations. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 141 (1994).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where petitioners contend the local government may not rely on particular plan provisions in denying a plan map amendment, but the local government did not rely upon those provisions in denying the requested plan map amendment, petitioners' challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand. Ericsson v. Washington County, 26 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. More than the mere possibility of compliance with applicable standards is required to grant land use approval. However, it does not follow that the possibility that the additional development allowable under a requested comprehensive plan map amendment will violate an applicable standard is insufficient to provide a basis for denial of the request. It is the applicant's burden to establish compliance with all approval standards. Ericsson v. Washington County, 26 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Under Goals 3 and 4, designation of property as agricultural on a comprehensive plan map does not carry any inference that the land is not also forestland. Therefore, the principle in Urquhart v. Lane Council of Governments, 80 Or App 176, 721 P2d 870 (1986), does not preclude application of Goal 4 to a plan map amendment for such property. Westfair Associates Partnership v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 729 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where nothing requires a local government to determine whether the subject property is a "legal lot" as a prerequisite to approving a plan amendment and zone change, it is unnecessary for the local government to determine whether the subject property constitutes a lawfully created parcel. Makepeace v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 370 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where an applicable standard requires a determination that a proposed plan amendment complies with the plan, findings that state only that the proposal "appears" to satisfy the plan are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with that standard. Makepeace v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 370 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Comprehensive plan amendments must comply with the statewide planning goals. Neuharth v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 267 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the challenged decision simply replaces one rural comprehensive plan map designation with another rural plan map designation for property located outside an acknowledged urban growth boundary and does not purport to approve any particular present or future use of the property, an exception to Goal 14 is not required. Reeves v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 483 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Under ORS 197.175(2)(d), a county is required to assure that amendments to its comprehensive plan map comply with the acknowledged comprehensive plan. Where a number of plan provisions applicable to such a decision impose conflicting requirements, the county must adopt findings balancing those conflicting plan provisions in determining whether the request is consistent with the plan. Marson Trucking, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the decision whether to designate property as Agriculture or Forest on comprehensive plan maps is governed by specific plan policies, a county acts within its discretion in determining that it is not required to apply and balance other generally applicable Agricultural and Forest plan policies. Marson Trucking, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a county adopts a plan map designating land within three miles of the county's borders as available for destination resort siting, without determining whether such land is within three miles of high-value crop areas located in a neighboring county, the county has failed to comply with the requirement of ORS 197.455 and Goal 8 that land within three miles of high-value crop areas not be available for destination resort use. Alliance for Resp. Land Use v. Deschutes County, 23 Or LUBA 476 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The amendment of a local government comprehensive plan map designation from agriculture to rural residential to accommodate a large mixed-use development on rural land requires the application of the Statewide Planning Goals because the amendment could have secondary effects on the acknowledged plan and zoning regulations that were unanticipated at the time of acknowledgment, and the question of whether the proposed use is urban or rural requires a case-by-case analysis. Kaye v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 452 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. OAR 660-06-003(1)(b) of the amended Goal 4 rules provides that those rules apply immediately to plan map amendments involving forestlands. Dobson v. Polk County, 22 Or LUBA 701 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. That a plan map amendment is legislative rather than quasi-judicial does not mean that the statewide planning goals or comprehensive plan or code provisions do not apply to the decision. Neither does it necessarily mean findings in support of the decision are not required. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government amends its comprehensive plan transportation map to change the functional classification of existing roadways and designate new collector roadways, it must identify possible conflicts the action may cause with inventoried Goal 5 resource sites and explain how those conflicts are resolved. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government is entitled to rely on existing acknowledged implementation measures when amending its comprehensive plan map, where the plan map amendment will not affect inventoried Goal 5 resources or will affect them only in a manner already anticipated by the acknowledged comprehensive plan. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where failure contemporaneously to complete all improvements envisioned by a legislative amendment to a comprehensive plan transportation map would result in traffic having to use an inadequate unsignalized intersection, the local government must explain how the amendment satisfies a plan policy requiring it to "plan for a safe and efficient street * * * system that meets current needs and anticipated future growth and development." Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government legislatively amends its comprehensive plan transportation map to designate a new minor collector in a location such that construction of the minor collector will violate applicable code street construction standards, and also amends the plan to exempt the minor collector from all such street construction standards, the local government must adopt findings explaining why the exemption is justified. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The applicability of the statewide planning goals depends on the substantive nature of a proposed plan inventory map amendment, not on whether it is characterized as legislative or quasi-judicial. Gray v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 270 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. It is inconsistent with Goal 18 Implementation Requirement 2 to relocate a construction setback line on a local government comprehensive plan map so that construction of buildings is potentially allowable in an area classified as active dunes. Gray v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 270 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When amending a construction setback line on a comprehensive plan map in an area classified as active or conditionally stable dunes, a local government must adopt the findings required by Goal 18 Implementation Requirement 1. Gray v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 270 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Amendments of acknowledged comprehensive plans and land use regulations must be consistent with controlling provisions of the acknowledged comprehensive plan. DLCD v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 463 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a comprehensive plan provides two agricultural plan map designations, which are applied based on characteristics of the agricultural lands, but includes no standards for determining which designation to apply to properties with some of the characteristics of each, a decision to change the plan map designation from one to the other does not violate the plan. DLCD v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 463 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. There is no rule of general applicability to local government plan/zone change proceedings that requires a local government to consider the most intensive uses possible under the new plan/zone designation when approving a plan/zone change. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. While a local government cannot rely upon evidence of changed circumstances since adoption of its comprehensive plan to justify noncompliance with plan approval criteria for plan and zone map amendments, it may be able to rely upon evidence of changed circumstances as a basis for finding compliance with applicable plan and zone map amendment approval criteria. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a county comprehensive plan provision states that in acting on certain plan map amendments the county shall "determine the appropriate [plan designation] considering" certain items, those items are factors which must be considered by the county, not approval standards. Shirley v. Washington County, 20 Or LUBA 127 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where there is a proposed plan map amendment from a forest to a farm designation, in the absence of concurrent consideration of a specific nonfarm development proposal, and the county comprehensive plan requires consideration of "demonstrated need consistent with LCDC goals," the "need" to be demonstrated and considered is the need to designate the subject property for exclusive farm use. Shirley v. Washington County, 20 Or LUBA 127 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. There is no rule of general applicability that in all local government plan/zone change proceedings, the impacts of the most intensive uses allowed under the new designation must be considered. Shirley v. Washington County, 20 Or LUBA 127 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan policy governing "requests for rezonings to higher intensity residential uses" has no applicability where the issue is whether the plan map designation should be changed. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where there is a surplus of land planned and zoned for multifamily residential development, a market shortage of multifamily housing does not necessarily demonstrate a "public need" justifying designation of additional multifamily planned and zoned land. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where under the city's comprehensive plan, land for multifamily development is to be designated based on factors such as public facilities, neighborhood plans, renewal and in-fill studies, and sector plans, not according to the proportionate population of subareas of the city, the city's assumption that 12 percent of the additional multifamily housing needed in the city is needed in a particular subarea, simply because 12 percent of the city population currently lives in that subarea, is unjustified. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a large area of existing single family residential development is designated for multifamily residential use, but the city's findings do not address the potential for providing needed multifamily housing through conversion of existing single-family development, the findings fail to demonstrate that the existing multifamily designated land is inadequate to satisfy the identified public need for such housing. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan statement that separation of use types along topographic, natural vegetation, and other features is "desirable" does not establish an approval criterion applicable to plan and zone map amendments. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the subject property qualifies as forestland under provisions of the county's acknowledged comprehensive plan, and petitioner does not explain why the acknowledged plan standards do not control, an exception to Statewide Planning Goal 4 is required before the subject property can be redesignated and rezoned for nonforest uses. Chambers v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

29.2.5 Comprehensive Plans – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A "public need" criterion which requires determining whether additional land for a proposed destination resort is required "in consideration of that amount already provided by the current zoning district within the area to be served" only requires consideration of other land already designated DR, not other areas which are eligible for destination resort siting. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. When Community Plan adopted as part of the county's comprehensive plan includes a Significant Natural and Cultural Resources (SNR) Map, and an applicant for development of property that is included on the SNR Map provides the county with additional information identifying "the location of the natural resource(s)," as required by the applicable approval criteria, the requirement to precisely identify the location of the protected resource does not amount to an amendment of the SNR Map. Warren v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 107 (2018).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. When the hearings officer makes findings on a wildlife habitat area located within a Significant Natural and Cultural Resources (SNR) Map, the hearings officer's task is to consider all of the evidence in the record and determine whether the applicable approval criteria are satisfied. A hearings officer's task is not to determine whether intervenor's submittals in support of the application are "supported by substantial evidence in the record." Rather, the hearings officer must weigh the evidence submitted against the applicable standards and criteria, and make that determination. Warren v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 107 (2018).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. When a city approves an application, nothing requires the city or intervenor to rezone the property in connection with the application, when the current zoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, and the current zoning does not allow for more intensive development than contemplated in the comprehensive plan. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. In applying a development code standard that authorizes a local government to approve exceptions to lot size standards for planned developments if the development's "design and amenities" warrant the exceptions, the fact that preservation of open space is encouraged by the comprehensive plan does not mean the exceptions must be approved simply because the proposal would preserve open space. That the proposed open space is consistent with the comprehensive plan does not require approval of the requested exceptions. J. Conser and Sons, LLC v. City of Millersburg, 73 Or LUBA 57 (2016).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A comprehensive plan policy requiring protection of "natural open space" does not apply to a former private golf course that is identified in a neighborhood sub-area plan as "Parks, Open Space," where the comprehensive plan distinguishes between "natural" open spaces and other types of open spaces, and the subject property is not identified as "natural" open space in any planning document. Smith v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 87 (2010).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Based on the Court of Appeals' decisions in 1000 Friends of Oregon v. City of Dundee, 203 Or App 207, 216, 124 P3d 1249 (2005), and D.S. Parklane Development, Inc. v. Metro, 165 Or App 1, 22, 994 P2d 1205 (2000), it would be error for a local government to ignore available commercial and industrial land data in its acknowledged comprehensive plan and rely instead on different data that is not part of the acknowledged comprehensive plan to conclude that a land use regulation amendment will leave the local government with an adequate supply of commercial and industrial land. However, if the local government also adopts adequate findings based on the commercial and industrial land data in its acknowledged comprehensive plan that the land use regulation amendment will not leave the local government with an inadequate supply of commercial and industrial land, the local government's additional findings that rely on data that is not included in the comprehensive plan provide no basis for reversal or remand. McDougal Bros. Investments v. City of Veneta, 59 Or LUBA 207 (2009).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A regional plan requirement that local governments "review their land use regulations and revise them, if necessary, to include measures to limit new buildings for retail commercial uses" in areas the regional agency has designated for industrial and employment development is nominally directed solely at land use regulations. But that regional plan requirement also would apply to limit comprehensive plan amendments, to the extent those comprehensive plan amendments would authorize land use regulations that would be inconsistent with the regional agency's requirement for land use regulations that limit retail commercial uses in such areas. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where part of a subarea plan is adopted by one ordinance and part of that subarea plan is adopted by a second ordinance, and the first ordinance is remanded by LUBA but the second ordinance is affirmed, the part of the subarea plan adopted by the second ordinance may provide the comprehensive plan basis for a parking garage. Where the second ordinance adopts a subarea plan parking policy and zoning code amendments that specifically authorize parking garages on certain specified properties and a city subsequently issues a decision approving a parking garage pursuant to the policy and zoning code, the city's decision will be affirmed on appeal notwithstanding that the first ordinance was remanded, where petitioners identify no other comprehensive plan provisions that are inconsistent with approval of the parking garage. NWDA v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 533 (2009).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A county does not err in failing to adopt findings addressing a county comprehensive plan inventory of mobile home parks in the course of approving a planned unit development that will replace an existing mobile home park, where pursuant to an urban growth management agreement the city rather than county comprehensive plan governs the application. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A state agency permit renewal decision that concludes, based on substantial evidence, that the renewed permit does not involve a substantial modification to or intensification of the permitted activity, and thus no land use compatibility statement is required from the affected local government, is not a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction under ORS 197.015(11)(a)(B), because it is not an agency decision with respect to which the agency is required to apply the goals. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Regional plan provisions that limit regional planning to a designated region are not violated or improperly amended by non-regulatory expressions of interest in a city parks, recreation and open space plan concerning parks outside the region and city in the county, where the city's plan makes it clear that the county's plan is the controlling planning document for such parks. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 341 (2006).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. OAR 660-023-0180 prohibits application of local government standards to post-acknowledgment plan amendment to add a site to the plan inventory of significant aggregate sites, unless such standards (1) were adopted after 1989 and (2) provide "specific criteria" for proposals to amend the plan inventory of aggregate sites. A general agricultural policy requiring that nonagricultural development be based on demonstrated public need is not a "specific criteri[on]" regarding proposals to amend the aggregate inventory and therefore OAR 660-023-0180 prohibits application of the policy. Hegele v. Crook County, 44 Or LUBA 357 (2003).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. No reasonable person could interpret a plan policy stating that the county plans to participate with other counties in a regional aggregate needs analysis as imposing a requirement that an applicant seeking to amend the county's aggregate inventory must establish a "public need" for aggregate. Hegele v. Crook County, 44 Or LUBA 357 (2003).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Under OAR 731-015-0075, an ODOT Class 3 project to improve a highway interchange must comply with any affected local government's comprehensive plan and, if the project does not comply, any comprehensive plan amendments that are necessary to bring the project into compliance must be adopted before ODOT issues its Revised Environmental Assessment for the interchange project. Witham Parts and Equipment Co. v. ODOT, 42 Or LUBA 435 (2002).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A county errs by finding that its acknowledged zoning ordinance fully implements the acknowledged comprehensive plan, thus making it unnecessary to apply comprehensive plan provisions directly to an application for permit approval, where the acknowledged zoning ordinance specifically requires that the application for permit approval must demonstrate compliance with the acknowledged comprehensive plan and the county does not identify any zoning ordinance provisions that implement applicable comprehensive plan policies. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. If state legislation preempts county regulation of noise from a firearm training facility, then comprehensive plan text that purports to regulate such noise is contrary to state statute and unenforceable. City of Sherwood v. Washington County, 38 Or LUBA 656 (2000).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. If a county has not yet amended its comprehensive plan and land use regulations to comply with OAR 660-023-0180, OAR 660-023-0180(7) requires that the county directly apply the substantive requirements and procedures of OAR 660-023-0180 to consideration of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment concerning mining authorization. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. The scope of additional conflicts that may be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(F), is a question of state law and a county's interpretation of OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(F) is not entitled to the deferential standard of review required by ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Absent a statutory provision or agreement to the contrary, development within a UGB and outside a city's corporate limits is subject to the county's jurisdiction, ordinance and comprehensive plan. An intergovernmental agreement that requires the county to apply city comprehensive plan map designations does not, by implication, also require the county to apply city comprehensive plan text provisions. City of Newberg v. Yamhill County, 36 Or LUBA 473 (1999).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where a county's comprehensive plan contains or is required to contain provisions that by their terms apply to a decision vacating a county road within city limits, the county must apply those provisions. If any such provisions apply, the county's road vacation decision is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lincoln County, 36 Or LUBA 288 (1999).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Because ORS 368.361(3) imposes on the county the obligation to conduct proceedings and make findings in vacating a county right-of-way within city limits, the county and not the city has the obligation of applying any provisions of the city's comprehensive plan or land use ordinance that the city would apply, were the city conducting the vacation. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lincoln County, 36 Or LUBA 288 (1999).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A hearings officer's determination that an EFU-zoned property is not necessary to provide a proposed public service is not inconsistent with a drainage master plan and does not constitute an impermissible collateral attack on the drainage master plan, where the drainage master plan was not adopted in accordance with post-acknowledgment procedures and only identifies the site as a "preferred" site. Clackamas Co. Svc. Dist. No. 1 v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 374 (1998).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Background reports, which typically contain data and information that describe a community's resources and features and address the topics specified in the applicable Statewide Planning Goals, are not the equivalent of comprehensive plans, which set forth the community's long-range objectives and the policies by which it intends to achieve them. Mount Hood Stewardship Council v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 284 (1997).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where the city's comprehensive plan expressly requires that new subdivisions shall have sidewalks, the city may not use the variance procedures of its subdivision ordinance in order to grant an exception to the comprehensive plan sidewalk requirement. Wicks-Snodgrass v. City of Reedsport, 32 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. If a county recognizes a citizens planning advisory committee (CPAC) chosen in violation of election procedures previously adopted by resolution and incorporated by reference in its comprehensive plan, it ignores a substantive violation of its plan and land use regulations, and the CPAC is a nullity. Boom v. Columbia County, 31 Or LUBA 318 (1996).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. The city's finding that its comprehensive plan contemplates a rationing of building permits through a traffic management ordinance does not satisfy inquiry into whether that rationing violates the state moratorium statute. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. The fact that a city, in prior years, had an acknowledged ordinance rationing building permits does not excuse the city from seeking acknowledgement of a new rationing ordinance or from complying with the state moratorium statute. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A special district ordinance stating the district will provide service to all existing residences and all residences "hereafter constructed pursuant to a valid [county] building permit" is not inconsistent with the county comprehensive plan, because the county may issue building permits only if such permits are consistent with its acknowledged plan and implementing regulations. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 29 Or LUBA 354 (1995).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where a local government has a combined comprehensive plan and zoning map, there can be no Baker comprehensive plan/zoning map conflict. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where a local government decision amending its land use regulations does not interpret comprehensive plan goals and map designations as being inapplicable to such amendments, but rather explains how the proposed amendment implements certain comprehensive plan goals and is consistent with certain plan map designations, it is clear the governing body interprets those plan goals and map designations as being applicable to the land use regulation amendment. Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. ORS 275.320 to 275.340 deal with a county's proprietary power to manage county-acquired land. The designation of county-acquired real property as "county forests, public parks or recreational areas" under ORS 275.320 does not supersede the comprehensive land use planning process established under ORS chapter 197. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. An amendment to an acknowledged land use regulation must comply with the local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan. ORS 197.175(2)(d); 197.835(5)(a). Rea v. City of Seaside, 26 Or LUBA 444 (1994).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where a city comprehensive plan expressly recognizes that the county has jurisdiction to issue land use permits prior to annexation of unincorporated areas, the city must annex an unincorporated area before it has jurisdiction to grant land use permits for such unincorporated areas. Recht v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 316 (1993).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A local government does not authorize projects not included in its comprehensive plan where a Recommended Roadways Improvement Map provision states that failure to include a particular project on that map does not preclude development of such project if the project is otherwise allowed by the comprehensive plan. Bicycle Transportation Alliance v. Washington Co., 26 Or LUBA 265 (1993).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where a local government decision forming a service district to provide sewerage services discusses, but does not authorize, a particular means of sewage treatment, petitioner's challenge of the decision on the basis that the particular means of treatment violates a plan policy concerning extension of urban services outside UGBs is premature. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. A local governing body is required by ORS 197.175(2)(d) to apply applicable provisions of its comprehensive plan and land use regulations in determining whether a wrecking certificate should be approved, notwithstanding that it has not adopted regulations as authorized by ORS 822.140(3). Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. That a nonconforming use is inconsistent with comprehensive plan provisions that did not exist or apply on the date the use became nonconforming provides no basis for reversal or remand, because ORS 215.130(5) provides the use may continue notwithstanding such inconsistency. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

29.3.1 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Generally. Where an ordinance provision requires that a proposed conditional use be consistent with the comprehensive plan, and petitioners contend an apparently relevant plan provision was not addressed, the county must identify findings establishing, or evidence "clearly supporting," a determination that either (1) the plan provision does not apply, or (2) the proposed conditional use is consistent with the plan provision. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 18 Or LUBA 820 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Traffic performance standards in the local government's transportation system plan (TSP) are not approval criteria applicable to a limited land use decision that were incorporated pursuant to ORS 197.195(1), where the applicable criteria either do not refer to the TSP at all or where they only generally "incorporate[] by reference the city's public facility master plans, including plans for domestic water, sanitary sewer, storm drainage, parks, and transportation." Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 447 (2019).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Traffic performance standards in the local government's transportation system plan (TSP) are not approval criteria applicable to a limited land use decision that were incorporated pursuant to ORS 197.195(1), where the applicable criteria either do not refer to the TSP at all or where they only generally "incorporate[] by reference the city's public facility master plans, including plans for domestic water, sanitary sewer, storm drainage, parks, and transportation." Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 447 (2019).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. LUBA will reject a county's interpretation of its code—that a code provision which sets forth approval criteria regarding an application for a variance to the minimum lot size requirements within the county's urban growth area may not apply to the county's decision because it only applies to decisions made by the county's planning director but not to decisions made by the planning commission or board of county commissioners—that was made for the first time in its response brief, because that interpretation is not reflected in the decision and is therefore not an interpretation by the local government. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the county approved a proposed variance to the 20-acre minimum lot size for two one-acre parcels, pursuant to a county code provision that provides that the county planning director may approve a variance for a proposed project if the city does not object to the variance, LUBA will reverse the county's decision as "prohibited as a matter of law" pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071(c) where the county approved the variance as "consistent with the * * * city's comprehensive plan," but the city objected to the proposed variance because of the proposal's inconsistency with the city's comprehensive plan. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When Community Plan adopted as part of the county's comprehensive plan includes a Significant Natural and Cultural Resources (SNR) Map, and an applicant for development of property that is included on the SNR Map provides the county with additional information identifying "the location of the natural resource(s)," as required by the applicable approval criteria, the requirement to precisely identify the location of the protected resource does not amount to an amendment of the SNR Map. Warren v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 107 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When the hearings officer makes findings on a wildlife habitat area located within a Significant Natural and Cultural Resources (SNR) Map, the hearings officer's task is to consider all of the evidence in the record and determine whether the applicable approval criteria are satisfied. A hearings officer's task is not to determine whether intervenor's submittals in support of the application are "supported by substantial evidence in the record." Rather, the hearings officer must weigh the evidence submitted against the applicable standards and criteria, and make that determination. Warren v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 107 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When a city approves an application, nothing requires the city or intervenor to rezone the property in connection with the application, when the current zoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, and the current zoning does not allow for more intensive development than contemplated in the comprehensive plan. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. The Goal 2 requirement that acknowledged comprehensive plans be the "basis" for land use decisions is not violated by citation to an adopted, but unacknowledged housing strategy document, where the cited portion of the document directly implements, in almost identical language, policy recommendations in the city's acknowledged housing needs analysis. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Language in a city's acknowledged housing needs analysis finding an existing deficit of affordable housing in the city, and recommending that the city identify surplus city land for development with government-subsidized housing, provides a policy basis for the city to rezone public land from an open space zone to a residential zone that allows high density residential development. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. That a city's acknowledged buildable lands inventory indicates that the city already has an adequate supply of land zoned for R-3 (high density residential) does not undermine the city council's conclusion that rezoning additional land to R-3 is necessary to address an identified shortage of affordable housing, where the city finds that the private housing market has been unable to address the need for affordable housing despite an adequate supply, and that rezoning surplus public land to R-3, to be donated to a housing agency, is necessary to facilitate development of affordable housing. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where it is not clear whether the enacting body intended comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions to be mandatory approval criteria, LUBA examines the wording and context of the particular provisions to determine whether they must be applied as mandatory approval criteria. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A list of special characteristics of a historic district are not mandatory approval criteria where they are not worded as mandatory requirements for future housing proposals. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where it is unclear whether historic guidelines operate as mandatory approval criteria, but the guidelines include a column identified as "Principle – Good Example" and a column identified as "Not Allowed," and in each column there is a list of activities and features, the activities and features in the "Not Allowed" column are prohibited. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. The kind of conflict between a zoning map designation and a comprehensive plan map designation that under Baker v. City of Milwaukie, 271 Or 500, 514, 533 P2d 772 (1975), results in the zoning map designation giving way to the comprehensive plan map designation is where the zoning map designation would allow a more intensive use than the comprehensive plan map designation would allow. Devlin v. Linn County, 75 Or LUBA 163 (2017).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of the phrase "designated common area" as used in a plan policy governing a resort community zone to mean something different than a definition of "common area" in an unrelated section of the comprehensive plan that cross-references the definition of "common property" as used in the Oregon Planned Communities Act at ORS 94.550(7), where the latter definition was adopted at a different time and to serve a different purpose than the plan policy governing the resort community zone. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 407 (2017).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. General expressions of concern that traffic from additional rural residential development would degrade the quality of a rural residential neighborhood are insufficient under ORS 197.763(1) to raise issues regarding consistency with comprehensive plan policies that promote rural residential neighborhoods, absent specific citation to such policies during the proceedings below. Neil v. Columbia County, 74 Or LUBA 442 (2016).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A hearings officer does not err in rejecting a zone change applicant's proposed zoning diagram that orients true north toward the top border of the diagram, instead of matching the orientation of the north arrow on the applicable comprehensive plan map, which is tilted two degrees relative to the top border, where there is no basis to assume that the tilted north arrow on the comprehensive plan map is a "scriveners' error." Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A hearings officer correctly interprets the provisions of the comprehensive plan's Housing chapter as not applying to an application for a zone change because a residential zone change proposes only a change in the zoning and possible density of housing but does not propose a particular type of housing. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A hearings officer correctly interprets the provisions of the comprehensive plan's Public Facilities and Services chapter as not applying to an application for a zone change, where the chapter's policies are directed at development, and the adopted land use regulations implement the policies and apply at the time of development. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A zoning ordinance regulation that allows fill if it will not increase the elevation of land is not necessarily inconsistent with a comprehensive plan provision that bans fill altogether, where fill only qualifies as fill, as defined in the comprehensive plan, if the fill will raise the elevation of land. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where respondents respond to petitioner's argument that a proposed development violates comprehensive plan standards by arguing in their response brief that the challenged decision is a "limited land use decision" and the plan policies therefore do not apply under ORS 197.195(1) because the plan policies have not been incorporated into the city's land use regulations, and petitioner does not respond to that argument at oral argument or seek permission to respond in a reply brief, petitioner's assumption that the plan policies apply is inadequate to state a basis for reversal or remand. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A 1,200 average daily traffic standard for local streets is not a hard and fast standard where other comprehensive plan language makes it clear that level of traffic on a local street is merely "desirable" and a number of other factors are considered in determining whether to classify a street as a "local" street. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a county applies a new rural zone that effectively prohibits new residential uses within a rural unincorporated community, the county may have to consider whether application of the new zone is consistent with its comprehensive plan Housing Element if the county relies upon vacant land within that community to meet an identified need to serve local, rural housing needs. Seabreeze Associates Limited Partnership v. Tillamook County, 71 Or LUBA 218 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A petitioner fails to establish that a comprehensive plan policy requiring the county to encourage development that can be efficiently converted to higher densities applies to a county decision to apply a new zone to a rural unincorporated community, where the plan policy specifies which communities it applies to, but does not mention the community where the new zone is applied to. Seabreeze Associates Limited Partnership v. Tillamook County, 71 Or LUBA 218 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan descriptions of plan map designations are not properly applied as mandatory permit approval criteria. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A decision to "incorporate" comprehensive plan policies into a local government's land use regulations, to make those policies criteria directly applicable to a limited land use decision, must be accomplished by as post-acknowledgment plan amendment that expressly makes specific policies applicable approval criteria for limited land use decisions. The mere adoption of land use regulations to implement comprehensive policies does not "incorporate" such policies into land use regulations as directly applicable criteria. SCAN v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 468 (2014).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A hearings officer does not misconstrue a site plan review standard requiring a finding that "negative impacts to the transportation system are mitigated adequately" as not requiring the applicant to construct bike lanes that are shown in the Bicycle System Element of the city's Transportation System Plan (TSP), where the code standard does not refer to the TSP or indicate that site plan review is the vehicle to provide for construction of bike lanes depicted in the TSP. SCAN v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 468 (2014).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. One way to satisfy the ORS 197.175(2)(d) requirement that post acknowledgment land use decisions must comply with a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan is to apply applicable comprehensive plan requirements directly as permit approval criteria. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. One way to satisfy the ORS 197.175(2)(d) requirement that post acknowledgment land use decisions must comply with a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan is to apply acknowledged land use regulations that were adopted to fully implement the comprehensive plan. But in this circumstance, acknowledged land use regulations typically are not written to include an express requirement that permits must be consistent with the acknowledged comprehensive plan. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Frequently, neither the acknowledged comprehensive plan nor the acknowledged land use regulations foreclose the possibility that some comprehensive plan requirements may continue to apply directly to individual land use decisions following acknowledgment. In this situation, while it may be that some of a city's land use regulations generally implement and displace the comprehensive plan as directly applicable permit approval criteria, the text and context of potentially applicable comprehensive plan requirements must be examined to determine if the plan requirement is one that must be applied directly as an approval standard in determining whether to approve or deny an application for permit approval. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. It is not enough for a petitioner at LUBA to identify "mandatory" language in a comprehensive plan policy. The text and context of the comprehensive plan must establish both (1) that the plan requirement is mandatory (rather than hortatory or aspirational) and (2) that the mandate must be applied directly as a permit approval standard for the permit decision on appeal. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In determining whether a comprehensive plan requirement applies directly to an application for permit approval, a local government is performing a function quite similar to the function the city was performing in Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), i.e., whether a comprehensive plan requirement is "applicable." Under Siporen a local government's interpretations of its comprehensive plan to determine which plan requirements are applicable as individual permit approval criteria are entitled to deference so long as its interpretations are "plausible." If the city's interpretation is plausible, LUBA must defer, even if LUBA believes there is a better interpretation. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where one plan strategy directs that lands subject to flooding be designated "Floodplain" and the following plan strategy directs that no permanent structures may be erected in lands subject to flooding unless the structure complies with the "Floodplain" criteria, a local governing body's interpretation of those plan strategies to require application of the "Floodplain" criteria only in areas that have already been designated "Floodplain" runs afoul of ORS 174.010 by failing to "give effect" to the second strategy and by "inserting what has been omitted" in the second strategy by inserting a requirement that the lands subject to flooding must have been zoned "Floodplain." Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Whatever difference there may be between the word "consistent" in a local standard that requires conditional use permits to be consistent with the comprehensive plan and the word "comply" as used in ORS 197.175(2)(d), which requires that land use decisions be adopted in compliance with the comprehensive plan, land use decisions must comply with both requirements. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. There is no reason why land use regulations could not fully implement a comprehensive plan, making it unnecessary to consider the comprehensive plan when making permit decisions. But there must be something in the text of the comprehensive plan or the land use regulations or both to support that result. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. If a governing body intended that its land use regulations fully implement its comprehensive plan, so that the plan could never operate as a source of permit approval standards, it presumably would not have adopted a conditional use permit criterion that requires conditional uses "shall be consistent with the comprehensive plan." Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where comprehensive plan goals and policies are directed at structures, development, floodplains and flood hazard areas, and the local governing body does not specifically address the text of those goals and policies in concluding that they do not apply and approving a building to be constructed in the floodplain, remand is required so that the governing body can explain why the text of those goals and policies supports its position that they do not apply. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy adopted to implement Goal 5 is just as open ended and aspirational as Goal 5 itself and in unchallenged findings the city explains Goal 5 has been fully implemented through the Goal 5 resource inventory and ESEE evaluation process, petitioner fails to establish that the policy must be considered directly in approving a conditional use permit. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Remand is necessary where a county adopts standards that impose limitations on development of wind energy facilities, but the record includes no findings or other indications that the county considered whether the amendments are consistent with comprehensive plan policies that encourage the county to promote development of alternative energy sources. Cosner v. Umatilla County, 65 Or LUBA 9 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city planning commission interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy does not apply to a planned unit development application for a cell tower is correct where the text of the policy directs the city to implement one of several means of protecting open space, including adopting planned unit development ordinances, and does not contain any language that suggests that it is intended to apply on a case-by-case basis to individual applications for planned unit development approval that are processed under the city's adopted planned unit development ordinances. Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city planning commission interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy does not apply to a planned unit development application to site a cell tower is not correct, where (1) the text of the policy provides specific and mandatory direction that public facilities "be designed and located" to "preserve[] and enhance" desirable features of the area, (2) the preamble to the applicable comprehensive plan policy refers to "daily decisions" being guided by "site planning," and (3) there is no similar provision in the city's development code that requires the city to consider whether the design and location of a public facility "preserve[s] and enhance[s] desirable features of the area." Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy requiring that the county consider proximity to residential uses and seasonal wind directions when making land use decisions relative to industrial or other uses likely to pose a threat to air quality does not apply to a legislative text amendment that simply adds landfill expansions to the list of uses potentially allowed in the EFU zone. Such a policy is directed at specific development proposals with a limited geographic focus, not legislative text amendments affecting large areas of the county. Waste Not of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 65 Or LUBA 142 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In general, comprehensive plan policies that are worded as "shoulds" or in other similar nonmandatory language do not operate as independent mandatory approval criteria. But comprehensive plan policies must be interpreted in context, and where one comprehensive plan policy states that "right of way vacations are to be based upon the criteria" set forth in the comprehensive plan's right-of-way vacation policies, that suggests the right-of-way vacations policies are not nonmandatory policies that the city council is free to ignore, even if they are worded as "shoulds." Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies may be mandatory considerations, such that the local government is obligated to adopt findings addressing those considerations, even if individual policies are not mandatory approval criteria that must be independently satisfied or complied with. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A finding that the public interest will not be prejudiced if a right-of-way is vacated is not adequate to address a comprehensive plan policy that asks whether the proposed right-of-way vacation "satisfies a compelling public need," because the finding answers a different question than the question asked by the comprehensive plan policy. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A finding that a proposed right-of-way vacation "will not degrade * * * accessibility in the surrounding neighborhoods" is not sufficient to address a comprehensive plan policy that "[a] proposed vacation should not limit, nor make more difficult, safe and convenient pedestrian and bicycle access," where the barrier that two cemeteries currently pose for pedestrian, bicycle and vehicular traffic was the topic of considerable testimony and the vacation would eliminate the only existing publicly owned property to provide pedestrian and bicycle access through the cemeteries. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where in approving a destination resort in coastal shorelands that is dependent on groundwater the county addresses a number of comprehensive plan policies implementing Goal 17, but does not address a potentially applicable plan policy in the plan Goal 17 element that requires the county take measures to protect groundwater, remand is necessary for the county to either address the policy or explain why it is not applicable. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a plan amendment standard requires a finding that the change conforms to "applicable goals and polices" in the comprehensive plan, the city's findings address those plan goals and policies the city deemed "applicable," and on appeal petitioner argues generally that the city failed to address all plan goals and policies but does not identify any "applicable" goals or policies not addressed, LUBA will reject the argument. Smith v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 87 (2010).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A Metro regional government Urban Growth Management Functional Plan (UGMFP) housing density requirement is not an approval standard applicable to a county's land use decision approving a residential subdivision, where the UGMFP density requirement applies directly only when Metro region local governments fail to adopt implementing regulations, and the county adopted regulations implementing the UGMFP density requirement. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 61 Or LUBA 234 (2010).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that a county should "strive to promote and encourage" a safe transportation network" is not a mandatory approval standard that applies directly to an application for land division. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A land use regulation purpose statement that calls for dividing land so as to "promote public health, safety, convenience, and general welfare" and to "minimize * * * hazards" and to "minimize safety hazards and adverse impacts on the neighboring area" are not a mandatory approval standards that apply directly to an application for land division. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A county decision to deny a partition based on a land use regulation design and development standard that requires "[a]ny access approval request under this section shall be reviewed to assure that no development occurs in known natural hazard areas without appropriate safeguards * * *" must be remanded where it is not clear that the standard applies to a partition that proposes no new access, it is not clear that the partition is accurately viewed as "development" and it is not clear whether there is any "known natural hazard area" present. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When a goal exception is taken to facilitate proposed development, any comprehensive plan policies that implement the goal for which the exception is taken no longer govern that development. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Remand is necessary where the local government adopts exceptions to Statewide Planning Goals 11 and 14 to approve a destination resort, but fails to address comprehensive plan transportation policies that appear to implement Statewide Planning Goal 12 (Transportation), for which the local government did not adopt an exception, and the decision fails to explain why those policies are either satisfied or not applicable. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A county errs in failing to address whether a mitigation plan for a destination resort is consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies governing wildlife protection, and instead finding that issues raised regarding compliance with those policies will be addressed by requiring the applicant to obtain approval of the plan from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city governing body does not err in interpreting comprehensive plan policies that govern "development" to be inapplicable to a proposal to annex and extend sewer service to fully developed property. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When comprehensive plan and land use regulation amendments are adopted together, the land use regulations must be consistent with the amended comprehensive plan provisions rather than existing comprehensive plan provisions that are being replaced by the new comprehensive plan provisions. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 25 (2008).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A county does not err in failing to adopt findings addressing a county comprehensive plan inventory of mobile home parks in the course of approving a planned unit development that will replace an existing mobile home park, where pursuant to an urban growth management agreement the city rather than county comprehensive plan governs the application. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local government does not err in not considering comprehensive plan policies that are not applicable approval criteria. Hermanson v. Lane County, 56 Or LUBA 433 (2008).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan categorizes lands within the urban growth boundary according to suitability for development, a county errs by denying a request for rezoning on the basis that the requested rezoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, where the findings identify nothing in the comprehensive plan that supports a conclusion that the property's low suitability rating precludes the requested rezoning. Sperber v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 763 (2008).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan goal that the city should "promote, on an equitable basis, the highest level of services the citizens will support" is too general and nonmandatory to function as an approval criterion for a permit application seeking a variance to off-street parking requirements. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy requiring the city to designate areas for public off-street parking facilities is not an applicable approval criterion with respect to an application for a variance to private off-street parking facilities. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A county's interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy, which implements Statewide Planning Goal 7 (Natural Disasters and Hazards), requires regulation of development in known areas potentially subject to natural disasters and is aimed at reducing risks to life and property that are caused by natural hazards, is not applicable in the context of a determination whether development is appropriate in a beaches and dunes area, pursuant to a comprehensive plan policy that implements Statewide Planning Goal 18 (Beaches and Dunes), which is aimed at reducing impacts that may be caused by the proposed development. Borton v. Coos County, 52 Or LUBA 46 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a refinement plan specifies that applicable plan policies are "guidance for decision-making," as long as the decision maker actually considers applicable plan policies and explains the basis for its choice to give one policy greater weight than another, where different policies compete or point to different results, LUBA will not disturb that choice on review. Bothman v. City of Eugene, Or LUBA 701 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Findings that an intervening road will buffer commercial and residential uses, and that rely on site design review standards to minimize adverse impacts of future commercial uses, are sufficient to explain why a zone change from office to commercial uses is consistent with a refinement plan policy that encourages location of office uses as a transition between commercial and residential uses. Bothman v. City of Eugene, Or LUBA 701 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Even where a comprehensive plan provision might not constitute an independently applicable mandatory approval criterion for a rezoning proposal, it may nonetheless represent a relevant and necessary consideration that must be reviewed and balanced with other relevant plan provisions pursuant to ordinances that require that the proposed rezoning be consistent with applicable plan provisions. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that expresses a clear policy preference that a specifically identified area remain in its existing zoning is a policy that must be considered and balanced with other applicable policies when rezoning property in the area, under rezoning criteria requiring that the proposed rezoning be consistent with applicable plan provisions, notwithstanding that the plan policy is not couched in absolute or mandatory terms. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that expresses a clear policy preference that general office uses buffer commercial and residential uses in a specific area is a policy that must be considered and balanced with other applicable policies in rezoning property in that area that is (1) zoned and developed for general office uses and (2) acts as a buffer between commercial and residential-zoned and developed areas. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy requiring that the county "insure adequate provisions" for schools is a planning mandate to the county, not an approval criterion requiring that applicants for a planned unit development provide land for schools. City of Damascus v. Clackamas County, 50 Or LUBA 514 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In order to "incorporate" a comprehensive plan standard into a local government's land use regulations within the meaning of ORS 197.195(1) and thus apply that plan standard to a limited land use decision as an approval criterion, the local government must at least amend its land use regulation to identify specific plan policies or provisions that apply to a limited land use decision as approval criteria. A code requirement to "comply with the comprehensive plan" is insufficient to incorporate any comprehensive plan standard under ORS 197.195(1). Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A finding that annexation is necessary to protect significant natural features on a site under more protective city regulations is a sufficient explanation for why there is a "public need" annexation, notwithstanding a plan policy indicating a preference for infill and redevelopment over annexation. No amount of infill or redevelopment could preserve significant natural features on the site. Mason v. City of Corvallis, 49 Or LUBA 199 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy stating that the city should "work toward" development of vacant lands before annexing additional lands does not mandate anything and therefore is not an approval standard governing an annexation proposal. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Remand is necessary to adopt findings addressing a plan policy that requires the city to promote higher-density residential development adjacent to two identified service centers, and either explain why (1) the policy does not apply to an application to rezone property to medium-density residential or (2) why allowing medium-density residential development far from service centers is consistent with the policy. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A plan policy stating that the city will "provide incentives to enable" higher-density residential infill is not a mandatory approval criterion applicable to a quasi-judicial rezoning application. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A detailed water quality resources report that discusses the effects of development on groundwater is sufficient to satisfy a comprehensive plan policy that requires a "Development Impact Statement" addressing the "effect on the groundwater supply." Dinges v. City of Oregon City, 49 Or LUBA 376 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city's acknowledged comprehensive plan is a potential source of approval criteria in reviewing an application for conditional use approval, because ORS 197.175(2)(d) requires that local governments "make land use decisions and limited land use decisions in compliance with the acknowledged plan and land use regulations." Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. The statutory requirement that land use decisions be consistent with acknowledged comprehensive plans does not mean that all parts of the comprehensive plan necessarily are approval standards, or that comprehensive plan provisions that can operate as approval standards are necessarily relevant to all quasi-judicial land use permit applications. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Even if a comprehensive plan provision is a relevant standard for a quasi-judicial land use permit application, it may simply be a relevant consideration that must be considered with other relevant considerations, rather than a mandatory approval criterion that must separately be satisfied along with other mandatory approval criteria. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In determining whether particular comprehensive plan goals and policies are relevant approval criteria for a quasi-judicial land use permit application, it is appropriate to consider first whether the comprehensive plan itself assigns a particular role to those goals and policies. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Remand is necessary to reconsider what plan policies apply to a proposal to rezone property from one commercial zone to another, when the findings are predicated on an erroneous assumption that the property is plan designated medium density residential rather than commercial. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. An approval standard that requires that the local government identify the alternative that "most effectively carries out comprehensive plan goals and policies" necessarily requires balancing when the plan includes many overlapping policies that can work at cross-purposes. Findings that explain how the city chose to balance those plan goals and policies and which goals and policies the city emphasized are adequate, even if petitioners would have emphasized other goals and policies. Doob v. City of Grants Pass, 48 Or LUBA 587 (2005).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. It is within a city's interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret comprehensive plan language setting out considerations for locating commercial development in the city as being planning directives to the city to be used in determining the appropriate plan designation or zone, and not as approval standards that an applicant for commercial development permitted outright in a particular zone must satisfy. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local code separately requires that quasi-judicial zoning map amendments comply with the local code and comply with applicable comprehensive plan policies, a local government must consider whether there are particular comprehensive plan policies that apply to the zoning map amendment and a local government may not interpret the code to fully implement the comprehensive plan. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where an intergovernmental agreement calls for a county to incorporate into its plan and code the city's ordinances and plan provisions that address lands within the UGB, but the county never does so, the county did not err in refusing to treat the city's provisions as applicable approval criteria. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A blanket finding that "many" of the plan policies cited by opponents are not applicable mandatory approval criteria is inadequate to provide a reviewable interpretation or determination that a particular plan policy is inapplicable, especially when the decision imposes conditions that appear to be directed at the policy's requirements. Chin v. City of Corvallis, 46 Or LUBA 1 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a refinement plan policy prohibits "development" of property prior to master plan approval, the code definition of "development" includes excavation and fill, and there is no textual or contextual basis to conclude that "development" for purposes of the policy excludes excavation and fill authorized by a grading permit, then the policy is applicable to a challenged permit authorizing excavation and fill on the property. Because the grading permit "concerns" the application of a comprehensive plan provision, the permit is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 566 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. That regulations governing grading permits do not expressly require compliance with comprehensive plan policies does not necessarily indicate that specific comprehensive plan policies cannot apply to grading permits, especially where the grading permit regulations require planning department review for compliance with "any applicable laws." Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 566 (2004).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Annexation decisions are governed by comprehensive plan annexation criteria or, if no such comprehensive plan criteria have been adopted, by the statewide planning goals. Where a city annexation decision is adopted without applying either its comprehensive plan or the statewide planning goals, the decision must be remanded. Morsman v. City of Madras, 45 Or LUBA 16 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local code provision expressly requires that a proposed subdivision must "conform to" the comprehensive plan, the local government errs in interpreting the code to preclude the possibility that there are any comprehensive plan provisions that might apply directly to the subdivision proposal. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where LUBA concludes that relevant local code provisions make the comprehensive plan requirements potentially applicable to an application for subdivision approval and that a particular comprehensive plan provision applies and is not merely aspirational, and the local government approved the subdivision without addressing the comprehensive plan provision, the subdivision approval decision must be remanded. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. While ORS 197.175(2)(d) states that land use and limited land use decisions must be in compliance with acknowledged plan and land use regulations, it does not implicitly prohibit a city from applying other standards such as statutes or county regulations that are not part of the city's acknowledged plan or regulations. City of Woodburn v. Marion County, 45 Or LUBA 423 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. ORS 197.175 requires that land use decisions comply with the applicable comprehensive plan. However, whether a particular plan provision is an approval criterion for a particular quasi-judicial land division application depends on the language of the comprehensive plan and its implementing regulations, with appropriate deference to any explicit or implicit interpretations of the comprehensive plan and implementing regulations by the local government. Donivan v. City of La Grande, 43 Or LUBA 477 (2003).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A finding that a proposed use complies with a code criterion requiring a demonstration that the use be consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies is inadequate where it merely summarizes the applicable comprehensive plan policies, and does not address issues raised regarding compliance with particular policy provisions. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan expressly provides that certain policies are approval criteria for conditional use master plans and those policies appear to apply, a city's unexplained conclusion that the policies do not apply is insufficient and remand is required. Boly v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 537 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where comprehensive plan policies require efforts to reduce automobile use and encourage mass transit use, and arguments are presented that approving an additional parking lot adjacent to a light rail station is inconsistent with those policies, the city's unexplained dismissal of the issue requires remand. Boly v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 537 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city decision to approve a one-story building addition rather than a two-story addition will be affirmed where the petitioner fails to demonstrate that general comprehensive plan policies that advocate a compact urban form (1) apply to the challenged application, and (2) are violated by the city's decision. Thompson v. City of Ashland, 40 Or LUBA 298 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local governing body interprets comprehensive plan provisions not to impose relevant approval criteria for a particular rezoning request it is entitled to great deference on review. However, where a local governing body simply declares that the provisions are not approval criteria without any explanation, the declaration expresses no reviewable interpretation and the declaration is not entitled to deference. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a generally worded purpose statement in a city's comprehensive plan provides that a zoning designation is intended to confine strip commercial development to its existing locations, but does not expressly provide that the zoning designation may be applied only to those locations, the local government's interpretation of the purpose statement to allow the zoning designation to be applied to other locations so long as it does not result in strip commercial development is not clearly wrong. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 40 Or LUBA 52 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a variance criterion requires that a variance conform to the comprehensive plan, a city's finding that a variance will promote in-fill and higher residential density is insufficient to demonstrate that the variance, allowing a lot to be divided into two lots, satisfies that criterion where the findings identify no comprehensive plan provisions encouraging in-fill and higher residential density. Reagan v. City of Oregon City, 39 Or LUBA 672 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan provision requiring that all transportation-related decisions consider specified land use impacts is a mandatory approval criterion potentially applicable to a decision vacating a county road. Mekkers v. Yamhill County, 39 Or LUBA 367 (2001).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy statement that a local government "will rely" on the Forest Practices Act (FPA) to protect surface waters and fish and wildlife does not have the effect of making the FPA requirements into approval criteria for a forest template dwelling. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A land use regulation text amendment establishing subjective criteria is consistent with a city's plan policy providing that its land use regulations be as "clear and objective as possible," where the city demonstrates that the subjective criteria are necessary in order to ensure compliance with other policy objectives. Home Depot, Inc. v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 870 (2000).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local land use regulation requires that a permit application be consistent with any relevant neighborhood plan, neighborhood plan policies which are described in the neighborhood plan as having the force of law are at least potentially relevant approval criteria for the permit. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A petitioner's arguments that a zoning ordinance amendment violates a plan policy discouraging uses that are not water dependent provides no basis for remand, where the challenged decision raises the maximum building height and does not approve any particular use of the property. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city does not err by failing to address a comprehensive plan policy that requires an impact assessment for in-water structures, where the decision does not approve any in-water structures. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(F), which allows the county to consider land use conflicts with a proposed mine if such conflicts must be considered under a county mining ordinance adopted pursuant to ORS 517.780, does not permit a county to apply its comprehensive plan and land use regulations as decisional criteria for the proposed mine, notwithstanding a general provision in the mining ordinance that requires compliance with the county comprehensive plan and land use regulations. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A conflict or inconsistency with a comprehensive plan or land use regulation provision is not the kind of conflict that may be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b). The conflicts that may considered under the rule include conflicts between land uses. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where access to a mining site is via a "local road," OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(B) allows a county to consider conflicts with that local road. However, where access to a mining site is via an arterial highway there are no local roads used for access and egress to the mining site and OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(B) does not permit the county to consider conflicts with other roads. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local government may not expand the 1,500-foot impact area required by OAR 660-023-0180(4)(a) based on potential conflicts that exceed the scope of conflicts that may be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b). Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. OAR 660-023-0180(4)(d) directs that a county proceed to "determine the ESEE consequences of either allowing, limiting, or not allowing mining at the site," only where conflicts with a mining site are properly identified under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b) and there are not "reasonable and practical measures" that would minimize those conflicts. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When the local government cannot show that a comprehensive plan policy requiring site-specific soil surveys and geologic studies when potential geologic problems exist is couched in mandatory terms and absent some indication that it has been fully implemented in the zoning code, the policy is decisional criteria for development applications. Highland Condominium Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 37 Or LUBA 13 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In the absence of a city's determination whether a comprehensive plan policy is a mandatory approval criterion, LUBA will exercise its interpretative discretion under ORS 197.829(2) to determine that the plan policy is a mandatory approval criterion, where the terms of the plan policy require the city to determine that essential public services "can be provided to a site" before granting development approval. That the plan policy specifies an exception to its requirements reinforces the conclusion that it is mandatory. Terra v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 582 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy requiring that "[e]xcavations and fills shall be limited to those minimal areas where alteration is necessary to accommodate allowed development" is couched in terms imposing certain requirements in development approvals, and is thus a mandatory approval criterion. Terra v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 582 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A county comprehensive plan provision requiring that the county use the transportation system efficiently by locating industrial uses close to transportation is directed at legislative decisions, and does not constitute a mandatory approval criterion applicable to a quasi-judicial decision to rezone land to allow industrial uses. City of Newberg v. Yamhill County, 36 Or LUBA 473 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city commission is within its interpretative discretion under ORS 197.829 to determine that a requirement that planned unit development within a natural hazards zone be consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies is satisfied by a demonstration of compliance with ordinance standards implementing those comprehensive plan policies. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. ORS 197.175 requires that land use decisions comply with acknowledged comprehensive plans. When approval criteria included in acknowledged land use regulations entirely displace the comprehensive plan as relevant approval criteria, the comprehensive plan must make that intent clear. Durig v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 196 (1998).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Review criteria for subdivision approval found in the county's acknowledged comprehensive plan are applicable by their terms to every subdivision, even where the subject property has been redesignated following a Goal exception. Turrell v. Harney County, 34 Or LUBA 423 (1998).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a city interprets an element of its comprehensive plan as a policy statement intended to guide creation of standards, rather than an approval criterion itself, and that interpretation is not inconsistent with the plan's express language, purpose or underlying policy, LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 34 Or LUBA 340 (1998).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In the absence of an explicit statement that provisions of a comprehensive plan are not mandatory approval criteria, whether plan provisions constitute approval criteria depends on a case-by-case analysis of the wording and context of the particular provisions. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a land use regulation requires that a proposed use demonstrate consistency with a comprehensive plan, the local government may measure the consistency of the proposed use with policies and other relevant standards in the comprehensive plan, even ones that, in themselves, may not constitute specific, mandatory approval criteria. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where petitioner does not demonstrate that a forest management strategy is part of a county's comprehensive plan, petitioner has not carried its burden of showing that the application of the forest management strategy is a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Mount Hood Stewardship Council v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 284 (1997).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. The city's failure to address aspirational criteria stated in the city's comprehensive plan does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Stewart v. City of Brookings, 31 LUBA 325 (1996).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy is couched in mandatory terms, but does not state an approval standard, the county's failure to address that policy in its decision is not error. Friends of Indian Ford v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 248 (1996).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that does not set out approval criteria for a land use permit decision may nevertheless state an underlying purpose or policy with which the county's interpretation of its zoning ordinance must be consistent. DLCD v. Tillamook County, 30 Or LUBA 221 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Even if an interpretation of a local ordinance is colorable on its face, it may be inconsistent with the express, language, purpose and policy underlying the ordinance and expressed in a comprehensive plan. In such cases, LUBA cannot affirm the local government's interpretation under ORS 197.829(1)(a) to (c). DLCD v. Tillamook County, 30 Or LUBA 221 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. ORS 227.173(1) requires that permit standards and criteria be set out in local development ordinances and that land use decisions identify applicable standards and criteria. The statute does not prohibit a local government from requiring compliance with comprehensive plan policies through an ordinance, or from applying comprehensive plan criteria in quasi-judicial proceedings. Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 30 Or LUBA 85 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A city's hearing notice is not defective for failure to list certain comprehensive plan provisions when the city makes specific findings that those provisions are not approval criteria. Stevens v. City of Medford, 29 Or LUBA 422 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the local code specifically requires the application of a historic landmark designation to be consistent with comprehensive plan historic preservation policies, but does not indicate any plan policies are applicable to decisions on permits for demolition of property subject to the historic landmark designation, the local governing body is not clearly wrong in interpreting the plan and code to provide that no plan policies are applicable to its review of such a demolition permit application. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the challenged decision is made by a governing body and does not explain whether or to what extent apparently applicable comprehensive plan standards apply to the proposal, the challenged decision must be remanded for such an explanation. Lamm v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 468 (1995).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. To decide whether a challenged decision is a "land use decision" under ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A)(ii), because it concerns the application of a comprehensive plan, LUBA must determine whether arguably relevant plan provisions cited by the parties are standards or criteria for making the challenged decision. Fraser v. City of Joseph, 28 Or LUBA 217 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local government interprets a comprehensive plan provision using the word "should" as imposing a nonmandatory consideration, findings demonstrating compliance with the plan provision are not required. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local government acts within its interpretive discretion in interpreting a plan policy that "residential development should only be encouraged" in certain areas not to be an approval standard for individual development applications. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 497 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. The requirement of ORS 197.175(2)(d) that a land use decision or limited land use decision comply with a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan, does not necessarily mean that all plan provisions apply directly to individual development applications. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where one part of a comprehensive plan states it is implemented through legislative acts, but another part states that subdivisions must be in conformance with the plan and the code expressly states all subdivision decisions must be consistent with the plan, it is not contrary to the express words, purpose or policy of either the code or the plan for the city to apply certain plan housing policies to a subdivision application. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Following acknowledgment, ORS 197.175(2)(d) requires that a local government make its land use decisions in compliance with applicable provisions of its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations. However, individual comprehensive plan provisions may not impose mandatory approval criteria or apply to particular types of land use decisions. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where property is annexed and it is not clear whether a plan policy and implementing measure governing annexations applies in the particular circumstances, a remand is required so that the local government may either apply the plan policy and implementing measure or explain why it does not apply. Sorte v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 236 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan explicitly provides that certain plan provisions are advisory, such provisions are not mandatory land use approval standards, even if such plan provisions are worded in mandatory terms. Downtown Comm. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 80 Or App 336, 722 P2d 1258, rev den, 302 Or 86 (1986). Eskandarian v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan or land use regulation does not explicitly designate which portions of the plan or land use regulation operate as mandatory land use approval criteria, a case-by-case inquiry, examining the wording and context of the particular plan and land use regulation provisions, is required to identify mandatory approval standards. Eskandarian v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where comprehensive plan goals are worded as aspirations, and the plan states that whereas plan policies are to be used in daily decision making, plan goals are general directions for the future, LUBA will affirm a local determination that the plan goals are not approval standards for a permit application. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Although Goal 11 requires that local governments include schools in comprehensive plan provisions for public facilities and services, there is no legal requirement that subdivision approval decisions include a determination that schools are adequate, unless the acknowledged comprehensive plan or land use regulations impose such a requirement. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy requiring cooperative efforts among neighboring jurisdictions concerning public facilities and services, with no mention of schools, does not provide a basis for reversing or remanding a decision approving a subdivision despite allegedly inadequate schools. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy directed at how a city expends funds for public facilities and services is not an approval standard applicable to approval of individual subdivision requests. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy specifically refers to wetlands identified in "future inventorying processes," it is reasonable for the local government to interpret that plan policy as inapplicable to individual permit decisions not involving wetlands identified on the local government's acknowledged plan inventory. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local government's failure to establish compliance with aspirational plan provisions which "encourage" and provide guidance about what a local government should do, is not a basis for LUBA to reverse or remand a challenged decision. Neuharth v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 267 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local code may provide a PUD process in which an approved PUD overall development plan, rather than the comprehensive plan standards applied in approving the overall development plan, governs final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a county approves a 120-unit PUD on rural land, but fails to address plan policies limiting the provision of urban public services on rural land, a remand is required so that the county may adopt findings explaining why these standards are not violated by the proposed PUD. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A requirement in a local code that development be "consistent" with comprehensive plan policies and standards, is a general requirement that does not transform otherwise nonmandatory plan standards into approval standards. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 24 Or LUBA 540 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Under ORS 197.175(2)(d), a county is required to assure that amendments to its comprehensive plan map comply with the acknowledged comprehensive plan. Where a number of plan provisions applicable to such a decision impose conflicting requirements, the county must adopt findings balancing those conflicting plan provisions in determining whether the request is consistent with the plan. Marson Trucking, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A former comprehensive plan that is "retained [by a local government] as resource and background documents" for its current comprehensive plan, does not establish approval standards for land use decisions. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 296 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a local code standard requires that creation of new nonfarm and nonforest parcels be consistent with comprehensive plan forest and agriculture policies, the local government's findings must demonstrate compliance with all such plan policies or explain why they do not apply. DLCD v. Curry County, 24 Or LUBA 200 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that simply requires a county to "encourage" maximum utilization of vacant city land is not a mandatory approval standard for a zone change and subdivision application. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where golf courses are listed as conditionally permitted uses in an EFU zoning district, and an applicable code standard requires that proposed golf courses comply with applicable comprehensive plan policies, a county must balance applicable plan policies, and may not focus on particular plan policies to the exclusion of others. Wells v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 402 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a code approval standard applicable to a permit decision fully incorporates and refines a comprehensive plan policy, the plan policy does not apply directly to the permit decision as an approval criterion. Avgeris v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 124 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Whether plan policies are approval standards applicable to individual permit decisions is determined by reference to both the words used in the particular plan policy and the structure of the plan itself. In the absence of something in the plan to the contrary, plan policies worded in aspirational and general terms are intended to guide development of implementing ordinances, not individual permit decisions. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 23 Or LUBA 100 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A plan policy which contains mandatory language, and specifically envisions that it may be necessary to apply "additional measures" to particular development applications to protect the "integrity and function" of estuarine areas and to "carry out" the plan policy, is a mandatory standard applicable to individual applications for development adjacent to an estuarine area. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 23 Or LUBA 100 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that is limited in its application to forest dwellings and to land exceeding a specified productivity rating, does not apply to a request for approval of a nonforest dwelling on property having less than the productivity rating specified in the policy. Camp v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 6 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy directs the local government to adopt particular implementing regulations, and nothing in the wording or context of the policy indicates it was intended to apply to individual land use actions, the policy is not an approval standard for such actions. Miller v. City of Dayton, 22 Or LUBA 661 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies and local code requirements establishing standards for construction of streets are not approval standards applicable to comprehensive plan transportation map amendments. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Particular comprehensive plan provisions may or may not be standards governing individual land use decisions. Even where plan provisions are approval criteria for some types of land use decisions, they may not be approval standards for all types of land use decisions. Goodrich v. Jackson County, 22 Or LUBA 434 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan agriculture policies are criteria applicable to a request for conditional use approval for a nonfarm use in an exclusive farm use zone, where the zoning ordinance specifically provides that conditional uses must comply with plan goals and policies and there is nothing in the language of the plan agriculture policies which suggests they were not intended to apply as applicable approval standards. Waker Assoc., Inc. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 233 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Conditions imposed on particular property as part of the adoption of a quasi-judicial plan amendment/zone change are potentially applicable to decisions approving development of that property. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. ORS 215.130, and county regulations adopted pursuant thereto, provide limited authorization for counties to approve alterations to nonconforming uses which are contrary to provisions of their comprehensive plans and land use regulations. Therefore, plan policies are not approval standards for alteration of a nonconforming use. Scott v. Josephine County, 22 Or LUBA 82 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. When determining the applicability of comprehensive plan provisions to individual conditional use decisions, LUBA will first consider whether the comprehensive plan itself contains language which identifies how the provisions in question are intended to apply to individual conditional use decisions. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan emphasizes that plan policies are intended to guide development actions and decisions, and that the plan must be implemented through the local code to have effect, such plan policies are not approval standards for individual conditional use decisions. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local code statement of an intent not to encourage perpetuation of nonconforming uses and plan policies which are directed at zoning decisions and adoption of implementing land use regulations and planning inventories do not state approval standards applicable to decisions concerning modification of individual nonconforming uses. Strawn v. City of Albany, 21 Or LUBA 172 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Whether a plan policy is an approval standard depends upon the wording and context of the plan provision. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 21 Or LUBA 18 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy states that "no proposed rural area development shall substantially impair or conflict with the use of farm or forest land," but the applicable rural zoning district contains no provisions addressing interference with forest uses, the plan policy itself is an approval standard for nonfarm dwellings proposed in that zone with regard to potential conflicts with forest uses. Stefan v. Yamhill County, 21 Or LUBA 18 (1991).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies which contain aspirational language regarding goals to be implemented through the adoption of land use regulations are not mandatory approval criteria for individual permit applications and, therefore, it is unnecessary for LUBA to determine whether a decision approving a permit complies with such plan policies. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 20 Or LUBA 246 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A plan policy that certain uses or activities be encouraged states general objectives, not permit approval criteria. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. In determining whether a particular comprehensive plan provision is an approval standard, LUBA considers the language used in the plan provision and the context in which it appears. A plan policy that states general objectives in non-mandatory terms is not an approval standard. Thormahlen v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 218 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A local code requirement that certain land use actions be consistent with the comprehensive plan does not transform all plan provisions into approval criteria for those decisions. To determine whether particular plan provisions are approval standards, LUBA looks to the language used in the plan provisions and the context in which such plan provisions appear. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies that simply encourage certain development patterns are not independent approval criteria for decisions made under the plan. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the local comprehensive plan includes "specific" policies, but does not establish that all "specific" policies are merely advisory, the local government must determine for each relevant "specific" policy, based on the language and context of that policy, whether it is a regulatory standard potentially applicable to individual development proposals. Axon v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 108 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that "services shall be available or committed prior to approval of development" is a mandatory approval standard for individual development proposals. Axon v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 108 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the local code provides for the approval of an overall PUD development plan and allows approved PUDs to be developed in phases, and the local government addresses the public services impacts of an entire PUD and finds relevant plan policies satisfied in approving such an overall PUD plan, the local government is not required to readdress plan public services policies in subsequent approval of a development phase, provided the requested phase approval is consistent with the type and intensity of development in the approved overall PUD plan. Hoffman v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 64 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan provides that plan "goals, policies, strategies and standards" are "legally binding to land use decisions" when expressed in mandatory language, relevant plan agricultural goals, policies, strategies and standards which are expressed in mandatory language are applicable to a request for conditional use approval for a golf course in the county's exclusive farm use zone. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan is defined as including the plan policy document, plan map, zoning map and zoning and subdivision ordinances, as well as a number of other documents, a local code provision requiring that individual land use decisions comply with the comprehensive plan is not correctly interpreted as requiring compliance with only the zoning map and zoning and subdivision ordinances. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where plan standards identify nonfarm uses that may be allowed in the county's exclusive farm use zone and require that such uses be "minimized," a plan standard requiring that "development" not occur on lands capable of sustaining accepted farming practices is properly interpreted as not applying to the nonfarm uses specifically allowed in the exclusive farm use zone. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A finding that no plan policies apply to a proposed conditional use is adequate to demonstrate compliance with the comprehensive plan where petitioner fails to allege that any particular plan policies apply to the proposed use. Keudell v. Union County, 19 Or LUBA 394 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy governing "requests for rezonings to higher intensity residential uses" has no applicability where the issue is whether the plan map designation should be changed. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. A comprehensive plan statement that separation of use types along topographic, natural vegetation, and other features is "desirable" does not establish an approval criterion applicable to plan and zone map amendments. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan specifies that a particular plan policy is itself an implementing measure, LUBA will conclude that policy applies as an approval criterion for land use decisions. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies which the plan states are specifically implemented through particular sections of the local code do not constitute independent approval standards for land use actions. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Whether comprehensive plan goals and policies or zoning ordinance purpose sections are approval standards for conditional use approval in a particular instance, depends upon an examination of the relevant plan and code provisions. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where the county code explicitly requires that a nonfarm conditional use in an exclusive farm use zone "satisfy" applicable plan goals and policies, and the county plan provides that its goals and policies shall "direct future decisions on land use actions," the plan agriculture goals and policies are applicable to approval of the nonfarm conditional use. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

29.3.2 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – As Decision Criteria. Where there is an apparent conflict between a plan provision and an amended code provision, the city must explain in its findings why the code amendment does not conflict with the plan provision. Nicolai v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 142 (1990).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. The Goal 2 requirement that acknowledged comprehensive plans be the "basis" for land use decisions is not violated by citation to an adopted, but unacknowledged housing strategy document, where the cited portion of the document directly implements, in almost identical language, policy recommendations in the city's acknowledged housing needs analysis. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. Language in a city's acknowledged housing needs analysis finding an existing deficit of affordable housing in the city, and recommending that the city identify surplus city land for development with government-subsidized housing, provides a policy basis for the city to rezone public land from an open space zone to a residential zone that allows high density residential development. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. That a city's acknowledged buildable lands inventory indicates that the city already has an adequate supply of land zoned for R-3 (high density residential) does not undermine the city council's conclusion that rezoning additional land to R-3 is necessary to address an identified shortage of affordable housing, where the city finds that the private housing market has been unable to address the need for affordable housing despite an adequate supply, and that rezoning surplus public land to R-3, to be donated to a housing agency, is necessary to facilitate development of affordable housing. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. A city must rely on its acknowledged Goal 9 inventory and Goal 9 elements to demonstrate that after a proposed plan amendment the city's comprehensive plan continues to comply with Goal 9, and the city cannot rely instead upon an unacknowledged economic opportunities analysis to make that demonstration. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. A reference in an ordinance to a city's engineering design manual is not sufficient to incorporate the manual into the city's acknowledged plan and land use regulations. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. Goal 2 is not violated by adopting a plan amendment that references unacknowledged land use regulations. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. That a county's comprehensive plan was acknowledged in the 1990s to comply with Goal 4 does not shield the county from the obligation, at ORS 197.646(1) and (3), to apply subsequently adopted amendments to Goal 4 or the Goal 4 rule until the county incorporates those amendments into its comprehensive plan. Because the Goal 4 rule was amended in 2008 and 2011 to provide a prioritized list of data sources a county must consider when determining whether land is forest land subject to Goal 4, the county cannot simply apply its acknowledged comprehensive plan standards for identifying forest land, but must also apply the amended Goal 4 rule, until the county incorporates those rule amendments into its comprehensive plan. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 66 Or LUBA 45 (2012).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. In an appeal of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment that redesignates an estuarine area from a natural management unit to a conservation management unit, the petitioner cannot argue that the acknowledged conservation unit provisions that allow riprap as a conditional use are inconsistent with Goal 16. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 471 (2006).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. Even if the Goal 17 requirements governing shorelands "suitable for water-dependent uses" and "especially suited for water-dependent uses" have an independent significance under Goal 17, where the county's acknowledged code and plan treat the two phrases interchangeably, any error in conflating the meaning of the two phrases cannot be challenged in a permit decision. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 500 (2006).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. That LCDC acknowledged a 1999 decision including resource land within an urban unincorporated community (UUC) does not mean that LCDC concurred with the county's apparent intent to later plan and zone the land for non-resource uses. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 50 Or LUBA 444 (2005).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. While the acknowledgment process shields local governments from collateral attacks on acknowledged plans and ordinances, any errors the local government may have made in that process do not obviate goal and rule requirements that govern subsequent plan and zoning amendments. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 50 Or LUBA 444 (2005).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. "Deemed acknowledgment" under ORS 197.615 does not satisfy ORS 197.505 requirement that local ordinances establishing a moratorium be acknowledged under ORS 197.251. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. An action engaged in or practice in accordance with an acknowledged comprehensive plan provision or implementing ordinance must be justified by an acknowledged provision that fully sets forth the essential structure, form and requirements for such action or practice. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. Where a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations apply a freshwater wetland designation to certain property, the local government's application of regulations governing freshwater wetlands to development of the subject property is not error, even though comprehensive plan inventory documents suggest the property is in fact a saltwater marsh. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

29.3.3 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Effect of Acknowledgment. Following acknowledgment, ORS 197.175(2)(d) requires that a local government make its land use decisions in compliance with applicable provisions of its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations. However, individual comprehensive plan provisions may not impose mandatory approval criteria or apply to particular types of land use decisions. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Remand is necessary where a city adopts a legislative text amendment prohibiting expansion of existing fossil fuel terminals, without addressing consistency with a subarea plan policy objective to "maintain, protect and enhance private transportation investments" in the subarea, "including rail and marine terminals, to ensure continued viability as a major center for the import and export of industrial products in the State of Oregon." Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Sub-area plan language describing as a "buffer" the neighborhood that includes property proposed for rezoning from a high density residential to a higher density residential zone need not be interpreted to limit density to no more than the median density between the two zones. A planning commission does not err in concluding that the proposed rezone is consistent with the "buffer" description based on other density, height and design restrictions. Conte v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 326 (2012).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. That a sub-area comprehensive plan map designates an area as "Medium and High Density" does not imply an intent to limit density below the maximum density otherwise allowed under the area's general comprehensive plan map designation and zoning. Conte v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 326 (2012).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Where part of a subarea plan is adopted by one ordinance and part of that subarea plan is adopted by a second ordinance, and the first ordinance is remanded by LUBA but the second ordinance is affirmed, the part of the subarea plan adopted by the second ordinance may provide the comprehensive plan basis for a parking garage. Where the second ordinance adopts a subarea plan parking policy and zoning code amendments that specifically authorize parking garages on certain specified properties and a city subsequently issues a decision approving a parking garage pursuant to the policy and zoning code, the city's decision will be affirmed on appeal notwithstanding that the first ordinance was remanded, where petitioners identify no other comprehensive plan provisions that are inconsistent with approval of the parking garage. NWDA v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 533 (2009).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. A comprehensive plan policy that a city fund certain public facilities by systems development charges to the maximum extent allowed by law is not an approval standard that the city must consider in approving a petition to annex land, where that land will not be planned and zoned to allow urban development at the time of annexation. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. A comprehensive plan map and a sub-area plan map do not conflict in depicting the plan designation of a particular property, where the comprehensive plan map is at a scale of one inch to 8,000 feet, is not property-specific, and does not clearly indicate whether the plan designation of the property is commercial or residential, while the sub-area plan map is large-scale, property-specific, and clearly depicts the property as commercial. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Where a local land use regulation requires that a permit application be consistent with any relevant neighborhood plan, neighborhood plan policies which are described in the neighborhood plan as having the force of law are at least potentially relevant approval criteria for the permit. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Where a city approves a development plan for a university district as part of a quasi-judicial proceeding, but does not incorporate it into the city's comprehensive plan or land use regulations, the development plan is not a comprehensive plan or land use regulation, and thus amendments to that plan are not subject to review for compliance with statewide planning goals or the Transportation Planning Rule. Brome v. City of Corvallis, 36 Or LUBA 225 (1999).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. An amendment to a "refinement plan" that is part of a local government's comprehensive plan is a comprehensive plan amendment and is reviewable for compliance with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals and their implementing rules. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. An amendment to a "refinement plan" that is part of a local government's comprehensive plan is a comprehensive plan amendment. Graville Properties, Ltd. v. City of Eugene, 27 Or LUBA 583 (1994).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Where a subarea plan has been adopted as part of the local government's comprehensive plan, and includes a map establishing the boundaries of the subarea, petitioners' argument that the subject site is not part of the relevant neighborhood does not alter the applicability of the subarea plan to a proposed comprehensive plan map amendment for the subject site. Hess v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 343 (1992).

29.3.4 Comprehensive Plans – Applicability – Subarea Plans. Amending an acknowledged multi-jurisdictional metropolitan area comprehensive plan so that it is inconsistent with an unamended city "refinement plan" is permissible where the comprehensive plan (1) recognizes such conflicts may exist, (2) provides that all such conflicts are resolved in favor of the comprehensive plan, and (3) recognizes that amendments to refinement plans needed to make them consistent with the comprehensive plan may be delayed. Neste Resins Corp. v. City of Eugene, 23 Or LUBA 55 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will conclude that a decision does not include an implicit interpretation that resolves an apparent tension between a comprehensive plan policy and a local code provision where nothing cited to LUBA in the findings indicates that the local government recognized, much less attempted to resolve, the tension. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 81 Or LUBA 839 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government protect significant clusters of trees and shrubs where the comprehensive plan does not prescribe the exact location of the substation and line and, instead, provides a general location and contemplates that exact locations will be determined through subsequent land use actions, including site plan review. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government avoid development of unsuitable areas, including wetlands and riparian areas, where the comprehensive plan provides a general location for the substation and does not specify that the substation must be sited in a wetland area. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although balancing competing comprehensive plan policies is permissible in the quasi-judicial context only when the standards themselves are incompatible, local governments have more flexibility to balance policies in the legislative context. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 81 Or LUBA 683 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government need not interpret the term "protect" the same way in the context of a statewide planning goal that does not protect a specific, unique natural resource or specific recreation area that it does in the context of a goal that does protect those things, even where the definitions of "protect" in the latter goal and in the local government's comprehensive plan are identical. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 81 Or LUBA 490 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan provision allows "minor navigational improvements" in a particular zone, which it defines as "alterations necessary to provide water access to existing or permitted uses in conservation management units," an interpretation of that provision as not requiring that the use for which the alteration is needed and the alteration itself be located in the same zone is consistent with the provision's express language; however, an interpretation of that provision as allowing alterations that are needed for a use that is not located in a "conservation management unit" is inconsistent the provision's express language. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan management objective allows "a limited boat dock for transient recreation craft tie-up" in a particular zone, and the uses and activities matrix for the zone allows "docks" without limitation, but a different comprehensive plan provision states that uses and activities matrices are "subordinate" to management objectives and that allowed uses and activities must be "consistent" with the management objectives, a local government errs by allowing nonlimited boat docks in the zone. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan provisions provide, using mandatory language, that certain resource plan and zoning designations shall be used to conserve or protect fish and wildlife habitat from conflicting uses and that land use proposals that have undesirable impacts on those resources shall be reviewed during the plan and zone amendment processes, a local governing body errs in interpreting those provisions to conclude that it may apply nonresource plan and zoning designations to property mapped as fish and wildlife habitat and that any impacts may be evaluated and, if necessary, mitigated during subsequent review of development proposals. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 338 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Nothing in Goal 2 specifies that an agreement between a county and city to manage land within a UGB is incorporated by law into the local governments' comprehensive plans or codes, or mandates that the local governments take action to do so, and a mere statement in the county code or comprehensive plan that the agreement governs certain procedures is not sufficient to demonstrate that the latter is a part of the former. City of Albany v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 104 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local code provision provides that a refinement plan for property within a master plan area must be consistent with the master plan; where the master plan contains an executive summary, a listing of principles, a discussion section after each principle heading, other sections discussing site features and infrastructure strategy, a variety of graphics, and several other exhibits and attachments; where another local code provision provides that the intent of the master plan is to identify the "goals and policies" for development within the master plan area, and where other local code provisions suggest that "goals" and "policies" are different things, a governing body errs in concluding that merely furthering the principles is sufficient to establish consistency with the master plan and in failing to address provisions of the master plan dictating the strategies that development is required to use in order to actualize the principles—that is, in concluding that a refinement plan need only be consistent with the principles as summarized by their headings. Mumper v. City of Salem, 81 Or LUBA 152 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan and local code provisions provide that the comprehensive plan may be amended only when "[t]here is a demonstrated public need for the change," and where another comprehensive plan provision states that the desired land use pattern in the urban growth boundary includes "[n]eighborhoods with a mix of uses, diversity of housing types, pedestrian scale, a defined center and shared public areas," the governing body does not err in concluding that that there is a "public need" to redesignate the subject property to High Density Residential (HDR) because the property is in a neighborhood of low- and medium-density housing and because introducing HDR zoning into the area will allow higher-density housing in a new location within the jurisdiction and potentially increase housing supply and diversity, even where the jurisdiction's acknowledged Buildable Lands Inventory and other, more recent data indicate that there is no deficit of HDR land in the jurisdiction. Carson Property LUBA Appeal, Inc. v. City of Corvallis, 81 Or LUBA 175 (2020).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. When comprehensive plan policies are not mandatory approval standards for a land use application, but the application must be evaluated for consistency with applicable plan policies, the evaluation may require some weighing and balancing of competing policy directions embodied in the applicable plan provisions. The local government's evaluation, weighing and balancing of competing interests as well as ambiguous comprehensive plan provisions are entitled to a deferential standard of review under ORS 197.829(1)(a)–(c) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Yamhill Creek Solar, LLC v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 245 (2018).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where every residential plan map designation criterion is written so that it applies to an "area," and the term "area" is not defined and application of the criteria can produce dramatically different results depending on the meaning of "area," remand is required for the decision maker to explain its interpretation of the term "area." Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the city code initially requires the city to choose from low density residential, medium density residential and high density residential plan map designations based on which designation's criteria "clearly appl[y]" or "predominate," that determination is sufficiently ambiguous and subjective that remand is required whether the decision maker does not explain its understanding of what it means to "clearly appl[y]" or "predominate." Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where two of three different residential plan map designation criteria require proximity to a "transit transfer station," but the code does not define the term "transit transfer station," and the decision applies those criteria without adopting interpretive findings to explain the decision maker's understanding of the meaning of the term "transit transfer station," remand is required. Meisenheimer v. City of Springfield, 77 Or LUBA 96 (2018).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy requiring that city parks be protected against incompatible uses, to mean that city parks will be protected against approval of incompatible uses on adjoining lands, not that the city is also precluded from rezoning city parks to allow non-park uses of park lands, where the city council's narrower interpretation is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose and policy underlying the plan policy. Crowley v. City of Hood River, 77 Or LUBA 117 (2018).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where petitioners argue the city's ordinance adopting legislative text amendments to the city's zoning ordinances is inconsistent with applicable city comprehensive plan and subordinate plans, but where the city adopted findings addressing most of the cited comprehensive plan goals and policies, petitioners must do more than simply disagree with the city's conclusions. Given the generally worded language of most of the goals and policies at issue, and the leeway a governing body has in balancing and weighing consistency of a zoning text amendment with a variety of competing policy objectives, petitioners must demonstrate that the city council failed to meaningfully consider a reasonably specific and pertinent comprehensive goal or policy to state a basis for remand or reversal. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although proposed development of a new bridge will cost close to the total amount that the region expects to receive in funding from all sources over the next 20 years, and although there is no evidence that full funding can be expected, a decision to approve comprehensive plan amendments to facilitate the bridge does not necessarily violate an Oregon Highway Plan (OHP) policy that requires state and local government to approve major improvements to state highway facilities in local comprehensive plans and transportation system plans only if the improvements "would be a cost-effective means to achieve the objective," because the OHP policy is not a mandatory criterion, but an evaluation factor the Oregon Department of Transportation will use in their evaluation of a project for inclusion in the OHP. Deumling v. City of Salem, 76 Or LUBA 99 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A finding that the mixed-use development that might be developed under a new plan map designation will be "near" a transit corridor is sufficient to demonstrate compliance with a plan policy to focus mixed-use development "along" transit corridors, where the city's plan and land use regulations do not define either term and the term "along" is sufficiently subjective that the city's implicit interpretation and application of the policy is not implausible under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 249, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 75 Or LUBA 38 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A County Court's interpretation of a comprehensive plan residential density standard that limits residential density in deer winter range to one dwelling unit per 160 acres to only consider nonfarm dwellings when computing density is not affirmable under ORS 197.829(1)(a) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 261, 243 P3d 776 (2010), where there is no textual support in the wildlife density standard itself for only counting nonfarm dwellings in computing density and the comprehensive plan policies the density limit was adopted to implement also do not support distinguishing between farm and nonfarm dwellings in computing density. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 75 Or LUBA 186 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy to "maintain present residential density levels in established neighborhoods" has nothing to do with the number of days a residence is occupied. Therefore, a zoning ordinance amendment that favors year-round domicile and long-term rental use of residences, as opposed to short term vacation rental use, does not violate the residential density policy. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city council's decision to amend its zoning ordinance to treat transient occupancy vacation rental use of residences differently from the use of the same residences as second homes, long-term rentals or domiciles is not inconsistent with comprehensive plan policy to "preserve and maintain the predominately residential character of [the city] through appropriate zoning and land use development regulations," as the city interprets the policy. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy concerning sites "developed as a golf course" to apply to sites adjoining a fairway that were landscaped and used as a playable area in 2001 when the policy was adopted, because the interpretation is not inconsistent with the text of the policy. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where LUBA affirms a local decision-maker's interpretation and conclusion regarding the applicability of a comprehensive plan policy, no purpose would be served by addressing other challenges to alternative bases for local government's decision to deny the application. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the text of a county comprehensive plan policy limits redevelopment of areas developed as golf courses or designated open space or common area within a resort, but includes no language prohibiting redevelopment of other areas within the resort, interpreting the policy to implicitly prohibit new residential development anywhere within the resort would impermissibly insert what has been omitted pursuant to ORS 174.010, and may not survive even the deferential review required under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan's text limits application of a Rural Industrial plan map designation to three exception areas that were built or committed to rural industrial use before the county enacted planning and zoning, the county must first amend the comprehensive plan text to expand the eligible areas for the Rural Industrial plan map designation before applying that designation to properties that are not within the three exception areas. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 441 (2017).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan goal of "protecting and maintaining neighborhoods" is not necessarily violated by a development that will displace five existing houses. A city commission interpretation that the proposal complies with the goal, notwithstanding the loss of the five houses, so long as the proposal will otherwise protect and maintain the nearby neighborhood, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 176 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan policy calls on the city to "[m]aintain the existing residential housing stock in established older neighborhoods by maintaining existing Comprehensive Plan and zoning designations where appropriate," and the city commission adopts a number of reasons why it believes maintaining existing planning and zoning designations is "not appropriate," a petitioner must do more than set out reasons why he thinks maintaining the existing planning and zoning is appropriate without directly challenging the city commission's reasoning. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 176 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan policy requires that a city "ensure that potential loss of affordable housing is replaced" when changing comprehensive plan and zoning map designations, city findings that city-wide efforts to encourage affordable housing will be sufficient to make up for the loss of five dwellings through construction of a medical center made possible under new comprehensive plan and zoning map designations are sufficient to demonstrate the policy will not be violated. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 176 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a petitioner's challenge that a city's findings fail to demonstrate that allowing higher density residential development in an existing area of low density residential development, instead of in areas already planned for dense development, is consistent with a comprehensive plan policy encouraging compact development, where the petitioner fails to challenge the city council's interpretation of the policy as encouraging compact development in all areas of the city, not just in areas most suitable for high density development. Kine v. City of Bend, 74 Or LUBA 403 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city council's findings that a site has "good access" to an arterial, because it is within a one-third-mile drive from an arterial and has direct pedestrian and bicycle access to the arterial, are sufficient to establish consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring "good access to an arterial," particularly given the subjective nature of the policy. Kine v. City of Bend, 74 Or LUBA 403 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy requiring that medium density residential development be located "near commercial services and employment" as being satisfied by a location near some commercial services and employment, but not necessarily a comprehensive range of commercial services and employment, is plausible and not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Kine v. City of Bend, 74 Or LUBA 403 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. How to determine whether a proposed zoning diagram is consistent with the comprehensive plan, based on trying to match surveyed lines to features depicted on the plan map, is a mixed question of law and fact, involving interpretation of the comprehensive plan map. LUBA owes no deference to a hearings officer's interpretation of the comprehensive plan map, or the interpretative exercise of selecting which plan map features to match with surveyed lines. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides the county to consider "[a]vailability of transit" and provides that "land within walking distance (approximately one-quarter mile) of a transit stop should be zoned for smaller lots," a hearings officer errs in concluding that land within approximately one-quarter mile of a transit stop is not within "walking distance" because sidewalks are not present. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the comprehensive plan sets out seven factors that "guide the determination of the most appropriate zone," a hearings officer errs in weighing some of the factors as less important than other factors without any support for that weighting in the express language of the factors or other parts of the comprehensive plan. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides the county to consider "proximity to jobs, shopping, and cultural activities" and guides that areas in proximity to jobs, shopping and cultural activities should be considered for smaller lots, a hearings officer errs in concluding that land that is proximate to jobs and shopping should not be zoned for smaller lots based on the hearings officer's negative assumptions about the quality of the jobs and shopping. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where one of seven factors that the comprehensive plan describes as "guid[ing] the determination of the most appropriate zone" guides that areas that have historically developed on large lots should "remain zoned consistent with the existing development pattern," and the hearings officer interprets the "existing development pattern" to be synonymous with the existing zoning, remand is required in order for the hearings officer to explain why a change from 10,000-square-foot lots to 8,500-square-foot lots in an area with some 8,500-square-foot lots is not "consistent with the existing development pattern." Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the comprehensive plan sets out seven factors that "guide the determination of the most appropriate zone," and the factors are not competing policies and do not work at cross purposes, a hearings officer errs in weighting some of the factors as less important than other factors without any support for that weighting in the express language of the factors or other parts of the comprehensive plan. Lennar Northwest, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 240 (2016).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the city code requires that a development's sewer facilities must be consistent with the sewer master plan and the sewer master plan calls for an upgraded 15-inch sewer line in a street that adjoins the development, city findings that explain a temporary cross-basin connection to provide sewer service to the development is acceptable because sewer flows from the development are inadequate to result in a properly functioning 15-inch sewer line, and the development approval is conditioned on the development connecting to the adjacent 15-inch sewer line when it becomes available in the future, are adequate to explain why the temporary cross-basin connection is not inconsistent with the code and sewer master plan. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 72 Or LUBA 25 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A general water master plan policy that "the timing of future system improvements will be triggered by specific developments and increase in system demands" need not be interpreted to require that a proposal for a 180-unit residential development must fund construction of the two-million-gallon, $8.7-million reservoir that is identified as the ultimate solution to an existing water pressure problem. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 72 Or LUBA 25 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the relevant planning documents submitted to comply with the Goal 5 administrative rule requirement for an inventory of significant mineral and aggregate resource sites are all ambiguous, and none of those documents clearly states that they are an inventory of significant mineral and aggregate resource sites, a board of county commissioners' interpretation that an inventory that was submitted for acknowledgment by LCDC showed both "significant" mineral and aggregate sites and mineral and aggregate sites for which there was not enough information to complete Goal 5 planning is not "inconsistent with the express language of the comprehensive plan," and therefore is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Where the other bases that would also authorize LUBA to reverse the interpretation set out in ORS 197.829(1)(b), (c), and (d) also do not apply, LUBA must affirm the interpretation. Delta Property Company, LLC v. Lane County, 72 Or LUBA 250 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance regulation that allows fill if it will not increase the elevation of land is not necessarily inconsistent with a comprehensive plan provision that bans fill altogether, where fill only qualifies as fill, as defined in the comprehensive plan, if the fill will raise the elevation of land. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a potentially dispositive issue under a zoning code requirement that development be served by public facilities is whether a private septic system qualifies as "public facilities," LUBA will reject arguments in respondent's brief that the city council relied on a comprehensive plan definition of "public facilities" that might be broad enough to include private septic systems as public facilities, where nothing in the city council's decision suggests the city council relied on the comprehensive plan definition. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. For an implied interpretation of a local standard to be adequate for review, the findings embodying the interpretation must carry one possible meaning of the ambiguous language in the standard, and an easily inferred explanation of that meaning. A finding that proposed rezoning to higher density residential use is consistent with a plan policy that requires "good access" to an arterial because the property is located near a minor arterial does not embody an implied interpretation adequate for review to the effect that "good access" is satisfied by physical proximity of the property to the arterial, regardless of the quality of access to that arterial. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A 1,200 average daily traffic standard for local streets is not a hard and fast standard where other comprehensive plan language makes it clear that level of traffic on a local street is merely "desirable" and a number of other factors are considered in determining whether to classify a street as a "local" street. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Comprehensive plan descriptions of plan map designations are not properly applied as mandatory permit approval criteria. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a local government's interpretation of the provisions of its comprehensive plan that implement Goal 17 to be as protective as, but not more protective than, Goal 17, where the text of the comprehensive plan provisions make clear that the local government did not intend to regulate coastal shorelands more protectively than Goal 17. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 68 Or LUBA 233 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA is required under ORS 197.829(1) to affirm a local government's interpretation of a provision of its comprehensive plan that identifies the location of the coastal shorelands boundary as "the top of the seacliff along the seacliff shoreline" as a "general guide as to the location of the [boundary]" rather than a specific minimum elevation, where the interpretation is not inconsistent with the express language of the provision or the comprehensive plan map, and is plausible. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 68 Or LUBA 233 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Goal 17 provides in part that coastal shorelands must include "adjacent areas of geologic instability where the geologic instability is related to or will impact a coastal water body[.]" In order to be consistent with Goal 17, a cliff erosion geologic hazard analysis that is relied on to determine the location of the coastal shorelands boundary must consider geologic instability from all causes of cliff erosion where the cliff erosion could impact the ocean. A geologic hazard analysis that does not analyze "adjacent areas of geologic instability" from causes of erosion other than waves hitting the shore cannot be relied on to locate the boundary consistent with Goal 17. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 68 Or LUBA 233 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Goal 17 requires in part that coastal shorelands must include "lands within 100 feet of the ocean shore[.]" A county decision that locates the coastal shorelands boundary at the top of the beach and at the bottom or mid-point of shorefront cliffs is inconsistent with Goal 17, because such locations are arguably where the "ocean shore," as defined in ORS 390.605(2), ends and that interpretation gives little or no depth to the coastal shorelands boundary beyond the "ocean shore" in some places. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 68 Or LUBA 233 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A Metro regional trail that is 22 miles long and includes a multi-use pathway, trailheads, parking, restrooms, shelters, picnic areas, interpretative and educational facilities etc. can constitute a "park" that is prohibited in regionally significant industrial areas, where the proposed trail falls within the broad definition of "park" as defined in the Metro Code, and treating the regional trail as a "park" is consistent with Metro Framework Plan provisions intended to protect regionally significant industrial areas from public amenities intended to serve persons other than workers or residents in the industrial area. Terra Hydr Inc. v. City of Tualatin, 68 Or LUBA 279 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A Metro regional trail that is 22 miles long, connects rivers, parks and natural areas, and includes a number of recreational and educational facilities, is most accurately characterized as a "park" for purposes of a Metro Plan prohibition on parks in regionally significant industrial areas, rather than a transportation facility or "public facility" that is allowed in industrial areas, where the regional trail is not intended to provide transportation for the residents and workers of the industrial area, but is primarily a community recreational amenity. Terra Hydr Inc. v. City of Tualatin, 68 Or LUBA 279 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Plan goals requiring that development be "compatible" and seek to "protect" nearby neighborhoods are somewhat subjective. Where a local government recognizes that greater proposed building height and mass could result in incompatibility and (1) reduces the proposed building height, (2) requires that increased building heights be stepped down next to adjoining residential neighborhoods, (3) requires enhanced design review, and (4) imposes additional minimum setbacks, LUBA will not second guess the city regarding the adequacy of those measure to protect nearby neighborhoods so as to achieve compatibility. Lowery v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 339 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will reject petitioner's challenge to a plan map amendment for a proposal that would result in taller building heights, based on a plan compatibility policy, where the proposal is subject to conflicting plan policies, only one of which supports petitioner's position opposing the increased building height on compatibility grounds, and petitioner fails to challenge the local governments findings balancing those polities to find that the increase building heights equally or betters supports the policies viewed as a whole. Lowery v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 339 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In determining whether a comprehensive plan requirement applies directly to an application for permit approval, a local government is performing a function quite similar to the function the city was performing in Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), i.e., whether a comprehensive plan requirement is "applicable." Under Siporen a local government's interpretations of its comprehensive plan to determine which plan requirements are applicable as individual permit approval criteria are entitled to deference so long as its interpretations are "plausible." If the city's interpretation is plausible, LUBA must defer, even if LUBA believes there is a better interpretation. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where one plan strategy directs that lands subject to flooding be designated "Floodplain" and the following plan strategy directs that no permanent structures may be erected in lands subject to flooding unless the structure complies with the "Floodplain" criteria, a local governing body's interpretation of those plan strategies to require application of the "Floodplain" criteria only in areas that have already been designated "Floodplain" runs afoul of ORS 174.010 by failing to "give effect" to the second strategy and by "inserting what has been omitted" in the second strategy by inserting a requirement that the lands subject to flooding must have been zoned "Floodplain." Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 68 Or LUBA 459 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. If a governing body intended that its land use regulations fully implement its comprehensive plan, so that the plan could never operate as a source of permit approval standards, it presumably would not have adopted a conditional use permit criterion that requires conditional uses "shall be consistent with the comprehensive plan." Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan goals and policies are directed at structures, development, floodplains and flood hazard areas, and the local governing body does not specifically address the text of those goals and policies in concluding that they do not apply and approving a building to be constructed in the floodplain, remand is required so that the governing body can explain why the text of those goals and policies supports its position that they do not apply. Friends of the Hood River Waterfront v. City of Hood River, 67 Or LUBA 179 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance standard that requires a city to apply to annexed properties the city zone that "most closely approximates" the "standards," "density," and "uses" in the existing county zone requires a three-pronged inquiry. The city's choice of a zone will be affirmed where standards in the zone the city applied and the standards in the zone petitioners believe should have been applied are identical, the density in the zone applied by the city is closer to the county zone, and the two zones are equally approximate for 33 of the uses allowed in the county zone and the zone favored by petitioners more closely approximates 13 uses. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 67 Or LUBA 374 (2013).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although interpreting a comprehensive plan policy that requires permit applicants to "provide pedestrian connections with adjacent neighborhoods" to require pedestrian connections with nearby neighborhoods that do not border the property for which permit approval is sought may be "plausible," the city council's less expansive interpretation to require connections only with adjacent neighborhoods that border the proposed development is also "plausible" and therefore not reversible under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of comprehensive plan policies that "encourage" alternative energy sources, to allow the county to adopt restrictions on development of wind energy facilities to protect other uses, as long as such restrictions do not preclude the siting of wind energy facilities, because the interpretation is consistent with the text of the comprehensive plan policies. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 265 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the mandatory Goals and Policies section of a comprehensive plan call for multi-family housing to be located in the city's residential zones and the Goals and Policies say nothing about locating multi-family housing in the city's commercial zone, amending the zoning ordinance to delete multi-family housing as a permitted use in the city's commercial zone is not inconsistent with the comprehensive plan. Cassidy v. City of Glendale, 66 Or LUBA 314 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Text of an acknowledged Resource Protection Program may be unambiguous when read in isolation but may be ambiguous when read in context with the ESEE Consequences Determination. Mark Latham Excavation Inc. v. Deschutes County, 65 Or LUBA 32 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Representations by a former owner that it only intended to mine 25 acres of an 80-acre site are insufficient legislative history to establish that the acknowledged Resource Protection Program for the site limits mining to 25 acres, where the programs for other sites expressly limited mining geographically but the program for the 80-acre site zoned all 80 acres for mining and imposed no express geographical limits. Mark Latham Excavation Inc. v. Deschutes County, 65 Or LUBA 32 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city planning commission interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy does not apply to a planned unit development application for a cell tower is correct where the text of the policy directs the city to implement one of several means of protecting open space, including adopting planned unit development ordinances, and does not contain any language that suggests that it is intended to apply on a case-by-case basis to individual applications for planned unit development approval that are processed under the city's adopted planned unit development ordinances. Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city planning commission interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy does not apply to a planned unit development application to site a cell tower is not correct, where (1) the text of the policy provides specific and mandatory direction that public facilities "be designed and located" to "preserve[] and enhance" desirable features of the area, (2) the preamble to the applicable comprehensive plan policy refers to "daily decisions" being guided by "site planning," and (3) there is no similar provision in the city's development code that requires the city to consider whether the design and location of a public facility "preserve[s] and enhance[s] desirable features of the area." Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy implementing Statewide Planning Goal 3, which states that the county's policy is to "continue to preserve" for farm use lands with agricultural soils, does not impliedly preclude the county from adopting a text amendment that authorizes in the EFU zone one of the non-farm uses allowed on EFU land under ORS 215.283(2). Authorizing on EFU land non-farm uses listed in ORS 215.283(2) is consistent with Goal 3 as a matter of law. Waste Not of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 65 Or LUBA 142 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although city governing body interpretations are entitled to considerable deference under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010), where there is no reviewable express or implied interpretation, LUBA has nothing to defer to. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Sub-area plan language describing as a "buffer" the neighborhood that includes property proposed for rezoning from a high density residential to a higher density residential zone need not be interpreted to limit density to no more than the median density between the two zones. A planning commission does not err in concluding that the proposed rezone is consistent with the "buffer" description based on other density, height and design restrictions. Conte v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 326 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. That a sub-area comprehensive plan map designates an area as "Medium and High Density" does not imply an intent to limit density below the maximum density otherwise allowed under the area's general comprehensive plan map designation and zoning. Conte v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 326 (2012).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city does not err by requiring that an applicant for development approval dedicate and construct a road extension through the area proposed for development where the transportation system plan shows the road extension. It does not matter that the extension shown on the transportation system plan is conceptual. Reeves v. City of Wilsonville, 62 Or LUBA 142 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a county governing body's interpretation that an application to change the comprehensive plan map designation for property to Rural Use is not by itself a request for a right to develop more than one residence on the property and therefore need not be concurrently accompanied by a RU zone change application, when that interpretation is consistent with the express language of the provision. City of Jacksonville v. Jackson County, 62 Or LUBA 439 (2011).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council's implicit interpretation of a comprehensive plan requirement that amendments affecting less than five "separately owned tax lots" be processed as a minor plan amendment to mean lots or parcels owned by different persons, and reject petitioner's contrary interpretation that "separately owned" means lots or parcels potentially conveyable to different persons, where petitioner does not challenge the city council's interpretation or explain why it is reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Smith v. City of Salem, 61 Or LUBA 87 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan provision prohibiting application of a Rural Residential plan designation to land that is currently designated farm or forest "unless an exception to the applicable Goal 3 or 4 is justified" could be interpreted such that the prohibition does not apply to nonresource land that is not subject to either goal. However, the stronger textual reading is that the qualifier "applicable" simply reflects that the subject property is currently designated under either Goal 3 or Goal 4, whichever is applicable, and an exception to the applicable goal is required in order to redesignate the property to Rural Residential. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Context includes previous versions of an ordinance. Where the previous comprehensive plan expressly permitted nonresource land to be designated Rural Residential, but subsequent plan amendments (1) eliminated that language and replaced it with language restricting the Rural Residential designation to lands subject to an exception to Goals 3 or 4, and (2) adopted a Rural Use designation limited to nonresource lands that do not require an exception, that context suggests that the county intended to restrict the Rural Residential designation to resource lands which require a goal exception, and exclusively employ the Rural Use designation for nonresource lands that do not require a goal exception. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a county's Rural Residential plan designation implements OAR 660-004-0040, which applies exclusively to rural residential areas that are subject to Goal 3 or 4 exceptions, and expressly does not apply to nonresource lands not subject to those goals, it is reasonable to presume that the Rural Residential designation also applies exclusively to resource lands for which a Goal 3 or 4 exception is taken, and is not intended to apply to nonresource lands. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. As part of a text and context analysis, LUBA may consider any local legislative history in the record for purposes of understanding the intent in adopting the text and context being considered. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will reverse a governing body's interpretation of an ambiguous plan provision, the text of which can be read to allow nonresource lands to be redesignated Rural Residential, where that interpretation is inconsistent with the text, context, purpose and underlying policy of the plan provision, and contrary to an administrative rule that the plan provision implements. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 60 Or LUBA 392 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Because a comprehensive plan is made up of both text and maps, LUBA's deferential standard of review set out at ORS 197.829(1) applies to local government interpretations of plan maps as well as local government interpretations of plan text. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 60 Or LUBA 415 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan includes large scale maps or tax lot specific text those maps or text might provide context that would guide or limit a local government's interpretation of a small scale comprehensive plan estuary map that is not tax lot specific. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 60 Or LUBA 415 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a composite map that is produced by enlarging a small scale comprehensive plan estuary map and applying it to a larger scale tax lot specific map has a fairly significant margin of error, it is plausible to interpret the small scale comprehensive plan estuary map to (1) include an entire small tax lot in a natural management unit, (2) exclude the entire small tax lot in a natural management unit or (3) place the small tax lot partially in a natural management unit and partially in a conservation management unit. In that circumstance, no further explanation is required for the local government's choice among the three plausible interpretations. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 60 Or LUBA 415 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan generally describes the resources that were to be protected by designating a natural estuary management unit on a small scale comprehensive plan map in 1981, a petitioner fails to show the local government's failure to interpret the comprehensive plan to include a small tax lot in the natural management unit is inconsistent with the "purpose" or "underlying" policy of the plan, within the meaning of ORS 197.829(1)(b) and (c), where, under the local government's interpretation, the natural estuary management unit still includes all of the resources that the comprehensive plan identified as justifying the natural estuary management unit in 1981. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 60 Or LUBA 415 (2010).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan in one instance says the city's level of service standard applies to zone changes, but does not state that the standard applies exclusively to zone changes, and in another instance the comprehensive plan states that the level of service standard applies when changing land use designations and to development, the comprehensive plan text does not support the city's ultimate interpretation that the level of service standard applies only to zone changes. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan policy calls for a local government to "review parking requirements for residential development with the purpose of reducing the required number of spaces per unit," a legislative decision that amends parking space requirements for multiple family dwellings to increase the required number of parking spaces must be remanded so that the local government can adopt findings that explain how that legislative decision is consistent with the comprehensive plan policy. Home Builders Association v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 116 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that requires a local government to "review local zoning and development regulations periodically to remove barriers to higher density housing and to make provision for a full range of housing options" does not prohibit the local government from adopting maximum building height limits and off-street parking requirements that might prove to be a barrier to higher density housing or achieving a full range of housing options. The comprehensive plan policy simply requires that the local government assess and correct, on a periodic basis, any land use regulations that prove to be a barrier to housing density or providing a full range of housing options. Home Builders Association v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 116 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a land use regulation amendment would inevitably lead to increased impervious surfaces, it is possible that LUBA would remand the amendment so that the enacting local government could adopt findings to explain why such an amendment is consistent with a plan policy that requires that the local government "include measures in local land development regulations that minimize the amount of impervious surface in new development." However, where a petitioner at LUBA simply assumes that lower maximum building heights and increased off-street parking requirements will lead to more impervious surfaces, petitioner fails to set out a basis for reversal or remand. Home Builders Association v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 116 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where no new roads or intersections are proposed as part of a partition, a hearings officer errs in interpreting a comprehensive plan policy that requires development to be served by adequate roadway facilities to require a showing of compliance with local ordinance criteria and road design standards that apply only to new roads and intersections. Pelz v. Clackamas County, 59 Or LUBA 219 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A Metro regional plan requirement that a local government's comprehensive plan map designations be "derived from the general boundaries" on Metro's less detailed maps gives the local government some flexibility in locating the boundaries on its comprehensive plan map. But where Metro's maps designate 308 acres for Industrial use, that flexibility does not allow a local government to designate a significant number of those 308 acres for non-industrial uses. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A Metro regional plan provision that requires the Metro Chief Operating Office to conform Metro's maps to the comprehensive plan mapping that local governments adopt after Metro adds land to the urban growth boundary suggests that local governments have some authority to deviate from Metro's map designations for the property that is added to the urban growth boundary when they first applies their comprehensive plan map to that property. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A Metro decision to amend the urban growth boundary to include 308 acres for Industrial development that was based on an assumption that only 120 acres of the 308 acres would be developed for Industrial use likely would provide a basis for the local government to plan all but 120 acres of the 308 acres for non-industrial uses. But where the 120 acres the local government designates for industrial uses include acres that were already within the UGB, the local government's comprehensive plan mapping is inconsistent with Metro's map designation for the 308 acres. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where Metro has designated 308 acres for industrial development, a city decision to plan only 120 of those acres for industrial development based on a finding that Metro only intended 120 acres to be developed industrially must be remanded where the record does not include substantial evidence that Metro only intended 120 of the 308 acres to be developed industrially. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. An apparent conflict between regional plan provisions that (1) direct local governments to adopt comprehensive plan maps for property added to the urban growth boundary that are consistent with Metro's maps and (2) direct that Metro conform its maps to the comprehensive plan maps that are adopted by local governments following urban growth boundary amendments could be explained by other regional plan provisions that require local governments to identify lands that are undevelopable or are to be protected from development pursuant to environmental protection mandates. The regional plan directive that Metro conform its maps to the comprehensive plan maps that are adopted by local governments following UGB amendments could be to ensure that Metro's maps identify lands that are undevelopable or are to be protected from development. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. An apparent conflict between regional plan provisions that (1) direct local governments to adopt comprehensive plan maps for property added to the urban growth boundary that are consistent with Metro's maps and (2) direct that Metro conform its maps to the comprehensive plan maps that are adopted by local governments following urban growth boundary amendments could be explained if the urban growth boundary amendment itself expressly envisioned that some of the land Metro designated for industrial use would in fact not be put to industrial use. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. An apparent conflict between regional plan provisions that (1) direct local governments to adopt comprehensive plan maps for property added to the urban growth boundary that are consistent with Metro's maps and (2) direct that Metro conform its maps to the comprehensive plan maps that are adopted by local governments following urban growth boundary amendments might be avoided if the evidentiary record demonstrates that land that Metro designated for industrial use at the time of the urban growth boundary amendment is no longer needed to ensure a 20-year regional supply of industrial land. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 59 Or LUBA 388 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city governing body does not err in interpreting comprehensive plan policies that govern "development" to be inapplicable to a proposal to annex and extend sewer service to fully developed property. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county does not err in interpreting a comprehensive plan policy requiring that airports be compatible with surrounding uses to be satisfied by incorporated findings addressing conditional use permit standards that, the county found, ensure that the airport is compatible with surrounding uses. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy that requires that development shall comply with "applicable" Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) standards to not require that the applicant demonstrate that a proposed personal use airport will comply with a DEQ noise program that DEQ has suspended. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A statement in a city's comprehensive plan that purports to describe the intent of a regional government code requirement is not itself a legal requirement of any kind. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city does not err by interpreting a comprehensive plan policy that requires the city to "annex lands to the city through a process that considers the effects on public services" to allow it to defer such consideration to an ongoing but unfinished concept planning process where: (1) the concept plan will precede actual urbanization of the annexed areas, (2) the plan will provide the basis for planning and zoning of annexed areas for urban development, and (3) the concept plan will determine how public facilities are extended to annexed areas as they urbanize. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will remand a decision redesignating non-resource land to rural residential, where it is unclear whether the comprehensive plan limits the rural residential plan designation to lands for which an exception to resource goals is taken, the plan includes a different designation, Rural Use, that is specifically intended for nonresource lands, and the county's findings do not address the issue or provide an interpretation of the relevant plan provisions. Lofgren v. Jackson County, 55 Or LUBA 126 (2007).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that directs a county to "adopt large lot zoning to protect rural, agricultural and forest areas," does not apply directly to an application to subdivide rural agricultural land. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that uses the word "should" is generally not a mandatory approval criterion. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 54 Or LUBA 54 (2007).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Even where a comprehensive plan provision might not constitute an independently applicable mandatory approval criterion for a rezoning proposal, it may nonetheless represent a relevant and necessary consideration that must be reviewed and balanced with other relevant plan provisions pursuant to ordinances that require that the proposed rezoning be consistent with applicable plan provisions. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that expresses a clear policy preference that general office uses buffer commercial and residential uses in a specific area is a policy that must be considered and balanced with other applicable policies in rezoning property in that area that is (1) zoned and developed for general office uses and (2) acts as a buffer between commercial and residential-zoned and developed areas. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that only a portion of a coastal shorelands zone is designated as "suitable for water-dependent uses" and therefore subject to a policy that limits non-water-dependent development, where the zone refers to a comprehensive map that depicts only a portion of the zone as being "especially suited for water-dependent uses" and read in context it is clear that the policy is not intended to apply throughout the zone. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 500 (2006).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a proposed plan amendment, zone change and goal exception would result in a split-zoned parcel with the northern portion planned and zoned for residential use and the southern portion planned and zoned for resource use, and a policy in the county's comprehensive plan at least arguably permits land divisions along boundaries separating exception areas from resource lands, and such a division would result in lots smaller than the minimum lot size permitted by the county's acknowledged Goal 14 exception, the county must adopt Goal 14 findings or, if necessary, adopt a specific exception to Goal 14. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 51 Or LUBA 730 (2006).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where it is possible to interpret a development code provision to require consideration of more facilities and services than a similar comprehensive plan policy and to require that those facilities and services be already available at the time of annexation, but a local government implicitly interprets the development code policy simply to implement the comprehensive plan policy and to be coextensive with the plan policy, LUBA will defer to that interpretation where there are other development code provisions that support that limited interpretation. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county errs in construing a comprehensive plan finding that "lands producing less than eighty cubic feet per acre [cf/ac/yr] per year are generally not used for commercial uses" to define a threshold of 80 cf/ac/yr for "forest lands" protected by Goal 4, where the text and context indicate that the finding is a statement of historical fact not a minimum threshold, and the county's interpretation is undercut by the fact that the county's Goal 4 plan designations include lands capable of producing 85 cf/ac/yr as prime timberlands, and lands capable of producing considerably less than 80 cf/ac/yr as nonprime timberlands. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 50 Or LUBA 167 (2005).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the drawings that accompany an access management plan are unclear, LUBA will assume that the more detailed construction plans that will be necessary to construct proposed improvements will call for improvements that are consistent with applicable design standards, where there is nothing in the record that suggests otherwise. Rhodes v. City of Talent, 50 Or LUBA 415 (2005).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan describes the rural industrial plan designation as appropriate for areas where industrial uses are located in close proximity to a natural resource, the county does not err in allowing the expansion of an existing industrial use where the code provisions implementing that designation provide for uses that do not require close proximity to a natural resource and strict application of the plan provision would essentially eviscerate the application of another plan policy that allows limited exceptions for modest expansions of existing industrial uses. Doob v. Josephine County, 49 Or LUBA 113 (2005).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A detailed water quality resources report that discusses the effects of development on groundwater is sufficient to satisfy a comprehensive plan policy that requires a "Development Impact Statement" addressing the "effect on the groundwater supply." Dinges v. City of Oregon City, 49 Or LUBA 376 (2005).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. The statutory requirement that land use decisions be consistent with acknowledged comprehensive plans does not mean that all parts of the comprehensive plan necessarily are approval standards, or that comprehensive plan provisions that can operate as approval standards are necessarily relevant to all quasi-judicial land use permit applications. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Even if a comprehensive plan provision is a relevant standard for a quasi-judicial land use permit application, it may simply be a relevant consideration that must be considered with other relevant considerations, rather than a mandatory approval criterion that must separately be satisfied along with other mandatory approval criteria. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In determining whether particular comprehensive plan goals and policies are relevant approval criteria for a quasi-judicial land use permit application, it is appropriate to consider first whether the comprehensive plan itself assigns a particular role to those goals and policies. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where it is not clear from the comprehensive plan map whether the plan designation governing the subject property is a base or an overlay plan designation, LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that the plan designation is an overlay designation, where the comprehensive plan text does not list or describe the designation as a base plan designation. Staus v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Language in the notice of a plan amendment that can be read to say that the plan designation of a parcel was changed from General Industrial to Light Industrial is not a basis to conclude at a later date that the parcel is designated Light Industrial rather than General Industrial, where the plan amendment itself does not change property's plan designation to Light Industrial. Status v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will exercise its discretion under ORS 197.829(2) to interpret a comprehensive plan policy governing commercial zones to be inapplicable to a zone change to an industrial zone, notwithstanding that the proposed use is a commercial use, where the local government interpreted several similar plan policies to be inapplicable, and the context of the plan policy indicates that commercial uses in industrial zones are governed by industrial, not commercial, plan policies. Staus v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan map and a sub-area plan map do not conflict in depicting the plan designation of a particular property, where the comprehensive plan map is at a scale of one inch to 8,000 feet, is not property-specific, and does not clearly indicate whether the plan designation of the property is commercial or residential, while the sub-area plan map is large-scale, property-specific, and clearly depicts the property as commercial. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretations that (1) the transportation system plan (TSP) is part of the city's comprehensive plan, (2) projects described in the TSP supersede transportation projects described in the comprehensive plan, and (3) extension of a different street than contemplated in the TSP is consistent with TSP language intended to allow the city flexibility in choosing which street to extend, are not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Comrie v. City of Pendleton, 47 Or LUBA 38 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Even if routing industrial traffic through a residential subdivision would violate a comprehensive plan policy that "encourages" provision of access to industrial zones "without going through* * * residential areas," allowing traffic to pass along one side of a rural subdivision does not allow traffic to pass through a residential area. Concerned Citizens v. Malheur County, 47 Or LUBA 208 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the city's new acknowledged comprehensive plan includes a provision stating that existing development zones continue to apply until the new code is acknowledged, it is within the city's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret that plan provision to resolve any conflicts between the old zoning code and new comprehensive plan designations. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city interpretation of a zoning district to allow a large regional hospital within a residentially planned area is not inconsistent with the "underlying policy" or "purpose" of a regional plan that the zoning district was adopted in part to implement.

Although the regional plan, viewed alone, does not envision such regional hospitals within residentially planned areas, the regional plan expressly delegates authority to the city to elaborate on the auxiliary uses that may be allowed in such residential areas and the city has adopted a refinement plan that expressly authorizes regional hospitals in the residentially planned area. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 134 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. When a comprehensive plan has overlapping or conflicting policies, it is permissible for a local government to interpret them and apply them in a manner that balances those policies. Milne v. City of Canby, 46 Or LUBA 213 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city decision that interprets a comprehensive plan community park policy to describe a type of park and not to impose approval criteria for particular park developments, where relevant plan policies describe four categories of parks within the city, but neither the plan nor the zoning code includes minimum standards for the development of parks. Monogios and Co. v. City of Pendleton, 46 Or LUBA 356 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a refinement plan policy prohibits "development" of property prior to master plan approval, the code definition of "development" includes excavation and fill, and there is no textual or contextual basis to conclude that "development" for purposes of the policy excludes excavation and fill authorized by a grading permit, then the policy is applicable to a challenged permit authorizing excavation and fill on the property. Because the grading permit "concerns" the application of a comprehensive plan provision, the permit is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Jaqua v. City of Springfield, 46 Or LUBA 566 (2004).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city council interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy that prohibits "highway commercial development" south of a particular intersection as prohibiting "any commercial development" south of the intersection rather than "Highway Commercial" zoning or commercial development with direct access to the highway is not reversibly wrong. Barton v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 214 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city's interpretation of comprehensive plan policies that apply to "residential development" as not applying to a proposed radio tower is not inconsistent with the language or apparent purpose of the policies and is therefore not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Citizens for Env. Resp. Dev. v. City of Beaverton, 45 Or LUBA 378 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Arbitrary and inconsistent interpretation of approval criteria in deciding applications for land use permits can provide a basis for reversal or remand; however where a city applies a plan policy to one kind of decision and does not apply it to another kind of decision, the differences in the two decisions can explain the different applications of the plan policy. Citizens for Env. Resp. Dev. v. City of Beaverton, 45 Or LUBA 378 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a city's interpretation that a broadcast radio tower may be allowed in a residential zoning district as a "private utility" and a "utility substation and related facilities" includes a number of erroneous interpretations of the city's zoning ordinance, but LUBA identifies a potentially sustainable interpretation of relevant zoning ordinance terms that would appear to permit approval of the radio tower, remand is nevertheless required where there are reasons why the city might not agree with LUBA's interpretation. Citizens for Env. Resp. Dev. v. City of Beaverton, 45 Or LUBA 378 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government adopts unchallenged findings explaining that a demonstration that a proposed conditional use complies with all relevant zoning ordinance criteria is also sufficient to establish that the conditional use complies with the comprehensive plan, petitioners' challenge at LUBA that the conditional use is inconsistent with particular comprehensive plan provisions that are not specifically addressed in the conditional use decision provides no basis for reversal or remand. Roe v. City of Union, 45 Or LUBA 660 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government interpretation that the subject property constitutes a "neighborhood" for the purpose of determining whether a proposed development is consistent with a plan policy that requires maintaining existing residential density levels within existing neighborhoods is not subject to deference under ORS 197.829(1) because it is inconsistent with the definition of "neighborhood" set out in the zoning ordinance and the dictionary definition of that term. Roberts v. Clatsop County, 44 Or LUBA 178 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government interpretation that defines "existing residential density levels" as the maximum density allowed in the most intensive residential zoning district within the neighborhood is inconsistent with the text and apparent purpose of a policy that requires the local government to maintain existing residential density levels in established neighborhoods, because it does not take into account the majority of the property in the neighborhood that is zoned and developed at substantially lower density levels. Roberts v. Clatsop County, 44 Or LUBA 178 (2003).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city interpretation of a comprehensive plan term "top of the bluff" as the elevation on the property where the steeply pitched face of the bluff stops and a more level part begins is not inconsistent with the express language of the plan. Crowley v. City of Bandon, 43 Or LUBA 79 (2002).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A zoning map that has a scale of one inch equals 800 feet is not of so gross a scale that it cannot be relied upon to locate a zoning boundary line on a 26-acre parcel. DLCD v. City of Gold Beach, 43 Or LUBA 319 (2002).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city is within its discretion to interpret a comprehensive plan provision requiring establishment of a master plan prior to allowing development within a commercial district as being satisfied by the design review process where the city code defines "master plan" as a plan created through the land use review process governing design review and conditional use review, and the city does not have an independent process for establishing a master plan. Barman v. City of Cornelius, 42 Or LUBA 548 (2002).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A board of county commissioners does not exceed its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) when it interprets a comprehensive plan policy to "[e]nsure that traffic attracted to commercial development will not adversely affect neighborhoods" as being limited to examining traffic impacts on "residential" neighborhoods and to the "local" streets that serve such residential neighborhoods. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 42 Or LUBA 30 (2002).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A board of county commissioners acts within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) where it interprets a comprehensive plan policy to "[e]nhance energy conservation and transportation system efficiency by locating opportunities for housing near work and shopping areas" to be met in the "obverse" situation where a proposal would "locate work and shopping areas near housing." Swyter v. Clackamas County, 42 Or LUBA 30 (2002).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan provision that directs that a city should work with a county to ensure that certain lands are planned for residential development does not require the city to zone those lands exclusively for residential development. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 41 Or LUBA 167 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that the county restrict rural industrial development to uses that will not require improvements at public expense is not necessarily inconsistent with adoption of an urban renewal plan that will provide publicly funded improvements to support future rural industrial development, where the policy can be read in context to allow such improvements. In that circumstance, rather than interpret the policy in the first instance, LUBA will remand a decision approving the urban renewal plan to the county to explain why the urban renewal plan conforms to the policy. Zimmerman v. Columbia County, 40 Or LUBA 483 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. It is within a governing body's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a comprehensive plan provision that allows commercial rezoning of "areas" having "an historical commitment to commercial uses," neither to require a demonstration of exclusive commercial use, nor to require that the "area" under consideration include an entire parcel. Huff v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 264 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Statutory nonconforming use provisions at ORS 215.130 do not prohibit rezoning land to allow uses that would not be allowed to continue as nonconforming uses. Nor is the statute violated or undermined by the county's consideration of a history of illegal commercial uses, in applying a plan provision that allows land that has an "historical commitment" to commercial uses to be rezoned for commercial use. Huff v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 264 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local governing body interprets comprehensive plan provisions not to impose relevant approval criteria for a particular rezoning request it is entitled to great deference on review. However, where a local governing body simply declares that the provisions are not approval criteria without any explanation, the declaration expresses no reviewable interpretation and the declaration is not entitled to deference. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although rezoning a 1.94-acre parcel from residential to commercial may not violate comprehensive plan policies that require an adequate supply of urban land to meet urban needs and support of transportation systems by locating housing near work and shopping areas, a local government errs in finding that those polices are irrelevant. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a generally worded purpose statement in a city's comprehensive plan provides that a zoning designation is intended to confine strip commercial development to its existing locations, but does not expressly provide that the zoning designation may be applied only to those locations, the local government's interpretation of the purpose statement to allow the zoning designation to be applied to other locations so long as it does not result in strip commercial development is not clearly wrong. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 40 Or LUBA 52 (2001).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a city council interpretation of a comprehensive plan annexation policy that requires the city to "insure that there is a five year supply of vacant land within the city," as imposing a general anti-sprawl requirement rather than an absolute requirement that the city include no more than a five-year supply of vacant land. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. The existence of vacant land that is planned and zoned for multi-family residential use does not mean there can be no need for additional multi-family residential designated land, where there is a specific multi-family residential need identified and none of the land that is already designated for multi-family residential use is suitable for that specific need. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance provisions require preservation of "County Road 804" as established by a circuit court decision adopting an official survey of the road, the scope of the survey determines the parts of County Road 804 subject to that protection. That the survey shows no private property boundaries within a certain subdivision crossed by the road is a strong indication the circuit court decision did not intend to establish anything with respect to that subdivision. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lincoln County, 38 Or LUBA 699 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county urbanization policy that was adopted to implement Goal 14 must be interpreted consistently with Goal 14's prohibition against approval of urban uses on rural land. Jackson County Citizens League v. Jackson County, 38 Or LUBA 37 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A petitioner's arguments that amended land use regulations violate a comprehensive plan policy by increasing housing costs and discouraging infill development provide no basis for remand, where the plan policy encourages both infill and preserving neighborhood livability and the city's findings explain that the regulations are needed to ensure that infill housing development can be accommodated in neighborhoods without eroding livability. Homebuilders Association v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 707 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A plan goal requiring preservation of neighborhood diversity does not require diversity of housing designs where, in context, the word "diversity" is properly interpreted to refer to "age, income, race and ethnic background" of the people in the neighborhood rather than housing designs. Homebuilders Association v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 707 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. The standard of review LUBA must apply to a governing body's interpretation of its own land use regulations is not affected by whether the decision in which the interpretation appears is quasi-judicial or legislative. The deferential standard of review required by Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 719 (1992), is based on the governing body's presumed better understanding of the intended meaning of its legislation and the governing body's political accountability for that legislation. Homebuilders Association v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 707 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local land use regulation requires that a permit application be consistent with any relevant neighborhood plan, neighborhood plan policies which are described in the neighborhood plan as having the force of law are at least potentially relevant approval criteria for the permit. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of a neighborhood plan policy as not imposing an absolute traffic reduction requirement is reasonable and correct where that interpretation is consistent with the way the city council has interpreted similarly worded policies in other proceedings and the interpretation is not inconsistent with the language of the policy. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where an issue was raised below concerning whether a proposed bed and breakfast facility violated a plan policy regulating commercial development and is not addressed in a hearings officer's decision and the policy itself and related plan and land use regulation provisions are unclear whether the policy applies, LUBA will remand the decision. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that a comprehensive plan policy that requires that scenic views be "promoted and protected" is met where a zoning ordinance amendment will not significantly affect scenic views is not "clearly wrong," and must be affirmed by LUBA under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a Goal 4 committed exception imposes a zoning district with a five-acre minimum lot size and a lot of record provision that allows development of lots smaller than five acres but does not impose a specific residential density limit, the county governing body exceeds its interpretive discretion in interpreting the exception as imposing a 2.3-acre minimum residential density. Columbia Hills Development Co. v. Columbia County, 36 Or LUBA 691 (1999).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a city comprehensive plan provision requires a site-specific investigation of natural hazards "prior to development," the city is within the discretion afforded it by ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 504, 836 P2d 710 (1992), in interpreting that provision to apply at the stage where the city is evaluating a specific proposal for development such as a building permit. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 124 (1999).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a plan policy provides that the purpose of a rural industrial zone is to allow industrial uses in close proximity to the resources upon which they rely, but it is not clear how that policy applies and the list of allowed uses in the rural industrial zone does not appear to be consistent with the policy, LUBA will remand the decision so that the local government can interpret the plan policy in the first instance. James v. Josephine County, 35 Or LUBA 493 (1999).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A city's interpretation that a plan map designation of a site as a "potential" middle school site allows actual development of the site as a middle school without first amending the plan to remove the word "potential" from the map designation is clearly within the discretion extended to the city by ORS 197.829(1). Lodge v. City of West Linn, 35 Or LUBA 42 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan provision that requires a city to jointly review annexation procedures with the county is satisfied where the decision explains that the city's efforts to involve the county in the proceeding, and the county's choice to minimally participate, satisfy the policy. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a city interprets an element of its comprehensive plan as a policy statement intended to guide creation of standards, rather than an approval criterion itself, and that interpretation is not inconsistent with the plan's express language, purpose or underlying policy, LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 34 Or LUBA 340 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In the absence of an explicit statement that provisions of a comprehensive plan are not mandatory approval criteria, whether plan provisions constitute approval criteria depends on a case-by-case analysis of the wording and context of the particular provisions. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a county adopts the comprehensive plan of a city pursuant to an intergovernmental agreement, LUBA will not defer to the county's interpretation of the city's plan. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a land use regulation requires that a proposed use demonstrate consistency with a comprehensive plan, the local government may measure the consistency of the proposed use with policies and other relevant standards in the comprehensive plan, even ones that, in themselves, may not constitute specific, mandatory approval criteria. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where petitioner does not demonstrate that a forest management strategy is part of a county's comprehensive plan, petitioner has not carried its burden of showing that the application of the forest management strategy is a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Mount Hood Stewardship Council v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 284 (1997).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In approving a zone map amendment, the county cannot support a required finding of adequate water on the subject parcel solely by relying on evidence of water on nearby parcels, absent an explanation how that evidence leads to the conclusion that the subject parcel has adequate water, or an interpretation of the county code such that it requires only a showing of adequate water in the area. Doob v. Josephine County, 32 Or LUBA 364 (1997).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county's "clarifying policy," which substantively changes the requirements for compliance with the county's policy implementing Goal 4, amounts to an improper amendment of the county's comprehensive plan. Doob v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 275 (1996).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. County findings which conclude that the subject parcel is not suitable for farming, but do not evaluate each of the factors identified in the applicable comprehensive plan policy implementing Goal 3, are inadequate to establish compliance with the plan. Doob v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 275 (1996).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the subject parcel contains soils that are rated Class III when irrigated, the county must consider in its soil evaluation the feasibility of providing irrigation to the parcel. Without such an evaluation, the findings are inadequate to reach a conclusion regarding the suitability of the soil for farm use under the county's comprehensive plan. Doob v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 275 (1996).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county cannot rely on findings regarding water quality and quantity on other parcels to satisfy criteria in its comprehensive plan that require a site-specific evaluation of the water supply on the subject parcel, absent a determination that the conditions on surrounding lands can be relied upon to determine the water quality and quantity on the subject parcel. Doob v. Josephine County, 31 Or LUBA 275 (1996).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Under ORS 197.829(2), in the absence of local findings, LUBA may interpret the applicability of the city's comprehensive plan provisions in the first instance. Friends of Indian Ford v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 248 (1996).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. It is within the county's interpretive discretion to find that a code provision protecting agricultural land for farm use conflicts with a plan policy that certain land is not suitable for agricultural production and is committed to residential development. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 30 Or LUBA 135 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. ORS 197.829(2) permits LUBA to determine whether a local government decision is correct, even when local government fails to interpret adequately a provision of its comprehensive plan or land use regulations. East Lancaster Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Salem, 30 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. To challenge successfully the city's interpretation of a comprehensive plan format and provisions and the city's conclusion that two plan provisions are not land use regulations, a petitioner must establish that the city's interpretation of the contested plan provisions is clearly wrong. Fraser v. City of Joseph, 30 Or LUBA 13 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. There is no statutory or administrative law requirement that all legislative land use decisions be supported by findings. However, where a challenged legislative land use decision was made by the local governing body and the apparently applicable legal standards at issue on appeal are local comprehensive plan provisions, the interpretation of those provisions must initially be made by the governing body in its decision. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. Portland, 29 Or LUBA 429 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local governing body acts within its interpretive authority in construing a comprehensive plan provision employing nonmandatory language as not imposing a mandatory approval criterion for approval of a subdivision. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local comprehensive plan map amendment standard requires that there be no suitable alternative sites in the "vicinity" of the proposed use, the local governing body may interpret "vicinity" to mean a reasonable area around the site of the proposed use, rather than the entire market area served by the proposed use. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government acts within its interpretive discretion in interpreting comprehensive plan policies requiring "protection and preservation" of certain natural resources together with other plan policies calling for construction of a particular roadway to allow construction of the roadway, provided impacts on the natural resources are limited. Friends of Cedar Mill v. Washington County, 28 Or LUBA 477 (1995).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision is adopted by the governing body, LUBA may not interpret the applicability of arguably applicable comprehensive plan policies. Rather, the governing body must interpret the applicability of such plan policies in the first instance. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan goal is written as a directive to a local government, it may not defer a determination of compliance with that plan goal to other jurisdictions. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the local government determined comprehensive plan objectives are mandatory approval standards in a recently appealed local decision, it may not later determine that plan objectives are mere guidelines and not mandatory approval standards in a different decision appealed to LUBA, in the absence of some explanation for the disparity. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan policies conflict, it is permissible for a governing body to consider and balance such plan policies. Waker Associates, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 111 Or App 189, 194, 826 P2d 20 (1992). Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan provision potentially applies to a proposal, and a governing body's decision is silent concerning the applicability of such a plan provision, the challenged decision must be remanded for the governing body to interpret the plan provision. Neuman v. City of Albany, 28 Or LUBA 337 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA is not required to remand a decision for a local government to interpret its comprehensive plan in the first instance unless petitioners offer some explanation for why they believe the plan provision the local government failed to address in its decision applies in the circumstances presented in the appeal. Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government interprets a comprehensive plan provision using the word "should" as imposing a nonmandatory consideration, findings demonstrating compliance with the plan provision are not required. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a county governing body's interpretation of the term "severe geologic hazard," as used in its comprehensive plan, is not so wrong as to be beyond colorable defense, LUBA will defer to it. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 178 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. If a city council decision approving a subdivision does not explain how the city interprets relevant comprehensive plan and code provisions to allow a 40-foot street right-of-way, the decision must be remanded for the city council to interpret the local provisions in the first instance. Woodstock Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 146 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a challenged decision determines certain comprehensive plan policies are mandatory approval standards applicable to the proposed action, but LUBA cannot determine from the decision what the local government believes those policies require, the decision must be remanded for the local government to interpret the policies. Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. If a local government is presented with a plan or land use regulation provision that must be interpreted, and there is a reasonable interpretation that is consistent with the "state statute, land use goal or rule the comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation implements," that interpretation may not be rejected by the local government in favor of an interpretation that is inconsistent with those statutes, goals or rules. Historical Development Advocates v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 617 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where an acknowledged comprehensive plan inventories certain property as a county park available to meet present and future recreational needs and includes a policy requiring that such property be designated and zoned for recreational use, it is inconsistent with Goal 8 to interpret the plan to allow changing the designation and zoning of that property to non-recreational uses without amending the plan text and demonstrating the amended plan remains in compliance with Goal 8. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where nothing in its comprehensive plan or code requires that a particular level of service be maintained at affected street intersections at all times, the local government's interpretation of its plan and code as allowing short traffic system failures for infrequent, large, special events is not clearly wrong, and LUBA will defer to it. Heine v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 571 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. If the local government interpretation of an applicable comprehensive plan provision expressed in a challenged decision is unclear, such that LUBA cannot determine whether the findings supporting the decision are adequate to demonstrate compliance with that plan provision, LUBA will remand the decision to the local government to clarify its interpretation. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 546 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government acts within its interpretive discretion in interpreting a plan policy that "residential development should only be encouraged" in certain areas not to be an approval standard for individual development applications. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 497 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where petitioner contends the challenged decision fails to address a comprehensive plan provision that appears to contain a standard applicable to the proposal, the local government must explain in its decision why the plan provision either is inapplicable to the proposal or is satisfied by the proposal. LUBA may not make such determinations in the first instance. Laine v. City of Rockaway Beach, 27 Or LUBA 493 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a challenged decision incorrectly concludes arguments based on an arguably applicable comprehensive plan provision are precluded by the acknowledgment of an earlier decision, and does not interpret that plan provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret the plan provision in the first instance. Rea v. City of Seaside, 27 Or LUBA 443 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA lacks authority to interpret local comprehensive plan provisions in the first instance. Where certain comprehensive plan policies are arguably applicable to a development application and the challenged decision approving or denying that application does not include an interpretation of those policies, LUBA must remand the decision so the local government can interpret and apply its plan policies. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a school district concludes a proposed school site complies with a city's comprehensive plan in a school district proceeding in which the city participates, the city council nevertheless may reach a contrary conclusion concerning the proposed site's compliance with the city comprehensive plan in a subsequent city proceeding. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the applicability of local comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions is ambiguous, the local government is entitled to considerable deference in determining their applicability. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government interpretation of its comprehensive plan and zoning code, that approval of a school at a particular site requires compliance with a plan policy concerning schools, is not so wrong as to be reversible under ORS 197.829, notwithstanding that the relevant zoning district lists schools as a permitted use at the subject site. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. It is reasonable to expect that a local government, in applying subjective comprehensive plan and code provisions, will include interpretive findings in its final decision. The parties to such local proceedings should know to include arguments concerning proper interpretation of such provisions in their presentations. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy concerning financial participation by developers in "off-site improvements" does not apply to improvements required within the subject property's frontage along an abutting street, even though the subject property does not obtain access directly from that street. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Under ORS 197.829(4), if a comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation is clearly designed to implement a statewide planning goal or goals, a local government may not interpret such a plan provision or land use regulation in a manner inconsistent with the goals it implements. DLCD v. City of Donald, 27 Or LUBA 208 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government interpretation of a plan policy as governing how it inventories, plans and zones its forestland, and as not applying to a decision approving a non-forestland division and dwelling, will be sustained where the interpretation is consistent with the words and apparent purpose of the policy. Draganowski v. Curry County, 26 Or LUBA 420 (1994).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision fails to explain whether an arguably relevant comprehensive plan provision imposes limitations on the kinds of uses allowed in the applicable zone, LUBA must remand the decision for such an interpretation. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. It is impermissible for a local government to amend a land use ordinance or comprehensive plan provision in the guise of interpreting either. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a question of proper interpretation of a comprehensive plan provision is raised during local proceedings, the interpretation required for LUBA review of the decision on appeal must be provided in the decision. The local government may not supply the interpretation in its brief on appeal. Eskandarian v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan provides that a four-minute response time is critical for certain types of emergencies, a conclusion that a three to five-minute response time for emergency vehicles is adequate to comply with the plan is inadequate to establish compliance with the plan. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. To find compliance with a local code requirement that schools be adequate to meet anticipated demand, a local government must find that existing school facilities are adequate to serve the proposed project or that they can be made adequate by employing available techniques to maximize school facility capacity. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government's interpretation of its own comprehensive plan that the introductory sections in the land use chapter are not independent approval standards is not clearly wrong, LUBA must defer to that interpretation. Moore v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 40 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county may interpret a comprehensive plan provision prohibiting plan map amendments designating "forest lands" for rural development as referring to the definition of "forest lands" contained in Goal 4 when the comprehensive plan provision was adopted. Such an interpretation would not allow development that would otherwise be prohibited by the current version of Goal 4 and, therefore, is not inconsistent with the current version of Goal 4. Westfair Associates Partnership v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 729 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Although a county had in the past applied a predominance test so that a property was not designated forest where less than one half of the property qualified as forestlands, such a test is not required by Goal 4. Findings that explain such a test may result in large parcels containing significant acreage of forestland not being designated for forest use under Goal 4 are adequate to support a decision not to apply the predominance test. Westfair Associates Partnership v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 729 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Use of comprehensive plan forestland division standards as an aide in determining whether a property includes sufficient forestland to be designated in the comprehensive plan for forest uses under Goal 4 is not an improper use of the forestland division standards. Westfair Associates Partnership v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 729 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA may not interpret a local government's comprehensive plan in the first instance, rather the local government must interpret its own plan, and LUBA may review that interpretation. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 25 Or LUBA 367 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a local government's determination that provisions in a comprehensive plan requiring the local government to "encourage" particular kinds of activities are not mandatory approval standards. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 24 Or LUBA 540 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. LUBA may not interpret a local code in the first instance, but rather must review a local government's interpretation of its code. However, a local government interpretation of its code must be adequate for LUBA's review and may not consist of a mere conclusory statement. DLCD v. Crook County, 24 Or LUBA 393 (1993).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan policy provides that a change from a 10-acre minimum zone to a five-acre minimum zone requires that "parcels are generally five acres," a county's interpretation of this policy to require consideration of the entire 10-acre minimum zoned area that includes the subject property is not "clearly contrary" to the terms of, or "inconsistent with the express language" or "apparent purpose and policy" of, the plan policy and must be upheld. Thatcher v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a county plan policy provides that a particular zone change requires that "parcels are generally five acres," and the county's decision simply states that a total of 58.8 percent of the parcels in the relevant area being five acres or less does not satisfy this plan policy, the decision does not interpret what the policy requires, and LUBA will remand the decision so the county can interpret its plan in the first instance. Thatcher v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local code or plan provision prohibiting uses in certain areas of a jurisdiction, where those uses would otherwise be permissible under the base zoning district, does not create an implied authorization for the prohibited uses in areas of the jurisdiction not covered by the prohibition. Goose Hollow Foothills League v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 69 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan policy specifically provides for formation of service districts within one of three types of designated rural areas, and there is nothing inconsistent with the language of that policy, its context or its purpose in interpreting it as having nothing to do with service districts in the other two types of rural areas, the local government's interpretation of that policy as not precluding formation of service districts in the other two types of rural areas will be sustained. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Comprehensive plan provisions that govern the circumstances warranting formation of service districts, the permissible scope of sewerage facilities and whether such facilities are to be provided by public or private entities, are correctly interpreted as not prohibiting the formation of service districts to provide sewerage services. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where there is a conflict between (1) plan text describing the geographic location of a Goal 5 forest resource site, and (2) other plan text giving its acreage, resolving that conflict in favor of the geographic location is at least as reasonable as resolving the conflict in favor of the acreage figure, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation of its plan. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 23 Or LUBA 565 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government's interpretation of its comprehensive plan Goal 5 inventory is consistent with the plan language and appears to be consistent with the purpose and policy of the plan, LUBA may not reject that interpretation. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 23 Or LUBA 565 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the record establishes that a proposed street will have the characteristics of both a local street and minor collector street, the question of the proper street designation is debatable, and the choice of which designation to apply is within the local government's discretion. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 23 Or LUBA 565 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A county comprehensive plan map with a scale of 1 inch to 9 miles is ambiguous and, therefore, the county must interpret and apply its plan map to specific properties in the first instance. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy requiring that certain natural resources be preserved should be interpreted together with the plan Goal 5 inventory, to require the local government to preserve the corresponding natural resource site(s) identified in that inventory. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Neither the Goal 2 coordination provision nor similarly worded coordination requirements imposed by local comprehensive plan policies requires affected units of government to agree with the decision ultimately adopted by another government. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 370 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a plan policy requires that urban services must be provided prior to or concurrent with subdivision approval, a school superintendent's testimony that the expected number of elementary schools students can be accommodated within existing or expanded school facilities utilizing a variety of options, is sufficient to support the local government's finding that the proposed subdivision complies with the plan policy. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government interprets a provision in its comprehensive plan requiring provision of urban services prior to or concurrent with subdivision approval as not including school bus service, and that interpretation is not inconsistent with other plan provisions or with the practice of some school districts in the area, the local government's interpretation is within its interpretive discretion. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A service district is not required to approve sewer and water hookups on a first come, first served basis, where none of the applicable comprehensive plan provisions adopted pursuant to Goal 11 limit the manner in which such hookups must be approved. Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 592 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a comprehensive plan rural housing policy establishes a projected need for 900 rural dwelling units by the year 2000 to meet seasonal and permanent housing needs, a decision subject to that policy approving a 50-lot subdivision is not required also to find that the proposed subdivision is rural in nature, where the policy does not require such a finding and other plan and code standards limit the allowable residential density. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan standard establishing a minimum building site requirement of one acre is not inconsistent with plan and code requirements that subdivision lots in a zoning district allowing development at a density of one unit per five acres be clustered to provide not less than 30 percent common open space. Such a plan standard simply sets a minimum area requirement for each clustered lot. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. It is possible to interpret a comprehensive plan standard requiring that "the minimum percentage of common open space shall be 30 percent, excluding roads and property under water," as requiring that the exclusion apply (1) only to the lands subject to the open space requirement, (2) only to the lands that may be used to satisfy the open space requirement, or (3) to both. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local government complies with a plan provision requiring that it "request comments from the School District concerning land use * * * actions," where the local government provides the school district with notice of a proposed PUD preliminary master plan approval. Such a plan provision does not require that the school district make comments, only that comments be requested. Gerl v. City of Lincoln City, 22 Or LUBA 512 (1992).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan provision requiring that conflicts between conditional uses and airports be "minimized" is not violated by approval of a proposed conditional use simply because other possible uses allowed in the zone would have fewer conflicts with airports. So long as conflicts between the proposed conditional use and airports are minimized, that other possible uses might have fewer conflicts is irrelevant. Waker Assoc., Inc. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 233 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where existing code and comprehensive plan provisions impose a higher approval standard than the local government believes is appropriate, the appropriate course is to amend the plan and code. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Comprehensive plan goals and policies that are worded as broad standards establishing policy direction for the local government in its comprehensive planning efforts are not approval standards for quasi-judicial zone changes. Angel v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 1 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that "new development include sidewalks in [its] design" applies only to new development, and does not require sidewalks along property that is not part of a proposed new development. White v. City of Oregon City, 20 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Statements from introductory findings to a comprehensive plan chapter are not plan policies or approval standards for land use decisions. 19th Street Project v. City of The Dalles, 20 Or LUBA 440 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A particular use could be both a commercial use and an institutional use where the applicable plan and land use regulations do not define "commercial use" and "institutional use" as mutually exclusive use categories. Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Plan policies that discourage, but do not preclude, location of commercial uses in residential areas, do not demonstrate that the "institutional uses" allowed in residential zoning districts cannot include "commercial uses." Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A local decision maker's refusal to follow a prior erroneous construction of a comprehensive plan policy is not error. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 238 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Neither the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution nor the equal privileges and immunities provision of Article I, section 20, of the Oregon Constitution requires a local decision maker to adhere to a prior erroneous interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 238 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In determining whether a particular comprehensive plan provision is an approval standard, LUBA considers the language used in the plan provision and the context in which it appears. A plan policy that states general objectives in non-mandatory terms is not an approval standard. Thormahlen v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 218 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. In determining whether the local government has correctly interpreted and applied the term "open space" in making the appealed decision, LUBA will apply the definitions of that term contained in the local government's comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the local plan requires that the increased density and smaller lots allowed in a PUD be offset by the provision of "useable open space," such open space must benefit the entire PUD, and cannot consist of the oversize private front and rear yards of the larger lots. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where a local government requires property designated as a significant natural area on its Goal 5 inventory to be developed through its PUD process, and a comprehensive plan provision requires PUD development proposals "to address preservation of wildlife habitat and natural vegetation," the local government has made an OAR 660-16-010(3)(c) "limit conflicting uses" decision, and a decision approving a PUD on such property must be supported by findings demonstrating how wildlife habitat and natural vegetation will be preserved. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that simply directs a county to enter into urban area planning agreements with adjacent jurisdictions to coordinate land use planning does not adopt such agreements as part of the comprehensive plan. City of Portland v. Multnomah County, 19 Or LUBA 468 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. After-the-fact statements by county commissioners and the planning director concerning the intended applicability of plan provisions are not competent legislative history. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. There is no irresolvable conflict between a plan standard directing that golf courses be allowed in an exclusive farm use zone and a plan standard providing that development may not occur on lands capable of sustaining accepted agricultural practices. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where plan standards identify nonfarm uses that may be allowed in the county's exclusive farm use zone and require that such uses be "minimized," a plan standard requiring that "development" not occur on lands capable of sustaining accepted farming practices is properly interpreted as not applying to the nonfarm uses specifically allowed in the exclusive farm use zone. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A plan requirement that the city "strive to maintain at least a five-year supply of land for [particular needs] in the city limits" does not prohibit the use of employment zoned land for nonemployment conditional uses, so long as the city's findings establish that the city has strived to maintain a five-year supply of employment land. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Application of plan agricultural goals requiring preservation of agricultural lands to proposed nonfarm conditional uses in exclusive farm use zones does not effectively prohibit such nonfarm conditional uses, if the ordinance requirement to satisfy the purposes of the plan goals is interpreted and applied by balancing the degree to which a proposed nonfarm use furthers or conflicts with various plan goals and policies. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A plan standard requiring a soils report, with specific content, signed by a registered civil engineer is not necessarily met by any soils report with the required content and signed by a registered engineer. Where the plan standard makes it clear that the purpose of the plan standard is to prevent or mitigate safety hazards, the city may evaluate the required soils report to determine whether such hazards are prevented or mitigated. J.K. Land Corporation v. City of Gresham, 19 Or LUBA 66 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where significant wildlife habitat is identified on maps and inventories in the acknowledged city comprehensive plan, the city may not determine that a site not shown on the map or listed in the inventory includes significant wildlife habitat in acting on an individual development application. J.K. Land Corporation v. City of Gresham, 19 Or LUBA 66 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where the comprehensive plan makes it clear that that a plan policy is to be implemented through the county code provisions governing approval of conditional use permits and site plans for aggregate extraction operations, the plan policy does not provide approval standards for a plan amendment adding a site to the aggregate resources inventory. Eckis v. Linn County, 19 Or LUBA 15 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan provisions explicitly envision location of commercial uses in residentially zoned areas and impose requirements to mitigate adverse impacts from such proximity, the plan does not prohibit adjoining commercially and residentially planned and zoned properties. Walker v. City of Beaverton, 18 Or LUBA 712 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that states that, in order to minimize conflicts between agricultural and nonagricultural uses, a county "shall develop and implement buffering techniques on the periphery of urban growth boundaries which abut agricultural land," is not an approval standard for a conditional use permit for a nonfarm use far removed from any urban growth boundary. Weist v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 627 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. A plan policy that approval of nonagricultural uses on farmland be supported by findings that "no feasible alternative site in the area exists which has less impact on agricultural land" requires either (1) an analysis of potential alternative sites and a comparison of the impacts on agricultural land of the proposed use at the subject and alternative feasible sites; or (2) a determination that the proposed use at the subject site will have no impacts on agricultural land. Weist v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 627 (1990).

29.4 Comprehensive Plans – Interpretation. County interpretation of its plan agricultural land policy to allow it to balance the applicant's need for additional acreage for a golf course, against the county policy favoring retention of EFU-zoned land in large blocks for agricultural use, is a correct interpretation of the county policy. Douglas v. Multnomah County, 18 Or LUBA 607 (1990).

30.1.1 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Generally. Where a city's motion to supplement the record with notice of adoption of ordinance will not supplement or complete the challenged decision in any way that is challenged by petitioner, the motion will be denied due to its lack of bearing on the merits of the appeal. Western PCS, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 33 Or LUBA 369 (1997).

30.1.1 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Generally. The provision of ORS 197.610(2) allowing "less than 45 days' notice" to the Director of DLCD of decisions adopting new land use regulations in emergency circumstances does not authorize not giving any notice at all. Western PCS, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 33 Or LUBA 369 (1997).

30.1.2 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Procedure. Where a local government adopts an ordinance that repeals and readopts, verbatim, 34 previously adopted and acknowledged land use ordinances, solely to correct a problem with the publication notice for the readopted ordinances, the repeal and readoption of the 34 ordinances does not accomplish any "change" or amendment to the acknowledged ordinances that would require that the re-adoption be processed as a post-acknowledgment plan amendment under ORS 197.610 et seq. Repeal and verbatim readoption of a previously acknowledged ordinance does not change the acknowledged status of the ordinance, such that pursuant to ORS 197.175(2)(e) the statewide planning goals then apply directly to decisions made under the readopted ordinance. Squier v. Multnomah County, 71 Or LUBA 98 (2015).

30.1.2 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Procedure. ORS 215.060 provides that action regarding a comprehensive plan shall have no effect, unless 10 days' advance public notice of each hearing is published in a newspaper of general circulation. Where the required 10 days' notice is given, the county's subsequent decision to adopt different parts of the proposed comprehensive plan amendments by separate ordinances does not require new notice under ORS 215.060. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

30.1.2 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Procedure. An indication on the notice of adoption furnished to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) that the Statewide Planning Goals do not apply to a proposed plan or code amendment or a new land use regulation is a ministerial act without independent significance, not a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Petersen v. Columbia County, 33 Or LUBA 253 (1997).

30.1.2 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Procedure. ORS 215.503(2)(a), requiring all legislative acts related to comprehensive plans or zoning adopted by a county governing body to be by ordinance, applies to legislative decisions adopting or amending comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances, not to quasi-judicial plan or zone changes. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

30.1.3 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Standards. ORS 227.173(1) requires that "[a]pproval or denial of a discretionary permit application shall be based on standards and criteria, which shall be set forth in the development ordinance." A development code that permits the city engineer to waive or modify city street and roadway improvement standards where "in his/her judgment special circumstances dictate such change" is sufficient to comply with the ORS 227.173(1) requirement for "standards and criteria." Zirker v. City of Bend, 59 Or LUBA 1 (2009).

30.1.3 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Standards. ORS 197.610(1) requires that the Land Conservation and Development Commission be given notice at least 45 days before the first evidentiary hearing on adoption of a post-acknowledgment comprehensive plan amendment. Where the required notice is given, a second notice is not required under ORS 197.610(1) simply because the local government decides to adopt different parts of the proposed comprehensive plan amendment by separate ordinances. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

30.1.3 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Standards. Where an intergovernmental agreement calls for a county to incorporate into its plan and code the city's ordinances and plan provisions that address lands within the UGB, but the county never does so, the county did not err in refusing to treat the city's provisions as applicable approval criteria. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

30. 1.3 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Standards. Where appeal fee waiver criteria are set out in the city's land use regulations, an appeal fee waiver form that requests that the applicant provide certain information in seeking an appeal fee waiver does not establish criteria that must be met to obtain the appeal fee waiver. St. Johns Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 275 (2000).

30.1.3 Zoning Ordinances – Adoption – Standards. If a city does not include a tree-cutting regulation in its zoning ordinance and the regulation does not establish standards for implementing the city's comprehensive plan, it is not a "land use regulation," as the term is defined in ORS 197.015(11). Ramsey v. City of Portland, 30 Or LUBA 212 (1995).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where local code amendments allow accessory uses and structures in an EFU zone, arguments that (1) the amendments improperly exempt such structures from a local code requirement that steps be taken to minimize adverse impacts on farm and forest uses and (2) the provisions governing such uses are inconsistent with ORS 215.213(3)(b) provide no basis for reversal or remand where the amended code is comparable to the prior code and where the petitioner does not develop any argument explaining why the amendments are substantive instead of technical. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Provisions of a challenged ordinance that refer to or rely on provisions of a prior ordinance that LUBA remanded are invalid, even where the prior ordinance contained a severability clause purporting to allow unchallenged aspects of the prior ordinance to take effect after LUBA's remand. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a city within Metro's jurisdiction adopts its portion of an intergovernmental concept plan into its comprehensive plan and applies an industrial zoning designation to a portion of the planning area with slopes greater than 10 percent, that Metro's previous decision to include the planning area in its UGB stated that land needed for industrial uses should generally have slopes of less than 10 percent and that a previous Metro housing need projection anticipated almost 600 more housing units than the industrial zoning designation would allow provide no basis for reversal or remand where Metro's previous UGB decision is not evidence, an applicable approval criterion, or a relevant consideration for the city in determining the correct zoning designation for the property and where Metro's previous housing need projection has been superseded by a later decision to remove the property from its inventory of buildable residential lands. Watts v. City of Tualatin, 80 Or LUBA 339 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. The planning commission's conclusion that the subject properties are subject to "site review requirements" is not supported by anything in the text of the Old Code, Ordinance 20224, or the New Code. Simons Investment Properties, LLC v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 458 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A county's comprehensive plan is a working document that must be updated to reflect existing conditions and future planning obligations. Where nothing in the statewide planning goals or the county's comprehensive plan prohibits amendments to expand areas in the county to which certain plan designations may be applied, provided those areas meet all applicable statutory and rule requirements, such amendments do not provide grounds for remand or reversal. Counties have wide latitude to adopt and revise their comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances; amendments to the comprehensive plan need only comply with the statewide planning goals. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Goal 14 prohibits urban uses on rural lands. Where a county's text amendments to its comprehensive plan do not allow any urban uses on rural land, but merely expand the allowable locations in the county that could be the subject of an application to change the plan designation to rural industrial, and the text amendments require the applicant to demonstrate that the proposed use for which the rural industrial plan designation change is consistent with all statewide planning goals, including Goal 14, a petitioner's arguments that the amendments violate Goal 14 do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A petitioner's challenge to a county's amendments to its comprehensive plan that expand the allowable locations in the county that could be the subject of an application to change the plan designation to rural commercial and rural industrial, that argue that the county's adopted and acknowledged rural commercial and rural industrial zones impermissibly allow urban uses in contravention of Goal 14 are an impermissible collateral attack on an acknowledged land use regulation where no provisions of the county's code were amended by the challenged decision. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 253 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. The fact that an adopted local code amendment includes language which was not included in the notice to DLCD required by ORS 197.610(1) is not by itself sufficient to explain why the notice was inadequate so as to require reversal or remand of the amendment decision. McCaffree v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 512 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A local code amendment adopted to implement provisions of ORS 197.724 is not an "action[] taken under ORS 197.722 to ORS 197.728" so as to place the amendment decision outside of LUBA's scope of review pursuant to ORS 197.726(1). Instead, such an amendment is an action taken under ORS 197.646(1), which requires local governments to amend their land use regulations "to comply with a new requirement in land use statutes." McCaffree v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 512 (2019).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Senate Bill (SB) 1051 (2018), section 12 did not require cities to amend their land use regulations to implement SB 1051 by July 1, 2018. SB 1051 itself is silent regarding any requirement, much less a deadline for a city to amend its land use regulations to comply with its provisions. SB 1051, section 12 provides for a delayed "operative date" of July 1, 2018. That delayed operative date provides a grace period before which the provisions of SB 1051 did not apply, and after which, the statute applies directly and cities are required to "allow" accessory dwelling in areas required by the statue. But SB 1051 does not direct cities as to the mechanism by which to allow accessory dwellings. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 441 (2018).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. While ORS 197.646(1) requires the city to amend its land use regulations to implement SB 1051 (2018), ORS 197.646(2)(b) requires the Land Conservation and Development Commission (LCDC) to establish by rule the time period within which a local government must amend its code to implement a new land use statute "if the legislation does not specify a time period for compliance[.]" LCDC has not adopted any rules specifying a time period for implementation of SB 1051, and SB 1051 itself does not require cities to adopt amendments to their codes that implement all of the provisions of SB 1051 by July 1, 2018. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 441 (2018).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A city council does not err by amending its zoning ordinance to prohibit renting dwellings in a residential zone for weddings following a ruling by a municipal court that the zoning ordinance did not prohibit such use, where the city believed its zoning ordinance already prohibited such use and petitioner offers no legal theory for why the city could not adopt such an amendment to clarify the issue. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. ORS 227.180(1)(b) authorizes city councils to provide that a decision by a hearings officer or other decision-making authority in a proceeding for discretionary permit or zone change approval is the city's final decision. But ORS 227.180(1)(b) does not authorize a city council to make a hearings officer's or other decision-making authority's decision the city's final decision concerning an application for a comprehensive plan map amendment. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A zoning ordinance standard that requires that zoning map amendments must be consistent with relevant comprehensive plan policies provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioners appealed an annexation ordinance and failed to appeal the ordinance that rezoned the annexed properties. Knaupp v. City of Forest Grove, 67 Or LUBA 398 (2013).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where on remand of a decision that amends a county zoning ordinance, the county adopts a new ordinance with new amendments, but does not explicitly or implicitly re-adopt the original ordinance, on appeal to LUBA of the new ordinance the petitioner cannot challenge the original ordinance or the findings adopted on remand that are intended to support the original ordinance. Hatley v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 265 (2012).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Whether a city council initially tries to reverse a hearings official's interpretation of the city zoning code by amending the zoning code has no bearing on whether the city council could also effectively reverse the hearings official's interpretation by adopting an interpretation of its own. Randazzo v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 272 (2012).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. An ordinance that adds a destination resort overlay to a number of acres that were not included on the originally adopted destination resort overlay map "amends" the destination resort overlay map. That the county may have intended to include those acres within the destination resort overlay when the map was originally adopted does not make the map "amendment" something other than an "amendment." Remington Ranch, LLC v. Crook County, 59 Or LUBA 361 (2009).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. An ordinance that repeals an existing comprehensive plan and zoning map and replaces it with a revised map is an "amendment" of the existing comprehensive plan and zoning map. Remington Ranch, LLC v. Crook County, 59 Or LUBA 361 (2009).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. While a local government may have a legitimate planning interest in adopting regulations that effectively consolidate substandard-size lots for development purposes, the method it chooses to determine which properties are consolidated for development purposes cannot be based on apparently arbitrary differences in the wording or form of deeds, such as whether or not a deed transferring multiple properties listed each property under a separate heading. Thomas v. Wasco County, 58 Or LUBA 452 (2009).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where the "Decision" section of a land use decision expressly grants only "planned unit development subdivision plan" approval, but the decision read as a whole clearly also grants the zoning map amendment that was included in the planned unit development and subdivision plan application, LUBA will interpret the decision to grant all three of the requested approvals. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. City findings that there has been increased commercial development in the neighborhood and that traffic has increased on a nearby state highway and resulted in increased noise are sufficient to demonstrate compliance with a subjective "changed neighborhood conditions" rezoning criterion. Jaffer v. City of Monmouth, 51 Or LUBA 633 (2006).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Absent some authority to the contrary, the uses allowed within a Public Parks zone or a Public Amusement zone are not limited to "recreational" or "public amusement" uses. Cox v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 78 (2005).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A hearings officer errs in concluding that a commercial zone implements the medium density residential plan designation, simply because some commercial uses are allowed in some residential zones. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. An assignment of error that challenges a county's failure to apply code criteria governing zoning map amendments provides no basis for reversal or remand where the assignment of error contends the zoning code criteria should have been applied to a comprehensive plan map amendment. Doherty v. Morrow County, 44 Or LUBA 141 (2003).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where an ordinance that adopts legislative amendments to a zoning ordinance includes no findings responding to concerns that the amendments violate Statewide Planning Goals 5 and 9 and a comprehensive plan policy, (2) there is no evidence in the record that would allow LUBA to conclude those concerns are without merit, and (3) the comprehensive plan provision pertaining to protection of industrial lands and quarries under Goals 5 and 9 is ambiguous, LUBA will remand the ordinance. OCAPA v. City of Mosier, 44 Or LUBA 452 (2003).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. The fixed goal post rule established by ORS 215.427(3) does not apply to an application for a zone change where (1) that application for a zone change is part of, or submitted contemporaneously with, an application for a comprehensive plan amendment, and (2) the zone change is requested to implement the requested comprehensive plan amendment rather than as a separate request that could be approved independently of the requested comprehensive plan map amendment. Friends of the Applegate v. Josephine County, 44 Or LUBA 786 (2003).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where the ORS 215.283(1)(w) authorization for rural fire service facilities in EFU zones had taken effect, but a county had not yet amended its zoning ordinance to reflect the statutory change, ORS 215.283(1)(w) applies directly, and the county does not violate the zoning ordinance by approving a rural fire service facility in its EFU zone. Keicher v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 521 (2001).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. ORS 215.050(2) requires that zoning amendments shall implement the adopted comprehensive plan. When a local government adopts a zone change but does not adopt a contemporaneous comprehensive plan change, resulting in plan map/zoning map inconsistency, the decision must be remanded. DLCD v. Klamath County, 38 Or LUBA 769 (2000).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Criteria governing an application to rezone property to allow for the siting of a mobile home park need not comply with requirements in ORS 197.307 and ORS 197.480 for "clear and objective" standards regulating the siting of needed mobile homes, at least when a city has otherwise planned and designated sufficient land to satisfy the need for mobile home parks within its jurisdiction. Evergreen Development, Inc. v. City of Coos Bay, 38 Or LUBA 470 (2000).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. New land use regulations can only become acknowledged under ORS 197.625(2) if the ordinance adopting those new land use regulations is "affirmed on appeal under ORS 197.830 to 197.855." Where LUBA remands the adopting ordinance because a portion of the new land use regulations is found to be defective, without specifically affirming the remaining portions of those regulations, no part of the ordinance is considered acknowledged under ORS 197.625. Western States v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 835 (2000).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. In amending an acknowledged zoning ordinance to reduce maximum building heights, a city is not required to demonstrate that the amendment complies with the statewide planning goals where the acknowledged comprehensive plan contains "specific policies or other provisions which provide the basis for the regulation." ORS 197.835(7)(b). However, where the comprehensive plan includes only general policies that make no reference to maximum building heights, the city must demonstrate that the amendment complies with the statewide planning goals. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A county acts within the discretion afforded by ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 515, 836 P2d 710 (1992), where the zoning ordinance requires a finding that utilities and services likely to be needed by the "anticipated uses" are available, the county limits allowed uses on the property to the applicant's proposed use, and the county interprets the term "anticipated uses" to consist solely of the proposed use. A reasonable person could construe the term "anticipated uses" to denote something less than the range of uses allowed in the zone. City of Newberg v. Yamhill County, 36 Or LUBA 473 (1999).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. That a local government might in future quasi-judicial proceedings recognize that the procedures required by its amended zoning ordinance conflict with the procedures required by ORS 215.416(11) for permit decisions, and therefore follow the procedures required by the statute, does not make the procedures required by the amended zoning ordinance consistent with the statute and does not make a LUBA appeal challenging the zoning ordinance amendment premature. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where petitioner fails to assign error to detailed findings explaining why certain acknowledged comprehensive plan provisions constitute "specific policies" that, under ORS 197.835(7)(b), make it unnecessary for the city to demonstrate compliance with statewide planning goals when amending city land use regulations to implement those policies, LUBA will reject an assignment of error alleging the city erred by failing to demonstrate that the new and amended land use regulations comply with the statewide planning goals. Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139 (1998).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Under OAR 660-012-0045(2) local codes must require compliance with ODOT access standards or require that an applicant obtain an access permit from ODOT as a condition of approval. Dept. of Transportation v. Douglas County, 34 Or LUBA 608 (1998).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. LUBA's scope of review is not precluded or affected when petitioner assigns error to a plan amendment but fails to assign error to a corresponding zone change. Under ORS 197.175(2)(b) and 197.835(7)(b), zoning ordinances must conform to and comply with the local government's comprehensive plan, therefore a remand on the basis of error respecting the plan amendment would necessarily invalidate the corresponding zone change. Geaney v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 189 (1998).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where the county's decision to apply overlay zoning directly implements plan policies that were previously determined to comply with the statewide planning goals, and the policies are sufficiently specific to provide the basis for case-by-case evaluation of development applications, ORS 197.835(7)(b) does not require the local government to apply the goals independently to the decision. Cuddeback v. City of Eugene, 32 Or LUBA 418 (1997).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Under ORS 197.646(3), there is no grace period prior to required local government compliance with amendments to statutes, rules or Statewide Planning Goals. DLCD v. Lincoln County, 31 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government does not identify specific provisions in its comprehensive plan which it contends provide the basis for challenged land use regulation amendments, under ORS 197.835(5)(b), LUBA is required to reverse or remand the land use regulation amendments if they do not comply with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where amendments to a local government's comprehensive plan or land use regulations do not amend or affect the local government's acknowledged Citizen Involvement Program (CIP), the only way a petitioner can demonstrate a violation of Goal 1 is by demonstrating a failure to comply with the acknowledged CIP. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where respondents do not identify specific provisions in the applicable comprehensive plan, which they contend provide the basis for challenged zone changes, under ORS 197.825(5)(b) LUBA is required to reverse or remand the zone changes if they do not comply with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals or their implementing rules. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Legislative changes to acknowledged comprehensive plans or land use regulations that reduce a local government's supply of industrially designated land must be supported by (1) findings demonstrating the remaining industrially designated land is adequate to satisfy the requirements of Goal 9, (2) argument establishing compliance with Goal 9 based on plan provisions, code provisions and evidence in the record, or both. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where the deadlines established by OAR 660-12-055(1) and (2) for adoption of regional and local transportation system plans (TSPs) have not yet passed, and the local government has not yet adopted a TSP, the requirements of OAR 660-12-045(2) and (3) for regulations implementing TSPs are inapplicable to a decision amending the local code. Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. That the record shows a code amendment will affect a site that has direct access onto a particular road is a sufficient basis for requiring the local government's determination under OAR 660-12-060(2)(c), that the amendment does not allow land uses resulting in "levels of travel or access * * * inconsistent with the functional classification of a transportation facility," to include consideration of impacts on that road. Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government decision amending its land use regulations does not interpret comprehensive plan goals and map designations as being inapplicable to such amendments, but rather explains how the proposed amendment implements certain comprehensive plan goals and is consistent with certain plan map designations, it is clear the governing body interprets those plan goals and map designations as being applicable to the land use regulation amendment. Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Post-acknowledgment local code amendments which are not adopted to satisfy periodic review requirements are deemed acknowledged under ORS 197.625, if such amendments are not appealed to LUBA. Historical Development Advocates v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 617 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. ORS 215.503(2)(a), requiring all legislative acts related to comprehensive plans or zoning adopted by a county governing body to be by ordinance, applies to legislative decisions adopting or amending comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances, not to quasi-judicial plan or zone changes. Sahagian v. Columbia County, 27 Or LUBA 592 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where petitioners contend legislative land use regulation amendments are inconsistent with certain arguably relevant comprehensive plan provisions, and those plan provisions are not interpreted in the challenged decision, LUBA must remand the challenged decision for the local government to adopt the necessary plan interpretations as part of its decision. Redland/Viola/Fischer's Mill CPO v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 560 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Providing notice of a post-acknowledgment plan or land use regulation amendment to the Department of Land Conservation and Development under ORS 197.610(1) is inadequate to satisfy a local government's coordination obligations. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. City of North Plains, 27 Or LUBA 372 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where petitioners contend a land use regulation amendment fails to comply with the statewide planning goals and implementing rules, and respondents fail to identify specific provisions in the local comprehensive plan that provide the basis for the challenged amendment, LUBA will assume no such provisions exist, and under ORS 197.835(5)(b) LUBA has authority to reverse or remand the land use regulation amendment if it does not comply with the statewide planning goals or implementing rules. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Marion County, 27 Or LUBA 303 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where LUBA has remanded a city decision annexing certain property, a subsequent city decision amending the comprehensive plan and zoning designations for that property, in reliance on the annexation, exceeds the city's authority. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Any amendment to an acknowledged land use regulation must comply with all applicable statewide planning goals, if the comprehensive plan "does not contain specific policies or other provisions that provide the basis for the regulation." ORS 197.835(5)(b). Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Comprehensive plan and zone amendments which lessen the impacts or demands that goal, plan and code standards were adopted to address are likely to be consistent with those goal, plan and code standards. McInnis v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. An amendment to an acknowledged land use regulation must comply with the local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan. ORS 197.175(2)(d); 197.835(5)(a). Rea v. City of Seaside, 26 Or LUBA 444 (1994).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Prior to local government action to designate new or existing plans and regulations as its Transportation System Plan (TSP), in the manner required by OAR 660-12-010(2), any challenge to adoption of a plan or regulation amendment based on failure to comply with the TSP requirements of OAR 660-12-010 through 660-12-050 is premature. Pacific Rivers Council, Inc. v. Lane County, 26 Or LUBA 323 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. An ordinance that amends an acknowledged land use regulation is subject to the requirements of ORS 197.610 and 197.615. Oregon City Leasing, Inc. v. Columbia County, 26 Or LUBA 203 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. It is impermissible for a local government to amend a land use ordinance or comprehensive plan provision in the guise of interpreting either. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. A local government cannot simply conclude its failure to list shopping centers as a permitted or conditional use in any existing zoning district creates an ambiguity and, on that basis, determine it will allow shopping centers as a conditional use in a particular zoning district. Such an action constitutes improperly amending the zoning ordinance in the guise of interpreting it. Loud v. City of Cottage Grove, 26 Or LUBA 152 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government's final decision is not to adopt a legislative amendment to its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations, ORS 197.830(2) and 197.620(1) deny standing to appeal such a final decision to LUBA. ODOT v. Klamath County, 25 Or LUBA 761 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. If a challenged permit decision misconstrues an acknowledged land use regulation, that provides a basis for reversing or remanding the decision under ORS 197.835(6) and (7)(a)(D). It does not mean the challenged decision is a land use regulation amendment. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Plan text and map amendments and zoning text and map amendments are not "permits," as that term is defined in ORS 215.402(4). Leonard v. Union County, 24 Or LUBA 362 (1992).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. That a local government may have provided inadequate notice of a post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendment to the Department of Land Conservation and Development (DLCD) will not excuse a person's failure to file a notice of intent to appeal that decision with LUBA within 21 days after the decision became final, where the person was not entitled to receive notice of the challenged decision from DLCD. Leonard v. Union County, 24 Or LUBA 362 (1992).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. LUBA does not apply land use decision making approval criteria in the first instance. It is the local government's responsibility to consider the evidentiary record, identify the applicable standards, make the decision in the first instance and explain the basis for its decision in its findings. ODOT v. City of Waldport, 24 Or LUBA 344 (1992).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. The applicant for comprehensive plan and zone map amendments has the burden of establishing compliance of the proposed amendments with the applicable approval standards. Hess v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 343 (1992).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Under ORS 197.835(5)(b), an amendment to a local government land use regulation is subject to reversal or remand for failure to comply with the Statewide Planning Goals, unless the comprehensive plan contains "specific policies * * * which provide the basis for" the amended regulation. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 291 (1992).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. That a previously approved zone change included a condition providing that if a conditional use permit for a mobile home park on the subject property is not obtained, the property would revert to its previous zoning, does not make the merits of the previous rezoning decision subject to LUBA's review in an appeal of the local government decision approving the conditional use permit. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. There is nothing unconstitutional about providing only published notice of legislative rezoning. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. ORS 197.615(2)(a) requires that a local government give notice of decisions amending its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to persons who participate during the local proceedings and request such notice in writing. Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government has no rules establishing specific procedures or forms for persons participating in post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendment proceedings to utilize in making a written request for notice under ORS 197.615(2)(a)(B), and has no rules establishing to whom requests for such notice must be directed, a request for a copy of the city's final decision directed to the city attorney is sufficient to satisfy ORS 197.615(2)(a)(B). Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. Where a local government provides a party with a copy of the decision amending its comprehensive plan and land use regulations, but fails to advise the party of the date the challenged decision became final or of the requirements for appealing the decision to LUBA, the notice requirements of ORS 197.615(2)(b)(B) and (D), applicable to post-acknowledgment plan and land use regulation amendments, are not satisfied. Club Wholesale v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 576 (1990).

30.2.1 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Generally. While a decision to approve a zone change does not approve a "permit," within the meaning of ORS 227.160(2), a decision that approves both a variance and a minor partition does approve a "permit." Harvard Medical Park, Ltd. v. City of Roseburg, 19 Or LUBA 555 (1990).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where the only variable between multiple Urban Growth Area-Urban Growth Management (UGA-UGM) zones is lot size, and where a county code provision provides that "[t]he density of one UGA-UGM zoning district is not interchangeable with the density of another UGA-UGM zoning district without prior review and approval by the affected city and * * * County," an interpretation by the county that the provision applies to zone changes of the subject property or changes to the underlying density of the zone in which the subject property is located, but that it does not apply to lot size variances, is inconsistent with the express language of the provision. In such cases, where the local code does not define "density" and the dictionary defines "density" as the quantity or number per unit of area, LUBA will make its own determination that a lot size variance in a UGA-UGM zone may qualify as an "interchange[]" with the density of another UGA-UGM zone, thereby requiring city review and approval. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Whether a city council initially tries to reverse a hearings official's interpretation of the city zoning code by amending the zoning code has no bearing on whether the city council could also effectively reverse the hearings official's interpretation by adopting an interpretation of its own. Randazzo v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 272 (2012).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Under the second sentence of ORS 197.830(1), the 21-day deadline for filing an appeal with LUBA does not begin to run until the city gives individual written notice of its post acknowledgment land use regulation amendment to persons who are entitled to receive such notice. Even if the Department of Land Conservation and Development is the only person entitled to receive written notice of the city's decision, the agency is always entitled to such notice and all other persons with standing to appeal to LUBA have 21 days from the date notice is given to the Department of Land Conservation and Development to file an appeal. Dobson v. City of Newport, 47 Or LUBA 589 (2004).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Providing notice and a copy of proposed zoning ordinance amendments to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) and then adopting an additional zoning ordinance amendment that was not included with the notice without providing additional notice to DLCD is not error. OCAPA v. City of Mosier, 44 Or LUBA 452 (2003).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. The broad notice and potential for participation by DLCD and others under ORS 197.610 is the quid pro quo for ORS 197.625, which deems post-acknowledgment land use regulation amendments to be consistent with the statewide planning goals as a matter of law, if the amendment is not appealed or is affirmed on appeal. Therefore, whether errors in a city's notice to DLCD under ORS 197.610 warrant remand depends upon whether the errors are of the kind or of a degree that calls into question whether the ORS 197.610 to 197.625 process nevertheless performed its function. If so, remand may be required, without regard to whether petitioners before LUBA can demonstrate prejudice to their substantial rights. OCAPA v. City of Mosier, 44 Or LUBA 452 (2003).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where a city's notice to DLCD under ORS 197.610(1) states that the initial evidentiary hearing on a proposed zoning ordinance amendment will be held on November 7 and the hearing is actually held on November 6, and LUBA cannot determine whether persons who may have been depending on notice that DLCD subsequently provided of that initial evidentiary hearing may have been prejudiced by the city's error, LUBA will remand the city's decision. OCAPA v. City of Mosier, 44 Or LUBA 452 (2003).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. A pro forma declaration of "emergency circumstances," unaccompanied by stated reasons directed at the necessity for expedited review, is insufficient to satisfy ORS 197.610. Cited concerns about unregulated development in the floodplain constitute a sufficient declaration of emergency under ORS 197.610 to allow expedited adoption proceedings. Barnard Perkins Corp. v. City of Rivergrove, 34 Or LUBA 660 (1998).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. If a city's decision to adopt a tree-cutting ordinance is not a statutory land use decision, none of the notice provisions found in ORS 197.830 or any other land use statute apply, except perhaps by analogy. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 30 Or LUBA 212 (1995).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Where an ordinance amends the text of a zoning ordinance by adding a temporary overlay district, identifies a map showing where the overlay district applies an "attachment to" the zoning map and does not purport to amend the section of the zoning ordinance under which the zoning map is adopted, it is reasonable and correct to interpret a code notice of hearing provision governing amendments to the text of the zoning ordinance, rather than another provision governing amendments to the "zoning map," as applicable. Orenco Neighborhood v. City of Hillsboro, 29 Or LUBA 186 (1995).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Applying the three-factor analysis used by the Oregon Supreme Court in Strawberry Hill 4-Wheelers v. Benton Co. Bd. of Comm., 287 Or 591, 601 P2d 769 (1979), a city council-initiated ordinance amending the city code to list nonprofit rehabilitation training centers as a conditional use in several of the city's residential zones is legislative in nature. Andrews v. City of Brookings, 27 Or LUBA 39 (1994).

30.2.2 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Procedure. Although the party initiating a challenged zoning ordinance amendment was not clearly identified on the application and notices of local public hearings as required by the local code, such procedural errors provide no basis for reversal or remand where petitioners' substantial rights were not prejudiced. Parmenter v. Wallowa County, 21 Or LUBA 490 (1991).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. LUBA will remand a legislative text amendment prohibiting new fossil fuel export terminals when nothing in the city's decision or the record explains how the amendment is consistent with the city's comprehensive plan policy requiring the city to "support multimodal freight transportation improvements to provide competitive regional access to global markets." Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a city adopts a legislative text amendment prohibiting expansion of existing fossil fuel terminals without considering consistency with a subarea plan policy objective to "foster a business and policy environment that promotes continued private and public sector investments in infrastructure, facilities, equipment and jobs," LUBA will remand the decision to the city to consider whether prohibiting expansion of fossil fuel terminals is consistent with the objective. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Remand is necessary where a city adopts a legislative text amendment prohibiting expansion of existing fossil fuel terminals, without addressing consistency with a subarea plan policy objective to "maintain, protect and enhance private transportation investments" in the subarea, "including rail and marine terminals, to ensure continued viability as a major center for the import and export of industrial products in the State of Oregon." Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. LUBA will reject an argument that a legislative text amendment prohibiting new or expanded fossil fuel terminals is inconsistent with the Metro Framework Plan and Metro Transportation Plan where the city's code requires only that code text amendments are consistent with Metro's Urban Growth Management Functional Plan. Columbia Pacific v. City of Portland, 76 Or LUBA 15 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A county ordinance that adopts a text amendment to a comprehensive plan that discontinues a coastal advisory committee that is provided for in the comprehensive plan, and replaces it with a process for "appointing advisory committees to address specific land use issues" does not violate the requirements of Statewide Planning Goal 1 (Citizen Involvement) to provide for "clearly define[d] * * * procedures by which the general public will be involved in the on-going land-use planning process" and for the "continuity of citizen participation and of information that enables citizens to identify and comprehend issues." Oregon Coast Alliance v. Clatsop County, 75 Or LUBA 277 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A city council does not err by amending its zoning ordinance to prohibit renting dwellings in a residential zone for weddings following a ruling by a municipal court that the zoning ordinance did not prohibit such use, where the city believed its zoning ordinance already prohibited such use and petitioner offers no legal theory for why the city could not adopt such an amendment to clarify the issue. Whittemore v. City of Gearhart, 75 Or LUBA 374 (2017).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A zoning text amendment that merely lists other existing development standards that may or may not apply to needed housing on their own terms cannot be challenged on the basis that the unamended development standards may include subjective or unclear standards applicable to needed housing, in violation of ORS 197.307(4) and Goal 10. If the existing unamended development standards violate ORS 197.307(4), such violations can be challenged only in an appeal of a decision that adopts, amends or applies those standards. Shamrock Homes LLC v. City of Springfield, 68 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a zoning amendment standard requires that the city shall consider the comprehensive plan, and the city's transportation system plan proposes a pedestrian crossing near the rezoned property that the applicant's traffic engineer testified may require changes to the proposed development, but the findings do not address the issue, remand is necessary for the city to consider the issue or explain why no such consideration is warranted under the zoning amendment standard. Save Downtown Canby v. City of Canby, 67 Or LUBA 385 (2013).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a local government adopts a new zone in one legislative decision and then applies that new zone to property in a separate legislative decision, which is then appealed to LUBA, a challenge that the new zone is contrary to the statewide planning goals may be precluded by acknowledgment of the first decision. However, acknowledgment does not insulate the new zone from a facial challenge on statutory or constitutional grounds, advanced in the appeal of the second legislative decision that for the first time applies the new zone to specific properties. Barnes v. City of Hillsboro, 61 Or LUBA 375 (2010).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Zoning text amendments intended to permit a majority of lands zoned for recreational commercial uses to be used for residential development unrelated to recreational commercial uses are inconsistent with comprehensive plan policies that impose on the city an affirmative obligation to support development of the zone with recreational commercial uses. Sorensen v. City of Creswell, 54 Or LUBA 468 (2007).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Absent some authority to the contrary, the uses allowed within a Public Parks zone or a Public Amusement zone are not limited to "recreational" or "public amusement" uses. Cox v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 78 (2005).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A finding that allowing dog control facilities on public property in several public use zones will save public money is sufficient to explain why a legislative text amendment is in the "public interest." Cox v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 78 (2005).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a development code includes a requirement that its standards for subdivision approval must "provide safe * * * traffic conditions," findings that explain how an amended development code subdivision approval standard will make the transportation system safer are adequate to demonstrate compliance with that development code requirement notwithstanding that alternative subdivision approval standards might result in safer traffic conditions or achieve those safer traffic conditions more quickly. Doob v. City of Grants Pass, 48 Or LUBA 587 (2005).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A zoning code amendment that purports to legalize lots or parcels that were created by deed or land sales contract in violation of the applicable local criteria at the time of creation is inconsistent with ORS 92.010 and ORS 215.010(1). Stevens v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 381 (2004).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Oregon Laws 1993, chapter 590, section 6, allows counties to avoid implementing statutory changes to the destination resort requirements until no later than their next periodic review. Even if a county has not concluded its next periodic review, it cannot substantially amend its pre-1993 destination resort regulations without implementing those changes. Stevens v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 381 (2004).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Given the ubiquity of land use regulations governing contemporary zoning decisions, it is doubtful whether the "spot zoning" standard described in Smith v. Washington County, 241 Or 380, 406 P2d 545 (1965), continues to have independent applicability. Whether a rezoning decision constitutes arbitrary or spot zoning depends on whether the decision is made in derogation of established criteria or made without criteria. NWDA v. City of Portland, 47 Or LUBA 533 (2004).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Because a local rule establishing a one-year expiration period for permits is not a "land use regulation," the fact that the rule was not adopted in accordance with the procedural requirements or ORS 197.610 through 197.625 has no bearing on its effectiveness. Rest Haven Memorial Park v. City of Eugene, 44 Or LUBA 231 (2003).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. LUBA may not overlook the fact that a new land use regulation is facially noncompliant with a Metro standard that the regulation is intended to implement, simply because the regulation requires compliance with unspecified standards of a sewerage agency that allegedly comply with the Metro standard. Even if the sewerage agency standards comply with the Metro standard, it is questionable whether the city may adopt noncompliant regulations and rely on a separate local government or agency to ensure compliance with the Metro standard. Stallkamp v. City of King City, 43 Or LUBA 333 (2002).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a city adopts a comprehensive update to its zoning code in an effort to comply with the ORS 197.307(6) requirement that standards applied to needed housing statutes be "clear and objective," and in so doing carries forward preexisting standards that are not clear and objective, such standards are subject to review under ORS 197.307(6), and such review does not constitute an impermissible collateral attack on those standards. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 370 (2002).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A code amendment that grants discretionary authority for city staff to impose conditions on approval of needed housing may constitute or contain "standards" or "procedures for approval" that must, under ORS 197.307(6), be clear and objective. Such standards are subject to review in an appeal of the city's legislative decision adopting the amendment. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 370 (2002).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. The ORS 92.285 prohibition against adopting retroactive ordinances includes ordinances that allow retroactive application. Church v. Grant County, 37 Or LUBA 646 (2000).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A legislative amendment that changes mobile home parks from a conditional use to a use in a floating zone which has not been applied to any particular site conflicts with ORS 197.480(1) and (2), which require that the city zone specific lands for mobile home parks, commensurate with the need for such parks. Creswell Court v. City of Creswell, 35 Or LUBA 234 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Requiring an applicant to prove a need for a mobile home park in addition to applying for a rezoning and site review for an allowed use violates ORS 197.480(1) and the ORS 197.307(6) requirement for clear and objective standards. Creswell Court v. City of Creswell, 35 Or LUBA 234 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where ORS 197.435 requires that the county locate and exclude all high value crop areas from a destination resort zone overlay and the county's analysis of the high value crop areas is limited to farms that actually demonstrated the ability to grow high value crops, rather than those capable of producing them, the county's analysis is inconsistent with Goal 8 and the statute. Boyer v. Baker County, 35 Or LUBA 223 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. The statutory order of operations for confirming that a destination resort overlay amendment meets the requirements of Goal 8 and ORS 197.435(2) is to first map the concentrations of commercial farms and then determine which farms could produce the requisite $1,000 per-acre per-year yield. Boyer v. Baker County, 35 Or LUBA 223 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. A land development ordinance amendment adopting a half-acre minimum lot size for a flood hazard zone is not reviewable for compliance with Goal 5 where the acknowledged comprehensive plan calls for a half-acre minimum in the flood hazard zone. Barnard Perkins Corp. v. City of Rivergrove, 34 Or LUBA 660 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. The ORS 215.110(6) prohibition against retroactive land use regulations does not prohibit amending land use regulations to legalize uses that were constructed illegally. Femling v. Coos County, 34 Or LUBA 328 (1998).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where a post-acknowledgment code amendment adds a certain type of use to the uses allowed in a particular zone, comprehensive plan provisions which do not refer to that type of use and could be consistent with a number of different code amendments are not "specific" policies providing the basis for the code amendment, as referred to in ORS 197.835(5)(b). Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Regardless of whether one or more of its zoning districts already allow a particular use, a local government may choose to amend its zoning ordinance to allow that use in another zoning district, so long as it complies with applicable legal standards in doing so. Melton v. City of Cottage Grove, 28 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Under OAR 660-06-003(1)(d), (2)(d), (3) and the "Applicability Matrix" of OAR 660-06-003(5), the Goal 4 rule applies to virtually all land use regulation amendments. DLCD v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 32 (1992).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Amending an acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to establish a process for case-by-case application of the Goal 5 planning process in conjunction with individual development requests does not comply with Goal 5 and the Goal 5 administrative rule. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 291 (1992).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. In amending its acknowledged zoning ordinance to add a broad definition of a "utility facility" and to allow utility facilities in all zoning districts, without any express limitation on the size or scale of such facilities, a local government must adopt findings identifying and addressing relevant comprehensive plan and statewide planning goal requirements, including Goals 11 and 14 (which preclude urban levels of facilities and development on rural lands). Parmenter v. Wallowa County, 21 Or LUBA 490 (1991).

30.2.3 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Text Amendment: Standards. Where there is an apparent conflict between a plan provision and an amended code provision, the city must explain in its findings why the code amendment does not conflict with the plan provision. Nicolai v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 142 (1990).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where the only variable between multiple Urban Growth Area-Urban Growth Management (UGA-UGM) zones is lot size, and where a county code provision provides that "[t]he density of one UGA-UGM zoning district is not interchangeable with the density of another UGA-UGM zoning district without prior review and approval by the affected city and * * * County," an interpretation by the county that the provision applies to zone changes of the subject property or changes to the underlying density of the zone in which the subject property is located, but that it does not apply to lot size variances, is inconsistent with the express language of the provision. In such cases, where the local code does not define "density" and the dictionary defines "density" as the quantity or number per unit of area, LUBA will make its own determination that a lot size variance in a UGA-UGM zone may qualify as an "interchange[]" with the density of another UGA-UGM zone, thereby requiring city review and approval. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a property owner whose property is subject to a rezoning application withdraws consent to the zone change, that withdrawal of consent may be effective to deprive a county of jurisdiction to proceed on the zone change application, even if it is possible that a circuit court will ultimately determine that the nonconsenting property owner is contractually obligated to support the zone change by contracts entered into by their predecessor-in-interest. Setniker v. Polk County, 75 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. ORS 227.180(1)(b) authorizes city councils to provide that a decision by a hearings officer or other decision-making authority in a proceeding for discretionary permit or zone change approval is the city's final decision. But ORS 227.180(1)(b) does not authorize a city council to make a hearings officer's or other decision-making authority's decision the city's final decision concerning an application for a comprehensive plan map amendment. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a comprehensive plan categorizes lands within the urban growth boundary according to suitability for development, a county errs by denying a request for rezoning on the basis that the requested rezoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, where the findings identify nothing in the comprehensive plan that supports a conclusion that the property's low suitability rating precludes the requested rezoning. Sperber v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 763 (2008).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. While ORS 215.223(3) requires a county to provide notice of the hearing on a "zone change," a proposal to correct the official zoning map to accurately reflect previously adopted ordinances is not a "zone change" within the meaning of ORS 215.223(3), and therefore the county's failure to provide notice of such a map correction does not violate the statute. Sullivan v. Polk County, 51 Or LUBA 107 (2006).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a planning commission recommendation to correct the zoning map is a condition precedent to the governing body's correction of the zoning map under the local code, the governing body cannot "substitute" for the required recommendation a planning commission recommendation to rezone the subject property under a different code provision. Sullivan v. Polk County, 51 Or LUBA 107 (2006).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A decision that amends the comprehensive plan and zoning maps for a 20-acre parcel in single ownership is properly viewed as a quasi-judicial decision under Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers, and therefore the county erred in conducting the hearing and adopting the decision under legislative procedures, which do not provide written notice to adjoining landowners. Sullivan v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 543 (2005).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. LUBA will remand a city's zoning designation decision, where the decision is dependent on the validity of a concurrent annexation decision that LUBA has concluded does not comply with applicable law. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a county has a unified zoning map and comprehensive plan map, any application for a zoning map amendment is by necessity also an application for a comprehensive plan map amendment. A combined zoning and comprehensive plan map amendment application is not one of the three kinds of land use applications described in ORS 215.427(1), and for that reason the fixed goal post rule at ORS 215.427(3) does not apply. Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 565 (2002).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A city does not exceed its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting code language providing for "rezoning" of property for limited commercial purposes "on a conditional use basis" to allow limited commercial uses on the property pursuant to a conditional use permit, without amending the zoning map to apply a commercial zone to the property. Chilla v. City of North Bend, 41 Or LUBA 539 (2002).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Neither Goal 2 nor ORS 197.175(2) require that zoning ordinance amendments that are necessary to implement a comprehensive plan map amendment be adopted at the same time as the plan amendment. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. The lack of an available implementing zoning district at the time a conditional plan map amendment is adopted does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. In that event, at the time the city amends its zoning map to implement the conditional plan map amendment, it will be required to (1) adopt a new implementing zoning district or amend an existing zoning district so that it could be applied, or (2) adopt further plan map amendments that may be required to allow adoption of an implementing zoning district. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Where a comprehensive plan map amendment adopts a plan map designation that authorizes several zoning districts, LUBA will assume the city will later apply the zoning districts that will comply with housing goals, rather than zoning districts that might violate those housing goals. If inappropriate zoning districts are applied later, the decisions adopting those zoning districts can be corrected through an appeal of those zoning map decisions. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. Substantial evidence supports a city council's finding that the planning commission, rather than a neighborhood association, "initiated" a plan and zone map change as required by local ordinance, where the planning commission was informed of the ordinance requirement, and voted to conduct proceedings on the request of the neighborhood association to consider the map change. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. A quasi-judicial plan and zone map amendment initiated by the city planning commission is an "application for a land use decision," for purposes of the notice requirements of ORS 197.763(3), and thus the city's notice of hearing must list the applicable criteria from its ordinance and plan. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure. There is no requirement that a legislative land use decision redesignating numerous properties include findings specifically setting out the justification for the change in designation made for each affected property. McInnis v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 1 (1994).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure A local government decision approving a quasi-judicial zone change must be supported by written findings identifying the applicable criteria, setting out the facts relied on and explaining the reasons why the facts establish compliance with the applicable standards. Strecker v. City of Spray, 25 Or LUBA 264 (1993).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure Where no specific use is proposed in conjunction with a zone change, the notice of hearing is not required to indicate all of the possible uses of the property under the proposed new zone. However, where a reasons goal exception for a particular use is also proposed, ORS 197.763(3)(a) requires that the notice of hearing identify the particular use proposed to be made of the property. Caine v. Tillamook County, 22 Or LUBA 687 (1992).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure A local government may not condition approval of zoning and comprehensive plan map amendments on an applicant's agreement to relinquish a right granted in a prior land use decision, unless there is a sufficient connection between the requested map amendments and the prior land use decision. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure Although detailed findings are not always required to justify conditions of land use approval, the evidentiary record must be sufficient to demonstrate a connection between the condition imposed and the planning purpose served by the condition. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure Where the evidentiary record demonstrates that the proposed expansion of a medical clinic is needed to provide adequate facilities for existing patients and staff and would not result in additional patients or staff, the local government improperly conditioned approval of required plan and zoning map amendments on the clinic's agreement to relinquish a previously granted approval for parking lot egress onto an adjoining street. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

30.2.4 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Procedure Where a county's land development ordinance provides for adoption of resolutions of intent to rezone and makes such resolutions binding commitments that the county will grant rezoning when conditions stated in such resolutions of intent to rezone are met, a resolution of intent to rezone is a final appealable decision. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government determines, in applying a particular zone to property, that the property meets the applicable criteria for the zone, it need not independently revisit that determination in considering subsequent applications to remove the zone from the property. Simons Investment Properties, LLC v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 486 (2020).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where comprehensive plan provisions provide, using mandatory language, that certain resource plan and zoning designations shall be used to conserve or protect fish and wildlife habitat from conflicting uses and that land use proposals that have undesirable impacts on those resources shall be reviewed during the plan and zone amendment processes, a local governing body errs in interpreting those provisions to conclude that it may apply nonresource plan and zoning designations to property mapped as fish and wildlife habitat and that any impacts may be evaluated and, if necessary, mitigated during subsequent review of development proposals. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 338 (2020).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local code provision requires that a requested zone change be justified by proof that "[t]he potential impact upon the area resulting from the change has been considered," a finding that "[n]o significant evidence was presented by the Applicant regarding the impact upon the area, and certainly nothing indicating that the impact would be minimal or positive," does not impermissibly shift the burden of persuasion to the applicant because the applicant has the ultimate burden of establishing that their application complies with applicable criteria. Carroll v. City of Malin, 80 Or LUBA 298 (2019).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A county does not err in approving an application to correct an error in the original the plan and zone map designations of an existing mine from its original "Forest" plan map and zoning designation to Quarry and Mine Operations (QM), where the county's program to achieve Goal 5 is the QM designation and the mine was included on the county's inventory of significant aggregate sites when the initial plan and zone error occurred in 1984. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 474 (2018).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the hearings officer adopts a board of commissioners' interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy that was articulated in a different decision, and that interpretation is not challenged on appeal, LUBA will reject a challenge to the adequacy of the hearings officer's findings, arguing that the findings fail to resolve all potential inconsistencies or ambiguities in applying the commissioners' interpretation to the proposed rezoning at issue, where the findings adequately explain the hearings officer's understanding of the plan policy, as interpreted by the commissioners, and adequately explain how the policy is applied to the rezoning application before the hearings officer. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 302 (2017).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A hearings officer does not err in rejecting a zone change applicant's proposed zoning diagram that orients true north toward the top border of the diagram, instead of matching the orientation of the north arrow on the applicable comprehensive plan map, which is tilted two degrees relative to the top border, where there is no basis to assume that the tilted north arrow on the comprehensive plan map is a "scriveners' error." Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Notwithstanding statements that a hearings officer considered all documents in the record, where a hearings officer expressly declines to consider a proposed zoning diagram under the erroneous assumption that the diagram is not based on the adopted comprehensive plan map, remand is necessary for the hearings officer to consider the proposed diagram free of that mistaken assumption. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the only way a zone change applicant can demonstrate that proposed zoning is consistent with a small-scale comprehensive plan map that is not property-specific is to match surveyed lines with features depicted on the comprehensive plan map such as roads, a reasonable decision-maker would not rely solely upon an approach that matches only a single survey line with a single feature, but would at least consider approaches that match multiple survey lines with multiple features, given the greater accuracy and reliability of a multiple-referent approach. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Remand is necessary where a hearings officer determines that a proposed zone change is consistent with a comprehensive plan map that is not property-specific by matching a single survey line with a road depicted on the plan map, but fails to consider other matchups between survey lines and features on the map that might provide a more accurate alignment of the zoning boundary with the comprehensive plan map, absent an explanation for why the additional survey lines matchups are unreliable. Laurel Hill Valley Citizens v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 140 (2016).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. For an implied interpretation of a local standard to be adequate for review, the findings embodying the interpretation must carry one possible meaning of the ambiguous language in the standard, and an easily inferred explanation of that meaning. A finding that proposed rezoning to higher density residential use is consistent with a plan policy that requires "good access" to an arterial because the property is located near a minor arterial does not embody an implied interpretation adequate for review to the effect that "good access" is satisfied by physical proximity of the property to the arterial, regardless of the quality of access to that arterial. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A finding of compliance with a zone change standard requiring consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that higher density residential uses be sited "near employment" is inadequate, where the finding does not address proximity to employment at all, other than state that the property is adjacent to a small convenience commercial node. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that higher density residential use be sited in locations with "good access" to arterials is inadequate, where the finding states only that the site is located near an arterial, but without attempting to evaluate whether the site has or will in fact have good access to the arterial. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that residential densities maintain a proper relationship between public facilities and services and population distribution is inadequate, where the finding merely recites that proposed higher density residential development will comply with the density requirements in the code, but without explaining how density will maintain the proper relationship between public facilities and population distribution. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A finding of consistency with a comprehensive plan provision requiring that future development shall respect the character of the existing area is inadequate, where the finding simply states that the general character of the area is "residential," without evaluating whether placing higher density residential development in the middle of an area zoned and developed with low density residential development is consistent with respecting the character of the existing area. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a zone change standard requires a finding that adequate transportation networks to support the use are presently provided or planned to be provided concurrently with development of the property, a finding that this standard is met because future development will be subject to subdivision and site design review is inadequate to establish that the subject site has required secondary access or that such access is planned to be provided concurrently with development of the property. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A petitioner fails to establish that findings that a zone change is justified based on evidence of change in the community, where the findings identify two changes in the community that justify the zone change, but the petitioner challenges only the adequacy and evidentiary support for the findings regarding one of the identified changes. Kine v. City of Bend, 72 Or LUBA 423 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Findings are inadequate to establish that rezoning land adjacent to an estuary to allow for urban residential development is consistent with Goal 16, where federal agencies testified that development allowed under the rezone would adversely affect estuarine resources, but the findings do not address that testimony, or evaluate impacts of development on the estuary as Goal 16, Implementation Requirement 1 requires. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Brookings, 71 Or LUBA 14 (2015).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A zone change applicant's voluntary representations regarding the density and number of parking spaces that could be constructed under the new zoning are not binding on that applicant's subsequent design review application that proposes a higher density and fewer parking spaces, where nothing in the zone change criteria required submittal or approval of development plans, and the hearings officer did not consider or rely upon the applicant's voluntary representations in approving the zone change. Sellwood-Moreland Improvement League v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 213 (2013).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. That the county initially adopted a problematic interpretation of the criteria for applying a limited use overlay zone to limit uses allowed on land for which a reasons exception is taken does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the county adopted an alternative interpretation that is consistent with the text of the zone change criteria. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Under a zone change criterion that requires a finding that the proposed base zone is "best suited" to accommodate the proposed use, in order to apply a limited use overlay zone to limit uses of the property to uses justified in a reasons exception, the fact that other base zones would also accommodate the proposed use does not undermine the county's finding that the proposed tourist commercial zone is best suited, where there is no evidence that the other zones are better suited than the tourist commercial zone, and the reasons exception was expressly justified based on tourist commercial uses and application of the tourist commercial base zone. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a code standard allowing imposition of a limited use overlay zone if "it is required to limit the uses permitted in the proposed zone" by the reasons exception rule at OAR chapter 660, division 4, to employ the overlay zone to limit uses to ensure consistency with Statewide Planning Goal 12 (Transportation), and the need to take an exception to Goal 12, even though the county took reasons exceptions only to other statewide planning goals, where the county's interpretation is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose or underlying policy of the code standard. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A zone change application is not "an application for development of needed housing" within the meaning of ORS 197.307(3)(b) and is not subject to the prohibition in ORS 197.307(6) (2009) against applying criteria that are not "clear and objective" to such applications. EEC Holdings LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 179 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A governing body's interpretation of a code provision allowing rezoning when "zoning previously adopted for the area was in error" to focus on the parcel to be rezoned rather than the surrounding area is consistent with the text of the provision, and will be affirmed. O'Brien v. Lincoln County, 65 Or LUBA 286 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A petitioner's challenge to alternative findings that a parcel being rezoned was legally created does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the petitioner fails to challenge the county's primary finding that the rezoning standards do not require a finding that the parcel was legally created. O'Brien v. Lincoln County, 65 Or LUBA 286 (2012).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government adopts a new zone in one legislative decision and then applies that new zone to property in a separate legislative decision, which is then appealed to LUBA, a challenge that the new zone is contrary to the statewide planning goals may be precluded by acknowledgment of the first decision. However, acknowledgment does not insulate the new zone from a facial challenge on statutory or constitutional grounds, advanced in the appeal of the second legislative decision that for the first time applies the new zone to specific properties. Barnes v. City of Hillsboro, 61 Or LUBA 375 (2010).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When zone change approval standards require that the zone change be compatible with potential adverse impacts and that there be adequate public services to serve possible uses, the local government must consider the potential or likely uses allowed by the zone change in determining whether those approval standards are satisfied. The local government may not defer such considerations until development is proposed. Santiam Water Control District v. City of Stayton, 54 Or LUBA 553 (2007).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Under a local code provision that requires evaluation of the traffic impacts caused by "development of the property" being rezoned, in rezoning land to allow for a new aggregate mine the local government is not required to evaluate the cumulative traffic impacts of the new mine along with other mines the applicant operates. Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a zoning map amendment criterion requires the applicant to demonstrate that the uses allowed in the new zone would not "materially and/or adversely affect the character of the neighborhood," selection of too small an area for analysis could frustrate the purpose of the criterion. However, where petitioners do not show that the area selected was too small and the city's findings explain that the residential to commercial rezoning is in an area that is already a mixed commercial and residential area, petitioners do not demonstrate a basis for remand. Cornelius First v. City of Cornelius, 52 Or LUBA 486 (2006).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A standard requiring a finding that the uses allowed by the proposed zoning "can be served through the orderly extension of key urban facilities and services" does not require evaluation of all theoretically possible uses allowed in the new zone. A city does not err in interpreting such a standard as being satisfied by evidence that uses likely to be developed under the new zone, given the property's size and other constraints, can be served by key urban facilities and services. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A city does not err in assuming that two developed lots that are part of a five-lot tract will not be redeveloped when rezoned, for purposes of a rezoning standard requiring that uses allowed in the proposed zoning can be served by urban services, including transportation facilities, where the applicant does not propose redevelopment and the code requires a similar evaluation when property is redeveloped. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A rezoning criterion requiring that the site be "suitable" for the proposed medium-density residential zone requires an assumption that the property will develop with the multi-family dwelling units allowed in the proposed zone, but does not necessarily require the local government to speculate as to the particular quality or density of actual development. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The predicate for correcting the zoning map is a mismatch between the map and one or more underlying ordinances that authorize zoning map changes. That process cannot be used to change the zoning map designation to reflect amendments that no ordinance has ever authorized. Sullivan v. Polk County, 49 Or LUBA 543 (2005).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Remand is necessary to reconsider what plan policies apply to a proposal to rezone property from one commercial zone to another, when the findings are predicated on an erroneous assumption that the property is plan designated medium density residential rather than commercial. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Given the ubiquity of land use regulations governing contemporary zoning decisions, it is doubtful whether the "spot zoning" standard described in Smith v. Washington County, 241 Or 380, 406 P2d 545 (1965), continues to have independent applicability. Whether a rezoning decision constitutes arbitrary or spot zoning depends on whether the decision is made in derogation of established criteria or made without criteria. NWDA v. City of Portland, 47 Or LUBA 533 (2004).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A city's refusal to interpret a zoning ordinance standard that requires that requested rezoning must be the "best suited for the specific site, based on specific policies of the * * * [c]omprehensive [p]lan" to require that the applicant demonstrate a current unmet need for the uses allowed in the requested zone is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1), where no plan policy is worded to impose that requirement. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 44 Or LUBA 698 (2003).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Although a city might reasonably interpret a rezoning criterion that requires application of the "best suited" zone to require that an applicant demonstrate a need for the uses that would be allowed under the requested zoning, a city might also reasonably reject that interpretation and find that current land use needs are not relevant to its decision regarding which zoning district is "best suited." Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 44 Or LUBA 698 (2003).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A county is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting a code provision requiring a showing of "public need" for "rezonings," to apply only to map amendments to a base zone, and not to map amendments to an overlay zone. Doty v. Jackson County, 43 Or LUBA 34 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a standard requiring that "other lands in the county" be unavailable for the uses allowed under proposed rezoning to be satisfied by examining lands in the vicinity of the subject property, and not to require consideration of all lands throughout the entire county. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 43 Or LUBA 97 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Although market demand for rural residential housing is not sufficient to establish "need" for such housing for purposes of taking an exception to statewide planning goals governing rural resource lands, there is no reason why market demand cannot suffice to establish "need" for rural residential housing for purposes of a local rezoning standard, nor any reason why such need must be evaluated against the county's Goal 10 inventory. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 43 Or LUBA 97 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. An application to change a unified comprehensive plan and zoning map does not in itself require a "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is therefore not an application for a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.402(4). Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 565 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local zone change criterion that requires a showing that "there is an existing, demonstrable need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone, considering the importance of such uses to the citizenry or the economy of the area, the existing market demand which such uses will satisfy, and the availability and location of other lands so zoned and their suitability for the use allowed by the zone" is not satisfied by determining that there is a lack of residentially zoned land within a five-mile study area, where the study did not include consideration of the "importance of [the use] to the citizenry or the economy of the area," and did not consider the suitability of other appropriately zoned land for the use allowed by the zone. DLCD v. Yamhill County, 42 Or LUBA 126 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A city is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting code language providing for "certain limited commercial" uses within a Residential Transitional zone as not limiting commercial uses to those listed in the Limited Commercial zone. Chilla v. City of North Bend, 41 Or LUBA 539 (2002).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a zone change criterion requires that an area have a "historical commitment to commercial uses" and the county governing body finds that criterion is met by a property that has been vacant for 11 years but was used for commercial purposes for the prior 65 years, LUBA will defer to that interpretation under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a zoning map is part of the city's zoning ordinance, an amendment of the zoning map constitutes a land use regulation amendment, within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0060, and must meet the requirements of OAR 660-012-0060(1) if the zoning map amendment will significantly affect a transportation facility. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a city's finding that a zoning map amendment will not significantly affect transportation facilities is based on a lengthy transportation impact study, and petitioner attacks that finding based on other evidence of questionable relevance without developing any arguments challenging the transportation impact study, petitioner provides no basis for reversal or remand. Adams v. City of Medford, 39 Or LUBA 464 (2001).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A city may demonstrate compliance with a zoning change criterion that requires that the identified public need will be best served by rezoning the proposed site by showing that other sites, individually or as a group, are inferior to the proposed site. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Remand is appropriate where the county's decision rezones 10 acres of a 121-acre farm/forest parcel to allow the landowner to site a nonresource dwelling, without explaining why the rezone is consistent with a code provision prohibiting rezoning that affords "special privileges to an individual property owner not available to the general public." McLane v. Klamath County, 37 Or LUBA 888 (2000).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether rezoning of land from multi-family to single-family residential uses is consistent with Goal 10 and the city's obligation to provide for multi-family dwellings, the relevant inquiry is not limited by the amount of land designated for multi-family residential uses. The city can take into account multi-family dwellings that have been approved in other zones in determining whether the proposed rezoning is consistent with the city's obligation to provide a sufficient number of multi-family dwellings. Herman v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 521 (1999).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the notice of hearing contained an error in identifying the zoning map designation being requested, the error provides no basis for reversal or remand where the error had no effect on the approval standards the zone change request was subject to and therefore resulted in no prejudice to petitioner. Sanders v. Yamhill County, 34 Or LUBA 69 (1998).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In approving comprehensive plan and zoning map amendments, the county's findings must demonstrate that Goal 14 is satisfied without reliance on past practices or on plan and code provisions that are subject to revision during periodic review. Brown v. Jefferson County, 33 Or LUBA 418 (1997).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In approving a zone map amendment, the county cannot support a required finding of adequate water on the subject parcel solely by relying on evidence of water on nearby parcels, absent an explanation how that evidence leads to the conclusion that the subject parcel has adequate water, or an interpretation of the county code such that it requires only a showing of adequate water in the area. Doob v. Josephine County, 32 Or LUBA 364 (1997).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. The statewide goals apply independently to a county's zoning amendment where the comprehensive plan specifies that zone changes must comply with applicable statewide goals. Doob v. Josephine County, 32 Or LUBA 364 (1997).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the county attempts to apply a rural residential zoning density in an irrevocably committed exception area, a conclusory finding that redesignation of the subject parcel will not cause adjacent resource lands to satisfy working paper guidelines for irrevocably committed exceptions does not substitute for the actual analysis required under OAR 660-04-018(2)(b)(B) regarding the potential commitment of adjacent resource lands to nonresource use. Johnson v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 454 (1996).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. That an existing conditional use asphalt batch plant could be a permitted use under a county's mineral and aggregate overlay zone does not require that the county incorporate the conditional use into a decision approving application of the overlay zone to an area including the existing conditional use or that the county re-approve the conditional use as part of the decision applying the overlay zone. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where an ordinance changing the plan and zone designations of the subject property provides the property will revert to its former designations if a final order denying a conditional use permit (CUP) for a mobile home park is issued, the local governing body acts within its interpretive discretion in deciding the contingency is not met when LUBA remands a local government decision approving a CUP for a mobile home park and the local government does not take further action on that application. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. By definition, all land outside an acknowledged UGB and not the subject of an exception to Goal 14 is "rural" land. When amending its acknowledged comprehensive plan and zone designations for such land, a local government must demonstrate that the new plan and zone designations comply with Goal 14 or adopt an exception to Goal 14. Churchill v. Tillamook County, 29 Or LUBA 68 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In adopting a quasi-judicial comprehensive plan and land use regulation amendment, a local government is obligated either to demonstrate compliance with the Transportation Planning Rule (TPR) or, alternatively, establish that the TPR does not apply. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where respondents do not identify specific provisions in the applicable comprehensive plan, which they contend provide the basis for challenged zone changes, under ORS 197.825(5)(b) LUBA is required to reverse or remand the zone changes if they do not comply with applicable provisions of the Statewide Planning Goals or their implementing rules. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When adopting post-acknowledgment plan and zone map amendments affecting residentially designated land within an urban growth boundary, a local government must demonstrate that it continues to satisfy its Goal 10 obligation to maintain an adequate inventory of buildable lands. Opus Development Corp. v. City of Eugene, 28 Or LUBA 670 (1995).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government decision changing the comprehensive plan and zone designations of land with identified Goal 5 resources, must identify conflicting uses potentially allowable under the proposed new designations. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the comprehensive plan requires a zone change application to demonstrate the chosen site is superior or equal to alternative sites, findings that simply state no one identified alternative sites during the local proceedings are inadequate to establish compliance with the plan standard. Neuman v. City of Albany, 28 Or LUBA 337 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government wishes to defer a determination of compliance with a code zone change standard requiring that storm sewers can accommodate potential development, it must, at a minimum, identify in the challenged decision feasible engineering solutions to accommodate storm water runoff and require that such solutions be in place prior to development. Neuman v. City of Albany, 28 Or LUBA 337 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether land subject to a proposed comprehensive plan and zone map change is composed of predominantly Class I-IV soils, as required by OAR 660-33-020(1)(a)(A), it is permissible for a local government to examine only the acreage under consideration. DLCD v. Curry County, 28 Or LUBA 205 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In determining whether land subject to a proposed comprehensive plan and zone map change is (1) suitable for farm use, (2) necessary to permit farm use on other agricultural land, or (3) intermingled with lands of Class I-IV soils; as required by OAR 660-33-020(1)(a)(B) to (C) and (b); a local government's analysis must include all property in common ownership with the subject land. DLCD v. Curry County, 28 Or LUBA 205 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a county proposes to change the zoning of agricultural land designated Farm/Forest on its comprehensive plan map, a standard that "the purpose of the Comprehensive Plan and Zoning Ordinance will be carried out by approving the proposal" requires the county to explain how the proposed zone change carries out the purpose of the Farm/Forest plan designation and the plan agricultural goals. DLCD v. Polk County, 27 Or LUBA 345 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where property is the subject of a concurrent comprehensive plan map amendment and zone change, the zone change is made under an unacknowledged plan amendment and must comply with those statewide planning goals applicable to the unacknowledged plan amendment. ORS 197.175(2)(e) and 197.625(3)(b). Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan policy governing "establish[ment] and change" of an urban growth boundary is not applicable to a local government decision amending the plan and zoning map designations of property that is entirely within the urban growth boundary. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local government can show an amendment to its acknowledged comprehensive plan and zoning maps complies with Goal 12 (Transportation) by establishing either (1) there is a safe and adequate transportation system to serve development under the proposed map designations, or (2) development of the property under the proposed designations will not create greater or different transportation demands and impacts than development under the existing, acknowledged designations. ODOT v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 141 (1994).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. ORS 197.752(1) imposes a general planning obligation on local governments; it is not an approval standard directly applicable to rezoning or annexation decisions. Sorte v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 236 (1993).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where nothing requires a local government to determine whether the subject property is a "legal lot" as a prerequisite to approving a plan amendment and zone change, it is unnecessary for the local government to determine whether the subject property constitutes a lawfully created parcel. Makepeace v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 370 (1993).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government approves a zone change to protect a Goal 5 resource site, compliance with the Goal 5 planning process is sufficient to establish satisfaction of a local code requirement that a zone change "shall not be contrary to the public interest." Gonzalez v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 251 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a comprehensive plan policy provides that a change from a 10-acre minimum zone to a five-acre minimum zone requires that "parcels are generally five acres," a county's interpretation of this policy to require consideration of the entire 10-acre minimum zoned area that includes the subject property is not "clearly contrary" to the terms of, or "inconsistent with the express language" or "apparent purpose and policy" of, the plan policy and must be upheld. Thatcher v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. In applying a zone change criterion requiring that there be an error in "the zoning adopted for the area," the appropriate focus is on the time and circumstances under which the existing zoning of the area was applied. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. That different zoning may provide additional flexibility in developing property provides no basis for finding there was an error in applying the existing zoning to the property. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a petitioner alleges a zoning map amendment violates plan policies and an LCDC administrative rule, a local government is obligated to adopt findings explaining either why the plan policies and rule do not apply to the disputed zone change or why the zone change is consistent with the plan policies and rule. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. If property is not included in the Goal 5 inventory of the acknowledged comprehensive plan, and a proposed zone change does not affect that inventory, a local government is not required to consider whether the property should be included on that inventory. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone, considering the importance of such uses to the citizenry or the economy of the area," requires that the local government adequately identify and justify the area selected for the required analysis. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone," is not satisfied by findings that there is a need for rural housing on 2.5-acre lots where there is no attempt to explain why the rural housing need cannot be satisfied on vacant rural land zoned to allow rural residential development with one and five-acre minimum lot sizes. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone, considering the importance of such uses to the citizenry or the economy of the area," is not met where the findings simply assume the importance of rural housing to the citizenry or economy of the area. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring demonstration of a need to rezone property for rural residential development is not satisfied where the record shows a significant amount of vacant property currently zoned to allow such rural residential development. The local government may not assume such land is not "available" for rural residential development simply because it is not currently listed for sale. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a code zone change approval standard requires there be a "demand" for the "uses listed in the proposed zone at the proposed location," and the code also requires consideration of "the public interest" in allowing the zone change and the "availability of other appropriate[ly] zoned property," the desire of an individual property owner for a particular use on a particular parcel is not sufficient, in and of itself, to constitute a "demand." DLCD v. Clatsop County, 23 Or LUBA 173 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A proposal to rezone a parcel of land outside of an urban growth boundary from an exclusive farm use zone to a medium density residential zone requires that the local government demonstrate compliance with Goals 3, 5, 6, 11 and 12, or that an exception to those goals be adopted. Caine v. Tillamook County, 22 Or LUBA 687 (1992).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A local code provision establishing general approval criteria for nonlegislative zone changes does not apply to changes in overlay zone boundaries which are controlled by comprehensive plan inventory maps identifying the location and physical characteristics of certain types of resource areas. Gray v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 270 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Amendments of acknowledged comprehensive plans and land use regulations must be consistent with controlling provisions of the acknowledged comprehensive plan. DLCD v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 463 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a comprehensive plan provides two agricultural plan map designations, which are applied based on characteristics of the agricultural lands, but includes no standards for determining which designation to apply to properties with some of the characteristics of each, a decision to change the plan map designation from one to the other does not violate the plan. DLCD v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 463 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. There is no rule of general applicability to local government plan/zone change proceedings which requires a local government to consider the most intensive uses possible under the new plan/zone designation when approving a plan/zone change. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. While a local government cannot rely upon evidence of changed circumstances since adoption of its comprehensive plan to justify noncompliance with plan approval criteria for plan and zone map amendments, it may be able to rely upon evidence of changed circumstances as a basis for finding compliance with applicable plan and zone map amendment approval criteria. Brown & Cole, Inc. v. City of Estacada, 21 Or LUBA 392 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. When rezoning property, possible impacts of other more intensive uses permissible under the proposed zone may have to be considered where the proposed use is not among the more intensive uses allowed in the zone or there is little assurance the property will be used for the proposed use or a comparably intensive use. Wethers v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 78 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Comprehensive plan goals and policies that are worded as broad standards establishing policy direction for the local government in its comprehensive planning efforts are not approval standards for quasi-judicial zone changes. Angel v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 1 (1991).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. There is no rule of general applicability that in all local government plan/zone change proceedings, the impacts of the most intensive uses allowed under the new designation must be considered. Shirley v. Washington County, 20 Or LUBA 127 (1990).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A comprehensive plan statement that separation of use types along topographic, natural vegetation, and other features is "desirable" does not establish an approval criterion applicable to plan and zone map amendments. Bridges v. City of Salem, 19 Or LUBA 373 (1990).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where the subject property qualifies as forestland under provisions of the county's acknowledged comprehensive plan, and petitioner does not explain why the acknowledged plan standards do not control, an exception to Statewide Planning Goal 4 is required before the subject property can be redesignated and rezoned for nonforest uses. Chambers v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. Where a local government uses a two-stage approval process and determines whether a proposed zoning map amendment complies with applicable goal, plan and land use regulations in the first stage, petitioners may not fail to appeal the first stage approval decision and later assert goal, plan and land use regulation violations in a challenge of the local government's decision granting approval of the second stage. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

30.2.5 Zoning Ordinances – Amendment – Map Amendment: Standards. A "public need" criterion that requires determining whether additional land for a proposed destination resort (DR) is required "in consideration of that amount already provided by the current zoning district within the area to be served" only requires consideration of other land already designated DR, not other areas which are eligible for DR siting. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

30.3 Zoning Ordinance – Applicability. Where a county suspends operation of a verified nonconforming use based on notice of noncompliance with DEQ rules, and subsequently lifts that suspension based on notice that corrective actions have been taken, the county is not required to apply land use regulations relating to the discontinuation of nonconforming uses where those land use regulations apply only in the context of an application for development of a nonconforming use or a code enforcement proceeding. Because the county is not required to apply land use regulations, lifting the suspension is not a "land use decision" for purposes of ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A) and LUBA therefore lacks jurisdiction under ORS 197.825(1). Campbell v. Columbia County, 79 Or LUBA 56 (2019).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A zone verification is a limited tool and only those issues actually addressed in the zone verification decision are protected from collateral attack. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. When a city approves an application, nothing requires the city or intervenor to rezone the property in connection with the application, when the current zoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, and the current zoning does not allow for more intensive development than contemplated in the comprehensive plan. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. When local code sets out independent grounds for granting a variance, and when only one of three rezoning criteria must be met in order to grant a rezoning, and the city adequately demonstrated that one criterion was satisfied, LUBA need not consider arguments relating to the other two criteria. American Tower Corp v. City of Tualatin, 78 Or LUBA 350 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where it is not clear whether the enacting body intended comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions to be mandatory approval criteria, LUBA examines the wording and context of the particular provisions to determine whether they must be applied as mandatory approval criteria. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A list of special characteristics of a historic district are not mandatory approval criteria where they are not worded as mandatory requirements for future housing proposals. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where it is unclear whether historic guidelines operate as mandatory approval criteria, but the guidelines include a column identified as "Principle – Good Example" and a column identified as "Not Allowed," and in each column there is a list of activities and features, the activities and features in the "Not Allowed" column are prohibited. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. ORS 215.427(3)(a) generally requires that approval or denial of a permit application be based on "standards and criteria" that were in effect when the application is first submitted. Expanding a sewer improvement district boundary so that a ban against connecting properties that are not within the sewer improvement district to the public sewer system no longer bars connection of a dwelling on the property to the public sewer system, as it did when the permit application was first submitted, does not create a new standard or criterion after the application was submitted. In that circumstance, ORS 215.427(3)(a) does not preclude the city from requiring that the dwelling connect to the public sewer system, even though it could not have done so at the time the application was submitted. Evans v. City of Bandon, 74 Or LUBA 418 (2016).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where pursuant to ORS 197.772(3) a local government removes property from an inventory of historic resources at the request of the property owner, code provisions implementing Goal 5 that would otherwise require evaluation of whether removal is consistent with Goal 5 do not apply. Removal under ORS 197.772(3) and removal under Goal 5 and implementing regulations are alternatives. Lake Oswego Preservation Society v. City of Lake Oswego, 70 Or LUBA 103 (2014).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Absent wording to the contrary, generally worded zoning district purpose statements are not mandatory approval criteria for permits or other site-specific land use decisions. A zoning district purpose statement that development in the zone "is expected to be suitable for locations adjacent to residential neighborhoods" is not a mandatory approval criteria for permits or other site specific land use decisions. Mariposa Townhouses v. City of Medford, 68 Or LUBA 479 (2013).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The zoning designation of property that is shown on the official zoning map is the valid zoning designation for the property. Housing Authority of Jackson County v. City of Medford, 65 Or LUBA 295 (2012).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a property is to be developed with a commercial or industrial use, the internal driveway on that property that connects the commercial or industrial buildings to the nearest public right-of-way is properly viewed as part of the commercial or industrial use, whether that driveway is labeled as "accessory" to the business or an integral part of the use itself. Wilson v. Washington County, 63 Or LUBA 314 (2011).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where the local government concedes that a local code provision setting forth the purpose for a particular zoning classification is aspirational, that purpose statement is not an approval criterion that can provide a basis for denial of an application. Rudell v. City of Bandon, 62 Or LUBA 279 (2010).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A code purpose statement is not a mandatory planning directive where nothing in the wording or the context of the purpose statement suggests that it is. SEIU v. City of Happy Valley, 58 Or LUBA 261 (2009).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where the section of the zoning ordinance governing adjustments includes a purpose statement followed by adjustment approval criteria and a separate zoning section specifically states that the specified approval criteria for land use reviews establish "the bounds for the issues that must be addressed by the applicant," a city is not obligated to adopt findings to explain why a requested adjustment is consistent with the adjustment chapter purpose statement. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. ORS 215.750 does not prohibit a local government from applying a local code provision requiring an applicant for a forest template dwelling to demonstrate that the dwelling is "necessary for and accessory to" the forest use. Greenhalgh v. Columbia County, 54 Or LUBA 626 (2007).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. LUBA will not defer to a local government's interpretation of the phrase "necessary for and accessory to" forest management as meaning "convenient and efficient" to forest management, where such an interpretation is contrary to the plain meaning of the word "necessary," the express language of the provision at issue, and other language in the provision. Greenhalgh v. Columbia County, 54 Or LUBA 626 (2007).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A county's decision to accept a deed for a road easement is a land use decision, where the county has adopted procedures as part of its subdivision regulations that require the county to apply standards in those regulations and its zoning ordinance in accepting land for use as county roads. Niederhof v. Deschutes County, 48 Or LUBA 626 (2004).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where the city's new acknowledged comprehensive plan includes a provision stating that existing development zones continue to apply until the new code is acknowledged, it is within the city's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret that plan provision to resolve any conflicts between the old zoning code and new comprehensive plan designations. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where an intergovernmental agreement calls for a county to incorporate into its plan and code the city's ordinances and plan provisions that address lands within the UGB, but the county never does so, the county did not err in refusing to treat the city's provisions as applicable approval criteria. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a county has not yet adopted land division regulations that apply to minor partitions, a minor partition nevertheless requires prior county approval of a variance under the zoning ordinance where one of the parcels created by the minor partition does not comply with the minimum parcel size that is required under the zoning ordinance. DeBoer v. Jackson County, 46 Or LUBA 24 (2003).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a local government has adopted no local highway design safety standards, it commits no error by applying American Association of State Highway and Transportation Official standards to reject a subdivision opponent's intersection site distance concerns, notwithstanding that it has not adopted those standards and may have been laboring under the incorrect assumption that it had adopted those standards. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Under a standard requiring that a proposed subdivision not create a "significant hazard to life or property," a city may require evidence that development of property subject to flooding not present a significant flood hazard. That the subject is not mapped as a floodway on the city's hazard maps and therefore not subject to the city's flood hazard regulations does not mean that the city cannot address flood hazards under other applicable criteria. Starks Landing, Inc. v. City of Rivergrove, 43 Or LUBA 237 (2002).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a city cannot find its acknowledged shoreland land use regulations, it may not apply the county's shoreland land use regulations to approve a request to place fill in the shoreland; it must apply Goal 17 (Coastal Shorelands) directly. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 39 Or LUBA 353 (2001).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. An access road to a winery is an accessory use to the winery. When the zoning for the location of the proposed access road does not allow wineries, the access road cannot be established as an accessory use on that part of the property. Roth v. Jackson County, 38 Or LUBA 894 (2000).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Although ORS 215.296(10) allows a local government to impose additional standards on a conditional use permit for aggregate mining, it does not apply to a comprehensive plan amendment designating a significant resource site and establishing a surface mining overlay pursuant to the Goal 5 rules. Stockwell v. Benton County, 38 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The conditional use approval criteria from local government ordinances do not apply to post-acknowledgement plan amendments pursuant to the Goal 5 rules. Stockwell v. Benton County, 38 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. New land use regulations can only become acknowledged under ORS 197.625(2) if the ordinance adopting those new land use regulations is "affirmed on appeal under ORS 197.830 to 197.855." Where LUBA remands the adopting ordinance because a portion of the new land use regulations is found to be defective, without specifically affirming the remaining portions of those regulations, no part of the ordinance is considered acknowledged under ORS 197.625. Western States v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 835 (2000).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a code provision authorizing permit revocation is expressly limited to Type II discretionary permits, the code provision does not authorize revocation of Type I ministerial permits. Woods v. Grant County, 36 Or LUBA 456 (1999).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A code provision authorizing the county to institute "appropriate proceedings to prevent, enjoin * * * abate, or remove the unlawful location, construction, maintenance, repair, alteration or use" of unlawfully constructed structures is sufficient to authorize the county to institute proceedings to revoke a ministerial zoning permit where the structure actually constructed under the zoning permit is inconsistent with the site plan that was approved by the zoning permit. Woods v. Grant County, 36 Or LUBA 456 (1999).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Because ORS 368.361(3) imposes on the county the obligation to conduct proceedings and make findings in vacating a county right-of-way within city limits, the county and not the city has the obligation of applying any provisions of the city's comprehensive plan or land use ordinance that the city would apply, were the city conducting the vacation. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lincoln County, 36 Or LUBA 288 (1999).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. ORS 197.175 requires that land use decisions comply with acknowledged comprehensive plans. When approval criteria included in acknowledged land use regulations entirely displace the comprehensive plan as relevant approval criteria, the comprehensive plan must make that intent clear. Durig v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 196 (1998).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A code requirement that a street connection need not be required if certain circumstances exist does not obligate the local government to expressly find that such circumstances do not exist before requiring the street connection. Hannah v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA 1 (1998).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where there is no requirement to determine whether property is surplus for purposes of rezoning, a local government does not violate any procedural rights by not considering the surplus status of the property in its decision to rezone the property. St. Johns Neighborhood v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 46 (1998).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a local code requires that manufactured home parks "which contain land within the floodplain district" be subject to a "Type III" review, Type III review is required to approve a proposed manufactured home park, notwithstanding that no "development" is proposed for the portion of the park located in the floodplain district. Johnston v. City of Albany, 34 Or LUBA 32 (1998).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A "public need" approval standard contained in a resolution attached as an appendix to the acknowledged zoning ordinance was not repealed by implication and must be applied to a request for permit approval. Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 33 Or LUBA 613 (1997).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. When a local governing body determines that a condition imposed in connection with an earlier land use decision either has or has not been complied with, but does not base its determination on the interpretation and application of land use regulations, the determination is not a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Mar-Dene Corp. v. City of Woodburn, 33 Or LUBA 245 (1997).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A county that wishes to limit lot-of-record dwellings to protect agricultural lands cannot rely on policies and regulations implementing ORS 215.283(3)(d), which protects agricultural land, but must legislatively adopt new policies and regulations pursuant to ORS 215.705(5). However, policies and regulations with an apparent purpose other than to protect agricultural land are not superseded by ORS 215.705. DeBates v. Yamhill County, 32 Or LUBA 276 (1997).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where the city's zoning code requires a structure or use be lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted, the city may not find an existing use to be nonconforming until it determines, based on substantial evidence, that the use was lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The city's affirmation of the status of an existing use as a nonconforming use requires the application of the city's zoning ordinance and is therefore a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The city's affirmation of the status of an existing use as a nonconforming use requires the application of the city's zoning ordinance and is therefore a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Smith v. City of Phoenix, 31 Or LUBA 358 (1996).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where the city's zoning code requires a structure or use be lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted, the city may not find an existing use to be nonconforming until it determines, based on substantial evidence, that the use was lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted. Smith v. City of Phoenix, 31 Or LUBA 358 (1996).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994), and J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 131 Or App 615, 887 P2d 360 (1994), the city must show a right-of-way dedication is roughly proportional to the impact of a proposed development. To require the dedication when the city finds there will be no impact is unconstitutional. Gensman v. City of Tigard, 29 Or LUBA 505 (1995).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a local government has a combined comprehensive plan and zoning map, there can be no Baker comprehensive plan/zoning map conflict. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations apply a freshwater wetland designation to certain property, the local government's application of regulations governing freshwater wetlands to development of the subject property is not error, even though comprehensive plan inventory documents suggest the property is in fact a saltwater marsh. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. For a decision to concern the application of a land use regulation, as provided in ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A)(iii), it is not enough that the decision touch on some aspect of a land use regulation; the land use regulation must contain provisions that are standards or criteria for making the challenged decision. Knee Deep Cattle Company v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 288 (1994).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A county can establish procedures for determinations concerning nonconforming uses as part of its zoning ordinance and, if it does so, can require parties to seek a determination regarding the existence or expansion of a nonconforming use through such zoning ordinance procedures, rather than allowing such issues to be initially determined in the county's code enforcement process. Watson v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 164 (1994).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Regardless of whether a goal exception for a proposed bridge and connector road is properly adopted, the zoning applied to the site of the proposed bridge and connector road must allow those uses. Pacific Rivers Council, Inc. v. Lane County, 26 Or LUBA 323 (1993).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a comprehensive plan or land use regulation does not explicitly designate which portions of the plan or land use regulation operate as mandatory land use approval criteria, a case-by-case inquiry, examining the wording and context of the particular plan and land use regulation provisions, is required to identify mandatory approval standards. Eskandarian v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a challenged decision grants subdivision approval, petitioner's challenge to a finding that the property is located in two residential zones provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner makes no attempt to explain why the zoning of the property is critical to the decision and both zones impose the same minimum lot area. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The use of land for a recreational parachuting center and for parachute landings is a "land use" subject to regulation by local land use ordinances. Skydive Oregon v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 294 (1993).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. The standards in effect at the time a development application is filed are the standards applicable to approval of such development applications. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 515 (1992).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Comprehensive plan policies and local code requirements establishing standards for construction of streets are not approval standards applicable to comprehensive plan transportation map amendments. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A local governing body is required by ORS 197.175(2)(d) to apply applicable provisions of its comprehensive plan and land use regulations in determining whether a wrecking certificate should be approved, notwithstanding that it has not adopted regulations as authorized by ORS 822.140(3). Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Conditions imposed on particular property as part of the adoption of a quasi-judicial plan amendment/zone change are potentially applicable to decisions approving development of that property. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Even where the local code's definition of "use" is broad, some de minimus or transitory purposes for which land is "arranged, designed[,] intended [or] occupied" do not come under the code's regulation of uses. However, a proposed use of property as a part time site for a motor home, involving grading, tree removal and deposition of 60 cubic yards of gravel, is not properly included in such an exception. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 166 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Where a previous local decision approved alteration of a nonconforming use for only two years, a request to remove that limitation is a request for a new approval for alteration of a nonconforming use, and the local government must apply its code criteria for alteration of a nonconforming use to such a request. Scott v. Josephine County, 22 Or LUBA 82 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A zoning ordinance lot dimension requirement that lots in a particular zone be a certain width "at the front building line" is applicable to the creation of an undeveloped lot. Ward v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A local code statement of an intent not to encourage perpetuation of nonconforming uses and plan policies which are directed at zoning decisions and adoption of implementing land use regulations and planning inventories do not state approval standards applicable to decisions concerning modification of individual nonconforming uses. Strawn v. City of Albany, 21 Or LUBA 172 (1991).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. A code provision requiring submittal of information to allow county planning staff to set standards pertaining to "location, quality and quantity" of the resource available is not an approval criterion and, therefore, does not impose an obligation that the county adopt findings establishing the location, quality and quantity of the resource. Keudell v. Union County, 19 Or LUBA 394 (1990).

30.3 Zoning Ordinances – Applicability. Whether comprehensive plan goals and policies or zoning ordinance purpose sections are approval standards for conditional use approval in a particular instance, depends upon an examination of the relevant plan and code provisions. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will conclude that a decision does not include an implicit interpretation that resolves an apparent tension between a comprehensive plan policy and a local code provision where nothing cited to LUBA in the findings indicates that the local government recognized, much less attempted to resolve, the tension. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 81 Or LUBA 839 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The fact that a zoning ordinance specifically permits low-impact public utility facilities in the subject property's base zone and specifically permits high-impact public utility facilities in other base zones does not compel the conclusion that high-impact facilities are prohibited on the subject property where the subject property's overlay zone and the comprehensive plan specifically provide for the development of high-impact facilities on the subject property. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A finding that tree removal is permissible to prevent "interference with utility services" under one local tree felling criterion does not compel a conclusion that the applicant's tree felling plan retains mature vegetation and healthy trees "to the maximum extent practicable" under another criterion. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government protect significant clusters of trees and shrubs where the comprehensive plan does not prescribe the exact location of the substation and line and, instead, provides a general location and contemplates that exact locations will be determined through subsequent land use actions, including site plan review. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government avoid development of unsuitable areas, including wetlands and riparian areas, where the comprehensive plan provides a general location for the substation and does not specify that the substation must be sited in a wetland area. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that site design review be based upon consideration of the "[c]haracteristics of adjoining and surrounding uses," the local government does not err by characterizing adjoining and surrounding uses simply as farm uses, even where the adjoining and surrounding lands contain dwellings, where the lands are zoned for farm and forest uses, where the dwellings are allowed in conjunction with farm and forest uses, and where the purpose of the zones and the comprehensive plan is to protect and conserve farm and forest lands for farm and forest uses. Anderson v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 618 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision allows "public utility facilities, including substations and transmission lines," in a particular zone, the governing body does not err by concluding that a utility facility is "public" so long as it is necessary for the public health, safety, and welfare, even if it is not publicly owned; that a utility facility benefits the public health, safety, and welfare by increasing the overall capacity and redundancy within the larger utility system; and that a utility facility is "public" even if it benefits the public generally and not just residents of the local community. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 81 Or LUBA 633 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provides that a use not listed in a particular zone may be permitted in that zone if it is "of the same general character, or has similar impacts on nearby properties, as do other uses permitted in the zone," the governing body does not err by concluding that a particular use satisfies that criterion even if it has lesser negative impacts than permitted uses. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 81 Or LUBA 633 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides that certain applications (1) must be "submitted on a form provided by the [Planning] Director," (2) "must be reviewed" pursuant to Type II procedures, (3) "may be reviewed" pursuant to Type I procedures in certain circumstances, and (3) "shall not be considered accepted solely because of having been received," the planning director has discretion to reject an application filed on an incorrect form. Mattson v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 526 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that a "declaration of anticipated noise levels" be attached to certain land use approvals and that applicants incorporate noise abatement strategies where noise levels are anticipated to exceed a certain threshold, the word "declaration" anticipates more than a statement from the applicant's attorney, without supporting documents or studies, and a reasonable person would not rely on such statements alone to conclude that the noise threshold is not exceeded. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 534 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one local code provision requires that "the characteristics of the site [be] suitable for the proposed use considering size, shape, location, topography and natural features"; and where another local code provision requires that development plans "be reviewed to assess the possible presence of any geologic hazard" and provides that, if a geologic hazard is suspected, the developer must submit a report "which satisfactorily evaluates the degree of hazard present and recommends appropriate precautions to avoid endangering life and property and minimize erosion," and provides that "[t]he burden of proof is on the landowner to show that it is safe to build"; LUBA will defer to the governing body's interpretation that an applicant's geologic report related to the "safe to build" criterion, rather than the "suitability" criterion. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Bandon, 81 Or LUBA 285 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that uses be conducted "wholly within an enclosed structure"; where the local code defines "structure" as both "[a]nything which is constructed, erected or built and located on or under the ground, or attached to something fixed to the ground," and "[a] walled and roofed building including a gas or liquid storage tank that is principally above ground"; where the first definition was in effect when the enclosed structure requirement was first enacted; and where the second definition was enacted as part of an ordinance that related to compliance with FEMA's requirements to participate in the National Flood Insurance Program, LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of the enclosed structure requirement, relying on the first definition of "structure," to allow a use that is surrounded by building walls, retaining walls, and fences. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local design guideline provides that "[p]rimary building entrances should be oriented toward and located in close proximity to public streets and public street intersections" and that "[p]roperty size, shape and topographical conditions should also be considered," LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of that guideline to allow the primary entrance to a proposed development to be located on the opposite side of the property and oriented away from public streets where the primary entrance would nevertheless be "in close proximity to" those public streets and connected to those public streets with multiple pedestrian connections, and where the triangular shape of the property and a partially adjacent high-speed on-ramp to a highway support the applicant's choice to cluster the proposed development toward the public streets and provide a primary entrance on the opposite side of the property. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that a proposed conditional use be "consistent with the character of the area," and where nothing in the code defines or describes the relevant study area for purposes of the provision, a local government does not err by expanding the scope of the study area beyond that described in the application. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code allows community service and residential uses in the same zone, a local government does not err by concluding that a proposed community service use is "consistent with the character of the area," even though it would generate more traffic or noise impacts than a typical residential use, where almost any community service use would generate more traffic and noise impacts than a typical residential use. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Nothing in Goal 2 specifies that an agreement between a county and city to manage land within a UGB is incorporated by law into the local governments' comprehensive plans or codes, or mandates that the local governments take action to do so, and a mere statement in the county code or comprehensive plan that the agreement governs certain procedures is not sufficient to demonstrate that the latter is a part of the former. City of Albany v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 104 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision authorizes the adoption of refinement plans for areas not less than 40 acres in size, where another local code provision authorizes an adjustment of a development standard if the purpose underlying the standard is "equally or better met" by the proposed development, where the 40-acre standard is intended to avoid piecemeal development, where an applicant proposes a 14-acre refinement plan for an area adjacent to an existing refinement plan area, and where the proposed and existing refinement plan areas will be under common ownership and have physically connected elements, a local government does not err in concluding that the 14-acre refinement plan "equally or better" meets the 40-acre standard and, therefore, may be granted an adjustment. Mumper v. City of Salem, 81 Or LUBA 152 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan and local code provisions provide that the comprehensive plan may be amended only when "[t]here is a demonstrated public need for the change," and where another comprehensive plan provision states that the desired land use pattern in the urban growth boundary includes "[n]eighborhoods with a mix of uses, diversity of housing types, pedestrian scale, a defined center and shared public areas," the governing body does not err in concluding that that there is a "public need" to redesignate the subject property to High Density Residential (HDR) because the property is in a neighborhood of low- and medium-density housing and because introducing HDR zoning into the area will allow higher-density housing in a new location within the jurisdiction and potentially increase housing supply and diversity, even where the jurisdiction's acknowledged Buildable Lands Inventory and other, more recent data indicate that there is no deficit of HDR land in the jurisdiction. Carson Property LUBA Appeal, Inc. v. City of Corvallis, 81 Or LUBA 175 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code provision provides that "[t]he footprint of any other new structure or any horizontal addition requiring at least one footing in ocean bluff areas must be set back from the bluff" a certain distance; where the documents identified by the provision as the resources the city is to consult in order to identify the location of the bluff edge are documents reflecting historic conditions; where grading is not listed as exempt from the requirements of the chapter; where the code does not support the conclusion that the city may, in evaluating the required setback, sever the construction of a structure from the associated grading proposed as site preparation; where the material that the code requires be included in a geological hazard report supports the interpretation that the bluff edge is to be determined based upon existing conditions; and where the code allows variances to be considered to reduce the building setback if the variance helps lessen the risk of erosion or other hazard, an interpretation of the provision as providing that permitted development, such as grading and excavation, can occur prior to establishing the location of the bluff edge is inconsistent with the provision's express language and context for purposes of ORS 197.829(1). Kimbrell v. City of Lincoln City, 81 Or LUBA 10 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. For purposes of a local code provision requiring that a proposed conditional use not "alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties for the primary uses allowed in the zoning district(s) in which surrounding properties are located," the primary use allowed in the Rural Residential Farm Forest 5-Acre zone is the use and occupancy of a dwelling structure, and the local government does not misinterpret the provision in finding that passing by the proposed conditional use on the way to a residence does not limit that use. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that a minimum of 250 square feet of "outdoor area" be provided for each residential lot and specifically states that the outdoor area may include "decking" and a "covered patio," as long as that covered patio is not "fully enclosed," the local government does not err by concluding that a covered deck that is attached to the dwelling, but not enclosed, can satisfy the minimum outdoor area requirement. Bohan v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 263 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a design guideline for a historic district in a city requires that exterior alterations and additions to historic resources "be designed to be compatible primarily with the original resource, secondarily with adjacent properties, and finally * * * with the rest of the District," where the city council interprets the term "compatible" as not requiring uniformity, and where the petitioner has not demonstrated that that interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose, or underlying policy that provides the basis for that design guideline, LUBA will uphold the city council's conclusion that two proposed new buildings meet the design guideline because they are similar to a historic resource on the same property, to adjacent properties, and to the historic district with respect to some design elements, even where they are dissimilar to adjacent properties with respect to other design elements. NDNA v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 269 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code provision allows "[p]arks, playgrounds, [and] community centers" in the Rural Residential (RR) zone, where the county code does not include a definition of "park," and where the board of county commissioners county relies upon the dictionary definition of "park" and the types of park uses recognized nationally and found in a nearby city park and in other county parks to conclude that the provision allows (1) year-round use of a portion of RR-zoned property for day camps, retreats, and environmental education programming for a maximum of 100 persons and a weeklong overnight camp serving youth, and (2) the use of another portion of the property "for small social gatherings of its members and guests of up to 500 persons in size for picnics, weddings, and memorials during the months of April through October weather permitting," LUBA will affirm the board of county commissioners' interpretation of the provision, even if a different interpretation might be better. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code provision allows "campgrounds" in the Rural Residential (RR) zone but not "youth camps," and where the board of county commissioners relies on the definition of "youth camp" elsewhere in the code to conclude that a "youth camp" must be a permanent use, LUBA will affirm the board of county commissioners' interpretation of the provision to allow a weeklong youth overnight camp in the RR zone where the petitioners do not identify any provision of any statute or administrative rule with which the county's interpretation is inconsistent or establish that the county's interpretation is inconsistent with the express language of the county code or the underlying purpose of the RR zone. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision generally prohibits development and grading in "areas of land movement," LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of that provision to prohibit development and grading in "an area where a land slide or some other earth movement has already occurred—not an area where such activity could occur." Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs by finding that compliance with a local code provision prohibiting diversion of storm water into areas with steep slopes and "areas of land movement, slump or earth flow, and mud or debris flow" is satisfied by compliance with a separate local code provision requiring development to provide "[p]ositive drainage and adequate conveyance of surface water * * * from roofs, footings, foundations, and other impervious or near-impervious surfaces to an appropriate discharge point." Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The planning commission's conclusion that the subject properties are subject to "site review requirements" is not supported by anything in the text of the Old Code, Ordinance 20224, or the New Code. Simons Investment Properties, LLC v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 458 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the context of an application to construct a 94-unit apartment complex, where a local code provision defines "net density" to mean "the number of dwelling units per acre of land in actual residential use and reserved for the exclusive use of the residents in the development, such as common open space or recreation facilities," while a maintenance building and internal parking circulation areas are properly included in the net density calculation, a leasing office should be excluded from the acreage used to calculate net density. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 488 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the circumstances under which a local code provision applies are not clearly articulated in that provision or specified in any other local code provision, LUBA cannot say that an argument that the governing body misinterpreted that provision is one that "no reasonable lawyer would conclude * * * possessed legal merit" for purposes of awarding attorney fees under ORS 197.830(15)(b), even where the governing body's interpretation was required to be affirmed under ORS 197.829(1). Vannatta v. City of St. Helens, 80 Or LUBA 1018 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local ordinance prohibits development within a floodway without a permit and provides an exemption for agricultural uses under which "temporary, removable structures should be allowed during drier months if their removal can be assured by late fall," but where the ordinance does not contain an express requirement that the structures be moved to or stored on the subject property, a hearings officer errs in deciding that such an exemption cannot be applied simply because the record does not include any evidence that the subject property contains a usable storage area outside the floodplain. Armstrong v. Jackson County, 79 Or LUBA 161 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city's minimum lot size requirements are based, in part, upon a code provision which requires a measurement of a lot's "slope," and the city interprets the term "slope" to be determined using post-development grades, rather than pre-development grades, LUBA will uphold the city's interpretation as "plausible" subject to Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), where the city found that "slope" is an ambiguous term, and the city interprets the term in a manner consistent with its interpretation of the text and in context of historical application of the code provision. An ambiguous code provision term is one with more than one possible construction of the term, and the local government interprets such a term in a "plausible" manner when read consistently with the express language of the code, as read in context. Estroff v. City of Dundee, 79 Or LUBA 189 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision states that the "provisions of this code shall be interpreted as minimum requirements. When this code imposes a greater restriction than is required by other provisions of law * * * the provisions of this code shall control," and petitioners argue that the city erred in applying the least restrictive, rather than the most restrictive interpretation of the city's code requirement that minimum lot size be determined by "slope," by allowing project applicants to measure slope after grading, rather than before grading, to maximize their potential minimum developable lot size, but petitioners do not identify what other provision of law imposes a lesser restriction as regards to minimum lot size that the city should have applied, petitioners have not provided a basis for reversal or remand. Estroff v. City of Dundee, 79 Or LUBA 189 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even if a local government's interpretation of its code were less plausible than petitioners' preferred interpretation, the "existence of a stronger or more logical interpretation does not render a weaker or less logical interpretation 'implausible' under the Siporen [v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010),] standard." Mark Latham Excavation, Inc. v. Deschutes County, 250 Or App 543, 555, 281 P3d 644 (2012). Estroff v. City of Dundee, 79 Or LUBA 189 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an applicant proposes to occupy one guest apartment within an 18,000-square-foot dwelling while allowing the remainder of the dwelling and all of its amenities to be used by bed and breakfast guests, a county's conclusion that the bed and breakfast is not a "subordinate use" of the dwelling, and therefore not a home occupation, and that the applicant is not a "resident of the dwelling" is consistent with the plain meaning of the code language and is supported by substantial evidence in the record where there is evidence that the applicant "spends a couple of days a week" at a different home, and that the subject dwelling does not appear to be occupied when viewed from the road or neighboring properties, even though the applicant provides a copy of her driver's license that lists the subject dwelling. Lee v. Marion County, 79 Or LUBA 199 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code defines a bed and breakfast inn as "having no more than five sleeping rooms for [that] purpose[,]" and where an applicant proposes to make seven bedrooms in a dwelling available for rental even though only five would be rented at any one time, a county may correctly conclude that the proposal does not qualify as a bed and breakfast inn and the county is not obligated to develop conditions that might permit approval of the proposal. However, where a local code does not include any qualitative limits on the use of the dwelling and its premises, a county may not conclude that a proposal does not qualify as a bed and breakfast inn because it does not limit guests' use of the dwelling to their sleeping quarters and an area of the dwelling in which to eat the single morning meal. Lee v. Marion County, 79 Or LUBA 199 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county planning director processed a similar use determination under the county's Type II review to determine whether an electrical transmission line is allowed in a particular zone, the board of county commissioners reviewed the director's similar use determination in a consolidated appeal under a Type III process, and petitioners argue that the county erred by not providing an intermediate decision by a decisionmaker other than the county governing body, that alleged procedural error provides no basis for reversal or remand because that alleged error does not prejudice petitioner's substantial rights. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county determines an electrical transmission line is a "similar use" authorized in a particular zone pursuant to the county's "similar use determination" process, which allows a similar use "[w]here a proposed use is not specifically identified by [the code], or [the code] is unclear as to whether the use is allowed in a particular zone," petitioners' argument that the county may make a similar use determination only if the proposed use is not specifically identified anywhere in the county's code is without merit. A similar use determination is not necessary or appropriate where the use is specifically permitted or prohibited in the subject zone. In adopting the similar use determination process, the county contemplated instances where a use is specifically identified as an allowed use in some zones but not specifically identified as an allowed use in the subject zone. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners argue that the county made inadequate findings that a proposed electrical transmission project is consistent with general use priorities for estuary zones because the county did not address certain code provisions addressing estuary zones, LUBA is not required to remand the decision to the county for it to interpret its local code provisions in the first instance; LUBA may make its own determination of whether the local government decision is correct. ORS 197.829(2). Where the county determined that the code provision in question is a general priority statement, which does not constitute mandatory approval criteria, LUBA will uphold the county's decision where the provision provides an inclusive list of general use priorities for estuarine resources and value, and where, in the alternative, the county addressed those impacts to the estuarine resources and values in other applicable parts of the county's code. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation of a local code provision which provides that, "[i]n the event of a tie [vote by the city council], the [planning commission's] decision which is the subject of appeal * * * shall stand," as not limiting the number of times that the city council may vote on a matter is not inconsistent with the express language of that provision and therefore affirmable under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Vannatta v. City of St. Helens, 79 Or LUBA 271 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision prohibits uses that "alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties," a hearings officer errs in reducing the inquiry into a single inquiry into whether the proposed use makes the use of nearby properties "substantially worse," since the words "limit" and "impair' have different meanings and since, where a local code uses two different terms in the same provision, it is presumed that the enacting body intends two different meanings. York v. Clackamas County, 79 Or LUBA 278 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires a finding that a proposed use "will not significantly increase fire hazard or significantly increase fire suppression costs or significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel," the proper comparison is between the proposed use and the pre-existing use, not between the proposed use and typical uses of the same type. York v. Clackamas County, 79 Or LUBA 278 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires (1) that an applicant for an extension of a conditional use permit on resource-zoned lands "state[] reasons that prevented [them] from beginning or continuing development within the approval period" and (2) that the local government determine that those are "reasons for which the applicant was not responsible," a local government interpretation that the provision may be satisfied where the reason for the delay is that additional state or federal approvals have been applied for, but not yet secured, even where the application for such state or federal approval proposes development which differs from that approved by the conditional use permit, is not inconsistent with the express language of the provision and therefore provides no basis for reversal or remand under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Williams v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 352 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one local code provision authorizes the local government to grant "an extension of up to two (2) years" for a conditional use permit on non-resource lands, and another provision provides that "[a]dditional extensions may be applied," a local government interpretation of those provisions as allowing supplemental extensions beyond the one allowed under the first provision is supported by the plain meaning of the word "additional," is not inconsistent with the express language of either provision, and therefore provides no basis for reversal or remand under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Williams v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 352 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision prohibits the local government from approving an application for development if the property is "in violation of applicable land use regulations," a local governing body's interpretation that a decision that (1) determines only that existing development requires land use approvals, or (2) denies an application to approve existing development does not constitute a determination of a "violation" is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose, or policy of the code provision and is therefore entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1)(a) to (c). Bishop v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 380 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision prohibits a "[p]layground, recreation facility or community center owned and operated by a government agency or nonprofit community organization," a local governing body does not misconstrue the provision by interpreting the phrase "owned and operated by a government agency or nonprofit community organization" as applying to each antecedent rather than just to the last antecedent, community centers, and therefore as permitting a private recreation facility in the zone, where (1) the provision's language implements state law, which is concerned only with public facilities, (2) the code sets out a separate use category for "recreation-oriented facility," and (3) the local government has historically viewed the provision to encompass only public facilities. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 380 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the predominant use of a proposed facility controls whether it is permitted in a zone, a local government does not err in concluding that the allocation of two-thirds of the physical space in a building to office uses makes the office use the predominant use of the building, even where the primary purpose of the office uses is to facilitate other uses in the building which are not allowed in the underlying zone. Sky Lakes Medical Center, Inc. v. City of Klamath Falls, 79 Or LUBA 490 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code amendment is not inconsistent with an administrative rule, so as to require reversal or remand of the amendment decision, merely because the amendment uses the phrase "ministerial decision" while the rule uses the phrase "administrative decision," where the code does not treat those phrases differently. In addition, a local code amendment is not inconsistent with an administrative rule authorizing counties to grant extensions of permits if they determine the applicant was unable to begin or continue development "for reasons for which the applicant was not responsible" merely because the amendment provides a list of examples of such reasons, especially where the rule provides no definition or guidance for that phrase. McCaffree v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 512 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While a variance should not be used as a substitute for rezoning, a local government does not err in granting a variance without a showing that strict application of the zoning ordinance would cause "practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships because of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions affecting the applicant's property" in a zone which the local code specifically exempts from that standard. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the only variable between multiple Urban Growth Area-Urban Growth Management (UGA-UGM) zones is lot size, and where a county code provision provides that "[t]he density of one UGA-UGM zoning district is not interchangeable with the density of another UGA-UGM zoning district without prior review and approval by the affected city and * * * County," an interpretation by the county that the provision applies to zone changes of the subject property or changes to the underlying density of the zone in which the subject property is located, but that it does not apply to lot size variances, is inconsistent with the express language of the provision. In such cases, where the local code does not define "density" and the dictionary defines "density" as the quantity or number per unit of area, LUBA will make its own determination that a lot size variance in a UGA-UGM zone may qualify as an "interchange[]" with the density of another UGA-UGM zone, thereby requiring city review and approval. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision provides that "[a]pproval of [a] variance is limited to the minimum necessary to permit otherwise normal development of the property for the proposed use," an interpretation by the local government that the provision means a variance may be approved if it permits development consistent with the surrounding land use pattern and the uses permitted in the underlying zone, and that it does not mean a variance may only be approved if it is necessary to permit development that is allowed in the zone, is not inconsistent with the language of the code or the purposes or policies underpinning the provision. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The fact that a tentative plan for a destination resort proposes a different pace of development than the final master plan, such as by sub-phasing development, does not materially affect the findings of fact on which the final master plan approval was based so as to constitute a "substantial change" to the final master plan, thereby requiring a new application, where neither the final master plan nor applicable regulations require that all development authorized in the first phase of the final master plan occurs at the same time. Gould v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 561 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the final master plan for a destination resort includes a mitigation plan requiring the applicant to replace the water consumed by the resort with a quantity and quality of water that will maintain fish habitat in an impacted stream, the fact that the tentative plan for one phase of development modifies the timing, but not the overall amount, of the mitigation water required to be provided does not materially affect the findings of fact on which the final master plan approval was based so as to constitute a "substantial change" to the final master plan, thereby requiring a new application, where there is no evidence that such modification will impact the efficacy of mitigation and there is evidence that such modification will result in more gradual, spread out impacts. Gould v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 561 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," an interpretation by the local government that it need not consider the impact of the proposed use on property values and neighbor peace of mind is not inconsistent with the provision's express language or underlying policies. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a county's interpretation of its code—that a code provision which sets forth approval criteria regarding an application for a variance to the minimum lot size requirements within the county's urban growth area may not apply to the county's decision because it only applies to decisions made by the county's planning director but not to decisions made by the planning commission or board of county commissioners—that was made for the first time in its response brief, because that interpretation is not reflected in the decision and is therefore not an interpretation by the local government. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county approved a proposed variance to the 20-acre minimum lot size for two one-acre parcels, pursuant to a county code provision that provides that the county planning director may approve a variance for a proposed project if the city does not object to the variance, LUBA will reverse the county's decision as "prohibited as a matter of law" pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071(c) where the county approved the variance as "consistent with the * * * city's comprehensive plan," but the city objected to the proposed variance because of the proposal's inconsistency with the city's comprehensive plan. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision requires that a proposed development project not "seriously interfere" with the preservation of "fish and wildlife areas and habitat" as identified under the county's comprehensive plan, a hearings officer does not err in applying the code provision only to that portion of the property that is designated as "fish and wildlife areas and habitat." McAndrew v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 21 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a city approves an application, nothing requires the city or intervenor to rezone the property in connection with the application, when the current zoning is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan, and the current zoning does not allow for more intensive development than contemplated in the comprehensive plan. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zone verification is a limited tool and only those issues actually addressed in the zone verification decision are protected from collateral attack. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a LUBA decision merely "ascertain[ed] and declare[d]" what the laws at issue provided from the time of their enactment pursuant to ORS 174.010, such interpretative exercise cannot constitute a "change in the law." Hood River Valley Residents Comm. v. Hood River County, 78 Or LUBA 478 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's code interpretation of a county zoning ordinance that provides that a permit extension may be granted if the "approval criteria for the original decision found in a state goal, policy, statute or administrative rule, the Comprehensive Plan or this Ordinance have not changed," and the county board of commissioners interprets "have not changed" to mean an administrative or legislative amendment to the administratively enacted or codified law described in the same provision, and not include decisional law not that is not administratively enacted or codified, as long as such interpretation is "plausible." Hood River Valley Residents Comm. v. Hood River County, 78 Or LUBA 478 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city governing body's code interpretation where a prohibition on adjustment "[t]o allow an increase in density in the [low density residential] RL zone" does not specify what denominator should be used to determine whether a proposed adjustment increases the density in the RL zone, or explain how "density in the RL zone" is measured, and the city used as the denominator the gross acreage of a subdivision as a whole, rather than the acreage of individual properties. Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 78 Or LUBA 509 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The city's comprehensive plan housing goal, Goal 10, and its policies and implementing measures, provide further contextual support for the city's interpretation of its code regarding a prohibition on lot size adjustment "[t]o allow an increase in density in the [low density residential] RL zone" by using as the denominator the gross acreage of a subdivision as a whole, rather than the acreage of individual properties. One of the Goal 10 housing goals is to "[p]romote the efficient use of vacant land by encouraging infill development which is sensitive to existing neighborhoods, and by encouraging new development which achieves the density allowed by the comprehensive plan." The city's interpretation is consistent with Goal 10 and the policies and implementing measures because it interprets "density" and "acre" to allow new infill development of vacant land to achieve a density that is allowed by the comprehensive plan. Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 78 Or LUBA 509 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioner argues the city governing body's finding regarding the applicability of a zoning ordinance was erroneous, and the city concedes the finding is erroneous, but when the error is not critical to the city council's interpretation or ultimate conclusions, the error does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 78 Or LUBA 509 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county's code defines "recreational vehicle" (RVs) as a temporary dwelling unit intended for vacation, emergency or recreational use, but that cannot be used for permanent residential use, the county errs in interpreting the provisions of a forest zone, which allows as a conditional use "recreational vehicles" without any express durational limits, to allow an RV to be used as a permanent residence, because that interpretation gives no effect to the categorical exclusions in the code definition of "recreational vehicle." Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 77 Or LUBA 192 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That county staff have in the past approved recreational vehicles as permanent residential dwellings does not provide a basis to interpret the county code to allow recreational vehicles to be used as permanent residential dwellings, where the county code definition of "recreational vehicle" prohibits their use as permanent residential dwellings. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 77 Or LUBA 192 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That different setbacks standards with different language are interpreted to require the same setback distance does not run afoul of the general interpretative requirement to give different effect to different words used in the same statute, where the local government shows that the different words nevertheless support requiring the same setback distance. Brannon v. Multnomah County, 77 Or LUBA 275 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The question under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010), is not whether petitioner's interpretation that a "street alignment and connections standard" and a "street connectivity standard" can be met by street extensions that terminate in a cul-de-sac is plausible. The question under Siporen is whether the city council's contrary interpretation that the standards require street extensions that connect with other streets on both ends is plausible, and the city council's interpretation is certainly plausible. Martin v. City of Tigard, 77 Or LUBA 288 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A decision that adopts a different position regarding how a street connectivity standard applies in a decision following a LUBA remand from the position adopted in the initial decision is not inconsistent with the holding in Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 154 Or App 450, 962 P2d 701, rev den, 328 Or 115 (1998). In Holland, the Court of Appeals held a city erred by concluding in its initial decision that a slope and density standard had been repealed and therefore did not apply to a land division, and when its decision to deny the land division was remanded by LUBA, took the opposite position and applied the slope and density standard to deny the land division following remand. The change of position in Holland was a change of position in whether the standard applied, which is different from a change of position in how a standard applied. Martin v. City of Tigard, 77 Or LUBA 288 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The undefined standard categories "site-related development standards" and "use-related development standards" are ambiguous; a front setback standard and a maximum height standard could fall into either category. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a general category called "use-related development standards" is followed by a nonexclusive list of examples, and minimum front setback and maximum height standards are not included on the list, that is some support for concluding that minimum front setback and maximum height standards are not use-related development standards. But where one of the specified examples of a general category called "use-related development standards" is "size of use standards," it is certainly possible that a maximum height standard qualifies as a "size of use standard" and thus could qualify as a "use-related development standard." Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's finding that concentrating dwelling units on one area of a property is solely attributable to a density transfer provision is not entirely accurate where modifications (variances) are needed to construct a multi-family structure that is taller and closer to the front lot line than would be permitted in the zone. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a hearings officer's findings provide an inadequate explanation for why he concluded minimum front setback and maximum building height standards qualify as "site-related development standards," that prior city hearings officers and the city council have reached the same conclusion is some support for the hearings officer's conclusion. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although local legislative history is generally not subject to official notice by LUBA and cannot be considered on appeal if it is not included in the local record, where the legislative history is contemporary commentary that was adopted by the city council when it adopted the legislation, LUBA will consider the commentary. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a prior version of the zoning ordinance only allowed modifications for setback and height standards, and the zoning ordinance was amended to allow a general category of standards, that lends some support to the local government's position that the general category of standards includes setback and height standards. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although LUBA may take official notice of commentary that was adopted with an ordinance, where that ordinance does not enact or amend the ambiguous zoning ordinance language at issue, it is of no significance in resolving the ambiguity. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's findings cannot be faulted for failing to address the impacts of a modification (variance) on petitioner's nearby residence, where the findings expressly address those impacts and the relationship between the proposed structure and petitioner's residence and point out that the proposed structure is downslope and offset from petitioner's residence. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's failure to adopt findings that address potential impacts of a proposed building on one nearby dwelling in granting a maximum height modification (variance) is not a basis for remand, where the "on balance" nature of the modification (variance) approval standard does not necessarily require individual findings for every nearby residence, a public walkway between that dwelling and the proposed dwelling reduces any legitimate expectation of privacy, and the topography and scale of the proposed building is such that where the two structures adjoin each other they will be of similar height. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city commission's interpretation of its code to permit the city to exercise its property rights under ORS 197.772(1) to refuse to consent to historic landmark designation separately from the city's grant of authority to the historic review board to consider and approve applications for historic landmark designations is plausible, and therefore must be affirmed under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 261, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Therefore, the historic review board must terminate consideration of a neighborhood association's application to designate city-owned property as a historic landmark when the city manager refuses to consent to the proposed historic landmark designation. McLoughlin Neighborhood Association v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 377 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city commission's interpretation of a city manager's general authority to exercise "supervision over all city property" to be broad enough to include authority for the city manager to refuse to consent to a proposed historic landmark designation for city-owned property is not reversible under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D) ("[i]mproperly construed the applicable law"). McLoughlin Neighborhood Association v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 377 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government does not misinterpret the term "substation" by interpreting it to be an example of the use category "utilities" that is broad enough to include a wireless transmission tower. And it does not matter that the wireless transmission tower is a cell tower and that there were no cell towers in 1984 when the legislation defining substation and utilities was adopted. There were radio transmission and communication towers in 1984, which are similar to cell towers, and it is not unusual for new uses to come into existence and fall into existing broad use categories. Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body's conclusion—that the general category of utility "[d]istribution plants and substations" adopted in 1984 is broad enough to include a wireless transmission tower—is not inconsistent with contemporary and other dictionary definitions of "distribution," "plant" and "substation." Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body does not err by refusing to view the term "distribution plants and substations" as a technical term or term of art. Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a local government adopts a new rule of interpretation it is not limited to applying that new rule of interpretation to subsequently enacted legislation. Rawson v. Hood River County, 77 Or LUBA 415 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners take the position that historic review and site plan review approval standards are so incompatible that site plan review entirely displaces historic review, but the city council's interpretation of its code that both reviews are possible and that historic review may be completed before site plan review is plausible, LUBA must defer to the city council's interpretation. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where it is not clear whether the enacting body intended comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions to be mandatory approval criteria, LUBA examines the wording and context of the particular provisions to determine whether they must be applied as mandatory approval criteria. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A list of special characteristics of a historic district are not mandatory approval criteria where they are not worded as mandatory requirements for future housing proposals. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where it is unclear whether historic guidelines operate as mandatory approval criteria, but the guidelines include a column identified as "Principle – Good Example" and a column identified as "Not Allowed," and in each column there is a list of activities and features, the activities and features in the "Not Allowed" column are prohibited. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A prohibition against "extensive grading of the lot" is subjective. Findings that explain that approved grading is only the amount necessary to allow vehicular access to the lot and that the lowering of the proposed dwelling elevates the prominence of adjoining historic structures are adequate to establish the approved grading does not violate the extensive grading standard. Friends of Canemah v. City of Oregon City, 77 Or LUBA 434 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's findings that a master plan design guideline to "[d]evelop buildings that are appropriately scaled to the neighborhood," is met by a proposal to build a seven-story apartment building with a five-story wing rather than a four-story wing, representing a proposal to increase the building height by 10 feet, where surrounding buildings range in height from three to seven stories, is not in error. Such a finding is sufficient to satisfy city's local ordinance which requires a finding that under a proposed modification "[t]he resulting development will better meet the applicable design guidelines," and that "[o]n balance the proposal will be consistent with the purpose of the standard modified" where the 10-foot modification represents a trade-off for a clipped corner which allows for increased pedestrian access and sunlight into a proposed public square. Michaelson v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 504 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's comparative approach of evaluating all design changes related to a proposed development modification at once to determine whether the resulting development better meets applicable guidelines, is not error. The nature of design review often involves tradeoffs and balancing between design features to achieve a more optimal overall design under the applicable guidelines. Michaelson v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 504 (2018).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The city planning commission improperly construed the plain language of a code section that requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical" when it relied on the historical site plan and orientation of the existing house on the corner lot to designate the front lot line, because those considerations are not "topographical or access problems." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a municipal code requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical," the city's decision was not supported by substantial evidence in the record pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) when it determined that the lack of sidewalks on the narrower frontage, and the absence of a door on the side of the house facing the narrower frontage were "access problems" that made designating the narrower street frontage the front lot line "impractical." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a municipal code requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical," the city's decision was not supported by substantial evidence in the record pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) when it determined that the lack of sidewalks on the narrower frontage, and the absence of a door on the side of the house facing the narrower frontage were "access problems" that made designating the narrower street frontage the front lot line "impractical." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners seek reversal or remand of the city's decision pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071, and LUBA's decision agrees with petitioners that the city's decision improperly construed the municipal code and was not supported by substantial evidence in the record, but it is possible on remand that the petitioner's proposal could demonstrate compliance with the municipal code without significant changes to the proposed development, remand is the appropriate remedy. McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a standard requires full street connections with spacing of no more than 530 feet between connections, findings that suggest the standard could be met by extending an existing east-west street to connect an existing north-south street with an existing Walmart parking lot require additional explanation, since the standard appears to envision a street that connects one street with another street. Martin v. City of Tigard, 76 Or LUBA 85 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a standard requires public street connections at intervals of no more than 660 feet but authorizes variances where certain conditions exist, a finding that sight distance and existing development might preclude the required extension may be an adequate basis for granting a variance, but those conditions are not a basis for simply overlooking the street interval standard. Martin v. City of Tigard, 76 Or LUBA 85 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a standard requires public street connections at intervals of no more than 660 feet a finding that a public street connection is not required where existing street connections are 930 feet apart because the property to be developed is only 400 feet south of the northern existing street represents a misconstruction of the standard. The standard establishes a maximum distance between streets rather than a maximum distance between property to be developed and the nearest street connection. Martin v. City of Tigard, 76 Or LUBA 85 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council does not err by failing to impose a condition requiring that a hotel be reduced in height to address potential land use conflicts, where the city council finds a shorter hotel is not needed to avoid potential land use conflicts. Whether a hotel of the height proposed will present land use conflicts with neighboring properties is a subjective determination, and where LUBA concludes the record establishes the city council's decision not to impose a condition was within its discretion, LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges the city council's failure to impose the condition. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code "principle" is worded as alternative actions an applicant "should" take, and some of the "standards" that follow that "principle" are clearly worded as mandatory, while others are clearly worded as non-mandatory considerations, where the challenged decision does not address the disputed "principle," remand is required for the city council to determine if the disputed "principles" are mandatory and, if so, to ensure one of the mandatory alternatives is satisfied. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reverse a governing body's interpretation that a large office complex providing offices for a number of local, regional, state and federal agencies is "accessory" to a small local fire station with a staff of four firefighters, where no reasonable person could conclude that the office complex is incidental and subordinate to the fire station, or subordinate in extent, area or purpose. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 76 Or LUBA 346 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reverse a governing body's interpretation that a 100-seat educational facility is "accessory" to a small local fire station with a staff of four firefighters, where even if it is presumed that the four firefighters sometimes take classes at the facility, no reasonable person could conclude that a 100-seat educational facility is incidental and subordinate to the fire station, or subordinate in extent, area or purpose. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 76 Or LUBA 346 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a finding that a proposed gas processing facility will not cause emissions of steam that could obscure visibility within an airport approach surface, where the finding is supported by substantial expert testimony that the facility will not generate visible steam and in any case is proposed to be located outside the airport approach surface. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 76 Or LUBA 346 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A County Court's interpretation of a comprehensive plan residential density standard that limits residential density in deer winter range to one dwelling unit per 160 acres to only consider nonfarm dwellings when computing density is not affirmable under ORS 197.829(1)(a) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 261, 243 P3d 776 (2010), where there is no textual support in the wildlife density standard itself for only counting nonfarm dwellings in computing density and the comprehensive plan policies the density limit was adopted to implement also do not support distinguishing between farm and nonfarm dwellings in computing density. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 75 Or LUBA 186 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Deference under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), and ORS 197.829(1) is only appropriate for interpretations that are adopted by the local governing body. Those interpretations include interpretations that are adopted initially by other bodies, so long as the local governing body adopts those interpretations of other bodies. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local governing body adopts a planning commission decision on appeal, interpretations adopted directly by the planning commission or adopted by incorporation by the planning commission are entitled to deference under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), and ORS 197.829(1). Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An interpretation of local law that is offered in a brief at LUBA, but was not adopted by the local government, is not entitled to deference under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), and ORS 197.829(1). Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance lists general use categories for a particular zoning district, followed by a listing of particular uses under those general use categories, a local governing body's interpretation that adopts a broad dictionary definition of the use category "Utilities" and finds that a cell tower is a permitted use under that definition, when cell towers are not one of the two particular uses listed under the general category of Utilities, is not an interpretation that must be affirmed under ORS 197.829(1) and is not entitled to deference under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance separation standard applies to "buildings," defined in the zoning ordinance as "[a] structure built for support, shelter, or enclosure of persons, animals, chattels, or property of any kind," a local government is within its interpretive discretion to interpret the separation standard not to apply to cell towers. Although cell towers are "structures," they are not "built for support, shelter, or enclosure of persons, animals, chattels, or property of any kind." Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county is not required to apply the federal "least intrusive" standard under the Telecommunications Act of 1996 to a permit request under the county's zoning ordinance, where the county's zoning ordinance does not impose that standard. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even if a county has historically required "reasonable separation" between certain uses in the past, where the county's zoning ordinance does not include a "reasonable separation" standard, the county does not err by failing to require a cell tower on industrially zoned property to maintain reasonable separation from adjoining exclusive farm use and rural residentially zoned property. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the zoning code does not define "hospital structures" but does separately list "Hospitals" and "Medical and dental clinics, outpatient; [and] infirmary services" as permitted uses, a city does not misconstrue the zoning code by concluding that a "medical office building "does not qualify as a "hospital" and therefore need not have a backup source of electricity, which hospitals are required to have under the zoning code. Nicita v. City of Oregon City, 74 Or LUBA 176 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county development ordinance requires that all permits and approval for an allowed primary use must be obtained before any accessory use may be established, the county errs by approving a proposal to process aggregate material as an accessory use where the primary use, aggregate mining, is not proposed or approved. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 214 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that the use category of mass shelter is limited to shelters located in a "building" is inconsistent with the express language of the applicable code provisions, where the code defines "mass shelter" in part as a "structure" containing sleeping areas, and as the code defines "structures," they are not limited to structures that are "buildings." Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's finding that the use category of "mass shelter" is limited to shelters that provide "indoor space," and therefore a proposed tent camp in an industrial zone is not a mass shelter that is prohibited in the industrial zone, is inconsistent with the definition of "mass shelter," which is not limited to shelters that provide indoor space, and further inconsistent with the purpose of the prohibition on mass shelters in industrial areas: to protect industrial uses from incompatible shelter uses. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that a mass shelter's sleeping areas must be located in permanent structures with foundations, and therefore a proposed tent camp that provides sleeping areas within large 10-person tents is not a mass shelter, is inconsistent with the code definition of mass shelter, which does not require that a mass shelter's sleeping areas be located in permanent structures with foundations. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that a proposed tent camp is not a "mass shelter" because the campers, rather than the tent camp operators, will provide sleeping pads is not consistent with the applicable text and definitions, which do not turn on who provides sleeping pads that shelter residents will sleep on. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is inconsistent with the purpose of a code prohibition on mass shelters in an industrial zone to approve, as an outright permitted "Community Service" use, a tent camp that is functionally identical to a mass shelter. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the city code excludes from the use category of "Community Service" any uses where tenancy is arranged on a month-to-month basis or longer period, a city errs in concluding that a proposed tent camp, which allows indefinite and potentially permanent tenancy by campers and staff, is a Community Service use allowed outright in an industrial zone. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 221 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a destination resort has received both conceptual and final master plan approval, and the final master plan approval decision was remanded, the county may again grant final master plan approval, even though the conceptual master plan approval decision has become void due to the passage of time, where the initial final master plan approval decision effectively incorporated and displaced the conceptual master plan approval decision with regard to the only legal issues remaining on remand. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code limitation that "[a]ny substantial change to the approved plan will require a new application" does not require a new application for a destination resort whose original owners declared bankruptcy and were replaced by new owners. The code limitation is directed at changes in the approved plan, not at changes in the owners. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The larger size of a 5,000-square-foot structure in a forest zone is not determinative of whether it can be correctly viewed as "accessory" to a 3,600-square-foot residence. Kaplowitz v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 386 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Whether a proposed use is properly viewed as "accessory" to an existing residential use in a forest zone calls for a subjective judgment. Where a use began as an unauthorized use with a commercial component, and the commercial component is relocated to another site, a hearings official determines a number of limits imposed on the use are sufficient to ensure it is "accessory," and the board of commissioners adopts the hearings official's interpretation as its own, LUBA will defer to that interpretation under ORS 197.829(1). Kaplowitz v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 386 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code permits an applicant to resubmit the same application for verification of a nonconforming use less than two years after it was denied if the denial decision was based on a material mistake of fact, a hearings officer does not misconstrue the code in concluding that a denial decision that is based on conflicting evidence is not the same thing as a decision that is based on a material mistake of fact. Kartavykh v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 518 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Nothing in the express language of ORS 455.315, which exempts agricultural buildings from the requirements of the Oregon Structural Specialty Code, or in the legislative history of the statute, supports a county's interpretation of ORS 455.315 as applying only on lands zoned for farm or forest use. Gross v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 563 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In order for the agricultural building exemption at ORS 455.315 to apply, the structure must be located "on a farm or forest operation[.]" Gross v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 563 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 455.315 exempts agricultural buildings only from the requirements of "a state structural specialty code" and does not exempt agricultural buildings from electrical and mechanical codes contained in ORS Chapter 455. Gross v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 563 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation that review of a greenhouse use is required by a local code provision that requires review of "Type I" uses that are allowed "of right," where the local code requires "non-discretionary staff review to demonstrate compliance with the standards of" the zoning ordinance. Gross v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 563 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an assignment of error challenges an interpretation that the decision on appeal does not adopt, the assignment of error does not establish a basis for reversal or remand. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county finding that wind turbines are a conditional use in a commercial zone is not reversible error, even though wind turbines are not listed as a conditional use in the zone, where the balance of the decision clearly demonstrates the county in fact utilized its authority to approve uses that are similar to listed permitted and conditional uses in the zone to approve the wind turbines. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance expressly allows approval of uses that are not listed as permitted or conditional uses, if they are similar to listed uses in the zone, there is no negative inference that uses may not be approved as similar to uses in the zone, simply because the similar use is listed as a permitted or conditional use in other zones. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the city code requires that a development's sewer facilities must be consistent with the sewer master plan and the sewer master plan calls for an upgraded 15-inch sewer line in a street that adjoins the development, city findings that explain a temporary cross-basin connection to provide sewer service to the development is acceptable because sewer flows from the development are inadequate to result in a properly functioning 15-inch sewer line, and the development approval is conditioned on the development connecting to the adjacent 15-inch sewer line when it becomes available in the future, are adequate to explain why the temporary cross-basin connection is not inconsistent with the code and sewer master plan. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 72 Or LUBA 25 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council does not misconstrue a development code limitation that a temporary use permit may not "be issued for a period exceeding 180 days in any 365 day period" to require a single period of 180 days and not allow the holder of the permit to operate for up to 180 nonconsecutive days in any 365-day period. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation of a development code limitation that a temporary use permit may not "be issued for a period exceeding 180 days in any 365 day period" to require that the 180-day period begin on the date the permit is issued has the effect of omitting the "in any 365 day period" language and reading in a requirement that the start date for the 180 days must be the date the permit is issued. That interpretation is therefore inconsistent with the express language of the 180-day limit. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the authority to impose conditions that specifically applies to temporary use permits does not appear to be broad enough to allow the city to impose a condition of temporary use permit approval regarding vendors, but temporary use permit decisions qualify as Type II decisions, and the development code broadly authorizes Type II decisions to include conditions of approval, a city does not exceed its conditioning authority in imposing the Vendor condition. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where LUBA sustains three assignments of error, but denies a fourth assignment of error, rejecting petitioner's challenge to a county commissioners' interpretation that a permit expiration standard that requires a finding that the applicant is not at fault for failing to complete the use authorized by the permit is met because the county's multi-stage destination resort process is so complicated, and LUBA's decision is reversed on appeal, with the Court of Appeals concluding that making the complexity of the multi-stage resort process the only consideration in applying the standard is an implausible interpretation of the standard, LUBA will sustain the fourth assignment of error as well. Gould v. Deschutes County, 72 Or LUBA 258 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a standard that permits the base zoning building height maximum to be increased if the "increased height is consistent with the purposes" of the applicable plan district's height limits, but does not expressly require that the proposed height increase must be consistent with all of the purposes or that each of the purposes operates as an approval criterion, a city council interpretation that the proposed height increase does not have to be consistent with all the purposes and that the individual purposes do not apply separately as approval criteria does not insert or omit text from the zoning code, in contravention of ORS 174.010. Preserve the Pearl, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 261 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city council explains that interpreting a standard that requires that a proposal to increase building height to be consistent with a list of purposes requires consistency with all of those purposes is not possible, which would render the plan designation that makes an area of the city eligible for such building height increases a nullity, that explanation provides contextual support for the city council's interpretation that the proposed building height increase need only be consistent with the purposes on balance. Preserve the Pearl, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 261 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where contextual requirements are written in terms of standards or criteria, all of which must be met, but the disputed standard merely requires that a proposed height increase be consistent with the purposes set out in the applicable height limit section of the code, that context supports the city's interpretation that the proposed height increase need not be consistent with all of the purposes and that the purposes do not operate as individual approval criteria. Preserve the Pearl, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 261 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance regulation that allows fill if it will not increase the elevation of land is not necessarily inconsistent with a comprehensive plan provision that bans fill altogether, where fill only qualifies as fill, as defined in the comprehensive plan, if the fill will raise the elevation of land. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a resolution only bars extension of public sewer service outside a sewer district, that resolution does not provide a basis for reversing or remanding a decision that grants land use approval to use an individual septic system. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a potentially dispositive issue under a zoning code requirement that development be served by public facilities is whether a private septic system qualifies as "public facilities," LUBA will reject arguments in respondent's brief that the city council relied on a comprehensive plan definition of "public facilities" that might be broad enough to include private septic systems as public facilities, where nothing in the city council's decision suggests the city council relied on the comprehensive plan definition. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a decision includes potentially conflicting findings that (1) all of a geologist's recommendations must be implemented or (2) only those recommendations identified by staff must be implemented, but the first finding can be harmonized with the second because the first finding does not expressly require that all of the geologist's recommendations must be implemented, it is appropriate to interpret the first finding to only require implementation of the staff identified recommendations. Pennock v. City of Bandon, 72 Or LUBA 379 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the word "property" is not defined in the local code, the county correctly considers context provided by the definitions of "property line adjustment" and "property line," both of which include reference to a "lot of record," in order to interpret the meaning of "property" to refer generally to whatever units of land (parcel, lot, or lot of record) that are subject to a property line adjustment. LaBare v. Clackamas County, 71 Or LUBA 25 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A development ordinance that links the terms "mining" and "quarrying" suggests the term "mining" should not be limited to removal of minerals that exclude rock, where dictionary definitions of "quarrying" frequently define that term to include rock removal. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code states that "minerals" include three general categories: solids, liquids, and gases, but these general categories are followed by specific examples: "coal and ores," "crude petroleum" and "natural gases," the rule of statutory construction ejusdem generis lends some support for interpreting the word "minerals" to be a narrow category of precious and/or valuable substances, as opposed to mere rock or aggregate. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code definition of the term "excavation" separately lists removal of "minerals" and "rock" as possible examples of "excavation," that suggests "minerals" and "rock" are different things and that "minerals" do not include "rock." S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code definition of "surface mining" duplicates a statute that defines "surface mining" to include mining of "minerals," without expressly incorporating the broad statutory definition of "minerals" or the statutory exceptions to that broad definition of "minerals" the development code definition of "surface mining" lends some support to the position that the enactors of the development code intended the word "minerals" to have a more narrow meaning than the statutory definition of that term. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. One possible inference when a development code definition of "surface mining" duplicates a statute that defines "surface mining" to include mining of "minerals," is that the enactors of the development code intended the word "minerals" to have its statutory meaning, even if the enactors did not expressly incorporate the broad statutory definition of "minerals" or the statutory exceptions to that broad definition of "minerals" into the development code. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. There is nothing inherently inappropriate about a local government distinguishing between acceptable excavations that are necessary for development and excavations that are of a nature and extent that constitutes mining. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While dictionaries are not always a reliable way to determine the intended meaning of an undefined term like "minerals," where the development codes expressly directs that undefined terms "have the normal dictionary meaning" it is appropriate to rely on dictionary definitions to interpret the word "minerals" to include basalt rock. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under the law of the case principle articulated in Beck v. City of Tillamook, 313 Or 148, 831 P2d 678 (1992), the parties in a LUBA appeal of a decision following LUBA's remand of an earlier decision may not revisit legal issues that were resolved by LUBA in the prior appeal. Where the board of county commissioners could have reviewed the first decision and resolved interpretive issues differently than the hearings officer did in the first decision, but did not do so prior to the first LUBA appeal, the board of commissioners may not revisit resolved interpretive issues in the decision following remand and is not entitled to the deferential standard of review required by ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010), in the second appeal. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. As a general proposition, a board of commissioners is free to interpret its land use regulations. But a hearings officer would not be free to interpret county land use regulations differently than LUBA did following a LUBA remand of the hearings officer's initial decision, and the board of commissioners is also not free to do so in a local appeal of the hearings officer's decision following LUBA's remand. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, and the governing body does not distinguish between conditions based on their importance or the level of difficulty in exercising those conditions, a finding that 19 of 42 conditions have been "fully complied with" is not adequate to establish that the 42 conditions have been "substantially exercised." Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, the governing body may not dismiss the significance of the applicant's failure to exercise 22 of 42 conditions because those conditions required the applicant to secure additional permits as the failure of a "contingency" to occur. The conditions were written in a manner that required the applicant to secure the permits to exercise the condition, such that they were a necessary step to exercise the condition, and the significance of the applicant's failure to secure the permits may not be dismissed entirely as a failure of a "contingency." Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, and the process and complexity of destination resort final master plan approval makes it difficult to do so within two years, the solution is to amend county land use regulations so as not to subject conceptual master plan approval to the two-year deadline or to write conceptual master plan approval conditions so that they can be exercised without first securing final master plan approval. The solution is not to take the position that the two-year deadline to "substantially exercise" the conditions of approval should not be applied, where the county land use regulations as currently written clearly make the two-year deadline applicable. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county's land use regulations require the county to find that the failure of an applicant to fully comply with any conditions of conceptual master plan approval within two years is not the "fault of the applicant," LUBA will defer to a board of commissioner's finding that the complexity of the proposal and the complexity of the county's destination resort review process relieves the applicant of any fault in fully complying with the conceptual master plan conditions of approval. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's occasional erroneous reference to a "Definition of Village Character" as a "purpose statement" is not a basis for remand, where it is clear that the city council simply refused to interpret the definition as a mandatory permit approval standard that required the city to compare proposed development with existing development to determine if the proposed development is "small scale." LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that a code "Definition of Village Character" is not a mandatory permit approval standard, and that village character is achieved through compliance with substantive code standards that follow the definition, is consistent with the text and context of the code, where the code standards that follow the definition all state "village character" will be created or enhanced "by" or "through" "compliance with the following" "requirements," "criteria" or "design standards." LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A petitioner's argument that a city's code requires that proposed development be compared with the width and length of buildings on adjoining lots, in addition to height, to ensure the proposed development is "small scale" will be rejected where petitioner cites no code language that requires that the proposed development must be directly compared with adjoining development, petitioner cites nothing to support its contention that width and length must invariably be considered in addition to height, and the code is reasonably interpreted to achieve "village character" through standards set out in the code, rather than through a direct comparison of the proposed development with surrounding development. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation that the "work" portion of live/work units will "equally or better" meet a plan purpose of achieving a compact commercial core than would a commercial use, because the work area is an office or commercial use in fact if not name, is plausible and a basis for granting an exception to a code standard that would otherwise prohibit ground floor residential development. A petitioner must do more that speculate that work portion of a live/work unit will not be put to office or commercial use. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city council concludes that a proposed development that includes live/work units and an associated library and gym would be at least as supportive of a plan purpose of creating a high-density retail commercial core as a design that complied with a code "no ground floor residential" standard, by including a parking lot instead, that interpretation is plausible and a sufficient basis for granting an exception to the code "no ground floor residential" standard. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a conditional use "compatibility" standard that requires consideration of the "operating characteristics of the use," a local government does not err in considering the safety of the use. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where county zoning ordinance language replicates and was adopted to implement Goal 4 and LCDC's Goal 4 administrative rule, the board of county commissioner's interpretation of that zoning ordinance language is not entitled to deferential review under ORS 197.829(1) and is instead reviewed under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D) to determine if the board of commissioners "improperly construed the applicable law." Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A board of county commissioners erroneously interprets a county zoning standard that replicates the OAR 660-006-0025(5)(a) requirement that certain nonforest uses in forest zones must not "[f]orce a significant change in, or significantly increase the cost of" forest practices, where under the board of commissioners' interpretation that standard is treated as a broader "significant impacts" standard that is unconnected to "costs" or "changes in" "forest practices." Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even under the deferential standard of review required by ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 260-61, 243 P3d 776 (2010), interpreting a generally worded forest land protection policy so strictly that a use that is expressly allowed as a conditional use in the forest zone could never be approved is inconsistent with the text of the policy and implausible. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A board of county commissioners' interpretation of a zoning standard that requires that a proposed natural gas pipeline must "not limit the potential for more intensive use of the area" as being violated by the proposal unless the pipeline results in "no restrictions" on more intensive uses is neither inconsistent with the text of the zoning standard nor implausible and therefore is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 260-61, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A board of commissioners correctly interprets a zoning standard that requires that a "project's" public benefits outweigh expected adverse impacts to (1) limit consideration to the pipeline for which county permit approval is sought and (2) exclude any public benefits that may be generated by the LNG terminal that would be located in, and require the separate approval of, a city located in the county. The permit applicant's position that the county should consider the benefits of the LNG terminal but not the LNG terminal's expected adverse impacts is incorrect, because "project" cannot mean one thing when considering benefits and something else when considering expected adverse impacts. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While the particular wording of a purpose statement or related provisions can lead to a contrary result, purpose statements generally are not applied as mandatory permit approval criteria. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code provides a methodology for interpreting ambiguous code provisions, and provides that the "Planning Official shall interpret the meaning of the term," that provision does not operate as a delegation of exclusive interpretative authority to the Planning Official, or require the county governing body to defer to the Planning Official's interpretation. Stevens v. City of Island City, 71 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision requiring that a home occupation shall not utilize over 600 square feet of floor area cannot plausibly be interpreted to limit only the square feet physically occupied by a truck or trailer as part of a home occupation to perform maintenance work on trucks and trailers. Because the home occupation activity is the maintenance and not the storage of trucks and trailers, any interpretation that ignores the square footage necessary for employees to perform maintenance tasks is not consistent with the text of the code provision. Stevens v. City of Island City, 71 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm as plausible a governing body's interpretation of a code provision requiring a geologic assessment where development cannot be accomplished without measures to "mitigate or control" the risk of geologic hazard, to trigger the need for a geologic assessment only if the development activity itself causes the risk of geologic hazard to increase above its pre-development state, and to not require geologic assessment simply because the applicant proposes measures, such as planting vegetation, intended to reduce existing landslide risk below the pre-development state. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer errs in concluding a previously approved master plan was superseded by a new zoning district where the hearings officer unduly relies on (1) the lack of a clause in the ordinance specifically stating that the underlying master plan is not superseded and (2) the alleged lack of any references to the underlying master plan in the enacting ordinance or its findings, where there are in fact references in the enacting ordinance findings to the master plan, and the hearings officer failed to consider the presumption under the zoning ordinance that new zoning provisions do not repeal or impair existing land use approvals. Widgi Creek Homeowners Association v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 321 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a new Resort Community Zone is applied to two existing resort areas and includes standards for new development, and one plan policy says new development on undeveloped resort property in the first resort is to be guided by water and sewer service availability and another policy says any new development in the second resort must be consistent with its previously approved master plan, but no plan policy mentions the first resort's master plan, that omission supports a conclusion that the first resort's master plan does not apply to new development in that resort. Widgi Creek Homeowners Association v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 321 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance is deeply ambiguous regarding whether a previously approved resort master plan continues to have regulatory effect after a new Resort Community Zone is applied to the property, with parts of the ordinance, its supporting findings and the comprehensive plan supporting opposite conclusions, it is appropriate for LUBA to remand for the hearings officer to first address all of the conflicting language. Widgi Creek Homeowners Association v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 321 (2015).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where conditional use approval requires a finding of compliance with a three-pronged standard that "the proposed use will not alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties," and the decision maker only addresses the "precludes" prong in granting approval, remand is required to address the other two prongs. Morton v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 7 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a hearings officer's findings appear to substitute a common law nuisance standard for the applicable code standard, but the hearings officer never applies the identified common law nuisance standard, LUBA will view the findings as surplusage rather than an improper attempt to substitute an inapplicable standard for the applicable standard. Morton v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 7 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer correctly concludes that an isolated wetland is not a "riparian corridor," where the code defines riparian corridor as "an area, adjacent to a water area," and the isolated wetland is not "adjacent to a water area." Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the Court of Appeals interpreted similar operative language in a county's code to determine that "riparian zones" are areas adjacent to water areas designated in a community plan, a hearings officer correctly interprets the term "riparian corridor" in that code to apply only to riparian areas that are proximate to designated water areas. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision authorizing a private street if the street is "not needed to provide access to other properties in the area" is not violated by a required pedestrian/bicycle connection between the proposed private street and offsite transit facilities, because "other properties in the area" does not refer to transit facilities in a public right-of-way. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in denying an application for permit approval because it fails to provide adequate parking facilities, where there is no standard that requires "adequate parking facilities" and the local government finds that the proposal complies with the applicable off-street parking requirement. Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in denying an application for approval of a "residential" development for failure to comply with an approval standard that applies to "commercial, institutional and office park uses." Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While a county governing body cannot be faulted for not considering dictionary definitions that were not cited to it below, the county governing body can be faulted for relying on a general on-line dictionary definition of "penstock," when a party asserted that term has a technical meaning and cited two treatises in support its position that the term has a narrower meaning that the on-line general dictionary definition. Pacificorp v. Deschutes County, 70 Or LUBA 89 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body's unexplained decision to rely on the on-line Merriam-Webster Dictionary definition of the term "penstock" does not constitute an interpretation that is adequate for review, where the governing body's decision does not show it was a considered choice between possible definitions. Pacificorp v. Deschutes County, 70 Or LUBA 89 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer correctly rejects an interpretation that connecting two dwellings by a causeway creates a single "dwelling," with two or more "dwelling units," based on a general code definition of "dwelling," where a narrower definition of dwelling that limits "dwelling" to a single dwelling unit applies in the zone. Macfarlane v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 126 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a 30-foot setback requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a land use code off-street parking requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) authorize local governments to approve forest template dwellings if at least three dwellings existed within a specified 160-acre area and those dwellings continue to exist at the time forest template dwelling approval is requested. A hearings officer's interpretation of the word "dwelling" in local laws adopted to implement ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) such that a former dwelling that has been vacant for many years and is in a state of disrepair that would preclude use as a residence does not qualify as a "dwelling" for purposes of satisfying ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) is more consistent with the underlying purpose of the statute and rule. That underlying purpose is to allow forest template dwellings in circumstances where there is existing limited residential development on forest lands, and the hearings officer's interpretation is more consistent with that underlying purpose than interpreting the word "dwelling" to include long abandoned structures, no matter how derelict and uninhabitable as a dwelling in its current condition. West v. Multnomah County, 70 Or LUBA 235 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Land use regulations that set out approval criteria for commercial composting operations and also state "[a]dditionally, these facilities shall be subject to" DEQ and Metro rules simply advise applicants for county approval of commercial composting facilities that there are other legal requirements that must be satisfied before a composting facility can commence operation. That language does not obligate the county to apply DEQ and Metro rules and find the proposed facility complies with those rules. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Generally, a land use regulation requirement that a modified conditional use must be "consistent" with the originally approved conditional use is satisfied, where the originally approved conditional use had two parts and the modified conditional use simply eliminates one of those parts and makes minor, non-substantial changes to the remaining part. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where applicable land use regulations require that a proposal to modify a previously approved conditional use must be "consistent" with previously approved conditional use, and the proposal would eliminate the previously approved composting operation and make minor changes to the previously approved topsoil mining operation, the modified conditional use is correctly viewed as "consistent" with the previously approved conditional use. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In considering whether the proposed modifications to a previously approved conditional use comply with conditional use approval criteria, if legal issues raised in the modification proceedings are relevant issues regarding approval standards that could not have been raised when the original proposal was approved, the local government is required to address those issues. Conversely, if the arguably relevant issues raised in the modification proceedings could have been fully raised when the original proposal was approved, those legal issues are not a product of the modification and the local government is not required to consider those issues. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While a 4.4 units per acre maximum density standard may limit the number of lots that would otherwise be possible with a 5,000-square-foot minimum lot size without the maximum density standard, the minimum lot size and maximum density standards are not inconsistent. Therefore, there would be no textual inconsistency in interpreting the development code to impose a maximum density standard. Greller v. City of Newberg, 70 Or LUBA 499 (2014).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the Metro Code requires that a city retain its Goal 5 protections for tree groves unless removing those protections "would allow no more than a de minimis increase in the amount of development that could occur in areas identified as upland wildlife habitat," a city does not err in comparing the area of each tree grove where development would occur with the remaining area of each tree grove, rather than comparing the area of each tree grove where development would occur with the entire area identified as upland habitat Metro-wide or within the entire city. Metro v. City of Lake Oswego, 68 Or LUBA 136 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the Metro Code requires that a city retain its Goal 5 protections for tree groves unless removing those protections "would allow no more than a de minimis increase in the amount of development that could occur in areas identified as upland wildlife habitat," a city erroneously applies the de minimis limitation by assuming, based on speculation that the owner of the large house will not want to further divide the property, that a one-acre lot with a large house on it in a zone that allows 7,500-square-foot lots will not be divided and developed with additional residences. Metro v. City of Lake Oswego, 68 Or LUBA 136 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's final decision includes adequate findings and a code interpretation adequate for review, where the final decision adopts a planning staff decision as its own, and the planning staff decision embodies a code interpretation that is adequate for review. Sellwood-Moreland Improvement League v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 213 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a staff code interpretation to the effect that a district-specific density transfer provision governing single-family development in single-family zones does not supersede or conflict with a general city-wide density transfer provision applicable to multi-family development in multi-family zones, where the two density transfer provisions would never apply to the same development, and therefore would not create incompatibility or conflict, such that the specific would control the general. Sellwood-Moreland Improvement League v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 213 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A Metro regional trail that includes a multi-use pathway, trailheads, parking, restrooms, shelters, picnic areas, interpretative and educational facilities etc. can constitute a "park" that is prohibited in a city industrial zone, where the proposed trail falls within the broad code definition of "park." That the industrial zone allows bicycle and pedestrian paths in greenways and natural areas does not mean that the proposed regional trail is allowed in the industrial zone, where the trail is not located in a greenway or natural area and is more than a bicycle and pedestrian path. Terra Hydr Inc. v. City of Tualatin, 68 Or LUBA 279 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Remand is necessary where a city's code requires that the city council "shall" vote on a valid challenge to the impartiality of a council member, but the city council ignores a valid challenge and does not vote. That the code provisions governing the required vote state that the city council "may" disqualify the challenged member is properly read in context as authorizing disqualification, and not as granting the city council the discretion to vote or not, as it sees fit. STOP Tigard Oswego Project, LLC v. City of West Linn, 68 Or LUBA 360 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation of a code standard requiring that a proposed facility is "consistent with the overall needs of the community" to also include consideration of impacts/benefits on citizens of adjoining cities, where that broad understanding of "community" is not inconsistent with the text, context, purpose or policy underlying the standard. STOP Tigard Oswego Project, LLC v. City of West Linn, 68 Or LUBA 360 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An argument that a city council misconstrued a "mitigate permanent disturbances" standard to apply only to disturbances to the surface of wetlands does not provide a basis for remand, where fairly read the city council findings apply the standard to evaluate disturbances to the soils and water column that constitute a wetland, and conclude that placing a pipe underground in the bedrock 34 to 60 feet below the wetland would not cause permanent disturbance to the wetland. STOP Tigard Oswego Project, LLC v. City of West Linn, 68 Or LUBA 360 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A standard that requires mitigation of permanent disturbances to wetlands is not properly construed to apply to the entirety of a parcel that contains a wetland area, such that the standard is applied to disturbances elsewhere on the parcel that have no impact on the wetland area. STOP Tigard Oswego Project, LLC v. City of West Linn, 68 Or LUBA 360 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation of a code standard requiring mitigation of "permanent disturbances" to water resource areas, to require no mitigation when a proposed pipeline is laid across a culvert within the paved area of a street, and thus would result in no additional impacts on the water resource, where the interpretation is consistent with the text and apparent purpose of the standard to minimize impacts on water resource areas. STOP Tigard Oswego Project, LLC v. City of West Linn, 68 Or LUBA 360 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will not interpret a definition of "multi-dwelling structure" to preclude construction of a building that straddles a lot line, where the definition is written to distinguish "multi-dwelling structures" from attached dwellings which must be located on their own lot. Beaumont-Wilshire Neighbors v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 393 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A built-in barbeque grill that is constructed on a three-foot concrete based qualifies as a "structure," which is defined as "any object constructed in or on the ground." As such, the barbeque grill is subject to setback requirements that apply to structures. Beaumont-Wilshire Neighbors v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 393 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While the definition of "structure," which is "any object constructed in or on the ground," is potentially broad enough to include synthetic turf, synthetic turf is more similar to "paved areas and vegetative landscaping materials," which are exempt from the definition of structure. Beaumont-Wilshire Neighbors v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 393 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In approving a wedding venue and event business in a forest zone under a code provision that allows, on a "temporary" basis, uses otherwise not allowable in the applicable zone, a county must consider whether the proposed use is properly characterized as a "home occupation," which is an allowed conditional use in the forest zone, subject to restrictions. If the proposed is properly characterized as a home occupation allowable in the forest zone, then the code does not allow the county to issue a temporary use permit for that use. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county errs in approving a five-year renewable permit for an existing wedding venue and event business as a "temporary" use, without considering whether the use is "temporary" as defined under the county code, i.e., something that exists only for a limited, transitory interval, and whether conditions are necessary to limit the duration of the use to ensure that it is in fact a "temporary" use. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county errs in interpreting a code provision to allow temporary use of an "existing structure" even if the structure was recently and illegally built for a use prohibited in the zone, where the text and context of the temporary use provisions suggest that temporary use of an "existing structure" is intended for a lawful structure, and the county's broader interpretation brings the code into conflict with nonconforming use statutes. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an applicant sought confirmation that a methadone clinic is a permitted use in a professional office zone, and there is no reason to believe the applicant's request also sought confirmation for other unspecified medical services, the city's confirmation regarding the methadone clinic does not include other unspecified medical services. An applicant's and city's failure to specify expressly that a methadone clinic that is the subject of a land use approval application was to be an outpatient clinic is not error, where the requirement that the approved methadone clinic must be an outpatient clinic is inferable from the application and decision. Mariposa Townhouses v. City of Medford, 68 Or LUBA 479 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Absent wording to the contrary, generally worded zoning district purpose statements are not mandatory approval criteria for permits or other site-specific land use decisions. A zoning district purpose statement that development in the zone "is expected to be suitable for locations adjacent to residential neighborhoods" is not a mandatory approval criteria for permits or other site specific land use decisions. Mariposa Townhouses v. City of Medford, 68 Or LUBA 479 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where competing interpretations of a development code are equally plausible, and there is some contextual support for the interpretation selected by a hearings officer, LUBA will conclude that the hearings officer did not "[i]mproperly construe[] the applicable law," within the meaning of ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D). Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code requires that conditions of permit approval be satisfied within two years after the permit approval becomes final to avoid having the permit approval become void, and satisfying those 38 conditions within two years will be difficult because satisfying some of those conditions of approval would require the applicant to first secure additional approval decisions, a hearings officer is not permitted to interpret the code to require that the applicant only satisfy those conditions of approval that do not require additional approval decisions. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code requires that permit conditions of approval must be substantially satisfied and that "any failure to fully comply with the conditions is not the fault of the applicant," for a county hearings officer to find that the permit is not void, the hearing hearings officer must be able to find both that all conditions of approval, viewed as a whole, have been substantially exercised and that, for any of the conditions of approval where there has been a failure to fully exercise the condition, the applicant is not at fault. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the applicable land use regulations do not require that the owner of the property that is the subject of a permit application sign the application or join in the application, a local government errs by denying the application on the basis that the property owner opposes the permit application. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in finding that a previously approved variance is no longer legally effective, based on a finding that (1) the sign that was approved "can never exist" and (2) the facts that existed at the time of the variance was approved no longer exist, where the findings do not explain why a sign with the characteristics of the sign that was originally approved "can never exist,' or why the change in facts has the legal effect of making the variance legally ineffective. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where there is nothing in the applicable land use regulations that requires the applicant for a sign permit pursuant to a previously approved variance to demonstrate that it is not possible to construct a conforming sign, the local government errs in denying the sign permit based on the applicant's failure to demonstrate it is not possible to construct a conforming sign instead. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 43 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will not consider whether a county has authority to approve conditional zoning where the applicant modified its proposal making conditional zoning unnecessary before the board of commissioners could make a decision about whether the county had such authority. Warren v. Josephine County, 67 Or LUBA 74 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A driveway that is located on the property it serves, or on another private property, is properly viewed as a part of the use it serves. But a public right-of-way that provides access to property is not properly viewed as part of the use that the public right-of-way provides access to. Lost Creek Rock Products, LLC v. Lane County, 67 Or LUBA 96 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Mining truck traffic, while it is on the mining site and inside a 200-foot buffer that separates the mining site from adjoining properties, is properly viewed as part of the mining use for purposes of regulations limiting the impacts of the mining use. But when that truck traffic passes onto a public right-of-way, it is no longer properly viewed as part of the mining use. Lost Creek Rock Products, LLC v. Lane County, 67 Or LUBA 96 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning overlay height restriction that can be interpreted in isolation to apply to an entire property, instead of only to the portion of the property that is subject to the overlay, should not be interpreted in isolation, where a separate zoning ordinance provision expressly addresses properties that are subject to more than one zone and makes it clear that the overlay zone restrictions should only be applied to the portion of the property that is subject to the overlay zone. Richmond Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 115 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where limiting application of a zoning main entrance requirement to commercial tenants and not applying that requirement to residential tenants would require that LUBA insert limiting text into the zoning ordinance that is not included in the zoning ordinance, LUBA may not do so and the main entrance requirement applies to both commercial and residential tenants. Richmond Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 115 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code provides that in reviewing an application for development approval a traffic impact study "may" be required in two circumstances, but petitioners do not establish that either of those circumstances are present, petitioners' argument that the city erred by failing to require a traffic impact study provides no basis for reversal or remand. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code sets out a particular method for measuring the height of hipped roofs and a different method for measuring other types of roofs, the hipped roof method applies notwithstanding that the proposed hipped roof is a compound hipped roof rather than the simple hipped roof displayed in a code diagram of roof types. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county has specific procedures for identifying and resolving development code violations and appeals from those procedures are to circuit court, LUBA will sustain a county's interpretation that it is not obligated to review a decision by a county enforcement officer that a property is not in violation of the development code as part of a permit application for a home occupation on the property that was the subject of the enforcement officer's decision. Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a county governing body's interpretation of standards governing placement of fill and levees in different areas of the flood plain as allowing fills and levees in the "flood fringe" area as long as the fill or levee does not increase the base flood level by one foot and does not extend from the "flood fringe" into the "floodway," which regulates fill and levees more stringently. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 67 Or LUBA 278 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance standard that requires a city to apply to annexed properties the city zone that "most closely approximates" the "standards," "density," and "uses" in the existing county zone requires a three-pronged inquiry. The city's choice of a zone will be affirmed where standards in the zone the city applied and the standards in the zone petitioners believe should have been applied are identical, the density in the zone applied by the city is closer to the county zone, and the two zones are equally approximate for 33 of the uses allowed in the county zone and the zone favored by petitioners more closely approximates 13 uses. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 67 Or LUBA 374 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a rezoning standard originated in a city/county agreement but was later adopted as part of the city's comprehensive plan and land use regulations, the city's interpretation of that rezoning standard is entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 67 Or LUBA 374 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county zoning that applied to recently annexed territory inside a city's urban growth boundary provided that dwellings were allowed only if the property "was designated for residential use by the city," and the city took the position in its brief that the property was not designated for residential use, LUBA will assume that the city is correct where (1) petitioners do not argue in their petition for review that property was designated for residential use and (2) petitioners fail to respond to the city's argument in its brief. Knaupp v. City of Forest Grove, 67 Or LUBA 398 (2013).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A petitioner fails to establish that a city erroneously interpreted a county "ten percent/10,000 square foot" limitation on commercial development in a mixed-use zone to apply to individual development proposals rather than the larger comprehensive plan areas when a large number of small developments might be proposed where there is textual support for both the city's and petitioner's interpretation. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Unless presented with some evidence to the contrary, a city decision maker could reasonably assume that proposed residential development will generate negligible air and noise pollution. Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under State v. Gaines, 346 Or 160, 171-72, 206 P3d 1042 (2009), LUBA is free to consider any legislative history it considers useful and where the available legislative history is completely consistent with the city's interpretation and completely inconsistent with petitioner's interpretation, the legislative history is useful in resolving the different interpretations. Cassidy v. City of Glendale, 66 Or LUBA 314 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the mandatory Goals and Policies section of a comprehensive plan call for multi-family housing to be located in the city's residential zones and the Goals and Policies say nothing about locating multi-family housing in the city's commercial zone, amending the zoning ordinance to delete multi-family housing as a permitted use in the city's commercial zone is not inconsistent with the comprehensive plan. Cassidy v. City of Glendale, 66 Or LUBA 314 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council's interpretation of a standard requiring that the proposed road vacation be in the public interest, to the effect that "public interest" can include benefits flowing from development facilitated by the road vacation, not limited to the road vacation itself, where nothing in the text suggests limits on what considerations inform whether the vacation is in the public interest. Conte v. City of Eugene, 66 Or LUBA 334 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a planning director's interpretation that site design review standards do not apply to a proposed landfill expansion because the expansion was authorized in a 1980 decision that pre-dated the site design review standards, where nothing in the code compels application of the site design review standards to an already authorized landfill expansion. McPhillips Farm Inc. v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 355 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where applicable overlay zone regulations do not specify how they apply to a site that is located partially within the overlay zone and partially outside the overlay zone, and the overlay zones can be applied in more than one plausible way in that circumstance, the overlay zone regulations are ambiguous and a building permit that applies those overlay zone regulations that is appealed to LUBA does not qualify for either of the exceptions to LUBA's review jurisdiction set out at ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) and (B) for ministerial decisions that do not require interpretation or are subject to clear and objective standards. Richmond Neighbors v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 464 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county code section that provides general standards for "adjustments" does not provide additional standards for a property line adjustment, where the relevant text and context indicates that "adjustment" as used in that code section means an adjustment or variance to a minimum lot size or similar standard, not a property line adjustment that requires no variance. Louks v. Jackson County, 65 Or LUBA 58 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city planning commission's interpretation of a code provision that requires "adequate screening" as requiring screening of a 75 foot-tall cell tower to a reasonable extent and its conclusion that screening the bottom two thirds of a 75-foot-tall tower is sufficient to provide "adequate screening" are correct, given the inherently subjective nature of a criterion that requires "adequate screening." Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a proposed cell tower meets the objective standards set out in the city's code for telecommunications towers and where the tower will be screened from view while still allowing the tower to function as intended, LUBA will uphold a city's conclusion that the proposed cell tower is "reasonably compatible and harmonious" with the neighborhood, particularly given the inherently subjective nature of the criterion. Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That the county initially adopted a problematic interpretation of the criteria for applying a limited use overlay zone to limit uses allowed on land for which a reasons exception is taken does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the county adopted an alternative interpretation that is consistent with the text of the zone change criteria. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a code standard allowing imposition of a limited use overlay zone if "it is required to limit the uses permitted in the proposed zone" by the reasons exception rule at OAR chapter 660, division 4, to employ the overlay zone to limit uses to ensure consistency with Statewide Planning Goal 12 (Transportation), and the need to take an exception to Goal 12, even though the county took reasons exceptions only to other statewide planning goals, where the county's interpretation is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose or underlying policy of the code standard. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a local code provision to require only consideration of current adequacy of transportation facilities, notwithstanding local traffic analysis guidelines that require analysis of impacts from future planned uses, where the county interprets the guidelines to be non-mandatory, and that interpretation is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose or policy of the relevant local provisions. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning standard that requires that structures "be compatible with adjacent developments and surrounding land uses" without specifying whether the referenced adjacent developments and surrounding land uses are limited to existing developments and uses, a city council's interpretation that the zoning standard is limited to existing developments and uses is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Johnson v. City of Gladstone, 65 Or LUBA 225 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance allows "Government Services" uses if they are not "specifically listed" uses in other zoning districts, a city council is within its interpretive discretion under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 259, 243 P3d 776 (2010), when it concludes that a VA outpatient clinic is allowable as a Government Services use, notwithstanding that "Medical Health Facilities" are allowed in some city zones. Because the VA outpatient clinic would offer a variety of services some of which are not offered by the typical private and public clinics that would be allowed as "Medical Health Facilities," the VA outpatient clinic is not a "specifically listed" use in any zoning district. Randazzo v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 272 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance would allow a VA outpatient clinic use as "Government Services" uses only if the use is not "specifically listed" uses in other zoning districts, and the zoning ordinance authorizes "Medical Health Facilities" in other zoning districts, the critical question is whether authorizing "Medical Health Facilities" in those other zones is sufficient to "specifically list" the proposed VA outpatient clinic use. In resolving that question, the maxim of statutory construction in ORS 174.020 that calls for selection of a particular provision over a more general provision where they conflict is of no particular assistance. Randazzo v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 272 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation of a code provision allowing rezoning when "zoning previously adopted for the area was in error" to focus on the parcel to be rezoned rather than the surrounding area is consistent with the text of the provision, and will be affirmed. O'Brien v. Lincoln County, 65 Or LUBA 286 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The zoning designation of property that is shown on the official zoning map is the valid zoning designation for the property. Housing Authority of Jackson County v. City of Medford, 65 Or LUBA 295 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will not defer to an interpretation of a zoning ordinance that appears only in a city's reply brief and is inconsistent with an implied interpretation that is included in the city council's decision on appeal. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city council interprets a comprehensive plan policy to require that a new voluntary, educational septic system maintenance program "will improve upon" its existing mandatory, regulatory septic system maintenance program and the evidence shows that the existing program has improved septic system maintenance, a city council decision to repeal the existing program before the new program is developed and adopted is inconsistent with the comprehensive plan policy. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan policy that requires a city to "adopt a program to improve maintenance of septic systems for the benefit of all residents" does not specify how the program will improve septic system maintenance and therefore does not necessarily require that a city septic system maintenance system must be mandatory and regulatory, as opposed to voluntary and educational, so long as the program will improve maintenance of septic systems. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although there is no general legal requirement that all legislative land use decisions must be supported by findings, where the scope and meaning of at least some applicable comprehensive plan policies are unclear, it is highly unlikely that a decision to replace an existing mandatory, regulatory program to improve septic system maintenance with a voluntary, educational program to achieve the same goal will be defensible on appeal without adequate findings. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Dunes City, 65 Or LUBA 358 (2012).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a permit extension may be granted based on a finding that the failure to complete the proposal within the original term of the permit was "for reasons which the applicant was not responsible," a board of county commissioners is within its discretion to interpret that standard to be met if a prudent developer would have delayed construction based on a funding shortfall. The county is also within its interpretive discretion not to require that the applicant explain why it could not have altered its decision to fund the project with donations or why it could not have reallocated other resources to construct the proposal. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a "public need and public benefit" standard not to require a weighing of the positive against the negative impacts of proposed mining, and instead to require only that there is a public need for and benefit from the additional supply of aggregate, where that interpretation is consistent with the express language of the code provision. Setniker v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 38 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation that a code phrase "passive use recreational facilities," part of a wetland protection zone that generally prohibits development in wetland setback areas, includes trails and similar recreational facilities, and does not include developed recreational facilities such as an in-ground concrete swimming pool, is consistent with the text and context of the code provision. Bundy v. City of West Linn, 63 Or LUBA 113 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body does not err in concluding that an in-ground concrete swimming pool is a "structure" as that term is defined in the city code, because it has a "fixed connection" to the ground. Bundy v. City of West Linn, 63 Or LUBA 113 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a land use regulation prohibits a county from approving a permit for land if the land has been "developed in violation of" the county land use regulation, a planning commission does not misconstrue the land use regulation in requiring that there be an adjudicated violation regarding the land rather than mere allegations of an existing violation or evidence of a violation. Green v. Douglas County, 63 Or LUBA 200 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city setback reduction criterion requires the city to find that views of the ocean across a currently vacant lot will not be any more "obstructed" with a proposed front yard setback reduction than they would be without that setback reduction. Where it is the construction of the portion of the house that meets all setback requirements that almost entirely obstructs the view of the ocean, a city interpretation that any de minimis impact the proposed front yard setback might have on impaired view of the ocean that will remain through the small side yard does not amount to an "obstruction" is within the city's interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1). Burton v. City of Cannon Beach, 63 Or LUBA 300 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a property is to be developed with a commercial or industrial use, the internal driveway on that property that connects the commercial or industrial buildings to the nearest public right-of--way is properly viewed as part of the commercial or industrial use, whether that driveway is labeled as "accessory" to the business or an integral part of the use itself. Wilson v. Washington County, 63 Or LUBA 314 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A destination resort approval standard requiring that "adverse effects on surrounding lands are to be avoided first and minimized if avoidance is not possible" clearly gives priority to avoiding adverse affects. Remand is necessary where the applicant demonstrated and the county considered only whether adverse effects of the destination resort on an adjoining wildlife refuge can be minimized, and the county failed to consider whether adverse effects can be avoided. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a breeding kennel arguably qualifies as animal husbandry, and animal husbandry is a farm use, a local government interpretation that the breeding kennel qualifies as a farm use is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose and policy of the land use regulation. Siegert v. Crook County, 63 Or LUBA 379 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of a local code provision that allows a multi-use path to be constructed in a riparian corridor area if it is "necessary to maintain a functional trail system" is not inconsistent with the express language of any relevant plan or local code provision where a comprehensive plan map depicts a multi-use path within the riparian corridor area, even though the map labels the trail as "conceptual." League of Women Voters v. City of Corvallis, 63 Or LUBA 432 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in denying an application for a use expressly allowed as a conditional use in the applicable zone on the grounds that the proposed conditional use is inconsistent with the purpose of the zone, where no code provision makes the zone purpose statement an applicable approval criterion, and the zone purpose statement includes no language suggesting that the purpose statement functions as a mandatory approval criterion for conditional uses allowed in the zone. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a city council's interpretation of a code provision allowing a property owner to site a recreational vehicle (RV) on the property for "temporary living purposes" to require that the RV be accessory to or in conjunction with a permanent dwelling on the property, where nothing in the applicable code provision expressly or impliedly requires a dwelling, and the city has expressly required, in other inapplicable code provisions, that an RV be an accessory use to or be in conjunction with a dwelling. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. While a local government has latitude to identify applicable standards and criteria in its comprehensive plan and land use regulations, under ORS 227.173(1) the "standards and criteria" must already exist in the plan and ordinance, and the local government cannot manufacture standards and criteria to apply to approve or deny a permit application. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's determination that a short-term vacation rental operated using a dwelling on a forest-zoned parcel is a commercial "visitor accommodation" use not permitted in the forest zone rather than a residential use permitted in the zone, where the county's code distinguishes between residential tenancies arranged on a month-to-month basis or longer and commercial "visitor accommodations" with a tenancy less than 30 days. Davis v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 486 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A group home for recovering addicts is not rendered something other than a group home simply because the applicant also plans to allow "birthday parties, student graduations, open houses, small luncheons and other similar activities," where the hearing official explains that those activities are consistent with a group care home use and "not out of character" with activities that are common in single family dwellings occupied by a larger family. Phillips v. Lane County, 62 Or LUBA 92 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a development code allows single-family dwelling outright, but requires special use approval for group care home and prohibits special use approval if the proposed use would have "significant adverse impacts," a hearings official does not erroneously interpret that code requirement to require that any impacts of the proposed special use must be "significantly greater or different than that of a single-family residence of the same size." Phillips v. Lane County, 62 Or LUBA 92 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision requiring the "continuation" of existing streets in adjoining subdivisions is not properly interpreted to require that connections be made to internal roads in the adjoining subdivision, where such a connection would have to cross existing platted residential lots. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 182 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under Flying J. Inc. v. Marion County, 49 Or LUBA 28, 36-37, aff'd, 201 Or App 99, 117 P3d 1027 (2005), where the text of an ordinance that adopts zoning designation amendments expresses a clear intent that the prior zoning for a parcel be retained but the map attached to the ordinance shows a change in zoning, that conflict is resolved in favor of the text. Turner v. Jackson County, 62 Or LUBA 199 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one sentence of a zoning ordinance provides that "any dispute" concerning the zoning of property is to be resolved by reference to the official zoning map, but that sentence appears immediately after a sentence that states that initial zoning boundary determinations are to be made based on maps generated by the local government's GIS system, those sentences should be read together to require that any disputes that arise based on the GIS maps or facts that arise after the zoning ordinance was adopted be resolved in favor of the official zoning map. But those sentences of the zoning ordinance do not require that a text/map conflict in the enacting zoning ordinance itself be resolved in favor of the official zoning map, where it is clear the new zoning shown for a property on the official zoning map was a mistake, and the text of the enacting ordinance clearly states that the zoning of the property was not changed by the ordinance. Turner v. Jackson County, 62 Or LUBA 199 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The inference described in Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387, rev'd, 106 Or App 594, 809 P2d 701 (1991)—that provision for a specific listed use in one zone precludes that use from being authorized in a different zone under a broader use category—has no role in reviewing local government code interpretations under ORS 197.829(1), where the proper question is whether the interpretation is consistent with the text and context of the code language. Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 62 Or LUBA 247 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of the use category "retail and wholesale trade facilities" to include a travel plaza that sells fuel, convenience items and food to travelers, where the proposed use fits within the plain and ordinary meaning of the use category's broad terms, and nothing in the text or context narrows the scope of the use category. Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 62 Or LUBA 247 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An allegedly erroneous and overbroad code interpretation that all commercial uses allowed in any commercial zone are allowed under the use category "retail and wholesale trade facilities" in an airport overlay zone does not warrant reversal or remand, where the interpretative error, if any, does not undermine the governing body's principal interpretation that the proposed travel plaza is a "retail and wholesale trade facility." Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 62 Or LUBA 247 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reverse under ORS 197.829(1) a governing body's interpretation that a Limited Use overlay zone is applied to limit uses in exception areas only when the applicant requests it, and that instead conditions of approval can be applied to limit uses, when (1) the Limited Use overlay zone is expressly intended for that purpose, (2) nothing in the code suggests an alternative mechanism to limit uses or authorizes attaching conditions of approval to limit uses in exception areas, and (3) under the county's interpretation and the criteria that govern designation of the overlay zone there are no circumstances under which the overlay zone could be applied. Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 62 Or LUBA 247 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992), where an approval criterion requires a determination that property is a legal or lawfully created parcel, the relevant question is whether any local government approvals required at the time were obtained, not whether the local government correctly applied the applicable approval criteria to create the property. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), where the applicable criteria expressly or implicitly require a determination that a unit of land proposed for development is a legal or lawfully created "parcel" under code definitions that set out several ways to create a "parcel," the relevant question is whether the unit of land was in fact created in one of the ways set out in the definition, not whether substantive or procedural errors might have been made in the process of creating the parcel. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under a code provision defining a lot or parcel as (1) a unit of land created by partition or subdivision, or (2) a unit of land under single ownership, which complies with all applicable laws at the time the lot or parcel was created, the phrase "complies with all applicable laws" modifies the immediately preceding phrase, units of land created by means other than partition or subdivision, and does not require a determination that a parcel created by partition complies with all applicable laws at the time it was created. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under a code provision requiring that the applicant for development within a riparian area demonstrate that "reasonable steps" have been taken to reduce adverse impact on the environment, it is not a "reasonable step" to require the applicant to forego constructing a short driveway connecting to the adjacent public right-of-way and instead require obtaining lengthy driveway easements over several adjoining properties to connect the subject property to a different, non-adjacent public street. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code criterion intended to protect against adverse environmental impacts within a floodplain corridor does not require the applicant for a driveway within the corridor to address alleged traffic safety and vision clearance conflicts with users of nearby driveways. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is not error for a city to rely in part on an existing pathway that does not meet city standards for new pathways to satisfy a land use regulation connectivity requirement, where other proposed pathways meet city standards and, viewed collectively, are themselves sufficient to satisfy the connectivity requirement. Walker v. City of Sandy, 62 Or LUBA 358 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is not error for a city to rely in part on a road extension that is planned for an unspecified date in the future to satisfy a land use regulation connectivity requirement, where other proposed pathways, viewed collectively, are themselves sufficient to satisfy the connectivity requirement. Walker v. City of Sandy, 62 Or LUBA 358 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is not error for a city to rely in part on a proposed pathway that will be closed to the general public during school hours to satisfy a land use regulation connectivity requirement, where other proposed pathways are open to the general public during school hours and, viewed collectively, are themselves sufficient to satisfy the connectivity requirement. Walker v. City of Sandy, 62 Or LUBA 358 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A landslide hazard regulation that requires that development be located on the "safest part of the site," without providing any guidance on how to measure safety or how small that part might be, could be interpreted to require that development be located on the safest square inch of the site. In that circumstance the regulation would either be unworkable or potentially run afoul of the ORS 227.173(1) requirement that approval or denial of permits be governed by "standards," if applicants were expected to find a way to make the regulation workable. Gravatt v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 382 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A landslide hazard regulation need not be interpreted to require an unqualified search for the "safest part of the site" where another part of the regulation only requires that an applicant demonstrate that development will be located where the "risk of landslide affecting the site" is "reasonably limited." Gravatt v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 382 (2011).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the zoning ordinance definition of "noise-sensitive uses" is ambiguous and could be interpreted to include the entire parcel where the use is located or more narrowly to include only the use's structure, and there is some contextual support for limiting the use to the structure, LUBA will defer to the local government's decision to adopt the more narrow interpretation. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one section of a zoning ordinance permits the city engineer to approve more than one driveway access to lots and parcels "subject to access requirements," and another section of the zoning ordinance setting out the city's access requirements generally prohibits direct access to arterials where a lot or parcel already has access to a lower category roadway, a city correctly denies the request for the direct arterial access. In that case the two sections of the zoning ordinance do not conflict; the contingent authority to grant more than one driveway is simply limited by the section setting out access requirements. Athletic Club of Bend, Inc. v. City of Bend, 61 Or LUBA 349 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A land use regulation design standard that authorizes a county to "require design and public dedication of streets or roads to ensure the development and continuance of a convenient roadway network" may not be sufficiently broad to authorize a county to require extensive off-site road improvements, but it could be interpreted to authorize a county to require that the partition include an internal road system that connects with any roads on adjoining properties. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard allowing modifications to a conditional use permit that are not "materially inconsistent with the conditions of the original approval" does not preclude all modifications that are inconsistent in some way with the original conditions of approval, only modifications that "materially" or "significantly" conflict with the original conditions of approval. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The hearings officer correctly interprets a code standard allowing modifications to a conditional use permit that result in "insignificant changes" in the physical appearance of development, use of the site, or impact on surrounding properties to be concerned with modifications that change the proposed development, not a modification to a deadline to complete the development as originally approved. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The more deferential standard of review set out at ORS 197.829(1) applies to interpretations by local government governing bodies. The deferential standard of review set out at ORS 197.829(1) does not apply to interpretations by other local decision makers, such as hearings officers, and LUBA reviews such interpretations under ORS 197.835(9)(a)(D) to determine whether the hearings officer "[i]mproperly construed the applicable law." Waverly Landing Condo. Owners' Assoc. v. City of Portland, 61 Or LUBA 448 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A petitioner's argument that portions of a proposed sewer pump station and related improvements that were approved as a use that is permitted outright would qualify as a "utility corridor" and therefore require conditional use approval provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner only offers a focused argument regarding the pressure sewer line component of the approved facility and such pressure sewer lines are expressly excluded from the definition of "utility corridor" because they are to be located wholly within street rights-of-way. Waverly Landing Condo. Owners' Assoc. v. City of Portland, 61 Or LUBA 448 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Just because a proposed sewer pump station can be viewed as part of a larger "regional" sewer system, it does not necessarily follow that the sewer pump station itself must also be viewed as a "regional level" facility for purposes of determining whether the sewer pump station is accurately characterized as a "basic utility" (a local facility) or a "utility corridor" (a "regional level" facility). Waverly Landing Condo. Owners' Assoc. v. City of Portland, 61 Or LUBA 448 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county's concerns that the roads that will be needed to provide access to the parcels that will be created by a series of partitions are not sufficient to authorize the county to condition final partition plat approval on the applicant agreeing to construct those roads and provide financial guarantees to construct those road, where the county code distinguishes between partitioners and subdividers and requires that subdividers construct or guarantee construction of roads prior to final plat approval. Sperber v. Coos County, 60 Or LUBA 44 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of its ordinance is not "inconsistent" with the language of the ordinance, within the meaning of ORS 197.829(1)(a), if the interpretation is plausible, given the interpretive principles that ordinarily apply to the construction of ordinances under the rules of PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 859 P2d 1143 (1993). Scovel v. City of Astoria, 60 Or LUBA 371 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In determining whether a local government's interpretation of local land use law is inconsistent with the "express language" of the local land use law, LUBA and the appellate courts apply the statutory construction principles in ORS 174.010, which preclude interpretations that insert or delete words. Scovel v. City of Astoria, 60 Or LUBA 371 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of its own land use laws to allow the planning commission complete discretion to grant an unlimited number of one-year permit approval extensions will not be affirmed under ORS 197.829(1), where the local government's interpretation adds language that is not present in the local land use law, and the interpretation defeats the purpose of the local land use law, which is to limit the life of a permit decision that is not acted on. Scovel v. City of Astoria, 60 Or LUBA 371 (2010).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners assign error to a local government construction of applicable local land use law, the question for LUBA is whether the local government's interpretation must be sustained under ORS 197.829(1), not whether petitioners' interpretation is sustainable or a better interpretation than the local government's interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body's interpretation of its land use regulations to limit the scope of review of a site plan and architectural review committee is inconsistent with the text of the land use regulations where the governing body ignores and fails to give effect to land use regulation text that is inconsistent with its interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of its land use regulations to limit application of (1) its land use regulation's requirement for preparation of a transportation impact analysis and (2) its minimum level of service standard to zone change decisions and certain planned unit development decisions cannot be sustained, where the text of the relevant land use regulation sections is inconsistent with that interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under ORS 197.829(1), Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), and Church v. Grant County, 187 Or App 518, 69 P3d 759 (2003), a local government's interpretation and LUBA's review of that interpretation are guided by the principles articulated in PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 859 P2d 1143 (1993). Where the local government's interpretation finds almost no support in the relevant text of the land use regulation and comprehensive plan, LUBA will not defer to that interpretation. Siporen v. City of Medford, 59 Or LUBA 78 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In considering an application for a three-parcel partition, the failure of an existing intersection that is not adjacent to the property to satisfy local zoning ordinance standards that apply to the design and construction of a new road or intersection does not provide a basis for the county to deny an application for a partition, where no new roads or intersections are proposed as part of the partition. Pelz v. Clackamas County, 59 Or LUBA 219 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision prohibits development approval for property that is not in full compliance with all code requirements and prior approvals, unless the approval results in the property coming into full compliance, a hearings officer does not err in interpreting the code to require the applicant to apply for all permits and approvals necessary to correct all code or permit violations as part of the development application, and to reject as insufficient the applicant's willingness to seek future permit approvals. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance provision requires that a local government identify the "local need for a different land use" that approval of a proposed a plan amendment will fulfill, the local government does not err in identifying the local need as a need for trucking businesses in a variety of locations throughout the county, including rural communities. Kinnett v. Douglas County, 59 Or LUBA 293 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county zoning ordinance limits lots and parcels to "one principal use," a county's interpretation of its code to allow more than one kind of industrial use to constitute "one principal use" of a parcel, so long as all those industrial uses are all airport related industrial uses, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Brockman v. Columbia County, 59 Or LUBA 302 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a destination resort approval standard that requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," a county may allow an applicant to utilize data developed in approval of a nearby destination resort that utilized seven indicator species to estimate the nature and extent of the damage that must be fully mitigated. A reasonable person would rely on such data unless opposing data is submitted to show the analysis that relies on indicator species missed or inadequately addressed some aspect of the wildlife resource. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a destination resort approval standard requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," an assignment of error that a county erred by applying that standard to allow one species to be replaced by another provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the applicant's approach to demonstrating compliance with the "no net loss of wildlife" standard does not in fact propose to replace existing species with other species and proposes to fully mitigate all expected damage to wildlife habitat. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a destination resort approval standard that requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," a county does not err by focusing on wildlife habitat rather than the wildlife itself. In developing a destination resort, wildlife itself is generally not purposefully harmed; the harm is caused through destruction or damage to the wildlife habitat. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A street connectivity standard that requires that development must "include street connections to any streets that abut, are adjacent to, or terminate at the development site" is not correctly interpreted to allow a development proposal that would extend an abutting street a short distance into the development and then terminate the street without connecting it to an adjoining street. Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings official does not err by finding that a street connectivity standard that requires that development street systems not create "excessive travel lengths" is violated by a subdivision proposal that will result in eleven existing residents and the residents of three of the proposed lots having to drive one quarter of a mile out of direction to make certain trips. While the hearings official likely could have adopted a more permissive reading of the standard, it was not error to adopt the strict interpretation that the hearings official adopted. Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reverse a county governing body's code interpretation that a conditional use allowed in an Acreage Residential zone that generates any amount of dust leaving the property must be denied because it is not in harmony with the purpose of the zone to buffer urban uses from farm uses, where the zone allows a number of dust-generating uses as permitted and conditional uses in the zone, including farm use, and under the county's interpretation few if any of those uses could ever be approved in the zone. Davis v. Polk County, 58 Or LUBA 1 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will remand a decision determining that a conditional use is inconsistent with one of seven purposes of the underlying zone, where it is not clear whether the county must address each of the seven purposes and determine whether the proposed use is, on balance consistent with those purposes, or whether inconsistency with a single zone purpose is sufficient to deny the application, and the county's decision does not address the issue. Davis v. Polk County, 58 Or LUBA 1 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code standard requires that a city find that vacating a public right-of-way is in the "public interest," and the city finds that the vacation results in practically no loss of transportation facilities and greater development flexibility for surrounding properties, the city's finding is sufficient to demonstrate compliance with the "public interest" standard, and the city is not required to consider the possible secondary effects of building a new basketball arena on the surrounding properties. Bowers v. City of Eugene, 58 Or LUBA 51 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code purpose statement is not a mandatory planning directive where nothing in the wording or the context of the purpose statement suggests that it is. SEIU v. City of Happy Valley, 58 Or LUBA 261 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a code provision that authorizes uses in a zone that are similar to listed uses, to allow a proposed use that is similar to a listed use, even if the proposed use is specifically listed in another zone, where the governing body's interpretation gives independent effect to that code provision and is consistent with its text and context. Western Land & Cattle, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 295 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county's code includes not one but two separate provisions authorizing uses that are not listed as permitted uses in that zone, or listed anywhere as a permitted use in any zone, if the use is "similar to" uses permitted in the zone, it is clear that the county is not concerned with maintaining bright lines between use categories, and the county does not err in approving a "truck stop" as a similar use to an "automobile service station," even though the applicable zone does not list truck stops as a permitted use while other zones in the county do. Western Land & Cattle, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 295 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err in concluding that the county's noise ordinance is not a conditional use approval standard for a personal use airport, where the noise ordinance is not part of the county's zoning regulations, the noise ordinance functions as a performance standard rather than an approval standard, and the noise ordinance includes an exclusion for noises generated by approved conditional uses. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Absent code language to the contrary, a county does not err in finding that regulations governing a particular zoning district apply only to land located within that district, and not to uses proposed on land adjacent to the district. Crockett v. Curry County, 58 Or LUBA 520 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a code provision requiring that a proposed use that is "inconsistent" with the transportation plan must be processed as a plan amendment, to require only that the county determine whether the proposed use is in conflict with any transportation plan policy, and not to require that the county find that the proposed use is specifically authorized by the transportation plan. Crockett v. Curry County, 58 Or LUBA 520 (2009).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a code provision allowing second-floor residential use of a commercial building if "accessory to an active commercial use," to permit residential use by persons who are not owners or employees of the commercial use, where the code defines an accessory use as one that is "incidental and subordinate," rather than related to or associated with. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the relevant code provisions impose smaller building size limits on outright permitted commercial uses than conditionally permitted commercial uses, LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that a 4,353-square-foot structure housing both outright permitted and conditionally permitted commercial uses is not subject to the 4,000-square-foot limit on outright permitted commercial uses. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err in interpreting a standard that requires a finding that property have landscape features "whose preservation requires planned development rather than conventional lot-by-lot development" to require a comparison between planned development and conventional lot-by-lot development, instead of a comparison between proposed planned development and the existing development on the property. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err in interpreting a planned development standard requiring that at least 50 percent of the development be open space "retained for common use by owners and residents of the development" to refer to both commonly owned open space and privately owned open space. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The purpose of a zoning limitation that commercial development in a specified area should consist of "retail that is small in scale" could be to limit floor space area and it could also be to require that commercial uses have "a small or local market area." Loprinzi's Gym v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 358 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where zoning ordinance commentary states that the purpose of a zoning ordinance limitation is to encourage "a local scale of retail," and encourage businesses that are "local serving rather than providing a regional draw," a city does not err in finding that the purpose of a zoning regulation that limits commercial uses to 10,000 square feet is to encourage locally oriented businesses rather than businesses of any particular size. Loprinzi's Gym v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 358 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Findings in support of an adjustment to a 10,000-square-foot maximum floor space limit to allow a 33,000-square-foot health club are inadequate to demonstrate that granting the adjustment will "equally or better" meet the purpose of the adjusted regulation, where the purpose of the adjusted regulation is to assure the resulting business is "locally serving" and the findings offer no working explanation of what the city thinks "locally serving" means and the findings do not address the "equally or better" requirement at all. Loprinzi's Gym v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 358 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in denying a PUD on the basis that the proposal did not meet the provisions of the purpose statement for the PUD ordinance where the decision does not mention the purpose statement provisions and it is not clear that the purpose statement is a mandatory approval criterion. Bridge Street Partners v. City of Lafayette, 56 Or LUBA 387 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance provision that simply says duplexes and triplexes may be allowed through a Type I (nondiscretionary) procedure if certain specified nondiscretionary standards are met is not properly interpreted to render inapplicable other apparently applicable nondiscretionary approval criteria. Tallman v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 398 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A checklist prepared by a city's planning department to identify which criteria apply when approving a duplex or triplex does not render apparently applicable zoning criteria that are not identified on the checklist inapplicable to an application for approval of a duplex. It is the zoning ordinance that determines which standards apply, not the checklist. Tallman v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 398 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city is not required to interpret traditional variance language ("practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship") in accordance with the traditional strict meaning of that language, particularly when that language is not used as part of the city's variance code but instead was borrowed from the variance context to be used as a test for expanding nonconforming uses. Azore Enterprises, LLC v. City of Hillsboro, 56 Or LUBA 422 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A regional government code provision that requires local government comprehensive plans to include a legal requirement that property be annexed before the property is allowed to urbanize has no bearing on whether a local government may annex property before completing legally required concept planning for the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city comprehensive plan policy that a concept plan should be adopted to guide zoning does not require that the concept plan be adopted before the property that will be the subject of that concept plan can be annexed. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err by interpreting a code requirement that "adequacy and availability of public facilities and services" be "considered" as a "factor" in reviewing annexation proposals to allow it to defer needed public facility planning to an ongoing but incomplete concept planning process where: (1) annexation, in and of itself, authorizes no additional urban development of the annexed property, (2) no urban development of the annexed property could be allowed under the zoning that will remain in place following annexation, (3) no urban development would be allowed until the concept plan is adopted to allow urbanization of the annexed area, and (4) the concept plan will be required to address the public facilities and services that will be needed for urbanization of the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the section of the zoning ordinance governing adjustments includes a purpose statement followed by adjustment approval criteria and a separate zoning section specifically states that the specified approval criteria for land use reviews establish "the bounds for the issues that must be addressed by the applicant," a city is not obligated to adopt findings to explain why a requested adjustment is consistent with the adjustment chapter purpose statement. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying an adjustment criterion that requires the city to find "granting the adjustment will equally or better meet the purpose of the regulation to be modified," a city does not err in finding that criterion is met where the purpose of the criterion recognizes that off-street parking may not be needed where property is in close proximity to transit and the property for which an adjustment to off-street parking requirements is requested is located in close proximity to three transit streets with frequent service and a bikeway and Flexcar locations. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that a code provision requiring that private wells be shown to meet certain bacteriological quality standards does not also require a showing of sufficient quantity, where the code provision does not mention water quantity and other code standards appear to govern water quantity. Gardener v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 583 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a hearings official interprets a street connectivity standard to include a balancing test where the city would determine whether wetland values should take "precedence over the connectivity standards" or whether "it is more appropriate to meet the connectivity standards than to preserve wetlands," but the street connectivity standards themselves provide no textual support for that interpretation, LUBA will remand for a correct interpretation and application of the street connectivity standards. GloryBee Foods, Inc. v. City of Eugene, 56 Or LUBA 729 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a text and context analysis does not clearly answer an interpretive question, under PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 859 P2d 1143 (1993), it is appropriate to consider legislative history and maxims of statutory construction. Where there is no legislative history or relevant maxim of statutory construction, and the interpretive question therefore turns on which of several dictionary meanings of the term "preclude" should apply, LUBA will remand for the hearings officer to select the appropriate dictionary definition, considering other parts of the ambiguous zoning ordinance standard and other relevant context. GloryBee Foods, Inc. v. City of Eugene, 56 Or LUBA 729 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city's decision explains how its zoning ordinance assigns floor area ratios to properties and that the past, present or future use of property does not affect a property's assigned floor area ratio, a petitioner's argument that property that will shortly be developed as a park should not have any floor area ratio provides no basis for reversal or remand. Trinkaus v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 771 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation that allowing family and social guests to stay in two recreational vehicles parked on a lot adjoining the property owner's dwelling does not constitute a "recreational vehicle park" as that term is defined in the code, because it is not open to the "general public." Fessler v. City of Fossil, 55 Or LUBA 1 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Specific code provisions that require imposition of a surface mining overlay zone on property within one-half mile of the mining site, which are intended to protect the site from adverse uses, control over general code provisions requiring that owners of property being rezoned sign the application. The purpose of the overlay zone would be frustrated if nearby property owners could effectively veto a mining operation by refusing to sign the application. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council's interpretation of a planned unit development standard authorizing septic tanks for individual lots where it is "impractical" to connect the development to the city sewer system, to govern only circumstances requiring permanent septic tank installations, not temporary septic tanks to be used until the city system is upgraded, followed by mandatory connection to the city system. Coquille Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Coquille, 55 Or LUBA 155 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a hearings officer's interpretation of local declaratory ruling provisions to permit the planning director to "initiate" a declaratory ruling application by joining an application improperly filed by a third party, where the text and context of the declaratory ruling provisions state that the planning director may only "initiate" an application by "filing an application" accompanied by the required information. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires the applicant for a declaratory ruling to carry the initial and ultimate burden of proof and persuasion regarding the question submitted, a hearings officer errs in allowing the applicant to simply demonstrate that there is an interpretative dispute and leave it to third parties to take positions on that dispute and provide the only information to resolve that dispute. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision allowing a "property owner" to request a declaratory ruling related "to the use of the owner's property" does not permit a neighborhood association to request a declaratory ruling related to the use of property that the association does not own. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Remand is necessary where entitlement to initiate a declaratory ruling request rests on whether the applicant is the "permit holder," use of the subject property was arguably authorized by a number of different permits, and the hearings officer rejected a neighborhood's association's claim to be a "permit holder" without determining which permits are at issue and which persons hold those permits. Cushman v. City of Bend, 55 Or LUBA 234 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code requires that one of two different methods for determining the top of the bank be applied, depending on which of two specified site conditions are found, the choice of method for determining the top of the bank is governed by the corresponding site condition, notwithstanding that the resulting top of the bank is discontinuous. The city errs in determining the location of the top of the bank based not on one of the two specified methods, but rather on the city's preference for a continuous setback. Kingsley v. City of Portland, 55 Or LUBA 256 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county zoning code requirement that groundwater impacts be considered in approving subdivisions in "rural areas identified by the Oregon Water Resources Department in coordination with the County as having declining groundwater levels" is not properly interpreted to be limited to areas that the Oregon Water Resources Department has designated as a "critical groundwater area." More informal identifications of declining groundwater areas could suffice to implicate the zoning requirement. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a land use regulation standard that only requires a service provider certification or letter, a decision maker is not obligated to ensure that every representation in a service provider's certification or letter is correct or supported by substantial evidence. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's finding that a land use regulation that applies to "areas with potential for forest or brush fires" does not apply to a proposed development because it is not located in a "fire hazard area" does not misinterpret the land use regulation where there is no reason to believe the hearings officer assigned different meanings to the phrases "fire hazard area" and "areas with potential for forest or brush fires." Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council interpretation of the code term "access" to include a driveway is not inconsistent with the text, context, purpose or policy of that term. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 55 Or LUBA 350 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a county's determination that the Agriculture-A zone adopted in 1971 was not an "exclusive farm use" zone subject to the limitations of ORS 215.203 (1971), for purposes of determining whether proposed dwellings under a Ballot Measure 37 waiver must be "in conjunction with farm use," where the 1971 ordinance included a separate "exclusive farm use" zone that permitted only the uses allowed under ORS 215.203 (1971), the Agriculture-A zone in contrast permitted a large number of nonfarm uses that bore no relationship to the uses allowed in the statute, and the obvious inference is that the county did not intend the Agriculture-A zone to implement ORS 215.203 (1971). Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's argument that certain historic preservation permit compatibility review criteria are mere considerations will be rejected where the argument is presented for the first time in the city's brief on appeal, the city's decision does not treat the criteria as mere considerations and the criteria appear in a section of the development code entitled "Review Criteria." Burgess v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 482 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Petitioners' argument that a city erred by failing to find that proposed alterations to a historic building are necessary to ensure its continued use will be rejected on appeal, where the local code merely says some alterations will be necessary to ensure continued use of historic resources and other provisions of the code expressly set out the criteria that the city must address in its findings. Burgess v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 482 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council erroneously concludes that it need not consider U.S. Secretary of Interior Standards in resolving ambiguities in its historic preservation code provisions where those code provisions were adopted to implement the Secretary of Interior Standards. In that circumstance, the Secretary of Interior Standards provide relevant context in the statutory interpretation template that is required by PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 610-11, 859 P2d 1143 (1993). Burgess v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 482 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city cannot rely on the fact that nearby non-historic buildings have canopies in approving new canopies for a historic building, where the relevant approval standard requires that the proposed canopies more closely approximate the original historic design or style of the historic building or be compatible with the historic building or district. However, so long as the city applies the relevant approval standard, it does not commit error by also finding that nearby non-historic buildings have canopies. Burgess v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 482 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation of a code provision providing minimum performance standards for "streets" to include unsignalized intersections. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Petitioner fails to demonstrate that the city erred in evaluating the performance of an intersection by measuring delays associated with each directional approach rather than the entire intersection, particularly when petitioner's own expert used the same method to evaluate intersection performance. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Absent a local regulation that requires otherwise, it is permissible to locate an accessory parking lot on land that is zoned differently than the land on which the primary use the parking lot serves is located. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county's zoning code allows it to approve uses that are not "specified in" the zoning code as temporary uses, it may be possible for the county to approve a meteorological tower as a temporary use, even though the zoning code lists "energy facilities" as a conditional use and the zoning code defines "energy facilities" to include meteorological towers. But where the county's decision does not explain why the wind measurement device is not "specified in" the zoning code unless it is separately and specifically listed, the decision must be remanded to provide the missing explanation. Womble v. Wasco County, 54 Or LUBA 68 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county's zoning code allows it to approve uses that are not "so recurrent as to require specific or general regulations to control them" as temporary uses, a county decision approving a meteorological tower as a temporary use will be remanded where the zoning code in fact includes general regulations for meteorological towers, the county applies those general regulations in its decision, and the county's decision makes no attempt to explain the apparent inconsistency. Womble v. Wasco County, 54 Or LUBA 68 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where subdivision approval criteria require consideration of competing goals or factors, such as contributing to orderly development and preserving natural features, it is permissible and even necessary to conduct a weighing or balancing process between development and preservation of natural features. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A subdivision approval standard requiring preservation of natural features that is written to apply to circumstances where there have been no previous efforts to identify natural features plays a more limited role where the subdivision application is preceded by two final, binding land use decisions that have already largely determined which natural features will be preserved and which will be lost to development. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance allows "roadside stands," that sell "agricultural produce," a land use hearings officer correctly applies the PGE v. Bureau of Labor and Industries, 317 Or 606, 610-12, 859 P2d 1143 (1993), template and the county zoning ordinance by applying dictionary definitions of "agricultural" and "produce" to conclude that a roadside stand may not include an espresso cart. The hearings officer correctly concluded from those definitions that while coffee beans are agricultural produce, espresso coffee drinks are not. Collver v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 147 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of the phrase "mechanical means" as applying to technology using light emitting diodes in electronic signs is correct. Lamar Advertising Company v. City of Eugene, 54 Or LUBA 295 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance has chapters for individual zones that list some uses that are "permitted" and list other uses that require conditional use approval, and in a separate chapter lists uses that are "permitted in all zones," those uses are permitted without a conditional use permit. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning district requires conditional use approval for structures that are more than 30 feet tall, absent a separate zoning provision that calls for a different conclusion, a 70-foot cellular tower would require conditional use approval. But where a separate chapter of the zoning code both authorizes cellular towers in all zones as a "permitted" use and expressly provides that such towers may exceed the height limits otherwise imposed by the zoning ordinance, a cellular tower does not require conditional use approval. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An equipment shed may or may not be allowed as part of a utility, where the zoning ordinance defines a "building," in part, as a "structure" and allows utilities in all zones but prohibits such utilities from including a "building." Because the zoning ordinance distinguishes between "structures" and "accessory structures," the issue becomes whether the equipment shed qualifies as an "accessory structure" and whether the prohibition is limited to "structures" and does not extend to "accessory structures." Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance defines the term "use" to encompass the "purpose for which land * * * is * * * intended," the "use" includes a new roadway that must be constructed to provide access to the use. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's findings that a proposed cellular tower complies with a siting standard that requires the tower to minimize its effect on scenic values are adequate, where the findings note the developed nature of the butte where the cellular tower would be located and demonstrate that the hearings officer was persuaded that the standard was met by the applicant's proposal to shorten the tower from 100 feet to 70 feet and to offer alternative designs that would make the tower look more like its surroundings. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA's standard of review of county counsel's interpretation of a local zoning code provision is whether that interpretation is correct. Love v. Klamath County, 54 Or LUBA 410 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county's interpretation of a local code provision as allowing the construction and use of a motorcycle track without review is incorrect where that provision requires site plan review for development of land, the code defines "development" broadly to include making a physical change in the land, and evidence in the record indicates that a bulldozer was used to develop a large portion of the land with a track and jumps. Love v. Klamath County, 54 Or LUBA 410 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a conditional use approval criterion requires that a proposed conditional use be consistent with the operating characteristics of the base zone, a city interpretation of that criterion to allow the city to deny a proposed conditional use simply because it is a nonresidential use, where the base zone allows many nonresidential uses as conditional uses in the base zone, is erroneous. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that the use category of "truck sales, service, storage and maintenance" includes dispensing of fuel to trucks, notwithstanding that the code includes a different use category of "truck stop" that expressly permits dispensing fuel, where other context indicates that the county intended truck "service" to include dispensing fuel. Western Express v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 571 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code includes specific conditional use standards for a particular use category that is a permitted use in some zones and a conditional use in other zones, LUBA will affirm the local government's interpretation that the conditional use standards do not apply to that use if it is proposed in a zone where it is a permitted use. Western Express v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 571 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a local government's interpretation of an ordinance recital stating that "[a]t such time as a development agreement is executed" the comprehensive plan "will be amended" to provide an exception to access spacing standards described in the ordinance to mean that the access spacing exception applies to proposed development notwithstanding the absence of an executed development agreement. Western Express v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 571 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of a reviewable interpretation by a local government of its code, LUBA is authorized under ORS 197.829(2) to interpret the local government's code in the first instance. Munkhoff v. City of Cascade Locks, 54 Or LUBA 660 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government errs in approving a development that proposes multiple duplex and fourplex buildings on one lot where the definition of those buildings and the context of that definition establishes that the local government's code allows only one building per lot. Munkhoff v. City of Cascade Locks, 54 Or LUBA 660 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a conditional use permit (CUP) has a conditional of approval that the CUP "will become invalid" if specified actions are not taken before a specified deadline or an extension of the deadline is not granted, and the applicant neither completes the specified actions nor seeks an extension, the local government may not grant an extension of the CUP after the time for receiving an extension has expired and the CUP is rendered invalid. Michaels v. Douglas County, 53 Or LUBA 16 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation of a code provision defining the study area for an aggregate mine, to exclude haul roads used to transport finished aggregate material off-site, is consistent with the text of the code provision and is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's mistake in codifying an ordinance in a manner that makes it unclear whether commercial uses are optional or mandatory in a mixed-use zone is immaterial, where the ordinance language that was not codified unambiguously makes commercial uses in the applicable zone optional rather than mandatory. Lubischer v. City of Hillsboro, 53 Or LUBA 143 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A section of the city's zoning code regarding employment opportunities that is phrased in terms of "goals and objectives" rather than "requirements" is not an approval criterion. Lubischer v. City of Hillsboro, 53 Or LUBA 143 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Any inconsistency between the allowed uses in a zoning district and the purpose of the underlying zone cannot be challenged in an appeal of a development approval. Such a challenge is an impermissible collateral attack on the ordinance that adopted the zoning district. Toler v. City of Cave Junction, 53 Or LUBA 158 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err by interpreting a development code approval criterion that requires that proposed uses must be shown to be compatible with surrounding uses to require consideration of only the existing surrounding uses and not potential future uses. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err by interpreting a development code compatibility standard for the first time in its written decision, where the interpretation was not beyond the range of interpretations that could reasonably have been anticipated during the evidentiary phase of the county's proceedings, and petitioners do not demonstrate (1) that there is specific evidence that they could present that differs in substance from the evidence that they already submitted or (2) that the new evidence is directly responsive to the county's interpretation. Gutoski v. Lane County, 155 Or App 369, 963 P2d 145 (1998). Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A permit approval standard that requires that proposed uses be shown to be compatible with surrounding uses is subjective. Each of a county's findings concerning individual factors that lead the county to find a proposed use is compatible with surrounding uses need not be sufficient to support the county's ultimate conclusion. The county's findings are viewed as a whole and the county is entitled to select the factors that it wishes to emphasize. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In determining whether a proposed cell tower is compatible with surrounding uses, a county does not err by taking into account the number of surrounding residences and the residential density. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a compatibility standard, a county may take into consideration the effect that existing trees will have in screening views of a proposed cell tower from adjoining properties, notwithstanding that there are no trees on the cell tower property itself and few trees to the west and north of the property. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a compatibility standard, a county does not err by taking into account the screening that will be produced by a condition that requires the applicant for a cell tower to plant vegetation and trees, even though the vegetation and trees will not completely screen the tower for many years, if ever. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a compatibility standard, a county does not err by taking into account the effect that requiring a cell tower to be painted green may have in visually blending the tower with nearby trees, even though painting the tower green will have little or no effect on blocked views of a nearby bay. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a compatibility standard a county does not err by failing to consider whether subdivision covenants, conditions and restrictions prohibit cell towers, where (1) it is not possible to determine if the covenants, conditions and restrictions were adopted to achieve compatibility, (2) there is a dispute about whether the covenants, conditions and restrictions apply, and (3) the county is not the body with jurisdiction to determine whether the covenants, conditions and restrictions apply. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a compatibility standard, a county does not err in failing to consider evidence about the impact the proposed use may have on property values, where the evidence is conflicting and the development code does not list impact on property values as a mandatory consideration in applying the compatibility standard. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An undefined and subjective "public benefit" criterion need not be interpreted in conjunction with a tower sharing criterion to require that a tower applicant demonstrate a current market need for a tower, as opposed to a future market need. Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A broadcast tower approval criterion that requires a decision maker to determine whether identified "public benefits outweigh any impacts which cannot be mitigated" is subjective. In assessing a findings and evidentiary challenge to a decision maker's weighing of public benefits, the question is whether that weighing is (1) inadequately explained (necessitating a remand for additional findings) or (2) unreasonable (and therefore not supported by substantial evidence). Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A broadcast tower approval criterion that limits total emission levels is not implicated by a request to remove a prior condition of approval to allow an existing tower to remain in place, where no additional emitting antenna are to be added to the tower by the request and all existing antenna were subject to the total emission limit criterion when they were placed on the tower. Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city's zoning ordinance allows damaged nonconforming structures to be restored, the city does not err in interpreting its zoning ordinance not to allow a damaged nonconforming carport to be entirely removed and replaced with a taller bulkier carport that occupies the same footprint as the old carport. Hatton v. City of Eugene, 53 Or LUBA 583 (2007).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Purpose statements that set out objectives to be achieved and state that those objectives are to be achieved by other provisions in that chapter are not mandatory approval criteria. Burlison v. Marion County, 52 Or LUBA 216 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of a code standard requiring that proposed grading not cause erosion to any greater extent than would occur in the "absence of development" to mean in the "absence of proposed development," not prior development activities that predated the grading permit application, is reasonable and will be affirmed. Angius v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 222 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county grading permit standard stating that grading activities "shall also occur pursuant to" the standards of the local sanitary sewer agency does not incorporate those standards into the code or require that the county determine whether the grading permit complies with the agency's standards. Angius v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 222 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of a code provision requiring that the applicant submit a letter from the service provider, to require only that the letter be submitted, not that it be free of error, where nothing in the text or context suggests that the county is supposed to second-guess the service provider's assessment. Angius v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 222 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. As a general rule there is no reason why a local government could not interpret an "orderly development" land division criterion to impose a more stringent standard than Oregon Department of Transportation's standard that the performance of failing intersections not be worsened by a proposal. However, where such an interpretation appears to be inconsistent with other city criteria and those apparent inconsistencies are not addressed in the decision maker's findings, LUBA will reject the interpretation as incorrect. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision is expressly directed at building permits and a hearing officer finds that the provision does not apply to a request for subdivision approval, and petitioners do not assign error to those findings, petitioners' assignment of error that the hearings officer should have applied the provision in approving the subdivision will be denied. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance limits residential development on "weak foundation soils," but does not define that term, the city's interpretation of that term to include soils that the National Resource Conservation Service rates as having "severe" limitations but not to include soils rated as having "moderate" or "slight" limitations is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Jebousek v. City of Newport, 52 Or LUBA 435 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance requires a "site specific investigation by a registered geologist or engineer," and the local government finds that a preliminary site evaluation prepared by a geologist was sufficient to constitute the required site specific investigation, a petitioner's objection that the preliminary site evaluation is insufficient will be rejected, where petitioner fails to challenge the city's findings that explain why the city viewed the preliminary site evaluation as sufficient. Jebousek v. City of Newport, 52 Or LUBA 435 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning map amendment criterion requires the applicant to demonstrate that the uses allowed in the new zone would not "materially and/or adversely affect the character of the neighborhood," selection of too small an area for analysis could frustrate the purpose of the criterion. However, where petitioners do not show that the area selected was too small and the city's findings explain that the residential to commercial rezoning is in an area that is already a mixed commercial and residential area, petitioners do not demonstrate a basis for remand. Cornelius First v. City of Cornelius, 52 Or LUBA 486 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a base commercial zone does not provide for residential uses does not mean that an overlay zone that allows residential uses is necessarily inconsistent with the base zone. Absent some textual or contextual basis to conclude otherwise, LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that the overlay zone may authorize additional uses not authorized in the base zone. Concerned Homeowners v. City of Creswell, 52 Or LUBA 620 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Whether language in a purpose statement of a land use regulation functions as an approval criterion or imposes additional affirmative duties on the local government in approving or denying proposed development depends on the text and context of that language. A prohibition in a recreational commercial zone purpose statement on "traditional residential uses" unless such uses are "necessary to support the primary recreationally-oriented uses" imposes an affirmative obligation on the local government in approving residential development in the zone. Concerned Homeowners v. City of Creswell, 52 Or LUBA 620 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's code interpretation that harmonizes and gives effect to two conflicting provisions, where the only other interpretation proffered would nullify an entire code chapter. Concerned Homeowners v. City of Creswell, 52 Or LUBA 620 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer does not err in interpreting a code provision that allows the "preparation of land for cultivation" that is a "customarily accepted agricultural activity" without a permit in agricultural zones to require the landowner to demonstrate that a proposal to cover an existing landfill with 100,000 cubic yards of soil not only involves "preparation of land for cultivation" but is also a "customarily accepted agricultural activity." Ehler v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 663 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a city council interpretation of a code provision allowing flag lots where a "public street cannot be provided" to allow flag lots where code-compliant public streets cannot be provided. Because a non-compliant public street would almost always be theoretically possible, any other interpretation would essentially prohibit flag lots. Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 51 OR LUBA 56 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err in interpreting a code provision requiring that a subdivision plat provide access "that will allow its development in accordance" with the code to not require that the applicant provide additional access to a parcel that is already developed consistent with applicable zoning. The code does not require the applicant to provide access to allow for potential redevelopment of developed parcels. Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 51 OR LUBA 56 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the code defines "amphitheater" to include "fixed, permanent or temporary seating," a phrase that clearly refers to physical objects such as chairs or benches, a hearings officer errs in interpreting "temporary seating" to include bare ground on which people may sit or spread a blanket. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation that tents are temporary "structures" for purposes of applying fire safety siting standards to a campground, where the code defines "structure" broadly in a manner that is not limited to permanent structures, and the code clearly subjects campgrounds to fire safety siting standards. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance purpose statement that provides that the "regulations" in a special zoning district are intended to protect the special development pattern in the district is not itself an approval standard that must be applied in approving a partition. The adopted regulations are the approval standards that must be applied and the city is not required to directly consider whether the proposed partition would protect the special development pattern. McKnight v. City of Portland, 51 Or LUBA 394 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of a code provision requiring calculation of groundwater availability based on a study area including the "average size of lots and parcels within one-quarter mile" of the subject property to include the entirety of all lots or parcels that are at least partially within one-quarter mile of the property. A hearing officer's refusal to interpret the code to require that the study area be limited to just those portions of lots or parcels within a one-quarter-mile radius is not erroneous, where the county staff manual for more detailed groundwater studies requires consideration of the entirety of lots or parcels that are bisected by a one-quarter-mile radius, and it is reasonably clear that both types of studies consider the same area. Upright v. Marion County, 51 Or LUBA 415 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the purpose of a groundwater study area is to accurately assess the risk to groundwater from residential development, an interpretation that more accurately represents the existing and potential residential development conditions in the area is more consistent with the purpose and underlying policy of the study than a contrary but textually plausible interpretation that considers undevelopable portions of lots as being developable and hence overstates potential development pressures. Upright v. Marion County, 51 Or LUBA 415 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A standard requiring a finding that the uses allowed by the proposed zoning "can be served through the orderly extension of key urban facilities and services" does not require evaluation of all theoretically possible uses allowed in the new zone. A city does not err in interpreting such a standard as being satisfied by evidence that uses likely to be developed under the new zone, given the property's size and other constraints, can be served by key urban facilities and services. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err in assuming that two developed lots that are part of a five-lot tract will not be redeveloped when rezoned, for purposes of a rezoning standard requiring that uses allowed in the proposed zoning can be served by urban services, including transportation facilities, where the applicant does not propose redevelopment and the code requires a similar evaluation when property is redeveloped. Bothman v. City of Eugene, 51 Or LUBA 426 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that only a portion of a coastal shorelands zone is designated as "suitable for water-dependent uses" and therefore subject to a policy that limits non-water-dependent development, where the zone refers to a comprehensive map that depicts only a portion of the zone as being "especially suited for water-dependent uses" and read in context it is clear that the policy is not intended to apply throughout the zone. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 500 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where it is possible to interpret a development code provision to require consideration of more facilities and services than a similar comprehensive plan policy and to require that those facilities and services be already available at the time of annexation, but a local government implicitly interprets the development code policy simply to implement the comprehensive plan policy and to be coextensive with the plan policy, LUBA will defer to that interpretation where there are other development code provisions that support that limited interpretation. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard allowing an increased or reduced setback for cellular towers based on considerations such as topography, etc., that increase or reduce off-site impacts need not be interpreted to include an implicit "no net increase" in off-site impacts standard. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer errs in interpreting a code standard that allows a reduced setback for cellular towers based on listed considerations that increase or reduce off-site impacts, to allow a reduced setback as long as the applicant has minimized off-site impacts "to the extent possible" given the dimensional constraints of the property, where considerations such as the shape of the property and whether the applicant has minimized off-site impacts to the extent possible are not among the permissible considerations. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard requiring site design review where "proposed development" involves "projects with multiple principal structures on one tract" does not apply to a proposal for a cellular tower on a parcel already developed with a dwelling, because the application does not propose more than one principal structure. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that retaining walls that prevent erosion of a bluff on a public park are accessory to park uses, notwithstanding that the walls also serve to protect adjoining private property. Moreland v. City of Depoe Bay, 50 Or LUBA 44 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision prohibiting removal of "riparian vegetation" plausibly could be interpreted either to apply throughout the zone or only within a defined "zone of riparian vegetation," LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that the code provision applies only within the zone of riparian vegetation. Moreland v. City of Depoe Bay, 50 Or LUBA 44 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government does not err by interpreting a local "need" standard to impose a much less rigorous standard than the need standard that was included in prior version of Goal 2 for approval of a reasons exception. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 50 Or LUBA 275 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a code provision prohibiting application of urban residential zones outside urban growth boundaries is outdated may be a compelling argument for amending the code provision, but it is not a sufficient reason for the local government to ignore it. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 50 Or LUBA 444 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation allowing residential units within a "recreational planned unit development," notwithstanding that "residential uses" are prohibited in the underlying zone, where the zone nonetheless allows a recreational planned unit development, and the code definition of that term includes residential units as a core component. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard requiring that the local government apply the more restrictive standard when two or more conflicting standards apply does not govern circumstances where it is unclear which of two standards applies. In such circumstances, the local government must interpret its code to determine which of the standards governs the proposed use. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where both possible interpretations of a code density standard equally conflict with other code provisions, the choice of which interpretation to adopt is up to the local government. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that the zoning map be amended to an "appropriate designation" of the city when an area is annexed, and the city adopts county zoning for the annexed area but does not explain how county zoning satisfies the code requirement, remand is appropriate for the city to adopt findings or an interpretation demonstrating that the county zoning is consistent with the code requirement. Hammons v. City of Happy Valley, 49 Or LUBA 38 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A challenge to the adequacy of findings will be sustained where the decision maker fails to explain why a code provision that prohibits development unless a developer makes transportation improvements necessary to maintain a particular level of service applies only at the time of a zone change and not to a site plan and architectural review application. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Medford, 49 Or LUBA 52 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Petitioner's arguments do not provide a basis for remand where petitioner fails to challenge a county's interpretation that a criterion that the "land must have adequate carrying capacity to support the densities and types of uses allowed by the proposed plan and zone designations" is satisfied where the land has adequate carrying capacity for uses and densities authorized by the challenged decision, rather than for all possible uses allowed in the zone. Doob v. Josephine County, 49 Or LUBA 113 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A general code standard requiring streets to be improved with curbs and other facilities "if required" is not properly interpreted to require curbs for a private street, where the specific standards governing private streets do not require curbs. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A rezoning criterion requiring that the site be "suitable" for the proposed medium-density residential zone requires an assumption that the property will develop with the multi-family dwelling units allowed in the proposed zone, but does not necessarily require the local government to speculate as to the particular quality or density of actual development. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city's Master Plan Development District simply allows the uses that are permitted in certain other districts, the city erroneously interprets its code to allow those uses without the minimum lot size, minimum lot width, limit on building coverage, front or rear setback requirements or building height or any other standards or regulations that are applied to those uses in the other zoning districts. Those limitations from the other zoning districts apply unless the city applies the Master Plan Development District provision that allows the city to apply alternative standards in certain circumstances. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city land use regulation requirement that a master plan of development demonstrate that transportation facilities are "adequate," does not require any particular level of internal or external roadway connectivity. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a planned unit development regulation requiring protection of "public safety" on sites with natural hazards "through clustering of development" on that portion of the site suitable for development as not requiring consideration of off-site impacts of proposed development. Dinges v. City of Oregon City, 49 Or LUBA 376 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the text of a particular zoning district that allows permitted uses to be reviewed as conditional uses seems to call for a focus on the characteristics of the use itself, but the conditional use chapter of the zoning ordinance expressly provides that conditional uses may require special consideration due to unique site characteristics, the city does not err in interpreting the zoning district text to allow it to consider whether unique site characteristics justify treating the permitted use as a conditional use. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Central Point, 49 Or LUBA 472 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county errs in interpreting a rezoning code provision requiring that "[o]ther lands in the county" are unavailable or not as well-suited as the subject property to limit the inquiry to lands outside UGBs, where nothing in the text or context so limits the inquiry, and context directs the county to locate uses allowed under the proposed zone within UGBs. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 49 Or LUBA 529 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an interpretation of an ambiguous code standard that bars variances in some circumstances is needed to explain why the local government believes that standard did not bar an approved variance, and the appealed decision does not include either an express or implied interpretation of the code standard, remand is required. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although LUBA is authorized to interpret ambiguous local land use legislation in the first instance if the local government fails to adopt a needed interpretation, where interpreting the land use legislation in a way that would be consistent with the local government's decision is problematic, LUBA will not attempt to interpret the legislation in the first instance. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. If a local government wishes to interpret and apply traditional variance standards differently than those standards have traditionally been interpreted and applied, it must articulate an interpretation of those standards that is sufficient for review. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where code language limiting "gross square footage" is ambiguous and, based on text and context, could plausibly limit either "footprint" or "gross floor area," a governing body's choice between two equally plausible meanings is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) and Church v. Grant County, 187 Or App 518, 524, 69 P3d 759 (2003). Bemis v. City of Ashland, 48 Or LUBA 42 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city code provision that requires a conditional use permit applicant to show that there is a substantial reason for siting the proposed use where it is conditionally allowed, as opposed to another zone where it is permitted outright, does not require that the permit applicant consider zones in other jurisdictions. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Radio towers over 200 feet tall are allowed in exclusive farm use zones under ORS 215.283(2)(m) or ORS 215.438. Neither of those statutes requires that such radio towers must be allowed outright. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although there is language in the Oregon Supreme Court's decision in Brentmar v. Jackson County, 321 Or 481, 496, 900 P2d 1030 (1995), that suggests otherwise, the public utility facilities authorized by ORS 215.283(1)(d) are not allowed "as of right," in the exclusive farm use zone, as that term is generally used in zoning parlance. The Supreme Court used that term as a shorthand description for uses that are not subject to additional county regulation rather than as a description of a use that is not subject to discretionary review, as shown by the fact that ORS 215.283(1)(d) itself subjects public facilities in exclusive farm use zones to discretionary review. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An applicant is not obligated to disaggregate a coordinated and related application for radio towers that was presented in that way at the city's request, simply because it might allow part of that proposal to be approved at a different site in a different zone that allows some parts of the proposal outright. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A subdivision approval standard that requires a subdivision street layout must "best balance needs for economy, safety, efficiency and environmental compatibility" does not require that one or more alternative street layouts necessarily must be evaluated in all cases. Doob v. City of Grants Pass, 48 Or LUBA 245 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where it is not clear from the comprehensive plan map whether the plan designation governing the subject property is a base or an overlay plan designation, LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation that the plan designation is an overlay designation, where the comprehensive plan text does not list or describe the designation as a base plan designation. Staus v. City of Corvallis, 48 Or LUBA 254 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Code language that prohibits a city from requiring design changes that are "materially different from customary development in the area" is not properly interpreted to mandate that the city impose a roof height that is customary within the area, or prohibit the city from approving a roof height that is not customary. Carrigg v. City of Enterprise, 48 Or LUBA 328 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer errs in concluding that a commercial zone implements the medium density residential plan designation, simply because some commercial uses are allowed in some residential zones. Knutson Family LLC v. City of Eugene, 48 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Given the significant regulatory distinctions between "single family dwellings" and "tourist rental cabins" allowed in a rural zone, a county may approve proposed cabins that will be owner-occupied part of the year under the densities allowed for "tourist rental cabins" only if their use for something other than "tourist rental cabins" is de minimis. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 48 Or LUBA 466 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Owner-occupancy for 120 days per year is not a de minimis use of a dwelling, consistent with the status of dwellings as "tourist rental cabins." Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 48 Or LUBA 466 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject an argument that a code limitation on "buildable area" regulates only the interior, habitable space of a dwelling, where the local government has previously interpreted the code provision to regulate uninhabited structures such as garages or sheds, and the context and legislative history of the provision indicates that it is intended to limit the area of a lot or parcel covered by structures, not the area of interior or habitable space. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 48 Or LUBA 466 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An interpretation that some decks but not others are regulated under a code provision limiting the "building area" of a lot or parcel is inconsistent with the text and purpose of the provision, where the relevant terms do not distinguish between types of decks and the apparent purpose of the provision is to limit the area of a lot or parcel covered by structures. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 48 Or LUBA 466 (2005).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation that it has authority to modify a condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval under a code standard allowing "minor changes" to an unrecorded subdivision plat is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Cove at Brookings Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Brookings, 47 Or LUBA 1 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A land use regulation requiring a city to consider all related applications in one proceeding does not require the applicant to submit all applications necessary for development at the same time, or prevent the city from approving those applications before it, notwithstanding that further applications may be necessary. Nielson v. City of Stayton, 47 Or LUBA 52 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer errs in determining that an internal logging road is not a "road" because of its poor condition and infrequent use, where the code definition of "road" does not assign significance to the road's condition or frequency of use. McAlister v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 125 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a hearings officer misinterprets the code term "road," but does not address either the applicant's proposed interpretation that a logging track can be a "road" or a contrary planning staff interpretation that only platted rights-of-way or legally described easements are "roads," LUBA will remand the decision to the hearings officer to reconsider what constitutes a "road." McAlister v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 125 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a conditional use approval criterion requires a finding that the proposed conditional use will have minimal adverse impacts "compared to the impact of development that is permitted outright," a county decision that interprets that criterion to be met by a proposed commercial recreational park, because an otherwise identical publicly owned recreational park could be approved as a use permitted outright, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Gumtow-Farrior v. Crook County, 47 Or LUBA 186 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Findings that rely on code drainage requirements to avoid impacts on adjacent farming are adequate to demonstrate compliance with a code standard requiring no significant impact on farming, where the only issue raised regarding impacts on adjacent farming involved drainage. Nelson v. Curry County, 47 Or LUBA 196 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard requiring that stormwater be directed away from adjacent farmlands and "into the existing storm drainage system" does not require the applicant to redirect stormwater into a different drainage basin than the one historically serving the subject property. Nelson v. Curry County, 47 Or LUBA 196 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation of a design review criterion requiring that the "bulk and scale" of a proposed retail supercenter be "compatible" with surrounding buildings as necessitating a comparison of the size of the proposed buildings and surrounding buildings—and not just visual compatibility—is consistent with the text of the criterion and not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Hood River County, 47 Or LUBA 256 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. There is no intrinsic reason why a regulatory concern to ensure compatibility of size between proposed and existing development must be expressed as zoning standards rather than as site design review standards. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Hood River County, 47 Or LUBA 256 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's interpretation that a code definition of "Construction Sales and Services," allowing retail sale of "materials used in construction, maintenance and repair/remodel of buildings," does not limit the materials sold to any particular subset of "repair/remodel" materials is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose or underlying policy of the code definition. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Unless required by local standards, a city is not required to ensure that development permitted outright under existing plan and zoning standards will not cause transportation facilities to fall below operational thresholds during the relevant planning period. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city code that requires planned development proposals to preserve trees "to the greatest degree possible" does not require that the applicant fundamentally change the nature of the application to maximize tree preservation. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city may not interpret a code exception for tree cutting permits to exempt a subdivision from a separate local code requirement for a tree protection plan, where the exemption for tree cutting permits has nothing to do with the separate tree protection plan requirement. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err by interpreting a code requirement that 20 percent of the site for a planned development be landscaped to allow an applicant to include areas of the site that will be included in common open space and left in their natural state. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When viewed alone, the word "within" in a code provision that requires that dwellings must be within a template area to be counted is ambiguous, because it could mean the dwelling must be at least partially within or it could mean the dwelling must be entirely within. However, where a related provision specifies that "all or part of" a parcel must be within the template, the failure to include the "all or part of" modifier provides contextual support for interpreting the provision without the modifier as requiring that the entire dwelling must be within the template area. Worman v. Multnomah County, 47 Or LUBA 410 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA's assumption that an ambiguous code provision should be interpreted in one way in a prior LUBA appeal where the correctness of that interpretation was not at issue is of extremely limited precedential value in a subsequent appeal where the correctness of that interpretation is at issue. Worman v. Multnomah County, 47 Or LUBA 410 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An ambiguous county code provision that allows lands that were incorrectly identified as agricultural or forest land under Goals 3 and 4 to be rezoned for rural residential use is correctly interpreted to require that an applicant show that a particular property is neither agricultural land nor forest land because land will frequently qualify as both agricultural and forest land and the Land Conservation and Development Commission's rules allow such lands to be zoned for either for exclusive farm use or for forest use. Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 470 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err in interpreting its code provision to require that it compute the average cubic foot per year production capability based on the percentage of different soil types on the property. Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 470 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not exceed its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting a code provision requiring that development not be contrary to applicable comprehensive plan policies to allow a balancing of competing comprehensive plan policies. Chin v. City of Corvallis, 46 Or LUBA 1 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county has not yet adopted land division regulations that apply to minor partitions, a minor partition nevertheless requires prior county approval of a variance under the zoning ordinance where one of the parcels created by the minor partition does not comply with the minimum parcel size that is required under the zoning ordinance. DeBoer v. Jackson County, 46 Or LUBA 24 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's conclusion that a tennis facility is accessory to residential use of a property is inconsistent with the text and context of its code, where the code defines an accessory use as uses incidental and subordinate to the primary use, and a city interpretation relies on the seasonal and nonprofit characteristics of the tennis facility and ignores other characteristics that demonstrate that the tennis facility is of much greater scale and intensity than the residential uses located on the property. McCormick v. City of Baker City, 46 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a city sign code adopts the Oregon Motorist Information Act (OMIA) by reference may indicate that the city intends to allow at least some OMIA-permitted signs within the city, but does not necessarily indicate that all OMIA-permitted signs are allowed in the city, much less that OMIA-permitted signs are allowed outright without further city regulation. Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a sign code provision stating that state sign permit holders need not seek separate city approval can be read either to (1) allow such signs outright within the city, or (2) allow such signs only if otherwise permitted by the sign code, and either interpretation is consistent with the text and context of the provision, the city's choice between interpretations is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the purpose of a sign code includes preventing sign clutter and minimizing distractions for motorists, a sign code interpretation that results in smaller and lower signs along public highways than would result under other interpretations is consistent with the code's purpose and underlying policy, for purposes of ORS 197.829(1)(b) and (c). Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A broad and poorly defined sign code prohibition on "billboards" does not necessarily require inquiry into the content of signs or allow content-based distinctions where, as interpreted by the city, the code allows or prohibits all signs, including "billboards," based on specific standards that do not require inquiry into the content of proposed signs. Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A poorly defined code prohibition on "billboards" is not unconstitutionally overbroad when, read in context, it is subject to a narrowing construction that clarifies the meaning of "billboard" and the precise scope of the prohibition. Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A poorly defined code prohibition on "billboards" is not unconstitutionally vague where, as interpreted and read in context, the sign code provides definite and objective standards governing all signs, including billboards, and does not grant the city "unbridled discretion" to approve or deny proposed signs. Media Art v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 61 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A use determination adopted pursuant to ORS 227.160(2)(b) may include a description of the procedures the city anticipates will be used to consider an application for that use. Boly v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 197 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A planning commission incorrectly interprets a code standard prohibiting "construction" on slopes greater than 30 percent to limit only construction of a building within a building envelope, and not to include a steep driveway and retaining walls, where the plain meaning of "construction" is not limited to buildings, the text and context do not suggest that the governing body intended to limit its regulatory effect to building envelopes, and the proposed driveway and retaining walls implicate the same regulatory concerns regarding erosion and visual scarring underlying the code standard as would construction of a building. McCulloh v. City of Jacksonville, 46 Or LUBA 267 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code defines "dwelling unit" to include "sanitation" facilities, a septic system that will serve only one dwelling is part of the dwelling, and may not be sited in any zone where the dwelling itself could not be located. Hodge Oregon Properties, LLC v. Lincoln County, 46 Or LUBA 290 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code requirement that a house could only be allowed in a floodplain if "no alternative exists on the subject property which would allow the structure to be placed outside of the flood plain," does not require that an applicant reconfigure the proposed house or reduce the size of its footprint to locate the house outside the floodplain. Bonnett v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 318 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code requirement that allows additional improvements to roads that already encroach into a 50-foot stream setback if those improvements do not "encroach into the setback any more than the existing * * * roadway," is correctly interpreted to allow improvements to a roadway that is located entirely with the 50-foot setback so long as the roadway is not enlarged on the side of the road that faces the stream, where petitioner identifies no textual or contextual support for interpreting the code to require protection of a narrow strip of land on the landward side of the roadway or any policy or purpose that would be furthered by interpreting the code in that manner. Willhite v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 340 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision that requires that at least 75 percent of a 50-foot setback area must "be preserved with native vegetation" is correctly interpreted to require preservation of whatever native vegetation is already located within 75 percent of the setback area rather than requiring that native vegetation be planted in 75 percent of a setback area where there is no existing native vegetation. Willhite v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 340 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision that requires that at least 75 percent of a 50-foot setback area from a stream must "be preserved with native vegetation" is correctly interpreted to require protection of 75 percent of whatever area there is between a roadway and a stream, where the roadway encroaches into the 50-foot setback area. Willhite v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 340 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code requires that any "features explicitly included" in a subdivision application must comply with applicable development standards, a city errs in declining to consider whether existing houses and a proposed shared driveway easement shown on a subdivision application comply with applicable development standards. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the definition of "lot width" in a local code is written with regularly shaped lots in mind, and city's interpretation and application of that definition to an irregularly shaped lot produces a lot width that is no stranger than the lot width that is produced by petitioner's interpretation and application of that definition, LUBA will defer to the city's interpretation. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county's interpretation that cabins used more than half the year for residential use by owner-occupants and less than half the year for rental to tourists qualify as "tourist rental cabins" is inconsistent with the code definition of that term, where rental to tourists is the key definitional element, the code applies important regulatory distinctions to tourist uses and residential uses, and nothing in the text or context of the code suggests that more than de minimis residential use of the cabins is compatible with their status as tourist rental cabins. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code definition of "tourist rental cabins" can plausibly be read to allow separate ownership of buildings and land on property, and legislative history in the record supports that interpretation, a county's interpretation that the cabins and underlying land need not be in common ownership is consistent with that definition and not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision does not explain why the area of large covered porches attached to approved dwellings was not included in calculating the maximum "buildable area," and relevant code definitions suggest that such accessory structures are part of "buildings," remand is necessary to interpret the code and determine whether such structures should be included in calculating the buildable area. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code defines "owner" to be the "legal owners(s) of record as shown on the tax rolls of the County," an interpretation that the fee simple owners are not owners because the value of the fee ownership is minimal in comparison to the value of the easement that crosses that property is not sustainable. Baker v. Washington County, 46 Or LUBA 591 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an Institute of Transportation Engineer's manual states that an average trip generation rate for discount superstores should only be used if the square footage of the proposed store falls within the square footage range of the stores that were used to produce the average trip generation rate, a city correctly rejects an applicant's use of the average trip generation rate for a proposed store that falls outside that square footage range. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hillsboro, 46 Or LUBA 680 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err in refusing to speculate about who might ultimately prevail in a quiet title action in considering whether to approve a subdivision and whether to require provision of access to the disputed property in approving the subdivision. The city may assume that the record owner of the disputed property owns the property. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 46 Or LUBA 735 (2004).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a city council interpretation of its zoning ordinance as not requiring a separate zoning amendment application where city zoning is applied to property inside the city's urban growth boundary as part of the annexation process. Barton v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 214 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although ORS 197.829(2) authorizes LUBA to interpret city zoning ordinances, where the city fails to do so and both petitioner and respondent present possible interpretations in their briefs that are plausible but both interpretations have problems, LUBA will remand the decision to the city so that it may address the interpretive issue in the first instance. Renaissance Development v. City of Lake Oswego, 45 Or LUBA 312 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In considering whether a local government interpretation of a local provision is consistent with the express language of the provision under ORS 197.829(1), LUBA may consider the context of the provision. Bruce Packing Company v. City of Silverton, 45 Or LUBA 334 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An interpretation of a local code provision to allow an offsite parking lot in conjunction with a commercial use in a residential zone where such commercial uses are prohibited is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1), where the context of the code provision includes regulations governing the residential zone that expressly allow a public parking area for use by persons patronizing a particular building or establishment. Bruce Packing Company v. City of Silverton, 45 Or LUBA 334 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer does not err in evaluating the adequacy of the "approach" to an intersection, rather than individual turning movements in the intersection, where the applicable code provisions do not specify a particular method for evaluating intersection adequacy, and that method is consistent with the highway capacity manual and county highways standards cited by the code provisions. Noble v. Clackamas County, 45 Or LUBA 366 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of a local code to conclude that a "wholesale nursery" is properly viewed as an "agricultural use" is consistent with the text of the code's definition of "agricultural use," where the term is expressly defined to include "horticultural use." Lorenz v. Deschutes County, 45 Or LUBA 635 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners' assignment of error is based on the erroneous assumption that a code standard that prohibits home occupations that are "objectionable due to [emissions]" prohibits any discernable emissions, and petitioners do not challenge city findings that the emissions that can be expected from a proposed home occupation will not be objectionable, the assignment of error provides no basis for reversal or remand. Roe v. City of Union, 45 Or LUBA 660 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance provision authorizes the city to permit uses that are "of the same general type as [permitted] uses," a city commits no error in failing to apply that same provision in the opposite way to prohibit uses that are of the same general type as prohibited uses. Roe v. City of Union, 45 Or LUBA 660 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance requirement that a site have 150 feet of frontage could apply in a number of different ways to a site with multiple road frontages, and the local government's findings are inadequate to explain why the city applied that requirement in the way that it did, LUBA will remand for the city to interpret the zoning ordinance requirement in the first instance. Miles v. City of Florence, 44 Or LUBA 411 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A prerequisite for application of the deferential standard of review under ORS 197.829(1) is, at a minimum, a written decision or document adopted by the governing body that contains an express or implicit interpretation of a local provision that is adequate for review. A city attorney's interpretation of a local provision is not entitled to deference under that standard, even assuming that the city council informally directed the city attorney to apply that interpretation in denying the challenged building permits. West Coast Media v. City of Gladstone, 44 Or LUBA 503 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A prerequisite for application of the deferential standard of review under ORS 197.829(1) is, at a minimum, a written decision or document adopted by the governing body that contains an express or implicit interpretation of a local provision that is adequate for review. A city attorney's interpretation of a local provision is not entitled to deference under that standard, even assuming that the city council informally directed the city attorney to apply that interpretation in denying the challenged building permits. West Coast Media v. City of Gladstone, 44 Or LUBA 503 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision stating that the planning director "may" issue a clarification of ambiguous code language through a process requiring a hearing is permissive and does not require the director to provide a hearing in evaluating a particular development proposal that happens to involve ambiguous code language. Holtz v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 595 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Two code height limitations are not "at the same level" and "in conflict" for purposes of a code provision that requires the city to apply the most restrictive limitation when standards at the same level are in conflict, where one height limitation is a generally applicable standard and the other is a specific alternative to the general height standard. Holtz v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 595 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although a code provision that prohibits approval of a conditional use permit in circumstances where there are existing violations of county ordinances does not dictate that a condition of approval be included with a conditional use permit that the conditional use permit may be revoked if those violations recur in the future, it is within the county's discretion to interpret that code provision to permit it to impose such a condition. Cookman v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 630 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 215.185 and ORS 197.825(3)(a) do not provide the exclusive procedures by which a county may enforce its zoning ordinance to require that property owners stop using their property in a way that the county believes violates its zoning ordinance. Cookman v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 630 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county EFU zone limit on farm recreational uses that requires that such uses "be subordinate to the commercial agricultural operation in scope, scale and impact, and shall contribute 'added value' to the commercial agricultural farm operation" does not necessarily prohibit a farm recreational use that generates more income than the commercial agricultural operation on the property. Underhill v. Wasco County, 43 Or LUBA 277 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision that allows certain uses in a zone "provided that the use promotes the purpose of the zone" is, on its face, a mandatory approval criterion. A city interpretation that fails to give any meaning to that language, and effectively reads it out of the code, is inconsistent with the express language of the code and is not entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1). Crowley v. City of Bandon, 43 Or LUBA 79 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a standard requiring that "other lands in the county" be unavailable for the uses allowed under proposed rezoning to be satisfied by examining lands in the vicinity of the subject property, and not to require consideration of all lands throughout the entire county. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 43 Or LUBA 97 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting the term "bankful stage" to be equivalent to "top of the bank," where the pertinent code language was modeled on a Metro ordinance that expressly equates the two terms. Such an interpretation is not rendered erroneous simply because the unusual topographic facts of a case may make locating the "bankful stage" at the "top of the bank" mean that a portion of the subject property is undevelopable. Starks Landing, Inc. v. City of Rivergrove, 43 Or LUBA 237 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A governing body's interpretation of a code provision that fails to provide any independent meaning to a key term and that effectively eliminates that term from any function in the code is not entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1). Church v. Grant County, 43 Or LUBA 291 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city governing body's interpretation of a variance criterion, which requires variances to "conform to the comprehensive plan," to be satisfied where a requested lot depth variance does not violate any identified comprehensive plan policy will be sustained on appeal, where no identified comprehensive plan policies expressly discourage or encourage lot depth variances. Lord v. City of Oregon City, 43 Or LUBA 361 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A reasonable person could interpret the term "lodge" in the phrase "lodges and grange halls" to refer to more than a fraternal meeting place, and to include a commercial lodging facility like an inn or resort hotel, where both senses are within the dictionary definition of the term, and other code provisions the county separately provide for a "fraternal meeting place" and a "hotel, motel or lodge." Baker v. Lane County, 43 Or LUBA 493 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code interpretation to the effect that the county need not consider lesser height variances if the proposed additional height poses no conflicts with views is inconsistent with code language that (1) requires consideration of lesser or no variances, and (2) contains no exception for variances that do not pose conflicts with views. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code interpretation that limits the scope of alternative height variances that must be considered to those that provide the applicant with the same 35-foot height limitation allowed in a different regulatory zone is an impermissible amendment in the guise of interpretation, where the interpretation changes a rigorous alternatives analysis into a pro forma exercise and eliminates a regulatory distinction between zoning districts. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city's plan and zoning ordinance provisions provide that development within 500 feet of transit stops "should" be pedestrian-oriented and encourage "pedestrian and transit-friendly development criteria," the city's interpretation that those provisions do not require that only pedestrian-oriented uses may be permitted within 500 feet of a transit stop or promoted within the applicable zoning district is entitled to deference. Barman v. City of Cornelius, 42 Or LUBA 548 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city is within its discretion to interpret a zoning ordinance that encourages uses that complement and support existing uses and discourages "auto dependent commercial uses" as not constituting an outright prohibition of auto-dependent uses such as an automobile service station, as long as the automobile service station will be clustered near existing complementary uses such as a shopping center and a fast-food restaurant. Barman v. City of Cornelius, 42 Or LUBA 548 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city is within its discretion to interpret a comprehensive plan provision requiring establishment of a master plan prior to allowing development within a commercial district as being satisfied by the design review process where the city code defines "master plan" as a plan created through the land use review process governing design review and conditional use review, and the city does not have an independent process for establishing a master plan. Barman v. City of Cornelius, 42 Or LUBA 548 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's interpretation of a "public interest" standard for street vacations, that the standard is met when the record shows that potential future development in the area will not require the retention of the street, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Confederated Tribes v. City of Coos Bay, 42 Or LUBA 385 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The deferential standard of appellate review of interpretations of local land use laws that is required under ORS 197.829(1) does not apply where the decision maker is not the local legislative body and does not apply to local government interpretations of state land use law. Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Absent some indication that a parks master plan controls inconsistent zoning ordinance provisions, a city does not err in applying the one-third-mile parks service area specified in the zoning code over the "1/4 to 1/2-mile" area specified in the parks master plan. Carver v. City of Salem, 42 Or LUBA 305 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision limiting dwelling density to "one dwelling per 38 acres" in a big game overlay zone is meaningless unless given a frame of reference. An interpretation that the required frame of reference is the entire 640-acre section in which the proposed dwelling is located, rather than the area of the section subject to the overlay zone, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a) to (c), where related code provisions refer to the dwelling density in relation to the "section," and the county's interpretation is not inconsistent with the purpose of and policy underlying the overlay zone. Matiaco v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 277 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision limiting the planning director's interpretative powers, and prohibiting interpretations of the zoning ordinance that find a use not listed in the zone is "substantially similar" to a listed use, does not necessarily limit the board of commissioners' interpretative powers. To the extent it may, the commissioners' interpretation that the proposed use is a listed use is consistent with the code prohibition. Yeager v. Benton County, 42 Or LUBA 72 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A proposed communication tower may be subject to code provisions governing "transmission and receiving towers," even though it is county-owned and thus also arguably falls within a broad category of "municipal uses" allowed in the zone. Where a regulatory scheme lists as permitted uses in a zone both a general category of uses and a specific category of uses, with different sets of requirements, and the proposed use fits within the specific category, the specific category and its requirements apply exclusively. Luedtke v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 493 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will decline to interpret a local provision in the first instance, to determine whether a proposed radio communication tower is a "radio and television transmission and receiving" tower and therefore subject to a special setback, where viewed in context the meaning and apparent purpose of the provision is subject to considerable doubt. Luedtke v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 493 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is within a city governing body's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a code provision requiring that the transportation system be capable of safely supporting the proposed use, considering eight factors including "level of service," as not requiring that affected intersections maintain an acceptable level of service at all times. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance provision that expresses a preference for nonstructural over structural solutions to erosion and flooding problems does not apply to an application for recreational vehicle park expansion that proposes erosion or flooding measures, at least where the proposal does not make structural erosion or flood control measures likely or inevitable. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 41 Or LUBA 130 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Remand is necessary where a code provision allows a single-family dwelling as a permitted use in a scenic protection zone "provided the use promotes the purpose of the zone," but the local government's decision neither determines that the proposed dwelling promotes the purpose of the zone nor explains why that requirement does not apply. Crowley v. City of Bandon, 41 Or LUBA 87 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The terms and not the title of a code provision setting forth certain exceptions to prohibited activities in riparian areas control the scope of the exceptions in that provision. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation to that effect where the text and context of the provision indicate that the provision applies more broadly than its title suggests. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 53 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm as reasonable and correct a hearings officer's interpretation of code provisions requiring that a proposed recycling facility be served by an adequate transportation system, to allow the facility notwithstanding some impacts on nearby failing intersections, so long as imposed conditions are sufficient to ensure that those impacts are de minimis. K.B. Recycling, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 29 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A development code provision that prohibits consideration of a permit application where a federal or state law violation exists on the property does not apply where a permit opponent alleges federal or state law violations but there is no final adjudication by a court or state or federal agency finding that such violations exist. Such a code provision does not require a local government to independently consider such allegations or make its own findings concerning the alleged violations. Farrell v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 1 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is within a city council's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret its code to limit design review of historic landmarks to historic design review criteria, where the code's design review provisions state that historic landmarks are exempt from design review and are instead subject to historic design review. Pearl District Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 436 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An apparent conflict between a city's current code, as interpreted, and a set of uncodified ordinances and guidelines that reflect superseded code language provides no basis to reverse the city's code interpretation. Pearl District Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 436 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is within a city council's discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a code provision that requires the "transportation structure" to be "adequate," as not requiring separate quantified empirical analysis with respect to separate components of the transportation system, such as parking. Under that interpretation, it is permissible for the city to rely on the ready availability of transit, bicycle and pedestrian transportation, and evidence that development allowed under rezoning can satisfy previously established off-street parking requirements, to conclude that the transportation structure is adequate with respect to parking. Wakelin v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 401 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Code provisions protecting historic structures that are described in the county's inventory as significant, important or contributing to the significance of the overall resource are not properly interpreted to protect an accessory structure on the subject property that is not mentioned in the county's inventory. Paulson v. Washington County, 40 Or LUBA 345 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision allowing a historic resource to be relocated if it is on land that is "needed to accommodate" a planned transportation project is not properly interpreted in context to require the county to determine if an alternative alignment would not require relocation, where a related code provision prohibits the county from considering alternative alignments. Paulson v. Washington County, 40 Or LUBA 345 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code standard requiring that expansion of existing structures be supported by the "same improvements" is not reasonably interpreted to allow expansion only where the original unimproved septic system supports the structure. The standard is more reasonably read to allow expansion supported by an upgraded septic system, as long as it is not a different septic system. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a generally worded purpose statement in a city's comprehensive plan provides that a zoning designation is intended to confine strip commercial development to its existing locations, but does not expressly provide that the zoning designation may be applied only to those locations, the local government's interpretation of the purpose statement to allow the zoning designation to be applied to other locations so long as it does not result in strip commercial development is not clearly wrong. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 40 Or LUBA 52 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the first and second steps of a four-step PUD approval process each yield decisions that are not final or binding in any respect, neither the local government's decision granting first-step approval nor its decision granting second-step approval is a final land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the first step of a three-step planned unit development (PUD) approval process yields a decision that is final and binding in certain respects, the local government's decision granting such approval is a final land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 39 Or LUBA 766 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's failure to respond to issues raised below regarding whether the "street frontage" of a flag lot is the same as its "front building line" provides no basis for remand, where it is clear under the city's land division ordinance that "street frontage" and "front building line" are not the same. Webb v. City of Bandon, 39 Or LUBA 584 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance fire protection standard expressly applies only to new dwellings, the county does not err in approving a cellular phone tower without applying the fire protection standard. Pereira v. Columbia County, 39 Or LUBA 575 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 118 Or App 543, 848 P2d 624 (1993), the county need not inquire into the legality of parcels subject to a rezoning application, where the applicable rezoning criteria do not expressly require a "lawfully created parcel" or a "legal parcel," or impose a similar requirement of legality. Maxwell v. Lane County, 39 Or LUBA 556 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is within a local governing body's discretion under Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), to interpret "public building or use," as it is used in its zoning ordinance, to include the lease of office space to a state agency for a "public office" where public use is defined as "[a]ny building or property publicly owned or operated * * *." Harvey v. City of Baker City, 39 Or LUBA 515 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code requires that a lot line adjustment may be approved only if adequate public facilities are available to serve the resulting parcels and the proposal is compatible with the comprehensive plan, the city errs in interpreting the code to limit its consideration to the lot line adjustment itself and not the uses proposed on the adjusted lots. Mountain West Investment v. City of Silverton, 39 Or LUBA 507 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local zoning regulation provides for conditional use review for fields used in "organized sports" or "other facilities that draw spectators," conditional use review is not required to allow a graded area within a park to be reserved for occasional use for children's soccer practice. Kent v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 455 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council does not commit reversible error by imposing a condition that requires that a parking lot for a home occupation be accessed from an alley, notwithstanding that the zoning ordinance defines "alley" as a street that provides secondary access to property. Latta v. City of Joseph, 39 Or LUBA 318 (2001).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an approval criterion contains two subsections with similar or overlapping requirements, but the local government's findings do not address one of the subsections or interpret the criterion to the effect that findings of compliance with both subsections are unnecessary, remand is appropriate to address the omitted subsection or adopt an interpretation justifying the omission. Chilla v. City of North Bend, 39 Or LUBA 121 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government fails to interpret a local provision, and the purpose of the provision is unclear and subject to numerous interpretations, LUBA will decline to interpret the provision in the first instance and remand the decision to the local government. OTCNA v. City of Cornelius, 39 Or LUBA 62 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city may demonstrate compliance with a zoning change criterion that requires that the identified public need will be best served by rezoning the proposed site by showing that other sites, individually or as a group, are inferior to the proposed site. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a local ordinance creates an exemption from additional approval criteria for uses permitted in the underlying zone, and the ordinance distinguishes between permitted uses and uses subject to administrative review, it is incorrect to determine that wineries, which are uses subject to administrative review, are permitted uses in the exclusive farm use zone, and thus not subject to the additional approval criteria. Roth v. Jackson County, 38 Or LUBA 894 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation that "commercial timberland properties" only refers to properties "operated by or for the benefit of commercial timber operations," and does not include property operated by individuals, is clearly wrong. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Siting requirements for forest template dwellings that require that impacts and fire risks be "minimized" govern where a proposed dwelling should be sited rather than whether a dwelling should be approved. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision requiring consideration of traffic impacts on facilities that "serve" property can be read to allow approval notwithstanding de minimis impacts on distant transportation facilities that are operating at an unsatisfactory level of service, but only tangentially "serve" the property. Anderson v. City of Medford, 38 Or LUBA 792 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code provision allows conditional use approval of a building that exceeds a mandatory height limit provided the increased building height "does not adversely affect the ocean * * * views" of neighboring structures, the city's interpretation of that provision to mean that the part of the building exceeding the height limit may not block any part of a neighboring property's view of ocean water from any perspective within the neighboring property is not clearly wrong. Rivera v. City of Bandon, 38 Or LUBA 736 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance provisions require preservation of "County Road 804" as established by a circuit court decision adopting an official survey of the road, the scope of the survey determines the parts of County Road 804 subject to that protection. That the survey shows no private property boundaries within a certain subdivision crossed by the road is a strong indication the circuit court decision did not intend to establish anything with respect to that subdivision. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Lincoln County, 38 Or LUBA 699 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The impracticability standard of the Metro Code (MC) for locational amendments to the Urban Growth Boundary (UGB) performs a limited version of the functional role that Goal 14, factor 6, and Goal 2, Part II(c)(2), play in the context of more comprehensive UGB amendments: ensuring that agricultural land is included in the UGB only when nonagricultural lands cannot reasonably accommodate the proposed use. Because the MC must be consistent with Goals 2 and 14, the decision is not entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1). Malinowski Farm v. Metro, 38 Or LUBA 633 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. "Practicable" has two distinct connotations: (1) technical possibility; and (2) prudential balancing of costs and other relevant considerations. An alternative is impracticable where it is either technically infeasible or, based on all relevant considerations, including consideration of cost, it would not be a feasible alternative. Malinowski Farm v. Metro, 38 Or LUBA 633 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An identification of a need for additional lands under Goal 14, factors 1 and 2, is to be an essential predicate for application of the ORS 197.298 priorities. Where a proposed urban growth boundary amendment is not based upon a demonstration of need, but rather upon locational considerations, ORS 197.298 is not applicable. Malinowski Farm v. Metro, 38 Or LUBA 633 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation of code "compatibility" and "livability" standards as requiring that it consider whether a permit proposal for a 24-hour adult video business would result in increased potential for criminal activity and in increased vacancies in nearby offices is not impermissibly vague and is within the city's interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Oregon Entertainment Corp. v. City of Beaverton, 38 Or LUBA 440 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city code does not define its requirement for "substantial construction" before the term of a conditional use permit expires, the city errs in interpreting the code "substantial construction" requirement as being met by securing all required permits, based on a definition of "substantial construction" in the code of another jurisdiction. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 38 Or LUBA 375 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provides that a conditional use permit becomes void after one year unless the planning commission extends that term not to exceed an additional one year, the planning commission erroneously interprets and applies that code limitation to allow it to accept a request for extension after the one-year anniversary of the conditional use permit and to extend the conditional use permit beyond the two-year anniversary of the conditional use permit. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 38 Or LUBA 375 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city's interpretation of a "no adverse effect" standard to permit some adverse impacts on adjacent properties, so long as the impacts do not affect the uses on those properties, is not clearly wrong. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 38 Or LUBA 183 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In considering whether a proposed privately owned, university-related hotel qualifies under a zoning code provision authorizing uses "customarily associated with major universities," a city does not err in considering examples of university-related hotels that have different ownership and operating relationships than the proposed university-related hotel. Schwerdt v. City of Corvallis, 38 Or LUBA 174 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will reject a hearings officer's interpretation that a code standard imposing a riparian buffer zone within a "setback area" does not apply unless a structure is proposed, where a broader interpretation to apply the buffer zone in other circumstances is equally plausible and more consistent with the identified purpose of the code standard. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 922 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will remand for the county to determine to what extent a code standard imposing a riparian buffer prohibits the removal of native vegetation and whether a proposal for a recreational vehicle camp site within the buffer violates that standard because maintenance of the site requires removal of certain small trees and some native vegetation. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 922 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local land use regulation requires that a permit application be consistent with any relevant neighborhood plan, neighborhood plan policies which are described in the neighborhood plan as having the force of law are at least potentially relevant approval criteria for the permit. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance standard requires consideration of residential appearance and function of an area in approving a bed and breakfast facility, a hearings officer does not err by addressing traffic and activity impacts of the proposal under the "function" prong of the standard rather than as part of the "appearance" prong. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance standard requires consideration of residential appearance and function of an "area" in approving a bed and breakfast facility, and a hearings officer's selection of a two-block area for analysis is based on assumed walking distance to cars parked off-site and is no less plausible than petitioner's rationale for selecting a larger area for analysis, the hearings officer does not misconstrue the applicable law. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body's interpretation that a zoning ordinance requirement that "activities" specified in a farm management plan be implemented did not require that each and every task for which a cost estimate was provided in the farm management plan for each year be implemented is not "clearly wrong," and, therefore, is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 237 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of its land use regulation where petitioners express disagreement with the interpretation but do not explain why the interpretation is inconsistent with the text of the regulation or otherwise legally incorrect. Freedom v. City of Ashland, 37 Or LUBA 123 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body does not exceed its interpretive discretion in interpreting a zoning ordinance provision that allows development of lots of record notwithstanding the lot's failure to meet lot area, width and depth requirements as not also excusing the zoning requirement that lots that are less than five acres in size be served by a public or community water system. Columbia Hills Development Co. v. Columbia County, 36 Or LUBA 691 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body does not exceed its interpretive discretion in interpreting a zoning ordinance provision that delegates responsibility to the planning director to interpret the zoning ordinance as not preventing the governing body from interpreting the comprehensive plan in the first instance following an appeal of a planning director decision to the planning commission and the county governing body. Columbia Hills Development Co. v. Columbia County, 36 Or LUBA 691 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city planner's determination that residential youth treatment facilities constitute "household living" foreclosed considering such facilities as "group living" because "group living" is defined by the city code to exclude those facilities that fit the "household living" definition. Buckman Community Assoc. v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 630 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Using a dictionary to define "guardianship," a provision not defined in the city code, is neither arbitrary nor capricious because it is consistent with both the legislative intent and the documents explaining the city's overall intent in adopting the amendments. Buckman Community Assoc. v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 630 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The city correctly determined that an adolescent residential treatment facility is "household living" and thus an allowed use in a residential zone, when the city's code defines "household living" to include persons related by guardianship, and the residents of the facility are under the legal guardianship of the operator of the facility. Buckman Community Assoc. v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 630 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county acts within the discretion afforded by ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 515, 836 P2d 710 (1992), where the zoning ordinance requires a finding that utilities and services likely to be needed by the "anticipated uses" are available, the county limits allowed uses on the property to the applicant's proposed use, and the county interprets the term "anticipated uses" to consist solely of the proposed use. A reasonable person could construe the term "anticipated uses" to denote something less than the range of uses allowed in the zone. City of Newberg v. Yamhill County, 36 Or LUBA 473 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision authorizing permit revocation is expressly limited to Type II discretionary permits, the code provision does not authorize revocation of Type I ministerial permits. Woods v. Grant County, 36 Or LUBA 456 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision authorizing the county to institute "appropriate proceedings to prevent, enjoin * * * abate, or remove the unlawful location, construction, maintenance, repair, alteration or use" of unlawfully constructed structures is sufficient to authorize the county to institute proceedings to revoke a ministerial zoning permit where the structure actually constructed under the zoning permit is inconsistent with the site plan that was approved by the zoning permit. Woods v. Grant County, 36 Or LUBA 456 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code permit revocation provision provides that the hearings officer "may grant a reasonable time for rectification" it does not require that the hearings officer do so, and a hearings officer decision revoking a zoning permit without granting time for rectification does not violate that code provision. Woods v. Grant County, 36 Or LUBA 456 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the first clause of a local code provision requires that design review comply with a set of criteria used to rezone property and the second clause requires that design review also comply with those criteria addressed at the time the subject property was rezoned, a hearings officer's interpretation limiting design review to the subset of criteria addressed at the time the property was rezoned fails to give effect to the first clause of the code provision, and is therefore not reasonable and correct. Blazer Construction, Inc. v. City of Eugene, 36 Or LUBA 391 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will not reject a substantial evidence challenge based on a code informational requirement, where the challenged decision does not interpret the code requirement as being purely informational, but, to the contrary, appears to require that the information submitted under the code provision be the kind of information a reasonable person would rely on. Baughman v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 353 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a city interprets its zoning ordinance as requiring that a "recycling center" have the "primary purpose" of extracting recyclables from a waste stream, but not requiring that any particular percentage of the waste stream will be recycled, the city's conclusion that a proposed facility is a "recycling center" is supported by substantial evidence, notwithstanding the absence of evidence quantifying the percentage of recyclables in the waste stream. Sequoia Park Condo. Assoc. v. City of Beaverton, 36 Or LUBA 317 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a proposed use meets the definition of a "materials recovery facility" at OAR 340-093-0030(57) is neither relevant nor controlling in determining whether the local government correctly categorized the proposed use as a "recycling center" under its development ordinance, where the development ordinance was not adopted to implement the rule. Sequoia Park Condo. Assoc. v. City of Beaverton, 36 Or LUBA 317 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm as not clearly wrong an interpretation that commercial uses not otherwise listed as allowed uses in a university district are allowed when they are uses "customarily associated" with universities and thus fall within the definition of a use expressly allowed in the district. Brome v. City of Corvallis, 36 Or LUBA 225 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code does not dictate how rear and front lot lines are to be identified, a city council is within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829 in requiring that building orientation be considered. Barnard Perkins Corp. v. City of Rivergrove, 36 Or LUBA 218 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance requires that a proposed use must "satisfy the goals and policies of the Comprehensive Plan which apply to the proposed use," the county must, as a threshold matter, determine which plan goals and policies apply to the use. Cotter v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 172 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. After the county has identified the applicable comprehensive plan goals and policies to which a proposal must conform under local ordinance, a finding that the proposal is incompatible with particular goals and provisions will not necessarily be fatal where the zoning ordinance only requires that the proposal satisfy the plan goals and policies on balance. Cotter v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 172 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An interpretation of a zoning ordinance that shifts the burden of demonstrating compliance with minimum lot size approval standards to opponents of the application is erroneous. Wood v. Crook County, 36 Or LUBA 143 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Exercise of LUBA's authority under ORS 197.829(2) to interpret local land use law in the first instance is not appropriate where the relevant code provision prohibiting reduction of acreage available for farm use could refer to reduction (1) of acreage on adjacent lands or (2) of acreage on the subject property that is available for use in conjunction with farm uses on adjacent lands. Where both interpretations are plausible and it is disputed factually whether the relevant lands could be used in conjunction with adjacent lands, a remand to the county to render its interpretation in the first instance is appropriate. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision requires an applicant for expansion of a golf course on EFU-zoned land to demonstrate that alternative urban sites are not available and an applicant applies to expand an existing golf course, a hearings officer's interpretation of the provision as limiting the requisite alternative site analysis to locations where the existing golf course can expand is reasonable and correct. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local ordinance definition of "housekeeping unit" requires a sharing of domestic tasks and management of household affairs, an assisted-care dwelling may qualify as a housekeeping unit notwithstanding that a resident caregiver will perform many of the domestic tasks and management of household affairs. Neels v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 54 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county code "stability" standard that does not implement the statutory nonfarm use "stability" standard is not subject to case law interpreting the statutory "stability" standard, but such a code "stability" standard necessarily connotes a temporal period and a scope of causative impact for analysis. However, a county's interpretation of the local "stability" standard as focusing on short-term effects and direct impacts rather than long-term and cumulative impacts is not clearly wrong and therefore must be affirmed by LUBA. Ray v. Douglas County, 36 Or LUBA 45 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where provisions allowing enforcement of the city's ordinance only specifically authorize judicial remedies, the city's interpretation of the enforcement provisions as allowing the city to conduct quasi-judicial proceedings to determine nonconforming use status is inconsistent with the terms of that provision and not entitled to deference under Goose Hollow Foothills League v. City of Portland, 117 Or App 211, 843 P2d 992 (1992), or ORS 197.829(1). Dept. of Transportation v. City of Mosier, 35 Or LUBA 701 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A proposal to site a drug and alcohol recovery facility within a single-family dwelling in a residential zone must be permitted when the relevant code provision permits outright those activities that are conducted in buildings "designed or used for the occupancy of one family" and the proposed recovery facility is to be located in such a structure. Recovery House VI v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA 419 (1999).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the zoning ordinance allows a variance from its standards when those standards create a hardship due to one or more defined conditions, a hearing officer errs in requiring the applicant to demonstrate hardship in addition to those stated in the defined conditions. Kelley v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 215 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is reasonable and correct to interpret a code provision requiring that "vehicle to be repaired shall be located within an enclosed building" to require that repaired vehicles remain within an enclosed building until they are removed from the property. Gibbons v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 210 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is reasonable and correct to consider vehicles used to pick up and drop off customers who have vehicles waiting to be repaired as "vehicles associated with" an auto repair home occupation. Gibbons v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 210 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council's interpretation of its zoning ordinance as requiring conditional use approval for a towing yard as an "other industrial use" will be sustained where towing yards are not listed as an outright permitted use and the zoning code does not allow uses that are similar to outright permitted uses as permitted uses. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city may impose a condition requiring annual review of a conditional use approval under a general code provision allowing conditions of approval the city council determines are necessary "to avoid a detrimental impact." Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city does not err in regulating conditional uses differently from uses permitted outright even if a particular conditional use is similar to a use permitted outright. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council interpretation of the term "flood" as being limited to the "base flood" or 100-year flood must be sustained by LUBA where the stated objectives and introductory language of the zoning code are consistent with the narrow interpretation. Visher v. City of Cannon Beach, 35 Or LUBA 74 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Requiring that a street be connected to allow through traffic does not inevitably mean the street will cease to function as a local street, where there are identified measures that can be used to discourage non-local traffic. Hannah v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA 1 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a sentence in a decision can be read to adopt an improperly narrow interpretation of a code, but when that sentence is read in context with the rest of the decision it is clear that the improper interpretation was not adopted, LUBA will assume the improper interpretation was not intended. Hannah v. City of Eugene, 35 Or LUBA 1 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government does not expressly interpret a code provision, but adopts findings that are sufficiently detailed to demonstrate that it interprets the provision to require evaluation of the subject property rather than surrounding properties, LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Rouse v. Tillamook County, 34 Or LUBA 530 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that sewer facilities be "available" as a condition of approval for annexation, the local government's interpretation of the "available" criterion as being met where extension of sewer services is feasible within the current planning period is not clearly wrong. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioner's home occupation includes the movement and storage of vehicles on the subject property, that activity is external evidence of the business for purposes of a local ordinance based on ORS 215.448 that limits allowable external evidence of a home occupation, even though such activity is incidental to the primary business activity. Sheldon Fire & Rescue, Inc. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 474 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local ordinance limits external evidence of a home occupation to one small sign, a hearings officer may reasonably interpret the ordinance to mean that the storage and movement of vehicles on the subject property is external evidence of the business, and therefore prohibited. Sheldon Fire & Rescue, Inc. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 474 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code requires that the final subdivision and PUD plans be in "substantial conformance" with the preliminary approval and the city interprets the "substantial conformance" requirement by analogizing to the distinction drawn in the code between "major" subdivision/PUD amendments, which must be approved quasi-judicially, and "minor" amendments, which may be approved administratively, the city's interpretation will be upheld. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code requirement that each lot in a subdivision be approved with provisions for sewage disposal is reasonably interpreted as not applying to lots that are not to be developed. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a petitioner at LUBA challenges an interpretation that first appeared in the challenged decision, petitioner need not have raised an issue concerning that interpretation during the local proceedings. Tenly Properties Corp. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 352 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision that imposes different standards depending on how many "functions" the street supports is ambiguous. A county interpretation that equates "function" with the number of units that use the street for "access" rather than the number of units that "border" the street is a plausible interpretation. Tenly Properties Corp. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 352 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government fails to adopt a needed interpretation of a land use ordinance, LUBA may interpret the ordinance on appeal. LUBA will do so where the facts are undisputed, a pure question of law is presented and the parties adequately address the interpretive issue in their briefs. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 14 (1998).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the purpose of a local provision is unclear and subject to numerous interpretations, LUBA will decline to interpret the provision in the first instance. Bradbury v. City of Bandon, 33 Or LUBA 664 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county may regulate or define uses allowed under ORS 215.283(2) as long as it does not define those uses more expansively than permitted by state law. R/C Pilots Association v. Marion County, 33 Or LUBA 532 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county may interpret its local codification of nonfarm uses allowed in EFU zones more restrictively than state law requires. Such a more restrictive interpretation is not contrary to ORS 215.283(2)(d) and will be affirmed by LUBA where it is not so inconsistent with the zoning ordinance as to be clearly wrong. R/C Pilots Association v. Marion County, 33 Or LUBA 532 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's finding that other residentially zoned property "may not be developable" does not factually justify the conclusion that "there are no non-agricultural lands" with priority for development. Alliance for Responsible Land Use v. Deschutes County, 33 Or LUBA 12 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county's findings are inadequate where an applicable criterion for a zone change requires a finding that the need will be best served by changing the classification of the property in question as compared with other available property, and the county's findings do not provide any express comparison of the subject property to other available property. Alliance for Responsible Land Use v. Deschutes County, 33 Or LUBA 12 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer under ORS 197.829(1) to a local government's interpretation of conditional use permit criteria even when that interpretation is at odds with LUBA's own interpretation of identical statutory criteria governing an application for a nonfarm dwelling. Ray v. Douglas County, 32 Or LUBA 388 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code approval standard that requires "a clear picture of the existing land use pattern" in a specified area is not satisfied by general findings about zoning and details about some of the properties in the area. Ray v. Douglas County, 32 Or LUBA 388 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a conditional use is proposed on EFU land, the compatibility of the proposed use with uses on adjacent properties is necessary to ensuring the stability of existing uses, but it does not alone ensure stability. Ray v. Douglas County, 32 Or LUBA 388 (1997).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In reviewing a hearings officer's decision, where LUBA is unable to fathom the meaning of a local ordinance and no interpretation is provided by the hearings officer, LUBA will give the county the opportunity to interpret the code in the first instance. Jackson County Citizens League v. Jackson County, 32 Or LUBA 212 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In making a zoning classification determination, the city properly relied on the definition and review procedures set forth in ORS 227.160(2) and ORS 227.175(11), and was not required to follow the local procedural requirements for a Type I review. North Portland Citizens v. City of Portland, 32 Or LUBA 70 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will affirm the city planning bureau's determination that a proposed probation/parole office is an office use, permitted of right in a General Commercial zone, where that determination is reasonable and correct. North Portland Citizens v. City of Portland, 32 Or LUBA 70 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Provisions of a zoning ordinance should be interpreted in a manner which gives meaning to all parts of the ordinance. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 410 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under ORS 197.829(2), enacted in 1995, LUBA is not required to remand decisions for local government interpretations of local provisions when LUBA is able to make the necessary interpretations. Friends of Metolius v. Jefferson County, 31 Or LUBA 160 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a residential use is established on the subject property and the existing residence may be expanded without a variance, a requested height variance is not necessary under any colorable interpretation of the standard "necessary to accommodate a use or accessory use on the parcel which can be reasonably expected to occur within the zone or vicinity." DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Development that has not occurred and that will be governed by the limitations of the applicable zone cannot be used to justify a variance on the basis that the property owner seeking the variance will otherwise be precluded from the enjoyment of substantial property rights enjoyed by the majority of landowners in the vicinity. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a house already exists on the subject property, the fact it cannot be enlarged in precisely the manner desired by the property owner does not render the property incapable of reasonable economic use without a variance. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The county's interpretation of the "incapable of reasonable economic use" variance standard to mean "incapable of the property's highest and best use under its zoning and of an intensity of use consistent with other similarly situated properties" is clearly wrong. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The informal adoption by a statement in a quasi-judicial decision of a definition of the term "firearms training facility," which term is found in both a state administrative rule and the county's zoning ordinance, does not constitute the amendment of an acknowledged land use regulation. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Washington County, 31 Or LUBA 115 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A zoning ordinance provision that states land use districts may "float" within the boundaries of a proposed planned development can be interpreted to mean that such districts may be dissolved and totally reconfigured, with densities reallocated. Huntzicker v. Washington County, 30 Or LUBA 397 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 197.829(3) permits LUBA, in cases where a local government fails to interpret adequately a provision of its land use regulations, to make its own determination of whether the local government decision is correct. Thompson v. City of St. Helens, 30 Or LUBA 339 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA cannot defer to a local government's interpretation of its own ordinance when it cannot discern what the interpretation is, and will not exercise its discretion under ORS 197.829(2) to interpret a county provision in the first instance where the purpose of the provision is unclear and subject to numerous interpretations. Thomas v. Wasco County, 30 Or LUBA 302 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county may interpret a zoning ordinance to regulate the establishment of nonforest dwellings more stringently than is required under ORS 215.750. Dilworth v. Clackamas County, 30 Or LUBA 279 (1996).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is within the county's interpretive discretion to find that a code provision protecting agricultural land for farm use conflicts with a plan policy that certain land is not suitable for agricultural production and is committed to residential development. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 30 Or LUBA 135 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 197.829(2) permits LUBA to determine whether a local government decision is correct, even when local government fails to interpret adequately a provision of its comprehensive plan or land use regulations. East Lancaster Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Salem, 30 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The city correctly determined that city, rather than county, zoning applies to a proposed development pursuant to an urban fringe management agreement between the city and the county where there was no evidence that the city violated the procedures established in the agreement with respect to the proposed development. Friends of Neabeack Hill v. City of Philomath, 30 Or LUBA 46 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When petitioners fail to satisfy the county's jurisdictional appeal provision requiring local appellants to state the basis of their standing, the county is not at liberty to take notice of petitioners' standing or to excuse their failure satisfy the requirement as "harmless error." Tipton v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 474 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. When a county zoning ordinance provision states that a local appeal will be dismissed if the requirements of the provision are not satisfied, the provision is jurisdictional. An appellant's failure to satisfy a jurisdictional requirement results in dismissal of the appeal. Tipton v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 474 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners contend the governing body failed to follow procedures arguably required by the local code for making the challenged legislative land use decision, LUBA must defer to the governing body's interpretation of the code and cannot interpret the code provisions in the first instance. Central Eastside Industrial Council v. Portland, 29 Or LUBA 429 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the city's zoning code allows private households in the commercial-service/professional zone so long as the private households meet the development standards of a multifamily zone, LUBA will affirm the city's interpretation that private households includes a multiplex dwelling. Stevens v. City of Medford, 29 Or LUBA 422 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the city's zoning code provides that some permitted uses are subject to special use restrictions, LUBA will affirm the city's interpretation that the existence of special use restrictions does not convert a permitted use into an unpermitted use. Stevens v. City of Medford, 29 Or LUBA 422 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioner appealed a planning director determination that a solid waste transfer station is an outright permitted use in a particular zone, the city was neither required nor authorized to expand the scope of the local appeal hearing to include consideration of whether a solid waste transfer station is also an appropriate use in that zone. Pend-Air Citizen's Comm. v. City of Pendleton, 29 Or LUBA 362 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a local governing body's interpretation of Standard Industrial Code Manual provisions incorporated into the local government's own zoning ordinance, unless that interpretation is contrary to the express words, purpose or policy of the local enactment or to a state statute, statewide planning goal or administrative rule that the local enactment implements. Pend-Air Citizen's Comm. v. City of Pendleton, 29 Or LUBA 362 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Evidence that a solid waste transfer station may conflict with neighboring residential uses is not relevant to the issue of whether a solid waste transfer station is an outright permitted use in a particular zone. Pend-Air Citizen's Comm. v. City of Pendleton, 29 Or LUBA 362 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Code demolition permit pre-application requirements that the owner of historic property "endeavor to prepare an economically feasible plan" for preservation and "solicit purchase offers" must be interpreted in light of other code demolition permit provisions which clearly leave the decision to sell or not sell the historic property up to the property owner. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 335 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code specifically requires the application of a historic landmark designation to be consistent with comprehensive plan historic preservation policies, but does not indicate any plan policies are applicable to decisions on permits for demolition of property subject to the historic landmark designation, the local governing body is not clearly wrong in interpreting the plan and code to provide that no plan policies are applicable to its review of such a demolition permit application. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to the local governing body's interpretation that under its code provisions governing permits for the demolition of historic properties, the planning director's determination regarding compliance with pre-application requirements is not reviewable by the historic review board or appealable to the governing body. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body acts within its interpretive discretion in interpreting a code conditional use permit standard regarding feasibility of meeting "projected increased demand" for school facilities to refer to current demand, plus demand from other developments that have received final approval and the demand created by the proposed development, and not to include demand from future permitted development of residentially zoned land. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires a "recreation/open space area" as part of a mobile home park, it is reasonable for the local government to interpret "recreation/open space area" to include wetlands. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where determining whether a notice of intent to appeal was timely filed under ORS 197.830(3) depends on determining which code notice of hearing provision applied to the local proceeding, and LUBA can infer from the challenged decision which notice provision the local governing body believes governs the local proceeding and agrees with that interpretation, even without the deference required by Clark, LUBA is not required to remand the decision for the governing body to make its interpretation explicit. Orenco Neighborhood v. City of Hillsboro, 29 Or LUBA 186 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where an ordinance amends the text of a zoning ordinance by adding a temporary overlay district, identifies a map showing where the overlay district applies an "attachment to" the zoning map and does not purport to amend the section of the zoning ordinance under which the zoning map is adopted, it is reasonable and correct to interpret a code notice of hearing provision governing amendments to the text of the zoning ordinance, rather than another provision governing amendments to the "zoning map," as applicable. Orenco Neighborhood v. City of Hillsboro, 29 Or LUBA 186 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government may interpret relevant code provisions to require that either (1) the required appeal fee, or (2) a fee waiver previously approved by the planning director, be included in a local appeal when it is filed. In such circumstance, it is a local appellant's responsibility to obtain approval of a fee waiver request prior to submitting an appeal. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 29 Or LUBA 139 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code contains both a provision governing the expiration of quasi-judicial land use approvals generally and a provision specifically governing the expiration of planned development approvals, the local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark in interpreting the code to mean the expiration of planned development approvals is governed only by the specific code provision. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the code provides "if no extensions are granted, the authorization shall expire," the local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark in interpreting this provision to mean that if an extension is requested prior to the expiration of the approval period, the approval does not expire while local government review of the extension request is pending. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. If a code includes provisions for extending planned development approvals and for requesting changes in approved final development plans, the local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark in interpreting these provisions together to mean if a change in an approved final development plan is requested before the original approval expires, the approval does not expire while the modification application is being processed, and a separate extension application is not necessary. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision requiring that certain applications for changes to an approved planned development (PD) final development plan "shall be processed in the same manner as for a new PD" must be interpreted consistently with ORS 227.178(3) to mean that any standard which would be applicable to a new application for PD approval is applicable to such applications for changes to approved PDs. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Stacking enough lumber to build a house around a mobile home located in a mobile home and recreational vehicle park is not properly viewed as an accessory use to the use of the mobile home as a dwelling. Sanchez v. Clatsop County, 29 Or LUBA 26 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Without a demonstration that the interpretation of a local code provision in the challenged decision is significantly different from a previously established local government interpretation of that provision, petitioners fail to establish the local government erred by announcing the disputed interpretation for the first time in its final decision. Wicks v. City of Reedsport, 29 Or LUBA 8 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body acts within its interpretive authority in construing a code provision stating local street design and construction cost provisions apply "unless otherwise approved in the tentative development plan," as allowing the local government to waive those local street standards when granting tentative subdivision plan approval. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code conditional use standard requiring reasonable compatibility with, and no more than minimal impact on, "appropriate development" of surrounding properties authorizes the local government to consider a proposed conditional use's compatibility with, and impact on, future development of vacant properties. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 28 Or LUBA 632 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local governing body may interpret a code requirement that "[b]efore granting any appeal, [the governing body] shall make findings of fact, setting forth wherein the planning commission's findings were in error," to allow the governing body to substitute its judgment for that of the planning commission on questions of fact or law, and to find the planning commission erred because it relied on different evidence or reached a different conclusion than did the governing body. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 28 Or LUBA 632 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision was adopted by a decision maker other than the local governing body, and the decision fails to contain an interpretation of relevant code provisions, LUBA may interpret the local code. Beveled Edge Machines, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 28 Or LUBA 790 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where individual guidelines made applicable by an overlay zone are expressed in nonmandatory terms, a governing body is well within its interpretive discretion in determining compliance with such guidelines is not required, even where the code provides that overlay zone provisions supersede provisions of the base zone. Champion v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 618 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. There can be no possible rational dispute that an adjustment changing the number of parking spaces required for a proposed development does not violate a code prohibition against adjustments that are "exception[s] to the procedural steps of a procedure or to change assigned procedures." Champion v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 618 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government's zoning ordinance establishes a process for administrative actions to determine the existence of nonconforming uses, and another local ordinance gives a compliance hearings officer jurisdiction over complaints regarding violations of the zoning ordinance, it is reasonable and correct to interpret these ordinances to require that the existence of a nonconforming use be determined through an administrative action, not raised as a defense in a compliance proceeding. Watson v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 602 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In reviewing a decision adopted by the local governing body, LUBA must review the governing body's interpretation of local code provisions and may not interpret the local code in the first instance, unless there is "no possible rational dispute" regarding the correct interpretation of the local code. Foster v. Coos County, 28 Or LUBA 609 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The question of whether the governing body erroneously accepted a local appeal turns on the interpretation of relevant provisions of the city's code. Because LUBA may not interpret the local code in the first instance when reviewing a decision by a governing body, the decision must be remanded for such an interpretation. Shapiro v. City of Talent, 28 Or LUBA 542 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of the local code is incorrect where the hearings officer determines a private easement that will be generally used by members of the public and occupants of a proposed subdivision, is not an "area to be dedicated for new roads" to serve the proposed subdivision. Ellison v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision was made by the hearings officer and petitioners contend a zoning district purpose statement is a mandatory standard applicable to proposed development, LUBA may determine, in the first instance, whether the provision is an approval applicable to the proposal. Ellison v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code zoning district purpose statement is aspirational only, it is reasonable and correct to determine the purpose statement is not a mandatory approval standard applicable to the proposed development. Ellison v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government acts within its interpretational discretion in construing local code provisions that treat "contiguous" parcels in "common ownership" as a single unit of land as not including parcels in common ownership which meet only at a common corner and share no common sides. Tognoli v. Crook County, 28 Or LUBA 527 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of something in the local code to the contrary, if a use satisfies the code definition of motel, it may be treated as a motel for purposes of determining whether such use falls within an exemption applicable to motels, and it does not matter that the use may also satisfy the code definition of a condominium. Kaady v. City of Cannon Beach, 28 Or LUBA 509 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. To determine whether a use is a motel under the local code, a local government does not err in examining the original prospectus for the use. Kaady v. City of Cannon Beach, 28 Or LUBA 509 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that a second farm dwelling be shown "conclusively" to be "necessary for the operation of the commercial farm," but does not define the term necessary, it is appropriate to use the dictionary definition of the term "necessary." Louks v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 501 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that a second farm dwelling be shown to be "necessary," absent a definition to the contrary or contrary legislative history, the term "necessary" has the same meaning in the Goal 3 context that it has in the Goal 4 context. Louks v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 501 (1995).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is unreasonable for a local hearings officer to interpret a code provision prohibiting "unit enlargements or expansions" of existing mobile home parks unless they are "made to conform substantially with all requirements for new construction" as inherently inapplicable to any proposed alteration of a nonconforming mobile home park, because such an interpretation would make this code provision a nullity. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code standard for determining nonconforming use status requires that the use "would have been allowed" under the zoning applicable when the use became nonconforming, it is reasonable and correct to interpret the code standard to require that at the time the use became nonconforming, it complied with an applicable code provision prohibiting objectionable off-site impacts. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the city code established no process or procedure for city determinations of compliance with a provision prohibiting permitted uses from having objectionable off-site impacts, the city cannot interpret a code nonconforming use standard to require that a city determination of compliance with the impacts provision was obtained before the use became nonconforming. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation that the term "development" used in the local code does not include zone changes. Neuman v. City of Albany, 28 Or LUBA 337 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Determining whether the local code allows a proposed wastewater treatment facility as part of, or incidental to, the uses that it serves, or whether it requires the proposed wastewater treatment facility to be regulated as a separate use, requires interpretation and judgment. Therefore, the exception to LUBA's jurisdiction provided by ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) does not apply. Knee Deep Cattle Company v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 288 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides for discretionary review of certain development applications by the planning director, and also provides a process for the planning director to refer questions concerning code interpretation to the governing body, the code does not divest the planning director of authority to interpret the code in carrying out his duties. Knee Deep Cattle Company v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 288 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code defines the term "feedlot" to involve animals that are prepared for shipment to "market," it is neither reasonable nor correct to interpret "market" to mean only the "final" market to which the animals are shipped. Derry v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 212 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's interpretation of a conditional use permit for a "tourist park" as not allowing placement of mobile homes within the approved "tourist park," as that term is defined by the local code, is reasonable and correct. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of a code "compatibility" standard as not requiring consideration of "view impacts" is not "clearly wrong" and will be sustained by LUBA. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body may interpret a code conditional use standard requiring that a proposed use have minimal adverse impacts compared to the impacts of development "permitted outright" as inapplicable in a zoning district that lists no outright permitted uses. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 178 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where local conditional use approval standards do not specifically refer to impacts on property values, but rather to compatibility with "uses" and "land use patterns" and changes in "accepted farm or forest practices" or their cost, a local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 in interpreting such standards not to require consideration of a proposed conditional use's impact on property values. Tucker v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 134 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. If a city council decision approving a subdivision does not explain how the city interprets relevant comprehensive plan and code provisions to allow a 40-foot street right-of-way, the decision must be remanded for the city council to interpret the local provisions in the first instance. Woodstock Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 146 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county governing body's interpretation that an otherwise applicable code permit standard requiring "Class I-IV soils [to] be preserved and maintained for farm use" is not applicable to land for which an exception to Statewide Planning Goal 3 (Agricultural Lands) has been adopted as part of the acknowledged county comprehensive plan, is not "clearly wrong," and is within the governing body's discretion under ORS 197.829. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 28 Or LUBA 123 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In reviewing a local government hearings officer's interpretation of a land use regulation, LUBA determines whether the interpretation is reasonable and correct. The deference to a local governing body interpretation required by ORS 197.829 does not apply to interpretations by hearings officers. Stroupe v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 107 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county does not err by interpreting a local code provision allowing "commercial or processing activities that are in conjunction with timber and farm uses," in a rural residential zone, in the same way the Oregon Supreme Court has interpreted similar language in the exclusive farm use zoning statutes. Stroupe v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 107 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer's reliance on a dictionary definition of "in conjunction with" without providing the dictionary definition relied upon is harmless error, where it is apparent from the decision that the hearings officer interpreted the code term to require establishment of a customer/seller or seller/customer relationship between the proposed commercial use and timber and farm uses in the community. Stroupe v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 107 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A hearings officer correctly construes a local code provision allowing "commercial or processing activities that are in conjunction with timber and farm uses" in the relevant rural area to require that a landscaping business' sales and purchases be primarily to customers and from suppliers that constitute timber or farm uses in the relevant rural area. Stroupe v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 107 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a particular activity is allowed as a conditional use, and is subject to criteria specifically and solely applicable to such activity, the governing body acts within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829 in determining such activity is not also subject to criteria generally applicable to conditional uses in the zone. Cole v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 62 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one of the local government's critical findings depends on the scope of the term "houseboat," and the term is not defined in the local code or in the challenged decision, the decision must be remanded for the local government to supply the needed explanation of the scope of the term. Cole v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 62 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even if a local code provision requiring that six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision be dedicated for open space is properly interpreted as a minimum rather than a maximum requirement, a decision requiring dedication of much more than six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision must be remanded so that the local government may adopt findings explaining that interpretation and showing the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard is satisfied. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city council acts within its interpretive authority under ORS 197.829 in applying a code provision as a mandatory approval standard, notwithstanding its use of the word "should." So long as the city makes it clear that it does interpret the code provision as a mandatory approval standard, it need not explain why in its decision. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. If a local government is presented with a plan or land use regulation provision that must be interpreted, and there is a reasonable interpretation that is consistent with the "state statute, land use goal or rule the comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation implements," that interpretation may not be rejected by the local government in favor of an interpretation that is inconsistent with those statutes, goals or rules. Historical Development Advocates v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 617 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where nothing in its comprehensive plan or code requires that a particular level of service be maintained at affected street intersections at all times, the local government's interpretation of its plan and code as allowing short traffic system failures for infrequent, large, special events is not clearly wrong, and LUBA will defer to it. Heine v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 571 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where ORS 215.416(3) and (11) require a county to provide an opportunity for a local appeal of a design review decision made by the planning director without a hearing, the county cannot interpret a code provision requiring that "final design review approval" has been granted to be satisfied when a local appeal of the planning director's design review approval decision is pending. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the code provides a conditional use permit does not expire if "substantial construction" has occurred, and that "substantial construction" means 10 percent of the total project value has been expended for construction authorized under a development permit, the local government erred by counting expenditures for a culvert and fill creek crossing that were made when the permits issued authorized only a bridge crossing. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government's interpretation of the term "motel," as defined by local ordinance, to include a particular development is not contrary to the express words, policy or purpose of that ordinance, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation. Kaady v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 464 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 197.307(5)(d) expresses an alternative standard that is satisfied if the exterior materials of a manufactured home either (1) are similar those commonly used on dwellings in the community, or (2) are comparable to those used on surrounding dwellings. Because local governments cannot adopt standards more restrictive than those set out in ORS 197.307(5), a city cannot interpret a local regulation implementing ORS 197.307(5)(d) as allowing it to require, in a particular instance, that a manufactured home must satisfy the second alternative. Brewster v. City of Keizer, 27 Or LUBA 432 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code's definition of "northern lot line" is ambiguous and recognizes there can be more than one northern lot line on any given piece of property, and the challenged decision determining compliance with solar access setback requirements simply contains a conclusory statement that a flag lot has only one northern lot line, LUBA will remand the decision for adoption of interpretive findings. Sullivan v. City of Ashland, 27 Or LUBA 411 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city correctly interprets code provisions for formal interpretations of its zoning code as allowing it to interpret a chapter not included in those identified in the "short title" of the zoning code, where the disputed chapter is substantively part of the zoning code and the record shows omission of the chapter was not intended. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the applicability of local comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions is ambiguous, the local government is entitled to considerable deference in determining their applicability. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government interpretation of its comprehensive plan and zoning code, that approval of a school at a particular site requires compliance with a plan policy concerning schools, is not so wrong as to be reversible under ORS 197.829, notwithstanding that the relevant zoning district lists schools as a permitted use at the subject site. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is reasonable to expect that a local government, in applying subjective comprehensive plan and code provisions, will include interpretive findings in its final decision. The parties to such local proceedings should know to include arguments concerning proper interpretation of such provisions in their presentations. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision does not explicitly state the requirements listed thereunder for a complete development application are "jurisdictional," the local government's interpretation of the code provision as imposing procedural rather than jurisdictional requirements is not inconsistent with the express words, purpose or policy of the code and, therefore, must be affirmed. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government acts within the interpretive discretion afforded by ORS 197.829 in finding a code requirement for a statement of the nature of the applicant's interest in the subject property is satisfied where the application states the applicant is the "future property owner" and there is evidence in the record that the applicant has acquired or will acquire the property. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where consistency with the city's "short term parking strategy" is a code requirement, a city cannot determine its "short term parking strategy" is something that underlies various provisions of its plan and code and cannot announce that strategy for the first time in a decision on a permit application. This violates the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit standards and criteria themselves must be set out in the city's development ordinances. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government relies on conditions to ensure that use of an approved parking structure is limited to "short term parking," as required by its code, any interpretations of code provisions necessary to support its determination that the code limitation to "short term parking" is satisfied must be set out in the challenged decision or supporting findings, not in the local government's brief. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Although the substance of particular objections by neighbors may lead to a conclusion that one or more local code adjustment criteria are violated, the fact that one or more neighbors object has no legal significance. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Petitioners' allegations that an applicant cannot simultaneously seek the benefit of two separate local code provisions allowing deviations from code height and setback requirements provide no basis for reversal or remand, where nothing in the code precludes seeking approval under both provisions. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government is within its interpretive discretion in counting an access driveway separated by a median into two one-way driveways as two access points, for purposes of satisfying the number of access points required by the local code. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 27 Or LUBA 243 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That other inapplicable sections of the local code permit one-way driveways with a minimum 15-foot pavement width provides no basis for allowing 15-foot wide paved driveways where the applicable code section unambiguously requires a 24-foot pavement width. Such an interpretation is clearly wrong, and exceeds the local government's interpretive discretion. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 27 Or LUBA 243 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under ORS 197.829(4), if a comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation is clearly designed to implement a statewide planning goal or goals, a local government may not interpret such a plan provision or land use regulation in a manner inconsistent with the goals it implements. DLCD v. City of Donald, 27 Or LUBA 208 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a Transitional Timber zone provides that uses of land "not specifically mentioned" in that zone are prohibited, and the principal uses permitted outright in the zone are resource and resource-related uses, not commercial uses, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation that the zone does not allow parking, storage and maintenance of a commercial truck. Watson v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 164 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision requires that effects on an area's "appearance and function" be determined based specifically on factors set out in that provision, a local government may interpret the code provision to be satisfied by a determination based solely on those factors, even if the code also provides that words have their "normal dictionary meaning," and the dictionary definitions of "appearance" and "function" suggest additional factors are relevant. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 106 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides that nonconforming use rights are lost if the site of a nonconforming use is "vacant" for two continuous years, and also provides that words used in the code have their normal dictionary meaning, the local government may interpret "vacant" to mean "free from activity" consistent with the nonconforming use rights, but cannot embellish that definition by adding a requirement for the absence of "a bona fide effort to provide goods and services for profit." Rhine v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 86 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to local government decisions giving different interpretations to the same language appearing in different sections of its code, where there are related code provisions that provide some justification for the different construction of such identical code language. Zippel v. Josephine County, 27 Or LUBA 11 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA is not required to remand a decision for a local government interpretation of its code, where the interpretive issue raised by petitioner is so untenable that LUBA can reject it without an authoritative determination by the local decision maker. Towry v. City of Lincoln City, 26 Or LUBA 554 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government interpretation of its sign ordinance that regardless of whether a sign is an awning, fascia or other sign type, it is subject to certain measurement requirements, is not contrary to the express words, policy or context of the ordinance, and LUBA will defer to it. Heath Northwest, Inc. v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 535 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. 1993 Oregon Laws, chapter 792, section 43, codifies Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), with the exception that LUBA is not required to defer to a local government's interpretation of its regulations if that interpretation is contrary to a state statute, statewide planning goal or administrative rule which the regulations implement. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of its code provisions on farm dwellings is within the interpretive discretion afforded local governments by Clark v. Jackson County and 1993 Oregon Laws, chapter 792, section 43, so long as its interpretation does not provide less protection to EFU-zoned land than what ORS 215.283(1)(f) and OAR 660-05-030(4) provide. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under Oregon Laws 1993, chapter 792, section 43(4), LUBA is not required to affirm a local government's interpretation of its own code provision if that interpretation is "contrary to a state statute, land use goal or [administrative] rule that the [code provision] implements." Pacific Rivers Council, Inc. v. Lane County, 26 Or LUBA 323 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision does not identify the characteristics of a proposed "soil remediation" use, or compare those characteristics with those of the listed, permitted uses in the applicable zone, the findings are inadequate to demonstrate the proposed "soil remediation" use is similar to the listed, permitted uses in the applicable zone. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. It is impermissible for a local government to amend a land use ordinance or comprehensive plan provision in the guise of interpreting either. Murphy Citizens Advisory Comm. v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 181 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code defines an accessory use or structure as one which is subordinate to and serves a principal structure or principal use, a local government is within its interpretive discretion under Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), to require that the principal use or structure exist before an accessory structure or use may be approved. McPeek v. Coos County, 26 Or LUBA 165 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners raised an issue below concerning whether a particular code provision is an applicable approval standard, and the challenged decision contains no interpretation explaining that code provision is either inapplicable or satisfied, LUBA must remand the challenged decision. Hixson v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 159 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government cannot simply conclude its failure to list shopping centers as a permitted or conditional use in any existing zoning district creates an ambiguity and, on that basis, determine it will allow shopping centers as a conditional use in a particular zoning district. Such an action constitutes improperly amending the zoning ordinance in the guise of interpreting it. Loud v. City of Cottage Grove, 26 Or LUBA 152 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government decision that a shopping center may be allowed in a particular zone under code "similar use" provisions must (1) express an interpretation of the "similar use" provisions that is adequate for LUBA review, (2) actually apply the interpretation adopted, and (3) explain how the decision is consistent with that interpretation. Loud v. City of Cottage Grove, 26 Or LUBA 152 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners contend certain information required by the local code "prior to the approval of subdivisions" must be in the record at the time of tentative plat approval, and the challenged tentative plat approval decision does not interpret the local code with regard to at what stage of the subdivision approval process the required information must be submitted to the county, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret its code in the first instance. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 26 OR LUBA 139 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where allowing a proposed commercial use in an industrial zone requires a finding that the proposed use is incompatible with the existing commercial area, the relevant inquiry is whether the proposed use is compatible with development in the existing commercial area, not whether it is consistent with the commercial zone or uses allowed in that zone. O'Neal v. Deschutes County, 26 Or LUBA 126 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code imposes limitations on "shopping complexes," a local government approving a commercial use may not simply conclude that that those limitations do not apply, where the issue of the applicability of the shopping complex limitations is raised during local proceedings. O'Neal v. Deschutes County, 26 Or LUBA 126 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government may interpret a local subdivision approval standard requiring that each lot have "an adequate quantity and quality of water to support the proposed use of the land" as not requiring consideration of the impacts of providing water to the subdivision lots on the water supplies of adjacent properties. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Local code provisions which simply allow increased density for controlled income and rent housing do not eliminate the requirement that such housing comply with other requirements of the local code. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where LUBA remands a local government decision for an interpretation of ambiguous code provisions, and no appeal is taken from LUBA's determination concerning the code's ambiguity, petitioner is barred from arguing before LUBA that the disputed code provision is unambiguous, in an appeal from the local decision on remand. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 9 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation of a code requirement, that a PUD tentative plan covering a portion of property under single ownership be accompanied by a statement proving the entire property can be developed and used in accord with code standards, as requiring that the PUD not render the remainder of the property undevelopable. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 9 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government may interpret its code requirement for a "description" of the subject property showing "access" not to require a final legal determination concerning the existence of access adequate to serve the proposed use, where the subject property is served by a disputed easement. Only the circuit court can provide a final legal determination concerning the nature and scope of a disputed easement. Mohler v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 1 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a proposed paintball game park could be allowed as a "private recreation use" in a commercial zone does not mean it cannot be allowed as a "park" in an EFU zone. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation of "park," as used in a provision of its zoning ordinance, need not be consistent with a definition of "park areas" in a separate ordinance establishing administrative regulations for the use of parks owned or controlled by the local government. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires certain nonresidential conditional uses in an EFU zone to be "a principal use of the property," it is within a local government's discretion to interpret this phrase to apply only to the portion of the property on which the conditional use will be located, and to require that the proposed use be more than a strictly personal use of the property owner. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a church is proposed to be located in an EFU zone, and a county code provision requires that there be "no other feasible location" for the proposed use that satisfies a code standard requiring that certain nonfarm uses in the EFU zone be located on land "generally unsuitable" for farm use, the county may interpret the code provision to require that there be no other feasible location for the propose church in the EFU zone that is generally unsuitable for agricultural production. Simmons v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 647 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code provision requires that there be no other "feasible location" for a proposed church, and the challenged decision establishes that there is a present need for the proposed church, the county is within its discretion to interpret "feasible location" not to include sites that are not currently available for sale. Simmons v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 647 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Notwithstanding that LUBA may prefer a different interpretation of local code provisions, where the local decision maker's interpretation of the local code is not internally inconsistent and not clearly wrong, LUBA will defer to it. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 625 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision contains an interpretation of the local code that a particular standard is inapplicable to the proposed development, and that interpretation is not clearly contrary to the express words, policy or context of the local code, LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An interpretation of local code provisions, that the local appeal time runs from the date the decision is mailed to parties, is not clearly wrong, and LUBA will defer to it. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code approval standard for home occupations in a resource zone requires that a home occupation be "situated upon generally unsuitable land for the production of farm and forest products," the local government may interpret the standard to require that the entire property on which the home occupation is proposed to be located be "generally unsuitable." Smith v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 568 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the challenged decision includes contradictory findings regarding compliance with an applicable local code approval standard, LUBA cannot interpret the standard itself, but rather must remand the decision to the local government to interpret the standard in the first instance. Larson v. Wallowa County, 25 Or LUBA 537 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code states that "failure to comply with this subsection shall be a jurisdictional defect," and a local appellant fails to establish compliance with that subsection, the local government is free to interpret its code to require dismissal of the local appeal, and LUBA will defer to that interpretation. DLCD v. Wasco County, 25 Or LUBA 529 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code does not either specifically prohibit or allow the filing of appeals and appeal fees by facsimile, it is not "clearly wrong" for the local government to determine that a local appeal is not properly filed under the local code where both appeal fees and the appeal document itself are filed by facsimile. DLCD v. Wasco County, 25 Or LUBA 529 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A county may reasonably interpret the term "existing commercial farm enterprises" in a code provision establishing a minimum lot size standard for farm dwellings, as not including property that is not presently operated as part of a commercial farm operation. Giesy v. Benton County, 25 Or LUBA 493 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county code requires the "farm unit" on which a farm dwelling is proposed to be located to be consistent with the size of existing commercial farm enterprises in the area, and also recognizes that commercial farms may be composed of several separate management units, it is reasonable for the county to interpret "farm unit" to include all land that is part of a farm operation, including land in different locations. Giesy v. Benton County, 25 Or LUBA 493 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a farm dwelling approval standard in a local code requires a county to consider the median size of commercial farms in a specific area, as reported by certain government agencies or "other similar source," it is within the county's discretion to interpret the "other similar source" provision to allow it to consider relevant evidence from the county planning department, county assessor's office or other reliable sources. Giesy v. Benton County, 25 Or LUBA 493 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government determination that occasionally staying on the subject property in a travel trailer is not residential use of the property for purposes of determining whether a nonconforming residential use has been "discontinued," is not a clearly wrong interpretation of the code, and LUBA will defer to it. Cemper v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 486 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code chapter prohibiting vegetation disturbance in certain areas allows activities authorized by a land use decision made before the effective date of the chapter, the local government may interpret the code to allow activities authorized under a newly amended PUD development plan, if those same activities where authorized under an original PUD development plan approved prior to the effective date of the code chapter. Gage v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 449 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that home occupations occupy no more than 1000 square feet of an accessory building, an interpretation of that provision as excluding portions of the accessory building used to access the part of the accessory building used for the home occupation makes full use of the local government's interpretative discretion. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code defines "traveler's accommodations" to include an establishment rented to travelers for a fee, on a daily or weekly basis, and the local government interprets that code definition as not excluding cabins that are occupied by owners for less than 36 days per year, such an interpretation is not clearly contrary to the local code, and LUBA will defer to it. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 25 Or LUBA 411 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A permit approval condition that amendments to the approved master plan must be approved by the planning department is not inconsistent with, and does not eliminate, the right established by the local code to appeal a decision by the planning director on such an administrative action to the planning commission. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision requiring that "consideration * * * be given to [certain specified] factors" does not establish mandatory approval standards for local government decisions, but rather merely lists "factors" which the local government must consider. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code expresses an intent not to duplicate state mobile home park approval standards, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation that the state approval standard in ORS 446.100(1)(a) is not part of the "applicable Oregon Law," which the code requires to be considered in making permit decisions. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a local government may have, in the past, erroneously interpreted its ordinances as not requiring a public hearing, does not require that the local government perpetuate that error. McInnis v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 376 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision governing notice of decisions on a certain type of land use action does not expressly provide it applies only to a decision by the planning director, LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation that the code provision also applies to a decision by the hearings officer on appeal from a decision by the planning director. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where one code provision requires a local government's notice of decision to identify the local appeal fee, and another provision states that failure to pay the proper local appeal fee prior to expiration of the period for filing an appeal constitutes a "jurisdictional" defect, the local government may interpret the two code provisions together to mean that the period for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the required notice of decision, identifying the proper appeal fee, is provided to the appealing party. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code allows approval of a rural planned development (RPD) "in conjunction with" a land division, and establishes comprehensive standards for RPDs, including standards for lot line adjustments in an approved RPD, the local government's interpretation of a code provision allowing revisions to an approved land division as giving it authority to approve lot line adjustments in an approved RPD which are not otherwise allowable under the RPD provisions, is clearly wrong. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Local code requirements that floodplain alterations for a driveway be in the public interest and meet some public need or public convenience are satisfied by determinations that (1) there is a public need for, and public interest in, the provision of housing; (2) the subject property is zoned for residential use; and (3) there is a need for, and a public interest in, the provision of access to the property to enable residential use. Clarke v. City of Hillsboro, 25 Or LUBA 195 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code requires that the subject property be reasonably suited for the "use proposed," a local government does not err by determining the suitability of the entire parcel for the proposed use and not just the site of the proposed residence. Clarke v. City of Hillsboro, 25 Or LUBA 195 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA is limited to considering the interpretations of ambiguous code language that are adopted by the decision-making body and may not consider interpretations that are not adopted by the decision maker, even if the offered interpretation is reasonable. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government interpretation of a local code provision which prohibits direct access to major collectors by commercial, industrial and institutional uses with more than 150 feet of frontage as not applying to proposed residential subdivisions with more than 150 feet of frontage is reasonable. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under a local code standard requiring that arterial streets not "penetrate identifiable neighborhoods," LUBA will defer to the local government's determination of what constitutes an identifiable neighborhood, unless the local government's determination is clearly wrong. Mannenbach v. City of Dallas, 25 Or LUBA 136 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government determines a use does not fit neatly into any of the available definitional categories in its code, but provides a reasonable explanation for categorizing the use according to its primary use, LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government correctly determines that a parking lot is a nonconforming use, and was not automatically made an approved conditional use under applicable code provisions, it commits no error in failing to apply plan and code provisions that would apply to expansion of the parking lot if it were correctly viewed as a conditional use. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code includes an exception to the term "wetland" for wetlands created by "human activity as part of an approved development project," and there is no dispute that the subject wetland was created with the knowledge and consent of the local government, it is clearly wrong for the local government to fail to consider whether the wetland is within the local code exception. Annett v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 111 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's interpretation that a local code standard requiring a determination concerning the adequacy of schools "existing or planned for the area" is satisfied by findings that there is unspent money in a school district's budget, is an interpretation of the local code that is "clearly wrong." Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 25 Or LUBA 43 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government may interpret the term "processing of aggregate," as used in an industrial zoning district of its code, to include asphalt plants, even though the code language was adopted at a time when LUBA had interpreted similar language in the EFU statute not to include asphalt plants. O'Mara v. Douglas County, 25 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government is within its interpretive discretion in interpreting the term "development" as including farming, where the code defines the term broadly and includes a nonexclusive list of examples of development that includes "site alteration such as * * * grading * * * or clearing." Trumper v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 552 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government interprets its own enactments in a way that is inconsistent with the express terms of a local provision, and there is at least one plausible interpretation of the disputed provision that is consistent with its express terms, LUBA will not defer to the local government's interpretation. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 24 Or LUBA 540 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A requirement in a local code that development be "consistent" with comprehensive plan policies and standards, is a general requirement that does not transform otherwise nonmandatory plan standards into approval standards. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 24 Or LUBA 540 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Local ordinances governing when a local decision becomes final are effective only to the extent they do not conflict with state statutes. A Storage Place v. City of Tualatin, 24 Or LUBA 637 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where LUBA must determine whether an ambiguous code provision (i.e., one that is capable of more than one sustainable interpretation) is applicable to a challenged decision, and the challenged decision does not contain a reviewable interpretation of that provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret the provision in the first instance. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where petitioners contend a local government erred in failing to apply a code provision to the challenged decision, and the decision contains no interpretation of that code provision, but the code language unambiguously establishes that the provision in question is not applicable to the challenged decision, LUBA is not required to remand the decision so the local government can interpret its code in the first instance. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where under certain provisions of a local enactment, consideration of the geologic stability of the subject site would be relevant to the conditional use permit approval process, but other code provisions create a separate geologic hazard review process that may be initiated at any time prior to or in conjunction with filing an application for any required local permit, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation that it is not required to address geologic stability as part of the conditional use permit process. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government determines an application for a home occupation on a parcel adjoining another parcel on which an earlier application for the same home occupation was denied, is an application for a "substantially similar" use, LUBA will defer to that interpretation of the local code requirement that an application may not be "substantially similar" to a previously denied application. Roozenboom v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 433 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provision is capable of more than one rational interpretation, and the code provision was adopted to implement an LCDC administrative rule, consideration of the context and purpose of the administrative rule is relevant in determining the meaning of the code provision. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code does not allow new dwellings as a permitted use in a particular zone, but allows "maintenance, repair or replacement of existing dwellings" as a permitted use in that zone, lawfully established existing dwellings are not nonconforming uses in that zone. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA may not interpret a local code in the first instance, but rather must review a local government's interpretation of its code. However, a local government interpretation of its code must be adequate for LUBA's review and may not consist of a mere conclusory statement. DLCD v. Crook County, 24 Or LUBA 393 (1993).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of a statutory policy pertaining to forestlands that, like the statutory policy concerning EFU land, requires the preservation of forestland in large blocks, LUBA cannot require that a local government interpret and apply its nonforest use "generally unsuitable" land approval standard in the same manner as the similarly worded statutory standard pertaining to nonfarm uses on EFU land. DLCD v. Coos County, 24 Or LUBA 349 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires a proposed nonforest dwelling site to be on land generally unsuitable for forest uses, that standard can be interpreted to mean either that the proposed nonforest dwelling site itself, or that the entire forest parcel, must be generally unsuitable for forest uses. LUBA will defer to the local government's choice between those permissible interpretations. DLCD v. Coos County, 24 Or LUBA 349 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA is required to defer to a local government's interpretation of its zoning ordinance, so long as the proffered interpretation is not "clearly contrary to the enacted language," or "inconsistent with express language of the ordinance or its apparent purpose or policy." Tylka v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 296 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code identifies RV camping facilities as one type of service recreational facility, and certain zones specifically list RV camping facilities as a conditional use, whereas other zones list only service recreational facilities in general, the other zones simply allow a broader range of service recreational facilities, including RV camping facilities. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 296 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The code provision that was in effect when the application for a variance was filed, and which states a variance "shall become void after the expiration of one (1) year if no substantial construction has taken place," must be interpreted and applied when the local government determines whether a previously approved variance remains valid. Todd v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 289 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code provision states that tree protection is a proper Justification for approval of a proposed setback reduction, the local government's interpretation that the provision allows it to approve a setback reduction to protect a particular tree, even though the setback reduction will result in the destruction of another tree, is not clearly contrary to the express terms of the code and LUBA will defer to the interpretation. Barker v. City of Cannon Beach, 24 Or LUBA 221 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that one of several considerations must be "achieved" to approve a setback reduction request, and there are adequate findings that one of those considerations is achieved, it provides no basis for reversal or remand that other considerations may not also be achieved. Barker v. City of Cannon Beach, 24 Or LUBA 221 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where abutting property is already developed and there is no pending development application for abutting property, a local code requirement that a proposed setback reduction not substantially reduce the privacy "which is or will be enjoyed" by abutting property owners is satisfied by an analysis of the current uses, activities and characteristics of developed abutting property. Barker v. City of Cannon Beach, 24 Or LUBA 221 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code requires that a stream corridor and buffer zone be established prior to development of property, once the corridor and buffer zone are established by the local government as part of a minor partition decision, it is unnecessary for the local government to reexamine those boundaries in order to issue building and tree cutting permits for parcels created by the partition. Forest Highlands Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 24 Or LUBA 215 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a parcel was created by deed, at a time when the local government interpreted its partitioning regulations to be inapplicable to parcels created in that manner, the local government may subsequently determine that a permit application complies with a code requirement that a proposed use be on a "parcel," without reexamining the applicability of its partitioning regulations when the parcel was created. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation of its code so long as the proffered interpretation is not "clearly contrary to the enacted language," or "inconsistent with express language of the ordinance or its apparent purpose or policy." An interpretation of a local code provision to require that in order to be recognized as separately developable, a parcel must have been in separate ownership on a particular date, is not "clearly contrary" to the terms of, or "inconsistent with the express language" or "apparent purpose or policy" of, the code provision. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides that a conditional use permit expires one year after it is approved, unless construction occurs demonstrating the CUP has been "used," and where the code also prohibits the local government from issuing building or other permits required for construction until appeals have been "completed," the running of the one year period for "using" a conditional use permit is tolled during those periods of time when a building or other permit necessary to "use" the conditional use permit cannot properly be issued due to an appeal. Weeks v. City of Tillamook, 24 Or LUBA 155 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides that a land use permit "shall be valid for * * * one year after the date of approval," it is not inconsistent with the language, purpose or policy of the code to interpret the one-year period during which a permit remains valid to exclude time when the permittee is prevented from carrying out the permit due to a stop work order issued by the local government. Schob v. Deschutes County, 24 Or LUBA 147 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In applying a zone change criterion requiring that there be an error in "the zoning adopted for the area," the appropriate focus is on the time and circumstances under which the existing zoning of the area was applied. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That different zoning may provide additional flexibility in developing property provides no basis for finding there was an error in applying the existing zoning to the property. Recht v. City of Depoe Bay, 24 Or LUBA 129 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government interprets a code requirement that all functions associated with a proposed use take place "within the building" proposed to house the use to be satisfied, where a covered play area will be part of the total "floor area" of such building, its interpretation of the code is not inconsistent with the code's express language, purpose or policy and, therefore, must be affirmed. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 98 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of a connection between a local code requirement that a "letter of intent" to share tower space be recorded and another code requirement concerning "substantial construction," the failure to record a "letter of intent" does not mean that construction actually completed pursuant to building permits may not be considered in determining whether the "substantial construction" requirement is met. Columbia River Television v. Multnomah County, 24 Or LUBA 82 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of a code requirement to the contrary, a provision in a local code authorizing the development of a parcel to proceed to completion so long as "substantial construction" occurs within a certain period of time does not require the application of a traditional vested rights analysis. Columbia River Television v. Multnomah County, 24 Or LUBA 82 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code allows recycling and other incidental uses, LUBA will defer to a local government interpretation of the code as allowing a recycling facility that accepts waste material including both solid waste and recyclable material, where approximately 70 percent of the material accepted will be recycled and approximately 30 percent will be disposed of at a landfill. Linebarger v. City of The Dalles, 24 Or LUBA 91 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code or plan provision prohibiting uses in certain areas of a jurisdiction, where those uses would otherwise be permissible under the base zoning district, does not create an implied authorization for the prohibited uses in areas of the jurisdiction not covered by the prohibition. Goose Hollow Foothills League v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 69 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. The existence of overlapping prohibitions in a local code does not provide a sufficient basis for creating an exception to one of the overlapping prohibitions that has no basis in the language of the code. Goose Hollow Foothills League v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 69 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code provides that changes having significant impacts are major PUD amendments, and lists categories of changes that might result in significant impacts, whether a proposed amendment falls within a category on the list is not in itself determinative of whether the amendment is major. Because the categories are not independent bases for identifying a major amendment, a determination that a proposed PUD amendment is not major need not be supported by findings addressing each category. Gage v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 47 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code provision requiring the existence of legal access is satisfied by an existing access easement, notwithstanding that portions of the existing driveway are located outside the easement. Mercer v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 608 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the purposes of a county's commercial zones are to provide for retail-oriented needs in areas characterized by good transportation services, and such needs and services are not identified with a particular proposed golf course, the county's interpretation of its own ordinance that the golf course is not a commercial use is not inconsistent with express language of the local ordinance or the ordinance's apparent purpose or policy and will be affirmed. West v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 558 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county code contains a general PUD provision stating that individual lot size in PUDs is unrestricted, but is subsequently amended to include a prohibition against "flexible lot size developments" in a particular zone, the code is correctly interpreted to prohibit PUDs which would create individual lots smaller than the minimum lot size required by that particular zone. Niedermeyer v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 380 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code provides that a conflict between the requirements of a base zone and an overlay zone are to be resolved in favor of the overlay zone, that a base zone permits a particular industrial use outright does not prohibit the local government from denying such a use on the basis of the requirements of the overlay zone. Seger v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 334 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city decision which approves an application by a county for an RV campground, but limits the approval to "a 'public' campground and to the applicant, a public entity," satisfies the city code definition of "public use" as a "use owned or operated by a public, governmental or nonprofit organization * * *." Hydes v. City of John Day, 23 Or LUBA 313 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone, considering the importance of such uses to the citizenry or the economy of the area," requires that the local government adequately identify and justify the area selected for the required analysis. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone," is not satisfied by findings that there is a need for rural housing on 2.5-acre lots where there is no attempt to explain why the rural housing need cannot be satisfied on vacant rural land zoned to allow rural residential development with 1- and 5-acre minimum lot sizes. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring that there be a "need for the particular uses allowed by the requested zone, considering the importance of such uses to the citizenry or the economy of the area," is not met where the findings simply assume the importance of rural housing to the citizenry or economy of the area. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local zoning map amendment standard requiring demonstration of a need to rezone property for rural residential development is not satisfied where the record shows a significant amount of vacant property currently zoned to allow such rural residential development. The local government may not assume such land is not "available" for rural residential development simply because it is not currently listed for sale. Friedman v. Yamhill County, 23 Or LUBA 306 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In the absence of specific plan or code provisions to the contrary, a local code provision providing that single family dwellings are permitted uses in a "Recreational Residential" zone permits the short-term rental of such dwellings. Brogoitti v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 247 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code zone change approval standard requires there be a "demand" for the "uses listed in the proposed zone at the proposed location," and the code also requires consideration of "the public interest" in allowing the zone change and the "availability of other appropriate[ly] zoned property," the desire of an individual property owner for a particular use on a particular parcel is not sufficient, in and of itself, to constitute a "demand." DLCD v. Clatsop County, 23 Or LUBA 173 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where local code provisions governing appeals state the governing body may "affirm, reverse or modify in whole or in part, any decision * * * of the planning commission," the code does not limit the governing body's scope of review to issues raised in the notice of appeal of a planning commission decision. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 23 Or LUBA 159 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code jurisdictional requirement that the local appeal document, which under the code includes the required appeal fee, be "signed" but which does not state where such signature must be located, is satisfied by the local appellant's signature on his personal check submitted as the filing fee. Breivogel v. Washington County, 23 Or LUBA 143 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision that requires the planning commission to conduct a site review of certain proposed developments, but which establishes no separate procedure for site review, does not prevent a city council decision approving a conditional use permit for the proposed development from being a final land use decision appealable to LUBA, even though the planning commission never conducted such site review. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Seaside, 23 Or LUBA 100 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code approval standard requiring that a farm dwelling be located on a parcel "planted in perennials capable of producing upon harvest, an average of at least 10,000 dollars in gross annual income" does not require that the site be capable of producing the required income, but rather that the perennials planted on the site be capable of producing, upon harvest, the required income. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 23 Or LUBA 85 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code standard requires a determination that there is a demonstrated need for a proposed golf course "which outweighs the need for, or benefits of, the existing or potential farm or forest use," the county correctly applied that standard by determining even though there is a need for more golf courses in the county, the value of the property for farmland outweighs that need. Barber v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 71 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government elects to limit the length of cul-de-sac streets, it may also establish how the length of such streets is to be measured. However, where no particular method of measuring the length of cul-de-sac streets is specified in its land use regulations, the local government must determine length applying the regulations as they are written and applying the plain and ordinary meaning of the operative term "length." Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under applicable city land use regulation definitions and general understanding the length of a cul-de-sac street is measured to the end of whatever turnaround is provided; not to the point at which the right-of-way widens to accommodate the turnaround. Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code standard requires that a certain "overall residential density" be maintained in sensitive big game habitat areas, but does not provide how "overall residential density" is to be determined, the standard is reasonably interpreted to require that the specified residential density be maintained on the property that is the subject of the development application. Sterling Mine Properties v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 18 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code employs the terms "necessary for and accessory to," as a standard for farm dwellings in a mixed farm/forest zone, and where that standard appears to have been adopted to comply with Goal 4, it is appropriate to interpret the ordinance standard in a manner consistent with the interpretation of those terms in the context of Goal 4. Tipperman v. Union County, 22 Or LUBA 775 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local government interprets the phrase "necessary for and accessory to" in the local code as requiring only a showing that a proposed dwelling is convenient to the continuation of the resource use of the property, such interpretation is incorrect. Tipperman v. Union County, 22 Or LUBA 775 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A subdivision ordinance standard requiring that cut and fill slopes not exceed one foot vertically to two feet horizontally "unless physical conditions demonstrate the propriety of other standards" allows two means of compliance. The local government may find either that the 2-to-1 slope limit will be met, or that physical conditions make a different slope standard proper. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a conditional use permit approval standard in an EFU zone requires that there be "no other feasible location for the proposed use," the term "feasible location" does not mean "ideal location," but rather a location which is capable of being used for the proposed use. Simmons v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 759 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a conditional use permit approval standard in an EFU zone requires that there be "no other feasible location for the proposed use," the price of land at an alternative site is not justification for finding that site infeasible, in the absence of evidence that the price is unreasonable for a site for the proposed use. Simmons v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 759 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Even though a county decision suggests it interprets its zoning ordinance to limit forest dwellings to those necessary for and accessory to commercial forest management, such a narrow interpretation provides no basis for reversal or remand where the county also found the proposed dwelling is not necessary for and accessory to other forest uses argued by petitioners. Dodd v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 711 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A forest zoning district purpose and intent section providing that the zone is for forest related uses and "other compatible uses," does not allow approval of a use solely upon a showing the use will be compatible with forest uses, where subsequent sections of the zoning district identify allowable uses and establish standards for their approval. Dodd v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 711 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code criterion requiring that a request for land use approval be in the "public interest" does not require that the local government determine whether denial of the request would constitute a taking of private property without just compensation in violation of Article I, section 18, of the Oregon Constitution or the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Dodd v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 711 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 215.296(1), and identical local code provisions, require that a county consider the impacts of a proposed nonfarm use on all "surrounding lands devoted to farm or forest use," whether that use is commercial or noncommercial. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 22 Or LUBA 673 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a proposed residential detoxification facility will take blood pressure and body temperature of potential admittees, but will refuse to admit anyone in need of medical attention and will not provide any medication or medical treatment on site, a local government's determination that the proposed facility will provide "primarily" health care is erroneous as a matter of law. Harmony House, Inc. v. City of Salem, 22 Or LUBA 629 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code explicitly provides that antennae are usually required to be above roof level, and the only function a tower serves is to elevate antennae sufficiently above roof level so they may receive and transmit signals in conjunction with ground-based processing equipment, the tower falls within the code exemption from building height requirements for "appurtenances usually required to be placed above the roof level." Greenlees v. Yamhill County, 22 Or LUBA 604 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A comprehensive plan standard establishing a minimum building site requirement of one acre is not inconsistent with plan and code requirements that subdivision lots in a zoning district allowing development at a density of one unit per five acres be clustered to provide not less than 30 percent common open space. Such a plan standard simply sets a minimum area requirement for each clustered lot. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code definition of common open space as space to be "used, maintained and enjoyed by the owners and occupants of the individual building units" does not require that for all common open space the owners and occupants have physical access to "use" such common open space. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Absent zoning ordinance provisions to the contrary, a PUD preliminary master plan approval is a "development permit" and where the zoning ordinance requires that an environmental assessment "be filed prior to the issuance of any development permit," it is error to approve a PUD preliminary master plan prior to the filing of the required environmental assessment. Gerl v. City of Lincoln City, 22 Or LUBA 512 (1992).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code defines public facilities to include public schools, and contains a standard requiring that conditional uses be timely considering the adequacy of public facilities, the local government must determine that at the time the proposed development will occur public schools will be adequate to serve the proposed development. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code establishes specific requirements for applications for mobile home parks, and also requires that the site plan for a proposed conditional use include information specifically required by the code for the proposed use, a conditional use permit application for a mobile home park must also include the information required for applications for mobile home parks. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. An acknowledged zoning ordinance provision concerning division of EFU-zoned farm parcels providing that "evaluation shall include the subject property and commercial agricultural enterprises located in the same zone within one-half mile of the subject property" is properly interpreted as identifying the minimum area to be evaluated, and areas beyond a one-half-mile radius may have to be evaluated to establish the nature of the existing commercial agricultural enterprise in the area. Still v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 331 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code establishes a "two-step" process for approving PUDs which requires that (1) preliminary development plan approval be granted only if the PUD will fulfill all applicable code requirements, and (2) final development plan approval be granted if the final plan complies with the preliminary plan and any conditions imposed thereon, the local government has created a PUD master plan approval process which governs all further aspects of the PUD development process. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision establishing general approval criteria for nonlegislative zone changes does not apply to changes in overlay zone boundaries which are controlled by comprehensive plan inventory maps identifying the location and physical characteristics of certain types of resource areas. Gray v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 270 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where there appear to be conflicting code provisions such that a code approval criterion has the effect of nullifying another code provision which specifically allows a use subject to that approval criterion, the local government should first consider whether the code standard is sufficiently ambiguous that it can be interpreted in a manner that avoids the conflict. If the code can be interpreted to avoid the conflict, that interpretation should be adopted. Waker Assoc., Inc. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 233 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Whether the provisions of a zoning ordinance "purpose" section are approval criteria for individual land use decisions depends on the wording of the specific provisions and their context. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 166 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Whether a proposed sewage treatment facility will produce odors is a relevant consideration in determining compliance with a local conditional use permit standard requiring findings that the "location, size, design, and operation are compatible with and will not adversely affect the livability or appropriate development of abutting properties in the surrounding neighborhood." Sitsler v. City of Mill City, 22 Or LUBA 125 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code does not contain a specific purpose statement for a zoning district, determining a proposed conditional use is similar to, and produces no significant impacts different from those produced by, uses permitted outright in the zoning district is a correct means of determining compliance with a code requirement that a conditional use be in harmony with the purpose and intent of the zoning district. Brandt v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 74 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A proposed subdivision's effect on groundwater availability in the area is relevant to determining compliance with a local code standard requiring that a proposal not have more than a "minimal adverse effect on livability, value and appropriate development of the area." Kirkpatrick v. Jackson County, 22 Or LUBA 3 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Whether a proposed bridge will cause waters to exceed a water overflow easement is a relevant consideration under a local code standard requiring that a proposal not have more than a "minimal adverse impact on livability, value and appropriate development of the area." Kirkpatrick v. Jackson County, 22 Or LUBA 3 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Petitioner's argument that an approved residential care facility is really a correctional facility provides no basis for remand where the code definition of residential care facility appears to be broad enough to include correctional facilities, (2) the local government found the proposal satisfies the code definition of residential care facility, and (3) petitioner does not challenge the local government's findings. Wentland v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 15 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ORS 197.763(3)(b) does not require a local government to list related code provisions as "applicable criteria" in its notice of a quasi-judicial land use hearing in order to be able to consider them in interpreting the central code provisions at issue consistently with such related code provisions. Ward v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where language used in a local ordinance corresponds to language used in a state statute or statewide planning goal, it is appropriate to interpret those ordinance provisions consistently with available authority for interpreting the relevant statute or goals. Tice v. Josephine County, 21 Or LUBA 371 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision that allows "outdoor recreation activities" on forest-zoned lands, and the identical provision used in former Goal 4 (Forest Lands), are not correctly interpreted to include a motorcycle racetrack. Tice v. Josephine County, 21 Or LUBA 371 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance definition of "motel" is broad enough to include transient housing available only to groups using a convention center, the city may properly consider such transient housing as motel units available to satisfy temporary housing demand. Hay v. City of Cannon Beach, 21 Or LUBA 364 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Local government interpretation of code to provide that parcels zoned for motel use are "available" for such use even though presently developed with single family houses, on the basis of incentive to redevelop such property due to higher financial return associated with motel use, is not wrong as a matter of law. Hay v. City of Cannon Beach, 21 Or LUBA 364 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Under a code provision requiring there be a demand for a use at the proposed location, even if a demand for the use is identified, there is no demand for the use at the proposed location if there are other appropriately zoned parcels on which the use may be built. Hay v. City of Cannon Beach, 21 Or LUBA 364 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a "commercial kennel" is defined in a local code as including "boarding" and "breeding" of dogs, such "commercial kennel" does not include a facility where up to 50 dogs are given three months of intensive training to protect their masters, and the boarding provided is incidental to such training. Greuner v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 329 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a code standard provides that the standard applies "to the establishment, maintenance, and operation of" the proposed use, a local government must determine whether the standard is met prior to granting the requested discretionary permits. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local code provision allowing a "resident" of a dwelling to conduct a home occupation does not require that such "resident" also be the owner of the dwelling in which the home occupation is to be conducted. Tarbell v. Jefferson County, 21 Or LUBA 294 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city code provision (1) requiring that certain "development * * * shall provide open space * * * approved by the city," (2) establishing a prioritized list of types of open space, and (3) providing an option to provide fees in lieu of open space, grants the city, not the developer, the option to require dedication of open space rather than a fee in lieu. Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city code provision (1) requiring that certain "development * * * shall provide open space * * * approved by the city," (2) establishing a prioritized list of types of open space, and (3) providing an option to provide fees in lieu of open space, but failing to provide standards for determining whether to require open space or fees in lieu, violates the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit decisions be governed by standards in the city's code. Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. City code provisions defining open space broadly, listing "distinctive natural areas" as first priority open space and requiring that development preserve areas for open space are properly interpreted as violated by a proposal to locate a building foundation immediately next to a specimen tree designated as a "distinctive natural area." Under such provisions, a "distinctive natural area" is not limited to the tree itself, and the code provides sufficient standards to guide the city's decision making under ORS 227.173(1). Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city code provision (1) requiring that certain "development * * * shall provide open space * * * approved by the city," and (2) establishing a prioritized list of types of open space, concluding with "other" open space, does not violate the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit decisions be governed by standards in the city's code. Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code requirement that newly created forest parcels be "large enough to permit efficient management for the production of wood fiber or other forest uses," does not require that the division be "necessary" to carry out the proposed forestry uses. DLCD v. Curry County, 21 Or LUBA 130 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A code requirement that an applicant for an "extraordinary exception" for a boathouse demonstrate "an extraordinary and unreasonable hardship which can be relieved only by allowing the intensification of use" is a stringent standard traditionally applied to requests for variances. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. That a request for approval of an extraordinary exception involves intensification of an existing use rather than a new use is unimportant where the same standards govern both new uses and intensification of existing uses. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where existing code and comprehensive plan provisions impose a higher approval standard than the local government believes is appropriate, the appropriate course is to amend the plan and code. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the language employed in the purpose statement of a code PUD chapter evidences only what the local government intends the consequences of application of the specific provisions of that PUD chapter to be, the purpose statement does not establish independent approval standards for individual PUD applications. White v. City of Oregon City, 20 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. If the local code states that certain provisions are applicable where the governing body assumes jurisdiction, on its own motion, to review a decision of a lower body, those provisions do not apply to appeals of such decisions initiated by persons other than the governing body. Adams v. Jackson County, 20 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A particular use could be both a commercial use and an institutional use where the applicable plan and land use regulations do not define "commercial use" and "institutional use" as mutually exclusive use categories. Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Plan policies that discourage, but do not preclude, location of commercial uses in residential areas, do not demonstrate that the "institutional uses" allowed in residential zoning districts cannot include "commercial uses." Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a zoning ordinance specifically lists a use as allowed in one zoning district and fails to specifically list that use in a second zoning district, but includes in the list of permitted uses in the second zoning district a more open ended category of uses, there is an "inference" that the use specifically allowed in the first zoning district is not also allowed in the second zoning district under the open ended use category. Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A local government's categorization of dance schools in its commercial zones as "Services - Amusement," while other types of schools are categorized as "Services - Educational," provides some indication that the local government does not view such schools as "private educational facilities" allowable in its residential zones. Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. "Educational facilities" and other similar terms in zoning ordinances generally are not interpreted to include facilities providing instruction in "arts, crafts or sports." Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code (1) fails to provide a definition of "educational facilities" allowable in residential districts, (2) gives no indication that an expansive meaning is intended, and (3) explicitly provides for private dance schools in commercial zoning districts, the local government's interpretation of "educational facilities" as including private dance schools is incorrect. Sarti v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 387 (1991).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the code requires certain flood standards to be applied when the county receives "an application for a use or development," and the flood standards authorize the county to deny or require redesign of a proposed development, the flood standards are applicable to approval of the initial development application. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local code lists the undefined term "commercial riding" as a use which may be conditionally permitted in a zoning district, and the general approval standards for conditional uses require that they "not significantly impact [adjoining] uses," the potential impacts of a proposed use are relevant only to compliance with the conditional use approval standard, not to determining whether the proposed use constitutes "commercial riding." Kittleson v. Lane County, 20 Or LUBA 286 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Local code provisions which regulate "public" airports, and state that "private landing strips * * * may still be subject to applicable regulations," are inapplicable to private airports, but recognize that there may be other requirements that apply to private airports. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 20 Or LUBA 246 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the code requires a proposed conditional use "be reasonably compatible with and have minimal impact on the livability * * * of abutting properties and the surrounding neighborhood," open space which can be considered a part of the neighborhood livability protected by the code is limited to officially designated open space and de facto open space that is incidental to appropriate development of property in the neighborhood. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. ALUO 18.104.040(B) requires the city to demonstrate that the proposed "development will be reasonably compatible with and have minimal impact on the livability * * * of abutting properties and the surrounding neighborhood." It does not require the city to consider whether alternative proposals or designs will be more compatible with or have less impact on the surrounding neighborhood. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code states that required determinations regarding the compatibility and impacts of proposed developments are to be based on consideration of certain listed factors, the factors are not themselves approval standards, and no one factor is conclusive. Thormahlen v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 218 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. A city may establish compliance with a code provision which specifically requires a determination of a public need before additional land may be annexed by adopting findings demonstrating that a determination of public need to annex the subject property is supported by relevant plan provisions and explaining why other relevant plan policies not supportive of such a determination may be disregarded. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. In determining whether the local government has correctly interpreted and applied the term "open space" in making the appealed decision, LUBA will apply the definitions of that term contained in the local government's comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the county code imposes a general unsuitability requirement similar to ORS 215.213(3)(d) (1977) on the approval of nonforest dwellings in a forest zone, the county did not err in finding this requirement unmet where limitations on the subject parcel's capacity for the production of forest products could be overcome if the parcel is managed in conjunction with other land and there is other land managed for forest production reasonably close to the subject parcel. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the local code states that a person may appeal to the planning commission from "a decision" made pursuant to the code by the planning director, all decisions made by the planning director, whether ministerial or discretionary, are appealable to the planning commission. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 481 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the comprehensive plan is defined as including the plan policy document, plan map, zoning map and zoning and subdivision ordinances, as well as a number of other documents, a local code provision requiring that individual land use decisions comply with the comprehensive plan is not correctly interpreted as requiring compliance with only the zoning map and zoning and subdivision ordinances. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where the applicable local code imposes no explicit requirement that the local government find a proposed golf course site to be superior to other available properties or find that there would be fewer impacts on farming practices associated with developing the proposed site as compared with other possible sites, the county did not err by failing to conduct an exhaustive alternative sites analysis. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 19 Or LUBA 404 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a county's land development ordinance provides for adoption of resolutions of intent to rezone and makes such resolutions binding commitments that the county will grant rezoning when conditions stated in such resolutions of intent to rezone are met, a resolution of intent to rezone is a final appealable decision. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Notwithstanding an ordinance provision that a resolution of intent to rezone will be void if the applicant fails to meet any condition included in the resolution, the resolution is not void where LUBA remands, pursuant to a stipulation by the parties, a subsequent decision approving a required site plan, where the resolution of intent to rezone imposes no time limit for approval of the site plan. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Compliance with a criterion that "adequate sewer [and] water * * * services will be provided" to serve a proposed destination resort requires identification of an available method for providing adequate sewage disposal and domestic water service to the proposed development that is reasonably certain to comply with applicable standards and produce the desired result. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. Where a local Greenway ordinance requires that the city "provide public access to and along the river to the maximum extent possible," the city must determine (1) its decision will provide access to the river at the location of the development, or (2) its decision will provide access to the maximum extent in view of the uses allowable at the location and the characteristics of the site. O'Brien v. City of West Linn, 18 Or LUBA 665 (1990).

30.4 Zoning Ordinances – Interpretation. County interpretation of a code "minimum" lot size standard requiring that the lot size be based on the needs of the use to impose a requirement that a golf course in an EFU zone include only the number of acres needed for the golf course is a correct interpretation of the code. Douglas v. Multnomah County, 18 Or LUBA 607 (1990).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. In determining whether proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "incidental and subordinate to existing commercial farm use of the tract" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), a county errs in relying on a comparison of the frequency of commercial events with the frequency of commercial farming activity on the property to the exclusion of any relevant circumstances, including the nature, intensity, and economic value of the respective uses, that bear on whether the existing commercial farm use remains the predominant use of the tract. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 276 (2020).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Establishing that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support the commercial farm uses or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A) is a relatively high hurdle: the county must find that the events are essential in order to maintain the existence of either the commercial farm uses on the subject property or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A demonstration that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support" an approved commercial activity in conjunction with farm use under ORS 215.283(2)(a), such as a brewery, is not sufficient to demonstrate that the events are "necessary to support" an "existing commercial farm use of the tract," such as the growing of filberts, for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), even where revenue from the brewery "supplements" revenue from the growing of filberts. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A county may not allow unlimited, successive one-year extensions of permits for residential development on resource land where state statute and regulation provide that such permits "shall be valid for four years" and that "[a]n extension" thereof "shall be valid for two years," where nothing in the legislative history suggests an intent to allow more than one extension. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 96 (2019).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a cross-petitioner seeks a remedy not available to it by statute, it is an obstacle to LUBA's review of the cross-assignment of error. LUBA lacks authority to affirm in part, and reverse in part a local government's approval of cross-petitioner's project application. ORS 197.835(1). Even assuming that the city erred by applying Willamette Greenway standards to cross-petitioner's housing project application, because they are not "clear and objective," the city's decision approving the development could not be reversed because it is not "prohibited as a matter of law." If LUBA agreed with cross-petitioners, the correct disposition would be remand, except that remand was not requested and would have no effect on the city's decision approving the application. In such a situation, LUBA will consider the request a contingent cross-assignment of error. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 79 Or LUBA 218 (2019).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A county decision determining vested rights involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land," and is therefore a "permit" decision under ORS 215.402(4). Such decisions must be processed under procedures consistent with ORS 215.416, regardless of whether a party's request for the "permit" decision is accompanied by requests for non-"permit" decisions, whether the request is labeled or easily identifiable as an "application" for a "permit," or whether the party affirmatively requests the required procedures. Gillette v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 549 (2019).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. In Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas Cty., 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009), the Court of Appeals held that Ballot Measure 49, which was approved to replace previously approved Ballot Measure 37, must be given effect and replaces Ballot Measure 37 which would otherwise apply to a particular permit application, notwithstanding the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal post statute that requires that a permit application be subject to the standards in effect when the permit application was filed. Pete's Mountain case of conflicting statutes—Ballot Measure 49 conflicted with and applied in place of the goal post statute. The holding in Pete's Mountain does not mean that new county cell tower regulations apply to a permit application that was submitted before the new cell tower regulations were adopted. In that circumstance the goal post statute applies and the new cell tower regulations do not apply, because there is no statutory conflict. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A permit approval standard that only requires a city to find that a proposed demolition is supportive of the comprehensive plan goals and policies "on balance," and only suggests six factors that "may" be considered, gives the city significant latitude in applying that approval standard. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. An applicant is not required to demonstrate that a use that is allowed outright in one zone also satisfies conditional use standards applicable in an adjoining zone by virtue of the access to that outright permitted use being located in the adjoining zone. Del Rio Vineyards, LLC v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 301 (2016).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 227.180(1)(b) authorizes city councils to provide that a decision by a hearings officer or other decision-making authority in a proceeding for discretionary permit or zone change approval is the city's final decision. But ORS 227.180(1)(b) does not authorize a city council to make a hearings officer's or other decision-making authority's decision the city's final decision concerning an application for a comprehensive plan map amendment. Housing Land Advocates v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 405 (2016).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A development code that provides that a permit is void if "conditions of a permit or approval" are not substantially or completely satisfied within two years is properly interpreted to refer to conditions of approval in the permit that are enumerated as such, and the development code need not be interpreted to require substantial or complete construction of other aspects of the development approved under the permit that are not reflected in the conditions of permit approval. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a development code requires that conditions of permit approval be satisfied within two years after the permit becomes final and provides that the permit approval is void unless the conditions of approval are satisfied "within the time period," a permit opponent's argument that the applicant may not rely on actions that were taken to satisfy the condition before the permit was approved is textually plausible. Nevertheless, where LUBA cannot identify any reason why the enactor of the code would have intended that the actions that satisfied the condition of approval must be duplicated "within the time period," LUBA will not interpret the code to impose such a requirement. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. There is no generally applicable requirement that a permit applicant must establish that construction of the use proposed in the permit application is feasible as proposed. Gould v. Deschutes County, 227 Or App 601, 206 P3d 1106 (2009), and Gould v. Deschutes County, 216 Or App 150, 171 P3d 1017 (2007), discuss the concept of "feasibility" in the context of a multiple step approval process where there is uncertainty about whether all applicable criteria are satisfied and actions will be required in the future to ensure compliance with all criteria, and neither of those cases is authority for a generally applicable "feasibility" requirement for land use permits. WKN Chopin LLC v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 1 (2012).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under ORS 215.416(3) and (11), when rendering a statutory land use permit decision, a county must provide a prior public hearing on the application, or provide notice and an opportunity for a de novo appeal after the statutory permit decision is rendered without a public hearing. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where there is uncertainty about whether a local appeal is available but the local government advises a petitioner that it will provide a local appeal, that petitioner may safely exhaust that local appeal without fear of being advised later that the deadline for appealing the decision directly to LUBA expired while the petitioner exhausted the appeal that the local government provided but later determined should not have been provided. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A decision that extends a statutory permit may itself be a statutory permit if the extension decision is governed by standards that require the exercise of discretion. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A decision that extends a statutory permit may itself be a statutory permit if the extension is a request for "approval of a proposed development of land." Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a statutory permit by local law will become void if not acted on within a stated deadline, a decision to extend the permit for an additional term under discretionary criteria is itself a statutory permit. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where local law does not require adherence to the notice and hearing or notice and local appeal procedures that apply to statutory permits, a local government does not err by adhering to those statutory notice and hearing or notice and local appeal procedures when it discovers that the decision it is being asked to adopt may qualify as a statutory permit. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Even if approving a front yard setback reduction would permit constructing a dwelling in a location that would alter the way that dwelling approval criteria will apply, if the decision granting a front yard setback does not also grant approval to construct the dwelling, the dwelling approval criteria need not be applied at the time the front yard setback is approved. Burton v. City of Cannon Beach, 63 Or LUBA 300 (2011).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a local government decision determines that the issue of whether an application for a permit complies with applicable criteria has been resolved in a prior proceeding on the permit application, the local government decision is not a decision on a "permit" as defined in ORS 215.402, because the decision does not approve development. Kersey v. Lake County, 62 Or LUBA 239 (2010).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992), where an approval criterion requires a determination that property is a legal or lawfully created parcel, the relevant question is whether any local government approvals required at the time were obtained, not whether the local government correctly applied the applicable approval criteria to create the property. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), where the applicable criteria expressly or implicitly require a determination that a unit of land proposed for development is a legal or lawfully created "parcel" under code definitions that set out several ways to create a "parcel," the relevant question is whether the unit of land was in fact created in one of the ways set out in the definition, not whether substantive or procedural errors might have been made in the process of creating the parcel. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under a code provision defining a lot or parcel as (1) a unit of land created by partition or subdivision, or (2) a unit of land under single ownership, which complies with all applicable laws at the time the lot or parcel was created, the phrase "complies with all applicable laws" modifies the immediately preceding phrase, units of land created by means other than partition or subdivision, and does not require a determination that a parcel created by partition complies with all applicable laws at the time it was created. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. In applying a land use regulation standard that only requires a service provider certification or letter, a decision maker is not obligated to ensure that every representation in a service provider's certification or letter is correct or supported by substantial evidence. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The general grant of authority in ORS 215.422(1)(c) does not impose a specific limit on local land use appeal fees, but ORS

215.416(11)(b) imposes a specific $250 dollar limit on local appeal fees that counties can charge for local appeal of a permit decision that is rendered initially without a hearing. For such appeals, the $250 dollar limit applies in place of the higher appeal fee that might otherwise be permissible under ORS 215.422(1)(c). Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 124 (2007).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 215.416(8)(a) simply requires that permit approval standards be included in a county's land use regulations. The ORS 215.416(8)(b) requirement that permit standards that apply to needed housing be "clear and objective" does not apply to permits for other kinds of development. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a hearings officer finds that a proposed subdivision complies with all approval criteria and imposes a condition of subdivision approval that requires preparation of a habitat enhancement plan at a later date, but says nothing about what procedures will be required to review and approve the habitat enhancement plan, opponent's arguments that a public hearing will be required to review and approve the habitat enhancement plan are premature. Kyle v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 399 (2006).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The fixed goal posts rule in ORS 215.427(3)(a) only applies where the county's comprehensive plan and land use regulations are acknowledged at the time the permit application is submitted. Niederhof v. Deschutes County, 48 Or LUBA 626 (2004).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A local code standard that prohibits development in wetlands does not violate the ORS 197.307(6) requirement for "clear and objective" approval standards for needed housing. Where an applicant seeks a variance to that local code prohibition against development in wetlands, ORS 197.307(6) does not prohibit application of subjective variance approval standards. Linstromberg v. City of Veneta, 47 Or LUBA 99 (2004).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A city does not err in refusing to speculate about who might ultimately prevail in a quiet title action in considering whether to approve a subdivision and whether to require provision of access to the disputed property in approving the subdivision. The city may assume that the record owner of the disputed property owns the property. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 46 Or LUBA 735 (2004).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Generally, where a civil statute of limitation is changed to shorten the limitation period, the change is applied prospectively only. But where the statute is changed to lengthen the limitation period, the change applies both prospectively and retroactively. Applying that principle to ORS 215.417, forest template dwelling permits with a two-year duration that were issued before ORS 215.417 took effect, but which had not yet expired on the date ORS 215.417 took effect, must be honored for four years. Butori v. Clatsop County, 45 Or LUBA 553 (2003).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A county commits no error in applying a zoning code requirement that a conditional use be found to be in harmony with the purpose and intent of the zone as a mandatory approval criterion where the provision expressly requires that determination. The county's identification in its notice of hearing of the chapter in which that zoning code requirement appears is sufficient to give the applicant notice of that approval criterion where the chapter is short and code requirement for a finding concerning that criterion is clear. Hick v. Marion County, 43 Or LUBA 483 (2003).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. An application to change a unified comprehensive plan and zoning map does not in itself require a "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is therefore not an application for a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.402(4). Rutigliano v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 565 (2002).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Remand is necessary where a code provision allows a single-family dwelling as a permitted use in a scenic protection zone "provided the use promotes the purpose of the zone," but the local government's decision neither determines that the proposed dwelling promotes the purpose of the zone nor explains why that requirement does not apply. Crowley v. City of Bandon, 41 Or LUBA 87 (2001).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a city code provision requires that a "proposal" to adjust development standards be reviewed for compliance with specific criteria, it is reasonable for the city to determine that the scope of the "proposal" is the adjustment proposed by the applicant and therefore that an application for a setback adjustment for a building facade does not require review of the building design as a whole. Lee v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 498 (2001).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 118 Or App 543, 848 P2d 624 (1993), the county need not inquire into the legality of parcels subject to a rezoning application, where the applicable rezoning criteria do not expressly require a "lawfully created parcel" or a "legal parcel," or impose a similar requirement of legality. Maxwell v. Lane County, 39 Or LUBA 556 (2001).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. An assignment of error that a city erred by approving a floodplain permit in the absence of a valid conditional use permit for the proposed use provides no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner fails to demonstrate that a conditional use permit for the proposed use must be obtained prior to obtaining a floodplain permit. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 39 Or LUBA 353 (2001).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a site design review criterion requires that, "wherever possible," direct driveway access to arterial streets not be allowed, and the challenged decision approves a site plan with direct driveway access onto an arterial street and a collector street without explaining why it is not possible to limit access to the collector street, the decision must be remanded. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A permit application may be approved based on adopted standards and criteria that are not yet acknowledged. However, under ORS 197.625(3), if the standards and criteria are not ultimately acknowledged, any improvements that have been made in reliance on a permit issued under the unacknowledged standards and criteria may have to be removed. Western States v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 835 (2000).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 197.625(3)(a) and 215.428(3) (1997) do not require that the county apply a land use regulation that was in effect when the permit application is filed, where the ordinance that adopted the land use regulation is appealed to LUBA and remanded before the county makes a final decision on the permit. Western States v. Multnomah County, 37 Or LUBA 835 (2000).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. An argument that a local government failed to provide adequate notice of evidence needed to satisfy applicable criteria will fail where the county's staff report interprets the code to require certain evidence and petitioner in fact provides evidence to show that the criterion, as interpreted, is satisfied. McKenney v. Deschutes County, 37 Or LUBA 685 (2000).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a county prohibits the refiling of a new or substantially similar application until two years after a final decision denying an application; the decision maker determines that a second application, filed less than a year after the first, was "substantially similar" because it involved the same use on the same property and the changes in the facts supporting the application were otherwise insufficient to demonstrate that the application is different; and the decision maker points to evidence in the record to support his conclusions, that decision is supported by substantial evidence. Munn v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where LUBA cannot determine whether the challenged decision is a "zoning classification" decision as described in ORS 227.160(2)(b), or a "permit" decision as defined by ORS 227.160(2), LUBA will remand to allow the city to make that determination. Davis v. City of Ashland, 37 Or LUBA 224 (1999).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. LUBA will not reject a substantial evidence challenge based on a code informational requirement, where the challenged decision does not interpret the code requirement as being purely informational, but, to the contrary, appears to require that the information submitted under the code provision be the kind of information a reasonable person would rely on. Baughman v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 353 (1999).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 227.178(3) provides that the standards and criteria that are in effect when a subdivision application is submitted govern approval of the subdivision application, but ORS 227.178(3) does not limit a local government's authority to adopt construction or development standards that apply after the subdivision is approved. Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139 (1998).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a previous, unappealed development is not part of the conditional use approval proposal in question, a local government cannot require a conditional use permit for that development as part of its evaluation of the proposed use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 14 (1998).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The submittal of a land use permit application leads to one local review process, including any local appeals, and culminates in one final local land use decision appealable to LUBA. Any relevant issues concerning the acceptance, processing and approval or denial of such application may be raised in an appeal to LUBA, subject to the requirements of ORS 197.763(1) and 197.835(2) that such issues have been raised below. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where conditional use approval is sought for the construction of a building to serve an existing use, whether that existing use is lawful is relevant to approval of the proposed building. Penland v. Josephine County, 29 Or LUBA 213 (1995).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. In order to defer determinations of compliance with mandatory approval standards to a later stage where no public hearing is contemplated, the local government must first determine that compliance with those standards is possible. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The term "permits," as used in Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7, refers to all decisions defined as "permits" when that law was enacted. The subsequent amendment to the ORS 227.160(2) definition of "permit" to exclude limited land use decisions does not apply. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A local government may not defer determinations of compliance with approval standards applicable to partition approval to the building permit approval stage. Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a code approval standard prohibits the proposed use unless an exception is justified under a second code standard that requires the local government to have a "short term parking strategy," if the local government has not adopted a "short term parking strategy," it cannot make use of the exception provided by the second standard and must deny the application. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The requirement of ORS 197.175(2)(d) that a land use decision or limited land use decision comply with a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan, does not necessarily mean that all plan provisions apply directly to individual development applications. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 197.195, which establishes minimum procedural requirements for making limited land use decisions, does not require that local governments provide either a public hearing or a local appeal. ORS 227.175(3) and (10) do not apply to limited land use decisions, because they are not "permits," as defined in ORS 227.160(2). Forest Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 215 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. The meaning of the term "standards and criteria" in ORS 227.178(3) is a question of state law, and a city's interpretation and application of this term does not bind LUBA. The role of the term "standards and criteria" in ORS 227.178(3) is to assure both proponents and opponents of an application that the substantive factors that are actually applied and that have a meaningful impact on a decision permitting or denying an application will remain constant throughout the proceedings. Forest Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 215 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where local code language unambiguously requires findings of compliance with certain standards prior to issuance of a permit, the standards are properly viewed as approval standards, rather than performance standards, which only provide a basis for revocation of a permit after it is issued. Towry v. City of Lincoln City, 26 Or LUBA 554 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where the local government's plan and land use regulations are acknowledged, a local government is under no obligation to establish compliance with Goal 5 or to perform an ESEE consequences analysis in approving an application for a conditional use permit. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 215.130(2) allows cities to adopt contingent plan and zoning designations for property to be annexed in the future, but it does not allow cities to grant contingent permits for property to be annexed in the future. Recht v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 316 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a city comprehensive plan expressly recognizes that the county has jurisdiction to issue land use permits prior to annexation of unincorporated areas, the city must annex an unincorporated area before it has jurisdiction to grant land use permits for such unincorporated areas. Recht v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 316 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), there can easily be more than one affirmable local government interpretation of a particular code provision. Nevertheless, Clark does not allow a local government arbitrarily to vary its interpretation of an approval standard when acting on permit applications. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. To find compliance with a local code requirement that schools be adequate to meet anticipated demand, a local government must find that existing school facilities are adequate to serve the proposed project or that they can be made adequate by employing available techniques to maximize school facility capacity. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Local code provisions that simply allow increased density for controlled income and rent housing do not eliminate the requirement that such housing comply with other requirements of the local code. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. In order to determine compliance with a code permit approval standard requiring that "the proposed use will not alter the character of the surrounding area" in a particular manner, the local government must first identify the "surrounding area" to be considered. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. After acknowledgment, local government permit decisions are governed by the acknowledged plan and regulations, not the statewide planning goals. ORS 197.175(2)(d). Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Because a permit applicant has the burden of demonstrating compliance with each approval criterion, a single supported finding of noncompliance with an approval criterion is sufficient to support a decision denying the permit. Ball and Associates v. Josephine County, 25 Or LUBA 525 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Under ORS 197.175(2)(d), a local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations, not the statewide planning goals, govern permit decisions. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where the local code expresses an intent not to duplicate state mobile home park approval standards, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation that the state approval standard in ORS 446.100(1)(a) is not part of the "applicable Oregon Law," which the code requires to be considered in making permit decisions. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a city's plan and land use regulations were unacknowledged at the time the subject permit application was initially filed, ORS 227.178(3) does not restrict the applicable standards to those in effect when the application was filed. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 25 Or LUBA 327 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A local code may provide a PUD process in which an approved PUD overall development plan, rather than the comprehensive plan standards applied in approving the overall development plan, governs final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. For purposes of identifying the "standards and criteria" that are "applicable at the time the application was first submitted" under ORS 227.178(3), the acknowledged comprehensive plan standards and criteria continue to apply, even after adoption of an ordinance repealing or amending those acknowledged standards and criteria, until the newly adopted plan standards and criteria are themselves deemed acknowledged. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 25 Or LUBA 67 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Once a local government's plan and land use regulations are acknowledged under ORS 197.251, the acknowledged plan and land use regulations, not the statewide planning goals, apply to permit decisions. ORS 197.175(2)(d). O'Mara v. Douglas County, 25 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Plan text and map amendments and zoning text and map amendments are not "permits," as that term is defined in ORS 215.402(4). Leonard v. Union County, 24 Or LUBA 362 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Following LUBA reversal of a city decision approving a permit application, the choice between whether to allow the permit application to be amended or to require that a new permit application be submitted is within the city's discretion, provided any local code requirements governing that choice are followed. Seitz v. City of Ashland, 24 Or LUBA 311 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a parcel was created by deed, at a time when the local government interpreted its partitioning regulations to be inapplicable to parcels created in that manner, the local government may subsequently determine that a permit application complies with a code requirement that a proposed use be on a "parcel," without reexamining the applicability of its partitioning regulations when the parcel was created. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a decision approving a permit application is remanded by LUBA, and the application is thereafter modified to correct the deficiencies identified in LUBA's remand, without changing the nature of the original proposal, the local government does not err by applying on remand approval standards as they existed when the permit application was first submitted. Approval standards, as amended following submittal of the original permit application, need not be applied in such circumstances. ORS 227.178(3). Wentland v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 321 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Amending an acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations to establish a process for case-by-case application of the Goal 5 planning process in conjunction with individual development requests does not comply with Goal 5 and the Goal 5 administrative rule. Ramsey v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 291 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A local code requirement that a home occupation be "operated in" a dwelling or other buildings normally associated with the dwelling is not satisfied by the parking of repossessed vehicles outside of the dwelling until such vehicles are either loaded on trucks for disposal or driven away. Stevenson v. Douglas County, 23 Or LUBA 227 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a code approval standard applicable to a permit decision fully incorporates and refines a comprehensive plan policy, the plan policy does not apply directly to the permit decision as an approval criterion. Avgeris v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 124 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a city's comprehensive plan and land use regulations were not acknowledged when a permit application was initially filed, ORS 227.178(3) does not restrict the standards applicable to that application to those in effect when the application was filed. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 23 Or LUBA 40 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a local government held further evidentiary hearings on a permit application after issuance of an LCDC enforcement order, and made its final decision approximately four months after the enforcement order was issued, the local government was required to consider and comply with the enforcement order in adopting its decision. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 23 Or LUBA 40 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where an LCDC limited acknowledgment order issued pursuant to ORS 197.251(9) grants acknowledgment of a local government's comprehensive plan and land use regulations with regard to certain Statewide Planning Goals, it is error for the local government to thereafter apply those goals in making a decision on a permit application. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 23 Or LUBA 40 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A local government is required by statute to make land use decisions consistent with the standards established in its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations, and those standards cannot be replaced or superseded by a written "policy" adopted by the planning director. Sterling Mine Properties v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 18 (1992).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. After acknowledgment, the local comprehensive plan and land use regulations, not the Statewide Planning Goals, govern a local government's decisions on land development permit applications. Oregon Worsted Company v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 452 (1991).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where a permit approval criterion requires the local government to determine that transportation systems are adequate, the local government may not rely on the fact it found a street to be adequate in an earlier decision approving a similar permit for the same property, particularly in view of the new evidence submitted below and issues raised below with regard to the adequacy of the street. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. A permit approval criterion that a proposed use "not alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner which substantially [limits] use of surrounding properties for the primary uses [of the zoning district]" requires the adoption of findings describing the character of the surrounding area, as well as findings concerning the impacts of the proposed use on that character. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where the local code clearly and unambiguously states that specific code standards apply only to certain types of development, the local government does not err in declining to apply those standards to a proposed development that does not fit within the listed development types. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 166 (1991).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Where existing code and comprehensive plan provisions impose a higher approval standard than the local government believes is appropriate, the appropriate course is to amend the plan and code. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. Whether comprehensive plan goals and policies or zoning ordinance purpose sections are approval standards for conditional use approval in a particular instance, depends upon an examination of the relevant plan and code provisions. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

31.1.1 Permits – Approval Standards – Generally. ORS 215.428(3) does not preclude an applicant from submitting a new permit application, similar or identical to a previous permit application found inconsistent with applicable standards, for the purpose of obtaining review under amended approval standards in effect when the new application is filed. Eckis v. Linn County, 19 Or LUBA 15 (1990).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where the local code provides that certain applications (1) must be "submitted on a form provided by the [Planning] Director," (2) "must be reviewed" pursuant to Type II procedures, (3) "may be reviewed" pursuant to Type I procedures in certain circumstances, and (3) "shall not be considered accepted solely because of having been received," the planning director has discretion to reject an application filed on an incorrect form. Mattson v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 526 (2020).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A county decision determining vested rights involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land," and is therefore a "permit" decision under ORS 215.402(4). Such decisions must be processed under procedures consistent with ORS 215.416, regardless of whether a party's request for the "permit" decision is accompanied by requests for non-"permit" decisions, whether the request is labeled or easily identifiable as an "application" for a "permit," or whether the party affirmatively requests the required procedures. Gillette v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 549 (2019).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A permit applicant's communication to a county—three days before the 180-day deadline to make a permit application complete under ORS 215.427(3)—that he intended to submit additional information to make his application complete is insufficient to constitute a request that the application be deemed complete under ORS 215.427(2)(b) and is insufficient to keep a permit application from becoming void under ORS 215.427(4)(a) through (c). Bora Architects, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 76 Or LUBA 330 (2017).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A county decision that approves a permit application that has become void under ORS 215.427(4) is "prohibited as a matter of law" and must be reversed. Bora Architects, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 76 Or LUBA 330 (2017).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Under the Court of Appeals' reasoning in Davenport v. City of Tigard, 121 Or App 135, 141, 854 P2d 483 (1993), the statutory term "standards and criteria" is sufficiently malleable to encompass a two-step code requirement that first requires that an applicant submit sufficient information to allow the local government to determine whether mitigation conditions of approval are needed for the proposed mining use, and second requires that the local government determine if conditions of approval are needed and develop and impose those conditions if they are needed. Tidewater Contractors v. Curry County, 65 Or LUBA 424 (2012).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A joint application for a conditional use permit by owners of illegally divided parcels cannot rectify an illegal partition under a local code provision that prohibits the approval of permits unless "the violation can be rectified as part of the proposed development," at least where the local government does not purport to validate unlawfully created parcels, pursuant to ORS 92.176. Olstedt v. Clatsop County, 62 Or LUBA 131 (2010).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where an application requirement states that a tentative plat must show the approximate location of any wetlands on a property, a local government does not err in not requiring an application to submit a full wetland delineation. Citizens for Responsible Development v. City of The Dalles, 59 Or LUBA 369 (2009).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. ORS 215.427(2) merely provides that a local government may request additional information before proceeding with a permit or rezoning application if it believes such information is necessary. The statute does not mean that once a local government indicates the application is complete that necessarily means the application includes substantial evidence that all applicable criteria are satisfied. Sperber v. Coos County, 56 Or LUBA 763 (2008).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Even though a local government may be in a position to require a modified application, that does not mean it must do so, when a condition of approval requiring submission of a revised plat neither constitutes procedural error nor prejudices a party's substantial rights. Sisters Forest Planning Comm. v. Deschutes County, 45 Or LUBA 145 (2003).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. The absence of required information or analysis in an application is not necessarily viewed as a procedural error, and may be a basis for reversal or remand even without a showing of prejudice to petitioner's substantial rights, where the information or analysis is necessary to determine compliance with approval criteria. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Under a code provision requiring a "mitigation site plan" if development results in unavoidable significant detrimental environmental impacts, it is not error for the city to consider proposed mitigation in finding that the development will not result in significant impacts, and thus avoid the requirement for a mitigation site plan, where that approach does not avoid prescribed types of mitigation, and instead simply eliminates submission of redundant information. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. ORS 227.175(2) requires that a city provide the opportunity for a consolidated permit application and review process; the statute does not require that each ordinance that adopts a new land use permitting process must separately set out provisions for such consolidated review. Rest-Haven Memorial Park v. City of Eugene, 39 Or LUBA 282 (2001).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where a permit application omits required information, the omitted information is not contained elsewhere in the record, and the omitted information is necessary to demonstrate compliance with an applicable approval standard, the failure to provide the required information is not harmless procedural error and provides a basis for reversal or remand. Hausam v. City of Salem, 39 Or LUBA 51 (2000).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. ORS 215.416(2) does not obligate a county to follow a consolidated procedure in considering a request for a local land use approval. Rather, the statute provides that if an applicant chooses to submit a consolidated application, the county must have a procedure available to review the consolidated application as a whole. McKenney v. Deschutes County, 37 Or LUBA 685 (2000).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. In the absence of a code prohibition or some other obstacle identified by petitioner, a city may find a proposal that is substantially modified on remand from LUBA to be a continuation of the original application. Sullivan v. City of Woodburn, 33 Or LUBA 356 (1997).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. The omission of information required by a local code from a development application is harmless procedural error if the required information is located elsewhere in the record. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. The county's application requirements for a conditional use permit are not approval criteria; the fact that application requirements may not have been satisfied provides no basis for remand absent a showing that the failure to satisfy the requirements resulted in noncompliance with at least one mandatory approval criterion. Le Roux v. Malheur County, 32 Or LUBA 124 (1996).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. To obtain reversal or remand of a decision because information required by the local code is missing from the application, petitioner must explain why the missing information is necessary to determine compliance of the proposed development with applicable approval standards, and the missing information must not be found elsewhere in the record. Champion v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 618 (1995).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Code provisions which simply require a land use application to contain certain information, and explain the burden is on the applicant to establish compliance with relevant approval criteria, do not impose an affirmative requirement on the applicant to disclose a dispute the applicant may have with another jurisdiction concerning another permit. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. The omission of required information from an application constitutes harmless procedural error if the required information is located elsewhere in the record. However, where such information is not located elsewhere in the record and such information is necessary for a determination of compliance with relevant approval standards, such an error is not harmless and warrants reversal or remand of the challenged decision. Shapiro v. City of Talent, 28 Or LUBA 542 (1995).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where the local code creates a process for the submittal and review of an applicant's "development impact statement" (DIS) as part of preliminary subdivision plat approval, the local governing body has considerable discretion in interpreting the role of the DIS process and must determine, in the first instance, whether the DIS content requirements are mere requests for information or impose substantive approval standards. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 28 Or LUBA 263 (1994).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Absent a statutory or local code provision to the contrary, a local government may recognize a property owner who signs a permit application as an applicant, or allow a change in the applicants for a permit. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 28 Or LUBA 123 (1994).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. In order for a petitioner to obtain reversal or remand of a decision because information required by the local code is missing from the application, petitioner must explain why the missing information is necessary to determine compliance of the proposed development with applicable approval standards, and the missing information must not be found elsewhere in the record. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 497 (1994).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where an application for subdivision tentative plan approval does not contain information on the location of driveways and easements required by the code, but petitioners fail to establish the missing information is relevant to any applicable approval standard, the error is harmless and does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. An applicant's failure to include particular information required by the local code on a permit application provides no basis for reversal or remand, unless petitioner explains why the missing information is necessary to determine compliance with specific applicable approval standards. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 27 Or LUBA 94 (1994).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Unless a county notifies the applicant that its permit application is incomplete, as required by ORS 215.428(2), and the deficiency is not remedied within 180 days, under ORS 215.428(3) the county must apply the standards and criteria in effect when the application was filed. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 26 OR LUBA 139 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where petitioner argues the local government erred by approving a conditional use permit without the consent of all owners of the subject property, but identifies no plan, code or other legal standard requiring that such consent be obtained, LUBA cannot grant relief. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. In the absence of a code provision to the contrary, a local government is not required to allow modifications to a subdivision application to enable its approval. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 25 Or LUBA 327 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where a sign-permitting process involves two steps—obtaining a sign permit and architectural review approval—and each step requires the filing of an application and an application fee, and is subject to different standards which are intended to be applied in addition to the requirements of the other, under ORS 227.178(3) an application for sign permit or architectural review approval is subject to the standards in effect when that particular application is submitted. A Storage Place v. City of Tualatin, 25 Or LUBA 202 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where the record includes a permit application dated prior to the adoption of certain land use regulation amendments changing the applicable approval standards, and petitioner offers no reason to believe the application was not submitted prior to those amendments, LUBA will assume the permit application was submitted before the amended standards took effect. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Under ORS 215.428(1) to (3), an application for permit approval is considered complete when it is filed, unless the county notifies the permit applicant that information is missing. ORS 215.428(2). DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where the local code establishes specific requirements for applications for mobile home parks, and also requires that the site plan for a proposed conditional use include information specifically required by the code for the proposed use, a conditional use permit application for a mobile home park must also include the information required for applications for mobile home parks. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A local code provision that establishes minimum requirements for what must be included in a PUD preliminary development plan application does not establish or modify the approval standards for such plans set forth elsewhere in the code. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where an application for a residential care facility does not include a vicinity map showing the proposed site in relation to public transportation systems, as required by the local code, but information concerning the location of public transportation is found elsewhere in the record, the failure to include such vicinity map in the application is a procedural error that does not prejudice petitioner's substantial rights. Murray v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 247 (1991).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. Where the local code requires that a PUD application include a landscaping plan, and the landscaping plan is not available anywhere in the record and is necessary for the city to adequately address compliance with an applicable approval standard, the omission of the plan is not a harmless or procedural error. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

31.1.2 Permits – Approval Standards – Application Requirements. A person files an "application for a permit," as provided in ORS chapter 215, when the person makes it known what the person seeks approval for and that county action to grant approval is requested. A county may require the person to use county forms and procedures, but may not rely on a lack of county forms or procedures to claim no application for a permit was submitted. Kirpal Light Satsang v. Douglas County, 18 Or LUBA 651 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A county's reliance on an uncodified, "fact-dependent," "longstanding county policy" to conclude that the transfer of an illegally partitioned property to the owners of contiguous property constitutes a "de facto property line adjustment," eliminating the illegally partitioned property as a separate unit of land, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 656 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The undefined phrase "youth activity center" is too indefinite to constitute a criterion and, thus, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a) and cannot be applied, even where the local government would rely on a list of factors derived from quasi-judicial decisions that are not contained in the local code to assist in determining whether a specific use is a "youth activity center." Waveseer of Oregon, LLC v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 583 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A county violates the goal-post rule at ORS 215.427(3)(a) by relying on a list of factors derived from quasi-judicial decisions that are not contained in the local code to assist in interpreting an applicable criterion and determining whether the criterion is met where the quasi-judicial decisions were not issued until after the subject application was deemed complete. Waveseer of Oregon, LLC v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 583 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A board of county commissioners' broad interpretation of "youth activity center" that could encompass any swimming pool or basketball court where children play is unreasonable under ORS 475B.486. Nehmzow v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 571 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The undefined phrase "youth activity center" is too indefinite to constitute a criterion and, thus, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a) and cannot be applied. Nehmzow v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 571 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A similar use determination issued by the planning director is not a standard or criterion set forth in the zoning ordinance, as required by ORS 215.416(8). A similar use determination is an interpretation of a criterion. It is not the criterion. Jones v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 448 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In determining whether proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "incidental and subordinate to existing commercial farm use of the tract" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), a county errs in relying on a comparison of the frequency of commercial events with the frequency of commercial farming activity on the property to the exclusion of any relevant circumstances, including the nature, intensity, and economic value of the respective uses, that bear on whether the existing commercial farm use remains the predominant use of the tract. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 276 (2020).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city approves a building permit for a temporary mass shelter under the city's Housing Emergency Ordinance because it satisfies the development standards in the city's Central Employment (EX) zone, where the petitioner argues not that the EX zone development standards that the city applied in approving the building permit are not "clear and objective" but, rather, that the city was required but failed to apply other land use standards in approving the building permit, and where LUBA concludes that none of those other land use standards are applicable approval criteria, the city's decision is subject to the building permit exclusion from LUBA's jurisdiction in ORS 197.015(10)(b)(B). Madrona Park, LLC v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 26 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Establishing that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support the commercial farm uses or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A) is a relatively high hurdle: the county must find that the events are essential in order to maintain the existence of either the commercial farm uses on the subject property or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A demonstration that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support" an approved commercial activity in conjunction with farm use under ORS 215.283(2)(a), such as a brewery, is not sufficient to demonstrate that the events are "necessary to support" an "existing commercial farm use of the tract," such as the growing of filberts, for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), even where revenue from the brewery "supplements" revenue from the growing of filberts. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where an applicant has conducted both festival-related uses and non-festival-related park and campground uses on property zoned Rural Residential and Impacted Forest, where the festival-related uses are verified nonconforming uses, and where the applicant applies for a special use permit to legalize the non-festival-related park and campground uses, LUBA will affirm the county's interpretation that its nonconforming use provisions do not apply to the special use permit application where the county expressly explains that the special use permit does not authorize festival-related uses and where the petitioners identify no law preventing the county from issuing permits that have the effect of legalizing special uses that have been occurring independent of a preexisting nonconforming uses. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

31.1.3 Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a), permit approval standards and criteria must inform interested parties of the basis on which an application will be approved or denied. Waveseer of Oregon, LLC v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 435 (2019).

31.1.3 Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A board of county commissioners' broad interpretation of "youth activity center" that encompasses a wide variety of youth-oriented activities that may occur outdoors or in a farm structure as part of an existing farm use or that may occur in and around a residence as accessory to a residential use is unreasonable under ORS 475B.486 and violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a). Waveseer of Oregon, LLC v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 435 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. According to the "law of the case" pursuant to Beck v. City of Tillamook, 313 Or 148, 831 P2d 678 (1992), matters conclusively resolved before LUBA cannot be relitigated in subsequent appeals of subsequent decisions on the same matter. However, that principle is not violated where (1) LUBA remands to the county to adopt new findings, based on substantial evidence, and (2) on remand, the county accepts new evidence and adopts new findings, as LUBA directed. Where LUBA's original decision discussed certain requirements to provide guidance and framework on remand, and some of the county's findings are still insufficient on remand does not mean that the county violated the "law of the case." Richards v. Jefferson County, 79 Or 171 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. On remand, where LUBA instructed the county to resolve whether the project applicant's farm operation qualifies as a "commercial farming operation" for purposes of applying for an accessory farm dwelling for a relative, LUBA established that certain findings and evidence are necessary to establish compliance with OAR 660-033-0130(9). The county's findings fall short of establishing that the applicant's farm operation qualifies as a "commercial farming operation," because it is an undefined term, and it is the county's obligation to attempt to articulate the thresholds that separate a "commercial" from a non-commercial farming operation, and to determine those thresholds in the first instance. Although the county has some discretion to determine the thresholds, that determination will necessarily constitute a mixed question of fact and law, subject to LUBA's review for legal error and evidentiary sufficiency. Richards v. Jefferson County, 79 Or 171 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The focus of OAR 660-033-0130(9) and county code that implements it regarding whether the "farm operator * * * continue[s] to play the predominant role in the management and farm use of the farm," is on the farm operator's involvement in farm operations on the subject property, not on off-farm businesses that may relate to the farm operation. The commercial farm operator's involvement in off-farm businesses do not help establish any element of OAR 660-033-0130(9). The commercial farm operator's involvement in off-farm businesses are relevant to establishing the elements of OAR 660-033-0130(9) only in so much as the time spent on those businesses and away from the farm operation might undermine the claim that the farm operator will continue to play the "predominant role" in the farm operation and requires assistance in running the farm operation. Richards v. Jefferson County, 79 Or 171 (2019).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will remand a decision by the county planning department approving conversion of a portion of an existing church into a "parsonage," a term which is undefined by state or local law, but which includes a kitchen, bedroom, and bathroom for the use by the church's pastor, where the county's decision fails to identify any land use standards that apply to the proposed use, and did not provide notice or an opportunity for a hearing or otherwise follow the procedures in ORS 215.416(11) without apparent explanation, and LUBA determines that the application for the proposed parsonage is an application for a "permit" as defined in ORS 215.402(4). Wetherell v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 33 (2018).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Although it is not clear a proposed "parsonage," which is a portion of a church to include a bedroom, kitchen and bathroom for use by the church's pastor, must be evaluated and approved or denied under the criteria that apply to a nonfarm dwelling under the county's land use ordinance implementing ORS 215.284, those land use standards require the exercise of discretion in approving the development of land. Further, it is possible, even probable, that any application for a proposed residential use associated with a church must be evaluated under the standards at ORS 215.441, and accordingly the county must process such an application according to its procedures that apply to permits. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 33 (2018).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will affirm a governing body's code interpretation of a county zoning ordinance that provides that a permit extension may be granted if the "approval criteria for the original decision found in a state goal, policy, statute or administrative rule, the Comprehensive Plan or this Ordinance have not changed," and the county board of commissioners interprets "have not changed" to mean an administrative or legislative amendment to the administratively enacted or codified law described in the same provision, and not include decisional law not that is not administratively enacted or codified, as long as such interpretation is "plausible." Hood River Valley Residents' Committee v. Hood River County, 78 Or LUBA 478 (2018).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city has two separate criteria—a transportation impacts criterion, and a services and utilities criterion—both of which are generally concerned with achieving and maintaining an adequate and safe transportation system, and both criteria must be satisfied, a finding that one of those criteria is satisfied does not necessarily mean the other criterion is satisfied. In such a situation, simply because the city found no "traffic impacts" requiring mitigation under the traffic impacts criterion does not mean the city imposed an unconstitutional exaction when it required right-of-way dedication and street improvements as conditions of approval to satisfy the services and utilities criterion. It simply means the city applies the rights-of-way requirements through the services and utilities criterion, rather than the transportation impacts criterion. Hill v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 317 (2018).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a code "principle" is worded as alternative actions an applicant "should" take, and some of the "standards" that follow that "principle" are clearly worded as mandatory, while others are clearly worded as non-mandatory considerations, where the challenged decision does not address the disputed "principle," remand is required for the city council to determine if the disputed "principles" are mandatory and, if so, to ensure one of the mandatory alternatives is satisfied. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas Cty., 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009), the Court of Appeals held that Ballot Measure 49, which was approved to replace previously approved Ballot Measure 37, must be given effect and replaces Ballot Measure 37 which would otherwise apply to a particular permit application, notwithstanding the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal post statute that requires that a permit application be subject to the standards in effect when the permit application was filed. Pete's Mountain case of conflicting statutes—Ballot Measure 49 conflicted with and applied in place of the goal post statute. The holding in Pete's Mountain does not mean that new county cell tower regulations apply to a permit application that was submitted before the new cell tower regulations were adopted. In that circumstance the goal post statute applies and the new cell tower regulations do not apply, because there is no statutory conflict. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 215.427(3)(a) generally requires that approval or denial of a permit application be based on "standards and criteria" that were in effect when the application is first submitted. Expanding a sewer improvement district boundary so that a ban against connecting properties that are not within the sewer improvement district to the public sewer system no longer bars connection of a dwelling on the property to the public sewer system, as it did when the permit application was first submitted, does not create a new standard or criterion after the application was submitted. In that circumstance, ORS 215.427(3)(a) does not preclude the city from requiring that the dwelling connect to the public sewer system, even though it could not have done so at the time the application was submitted. Evans v. City of Bandon, 74 Or LUBA 418 (2016).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A development standard requiring a developer to dedicate and improve adjoining roads to city half-street standards "to the extent the city demonstrates consistency with constitutional requirements" merely acknowledges that the city's ability to require dedications and improvements may be limited by the Takings Clause of the U.S. Constitution, and is not properly understood to allow city staff to waive the code requirements on a case-by-case basis without any analysis or explanation. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. An argument that an existing road serving a proposed planned unit development fails to comply with standards in the fire code provides no basis for reversal or remand of the decision where the fire code is not a "standard and criteria" that is "set forth in the [city's] development ordinance" within the meaning of ORS 227.173, and nothing in the city's development ordinance requires any consideration of the fire code standards during the tentative PUD phase of approval. Trautman v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 209 (2016).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city's acceptance of dedication of a right-of-way does not make the location of the right-of-way as depicted in the dedication a "standard[]" within the meaning of ORS 227.178(3)(a). GPA 1, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 73 Or LUBA 339 (2016).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local code provision that prohibits grading or development on portions of a site that exceed 20 percent is "clear enough for an applicant to know what [it] must show during the application process." Lee v. City of Portland, 57 Or App 798, 802, 646 P2d 662 (1982). Nothing in the language of ORS 227.173(1) requires that a method of measuring slope must be included in the provision in order to determine whether the 20 percent standard is met. SE Neighbors Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 68 Or LUBA 51 (2013).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local code provision that sets out the circumstances when environmental review is required for a development proposal does not foreclose an applicant from voluntarily seeking environmental review through a different process made available in a different code section that gives applicants the choice of satisfying approval standards or seeking environmental review under subjective approval standards. Von Clemm v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 379 (2012).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In order for the local government to postpone a determination of compliance with an applicable criterion to a future proceeding, the local government must first determine, based on evidence in the record, that "compliance with the approval criterion is possible." The evidentiary showing that is required in order for the local government to determine that future compliance is "possible" is not the same evidentiary showing that will be required when a local government makes the required ultimate finding that an approval criterion is satisfied or will be satisfied with measures that are "likely and reasonably certain to succeed." Gould v. Deschutes County, 227 Or App 601, 612, 206 P3d 1106 (2009). Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In establishing that a request for land use approval complies with applicable approval standards, a local government may find that the approval standard is met or find that any needed technical solutions that may be required to comply with the standard are "possible, likely and reasonably certain to succeed." Gould v. Deschutes County, 216 Or App 150, 161, 171 P3d 1017 (2007) (citing Meyer v. City of Portland, 67 Or App 274, 281-82, 678 P2d 741, rev den, 297 Or 82, 679 P2d 1367 (1984)). Johnson v. City of Gladstone, 65 Or LUBA 225 (2012).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Factors set out in a purpose statement provision provide context for interpreting a code provision that requires the local government to determine that a proposed development is compatible with uses and development on adjacent land, even though the factors set out in the purpose statement are not independent approval criteria. Housing Authority of Jackson County v. City of Medford, 65 Or LUBA 295 (2012).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under the Court of Appeals' reasoning in Davenport v. City of Tigard, 121 Or App 135, 141, 854 P2d 483 (1993), the statutory term "standards and criteria" is sufficiently malleable to encompass a two-step code requirement that first requires that an applicant submit sufficient information to allow the local government to determine whether mitigation conditions of approval are needed for the proposed mining use, and second requires that the local government determine if conditions of approval are needed and develop and impose those conditions if they are needed. Tidewater Contractors v. Curry County, 65 Or LUBA 424 (2012).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local government errs in denying an application for a use expressly allowed as a conditional use in the applicable zone on the grounds that the proposed conditional use is inconsistent with the purpose of the zone, where no code provision makes the zone purpose statement an applicable approval criterion, and the zone purpose statement includes no language suggesting that the purpose statement functions as a mandatory approval criterion for conditional uses allowed in the zone. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. While a local government has latitude to identify applicable standards and criteria in its comprehensive plan and land use regulations, under ORS 227.173(1) the "standards and criteria" must already exist in the plan and ordinance, and the local government cannot manufacture standards and criteria to apply to approve or deny a permit application. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 227.173(1), which requires that city decisions on applications for permits be based on standards and criteria in the city's development ordinance, does not mandate that a PUD Master Plan also include "standards and criteria," as those words are used in ORS 227.173(1). Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In making a decision on a land use application, a local government is required to determine whether the application complies with all applicable land use approval criteria at the time it renders a decision on the application. A local government is not entitled to include a general condition that requires a successful applicant to come back to the county each time a land use regulation that was not considered is discovered after the original approval decision has become final. Kersey v. Lake County, 62 Or LUBA 239 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Absent permit approval criteria requiring otherwise, a petitioner cannot challenge an earlier unappealed decision extending a permit approval for 18 months, in the context of an appeal of a later decision modifying the permit. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code criterion intended to protect against adverse environmental impacts within a floodplain corridor does not require the applicant for a driveway within the corridor to address alleged traffic safety and vision clearance conflicts with users of nearby driveways. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 92.040(2) provides that "only those local government laws * * * that are in effect at the time of [subdivision] application shall govern subsequent construction on the property * * *." A local government does not violate ORS 92.040(2) by applying access standards that were adopted after a subdivision was recorded to deny a request for direct driveway access onto an arterial road adjoining one of the subdivision lots where the proposed driveway would be constructed in part "off" the property and the approved master plan showed access to the lot from an internal local roadway. Athletic Club of Bend, Inc. v. City of Bend, 61 Or LUBA 349 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code standard allowing modifications to a conditional use permit that are not "materially inconsistent with the conditions of the original approval" does not preclude all modifications that are inconsistent in some way with the original conditions of approval, only modifications that "materially" or "significantly" conflict with the original conditions of approval. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The hearings officer correctly interprets a code standard allowing modifications to a conditional use permit that result in "insignificant changes" in the physical appearance of development, use of the site, or impact on surrounding properties to be concerned with modifications that change the proposed development, not a modification to a deadline to complete the development as originally approved. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas Cty., 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009), where an application for subdivision relies on Ballot Measure 37 waivers, those waivers qualify as "standards and criteria" under the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal-post statute, and the subdivision application is not subject to subsequently enacted standards and criteria. But Ballot Measure 49, which post-dates Ballot Measure 37 and is inconsistent with the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal-post statute overrides the goal-post statute and limits the Ballot Measure 37 subdivision applicant to one of the three remedies specified in Ballot Measure 49. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. If a local government interprets its code to the effect that federal particulate matter standards supply the relevant test for compliance with local approval standards, articulates that interpretation for the first time in its final decision, and denies the application for failure to present evidence of compliance with the federal standards, remand would likely be necessary to give the applicant an opportunity to present evidence addressing the federal standards. However, remand is not warranted where the decision merely discusses federal standards, but ultimately concludes that those standards do not govern. Easterly v. Polk County, 59 Or LUBA 417 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. It is generally the applicant's responsibility to anticipate a range of reasonable interpretations or approaches to demonstrating compliance with an approval standard, even if the approval standard is nonspecific and subjective, and to shape the evidence accordingly. Easterly v. Polk County, 59 Or LUBA 417 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a local government denies an application based on one approval criterion, and LUBA remands the decision in part for the local government to consider whether additional approval standards apply, it is possible that in determining that additional approval standards apply the local government could identify additional bases for denial under the additional criteria, even if such additional bases for denial were not cited in the original decision. Easterly v. Polk County, 59 Or LUBA 417 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A street connectivity requirement that development street systems not create "excessive travel lengths" is sufficient to qualify as a standard or criterion, and therefore does not violate the ORS 227.173(1) requirement that permit decisions must "be based on standards and criteria." Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. When an applicant files a consolidated set of applications for: (1) a comprehensive plan amendment; (2) a zone change that is dependent on that plan map amendment; and (3) a development permit that is dependent on that zone change, the goal post rule at ORS 197.427(3)(a) does not apply to "freeze" in place the standards and criteria that applied to that development permit as of the date the applications were filed. Instead the standards and criteria that apply are those supplied by the new plan and zoning designations. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 190 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code provision that lists additional conditional use restrictions that a county may impose to protect certain natural resources is an approval standard, in the sense that it authorizes the county to impose additional conditions if found to be necessary, and the county could, theoretically, deny the application if it concluded that no feasible conditions could be crafted that the county will protect the identified resources. Western Land & Cattle, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 295 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code provision stating that when it appears that the area of a proposed partition is to be ultimately divided into four or more lots or parcels the code provisions pertaining to subdivisions apply simply authorizes the city to apply subdivision procedures and standards to a partition application, and does not itself constitute "standard" or "criteria" under which the city could deny the partition application. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city discovers late in a proceeding on a partition application that its code may require application of certain subdivision approval standards, the city should identify any applicable subdivision standards and give the applicant the opportunity to demonstrate compliance with them, even if that would require the city to make its decision after the statutory deadline for taking final action on the application has passed. However, it is inconsistent with ORS 227.178(3) for the city to summarily deny the partition and effectively force the applicant to submit a new application, where that denial is not based on any applicable standard or criteria. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. In applying a land use regulation standard that only requires a service provider certification or letter, a decision maker is not obligated to ensure that every representation in a service provider's certification or letter is correct or supported by substantial evidence. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Petitioners' argument that a city erred by failing to find that proposed alterations to a historic building are necessary to ensure its continued use will be rejected on appeal, where the local code merely says some alterations will be necessary to ensure continued use of historic resources and other provisions of the code expressly set out the criteria that the city must address in its findings. Burgess v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 482 (2008).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city's code conditionally permits cellular antennae on existing buildings, a city decision that denies a request for conditional use approval to site cellular antennae on an existing water tower simply because the water tower is an existing nonconforming structure will be remanded, where there is no language in the city's code that would permit such a limitation and the city provides no explanation for reading such a limitation into its code. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 215.427(3) does not preclude the local government's compliance with OAR 660-041-0030, which requires notice to DLCD of an application for a permit pursuant to a Ballot Measure 37 waiver, because the rule is not an "approval standard or criteria" applicable to a permit application. DLCD v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 799 (2007).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where local code criteria applicable to approval of a forest template dwelling do not include any reference to local floodplain regulations, and those floodplain regulations appear to regulate the actual construction and placement of structures within a floodplain zone, and are more properly addressed at the time a building permit is issued, the county does not err in failing to adopt findings addressing those floodplain regulations in approving a forest template dwelling. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy that merely describes the county's resource designations is not a mandatory tentative subdivision plan approval criterion, and the county was therefore not required to adopt findings addressing it. Doob v. Josephine County, 50 Or LUBA 209 (2005).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the text of a particular zoning district that allows permitted uses to be reviewed as conditional uses seems to call for a focus on the characteristics of the use itself, but the conditional use chapter of the zoning ordinance expressly provides that conditional uses may require special consideration due to unique site characteristics, the city does not err in interpreting the zoning district text to allow it to consider whether unique site characteristics justify treating the permitted use as a conditional use. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Central Point, 49 Or LUBA 472 (2005).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. While ORS 227.178(3), as interpreted in Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 154 Or App 450, 926 P2d 701 (1998), prohibits a local government from changing its position with respect to the applicability of approval standards during the proceedings on a permit application, neither the statute nor Holland prohibit a local government from reinterpreting the meaning of indisputably applicable approval standards. Bemis v. City of Ashland, 48 Or LUBA 42 (2004).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The ORS 227.178(3) prohibition on "shifting the goal posts" and the prohibition described in Alexanderson v. Clackamas County, 126 Or App 549, 869 P2d 873 (1994), on reinterpretations of local provisions that are a "product of a design to act arbitrarily and inconsistently from case to case" are distinct and independent prohibitions, although both may be invoked in particular circumstances. Bemis v. City of Ashland, 48 Or LUBA 42 (2004).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a conditional use approval criterion provides that conditional use approval "may be denied if the applicant" fails to make a specified demonstration concerning the proposed location of the conditional use, a county court's interpretation of the term "may" to render the criterion nonmandatory is not inconsistent with the language of the criterion or any identified underlying purpose or policies and is therefore not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Gumtow-Farrior v. Crook County, 47 Or LUBA 186 (2004).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A zoning ordinance provision that requires that identified resource protection areas "link" with other identified resource protection areas is not so vague as to violate the ORS 227.173 requirement that review of land use permits be based on "standards and criteria." Renaissance Development v. City of Lake Oswego, 45 Or LUBA 312 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A zoning ordinance provision that requires maintenance of "an ecologically viable plant and wildlife community" is not so vague as to violate the ORS 227.173 requirement that review of land use permits be based on" standards and criteria." Renaissance Development v. City of Lake Oswego, 45 Or LUBA 312 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will remand a decision that denies a permit application because it does not comply with a zoning ordinance standard that requires "the largest trees be included in [a] protection area," where the decision does not allow the applicant to determine how many of the large trees on the property must be protected and does not provide any guidance on how the city applies that standard. Renaissance Development v. City of Lake Oswego, 45 Or LUBA 312 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city's finding that buried concrete reservoirs will not cause "significant detrimental impact" to the environment is supported by substantial evidence, where the city's code defines that term to mean development that disrupts or destroys ecological systems, and evidence in the record shows that the surface over the buried reservoirs will be restored and replanted and the reservoirs will not significantly affect underground hydrology. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under a code provision requiring a "mitigation site plan" if development results in unavoidable significant detrimental environmental impacts, it is not error for the city to consider proposed mitigation in finding that the development will not result in significant impacts, and thus avoid the requirement for a mitigation site plan, where that approach does not avoid prescribed types of mitigation, and instead simply eliminates submission of redundant information. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city's refusal to interpret a zoning ordinance standard that requires that requested rezoning must be the "best suited for the specific site, based on specific policies of the * * * [c]omprehensive [p]lan" to require that the applicant demonstrate a current unmet need for the uses allowed in the requested zone is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1), where no plan policy is worded to impose that requirement. Dimone v. City of Hillsboro, 44 Or LUBA 698 (2003).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a local approval criterion requires a finding that a proposed use will have a minimal adverse impact on surrounding uses compared to the impact of development permitted outright, a city may not limit its impact analysis to only one permitted use, where other permitted uses in the zone may have impacts similar to those of the proposed use. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a local approval criterion requires a finding that a proposed use will "preserve assets of particular interest in the community," a city council's finding that the proposed use does not satisfy the criterion is inadequate where the finding merely sets out a series of concerns about the proposed use without explaining why those concerns are "assets of particular interest" that the proposed use will not preserve. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city's finding that a proposed use will place an "excessive burden on traffic" based on a conclusion that the applicant failed to provide a traffic study that estimated the number of vehicles that would use local streets is inadequate, where there is a trip generation study in the record that provides the evidence the finding states is missing. Oregon Child Devel. Coalition v. City of Madras, 43 Or LUBA 184 (2002).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A 1979 board of county commissioners decision directing the county planning department to issue septic and building permits for a single-family dwelling does not necessarily confer a continuing right to construct a dwelling where no permits were ever issued, no steps have been taken to construct the approved development, and county approval standards have changed in the years since the 1979 decision such that the proposed development no longer complies with applicable criteria. PJT, Inc. v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 536 (2002).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a county has adopted specific ordinances to shield certain land use permits from subsequent changes in law without regard to whether the permit holder has a vested right to complete construction of the use based on substantial construction of the authorized use prior to the change in law, uses approved by land use permits that are not shielded from subsequent changes in law by the ordinances are not similarly shielded from those changes in law and must comply with existing law. PJT, Inc. v. Jackson County, 42 Or LUBA 536 (2002).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will remand a decision denying an application to place and remove fill in a riparian zone, where the findings do not independently address the relevant standards and it is not clear what evidence the hearings officer relied on to apply the standards. Griffin v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 159 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The standard a county must apply under ORS 215.275 in considering siting of a public utility facility on EFU land is the same standard mandated by Clackamas Co. Svc. Dist. No. 1 v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 374 (1998): "whether the facility must be sited in an EFU zone in order to provide the service." The factors specified in ORS 215.275 may be used merely to demonstrate compliance with that ultimate standard. City of Albany v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 38 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. When considering approval of a public utility facility on EFU land, the factors listed in ORS 215.275(2) are intended to be applied not only to the proposed EFU site, but also to the non-EFU sites considered as potential alternatives. City of Albany v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 38 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under ORS 215.275, when a county considers siting of a certain type of public utility facility on EFU land, the county need not consider as a "reasonable alternative" a different type of utility facility designed to meet the same need as the proposed facility type. City of Albany v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 38 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city is allowed latitude under ORS 227.173(1) in adopting nonspecific and highly subjective criteria, and in explaining what such criteria require in particular cases. Design review criteria requiring that proposed signs enhance the character of historic districts are not impermissibly vague under ORS 227.173(1), where a reasonable applicant could discern from the criteria and the city's explanation of the district's character why the proposed sign violates the criteria. Multi-Light Sign Co. v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 605 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the ORS 215.283(1)(w) authorization for rural fire service facilities in EFU zones had taken effect, but a county had not yet amended its zoning ordinance to reflect the statutory change, ORS 215.283(1)(w) applies directly, and the county does not violate the zoning ordinance by approving a rural fire service facility in its EFU zone. Keicher v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 521 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city cannot find its acknowledged shoreland land use regulations, it may not apply the county's shoreland land use regulations to approve a request to place fill in the shoreland; it must apply Goal 17 (Coastal Shorelands) directly. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 39 Or LUBA 353 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a city code provision states that, following approval of a permit application, impacts of the proposal must be mitigated, a requirement that the city manager adopt rules to implement that code mitigation requirement does not violate ORS 227.173(1), which requires that the "standards and criteria" for approval or denial of a land use permit be included in the city's development ordinances. Rest-Haven Memorial Park v. City of Eugene, 39 Or LUBA 282 (2001).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city does not err by failing to apply comprehensive plan annexation policies in reviewing an application for annexation, where those policies were adopted after the application for annexation was submitted and became complete. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. When a variance approval is based on a specific finding that the proposed use is permitted in the underlying zone, the variance approval establishes a time frame for constructing the proposed use, and when the applicant applies for the building permit within the allotted time, the city is obligated by ORS 227.178(3) to apply the same "standards and criteria" that were applicable at the time the variance application was submitted. Gagnier v. City of Gladstone, 38 Or LUBA 858 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 227.178(3) implicitly requires that a city apply a consistent set of standards to the discretionary approval of the proposed development of land and the construction of that development in accordance with the discretionary approval. A city may not apply one set of standards to the discretionary approval of a proposed development of land and subsequently apply an amended standard to deny a building permit to construct the development in accordance with the discretionary permit. Gagnier v. City of Gladstone, 38 Or LUBA 858 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The approval of a "permit" under ORS 227.160(2) and 227.178(3) carries with it the right to obtain the building permits that are necessary to build the approved proposed development of land, provided the applicant seeks and obtains those building permits within the time specified in the permit itself or in accordance with any applicable land use regulations that establish a deadline for seeking and obtaining required building permits. Gagnier v. City of Gladstone, 38 Or LUBA 858 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A county errs by finding that its acknowledged zoning ordinance fully implements the acknowledged comprehensive plan, thus making it unnecessary to apply comprehensive plan provisions directly to an application for permit approval, where the acknowledged zoning ordinance specifically requires that the application for permit approval must demonstrate compliance with the acknowledged comprehensive plan and the county does not identify any zoning ordinance provisions that implement applicable comprehensive plan policies. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Siting requirements for forest template dwellings that require that impacts and fire risks be "minimized" govern where a proposed dwelling should be sited rather than whether a dwelling should be approved. Fessler v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 844 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code provision that authorizes a city to condition permit approval on execution of a waiver of remonstrance is not a permit approval criterion. Where the applicant expresses opposition to executing such a waiver of remonstrance, the city may condition its approval of the permit on execution of the waiver of remonstrance, but the city may not deny the permit based on such expressions of opposition. Oregon Entertainment Corp. v. City of Beaverton, 38 Or LUBA 440 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A city's decision violates ORS 227.173(1) where the city relies on "factors" or "considerations" unconnected to approval standards in its land use regulations to deny a permit application. Ashley Manor Care Centers v. City of Grants Pass, 38 Or LUBA 308 (2000).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local government is not obligated to accept evidence that ODOT approved access onto a state highway as sufficient to satisfy a county criterion that the proposed quarry operation not impose an undue burden on public improvements, which include public roads. Wild Rose Ranch Enterprises v. Benton County, 37 Or LUBA 368 (1999).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the staff report identifies an approval criterion and the final decision fails to demonstrate compliance with the criterion or take the position that the criterion does not apply, the decision will be remanded. Latta v. City of Joseph, 36 Or LUBA 708 (1999).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. That a use is authorized under a zoning ordinance or granted building or zoning permits does not, alone, shield the use from later-adopted zoning ordinance amendments that prohibit the use or impose a requirement for additional permits. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. OAR 660-033-0135 and 660-033-0140 have no legal effect on the continued validity of farm dwelling permits approved prior to the adoption of those rules or the county's authority to impose time limits on those previously approved permits or to adopt standards for extending those new time limits. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under ORS 215.428(3), OAR 660-033-0140 may not be applied to applications for farm dwelling permits that were filed prior to the effective date of the rule and were pending on the date the rule became effective. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where decisions on an extension of a permit are not governed by clear and objective standards, such decisions involve the exercise of discretion and satisfy the discretionary element of the definition of "permit" at ORS 215.402(4). Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. An application for an extension of a conditional use permit involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is subject to the requirement at ORS 215.416 that approval or denial of a permit be subject to standards and criteria, where the local code contains no standards governing permit extensions and thus grants unfettered discretion to the county to approve or deny the extension. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 197.175 requires that land use decisions comply with acknowledged comprehensive plans. When approval criteria included in acknowledged land use regulations entirely displace the comprehensive plan as relevant approval criteria, the comprehensive plan must make that intent clear. Durig v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 196 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. While petitioners may raise issues concerning compliance with approval criteria that are not identified in the local notice of hearing, petitioners must supply some explanation why they believe a "purpose statement" should be viewed as an approval criterion; petitioners may not simply assume that it is a criterion. Rouse v. Tillamook County, 34 Or LUBA 530 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Concern that a campfire may cause a forest fire that burns down neighboring structures is not a relevant consideration in determining whether a proposed use will alter the character of the surrounding area by limiting or impairing primary uses. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 14 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 227.178(3) does not prevent a city from adopting an interpretation of a comprehensive plan that is different than the interpretation that was in effect on the date the permit application was submitted, and applying that new interpretation to the permit application. Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 34 Or LUBA 1 (1998).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A "public need" approval standard contained in a resolution attached as an appendix to the acknowledged zoning ordinance was not repealed by implication and must be applied to a request for permit approval. Port Dock Four, Inc. v. City of Newport, 33 Or LUBA 613 (1997).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Identification of a development code section number is sufficient to provide notice of the applicable criteria in a notice of hearing. It is not necessary to interpret the development code section in the notice of hearing to identify the portions of the identified development code section that institute mandatory approval criteria. Fjarli v. City of Medford, 33 Or LUBA 451 (1997).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will not find that the application of a broad design review standard violates the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution unless petitioner shows that a policy unlawfully discriminating in favor of some persons against others either has been adopted or has been followed in practice. Johns v. City of Lincoln City, 32 Or LUBA 195 (1996).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Findings are inadequate to establish that a proposed use does or can satisfy the definition of "light industrial business" when there are no factual findings regarding the number of employees necessary for the proposed use. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. That an applicant's personal expertise is critical in designing a proposed use does not preclude compliance with a local ordinance requirement that a conditional use permit run with the land. Neither is it necessary to condition approval of the use on continuing participation by that applicant, since it is not dependent on her for its operation. Martin v. Jackson County, 30 Or LUBA 317 (1996).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. An approval standard requiring compatibility with the design of other developments in the same general vicinity does not require that an industrial use in an industrial zone be designed to resemble nearby elementary schools or residential dwellings. Canby Quality of Life Committee v. City of Canby, 30 Or LUBA 166 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 227.173(1) requires that permit standards and criteria be set out in local development ordinances and that land use decisions identify applicable standards and criteria. The statute does not prohibit a local government from requiring compliance with comprehensive plan policies through an ordinance, or from applying comprehensive plan criteria in quasi-judicial proceedings. Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 30 Or LUBA 85 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local government is not mandated to grant variances to its street design standards when the site characteristics preclude compliance with them; satisfaction of some criteria does not excuse an applicant from complying with other applicable criteria. Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 30 Or LUBA 85 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 215.236(2) requires that farm assessment disqualifications be filed within 120 days of approval of a nonfarm dwelling permit only when the subject property is assessed for farm use at the time of approval. A county's decision to modify a condition of approval requiring disqualification from farm assessment within 120 days after approval does not violate ORS 215.236(2) when the subject property was not assessed for farm use at the time of approval. Wakeman v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. ORS 197.829 governs this Board's scope of review in reviewing local government governing bodies' interpretations of local enactments. ORS 197.829(4) has nothing to do with whether a particular statutory provision applies directly as an approval standard for a local government land use decision. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Whereas ORS 358.653(1) imposes a duty on state agencies and local governments that have a proprietary interest in historically significant properties to consult with the state Historic Preservation Office prior to seeking demolition of such properties, it does not establish requirements for state agencies and local governments to follow in carrying out their authority to regulate property under the ownership and control of other entities. Save Amazon Coalition v. City of Eugene, 29 Or LUBA 238 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local governing body acts within its interpretive discretion in interpreting a code conditional use permit standard regarding feasibility of meeting "projected increased demand" for school facilities to refer to current demand, plus demand from other developments that have received final approval and the demand created by the proposed development, and not to include demand from future permitted development of residentially zoned land. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where LUBA remands a local government decision granting a home occupation permit, the permit expires on the date the decision is remanded. Under a local code requirement limiting home occupation permits to one year, the year is measured from the date of a decision on remand granting the permit, not the date of the original permit decision. Wuester v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 314 (1994).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Regardless of whether the local decision maker imposed a condition requiring satisfaction of DEQ noise standards, DEQ noise standards are not approval criteria for an auto repair home occupation permit, where the local code does not make DEQ noise standards applicable approval criteria. Wuester v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 314 (1994).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where local code language unambiguously requires findings of compliance with certain standards prior to issuance of a permit, the standards are properly viewed as approval standards, rather than performance standards, which only provide a basis for revocation of a permit after it is issued. Towry v. City of Lincoln City, 26 Or LUBA 554 (1994).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Even though LUBA might agree with a county's argument in its brief that the purpose section of its EFU zoning district is not an approval standard for a farm dwelling permit application, if the challenged decision itself does not interpret the code provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the county to interpret the provision in the first instance. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where comprehensive plan goals are worded as aspirations, and the plan states that whereas plan policies are to be used in daily decision making, plan goals are general directions for the future, LUBA will affirm a local determination that the plan goals are not approval standards for a permit application. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a comprehensive plan policy specifically refers to wetlands identified in "future inventorying processes," it is reasonable for the local government to interpret that plan policy as inapplicable to individual permit decisions not involving wetlands identified on the local government's acknowledged plan inventory. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local code provision requiring that "consideration * * * be given to [certain specified] factors" does not establish mandatory approval standards for local government decisions, but rather merely lists "factors" which the local government must consider. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. As long as comprehensive plan issues relating to the impact of an entire PUD on internal and external roadways were addressed in approving an overall development plan, under applicable local code provisions particular questions concerning those issues that were not raised in granting overall development plan approval may not be raised during final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. LUBA will not assume changes in a PUD proposal between outline development plan approval and preliminary development plan approval constitute a new PUD application (requiring application of then existing approval standards), where there is nothing in the local code to support so characterizing the amended PUD proposal. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. While ORS 227.178(3) identifies the criteria that a city must apply to a permit application, it has no bearing on whether the city must, following reversal or remand of a permit decision by this Board, (1) accept an amended application reviewable against the criteria in effect when the original application was submitted, or (2) require a new application reviewable against the criteria in effect when the new application is submitted. Seitz v. City of Ashland, 24 Or LUBA 311 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where (1) a standard was deleted from the local comprehensive plan prior to the filing of a permit application, (2) the ordinance deleting the standard was remanded by LUBA while the permit application was pending, but (3) the local government made a second decision to delete the standard and that decision was deemed acknowledged prior to the local government's final decision on the permit application, the standard does not apply to the permit application. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code provision requiring the existence of legal access is satisfied by an existing access easement, notwithstanding that portions of the existing driveway are located outside the easement. Mercer v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 608 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where an applicable code criterion requires that an existing structure have been issued all necessary permits in the past and a party raises a substantial issue concerning whether such is the case, the local government is required to adopt findings explaining why the code criterion is met and those findings must be supported by substantial evidence. Mercer v. Josephine County, 23 Or LUBA 608 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. That a recently constructed roadway stream crossing was built to create a pond to satisfy fire district requirements for stored water provides no basis for requiring that a county approve use of such a roadway to provide access to newly created parcels. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The standards in effect at the time a development application is filed are the standards applicable to approval of such development applications. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 515 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies and local code requirements establishing standards for construction of streets are not approval standards applicable to comprehensive plan transportation map amendments. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 22 Or LUBA 577 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local government complies with a plan provision requiring that it "request comments from the School District concerning land use * * * actions," where the local government provides the school district with notice of a proposed PUD preliminary master plan approval. Such a plan provision does not require that the school district make comments, only that comments be requested. Gerl v. City of Lincoln City, 22 Or LUBA 512 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where relevant plan provisions require that a local government consider the impacts of a proposed PUD on police and fire protection and transportation routes, a local government must consider such impacts and may not, in finding compliance with such plan provisions, rely solely on the failure of the relevant service providers to provide comments. Gerl v. City of Lincoln City, 22 Or LUBA 512 (1992).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The factors listed in ORS 822.140(3)(a) to (f) are considerations for the adoption of ordinances regulating the siting or expansion of wrecking yards. These factors are not approval standards for applications for local approval of individual Department of Motor Vehicles wrecking certificates. Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a county's approval of a permit is mandated by an order of the circuit court issued pursuant to a writ of mandamus under ORS 215.428(7), the county's decision approving the permit is not a "land use decision," as defined in ORS 197.015(10), because the county was not required to apply its comprehensive plan or land use regulations in adopting that decision. Gearhard v. Klamath County, 22 Or LUBA 377 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the height limitation for the underlying zone is a standard applicable to approval of a PUD preliminary development plan, under ORS 227.178(3) the preliminary development plan must comply with the building height limitation in effect when the preliminary development plan application was first submitted. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Conditions imposed on particular property as part of the adoption of a quasi-judicial plan amendment/zone change are potentially applicable to decisions approving development of that property. Broetje-McLaughlin v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 198 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. When determining the applicability of comprehensive plan provisions to individual conditional use decisions, LUBA will first consider whether the comprehensive plan itself contains language which identifies how the provisions in question are intended to apply to individual conditional use decisions. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan emphasizes that plan policies are intended to guide development actions and decisions, and that the plan must be implemented through the local code to have effect, such plan policies are not approval standards for individual conditional use decisions. Schellenberg v. Polk County, 21 Or LUBA 425 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Performance standards are not necessary prerequisites to issuance of a conditional use permit. However, a code standard may be a performance standard, a permit approval standard, or some combination of the two. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a code standard provides that the standard applies "to the establishment, maintenance, and operation of" the proposed use, a local government must determine whether the standard is met prior to granting the requested discretionary permits. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where compliance with applicable discretionary permit approval standards will require detailed plans or studies of the type typically required at the time a building permit is requested, it may be possible for the local government to find at the time of discretionary permit approval that it is feasible to comply with the standards and to defer to a later stage selection of the particular technical solution to achieve the standard. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local government may impose conditions and rely on those conditions in determining that an application for discretionary permit approval meets applicable approval standards. However, there is no general requirement that a local government must apply conditions to modify a proposal so that applicable standards are met. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A code standard requiring provision of screening by "an ornamental fence, wall, or hedge or landscaped berm in addition to such natural desirable vegetation in the landscaped area," is not met by a 20-foot-high pile of gravel or aggregate. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A local code statement of an intent not to encourage perpetuation of nonconforming uses and plan policies that are directed at zoning decisions and adoption of implementing land use regulations and planning inventories do not state approval standards applicable to decisions concerning modification of individual nonconforming uses. Strawn v. City of Albany, 21 Or LUBA 172 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Statements from introductory findings to a comprehensive plan chapter are not plan policies or approval standards for land use decisions. 19th Street Project v. City of The Dalles, 20 Or LUBA 440 (1991).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Under ORS 215.428(3), the county flood standards in effect at the time the "application" was first submitted to the county apply. However, for the purpose of determining which county flood standards must be applied, the dispositive "application" is the one to which county flood standards are applicable. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the code requires certain flood standards to be applied when the county receives "an application for a use or development," and the flood standards authorize the county to deny or require redesign of a proposed development, the flood standards are applicable to approval of the initial development application. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A plan policy that certain uses or activities be encouraged states general objectives, not permit approval criteria. Benjamin v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 265 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the local code states that required determinations regarding the compatibility and impacts of proposed developments are to be based on consideration of certain listed factors, the factors are not themselves approval standards, and no one factor is conclusive. Thormahlen v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 218 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where a purpose statement in the local code's conditional use provisions states general objectives only, and does not purport to act as an independent approval standard, petitioners' contention that evidence in the record establishes the proposed use is not in compliance with that purpose statement provides no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision approving a conditional use permit. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 20 Or LUBA 178 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan requires an "urban level of service" of schools, but does not define "urban level of service," a city does not err in interpreting that term consistent with the school district's "considerations" for providing adequate school facilities. However, because those school district considerations were not adopted by the city as standards, the city did not err by failing to adopt findings specifically addressing each consideration when approving a development. Axon v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 108 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. The requirement of ORS 215.298(2) that permits for mining of aggregate on EFU-zoned land only be issued for sites included on an inventory in an acknowledged comprehensive plan became effective October 3, 1989 and does not apply to a pending application submitted prior to that date. Clark v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 220 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the comprehensive plan specifies that a particular plan policy is itself an implementing measure, LUBA will conclude that policy applies as an approval criterion for land use decisions. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Comprehensive plan policies which the plan states are specifically implemented through particular sections of the local code do not constitute independent approval standards for land use actions. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where the county code explicitly requires that a nonfarm conditional use in an exclusive farm use zone "satisfy" applicable plan goals and policies, and the county plan provides that its goals and policies shall "direct future decisions on land use actions," the plan agriculture goals and policies are applicable to approval of the nonfarm conditional use. Rowan v. Clackamas County, 19 Or LUBA 163 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. A comprehensive plan policy which states that, in order to minimize conflicts between agricultural and nonagricultural uses, a county "shall develop and implement buffering techniques on the periphery of urban growth boundaries which abut agricultural land," is not an approval standard for a conditional use permit for a nonfarm use far removed from any urban growth boundary. Weist v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 627 (1990).

31.1.3 Permits – Approval Standards – Standards/Criteria. Where ordinance provides that conditional use permit applications may be approved, approved with conditions or denied, and states the approval authority must find that the proposed use is not in violation of "the appropriate regulations and standards" in the ordinance, the ordinance provides that a conditional use permit may be approved or denied based on mandatory criteria located elsewhere in the zoning ordinance. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 18 Or LUBA 587 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval requiring a subsequent master planning process to determine the type and design of a fence surrounding a proposed nonfarm use in order to prevent "trespass related impacts" to surrounding lands devoted to farm use is not sufficient to satisfy the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) where the condition excludes potential trespass from the "non-general public," such as the applicant's employees and agents, and the condition is not "clear and objective," as required by ORS 215.296(2), where it does not define "trespass related impacts." Schrepel v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 895 (2020).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval requiring an applicant to obtain a wetland removal/fill permit from DSL and to provide that permit to a service district with jurisdiction over sewer, water quality, and water quantity prior to conducting any grading work or construction does not violate a local code provision requiring that conditions of approval be "designed to protect the public from potential adverse impacts of the proposed use or development" merely because the condition does not prohibit grading work or construction until any appeals of the DSL permit have concluded. KB Trees, LLC v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 325 (2020).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A county provision, which requires the signature of all owners of the subject property on an application for a conditional use permit, may be satisfied by a county-imposed condition requiring that a property owner sign the conditional use permit application before any building permits may issue, where the county provision grants permission to the hearings officer to impose conditions the hearings officer "deems necessary" to fulfill the purpose and intent of the county's code. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a county code provision requires that a proposed solar facility may not "create unnecessary negative impacts on agricultural operations," including dividing a field or multiple fields "in such a way that creates small or isolated pieces of property that are more difficult to farm," and placing solar facility components on lands in a manner that "could disrupt common and accepted farming practices," a hearings officer's decision errs in concluding that a 12-acre solar facility located on a 14.15-acre lot will not create an isolated strip of cultivated land because as s a matter of simple arithmetic, some portion of the 14.15-acre lot will remain outside the 12-acre solar facility. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a county code provision requires a finding that development of a proposed solar facility will "not result in unnecessary soil erosion or loss," and includes a provision that this finding "may be satisfied by the submittal and county approval of a soil and erosion control plan prepared by an adequately qualified individual," and "[t]he approved plan shall be attached to the decision as a condition of approval," that provision allows an applicant and the county the option of relying on a qualified soil and erosion control plan to satisfy the provision and, if that option is followed, by imposing a condition of approval that requires compliance with the approved plan. The phrase "attached to the decision as a condition of approval" is a term of art that does not mean that the plan must be physically attached to the decision. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. LUBA will reject petitioner's argument that a proposed "art studio" is in reality an "accessory dwelling" in the forest zone in violation of state and local law where the county hearings officer imposed several conditions intended to ensure that the proposed "art studio" would not be used as an "accessory dwelling," and petitioner's speculation that the applicant might violate one or more conditions of approval provides no basis for reversal or remand. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 272 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a city code provides that a property owner must, as a condition of permit or partition approval, either provide the improvements or pay into an improvement fund if a street adjoining property without direct access to the street does not have standard full-width improvements, and petitioner argues that the code provision is not applicable to his proposed property partition, LUBA will sustain, in part, petitioner's challenge upon remand from the Court of Appeals, where the arguments on appeal have evolved and it is apparent that remand is necessary for the hearings officer to adopt findings regarding LUBA's underlying conclusion that the hearings officer was correct in concluding that the condition requiring a waiver of remonstrance against a street or stormwater facility improvement was justified under Clark v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 375, 380, aff'd, 144 Or App 192, 924 P2d 877 (1966), and did not constitute a takings. Hill v. City of Portland, 78 Or LUBA 334 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. To determine whether a local government's conditions of approval satisfy the Nollan v. California Coastal Comm'n, 483 US 825, 831-32, 107 S Ct 3141, 97 L Ed 677 (1987), "essential nexus" prong of the two-part test for assessing the constitutionality of a government exaction, the local government must show "(1) what interests would allow the [local government] to deny [the applicant's proposed land] partition, and (2) how the exaction would serve those interests." Hill v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 317 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A waiver of remonstrance to the formation of a local improvement district (LID) is not subject to the constitutional exaction analysis because it, by itself, does not result in a loss of petitioner's property. Conditions of approval, such as a waiver of remonstrance, may be applied by a local government to ensure that a development proposal conforms to the applicable approval criteria or to ensure the enforcement of other local government regulations. Hill v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 317 (2018).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where an application for design review approval does not seek approval to operate between the hours of 10 p.m. and 7 a.m., which requires conditional use approval under the city's land use regulations, the city does not err by failing to impose a condition of approval that prohibits operation of a returnable bottle redemption center during those hours. Glenwood 2006, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 76 Or LUBA 162 (2017).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under ORS 215.296(2), a county may impose conditions of approval to ensure compliance with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, in which case the question on appeal to LUBA is not whether the decision establishes that the proposed use complies with ORS 215.296(1), but whether the decision establishes that the proposed use, as conditioned, complies with ORS 215.296(1). Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony from an adjacent hay farmer regarding the need for weekly litter patrols to prevent trash entering farm soils or destroying farm equipment, based in part on a condition of approval that requires a second litter fence between the working face of the landfill and adjacent hay fields, where there is no dispute that the existing litter fence is somewhat effective at reducing the volume of wind-blown trash that escapes the landfill, and the second litter fence will reduce that volume further. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government can impose conditions of approval to ensure compliance with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard that require the applicant to assume the cost or burden of performing actions on nearby farms necessary to prevent a significant change in accepted farming practices on those farms or significant increase in costs on those farms. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony from an adjacent hay farmer regarding the need for weekly litter patrols year-round to prevent trash entering farm soils or destroying farm equipment, based in part on a condition of approval that requires the landfill operator to provide, pay for, or reimburse the farmer for litter patrols prior to harvest, even if the condition does not entirely eliminate the need for litter patrols at non-harvest times. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony that the existing intermittent falconry program simply displaces nuisance birds onto nearby farms, based on conditions of approval that require a more intensive falconry program and implementation of integrated techniques recommended by a wildlife biologist to discourage nuisance birds from remaining in the area. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition requiring the landfill operator to buy at market prices the entire crop of berries and cherries produced by a nearby farmer concerned with nuisance bird impacts on her crop is sufficient to reduce to insignificance the alleged adverse impacts of the landfill on the farmer's farm practices. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the authority to impose conditions that specifically applies to temporary use permits does not appear to be broad enough to allow the city to impose a condition of temporary use permit approval regarding vendors, but temporary use permit decisions qualify as Type II decisions, and the development code broadly authorizes Type II decisions to include conditions of approval, a city does not exceed its conditioning authority in imposing the Vendor condition. Bend/Sisters Garden RV Resort, LLC v. City of Sisters, 72 Or LUBA 200 (2015).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a previously approved conditional use is being modified to eliminate one part of the previously approved use, and conditions of that previous approval are to be modified or eliminated, where the original condition was imposed solely to ensure the part of the conditional use that is to be eliminated is consistent with relevant approval standards, no explanation is required to eliminate such conditions of approval. However, where it is not clear whether the original condition of approval was imposed at least in part to ensure that part of the conditional use that is to be retained is consistent with one or more relevant approval standards, and an issue is raised concerning whether the proposed modification or elimination of the condition would cause the modified conditional use to violate one or more applicable approval standards, the local government is obligated to explain why the condition can be eliminated or modified without causing the modified conditional use to no longer comply with relevant approval standards. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. LUBA will not assume a condition imposing a limit on the number of trips a proposed development will be allowed to generate until traffic signals are installed at two nearby intersection will not be effective to serve the intended purpose simply because one petitioner cannot recall ever seeing a condition like that or another petitioner currently has difficulty backing from her driveway onto one of the affected streets. Lowery v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 339 (2013).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A city council is entitled to rely on its transportation bureau's recommendation that two intersections be signalized and the timing of an existing signal be modified to address possible transportation impacts of a proposed development of land, where no party raised any question whether the signal could modified and the two intersections signalized. Lowery v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 339 (2013).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Failure to impose a condition of approval requiring the applicant to modify a settlement agreement with neighbors to allow a second dwelling on a rural residential property is not a basis for remand, where the petitioner fails to establish that the settlement agreement limits the number of dwellings allowed on the property. Purtzer v. Jackson County, 67 Or LUBA 205 (2013).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the local code allows the local government to impose conditions of approval to ensure that a proposal conforms to applicable development standards, and nothing cited by the petitioner prohibits the local government from approving an application for development subject to conditions of approval or relying on those conditions to find that the proposal, as conditioned, complies with applicable development standards, the petitioner's arguments that the city should not have imposed conditions of approval provide no basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Von Clemm v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 379 (2012).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In order for the local government to postpone a determination of compliance with an applicable criterion to a future proceeding, the local government must first determine, based on evidence in the record, that "compliance with the approval criterion is possible." The evidentiary showing that is required in order for the local government to determine that future compliance is "possible" is not the same evidentiary showing that will be required when a local government makes the required ultimate finding that an approval criterion is satisfied or will be satisfied with measures that are "likely and reasonably certain to succeed." Gould v. Deschutes County, 227 Or App 601, 612, 206 P3d 1106 (2009). Northgreen Property LLC v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 83 (2012).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In establishing that a request for land use approval complies with applicable approval standards, a local government may find that the approval standard is met or find that any needed technical solutions that may be required to comply with the standard are "possible, likely and reasonably certain to succeed." Gould v. Deschutes County, 216 Or App 150, 161, 171 P3d 1017 (2007) (citing Meyer v. City of Portland, 67 Or App 274, 281-82, 678 P2d 741, rev den, 297 Or 82, 679 P2d 1367 (1984)). Johnson v. City of Gladstone, 65 Or LUBA 225 (2012).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Although a local government may not defer a required finding of compliance with a quasi-judicial permit approval standard to a later date where there will be no hearing, a local government's decision to impose a condition of approval that will require that some action be taken in the future after hearings have concluded does not necessarily mean the local government has deferred the required finding of compliance. Johnson v. City of Gladstone, 65 Or LUBA 225 (2012).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government decision maker considering an application to extend the term of a permit fails to apply local standards that apply to modifications of conditions of approval, based on findings that those standards only apply to modifications of conditions of approval, but the term of the permit is in part imposed by a condition of approval and the decision maker fails to address that fact, LUBA will remand. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the county code requires the signature of all owners of the property, and to ensure compliance with respect to a proposed pipeline crossing multiple properties the county imposes a condition requiring that the approval becomes effective only when the utility provider supplies all required signatures, an ambiguity in the condition regarding whether all signatures of all property owners are required for the approval to become effective is not a basis to remand the decision, where it is reasonably clear from the condition and findings that the county intended that all signatures of all owners be obtained before the approval becomes effective and building permits for any part of the pipeline can be obtained. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A county errs in deferring a county code requirement to obtain the signatures of all property owners to a subsequent administrative proceeding that does not provide notice or opportunity for public input, in which staff is granted the discretion to determine whether a circuit court order condemning an easement or less-than-fee interest in property "obviates" the need to obtain the signature of the fee owner. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A county errs in deferring the requirement to obtain the signatures of all property owners to a subsequent administrative proceeding, in which staff are granted the discretion to determine whether the county signature requirement is preempted or rendered invalid under federal law. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a maximum setback shown on a preliminary plat was not required by law but rather was voluntarily agreed to by the property owner as an accommodation to the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife prior to its and the county's adoption of a setback requirement to protect wildlife habitat, and there is no evidence that the setback was to be measured in any particular way from the county road, a county need not require that the setback be measured in precisely the way shown on the plat. In that circumstance, the county may look at the underlying purpose for the setback and not require that the setback be measured solely from a short segment of the partitioned property's county road frontage. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 62 Or LUBA 165 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In making a decision on a land use application, a local government is required to determine whether the application complies with all applicable land use approval criteria at the time it renders a decision on the application. A local government is not entitled to include a general condition that requires a successful applicant to come back to the county each time a land use regulation that was not considered is discovered after the original approval decision has become final. Kersey v. Lake County, 62 Or LUBA 239 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Even if a local government lacks authority under its code to modify the location of a driveway allowed under a previous permit approval, and can only modify express conditions of permit approval, petitioner does not demonstrate error where the permit included an express condition of approval limiting the use to that proposed by the applicant, including the location of the driveway, and thus modifying the location is a modification of the condition of approval. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a zoning ordinance expressly prohibits a county from issuing a use permit as a precondition of commencing mining until the applicant secures a state agency approval for a reclamation plan, the local government's failure to include such a requirement in the conditions attached to its conditional use and site plan approval decision is harmless error. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions of approval are not too vague under the Court of Appeals' reasoning in Sisters Forest Planning Committee v. Deschutes Cty., 198 Or App 311, 108 P3d 1175 (2005), where the conditions of approval are not any more vague than many of the standards they were imposed to address. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a road improvement condition is imposed on a two-phase subdivision and the county subsequently approves phase I without the required road improvement and approves a partition in place of phase II without requiring compliance with the road improvement condition, the road improvement condition may not be extended to apply to a partition of one of the parcels in the partition that was approved in place of phase II of the subdivision. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where there is substantial evidence in the record that an applicant is not precluded as a matter of law from obtaining state and federal permits, a local government does not err in finding that an applicable comprehensive plan provision that has the legal effect of requiring the applicant to secure state and federal permits is satisfied by imposing a condition of approval that the applicant secure such permits. Citizens for Responsible Development v. City of The Dalles, 59 Or LUBA 369 (2009).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government is not obligated under ORS 197.522 to utilize a rough sketch of a possible subdivision configuration to impose conditions to grant subdivision approval where the sketch would only permit approval of a speculative subdivision that is only potentially consistent with other subdivision approval criteria. Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the permission of an adjoining private landowner is necessary to provide access to proposed development, the applicant need not submit evidence that the adjoining landowner has granted permission or that it is feasible for the landowner to grant permission, as long as such permission is not precluded as a matter of law and the local government imposes conditions ensuring that permission will be obtained prior to final development approval. Holbrook v. City of Rockaway Beach, 58 Or LUBA 179 (2009).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A code provision stating that permitted types of traffic impact mitigation "may include such improvements" as paving, curbing, contributions to traffic signals, etc. is not an exclusive list, and does not preclude a county from requiring an applicant to contribute money toward a future improvement project instead of requiring the applicant to actually construct the improvement. Western Land & Cattle, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 295 (2009).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Remand is necessary where a county's findings approving a personal use airport rely heavily on a proposed condition limiting operations at a personal use airport to 20 flights per month, but the county failed to impose such a condition. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A code provision requiring that the city shall not grant permit approval for property with an existing violation unless the violation is rectified as part of the proposed development may be satisfied by a condition of approval requiring a property line adjustment that will rectify the violation. The local government is not required to deny the permit application, require the applicant to obtain a property line adjustment, and then file a second permit application. McConnell v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 280 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a city approves a floodplain permit to construct a driveway within a floodplain, the city does not err in conditioning approval on obtaining a separate encroachment permit from the city to authorize encroachment of a portion of the driveway into a public right-of-way. Such a condition does not impermissibly "defer" any determination of compliance with the floodplain permit before the city. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 55 Or LUBA 350 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Provided local law does not dictate a different result, local governments generally may approve a proposed development of land after providing any required notice and hearings−without finding that the proposal complies with all relevant approval criteria−so long as the local government defers the required findings to a later stage and ensures that a second opportunity for any required notice and public hearing is provided before the required findings are adopted at that later stage. Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 55 Or LUBA 472 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. It may not be appropriate to grant conditional approval while deferring required findings to a subsequent approval stage, even where there will be a full public right to participate in the subsequent approval stage, where the initial decision has the effect of rendering the subsequent review moot or prevents meaningful review. However, where the initial decision has no legal or preclusive effect on the subsequent review, such conditional approval provides no basis for reversal or remand. Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 55 Or LUBA 472 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government finds that an access standards is met and imposes a condition of approval requiring a formal survey of property to ensure that access to a proposed subdivision does not infringe on adjacent property, that is not the same thing as deferring a finding of compliance with that access standard to a later stage of the approval process. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 54 Or LUBA 54 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Approval of a cellular tower with the roadway that will be necessary to provide access with a condition of approval that the applicant seek and obtain an easement to construct the road is appropriate, where the record demonstrates that it is feasible for the applicant to secure the required easement. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government impermissibly defers a finding of compliance with an approval standard requiring that the proposed use will not impose an undue burden on the transportation system, where the local government makes no findings of compliance with respect to a disputed intersection, but instead imposes conditions of approval requiring the applicant to submit a traffic study to determine impacts on the intersection, and to execute a development agreement determining the applicant's contribution to improve the intersection, under a process that does not provide for a hearing or public participation. Western Express v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 571 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The first of three options under Rhyne v. Multnomah County, 23 Or LUBA 442 (1992), is to find that "feasible solutions to identified problems exist" and impose necessary conditions to ensure compliance with approval standards. LUBA will reject a claim that a local government has implicitly exercised the first option under Rhyne, where there is no evidence in the record that the proposed use complies with a particular approval standard, and no findings of compliance or feasibility of compliance. Western Express v. Umatilla County, 54 Or LUBA 571 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government errs in deferring a requirement for submission of a geotechnical analysis to a later stage of the proceedings that does not provide for notice or hearing. Township 13 Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Waldport, 53 Or LUBA 250 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval requiring certain actions may not be necessary, where the decision approves a site plan or similar document that proposes such actions for approval. However, that principle does not apply to recommendations in a forest plan that was submitted into the record but was not submitted for approval and was not approved. To have binding effect, recommendations in the forest plan must be imposed as specific conditions of approval. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under Rhyne v. Multnomah County, 23 Or LUBA 442 (1992), one of the options that is potentially available to a local government facing evidentiary uncertainty regarding whether a land use approval standard is met is to find that feasible solutions exist to identified problems and impose conditions if necessary to ensure that those feasible solutions are later developed and implemented. Gillette v. Lane County, 52 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government finds that a local approval standard will be met by imposing conditions of approval that the local government itself will ultimately enforce, the record must demonstrate that it is feasible for the proposed use to satisfy that condition. However, where a condition of approval requires that an applicant secure a state agency permit, the record need only demonstrate that the state agency permit is not precluded as a matter of law. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. While the fact that a proposed development would be inconsistent with private CC&Rs is not a basis, in and of itself, for reversal or remand, the fact that a condition of approval necessary to meet approval criteria is not feasible because the condition cannot be satisfied because it violates CC&Rs may be a basis for reversal or remand. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 51 Or LUBA 194 (2006).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a petitioner claims that a sewer provider does not have an easement across his property to reach necessary access to a sewer main, a finding that such an easement does exist, that the easement could be condemned if necessary, and imposition of a condition of approval requiring that the easement be obtained is sufficient to establish that it is feasible to provide sewer service. Stoloff v. City of Portland, 51 Or LUBA 560 (2006).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Technical revisions to a tentative subdivision plan need not be decided with public participation, and a condition of tentative subdivision plan approval requiring that, prior to submittal of the final plat, county staff will "red-line" the plat and return to applicant's surveyor for corrections is not an impermissible deferral of findings to the second step of a two-step process. Angius v. Washington County, 50 Or LUBA 33 (2005).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. There is no generally applicable requirement that conditions of approval be stated in clear and objective language, or impose only mandatory, unambiguous, easily enforced obligations. Sisters Forest Planning Comm. v. Deschutes County, 48 Or LUBA 78 (2004).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Failure to adopt findings addressing a comprehensive plan policy requiring provision of preferential carpool and vanpool parking for new commercial uses is not a basis for remand, where the code leaves details of parking lot construction and striping to the city engineer at building permit review, the challenged decision requires the applicant to comply with all code parking requirements, and the petitioner offers no reason that the city engineer cannot require the applicant to provide carpool and vanpool parking as part of building permit review. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a county code requires the "development proposal" to include a survey and assessment of archaeological sites and, if indicated, a management plan, a condition requiring that a management plan be completed prior to final plat approval is not permissible where neither the code nor the condition provides an opportunity for public participation in final plat approvals. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In applying a standard that requires that development within 100 feet of a wetland minimize wildlife impacts, a county commits no error in finding that it is uncertain whether there are wetlands present and imposing a condition of approval that the subdivision applicant prepare a wetlands study and demonstrate that the standard is satisfied in a subsequent quasi-judicial administrative review before final plat approval. Willhite v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 340 (2004).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. As a general rule, local governments are not obligated to approve development that is inconsistent with applicable criteria, even if conditions of approval may be imposed that would render the proposal consistent with applicable criteria. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government's decision that it is feasible to satisfy an approval criterion that a private road can be dedicated to the public, by imposing conditions of approval, is supported by substantial evidence where: (1) the underlying easement requires a public dedication upon request; (2) the ownership of all property underlying the proposed road is demonstrated; and (3) all owners are bound by the public dedication request. Sisters Forest Planning Comm. v. Deschutes County, 45 Or LUBA 145 (2003).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under a code provision requiring a "mitigation site plan" if development results in unavoidable significant detrimental environmental impacts, it is not error for the city to consider proposed mitigation in finding that the development will not result in significant impacts, and thus avoid the requirement for a mitigation site plan, where that approach does not avoid prescribed types of mitigation, and instead simply eliminates submission of redundant information. Bauer v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 210 (2003).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a city requires that a property owner grant an easement across its property to provide pedestrian access between a vacated street and an existing street as a condition of development approval, and determines that the easement will satisfy city requirements for connectivity, the city has established a nexus between the exaction and the city's legitimate governmental interest in ensuring adequate transportation connectivity. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In requiring an easement for a pedestrian walkway as a condition of development approval, a city may consider the impacts that reasonably flow from the approval granted, including the possible use of the walkway by employees of the development to access adjoining streets and by residents of neighboring properties to access the development on foot or by bicycle. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A city adequately quantifies the impact of a proposed development on the area's bicycle and pede strian transportation system and establishes that an exaction for a pedestrian walkway across the subject property is roughly proportional to the impact of the development where the city: (1) considers the types of uses in the vicinity and concludes that the walkway is necessary to allow access to a transit stop and other neighborhood amenities; (2) explains that persons working at or patronizing the development would be impeded from accessing a neighborhood attraction to the west of the subject property without the walkway; and (3) explains that the subject property could be developed as six individual lots, with sidewalks required for each, and the decision to combine the lots into one development has impacts on the city's transportation system that the required easement ameliorates. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A finding that a proposed parking layout may be relocated to expand the septic drainfield does not conflict with a condition requiring that parking shall be provided as shown in the site plan, where it is clear that the purpose of the condition is to satisfy a standard addressing the number of parking spaces, and not the location of the parking lot. Baker v. Lane County, 43 Or LUBA 493 (2003).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a permit approval criterion requires that certain driveway improvements be made to ensure emergency vehicle access, it is error to simply approve the permit conditioned on future construction of the required driveway improvements, where there is focused testimony during the permit evidentiary hearing that the easement the permit applicant intended to rely on would not permit the required improvements. The permit findings must address the testimony and explain why it is reasonable to assume the required improvements can be made. Harshman v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 330 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A reasonable person could conclude that a combination of conditions requiring that most classes begin outside the peak morning hour and prohibiting drop-offs during the peak morning hour is sufficient to ensure that drop-offs associated with a proposed high school will not impact a failing intersection during the peak morning hour. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the local government adopts a finding of current compliance and imposes conditions to ensure compliance with an approval criterion, that those conditions require additional informal review by local government staff does not mean that the local government has impermissibly "deferred" a finding of compliance with that criterion to a later stage without notice or hearing. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Draft transportation and parking demand plans for a proposed school are substantial evidence supporting a finding of compliance with a "safe streets" approval standard, notwithstanding that the conditions of approval require that the school submit and city staff approve final plans in which the city might impose additional or different terms. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under a code standard that allows only de minimis traffic impacts on failing intersections, the county is in a position to find compliance with the standard only if it quantifies the traffic volume that is expected to pass through intersections notwithstanding conditions designed to avoid impacts and determines that such traffic volume is de minimis, or if it imposes conditions sufficient on their face to ensure that expected impacts will be de minimis. K.B. Recycling, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 29 (2001).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions imposed to ensure that only de minimis traffic volumes from a proposed recycling facility impact nearby failing intersections during certain times are insufficient and unenforceable, where the county's decision fails to (1) define what de minimis traffic volumes are, (2) specify the times when the conditions apply, and (3) impose conditions or identify solutions that a reasonable person would find adequate to ensure that traffic associated with the facility uses a longer alternate route rather than the short direct route through failing intersections. K.B. Recycling, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 29 (2001).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a city's approval of an adjustment to a building facade setback standard is conditioned in part on a requirement that the approved building permit reflect the same architectural amenities depicted in exhibits submitted with the adjustment application, that condition of approval is sufficient to ensure that those amenities will actually be constructed. Lee v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 498 (2001).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a county's findings simply state that conditions are being imposed to address identified environmental impacts from a proposed aggregate extraction site that must be addressed under local approval criteria, but the conditions that are imposed have nothing to do with the cited environmental concerns, the decision must be remanded to the county. Donnell v. Union County, 39 Or LUBA 419 (2001).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A decision that does not apply the statewide planning goals, a comprehensive plan provision or a land use regulation, but rather applies a condition of approval in a previously approved land use permit, does not fall within the statutory definition of a "land use decision." Frevach Land Company v. Multnomah County, 38 Or LUBA 729 (2000).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A code provision that authorizes a city to condition permit approval on execution of a waiver of remonstrance is not a permit approval criterion. Where the applicant expresses opposition to executing such a waiver of remonstrance, the city may condition its approval of the permit on execution of the waiver of remonstrance, but the city may not deny the permit based on such expressions of opposition. Oregon Entertainment Corp. v. City of Beaverton, 38 Or LUBA 440 (2000).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local code provision allows approval of a conditional use notwithstanding significant adverse impacts on abutting properties if the proposed use is in the public interest and conditions are imposed to balance any conflicting interests, the local government's determination of what conditions are needed to mitigate conflicts entails judgment calls that are not subject to precise calculation. LUBA will affirm the local government's decision regarding such mitigating conditions if a reasonable person could conclude, based on the evidence presented, that the conditions are appropriate to balance the conflicting interests. Rogue Valley Manor v. City of Medford, 38 Or LUBA 266 (2000).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Imposition of an ineffective condition as part of a comprehensive plan map amendment may result in remand where the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with a relevant approval criterion. However, such an ineffective condition does not provide a basis for reversal or remand where it is not shown that the condition is necessary to ensure compliance with plan map amendment approval criteria. Neighbors for Livability v. City of Beaverton, 37 Or LUBA 408 (1999).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In applying a local provision based on the no significant change/increased cost standard, the local government is not required to perform the impossible task of proving a negative or to quantify how much imposed conditions will reduce conflicts with farm uses below a certain threshold. It need only affirmatively consider the impacts of a proposed use on farm or forest practices, and in so doing, consider whether the use will force a significant change or significantly increase the cost of those practices. Gutoski v. Lane County, 34 Or LUBA 219 (1998).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. When a local governing body determines that a condition imposed in connection with an earlier land use decision either has or has not been complied with, but does not base its determination on the interpretation and application of land use regulations, the determination is not a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Mar-Dene Corp. v. City of Woodburn, 33 Or LUBA 245 (1997).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A county impermissibly defers a finding that a proposed dwelling complies with applicable land use design standards when, in the absence of substantial evidence supporting a finding of compliance, the county imposes a condition that the dwelling's compliance with design standards be reviewed at a later building permit stage. Pekarek v. Wallowa County, 33 Or LUBA 225 (1997).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the city makes a determination that it is feasible to comply with a local code standard requiring that each lot in a proposed subdivision be buildable, it may defer addressing engineering details to a later date. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. When compliance with a particular code standard is deferred, a condition to ensure eventual compliance is required even when compliance depends upon the local government rather than the applicant. DLCD v. Tillamook County, 33 Or LUBA 163 (1997).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The county properly approved a conditional use permit for a golf course and recreational vehicle campground where it determined the feasibility of compliance with an applicable approval standard and imposed a condition to ensure that compliance. Just v. Linn County, 32 Or LUBA 325 (1997).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local code requirement that a solid waste disposal site must be screened from view is satisfied by a condition requiring the applicant to screen the facility itself, but not the entire property. Richards-Kreitzberg v. Marion County, 32 Or LUBA 76 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where there is no evidence regarding the nature and scope of a proposed development, the city cannot rely upon conditions of approval in finding compliance with a comprehensive plan policy. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A city cannot determine there will be compliance with a criterion prohibiting adverse impacts on residential zones by imposing a condition that requires abatement of that adverse impact. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In order to satisfy a local code provision that requires compliance with state agency codes, the city must find which state codes contain approval criteria, and also find that as a matter of law, the applicants are not precluded from obtaining such state agency permits. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditioning approval on the satisfactory outcome of a separate administrative process does not preclude a finding of compliance with a zoning code standard, as long as compliance is found to be feasible and that finding is based on substantial evidence. McArthur v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 309 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions of approval requiring Tri-Met to install restrooms and drinking fountains for the westside corridor project are not "reasonable and necessary" within the meaning of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), because those improvements are not required by the final environmental impact statement, and the project can be completed and operate without the required improvements. Tri-County Metro Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 31 Or LUBA 214 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions of approval requiring Tri-Met to install an enhanced trackway and esplanade for the westside corridor project are not "reasonable and necessary" within the meaning of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), because the project can be completed and operate without the required improvements. Tri-County Metro Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 31 Or LUBA 214 (1996).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. If a city relies on the preservation of open space to make a finding that there will be adequate buffering between commercial and residential uses, the city must condition approval on the designation of a specifically described parcel as open space. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Whether or not a local government has authority to design and construct a road owned by another jurisdiction has no bearing on whether the local government can condition development approval upon a finding that the road be able to accommodate a proposed development. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition imposed on a mineral and aggregate operation does not violate ORS 215.253(1) simply because it has the potential of impacting some farm uses. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Nothing in ORS chapter 215 requires a conditional use process before a county can impose on the application of a mineral and aggregate overlay zone conditions requiring minor road improvements of the type listed in ORS 215.283(1)(L), which "may be established" in any EFU-zoned area. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government decision that states it "reflects the historic use of" the subject property, and imposes certain limitations on the operation of a nonconforming use on that property, is not the equivalent of a determination regarding the nature and extent of the use existing on the property when restrictive zoning was first applied. Suydam v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 273 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government may properly grant permit approval based on either (1) a finding that an applicable approval standard is satisfied, or (2) a finding that it is feasible to satisfy an applicable approval standard and the imposition of conditions necessary to ensure that the standard will be satisfied. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government relies on particular features to assure compliance of a proposed use with approval standards, it must assure there is an adequate reason to assume such features actually will be part of the use. More than testimony by the applicant expressing willingness to provide such features is required. Penland v. Josephine County, 29 Or LUBA 213 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. When the evidentiary support for imposition of a condition of approval is challenged, LUBA must determine whether the evidence in the record would lead a reasonable person to conclude there is a need for the condition to further a relevant planning purpose. Carter v. Umatilla County, 29 Or LUBA 181 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the local government wishes to defer a determination of compliance with an applicable approval standard it must ensure that the later approval process provides any statutorily or locally required notice and an opportunity for input. Hilderbrand v. Marion County, 28 Or LUBA 703 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where conditions of a prior nonforest dwelling approval do not require a determination of compliance with any discretionary land use standard, the fact that a building permit may only be issued after it is determined that such conditions are satisfied provides no basis for LUBA's jurisdiction. Broderson v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 645 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. There is no generally applicable legal standard requiring a local government to have a "substantial or reasonable basis" for declining to impose a condition proposed by a party to a local government land use proceeding. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the challenged decision does not determine the proposal complies with mandatory approval standards applicable to the proposal or that compliance with such standards is feasible, the local government may not defer a determination of compliance with such standards to the city engineer, to be made in a process not involving notice or hearing. Shapiro v. City of Talent, 28 Or LUBA 542 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a decision to eliminate conditions of approval requires local review under code zone change standards, the decision is a land use decision, and not a limited land use decision. Lamm v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 468 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Limitations on a local government's authority over development applications must be specifically expressed in the local code. Lamm v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 468 (1995).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In order to defer determinations of compliance with mandatory approval standards to a later stage where no public hearing is contemplated, the local government must first determine that compliance with those standards is possible. Welch v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 439 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. In addressing a code requirement concerning visual impacts, a local government is not required to establish that every condition imposed will mitigate all visual impacts. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Findings need not be perfect, and conditions may be imposed to assure compliance with approval standards. However, LUBA must be able to determine from the findings, conditions and evidence in the record that the relevant approval standards are met. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. If a condition is necessary for consistency with a final order approving a light rail transit (LRT) facility, under Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), a local government is required to impose such a condition in approving a local permit for the LRT facility, and the limitations in the second sentence of that section do not apply. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), a "necessary" condition is a condition required for a light rail transit project to meet applicable permit criteria in a local government's comprehensive plan or code. However, such a condition cannot be imposed if by itself, or together with other conditions, it would prevent implementation of the approved light rail transit project. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval that either a portable or flush toilet be provided, depending on what DEQ rules require, is sufficient to assure compliance with a code requirement that the site be served by adequate sewerage facilities, where petitioner does not contend that a flush toilet cannot be approved under DEQ rules, but rather argues only that the existing portable toilet violates applicable rules. Cole v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 62 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A code section authorizing conditions "requiring design features which minimize environmental impacts * * *" is sufficient authority to impose a condition that an identified wetland be crossed by a bridge rather than a road placed on fill. Where the record includes testimony expressing concern about placing fill in the wetland, the record is sufficient to show such a condition furthers a valid planning purpose. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. ORS 197.763(1) does not require petitioners to raise with specificity, prior to the close of the evidentiary hearing, issues regarding aspects of a condition of approval that were not imposed until the governing body adopted the local government's final decision. Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Absent other limitations, if a local code gives local decision makers authority to impose conditions of approval that protect the public from adverse effects associated with a proposed use, this authority to impose conditions is not limited to conditions required to establish compliance with a particular permit approval standard. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Code provisions that allow a local government to impose conditions of approval "reasonably calculated to fulfill public needs," and to require right-of-way dedication and road improvements, authorize the local government to require modification of a proposed subdivision plat to eliminate a one-foot "spite strip" separating a new street serving the subdivision from the adjoining property. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval requiring elimination of a one-foot "spite strip" separating a new street serving a subdivision from the adjoining property is reasonably related to the impacts of the proposed subdivision and, therefore, does not effect an unconstitutional "taking" under either the United States or Oregon Constitution. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a proposed subdivision will add traffic to an abutting arterial street, although direct access to the subdivision will be provided by local streets, a local government approval condition requiring that the developer construct sidewalks, storm sewers and other frontage improvements along the portion of the arterial abutting the subdivision is reasonably related to the impacts of the proposed subdivision and is not an unconstitutional taking. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government relies on conditions to ensure that use of an approved parking structure is limited to "short term parking," as required by its code, any interpretations of code provisions necessary to support its determination that the code limitation to "short term parking" is satisfied must be set out in the challenged decision or supporting findings, not in the local government's brief. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Although a local government may impose conditions and rely on such conditions to determine a development application meets applicable approval standards, there is no general requirement that a local government must apply conditions to modify a proposal so that applicable standards are met, rather than deny the application. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Elevation plans submitted by an applicant to establish compliance with code "physical compatibility" requirements become part of the applicant's conditional use proposal, and it is not necessary for the local government to impose compliance with these plans as a condition of approval in order to rely on them in approving the proposed development. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 106 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. That a condition of approval contains an ambiguous term does not, of itself, establish the condition is unconstitutionally vague. Rather, some ambiguity is tolerated where the ambiguous language of a condition is circumscribed by reference to specific, non-vague regulations. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The issue in determining whether a condition of approval is unconstitutionally vague is whether a reasonable applicant could understand what must be done to comply with the condition. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Read in the context of a local code scheme governing LIDs which includes a specific remonstrance process, a condition of permit approval requiring that petitioner not file a remonstrance against the formation of an LID means only that a remonstrance under the local code may not be filed, but does not prohibit the presentation of oral objections or the filing of any other written objection to a proposed LID. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where petitioners do not challenge findings that a condition of approval is reasonably related to mitigation of impacts associated with the particular development proposal, petitioners fail to establish the challenged action is overbroad. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval limiting petitioners' rights to remonstrate against LIDs does not impermissibly infringe on petitioners' First Amendment rights to freedom of expression where the condition does not require the local decision maker to disregard petitioners' political views about LIDs and leaves petitioners free to object to the formation of a proposed LID in a variety of ways other than by remonstrance. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of permit approval that prohibits remonstrance against the formation of an LID, but does not proscribe other kinds of objections to an LID, only limits the manner in which expression may be exercised and does not directly and absolutely restrain the exercise of free expression in violation of Article I, section 8, of the Oregon Constitution. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of permit approval prohibiting remonstrance against the formation of an LID does not violate ORS 260.665 (protecting voting rights) where petitioners are neither prevented from voting nor required to vote in any particular manner. Larsson v. City of Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 515 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government determined, in a proceeding satisfying state and local requirements for notice and hearing, that the proposed use will comply with applicable access standards, based on conditions requiring subsequent preparation and approval of a plan for access improvements necessary to solve an identified sight distance problem, compliance with such approval conditions may be determined by the local government technical staff, without notice or hearing. Eppich v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 498 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government relies on particular features of a proposed use to assure compliance with approval standards, it must assure there is an adequate reason to assume such features actually will be part of the proposal. Collins v. Klamath County, 26 Or LUBA 434 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government denies a request to remove a condition placed on a previous land use approval, based on its determination that neither of two sets of circumstances giving rise to the condition has changed, and petitioner challenges the local government's determination concerning only one set of circumstances, LUBA will affirm the local government's decision. Livingston v. Jackson County, 26 Or LUBA 395 (1994).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. ORS 215.130(2) allows cities to adopt contingent plan and zoning designations for property to be annexed in the future, but it does not allow cities to grant contingent permits for property to be annexed in the future. Recht v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 316 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where LUBA determines a condition of approval was erroneously imposed, but rejects all other assignments of error, a remand rather than reversal nevertheless is required, if LUBA is unable to determine whether the local government relied on the erroneous condition of approval in concluding that all applicable approval criteria are met. Louisiana Pacific v. Umatilla County, 26 Or LUBA 247 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under ORS 197.835(7)(a)(D) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), LUBA must defer to a local government's interpretation of "applicable law" adopted by the local government, regardless of whether that applicable law is a zoning ordinance or conditions of approval imposed by a prior quasi-judicial order. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government order granting subdivision preliminary plat approval defers a determination of compliance with a particular approval standard, and also allows final plat approval to occur in phases, the local government may interpret that order as allowing it to grant final plat approval for a phase, so long as each lot in the phase for which final plat approval is sought has been found to comply with the deferred standard. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the applicant submits a drainage plan for a proposed subdivision to a local government, and the local government relies on that drainage plan in determining compliance with a local drainage standard in its order granting subdivision approval, the drainage plan is effectively made part of the approved subdivision plat. In these circumstances, it is not necessary for the local government to adopt a separate condition of approval requiring compliance with the drainage plan. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. That an approved wetland mitigation plan includes property that was not within the development application, does not mean that a local government may not rely upon the wetland mitigation plan as a condition of approval of the development application. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. That a challenged decision granting subdivision approval fails to demonstrate feasibility of compliance with an approval condition requiring that a subdivision street provide "no worse" access to an adjoining property than is currently provided to that adjoining property provides no basis for reversal or remand, where assuring "no worse" access is not required by any applicable approval standard. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of partition approval requiring consolidation of existing driveways into a single driveway to address comprehensive plan and local code policies concerning traffic safety is justified, even though the property is developed and new development is not proposed as part of the partition request, where the property could be developed more intensively in the future. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of partition approval requiring that three existing driveways presently serving property to be partitioned be consolidated into a single driveway does not "take" a cognizable property interest, within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution or Article I, section 18, of the Oregon Constitution. Such a condition simply requires that a property owner exercise the property right of access differently. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where there is a reasonable relationship between the development potential of a parcel to be divided and the impacts reasonably attributable to the divided parcel on the one hand, and the city's need to respond to legitimate traffic concerns on the other, and it would be more difficult to address such concerns when there are three parcels rather than a single parcel, notwithstanding the lack of current plans to develop the property further, a condition requiring consolidation of existing driveways is appropriate. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A condition of approval requiring that not more than 1000 square feet of an existing structure be partitioned for use in conjunction with a home occupation is sufficient to assure compliance with a local code provision requiring that home occupations occupy no more than 1000 square feet of an accessory building. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A permit approval condition that amendments to the approved master plan must be approved by the planning department is not inconsistent with, and does not eliminate, the right established by the local code to appeal a decision by the planning director on such an administrative action to the planning commission. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions may be imposed on a proposed activity where the conditions are authorized by the local code, are reasonably related to the proposed use and reasonably further a legitimate planning purpose. Skydive Oregon v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 294 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a condition of approval imposing a fine for a violating the terms of a conditional use permit, regardless of the amount of actual damage sustained due to the violation, is not specifically authorized by the local code, such condition is beyond the local government's authority to impose. Skydive Oregon v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 294 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. While a local government is free to impose conditions to enable it to approve a development application, it is not required to do so and may, instead, chose to deny development that, as proposed, does not satisfy relevant standards. Decuman v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 152 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Under ORS 197.828(2)(a), when the evidentiary support for a condition of approval is challenged, LUBA must determine whether the evidence in the record could lead a reasonable person to conclude that considering the impacts of the proposed development, there is a need for the condition to further a legitimate planning purpose. Sherwood Baptist Church v. City of Sherwood, 24 Or LUBA 502 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Both the Oregon and U.S. Constitutions require that there be a "reasonable relationship" between a challenged condition of approval and the impacts of, or needs generated by, the proposed development. Sherwood Baptist Church v. City of Sherwood, 24 Or LUBA 502 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The U.S. Constitution imposes a requirement that there be an "essential nexus" between the legitimate public purpose for which a development application could be denied, and the condition imposed. Sherwood Baptist Church v. City of Sherwood, 24 Or LUBA 502 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. It is a local government's final written decision that is subject to LUBA's review. That conditions imposed in the local government's final written decision were not discussed in the decision maker's deliberations does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government may, by imposing conditions or otherwise, defer a final determination concerning compliance with an applicable permit approval standard to a later stage. However, if the decision to be made at the later stage is itself discretionary, the approval process for the later stage must provide the statutorily required notice and opportunity for hearing, even though the code may not require such notice and hearing. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local government finds that approval criteria will be met if certain conditions are imposed, and those conditions are requirements to obtain state agency permits, a decision approving the subject application simply requires that there be substantial evidence in the record that the applicant is not precluded from obtaining such state agency permits as a matter of law. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Absent code provisions to the contrary, that local government decision makers retain authority to impose conditions of approval, does not require that they develop conditions to limit or modify an application to achieve compliance with applicable approval criteria. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. When conducting a multistage permit approval process, if a local government finds compliance, or feasibility of compliance, with all approval criteria during the first stage (where statutory notice and public hearing requirements are observed), it is entirely appropriate to impose conditions of approval to assure those criteria are met and to defer responsibility for assuring compliance with those conditions to planning and engineering staff as part of a later stage. Rhyne v. Multnomah County, 23 Or LUBA 442 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the local code states "nothing construed herein shall be deemed to require the [local government] to grant a Conditional Use Permit," a local government may deny a conditional use permit if the development, as proposed, does not satisfy applicable approval standards. In such instance, the local government is not required to impose conditions on the proposed development to attain compliance with the approval standards. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 23 Or LUBA 159 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the plan map designation for property is changed in a manner that allows residential development which could greatly exceed the capacity of schools serving the property, the plan map amendment must be conditioned in some way to limit the impact on schools or to require that such limits be imposed prior to development. Nonbinding promises by the applicant are not sufficient. Neste Resins Corp. v. City of Eugene, 23 Or LUBA 55 (1992).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A permit condition stating all log trucks must "depart the [subject] property as near to 4:00 a.m. as possible" is correctly interpreted to require that all log trucks must leave the subject property at 4:00 a.m., unless it is not possible to do so. Such a condition is violated where log trucks departed from the property on several occasions at 6:30 a.m. for the convenience of the applicant's logging operation. Marson v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 497 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Findings that a code standard requiring that development have a minimal adverse impact on the livability of adjoining property are adequate with regard to impact on views from adjoining properties where the findings explain that a sight obscuring fence will block the only view of the development from a window of a house on the adjoining property and a condition of approval is imposed requiring construction of such a sight obscuring fence. Goodrich v. Jackson County, 22 Or LUBA 434 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A code provision that developers "may be required to participate financially in improving [off-site] roadways sufficient to accommodate traffic generated by the development" applies to both improvement of existing off-site roads and construction of new off-site roads, and is directly applicable to the local government's imposition of a condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval requiring the subdivider to pay for construction of an off-site road. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 360 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. When the evidentiary support for imposition of a condition of approval is challenged, what LUBA must determine is whether the evidence in the record would lead a reasonable person to conclude that there is a need for the condition to further a relevant planning purpose. Wastewood Recyclers v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 258 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. If the challenged decision does not explain the purpose of a condition, it is more difficult for LUBA to conclude imposition of the condition is supported by substantial evidence in the record. Wastewood Recyclers v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 258 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where an applicant seeks approval for development outside of a "stream corridor area," but has already placed related development within the "stream corridor area" on the same property without obtaining necessary local permits, the local government has authority to impose conditions on approval of the applicant's proposed development requiring that the unauthorized development be removed or that necessary local permits be obtained for the unauthorized development. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 166 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a local code provides "[t]he Review Authority may impose conditions on any Type II or III development approval," and the proposed access requires Type III development approval procedures, the local government may impose conditions on approval of the proposed access. Cummins v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 129 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. While there is no general requirement that a local government adopt findings justifying its decision to impose conditions of approval, where petitioner raises an issue below concerning whether a local government can properly impose conditions of approval, the local government must address that issue in its findings. Cummins v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 129 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where applicable plan and land use regulations allow a local government to impose conditions in granting land use approval, conditions of approval may be imposed to achieve legitimate planning purposes. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Although detailed findings are not always required to justify conditions of land use approval, the evidentiary record must be sufficient to demonstrate a connection between the condition imposed and the planning purpose served by the condition. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the evidentiary record demonstrates that the proposed expansion of a medical clinic is needed to provide adequate facilities for existing patients and staff and would not result in additional patients or staff, the local government improperly conditioned approval of required plan and zoning map amendments on the clinic's agreement to relinquish a previously granted approval for parking lot egress onto an adjoining street. Olson Memorial Clinic v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 418 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. LUBA will not conclude that a hearings officer, in reviewing a request for conditional use approval, improperly relied on prior land use violations by the applicant to refuse to consider approval with conditions, unless such refusal is clearly stated in the decision. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where compliance with applicable discretionary permit approval standards will require detailed plans or studies of the type typically required at the time a building permit is requested, it may be possible for the local government to find at the time of discretionary permit approval that it is feasible to comply with the standards and to defer to a later stage selection of the particular technical solution to achieve the standard. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government may impose conditions and rely on those conditions in determining that an application for discretionary permit approval meets applicable approval standards. However, there is no general requirement that a local government must apply conditions to modify a proposal so that applicable standards are met. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The requirement that conditions imposed to ensure that a proposed nonfarm use will not force a significant change in, or significantly increase the cost of, accepted farm or forest practices on surrounding lands "be clear and objective," does not necessarily require a local government to adopt findings explaining why conditions imposed for this purpose are clear and objective. Washington Co. Farm Bureau v. Washington Co., 21 Or LUBA 51 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where a code requires that conditions imposed be "clear and objective," but does not define "clear and objective," such conditions are "clear and objective" if their application does not require the exercise of "any significant factual or legal judgment." Washington Co. Farm Bureau v. Washington Co., 21 Or LUBA 51 (1991).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Conditions of approval must have some reasonable connection with the use proposed. A condition requiring a demonstration that adequate on-site vehicular circulation will be possible has such a reasonable connection to a proposed expansion of an existing use that may make internal vehicular circulation more difficult or impossible in view of planned highway intersection improvements. Wheeler v. Marion County, 20 Or LUBA 379 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where the local code establishes procedures and notice requirements for hearings on administrative actions, but does not require that determinations of compliance with conditions imposed on administrative action approvals themselves be processed as administrative actions, proceedings to determine compliance with such conditions are not required to follow the hearing and notice procedures for administrative actions. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 20 Or LUBA 208 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where LUBA determined in a previous appeal that a local government properly found compliance with applicable code standards and, through conditions, deferred responsibility for developing particular technical solutions to the planning commission, and LUBA's decision was not appealed, the local government is entitled to determine compliance with the conditions of approval administratively, without notice and public hearing. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 20 Or LUBA 208 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where city regulations governing applications for conditional use approval do not make all contiguous property owned by an applicant subject to the conditional use review, and an applicant files a conditional use application for only a portion of his property, the city does not have authority to impose conditions on contiguous property owned by the applicant which is not the subject of the application. Goodman v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 289 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. Where no development is presently proposed, a local government does not improperly defer required determinations of compliance with site plan review criteria by requiring, in a condition of approval, that future development must comply with such criteria. Headley v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 109 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A city may rely on ORS 92.090(3), which states that a subdivision or partition may not be approved unless streets are "dedicated without any reservation," to require immediate, rather than future, dedication of required rights-of-way. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government may demonstrate compliance of a proposed use with an applicable standard by (1) determining that the proposal can comply with the standard, if certain conditions are imposed; and (2) imposing those conditions to ensure compliance. Eckis v. Linn County, 19 Or LUBA 15 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. The requirement to comply with ordinance criteria applicable to the resolution/conceptual site plan stage of the destination resort review process cannot be avoided by deferring those determinations to the preliminary development plan stage of the review process, through restatement of the first stage approval criteria as conditions of approval for the second stage. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.1.4 Permits – Approval Standards – Use of Conditions. A local government may demonstrate compliance with an approval criterion by (1) determining that the proposal can comply with the criterion, if certain conditions are imposed; and (2) relying on the imposition of those conditions to ensure compliance. However, a local government may not defer a determination of compliance with a mandatory approval criterion based on the expectation that more detailed information may be developed in the future to demonstrate compliance with the standard. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A county's reliance on an uncodified, "fact-dependent," "longstanding county policy" to conclude that the transfer of an illegally partitioned property to the owners of contiguous property constitutes a "de facto property line adjustment," eliminating the illegally partitioned property as a separate unit of land, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 656 (2020).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. In determining whether proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "incidental and subordinate to existing commercial farm use of the tract" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), a county errs in relying on a comparison of the frequency of commercial events with the frequency of commercial farming activity on the property to the exclusion of any relevant circumstances, including the nature, intensity, and economic value of the respective uses, that bear on whether the existing commercial farm use remains the predominant use of the tract. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 276 (2020).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. ORS 197.312(5)(a) does not provide an outright, unqualified entitlement to develop an accessory dwelling unit (ADU) on every property with a single-family dwelling; instead, that statute provides local governments some regulatory discretion in regulating ADUs that could have the effect of prohibiting an ADU on a particular property, so long as the regulation is reasonable and related to "siting and design." Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. Under ORS 197.312(5)(a), which requires cities to allow accessory dwelling units (ADUs) "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," while regulations prohibiting ADUs on alley access lots, requiring a minimum lot size for ADUs, requiring minimum lot dimensions for ADUs, and limiting ADU occupancy do not relate to "siting" or "design," regulations limiting the percentage of total lot area that can be vehicle use areas, limiting the number of garages or covered parking areas, limiting the dimensions of and requiring minimum setbacks for garages, and limiting driveway widths do relate to "siting" and "design." Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. For purposes of ORS 197.312(5)(a), which requires cities to allow accessory dwelling units (ADUs) "subject to reasonable local regulations relating to siting and design," the word "siting" describes a regulation that allows the city to specify the location of an ADU on a site, and it does not allow the city to regulate where in each of the city's residential zones ADUs are allowed based on factors such as traffic, livability, and existing density. Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 81 Or LUBA 193 (2020).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Establishing that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support the commercial farm uses or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A) is a relatively high hurdle: the county must find that the events are essential in order to maintain the existence of either the commercial farm uses on the subject property or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A demonstration that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support" an approved commercial activity in conjunction with farm use under ORS 215.283(2)(a), such as a brewery, is not sufficient to demonstrate that the events are "necessary to support" an "existing commercial farm use of the tract," such as the growing of filberts, for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), even where revenue from the brewery "supplements" revenue from the growing of filberts. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. Where state statute requires that a local government provide either a public hearing before ruling on an application for a statutory permit or an opportunity for an appeal that includes a de novo public hearing, although the local government may require a notice of appeal that sets forth with reasonable particularity the issues that the appealing party will raise at the hearing, the local government may not, consistent with the statute, (1) make that notice requirement a jurisdictional bar to obtaining the hearing, (2) limit the issues specified to five types of issues, or (3) approve or reject requests for hearings based on a qualitative assessment of how well the appellant has explained the issues specified. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 96 (2019).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. A county may not allow unlimited, successive one-year extensions of permits for residential development on resource land where state statute and regulation provide that such permits "shall be valid for four years" and that "[a]n extension" thereof "shall be valid for two years," where nothing in the legislative history suggests an intent to allow more than one extension. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 96 (2019).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirements for. A county decision determining vested rights involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land," and is therefore a "permit" decision under ORS 215.402(4). Such decisions must be processed under procedures consistent with ORS 215.416, regardless of whether a party's request for the "permit" decision is accompanied by requests for non-"permit" decisions, whether the request is labeled or easily identifiable as an "application" for a "permit," or whether the party affirmatively requests the required procedures. Gillette v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 549 (2019).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. LUBA will remand a decision by the county planning department approving conversion of a portion of an existing church into a "parsonage," a term which is undefined by state or local law, but which includes a kitchen, bedroom, and bathroom for the use by the church's pastor, where the county's decision fails to identify any land use standards that apply to the proposed use, and did not provide notice or an opportunity for a hearing or otherwise follow the procedures in ORS 215.416(11) without apparent explanation, and LUBA determines that the application for the proposed parsonage is an application for a "permit" as defined in ORS 215.402(4). Wetherell v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 33 (2018).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. ORS 197.312(5) is not limited to only applications for a statutory permit because Senate Bill 1051 does not cross reference or otherwise cite the definition of "permit" in ORS 227.160(2), and the ORS 227.160(2) definition of "permit" limits its use "[a]s used in ORS 227.160 to 227.186." Kamps-Hughes v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 457 (2018).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A local code provision that prohibits grading or development on portions of a site that exceed 20 percent is "clear enough for an applicant to know what [it] must show during the application process." Lee v. City of Portland, 57 Or App 798, 802, 646 P2d 662 (1982). Nothing in the language of ORS 227.173(1) requires that a method of measuring slope must be included in the provision in order to determine whether the 20 percent standard is met. SE Neighbors Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 68 Or LUBA 51 (2013).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Under ORS 215.416(3) and (11), when rendering a statutory land use permit decision, a county must provide a prior public hearing on the application, or provide notice and an opportunity for a de novo appeal after the statutory permit decision is rendered without a public hearing. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Where there is uncertainty about whether a local appeal is available but the local government advises a petitioner that it will provide a local appeal, that petitioner may safely exhaust that local appeal without fear of being advised later that the deadline for appealing the decision directly to LUBA expired while the petitioner exhausted the appeal that the local government provided but later determined should not have been provided. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A decision that extends a statutory permit may itself be a statutory permit if the extension decision is governed by standards that require the exercise of discretion. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A decision that extends a statutory permit may itself be a statutory permit if the extension is a request for "approval of a proposed development of land." Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Where a statutory permit by local law will become void if not acted on within a stated deadline, a decision to extend the permit for an additional term under discretionary criteria is itself a statutory permit. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Where local law does not require adherence to the notice and hearing or notice and local appeal procedures that apply to statutory permits, a local government does not err by adhering to those statutory notice and hearing or notice and local appeal procedures when it discovers that the decision it is being asked to adopt may qualify as a statutory permit. Bard v. Lane County, 63 Or LUBA 1 (2011).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A requirement that mining "not be allowed closer than one-quarter mile from any noise or dust sensitive use" is properly interpreted to impose a minimum setback, leaving the applicant to select the mining site so long as the site selected is at least one-quarter mile from any noise or dust sensitive use. Any attempt by the local government to interpret the standard to allow it unbridled discretion to enlarge the one-quarter-mile setback would likely run afoul of the ORS 215.416(8)(a) requirement that permit applications be approved or denied based on "standards." Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. ORS 215.416(8)(a) simply requires that permit approval standards be included in a county's land use regulations. The ORS 215.416(8)(b) requirement that permit standards that apply to needed housing be "clear and objective" does not apply to permits for other kinds of development. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. While ORS 227.178(3), as interpreted in Holland v. City of Cannon Beach, 154 Or App 450, 926 P2d 701 (1998), prohibits a local government from changing its position with respect to the applicability of approval standards during the proceedings on a permit application, neither the statute nor Holland prohibit a local government from reinterpreting the meaning of indisputably applicable approval standards. Bemis v. City of Ashland, 48 Or LUBA 42 (2004).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. The ORS 227.178(3) prohibition on "shifting the goal posts" and the prohibition described in Alexanderson v. Clackamas County, 126 Or App 549, 869 P2d 873 (1994), on reinterpretations of local provisions that are a "product of a design to act arbitrarily and inconsistently from case to case" are distinct and independent prohibitions, although both may be invoked in particular circumstances. Bemis v. City of Ashland, 48 Or LUBA 42 (2004).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A local code standard that prohibits development in wetlands does not violate the ORS 197.307(6) requirement for "clear and objective" approval standards for needed housing. Where an applicant seeks a variance to that local code prohibition against development in wetlands, ORS 197.307(6) does not prohibit application of subjective variance approval standards. Linstromberg v. City of Veneta, 47 Or LUBA 99 (2004).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A code criterion requiring that a proposal be shown to be compatible with the surrounding area and to not have more than a minimal impact on the livability and appropriate development of the surrounding area is not unconstitutionally vague and does not violate the ORS 227.173(1) requirement that permit approval criteria be included in the city's land use regulations. Oregon Entertainment Corp. v. City of Beaverton, 38 Or LUBA 440 (2000).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A city's decision violates ORS 227.173(1) where the city relies on "factors" or "considerations" that are unconnected to approval standards established in its land use regulations to deny a permit application. Ashley Manor Care Centers v. City of Grants Pass, 38 Or LUBA 308 (2000).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. To establish a challenge under ORS 227.173(1) or ORS 215.416(8), a petitioner must demonstrate that a standard is so vague that an applicant is unable to determine whether and how approval may be granted. McKenney v. Deschutes County, 37 Or LUBA 685 (2000).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A 3,500-square-foot memorial garden including nine-foot-high granite walls, landscaping and walkways causes a "material change in the use or appearance of land" and is thus "development" for purposes of determining whether approval of the proposed memorial is a permit as defined at ORS 227.160(2). Carlsen v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 614 (1999).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Cities may not adopt "stand alone" sets of discretionary approval criteria and apply those criteria to approve the development of land without regard to the requirements of ORS chapter 227, merely because those criteria are not codified in the city's development ordinance. Carlsen v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 614 (1999).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. City approval of a memorial garden pursuant to discretionary criteria embodied in a "siting policy" constitutes the discretionary approval of proposed development of land under city legislation or regulation and is thus a "permit" as defined at ORS 227.160(2), notwithstanding that the "siting policy" is not codified within the city's development ordinance. Carlsen v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 614 (1999).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. The failure of a city to codify a particular land use regulation within its zoning ordinance does not mean that the city has failed to "set forth" that regulation in the city's "development ordinance" as required by ORS 227.173(1). For purposes of ORS 227.173(1), the scope of the city's development ordinance is not a function of how the city's land use legislation is codified. Carlsen v. City of Portland, 36 Or LUBA 614 (1999).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. An application for an extension of a conditional use permit involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is subject to the requirement at ORS 215.416 that approval or denial of a permit be subject to standards and criteria, where the local code contains no standards governing permit extensions and thus grants unfettered discretion to the county to approve or deny the extension. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A local code conditional use permit standard requiring that "the characteristics of the proposed use will have minimal adverse impact on the livability, value, or appropriate development of abutting properties and the surrounding area" is not impermissibly vague. Brentmar v. Jackson County, 27 Or LUBA 453 (1994).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A zoning code requirement that certain comprehensive plan policies be complied with unless the applicant demonstrates there is "good cause" not to, is not impermissibly vague. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A code requirement that a parking structure be "consistent with the City's short term parking strategy" does not, in itself, satisfy the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit standards and criteria be set forth in development ordinances, because it explains nothing about the basis on which such an application will be approved or denied. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Where consistency with the city's "short term parking strategy" is a code requirement, a city cannot determine its "short term parking strategy" is something that underlies various provisions of its plan and code and cannot announce that strategy for the first time in a decision on a permit application. This violates the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit standards and criteria themselves must be set out in the city's development ordinances. BCT Partnership v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 278 (1994).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A local code provision that imposes "compatibility" as a permit approval criterion adequately informs interested parties of the basis on which an application will be approved or denied and, therefore, complies with ORS 215.416(8). Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A city code provision (1) requiring that certain "development * * * shall provide open space * * * approved by the city," (2) establishing a prioritized list of types of open space, and (3) providing an option to provide fees in lieu of open space, but failing to provide standards for determining whether to require open space or fees in lieu, violates the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit decisions be governed by standards in the city's code. Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. City code provisions defining open space broadly, listing "distinctive natural areas" as first priority open space and requiring that development preserve areas for open space are properly interpreted as violated by a proposal to locate a building foundation immediately next to a specimen tree designated as a "distinctive natural area." Under such provisions, a "distinctive natural area" is not limited to the tree itself, and the code provides sufficient standards to guide the city's decision making under ORS 227.173(1). Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A city code provision (1) requiring that certain "development * * * shall provide open space * * * approved by the city," and (2) establishing a prioritized list of types of open space, concluding with "other" open space, does not violate the requirement of ORS 227.173(1) that permit decisions be governed by standards in the city's code. Oswego Properties, Inc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 137 (1991).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. A petitioner does not waive its right under ORS 215.428(3) to have its application reviewed under the criteria in effect when the application was first submitted, where petitioner's statements in the proceedings to amend the criteria do not show petitioner was aware of such rights and petitioner did assert its rights before the planning commission and board of commissioners. Kirpal Light Satsang v. Douglas County, 18 Or LUBA 651 (1990).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. The analysis required to determine whether a local government decision concerning the development of land involves discretion, and is therefore a "permit" under ORS 215.402(4), is similar to the analysis required to determine whether the ministerial exception to the definition of land use decision stated in ORS 197.015(10)(b) applies. Kirpal Light Satsang v. Douglas County, 18 Or LUBA 651 (1990).

31.1.5 Permits – Approval Standards – Statutory Requirement for. Where the applicable land use regulations provide no definition of "private school," and other applicable approval standards require that buildings accessory to the school "be essential to the operation of a school," an application for a private school and accessory buildings requires the exercise of discretion and, therefore, is an application for a "permit," as that term is defined at ORS 215.402(4). Kirpal Light Satsang v. Douglas County, 18 Or LUBA 651 (1990).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. To some extent, the ministerial decision exclusion from LUBA's jurisdiction in ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) is separate and distinct from the building permit exclusion from LUBA's jurisdiction in ORS 197.015(10)(b)(B). Madrona Park, LLC v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 26 (2019).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. The statutory distinction between ORS 197.015(10)(b)(B) and ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) reflects a recognition that building permits are substantively different from more generic land use decisions and that the legislature intended that LUBA's jurisdiction over building permit decisions would be (1) limited and (2) evaluated under a different standard. Madrona Park, LLC v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 26 (2019).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where a city approves a building permit for a temporary mass shelter under the city's Housing Emergency Ordinance because it satisfies the development standards in the city's Central Employment (EX) zone, where the petitioner argues not that the EX zone development standards that the city applied in approving the building permit are not "clear and objective" but, rather, that the city was required but failed to apply other land use standards in approving the building permit, and where LUBA concludes that none of those other land use standards are applicable approval criteria, the city's decision is subject to the building permit exclusion from LUBA's jurisdiction in ORS 197.015(10)(b)(B). Madrona Park, LLC v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 26 (2019).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. LUBA will reject an argument that a building permit approval is a "permit" as defined at ORS 227.160(2) (discretionary approval of the development of land), where all arguably discretionary determinations regarding the nature and categorization of the proposed use were previously resolved in an unappealed zoning classification decision, and the building permit decision on appeal simply relied on the zoning classification decision. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where an applicant obtains from the city a zoning classification decision concluding that a specific type of housing development is an allowed use, but noting that if the use is changed to provide services to persons other than residents of the development, the development must be approved as a conditional use, and the applicant thereafter seeks and the city approves building permits based on the same specific housing development proposed in the zoning classification decision, the city is not required to impose conditions to preclude the applicant from changing the use to one that requires conditional use approval. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A building permit decision that does not apply any comprehensive plan and land use regulation is not a statutory "land use decision" defined at ORS 197.015(10)(a), even if the building at issue was initially approved as part of a planned unit development decision that is on remand from LUBA. The remanded decision is not a comprehensive plan or land use regulation for purposes of ORS 197.015(10)(a). Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 68 Or LUBA 162 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A decision can be wrong or erroneous, yet not qualify as a statutory "land use decision" defined at ORS 197.015(10)(a). Even if a local government lacked authority to issue a building permit, or otherwise erred in approving that permit, where the petitioner does not establish that any comprehensive plan provision or land use regulation applied to the building permit, the permit is not within LUBA's jurisdiction, and any errors committed in issuing the decision can only be challenged in circuit court. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 68 Or LUBA 162 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. LUBA will decline to apply the "significant impact" land use decision test to allow the Board to review building permit decisions that merely implement earlier statutory land use decisions, even if the building permit decisions are the proximate step leading to actual construction and other actions affecting land use, and even if some of the earlier statutory land use decisions were remanded by LUBA and still before the local government. Extending the significant impacts test to allow LUBA's review over such building permits would represent an end run around the statutory scheme for reviewing land use decisions. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 68 Or LUBA 162 (2013).
