31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Whether a building permit also qualifies as a statutory "permit," as ORS 227.160(2) defines that term does not turn on the complexity of the applicable land use regulations. Whether the building permit qualifies as a statutory permit turns on whether the applicable land use regulations are ambiguous about (1) the nature of the proposed use or (2) whether the proposed use is among the uses that are identified in the land use regulation as permitted. Richmond Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 115 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where there is no question under applicable land use regulations that a proposed apartment building is permitted outright in the applicable zone, and the only ambiguities concern the development regulations that apply in approving the apartment use, those ambiguities mean the building permit approving the apartment building is a land use decision and that none of the ORS 197.015(10)(b) exclusions for nondiscretionary decisions apply. But that building permit is not a statutory "permit," as ORS 227.160(2) defines that term, since the use is permitted outright and the only ambiguities concern the development standards that apply to that permitted use. Richmond Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 115 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Whether a building permit also qualifies as a statutory "permit," as ORS 227.160(2) defines that term does not turn on the complexity of the applicable land use regulations. Whether the building permit qualifies as a statutory permit turns on whether the applicable land use regulations are ambiguous about (1) the nature of the proposed use or (2) whether the proposed use is among the uses that are identified in the land use regulation as permitted. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where there is no question under applicable land use regulations that a proposed apartment building is permitted outright in the applicable zone, and the only ambiguities concern the development regulations that apply in approving the apartment use, those ambiguities mean the building permit approving the apartment building is a land use decision and that none of the ORS 197.015(10)(b) exclusions for nondiscretionary decisions apply. But that building permit is not a statutory "permit," as ORS 227.160(2) defines that term, since the use is permitted outright and the only ambiguities concern the development standards that apply to that permitted use. Kerns Neighbors v. City of Portland, 67 Or LUBA 130 (2013).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. In approving a building permit for a building "customarily provided in conjunction with farm use" in the EFU zone under ORS 215.213(1)(e) or 215.283(1)(e), one factual variable a county should consider is whether the building is intended to be used as an accessory building to non-farm uses authorized on the property, such as a private use airport, instead of or in addition to an accessory to farm use of the property. Bratton v. Washington County, 65 Or LUBA 461 (2012).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A local government correctly concludes that no timely local appeal of a building permit was filed where nothing in two letters sent to the city after the permit was granted indicated that the letters were intended to constitute appeals of the building permit. Ortman v. City of Forest Grove, 55 Or LUBA 426 (2007).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where a local code provision is expressly directed at building permits and a hearing officer finds that the provision does not apply to a request for subdivision approval, and petitioners do not assign error to those findings, petitioners' assignment of error that the hearings officer should have applied the provision in approving the subdivision will be denied. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Absent some explanation for why a building permit decision that modifies a condition of partition approval involves the kind and degree of discretion that distinguishes a statutory "permit" as that term is defined at ORS 215.402(4) from other kinds of permits, LUBA will not presume that challenged permit is an ORS 215.402(4) permit. Neelund v. Josephine County, 52 Or LUBA 683 (2006).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Land use regulations that allow "on-site" signs but prohibit "off-site" signs are not clear and objective, as applied to a proposal to construct a sign advertising a business located on a different parcel than the sign, and a building permit decision approving such a sign as a permitted use is not subject to the ORS 197.015(10(b)(B) exception to LUBA's jurisdiction. Frymark v. Tillamook County, 45 Or LUBA 486 (2003).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A building permit may also constitute a statutory "permit" as defined by ORS 227.160 or 215.402, and thus require a local government to provide notice and opportunity for hearing before taking action on that permit, where approval or denial of the permit requires a discretionary determination regarding whether the proposed use is allowed or not allowed under applicable land use regulations. Frymark v. Tillamook County, 45 Or LUBA 486 (2003).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Approval of a building permit for a use that is unquestionably a permitted use in the applicable zone is not a "permit" as defined in ORS 227.160(2)(a) simply because, in issuing the permit, the local government interprets an ambiguous term in a land use regulation that applies to that permitted use. An interpretation of such a regulation in such circumstances is not the type of "discretionary approval" that results in a "permit" under ORS 227.160(2)(a). Tirumali v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 231 (2002).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A planning director's interpretation that the base point from which a building height is calculated is established by determining the elevation of property after fill has been placed on the property is correct where the context makes it clear that some manipulation of the elevation may be done so long as the fill has been placed pursuant to approved grading plans. Tirumali v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 231 (2002).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. An otherwise clear and objective building permit, as that concept is used in ORS 197.015(10)(b)(B), remains clear and objective even if, as applied in a particular circumstance, it undermines the purpose or policy that it implements. Tirumali v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 859 (2000).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A calculation mistake made during the course of applying a clear and objective building permit standard does not render a decision applying that standard a land use decision. Tirumali v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 859 (2000).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where a planning commission decision states the planning commission voted to "approve" a "recommendation to grant the building permit," and respondent identifies no zoning code provision specifically assigning decision making responsibility for building permits to another decision maker, LUBA will conclude the planning commission approved the building permit. Mills v. City of Yachats, 29 Or LUBA 1 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. The city council must provide an appeal of a planning commission decision to approve a building permit, regardless of whether the planning commission was the proper body to approve a building permit, where the planning commission in fact approves the building permit and the zoning code provides that "any action of the planning commission pursuant to [the zoning code] may be appealed to the city council." Mills v. City of Yachats, 29 Or LUBA 1 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where a local government approved a conditional use permit for a nonforest dwelling in 1992, and petitioner's notice of intent to appeal simply identifies the local government's 1994 building permit approval as the appealed decision, petitioner's appeal has the legal effect of appealing only the 1994 building permit decision. Broderson v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 645 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where petitioner's claim is that a building permit violates clear and objective standards, petitioner fails to establish a basis for LUBA's jurisdiction over the appeal. Broderson v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 645 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Petitioner's argument that a decision to approve a building permit is a land use decision because the decision requires the application of a LCDC enforcement order fails where the enforcement order does not establish land use standards for the issuance of building permits. Broderson v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 645 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where conditions of a prior nonforest dwelling approval do not require a determination of compliance with any discretionary land use standard, the fact that a building permit may only be issued after it is determined that such conditions are satisfied provides no basis for LUBA's jurisdiction. Broderson v. Jackson County, 28 Or LUBA 645 (1995).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where petitioner appeals local government decisions issuing a building permit and denying a request for a local appeal of the building permit, and petitioner's notice of intent to appeal is filed more than 21 days after petitioner had actual notice of the building permit decision but within 21 days of the decision that there is no right to a local appeal, the notice of intent to appeal is untimely filed with regard to the building permit decision and the only issue to be resolved in the LUBA appeal is whether the local government determination that there is no right to a local appeal of the building permit decision is erroneous. Mills v. City of Yachats, 28 Or LUBA 736 (1994).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A local government decision approving a building permit is a "land use decision" subject to review by LUBA if it involves the application of the goals, a comprehensive plan or a land use regulation and does not qualify as a ministerial decision under ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) or (B). Sullivan v. City of Ashland, 27 Or LUBA 411 (1994).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. LUBA will not reverse or remand a local government decision refusing to issue a building permit for a structure to be placed on a parcel unlawfully divided, pursuant to a local code requirement that no building permit may be issued if the parcel of land on which a structure is to be placed or used is in violation of any local ordinance. Woosley v. Marion County, 24 Or LUBA 231 (1992).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where a local code requires that a stream corridor and buffer zone be established prior to development of property, once the corridor and buffer zone are established by the local government as part of a minor partition decision, it is unnecessary for the local government to reexamine those boundaries in order to issue building and tree cutting permits for parcels created by the partition. Forest Highlands Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 24 Or LUBA 215 (1992).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A decision approving a building permit is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction only if the building permit approval decision involves the application of the goals, comprehensive plan or a land use regulation and does not qualify as a ministerial decision under ORS 197.015(10)(b). Tuality Lands Coalition v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 319 (1991).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where the only determinations that must be made for the approval of a building permit are whether the applicant has certifications concerning septic approval and electrical and plumbing permits, and those determinations do not involve application of the goals, comprehensive plan, or land use regulations, the approval of the building permit is not a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Tuality Lands Coalition v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 319 (1991).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A city is not prohibited from issuing a building permit pursuant to an unappealed planning commission decision, notwithstanding that a second application seeking to expand the scope of the project approved by the unappealed planning commission decision was denied by the city council. Townsend v. City of Newport, 21 Or LUBA 286 (1991).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A local government cannot deny building permits for approved conditional uses based on subsequent local code interpretations, where the subject conditional use permit remains effective and was not appealed locally or to LUBA. Townsend v. City of Newport, 21 Or LUBA 286 (1991).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where petitioners' local notice of review specifically identifies as the subject of the appeal a building permit (the only local government decision concerning the proposed use of which petitioners were aware), but also indicated an intent to request review of any local decision authorizing the proposed use, LUBA will interpret petitioners' local notice of review to appeal both the building permit and an earlier zoning clearance decision required for issuance of the building permit. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 481 (1990).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. A zoning clearance approval which requires determinations on whether a proposed use is incidental and subordinate to an existing use, and whether and the extent to which an existing use is a lawful nonconforming use, requires interpretation and the exercise of judgment within the meaning of ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) and (C) and, therefore, is a "permit" under ORS 215.402(4). Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 481 (1990).

31.2.1 Permits – Types – Building. Where all determinations involving application of the acknowledged county plan and code are made in the county site plan review decision, and issuance of a building permit is not dependent on site plan approval, issuance of a building permit does not demonstrate compatibility of the subject use with the acknowledged county plan and regulations. Sparacino v. Klamath County, 18 Or LUBA 804 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a governing body concludes that a proposed hotel complies with a comprehensive plan provision requiring that such proposals have "no adverse impact" on the function of a nearby wildlife refuge, arguments at LUBA that the governing body improperly focused on impacts related to the operation of the hotel and did not consider impacts associated with demolition of an existing motel and construction of the new hotel provide no basis for reversal or remand where the petitioner did not clarify why demolition and construction were relevant or specify the adverse impacts of concern in their local appeal statement. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Bandon, 81 Or LUBA 285 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where one local code provision requires that "the characteristics of the site [be] suitable for the proposed use considering size, shape, location, topography and natural features"; and where another local code provision requires that development plans "be reviewed to assess the possible presence of any geologic hazard" and provides that, if a geologic hazard is suspected, the developer must submit a report "which satisfactorily evaluates the degree of hazard present and recommends appropriate precautions to avoid endangering life and property and minimize erosion," and provides that "[t]he burden of proof is on the landowner to show that it is safe to build"; LUBA will defer to the governing body's interpretation that an applicant's geologic report related to the "safe to build" criterion, rather than the "suitability" criterion. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Bandon, 81 Or LUBA 285 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. That two applicants for conditional use permits for two solar facilities are contemporaneously seeking partition approval to create two 320-acre parcels from the same parent tract for the proposed facilities does not establish that the proposed facilities will not be on a "single tract," for purposes of OAR 660-033-0130(38)(f), where there is no evidence, findings, or conditions that such partitions have or will become final and that the two 320-acre parcels have been or will be conveyed, by deed, to third parties. ODFW v. Lake County, 81 Or LUBA 300 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A condition of approval requiring an applicant for a conditional use permit for a solar facility to continue working privately with ODFW to agree on a wildlife habitat mitigation plan, outside a public participatory process, and return to the county for approval of the mitigation plan only if the applicant is unable to reach agreement with ODFW, is not sufficient to establish compliance with OAR 660-033-0130(38)(j)(G) for the reasons stated in Gould v. Deschutes County, 216 Or App 150, 171 P3d 1017 (2007), where it does not require a subsequent county proceeding on the mitigation plan and where it does not specify that the subsequent proceeding will be infused with the same participatory rights as the initial conditional use permit proceeding. ODFW v. Lake County, 81 Or LUBA 300 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision requires that a proposed conditional use be "consistent with the character of the area," and where nothing in the code defines or describes the relevant study area for purposes of the provision, a local government does not err by expanding the scope of the study area beyond that described in the application. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code allows community service and residential uses in the same zone, a local government does not err by concluding that a proposed community service use is "consistent with the character of the area," even though it would generate more traffic or noise impacts than a typical residential use, where almost any community service use would generate more traffic and noise impacts than a typical residential use. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A condition of approval requiring the applicant to deploy flaggers at an intersection to inform attendees that parking is unavailable and deny them entry when parking demand exceeds the available capacity is not inadequate merely because it does not duplicate legal requirements that flaggers receive special training and permits. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. For purposes of a local code provision requiring that a proposed conditional use not "alter the character of the surrounding area in a manner that substantially limits, impairs, or precludes the use of surrounding properties for the primary uses allowed in the zoning district(s) in which surrounding properties are located," the primary use allowed in the Rural Residential Farm Forest 5-Acre zone is the use and occupancy of a dwelling structure, and the local government does not misinterpret the provision in finding that passing by the proposed conditional use on the way to a residence does not limit that use. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A condition of approval requiring an applicant that has applied to site a solar facility in an area currently used for growing Christmas trees to offer a fire safety training course to the local fire district is inadequate to establish that "[t]he proposed use will not * * * significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) and local code provisions implementing that rule. Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision requires a finding that "[t]he proposed use is appropriate, considering the adequacy of public facilities and services existing or planned for the area affected by the use," and where the record includes undisputed expert testimony that fire and emergency access are inadequate unless a proposed trail and its bridges are built to certain standards, it is insufficient for the local government to state, without any supporting evidence, that it is "feasible" to design the trail and bridges to provide adequate fire and emergency access and then punt all determinations regarding trail and bridge design to a subsequent master planning process. Van Dyke v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 348 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision requires (1) that an applicant for an extension of a conditional use permit on resource-zoned lands "state[] reasons that prevented [them] from beginning or continuing development within the approval period" and (2) that the local government determine that those are "reasons for which the applicant was not responsible," a local government interpretation that the provision may be satisfied where the reason for the delay is that additional state or federal approvals have been applied for, but not yet secured, even where the application for such state or federal approval proposes development which differs from that approved by the conditional use permit, is not inconsistent with the express language of the provision and therefore provides no basis for reversal or remand under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Williams v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 352 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where one local code provision authorizes the local government to grant "an extension of up to two (2) years" for a conditional use permit on non-resource lands, and another provision provides that "[a]dditional extensions may be applied," a local government interpretation of those provisions as allowing supplemental extensions beyond the one allowed under the first provision is supported by the plain meaning of the word "additional," is not inconsistent with the express language of either provision, and therefore provides no basis for reversal or remand under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Williams v. Coos County, 79 Or LUBA 352 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," an interpretation by the local government that it need not consider the impact of the proposed use on property values and neighbor peace of mind is not inconsistent with the provision's express language or underlying policies. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit (CUP) requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," a local government decision granting a CUP is not supported by substantial evidence where it does not identify and describe all of the existing and permitted uses on adjacent properties and where it fails to analyze or measure the extent of the potential impacts of the proposed use and instead proceeds straight to mitigation measures. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A county provision, which requires the signature of all owners of the subject property on an application for a conditional use permit, may be satisfied by a county-imposed condition requiring that a property owner sign the conditional use permit application before any building permits may issue, where the county provision grants permission to the hearings officer to impose conditions the hearings officer "deems necessary" to fulfill the purpose and intent of the county's code. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a county code provision requires a finding that development of a proposed solar facility will "not result in unnecessary soil erosion or loss," and includes a provision that this finding "may be satisfied by the submittal and county approval of a soil and erosion control plan prepared by an adequately qualified individual," and "[t]he approved plan shall be attached to the decision as a condition of approval," that provision allows an applicant and the county the option of relying on a qualified soil and erosion control plan to satisfy the provision and, if that option is followed, by imposing a condition of approval that requires compliance with the approved plan. The phrase "attached to the decision as a condition of approval" is a term of art that does not mean that the plan must be physically attached to the decision. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a county code provision requires that a proposed solar facility may not "create unnecessary negative impacts on agricultural operations," including dividing a field or multiple fields "in such a way that creates small or isolated pieces of property that are more difficult to farm," and placing solar facility components on lands in a manner that "could disrupt common and accepted farming practices," a hearings officer's decision errs in concluding that a 12-acre solar facility located on a 14.15-acre lot will not create an isolated strip of cultivated land because as s a matter of simple arithmetic, some portion of the 14.15-acre lot will remain outside the 12-acre solar facility. Harris v. Marion County, 78 Or LUBA 209 (2018).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A decision to grant temporary approval of driveway access is not a decision to modify a previous conditional use approval decision that imposed a condition that required the applicant to obtain fire department approval of the proposed driveway access. Seits v. Yamhill County, 77 Or LUBA 310 (2018).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where an applicant proposes to bifurcate a proposed business development into two segments, one to be approved as a conditional use, and another to be approved as a home occupation, to avoid application of permit standards that would otherwise prohibit the business use viewed as a whole, both sets of permit requirements potentially apply to any components of the segmented use that are shared or overlap. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where in order to avoid code prohibitions on "external evidence" of a home occupation an applicant attempts to authorize all outdoor processing associated with a log home manufacturing business under a conditional use permit for the primary processing of forest products, and all indoor processing associated with the business as part of a home occupation, any activities that use shared equipment, vehicles or employees, such as transporting logs from the outdoor primary processing site to the indoor secondary processing site, are not authorized exclusively under the primary processing permit, but are also subject to the prohibition on external evidence required of the home occupation permit. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. The primary processing of logs pursuant to a conditional use permit for the primary processing of forest products is not itself subject to home occupation standards, even if the logs are later transported to a structure on the property for secondary processing under a home occupation permit. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. An asphalt batch plant that received a conditional use permit under the conditional use permit criteria that applied at the time the plant was approved is not a nonconforming use, and the local code provisions that govern discontinuance of a nonconforming use do not apply to an application that seeks a comprehensive plan text and zoning map amendment to add additional property that is adjacent to the conditional use to the county's inventory of significant aggregate sites. Pioneer Asphalt, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 65 (2015).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where applicable land use regulations require that a proposal to modify a previously approved conditional use must be "consistent" with previously approved conditional use, and the proposal would eliminate the previously approved composting operation and make minor changes to the previously approved topsoil mining operation, the modified conditional use is correctly viewed as "consistent" with the previously approved conditional use. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. In considering whether the proposed modifications to a previously approved conditional use comply with conditional use approval criteria, if legal issues raised in the modification proceedings are relevant issues regarding approval standards that could not have been raised when the original proposal was approved, the local government is required to address those issues. Conversely, if the arguably relevant issues raised in the modification proceedings could have been fully raised when the original proposal was approved, those legal issues are not a product of the modification and the local government is not required to consider those issues. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a previously approved conditional use is being modified to eliminate one part of the previously approved use, and conditions of that previous approval are to be modified or eliminated, where the original condition was imposed solely to ensure the part of the conditional use that is to be eliminated is consistent with relevant approval standards, no explanation is required to eliminate such conditions of approval. However, where it is not clear whether the original condition of approval was imposed at least in part to ensure that part of the conditional use that is to be retained is consistent with one or more relevant approval standards, and an issue is raised concerning whether the proposed modification or elimination of the condition would cause the modified conditional use to violate one or more applicable approval standards, the local government is obligated to explain why the condition can be eliminated or modified without causing the modified conditional use to no longer comply with relevant approval standards. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. LUBA will reject a city council's interpretation of a code provision allowing a property owner to site a recreational vehicle (RV) on the property for "temporary living purposes" to require that the RV be accessory to or in conjunction with a permanent dwelling on the property, where nothing in the applicable code provision expressly or impliedly requires a dwelling, and the city has expressly required, in other inapplicable code provisions, that an RV be an accessory use to or be in conjunction with a dwelling. Buel-McIntire v. City of Yachats, 63 Or LUBA 452 (2011).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that modifying a condition of approval imposing a 20-year deadline to complete development, to allow an additional three years to complete development, is not "materially inconsistent" with the original condition of approval, where the additional time represents only a 15 percent increase and nothing in the original permit approval suggests that the original 20-year completion deadline was intended to be inflexible. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A reasonable decision maker could conclude that the applicant for a proposed motorcycle race track failed to demonstrate compliance with an approval standard requiring that the property act as a buffer between urban and agricultural uses, which the county interpreted to require evidence that the race track, as mitigated, would externalize less dust than would agricultural use of the property, where the applicant failed to present any evidence quantifying dust impacts, comparing dust impacts of farm uses and the race track, or estimating the effectiveness of mitigation. Easterly v. Polk County, 59 Or LUBA 417 (2009).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. LUBA will reverse a county governing body's code interpretation that a conditional use allowed in an Acreage Residential zone that generates any amount of dust leaving the property must be denied because it is not in harmony with the purpose of the zone to buffer urban uses from farm uses, where the zone allows a number of dust-generating uses as permitted and conditional uses in the zone, including farm use, and under the county's interpretation few if any of those uses could ever be approved in the zone. Davis v. Polk County, 58 Or LUBA 1 (2008).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. LUBA will remand a decision determining that a conditional use is inconsistent with one of seven purposes of the underlying zone, where it is not clear whether the county must address each of the seven purposes and determine whether the proposed use is, on balance consistent with those purposes, or whether inconsistency with a single zone purpose is sufficient to deny the application, and the county's decision does not address the issue. Davis v. Polk County, 58 Or LUBA 1 (2008).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A code provision that lists additional conditional use restrictions that a county may impose to protect certain natural resources is an approval standard, in the sense that it authorizes the county to impose additional conditions if found to be necessary, and the county could, theoretically, deny the application if it concluded that no feasible conditions could be crafted that the county will protect the identified resources. Western Land & Cattle, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 58 Or LUBA 295 (2009).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Under ORS 227.178(4), where a city has notified a conditional use permit applicant that the application requires additional supporting information, and the applicant fails to provide the information and fails to provide the city notice that the applicant will not provide the requested information, the city may treat the application as void. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. When a conditional use permit (CUP) has a conditional of approval that the CUP "will become invalid" if specified actions are not taken before a specified deadline or an extension of the deadline is not granted, and the applicant neither completes the specified actions nor seeks an extension, the local government may not grant an extension of the CUP after the time for receiving an extension has expired and the CUP is rendered invalid. Michaels v. Douglas County, 53 Or LUBA 16 (2006).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Federal law preempts a local determination that a proposed cellular communications facility is unsafe where the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has issued a "Determination of No Hazard" under FAA rules. U.S. Cellular v. Klamath County, 53 Or LUBA 442 (2007).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a 1995 conditional use permit conceptually approved cemetery uses on a portion of the site and required a buffer between cemetery uses on that portion and adjoining residential uses, LUBA will affirm a hearings officer determination that modification of the 1995 permit is necessary to develop that portion of the site with non-cemetery uses or to dispense with the buffer required in the 1995 permit. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 47 Or LUBA 21 (2004).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a conditional use permit condition can reasonably be interpreted to require a 75-foot vegetative buffer between cemetery uses and residential uses, and the city's code allows modifications to a conditional use permit only if consistent with the original conditions, LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's determination that a proposed modification that provides for no vegetative buffer between cemetery and residential uses is inconsistent with the original conditions. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 47 Or LUBA 21 (2004).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Subjective, discretionary conditional use and design review criteria are precisely the type of land use regulations that Congress intended to regulate, as applied to religious practices and institutions, in enacting the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). Although such standards may be "generally applicable" in the sense that they apply broadly to a number of secular and non-secular uses, their application to approve or deny a proposed church requires an "individualized assessment" and thus is subject to RLUIPA. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Application of discretionary design review criteria to proposed religious buildings involves the "proposed use" of land within the meaning of, and is thus subject to, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), where the local government may deny a proposed church if the applicant fails to demonstrate compliance with such design review criteria. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a city zoning ordinance permits consideration of consolidated applications and it is not apparent that an independent process is available to consider related permits, and petitioners raised the issue of compliance with standards required for the related permits during the pendency of a conditional use application, the city erred by failing to address petitioners' argument that the related permit standards must be satisfied before the conditional use permit could be approved. Monogios and Co. v. City of Pendleton, 42 Or LUBA 291 (2002).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Under a code standard that allows only de minimis traffic impacts on failing intersections, the county is in a position to find compliance with the standard only if it quantifies the traffic volume that is expected to pass through intersections notwithstanding conditions designed to avoid impacts and determines that such traffic volume is de minimis, or if it imposes conditions sufficient on their face to ensure that expected impacts will be de minimis. K.B. Recycling, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 29 (2001).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Conditions imposed to ensure that only de minimis traffic volumes from a proposed recycling facility impact nearby failing intersections during certain times are insufficient and unenforceable, where the county's decision fails to (1) define what de minimis traffic volumes are, (2) specify the times when the conditions apply, and (3) impose conditions or identify solutions that a reasonable person would find adequate to ensure that traffic associated with the facility uses a longer alternate route rather than the short direct route through failing intersections. K.B. Recycling, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 29 (2001).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. An assignment of error that a city erred by approving a floodplain permit in the absence of a valid conditional use permit for the proposed use provides no basis for reversal or remand where petitioner fails to demonstrate that a conditional use permit for the proposed use must be obtained prior to obtaining a floodplain permit. Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 39 Or LUBA 353 (2001).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a city imposes conditions of approval requiring external street improvements as part of a land use decision approving a conditional use permit, the aspects of the decision requiring external street improvements are not subject to the exception to the definition of land use decision at ORS 197.015(10)(b)(D), notwithstanding that if the required improvements were imposed in a separate decision not involving conditional use approval, those improvements might fit within the exception. Terra v. City of Newport, 36 Or LUBA 582 (1999).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. The judicial doctrine of vested rights does not apply to development allowed under a conditional use permit, where the permit is approved under an ordinance obligating the user to commence construction within six months or request an extension from the city. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A governing body's interpretation of a local provision is within the discretion afforded by ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, where the local ordinance requires that development allowed under a conditional use permit be commenced within six months in order to become effective, and the governing body interprets the ordinance to mean that development has commenced when the applicant has complied with all conditions precedent and obtained all required permits. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. An application for an extension of a conditional use permit involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is subject to the requirement at ORS 215.416 that approval or denial of a permit be subject to standards and criteria, where the local code contains no standards governing permit extensions and thus grants unfettered discretion to the county to approve or deny the extension. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Concern that a campfire may cause a forest fire that burns down neighboring structures is not a relevant consideration in determining whether a proposed use will alter the character of the surrounding area by limiting or impairing primary uses. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 14 (1998).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a previous, unappealed development is not part of the conditional use approval proposal in question, a local government cannot require a conditional use permit for that development as part of its evaluation of the proposed use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 14 (1998).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. In complying with the city's demand that it file an application for a conditional use permit in order to continue its operation, petitioner accepted the validity of that demand for the purposes of the proceeding on its application, and LUBA therefore cannot review the decision to require a conditional use permit. Recovery House VI v. City of Eugene, 33 Or LUBA 327 (1997).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A use permitted outright cannot be a conditional use. Northwest Environmental Adv. v. City of Portland, 33 Or LUBA 45 (1997).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. LUBA will defer under ORS 197.829(1) to a local government's interpretation of conditional use permit criteria even when that interpretation is at odds with LUBA's own interpretation of identical statutory criteria governing an application for a nonfarm dwelling. Ray v. Douglas County, 32 Or LUBA 388 (1997).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. The county fails to establish that, under local code, a second dwelling is authorized as a conditional use in an EFU zone where the findings do not explain why the proposed dwelling is authorized and do not explain when the primary dwelling was established or whether its use is resource-related. Le Roux v. Malheur County, 32 Or LUBA 124 (1996).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Findings are inadequate to establish that a proposed use does or can satisfy the definition of "light industrial business" when there are no factual findings regarding the number of employees necessary for the proposed use. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. That an applicant's personal expertise is critical in designing a proposed use does not preclude compliance with a local ordinance requirement that a conditional use permit run with the land. Neither is it necessary to condition approval of the use on continuing participation by that applicant, since it is not dependent on her for its operation. Martin v. Jackson County, 30 Or LUBA 317 (1996).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. That an existing conditional use asphalt batch plant could be a permitted use under a county's mineral and aggregate overlay zone does not require that the county incorporate the conditional use into a decision approving application of the overlay zone to an area including the existing conditional use or that the county re-approve the conditional use as part of the decision applying the overlay zone. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A reasonable person would not conclude that a code conditional use permit standard requiring a proposed development to be timely considering the adequacy of storm drainage systems is satisfied, where there is no evidence in the record concerning the existence or adequacy of storm drainage facilities to handle anticipated runoff from the proposed development. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where conditional use approval is sought for the construction of a building to serve an existing use, whether that existing use is lawful is relevant to approval of the proposed building. Penland v. Josephine County, 29 Or LUBA 213 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Under ORS 433.763(1)(c), a county may subject outdoor mass gatherings of more than 120 hours duration to conditional use permit land use regulations. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where an improvement agreement signed by a county is limited to implementing a conditional use permit previously approved by the county, and does not modify that conditional use permit, the improvement agreement does not require application of land use standards and does not constitute a "land use decision," as that term is defined by ORS 197.015(10). Franklin v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 79 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A code conditional use standard requiring reasonable compatibility with, and no more than minimal impact on, "appropriate development" of surrounding properties authorizes the local government to consider a proposed conditional use's compatibility with, and impact on, future development of vacant properties. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 28 Or LUBA 632 (1995).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A hearings officer's interpretation of a conditional use permit for a "tourist park" as not allowing placement of mobile homes within the approved "tourist park," as that term is defined by the local code, is reasonable and correct. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A county governing body may interpret a code conditional use standard requiring that a proposed use have minimal adverse impacts compared to the impacts of development "permitted outright" as inapplicable in a zoning district that lists no outright permitted uses. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 178 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where local conditional use approval standards do not specifically refer to impacts on property values, but rather to compatibility with "uses" and "land use patterns" and changes in "accepted farm or forest practices" or their cost, a local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 in interpreting such standards not to require consideration of a proposed conditional use's impact on property values. Tucker v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 134 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a particular activity is allowed as a conditional use, and is subject to criteria specifically and solely applicable to such activity, the governing body acts within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829 in determining such activity is not also subject to criteria generally applicable to conditional uses in the zone. Cole v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 62 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the code provides a conditional use permit does not expire if "substantial construction" has occurred, and that "substantial construction" means 10 percent of the total project value has been expended for construction authorized under a development permit, the local government erred by counting expenditures for a culvert and fill creek crossing that were made when the permits issued authorized only a bridge crossing. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Elevation plans submitted by an applicant to establish compliance with code "physical compatibility" requirements become part of the applicant's conditional use proposal, and it is not necessary for the local government to impose compliance with these plans as a condition of approval in order to rely on them in approving the proposed development. Wilson Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 106 (1994).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where petitioner argues the local government erred by approving a conditional use permit without the consent of all owners of the subject property, but identifies no plan, code or other legal standard requiring that such consent be obtained, LUBA cannot grant relief. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A local government's approval of a conditional use permit for a "public air park" does not grant approval for a recreational parachuting center, where the site plan for the public air park does not show a recreational parachuting center was either contemplated or approved. Skydive Oregon v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 294 (1993).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where under certain provisions of a local enactment, consideration of the geologic stability of the subject site would be relevant to the conditional use permit approval process, but other code provisions create a separate geologic hazard review process that may be initiated at any time prior to or in conjunction with filing an application for any required local permit, LUBA will defer to the local government's interpretation that it is not required to address geologic stability as part of the conditional use permit process. Terra v. City of Newport, 24 Or LUBA 438 (1993).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code provides that a conditional use permit expires one year after it is approved, unless construction occurs demonstrating the CUP has been "used," and where the code also prohibits the local government from issuing building or other permits required for construction until appeals have been "completed," the running of the one-year period for "using" a conditional use permit is tolled during those periods of time when a building or other permit necessary to "use" the conditional use permit cannot properly be issued due to an appeal. Weeks v. City of Tillamook, 24 Or LUBA 155 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. In evaluating the compliance of an application for a conditional use permit for a bed and breakfast with a local traffic impacts approval standard, it is proper to evaluate the impacts of a reasonable residential use of the dwelling, together with the proposed bed and breakfast use. Adler v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 1 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code lists uses as conditionally permitted, such listing does not, of itself, imply that the local government must approve all applications for conditional uses or that it is limited to the imposition of conditions of approval. Adler v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 1 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. In the absence of a local code requirement to the contrary, a local government has no legal obligation to impose conditions of approval in lieu of denying an application for conditional use approval. Adler v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 1 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code states "nothing construed herein shall be deemed to require the [local government] to grant a Conditional Use Permit," a local government may deny a conditional use permit if the development, as proposed, does not satisfy applicable approval standards. In such instance, the local government is not required to impose conditions on the proposed development to attain compliance with the approval standards. Horizon Construction, Inc. v. City of Newberg, 23 Or LUBA 159 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A local code requirement that a review body may not consider a request for a conditional use permit within one year following a previous denial of "such" request, prohibits submission of a conditional use permit application for the same use on the same property as previously denied. It does not prohibit the submission of a conditional use permit application for a different use of the property. Silani v. Klamath County, 22 Or LUBA 735 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code provision prohibits submission of an application for a conditional use permit for a use previously denied within one year of denial, it is error for the local government to refuse to accept evidence concerning whether a proposed conditional use is the same as the conditional use previously denied. Silani v. Klamath County, 22 Or LUBA 735 (1992).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. That a previously approved zone change included a condition providing that if a conditional use permit for a mobile home park on the subject property is not obtained, the property would revert to its previous zoning, does not make the merits of the previous rezoning decision subject to LUBA's review in an appeal of the local government decision approving the conditional use permit. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code defines public facilities to include public schools, and contains a standard requiring that conditional uses be timely considering the adequacy of public facilities, the local government must determine that at the time the proposed development will occur public schools will be adequate to serve the proposed development. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code establishes specific requirements for applications for mobile home parks, and also requires that the site plan for a proposed conditional use include information specifically required by the code for the proposed use, a conditional use permit application for a mobile home park must also include the information required for applications for mobile home parks. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 22 Or LUBA 369 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Whether a proposed sewage treatment facility will produce odors is a relevant consideration in determining compliance with a local conditional use permit standard requiring findings that the "location, size, design, and operation are compatible with and will not adversely affect the livability or appropriate development of abutting properties in the surrounding neighborhood." Sitsler v. City of Mill City, 22 Or LUBA 125 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where the local code does not contain a specific purpose statement for a zoning district, determining a proposed conditional use is similar to, and produces no significant impacts different from those produced by, uses permitted outright in the zoning district is a correct means of determining compliance with a code requirement that a conditional use be in harmony with the purpose and intent of the zoning district. Brandt v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 74 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Performance standards are not necessary prerequisites to issuance of a conditional use permit. However, a code standard may be a performance standard, a permit approval standard, or some combination of the two. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A local government may impose conditions and rely on those conditions in determining that an application for discretionary permit approval meets applicable approval standards. However, there is no general requirement that a local government must apply conditions to modify a proposal so that applicable standards are met. Simonson v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 313 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A local government cannot deny building permits for approved conditional uses based on subsequent local code interpretations, where the subject conditional use permit remains effective and was not appealed locally or to LUBA. Townsend v. City of Newport, 21 Or LUBA 286 (1991).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. In considering a request for conditional use approval, a local government may consider the future impact of proposed highway intersection improvements on the proposal. Wheeler v. Marion County, 20 Or LUBA 379 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. A county has a legitimate planning interest in assuring adequate vehicular circulation within a zoning district applicable to highway interchanges. This legitimate planning interest includes both access to properties abutting public rights-of-way and circulation within such properties. Wheeler v. Marion County, 20 Or LUBA 379 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Conditions of approval must have some reasonable connection with the use proposed. A condition requiring a demonstration that adequate on-site vehicular circulation will be possible has such a reasonable connection to a proposed expansion of an existing use which may make internal vehicular circulation more difficult or impossible in view of planned highway intersection improvements. Wheeler v. Marion County, 20 Or LUBA 379 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a local code lists the undefined term "commercial riding" as a use which may be conditionally permitted in a zoning district, and the general approval standards for conditional uses require that they "not significantly impact [adjoining] uses," the potential impacts of a proposed use are relevant only to compliance with the conditional use approval standard, not to determining whether the proposed use constitutes "commercial riding." Kittleson v. Lane County, 20 Or LUBA 286 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where city regulations governing applications for conditional use approval do not make all contiguous property owned by an applicant subject to the conditional use review, and an applicant files a conditional use application for only a portion of his property, the city does not have authority to impose conditions on contiguous property owned by the applicant which is not the subject of the application. Goodman v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 289 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where a code standard requires a conditional use to have no more than minimal impact on the livability and appropriate development of abutting properties and the surrounding neighborhood, the local government must (1) identify the qualities constituting the livability and appropriate development of abutting properties and the surrounding neighborhood, and (2) determine whether the proposed use will have more than a minimal impact on the identified qualities. Whether the proposed conditional use will have fewer impacts than uses permitted outright in the zone is immaterial. Murphey v. City of Ashland, 19 Or LUBA 182 (1990).

31.2.2 Permits – Types – Conditional Use. Where ordinance provides that conditional use permit applications may be approved, approved with conditions or denied, and states the approval authority must find that the proposed use is not in violation of "the appropriate regulations and standards" in the ordinance, the ordinance provides that a conditional use permit may be approved or denied based on mandatory criteria located elsewhere in the zoning ordinance. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 18 Or LUBA 587 (1990).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a local code provision requires that site design review be based upon consideration of the "[c]haracteristics of adjoining and surrounding uses," the local government does not err by characterizing adjoining and surrounding uses simply as farm uses, even where the adjoining and surrounding lands contain dwellings, where the lands are zoned for farm and forest uses, where the dwellings are allowed in conjunction with farm and forest uses, and where the purpose of the zones and the comprehensive plan is to protect and conserve farm and forest lands for farm and forest uses. Anderson v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 618 (2020).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a local code provision requires that uses be conducted "wholly within an enclosed structure"; where the local code defines "structure" as both "[a]nything which is constructed, erected or built and located on or under the ground, or attached to something fixed to the ground," and "[a] walled and roofed building including a gas or liquid storage tank that is principally above ground"; where the first definition was in effect when the enclosed structure requirement was first enacted; and where the second definition was enacted as part of an ordinance that related to compliance with FEMA's requirements to participate in the National Flood Insurance Program, LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of the enclosed structure requirement, relying on the first definition of "structure," to allow a use that is surrounded by building walls, retaining walls, and fences. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a local design guideline provides that "[p]rimary building entrances should be oriented toward and located in close proximity to public streets and public street intersections" and that "[p]roperty size, shape and topographical conditions should also be considered," LUBA will affirm a local governing body's interpretation of that guideline to allow the primary entrance to a proposed development to be located on the opposite side of the property and oriented away from public streets where the primary entrance would nevertheless be "in close proximity to" those public streets and connected to those public streets with multiple pedestrian connections, and where the triangular shape of the property and a partially adjacent high-speed on-ramp to a highway support the applicant's choice to cluster the proposed development toward the public streets and provide a primary entrance on the opposite side of the property. Beaverton Business Owners, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 81 Or LUBA 224 (2020).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a prior decision approved a plan amendment and zone change for the subject property and included a condition of approval limiting the type of future development to a "retail shopping center" and the size of future development to a certain square footage of gross leasable area, but where the prior decision approved no specific development, voluntary descriptions, statements, or representations made by the applicant during the prior proceeding regarding the particular store with which the shopping center would be developed are not binding on the applicant in a subsequent site plan review proceeding unless they were memorialized in conditions of approval for the prior decision. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a significant resource overlay zone provision requires that (1) resource sites not be altered or impacted to a degree that destroys their significance, (2) the proposed development not result in the loss of habitat for threatened or endangered species, (3) all feasible alternatives to the development that would not result in a substantial adverse impact on identified resource values be considered and rejected, (4) the development be sited on the property in such a manner that minimizes adverse impacts on identified resources, and (5) documentation be provided regarding requirements for state or federal permits or licenses and that appropriate resource management agencies have reviewed the development proposal against their plans, policies, and programs, the local government does not err in concluding that that provision applies at the development stage rather than the PAPA stage. VanSickle v. Klamath County, 80 Or LUBA 241 (2019).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a design guideline for a historic district in a city requires that exterior alterations and additions to historic resources "be designed to be compatible primarily with the original resource, secondarily with adjacent properties, and finally * * * with the rest of the District," where the city council interprets the term "compatible" as not requiring uniformity, and where the petitioner has not demonstrated that that interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose, or underlying policy that provides the basis for that design guideline, LUBA will uphold the city council's conclusion that two proposed new buildings meet the design guideline because they are similar to a historic resource on the same property, to adjacent properties, and to the historic district with respect to some design elements, even where they are dissimilar to adjacent properties with respect to other design elements. NDNA v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 269 (2019).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A hearings officer does not misconstrue a development code requirement that a project applicant must demonstrate that environmental impacts have been "minimized to the extent practicable," in finding that the project applicant is not required to propose a smaller sized dwelling. McAndrew v. Washington County, 78 Or LUBA 21 (2018).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A petitioner's argument that an application to modify a site plan to replace a previously approved produce stand with a coffee kiosk cannot be processed as a modification, but instead requires a new site plan application, does not provide a basis for remand, where the local government adopted findings rejecting that argument, and the petitioner does not challenge those findings. Aboud v. City of Stayton, 77 Or LUBA 300 (2018).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A petitioner's argument that the city erred in processing the application as a minor rather than major site plan modification does not provide a basis for remand, where the city adopted findings that the only difference between a major and minor modification is procedural, and the petitioner does not argue that the procedures the city provided, including a hearing that petitioner attended, prejudiced petitioner's substantial rights. Aboud v. City of Stayton, 77 Or LUBA 300 (2018).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A petitioner's argument that the city erred in failing to require the applicant for a site plan modification to include landscaping information that was omitted from the original site plan application does not provide a basis for remand, where the applicant proposed no changes to the landscaping, and the city determined that its authority extended only to proposed modifications to the original site plan. Aboud v. City of Stayton, 77 Or LUBA 300 (2018).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will reject an argument that because a city's discretionary site review standards apply to proposed development, the city's approval is thus a "permit" as defined at ORS 227.160(2) (discretionary approval of the development of land), where even if the city's site review standards apply, the result would be a limited land use decision as defined at ORS 197.015(12), which is excluded from the ORS 227.160(2) definition of permit. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will reject a proposed interpretation of a city code site review provision that would broadly apply to all proposed needed housing, including single-family dwellings, and result in imposition of discretionary standards and lengthy procedures that could easily have the effect of discouraging needed housing, contrary to ORS 197.307(4), where there is an alternative interpretation that harmonizes the relevant text and context and does not force the city's code into conflict with ORS 197.307(4). McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a city's code offers a path for developers to qualify proposed housing as "needed housing," in order to obtain waiver of certain standards that would otherwise apply, LUBA will similarly interpret a related code provision requiring that site review provisions be applied when "the application proposes needed housing," to the effect that the site review provisions apply only if the applicant seeks to qualify the proposed housing as "needed housing." McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. To address a historic design standard requiring that new construction be "compatible with the appearance and character of the historic district," adequate findings must, at a minimum, (1) describe the appearance and character of the historic district, as relevant, (2) describe the appearance and character of the proposed structure, and (3) explain why the proposed structure is or is not compatible with the appearance and character of the historic district. Kliewer v. City of Bend, 73 Or LUBA 321 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. To address a historic design standard requiring that new construction be "compatible with the appearance and character of the historic district," the decision-maker is not required to reference the description of the appearance and character of a historic district included in the nomination to the federal historic register, but that description is a relevant and convenient source. Because the decision-maker must base the compatibility analysis on something, unless the decision-maker duplicates some of the descriptive work in the federal register nomination, there may be no practical substitute for considering the federal register nomination. Kliewer v. City of Bend, 73 Or LUBA 321 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Remand for more adequate findings is required where a historic design standard requires a finding that the relationship of new construction to the street and open space between buildings is compatible with the adjacent historic buildings and the historic character of the surrounding area, but the findings address only compliance with code setback requirements, and fail to identify or address compatibility with adjacent historic buildings and the historic character of the surrounding area. Kliewer v. City of Bend, 73 Or LUBA 321 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A finding that the height of new construction is "similar" to dwellings within a historic district is insufficient to establish compliance with a standard requiring that new construction not exceed the height of historic buildings in the surrounding area, where the surrounding area includes both historic and non-historic buildings, and the findings do not identify what buildings the height is compared to, or find that the height of new construction does not exceed the height of the tallest historic building in the surrounding area. Kliewer v. City of Bend, 73 Or LUBA 321 (2016).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will affirm a city council's code interpretation to the effect that minimum frontage and floor-area-ratio standards apply to the collective structures of a proposed fueling station as a whole, including the canopy, paved area, and an exterior trellis wall, even though the standards do not easily apply to those structures viewed individually, where the petitioner fails to demonstrate that the city council's interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose or underlying policy of the code. Save Downtown Canby v. City of Canby, 70 Or LUBA 68 (2014).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will affirm a city council's code interpretation to the effect that minimum frontage and floor-area-ratio standards apply to the collective structures of a proposed fueling station as a whole, including the canopy, paved area, and an exterior trellis wall, even though the standards do not easily apply to those structures viewed individually, where the petitioner fails to demonstrate that the city council's interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose or underlying policy of the code. Save Downtown Canby v. City of Canby, 70 Or LUBA 68 (2014).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a city code limits the maximum number of parking spaces, and requires that parking must be provided on the same lot as the building served, or on an off-site lot within 500 feet of the building, a hearings officer misconstrues the code to allow parking spaces that are intended to serve hospital campus buildings that are located more than 500 feet away, under the theory that the various lots that make up the hospital campus constitute a single "lot" and the various buildings of the hospital campus a single development, where nothing in the code provides that the hospital campus is a single lot or constitutes a single development for off-street parking purposes. SCAN v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 468 (2014).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A hearings officer does not misconstrue a site plan review standard requiring a finding that "negative impacts to the transportation system are mitigated adequately" as not requiring the applicant to construct bike lanes that are shown in the Bicycle System Element of the city's Transportation System Plan (TSP), where the code standard does not refer to the TSP or indicate that site plan review is the vehicle to provide for construction of bike lanes depicted in the TSP. SCAN v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 468 (2014).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A city staff interpretation that a site design review permit is not a "development permit" subject to certain submittal requirements because site design review does not directly authorize any alteration of land is inconsistent with the applicable text and context, where under that interpretation none of the city's discretionary or nondiscretionary permits qualify as development permits, leaving the category of development permits an empty set. CRAW v. City of Warrenton, 67 Or LUBA 263 (2013).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A code provision prohibiting the location of loading docks on a building side that faces the highway is not concerned with the orientation of the loading docks, but the orientation of the building side. The code provision is not met by a loading dock located against an L-shaped façade with the long axis facing the highway. CRAW v. City of Warrenton, 67 Or LUBA 263 (2013).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will sustain a city council interpretation of a 1991 planning commission site plan decision to approve both a 70,000-square-foot retail store and a 30,000-square-foot "future expansion" area, notwithstanding a condition that refers only to approval of the retail store, where the site plan depicts both improvements, the 1991 decision approves the "site plan" without restriction, and the record indicates that the planning commission intended to approve both improvements. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. LUBA will sustain a city council interpretation of a site plan condition of approval to impose no limits on the type merchandise sold at a retail store that is allowed outright in the applicable zone, where the condition authorizes sale of "general merchandise, to include" listed examples, and the fairest reading of the condition is that the list of examples is illustrative, not exclusive. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A site plan decision that approves (1) a building and (2) a "future expansion" of that same building is a single building, not separate phases or components of a multi-phase development, for purposes of determining whether there is a vested right to construct the expansion. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A hearings officer does not err in interpreting a code standard requiring historic design review for alterations to a building having exterior materials "specifically listed" in the city's historic resource inventory not to require that contributing exterior materials be specifically described as contributing. If fairly read the text and context of the building description in the inventory indicates that a particular exterior material contributes to the building's significance, then historic design review is required to alter that exterior material. Carlton Development LLC v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 157 (2010).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. That a city's historic resource inventory lists a building's "wood sash windows" in the "Description" paragraph rather than in the "Significance" paragraph does not mean that the windows are not contributing features, where in context it is clear that the inventory uses the description paragraph to list all contributing and noncontributing building features, and the significance paragraph is simply a summary conclusion based on the features listed in the description paragraph. Carlton Development LLC v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 157 (2010).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that "wood sash windows" are specifically listed features contributing to a building's historic significance, such that a historic design review permit is required to replace the windows with vinyl windows, where the city's inventory concludes that the building is a "contributing" resource based on the features listed in the building description, including the original wood sash windows. Carlton Development LLC v. City of Portland, 62 Or LUBA 157 (2010).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A governing body's interpretation of a design review criterion requiring that the "bulk and scale" of a proposed retail supercenter be "compatible" with surrounding buildings as necessitating a comparison of the size of the proposed buildings and surrounding buildings—and not just visual compatibility—is consistent with the text of the criterion and not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Hood River County, 47 Or LUBA 256 (2004).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. There is no intrinsic reason why a regulatory concern to ensure compatibility of size between proposed and existing development must be expressed as zoning standards rather than as site design review standards. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Hood River County, 47 Or LUBA 256 (2004).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A traffic engineer's critique of the applicant's traffic study that questions the accuracy and sufficiency of the study's calculation of traffic impacts and facility capacity is sufficient to support denial of proposed development under standards requiring the applicant to demonstrate that nearby transportation facilities can accommodate traffic impacts of the development. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Denial of a proposed school bus storage yard is supported by evidence that access to the yard relies on a private fire lane that the applicant cannot improve and that limits bus movement, under design standards requiring a "safe and efficient" circulation pattern. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Assuming ORS 197.522 is applicable outside the moratoria context, that statute does not require a local government to develop on its own conditions of approval that would render proposed development compliant with applicable criteria, as an alternative to denial. Rather, the initial burden of proposing conditions to make development consistent with applicable criteria belongs to the applicant. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. ORS 197.522 does not require a local government to reopen the record after reaching a tentative decision to deny a development application, to allow the applicant an opportunity to propose conditions that would allow approval. Rather, the applicant must propose such conditions during the evidentiary proceedings or in making final legal arguments to address concerns raised during the proceedings and ensure compliance with applicable criteria. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. The governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) in interpreting a standard to be a post-approval performance standard on industrial uses rather than an approval criterion, where the standard is within a section entitled "performance standards" and prescribes impermissible levels of pollution rather than approval criteria. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Subjective, discretionary conditional use and design review criteria are precisely the type of land use regulations that Congress intended to regulate, as applied to religious practices and institutions, in enacting the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). Although such standards may be "generally applicable" in the sense that they apply broadly to a number of secular and non-secular uses, their application to approve or deny a proposed church requires an "individualized assessment" and thus is subject to RLUIPA. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Application of discretionary design review criteria to proposed religious buildings involves the "proposed use" of land within the meaning of, and is thus subject to, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), where the local government may deny a proposed church if the applicant fails to demonstrate compliance with such design review criteria. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. An apparent discrepancy between the sidewalks depicted on the site plan submitted for design review approval and the sidewalk depicted on the approved final subdivision plat does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the design review decision did not address sidewalks or approve a particular sidewalk design. Jordan v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 586 (2003).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a city code provision requires that a "proposal" to adjust development standards be reviewed for compliance with specific criteria, it is reasonable for the city to determine that the scope of the "proposal" is the adjustment proposed by the applicant and therefore that an application for a setback adjustment for a building facade does not require review of the building design as a whole. Lee v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 498 (2001).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where petitioner raises issues regarding whether a proposed site design complies with potentially applicable approval criteria, the local government's decision must respond by either (1) determining that the cited provisions are not applicable approval criteria or (2) demonstrating that the proposal complies with such provisions. Elliott v. City of Redmond, 40 Or LUBA 242 (2001).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A city does not err in failing to provide a local appeal of a design review decision under design review procedures, where the subject property is within an historic district and the city's code specifies that design review proposals in historic districts are governed by historic design procedures that provide no right of local appeal. Multi-Light Sign Co. v. City of Portland, 39 Or LUBA 605 (2001).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where a site design review criterion requires that, "wherever possible," direct driveway access to arterial streets not be allowed, and the challenged decision approves a site plan with direct driveway access onto an arterial street and a collector street without explaining why it is not possible to limit access to the collector street, the decision must be remanded. Hubenthal v. City of Woodburn, 39 Or LUBA 20 (2000).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where the first clause of a local code provision requires that design review comply with a set of criteria used to rezone property and the second clause requires that design review also comply with those criteria addressed at the time the subject property was rezoned, a hearings officer's interpretation limiting design review to the subset of criteria addressed at the time the property was rezoned fails to give effect to the first clause of the code provision, and is therefore not reasonable and correct. Blazer Construction, Inc. v. City of Eugene, 36 Or LUBA 391 (1999).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Local government decisions granting design review approval for segments of a light rail transit (LRT) line that do not approve final engineering design or construction of the LRT facility are not within the exception to the definition of "land use decision" established by ORS 197.015(10)(b)(D). Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Local government decisions granting design review approval for segments of a light rail transit line do not adopt or amend a city or county public facility plan and, therefore, are not excluded from being considered "land use decisions" under ORS 197.712(2)(e). Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. A local government decision granting design review plan approval must identify the design review plan approved. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

31.2.3 Permits – Types – Design Review. Where ORS 215.416(3) and (11) require a county to provide an opportunity for a local appeal of a design review decision made by the planning director without a hearing, the county cannot interpret a code provision requiring that "final design review approval" has been granted to be satisfied when a local appeal of the planning director's design review approval decision is pending. McKenzie v. Multnomah County, 27 Or LUBA 523 (1994).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. In determining whether proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "incidental and subordinate to existing commercial farm use of the tract" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), a county errs in relying on a comparison of the frequency of commercial events with the frequency of commercial farming activity on the property to the exclusion of any relevant circumstances, including the nature, intensity, and economic value of the respective uses, that bear on whether the existing commercial farm use remains the predominant use of the tract. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 276 (2020).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Establishing that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support the commercial farm uses or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area" for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A) is a relatively high hurdle: the county must find that the events are essential in order to maintain the existence of either the commercial farm uses on the subject property or the commercial agricultural enterprises in the area. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A demonstration that proposed "agri-tourism or other commercial events or activities" are "necessary to support" an approved commercial activity in conjunction with farm use under ORS 215.283(2)(a), such as a brewery, is not sufficient to demonstrate that the events are "necessary to support" an "existing commercial farm use of the tract," such as the growing of filberts, for purposes of ORS 215.283(4)(d)(A), even where revenue from the brewery "supplements" revenue from the growing of filberts. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 80 Or LUBA 135 (2019).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Where an applicant has conducted both festival-related uses and non-festival-related park and campground uses on property zoned Rural Residential and Impacted Forest, where the festival-related uses are verified nonconforming uses, and where the applicant applies for a special use permit to legalize the non-festival-related park and campground uses, LUBA will affirm the county's interpretation that its nonconforming use provisions do not apply to the special use permit application where the county expressly explains that the special use permit does not authorize festival-related uses and where the petitioners identify no law preventing the county from issuing permits that have the effect of legalizing special uses that have been occurring independent of a preexisting nonconforming uses. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A county decision determining vested rights involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land," and is therefore a "permit" decision under ORS 215.402(4). Such decisions must be processed under procedures consistent with ORS 215.416, regardless of whether a party's request for the "permit" decision is accompanied by requests for non-"permit" decisions, whether the request is labeled or easily identifiable as an "application" for a "permit," or whether the party affirmatively requests the required procedures. Gillette v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 549 (2019).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. LUBA will affirm a governing body's code interpretation of a county zoning ordinance that provides that a permit extension may be granted if the "approval criteria for the original decision found in a state goal, policy, statute or administrative rule, the Comprehensive Plan or this Ordinance have not changed," and the county board of commissioners interprets "have not changed" to mean an administrative or legislative amendment to the administratively enacted or codified law described in the same provision, and not include decisional law not that is not administratively enacted or codified, as long as such interpretation is "plausible." Hood River Valley Residents' Committee v. Hood River County, 78 Or LUBA 478 (2018).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A city is not required to defer to a permit applicant's characterization of its proposal to remove up to 500,000 cubic yards of rock from a five-acre site as mere site preparation that is necessary for a possible future proposal for residential development. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Zoning classification decisions are often hypothetical and based on stated assumptions. If a methadone clinic that is found to be permitted in a zoning district thereafter provides services that go beyond the services specified in the application for a zoning classification decision, that may be addressed in an enforcement action and the zoning classification decision will not shield the applicant from such an enforcement action regarding activities that are not mentioned in the application. Mariposa Townhouses v. City of Medford, 68 Or LUBA 479 (2013).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A city's failure to enter a zoning classification decision into a registry as required by ORS 227.175(11)(a) does not make the decision something other than a zoning classification decision. Mariposa Townhouses v. City of Medford, 68 Or LUBA 479 (2013).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Under a code provision requiring that the applicant for development within a riparian area demonstrate that "reasonable steps" have been taken to reduce adverse impact on the environment, it is not a "reasonable step" to require the applicant to forego constructing a short driveway connecting to the adjacent public right-of-way and instead require obtaining lengthy driveway easements over several adjoining properties to connect the subject property to a different, non-adjacent public street. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Where a petitioner does not challenge a hearings officer's finding that petitioner's use of his property for a wedding event required review and county approval under one code provision, and petitioner does not allege his wedding event received county review and approval, petitioner's arguments that the use could have been approved under a different code provision provide no basis for reversal or remand. Reed v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 253 (2010).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Even if a local government erred in concluding that noise and air quality standards are "performance standards" rather than approval criteria applicable to a proposed transportation center, that error is harmless where the noise and air quality standards apply only to specified uses, and the specified uses do not include anything resembling the proposed transportation center. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 56 Or LUBA 240 (2008).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A land use compatibility statement that determines the appropriate zoning classification for a proposed use of land within an urban growth boundary may constitute a "zoning classification" decision as defined by ORS 227.160(2)(b), and thus not constitute a statutory "permit" that would require the city to provide notice and an opportunity for hearing. Hallowell v. City of Independence, 53 Or LUBA 165 (2006).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. The fact that wineries are a permitted use in EFU zones under ORS 215.213(1) and 215.283(1) does not mean that wineries are "agricultural uses" permitted in a rural residential zone, where the code definition of "agricultural uses" does not include wineries, and wineries are not among the uses allowed in the rural residential zone. Roth v. Jackson County, 40 Or LUBA 531 (2001).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A decision to extend the term of an expired conditional use permit is a discretionary approval of a proposed development of land and constitutes a "permit" as that term is defined by ORS 227.160(2). Willhoft v. City of Gold Beach, 38 Or LUBA 375 (2000).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A zoning ordinance that lacks provisions governing signs and that is nevertheless applied to evaluate whether a proposed billboard is an accessory use to industrial and commercial uses allowed in the relevant zone is not subject to facial challenge under Article I, section 8, as an ordinance directed at the content of speech or as a content-neutral ordinance that expressly prohibits speech. Media Art Company v. City of Gates, 35 Or LUBA 123 (1998).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A zoning ordinance that is not directed at the content of speech and does not expressly prohibit speech may be challenged under Article I, section 8, only on an as-applied basis. To prevail, an as-applied challenge to a decision denying a proposed billboard because it is not an accessory use to uses allowed in an industrial and commercial zone must demonstrate that the decision burdens the applicant's rights of free expression without a rational basis for doing so. Media Art Company v. City of Gates, 35 Or LUBA 123 (1998).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A local government may constitutionally distinguish between signs related to on-premises uses, and signs related only to off-premises uses or services, and deny a proposed billboard because it is unrelated to the primary use of the property, where the city's evaluation of the relationship between the sign and the premise does not entail a content-based distinction, and the on-premises/off-premises distinction is a rational means to preserve the zone for allowed uses. Media Art Company v. City of Gates, 35 Or LUBA 123 (1998).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A local government does not impermissibly favor commercial speech over noncommercial speech because it allows signs related to on-premises uses in an industrial and commercial zone and prohibits all others. That signs related to on-premises commercial uses are allowed while unrelated commercial and noncommercial signs are prohibited is an incidental consequence of the permissible distinction drawn between signs related to on- and off-premises uses. Media Art Company v. City of Gates, 35 Or LUBA 123 (1998).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A city's determination that a proposed billboard is not an accessory use "incidental, appropriate and subordinate" to the primary use on the property is subject to an inquiry so factually and legally circumscribed that it does not render constitutionally protected rights of free expression contingent upon the unbridled discretion of a government official. Media Art Company v. City of Gates, 35 Or LUBA 123 (1998).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. Under ORS 227.215, the definition of "development" is sufficiently broad to encompass the removal of a tree for landscaping purposes, and a local government may regulate tree removal through the issuance of development permits. Lindstedt v. City of Cannon Beach, 33 Or LUBA 516 (1997).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. A fill permit issued by the city building division is excluded from the definition of a land use decision under ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) where it involves the application of clear and objective standards that do not require interpretation or the exercise of policy or legal judgment. Fechtig v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 441 (1996).

31.2.4 Permits – Types – Other. LUBA's review is limited to what is approved by the challenged decision. LUBA will not review the legal sufficiency of a development permit that the challenged decision does not purport to approve. Hixson v. Josephine County, 26 Or LUBA 159 (1993).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. LUBA will affirm a finding that a proposed gas processing facility will not cause emissions of steam that could obscure visibility within an airport approach surface, where the finding is supported by substantial expert testimony that the facility will not generate visible steam and in any case is proposed to be located outside the airport approach surface. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 76 Or LUBA 346 (2017).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Findings are adequate to demonstrate that in determining that a proposed conditional use airport is compatible with the neighborhood, the county considered "other related impacts" from the airport, including testimony from neighbors regarding safety and the risk of crash, and imposed conditions of approval that require that addressed those safety concerns. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A county does not err in generally identifying the extent of the surrounding neighborhood for purposes of determining whether a proposed conditional use airport will have minimal impacts on the surrounding neighborhood, where the decision makes reasonably clear that the county considered impacts from the proposed airport on other residential properties from noise generated from the proposed airport and from the risk of air crash on take off or landing crashes, and the petitioner does not point to any property or area that the county failed to consider as part of the "surrounding neighborhood." Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A county does not err in imposing a condition of approval that requires an applicant for a conditional use airport to obtain approval from the Oregon Department of Aviation, where the decision makes clear that the requirement to obtain ODA approval is not intended as a substitute for analyzing whether the airport is compatible with the surrounding neighborhood. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Substantial evidence in the record supports a decision that noise from a conditional use airport will have minimal impact on the surrounding neighborhood where the only evidence in the record is a noise study submitted by the applicant that provides an accurate measurement of the airplane noise. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A comprehensive plan policy requirement that the city "work" with an existing city airport to reduce airport-related incompatibilities with surrounding land uses is not a mandatory applicable approval standard for legislation that deletes superseded code provisions proscribing certain aircraft flight operations and requiring city council approval of new airports. Oregon Aviation Watch v. City of Hillsboro, 67 Or LUBA 252 (2013).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. An ordinance requiring that developers of residential property near an airport grant the airport an uncompensated "avigation easement" that allows the airport to subject the property to noise, vibrations, fumes, dust and fuel particle emissions is facially inconsistent with the federal and state Takings Clauses, because the easement does not advance the governmental interest in reducing land use conflicts between the airport and surrounding residential uses. Under the easement, the conflicts will exist to the same degree; the only arguable effect is to make it more difficult for the property owner to advance a successful inverse condemnation or other legal action against the airport. Barnes v. City of Hillsboro, 61 Or LUBA 375 (2010).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A city airport zone that authorizes air passenger and freight services at a regional airport consistent with the levels identified in the airport's master plan, which does not currently authorize such services, violates the Oregon Constitution Article I, section 21, delegation clause, because it effectively delegates to the airport the authority to determine what uses are allowed in the airport zone. Barnes v. City of Hillsboro, 61 Or LUBA 375 (2010).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. ORS 836.608(3)(a) prohibits local governments from imposing additional limitations on, and implicitly requires local governments to recognize and allow, both (1) aviation uses that were authorized by permit prior to January 1, 1997, and (2) aviation uses that existed at a personal use airport in 1996, regardless of whether a prior permit authorized those uses. NAAVE v. Washington County, 59 Or LUBA 153 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. ORS 836.608(2) requires local governments to establish an airport "boundary" that has the effect of determining the geographic extent of the "airport," based on areas that are developed or committed to airport uses. By implication, areas outside the boundary are not reasonably expected to be devoted to airport uses. The boundary of an "airport" is intended to include areas developed or reasonably expected to be developed with airport uses, including hangars, and airport uses including hangars are intended to be located within airport boundaries. NAAVE v. Washington County, 59 Or LUBA 153 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. ORS 836.630(3), which establishes a policy to encourage and support airports, applies a "thumb on the scale" that may be used to resolve a choice between two or more textually plausible interpretations in the manner of the policy. NAAVE v. Washington County, 59 Or LUBA 153 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Where a city does not rely on the ORS 836.640 through 836.642 "through the fence" pilot program to adopt an Airport Related zoning district that authorizes airpark residential development with through the fence access to an airport, arguments that ORS 836.640 through 836.642 do not authorize the kind of through the fence access that is permitted in the city's new Airport Related zoning district provide no basis for reversal or remand. Port of St. Helens v. City of Scappoose, 58 Or LUBA 122 (2008).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A city's legislative decision to adopt a new Airport Related zoning district without applying the new zoning district to any property is not reversible where petitioner fails to demonstrate that the zone could in no circumstances be applied to property in the future without violating applicable legal standards. Port of St. Helens v. City of Scappoose, 58 Or LUBA 122 (2008).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Reports and approvals from the Federal Aviation Administration and Oregon Department of Aviation that a proposed personal use airport complies with federal and state safety requirements is substantial evidence that a county could rely upon, among other evidence, to conclude that the airport is consistent with a comprehensive plan policy requiring that airports be located in areas that are safe for air operations. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Because a personal use airport is not among the three types of airports that require overlay zones under OAR 660-013-0070(1), the rule does not require a county to impose an overlay zone on a personal use airport. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A county does not err in interpreting a comprehensive plan policy requiring that airports be compatible with surrounding uses to be satisfied by incorporated findings addressing conditional use permit standards that, the county found, ensure that the airport is compatible with surrounding uses. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A county does not err in concluding that, as conditioned, a personal use airport will not "significantly" impact a neighboring equine facility, where the only adverse impact identified by the facility owner is that guests are advised to delay mounting or dismounting horses until after planes land or take-off, and conditions of approval limit operations to 20 flights per month. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of a comprehensive plan policy that requires that development shall comply with "applicable" Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) standards to not require that the applicant demonstrate that a proposed personal use airport will comply with a DEQ noise program that DEQ has suspended. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A county does not err in concluding that the county's noise ordinance is not a conditional use approval standard for a personal use airport, where the noise ordinance is not part of the county's zoning regulations, the noise ordinance functions as a performance standard rather than an approval standard, and the noise ordinance includes an exclusion for noises generated by approved conditional uses. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Remand is necessary where a county's findings approving a personal use airport rely heavily on a proposed condition limiting operations at a personal use airport to 20 flights per month, but the county failed to impose such a condition. Johnson v. Marion County, 58 Or LUBA 459 (2009).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. While the Aviation Protection Act, ORS 836.608(3)(a), permits "increases in flight activity" at existing airports without local government approval, the statute does not allow one type of listed aviation use to be metamorphosed into a different type of listed aviation use as an "increase" in flight activity. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. In determining what airport uses "existed at any time" in 1996 for purposes of the Aviation Protection Act, ORS 836.608, a hearings officer errs in interpreting that phrase to include only frequent or regularly occurring airport uses, or uses that result in physical commitment of the land. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. The act of giving airplane rides to friends or neighbors as an incidental part of a personal use flight is not the same use or activity as offering commercial scenic flights or tours, for purposes of determining what airport uses existed at a personal use airport in 1996 under the Aviation Protection Act, ORS 836.608. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A hearings officer errs in declining to review proposed flight instruction, scenic tours and forest patrol uses as "new uses" rather than "existing uses" under the Aviation Protection Act, ORS 836.608, and in requiring the applicant to submit a new application requesting approval for those "new uses," where the initial application sought approval of those uses under criteria that apply to new uses, county staff understood that the applicant sought approval as new uses and not existing uses, and the applicant requested that the hearings officer evaluate those uses as new uses if they did not qualify as existing uses. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. The apparent corollary of ORS 836.608(3)(a), which provides that a local government shall not impose additional limitations on a previously approved airport use, is that any existing limitations or conditions imposed in earlier approval decisions can continue, as long as such limitations or conditions are consistent with other requirements of the Airport Protection Act. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. The Aviation Protection Act, ORS 838.608, does not prohibit application of local land use standards to aviation activities that implement or are required by federal law, such as floodplain protection regulations. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. ORS 836.623(1) requires explanatory findings addressing evidence that public safety requires a higher level of protection than the minimum set forth under the Airport Transportation Planning rule, even if the local government rejects that evidence and concludes that existing standards are sufficient to protect public safety. Graham Oil Co. v. City of North Bend, 44 Or LUBA 18 (2003).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. The proponent of "more stringent requirements" under ORS 836.623(1) has some burden to identify what additional requirements may be necessary to ensure public safety. Where the proponent merely argues that proposed development near an airport runway should be denied because existing standards cannot ensure ground safety against airplane crashes, local government findings rejecting the need for more stringent requirements may be equally conclusory. Graham Oil Co. v. City of North Bend, 44 Or LUBA 18 (2003).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A reasonable decision maker may rely upon existing state and federal safety standards, and evidence of safety features designed to prevent fire or explosion in the event an airplane crashes into a proposed fuel station located near a runway, to conclude that no additional safety standards are necessary, notwithstanding testimony from the airport manager and aviation officials that the location of the proposed station is unsafe. Graham Oil Co. v. City of North Bend, 44 Or LUBA 18 (2003).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. ORS 836.616 does not authorize or require a local government to consider approval of commercial uses at an airport on a case-by-case basis where the applicable county land use regulations do not authorize such commercial uses. Landsem Farms v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 611 (2003).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. LUBA will not attempt to resolve a largely hypothetical dispute between a petitioner and a county over the degree of incidental social activity that might be permissible at an existing airport in conjunction with any particular activity that the county must allow under ORS 836.616(2). Landsem Farms v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 611 (2003).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Where it is unclear who would own a proposed "personal use airport" in an EFU zone, and whether the uses that the owner plans to make of the airport would be consistent with the uses allowed under ORS 215.283(2)(h), the owner must be identified and the county's findings must explain why it concludes that the proposed uses fall within the uses allowed with a personal use airport. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Where a statute and local land use ordinance restricts personal use airports to "use by the owner," the applicant may utilize the airport for uses incidental to conducting private business, but not for the applicant's commercial aviation enterprise. Berto v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 658 (1997).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Where applicable rules regulating personal use airports would have allowed far more flights than the evidentiary record shows historically occurred at an airstrip when it became nonconforming, the county cannot use the administrative rule definitions as a surrogate descriptor of the nature and scope of the use at the time it became nonconforming. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. A local government's approval of a conditional use permit for a "public air park" does not grant approval for a recreational parachuting center, where the site plan for the public air park does not show a recreational parachuting center was either contemplated or approved. Skydive Oregon v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 294 (1993).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. An airport that serves several counties, is "part of a regional system of airports for the greater Portland metropolitan area" and has 60,000 annual aircraft operations is an urban public facility use. Amending county plan and zoning maps to designate and zone additional land for such an urban airport use requires exceptions to Statewide Planning Goals 11 and 14. Murray v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 269 (1992).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Where, at the time of the imposition of restrictive zoning, there was a lawful intermittent airport use of property, it is incorrect for a local government to conclude such use cannot constitute a nonconforming use because it was recreational, intermittent and did not involve the investment of substantial sums of money. Warner v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 220 (1991).

31.3.1 Permits – Particular Uses – Airports. Local code provisions which regulate "public" airports, and state that "private landing strips * * * may still be subject to applicable regulations," are inapplicable to private airports, but recognize that there may be other requirements which apply to private airports. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 20 Or LUBA 246 (1990).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. In considering an application for a relative farm help dwelling, a local government is not limited to considering the commercial farming operation occurring on the property on the date the application is filed, and the local government does not err by considering whether a new crop planted after the application is filed, either alone or in combination with the existing operation, is an "existing commercial farming operation" within the meaning of OAR 660-033-0130(9)(a). Wachal v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 561 (2020).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A reasonable person would rely on an applicant's testimony regarding their activities managing a farm and their status as the state license holder for an industrial hemp-growing operation to conclude that the applicant is a farm operator and continues to play the "predominant role" in management and farm use of the farm, for purposes of OAR 660-033-0130(9)(a), even where they have hired another company to prepare the farmland for planting hemp seed and to provide consultation regarding hemp growing. Wachal v. Linn County, 81 Or LUBA 561 (2020).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Any permits for residential development on resource land that were issued prior to the effective date of HB 2106 (2019) are eligible for the five one-year extensions provided in ORS 215.417(2) (2019) only if, on the effective date of that legislation, those permits were still in the initial four-year period of validity or the one two-year extension period provided in ORS 215.417 (2017). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 279 (2020).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A county may not allow unlimited, successive one-year extensions of permits for residential development on resource land where state statute and regulation provide that such permits "shall be valid for four years" and that "[a]n extension" thereof "shall be valid for two years," where nothing in the legislative history suggests an intent to allow more than one extension. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 96 (2019).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. OAR 660-033-0130(8)(a)(A)(i) to (iv) provide in relevant part that a lawfully established dwelling may be repaired, altered or replaced if the dwelling "has, or formerly had" indoor plumbing. The rule's requirements are disjunctive and an applicant can satisfy the rule by demonstrating that a mobile home "has" or "formerly had" indoor plumbing. Treadway v. Jefferson County, 72 Or LUBA 122 (2015).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A lot of record dwelling approval under ORS 215.705(1) does not have the automatic effect of consolidating parcels within the tract in which the dwelling is approved; such consolidation must occur via a formal process that has the legal effect of vacating the interior property lines. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. OAR 660-033-0135(1) authorizes a farm dwelling on a "parcel," which obligates the local government to confirm that the subject property is a unit of land created in one of the ways described in ORS 92 and ORS 215.010, but it does not obligate the local government to determine whether the land use decision or process that created the property was legally correct in the sense that all applicable standards were properly applied and satisfied. Any legal errors in such decisions cannot be challenged in the appeal of a subsequent decision approving a dwelling on the parcel. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. The OAR 660-033-0135(1)(d) requirement allowing a farm dwelling on a parcel only if "there is no other dwelling on the subject tract" focuses on the "subject tract" as it exists when the local government approves the farm dwelling; that the parcel was once part of a different tract that included a dwelling does not prohibit approval of the farm dwelling, if the tract the parcel is currently a part of has no dwelling. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. OAR 660-033-0135(1)(c) allows a farm dwelling upon a finding that the dwelling will be occupied by persons principally engaged in farm use of the land at a commercial scale. Although the rule is ambiguous regarding whether the "land" means the parcel on which the dwelling would be located or the tract that includes the parcel, based on context it is reasonably clear that the unit of analysis for the "commercial scale" inquiry is the tract. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A county errs in finding that a farm dwelling will be occupied by persons principally engaged in farm use of the land at a "commercial scale" for purposes of OAR 660-033-0135(1)(c) based on evidence of ranching activities on a 17,000-acre ranch that the subject tract is associated with, instead of the tract on which the proposed dwelling will be located. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A county is not required to impose a condition prohibiting use of a farm dwelling if the tract on which it is located is no longer used for farm use at a commercial scale. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Seasonal occupation of a farm dwelling is not necessarily inconsistent with a finding that the dwelling will be occupied by persons "principally engaged" in farm use of the property, where the property is located in a high elevation area where pasture and farm use is possible only six months of the year. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A county decision concerning whether to extend or terminate a permit authorizing construction of a farm dwelling based on whether there has to be "substantial compliance with the approved farm management plan" constitutes "discretionary approval" of a "proposed development of land" and, therefore, is a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.402(4). Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A finding that simply states the farm management plan submitted by an applicant for farm dwelling approval meets the local code's definition of "commercial farm" is impermissibly conclusory. Kunze v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 130 (1994).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Where the local code allows a farm dwelling on EFU-zoned property that "is currently used for a commercial farm use," the local government may interpret its code to allow it to issue a building permit for a farm dwelling when a commercial farm management plan is substantially implemented, including a situation where perennial crops capable of producing the level of income required for commercial farm use have been planted on the property. Kunze v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 130 (1994).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Even though LUBA might agree with a county's argument in its brief that the purpose section of its EFU zoning district is not an approval standard for a farm dwelling permit application, if the challenged decision itself does not interpret the code provision, LUBA must remand the decision for the county to interpret the provision in the first instance. Testa v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 357 (1994).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Conditioning approval of a farm dwelling on the applicant obtaining a zoning permit with the board of county commissioners acting as initial decision maker on the zoning permit rather than the planning director is at most a procedural error, which provides a basis for reversal or remand only if petitioner's substantial rights are violated. Louisiana Pacific v. Umatilla County, 26 Or LUBA 247 (1993).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. A county decision approving a dwelling on a lot or parcel that is a woodlot capable of producing 10,000 dollars or more in average gross annual income, as provided in ORS 215.213(2)(b)(B), is "discretionary" and is a "permit," as defined by ORS 215.402(4). McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. In determining whether a proposed dwelling meets the ORS 215.213(2) standards for dwellings in conjunction with a Christmas tree farm use, it is incorrect to apply the "used exclusively" and "evidence of periodic maintenance practices" standards contained in ORS 215.203(2)(a) and (3)(a) and (d). Those ORS 215.203 standards are designed to constitute qualifications for particular taxation treatment, and are not land use standards applicable to approval of dwellings in conjunction with farm use. Harwood v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 191 (1992).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Nothing in ORS 215.213(2) requires a local government to find that a proposed dwelling in conjunction with farm use be "necessary" to the farm use of the property. Harwood v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 191 (1992).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. Where there is neither a local code nor a statutory definition of the term "perennial," the commonly understood meaning of that term is applied. Under the commonly understood meaning of "perennial," a Christmas tree is a perennial under ORS 215.213(2)(b)(A). Harwood v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 191 (1992).

31.3.2 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Dwellings. OAR 660-05-030(4) does not allow approval of a dwelling customarily provided in conjunction with farm use where the farm use that the dwelling would be customarily provided in conjunction with does not yet exist on the subject property. Hayes v. Deschutes County, 23 Or LUBA 91 (1992).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where a local code provision implementing OAR 660-006-0029 requires the decision-maker "to identify the building site" for a forest template dwelling by "weigh[ing] together" (1) the requirement to minimize the amount of forest lands used and (2) fire-safety development design standards, written testimony previously submitted in a different land use proceeding by lay individuals with personal knowledge that suggests that serious slope issues have prevented improving one alternative access route because of inability or expense of meeting local road design standards is substantial evidence that improving that alternative access route is impracticable where no contrary evidence is introduced into the record in the current proceeding. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 400 (2020).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Any permits for residential development on resource land that were issued prior to the effective date of HB 2106 (2019) are eligible for the five one-year extensions provided in ORS 215.417(2) (2019) only if, on the effective date of that legislation, those permits were still in the initial four-year period of validity or the one two-year extension period provided in ORS 215.417 (2017). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 279 (2020).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where an approved site plan indicates that a replacement dwelling will be sited on an adjacent property, but where the building permit for the replacement dwelling allows a replacement dwelling "in the same footprint as the original home," and where an ArcGIS map marked with distances and existing development indicate that the footprint of the original dwelling was located on the subject property, a conclusion that the subject property does not "include[] a dwelling" for purposes of forest template dwelling approval under ORS 215.750(4)(d) is not supported by substantial evidence. Bielefeld v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 480 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where a county approves a "forest template dwelling" under ORS 215.750(1)(c), arguments that the county relied on units of land that were unlawfully created through partition approval, rather than subdivision approval, provide no basis for reversal or remand since any procedural error the county committed in approving the land division cannot be collaterally attacked in an appeal of a subsequent decision that depends on the prior approval. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 65 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. A county may not allow unlimited, successive one-year extensions of permits for residential development on resource land where state statute and regulation provide that such permits "shall be valid for four years" and that "[a]n extension" thereof "shall be valid for two years," where nothing in the legislative history suggests an intent to allow more than one extension. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 96 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. A county errs in accepting with the applicant's final written argument, for purposes of determining whether at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, and therefore whether the subject property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings , even where the email is intended to provide context for evidence submitted by opponents, and thereby rebut opponents' arguments concerning that evidence. Under ORS 197.763(6)(e), new evidence may not be submitted with an applicant's final written argument and, under ORS 197.763(9), such an email is evidence rather than argument. In addition, opponents are not precluded from raising a county's admission of new evidence with the applicant's final written argument as procedural error on appeal to LUBA merely because they failed to object during the local proceedings, where the opportunity to object was provided after the county had already considered evidence, deliberated, and made its oral decision, and where the record was closed and no further testimony was allowed. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where a county determines that a property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750 because at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, based on a statement of the applicant, a recollection of the prior owner of one of the surrounding dwellings, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings, and a statement by the tax assessor that its records showed a dwelling in place on January 1, 1993, but where LUBA concludes that the county erred in accepting the email, where LUBA cannot determine whether the county would have reached the same conclusion without the email, and where the county's findings failed to address evidence that the tax rolls indicate existence of the dwelling as of July 1993 rather than January 1993, LUBA will remand for the county to adopt adequate findings. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Absent a legal definition for how the center point of a property must be established for purposes of determining whether it qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, a county errs by not explaining the basis for its conclusion that its chosen method is the most appropriate and by not addressing opponents' arguments challenging that method. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. A county errs in accepting with the applicant's final written argument, for purposes of determining whether at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, and therefore whether the subject property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings , even where the email is intended to provide context for evidence submitted by opponents, and thereby rebut opponents' arguments concerning that evidence. Under ORS 197.763(6)(e), new evidence may not be submitted with an applicant's final written argument and, under ORS 197.763(9), such an email is evidence rather than argument. In addition, opponents are not precluded from raising a county's admission of new evidence with the applicant's final written argument as procedural error on appeal to LUBA merely because they failed to object during the local proceedings, where the opportunity to object was provided after the county had already considered evidence, deliberated, and made its oral decision, and where the record was closed and no further testimony was allowed. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where a county determines that a property qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750 because at least three dwellings existed on surrounding lots or parcels on January 1, 1993, based on a statement of the applicant, a recollection of the prior owner of one of the surrounding dwellings, an email from a contractor who worked on one of the surrounding dwellings, and a statement by the tax assessor that its records showed a dwelling in place on January 1, 1993, but where LUBA concludes that the county erred in accepting the email, where LUBA cannot determine whether the county would have reached the same conclusion without the email, and where the county's findings failed to address evidence that the tax rolls indicate existence of the dwelling as of July 1993 rather than January 1993, LUBA will remand for the county to adopt adequate findings. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Absent a legal definition for how the center point of a property must be established for purposes of determining whether it qualifies for a forest template dwelling under ORS 215.750, a county errs by not explaining the basis for its conclusion that its chosen method is the most appropriate and by not addressing opponents' arguments challenging that method. Eng v. Wallowa County, 79 Or LUBA 421 (2019).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. ORS 215.750 does not prohibit a local government from applying a local code provision requiring an applicant for a forest template dwelling to demonstrate that the dwelling is "necessary for and accessory to" the forest use. Greenhalgh v. Columbia County, 54 Or LUBA 626 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. LUBA will not defer to a local government's interpretation of the phrase "necessary for and accessory to" forest management as meaning "convenient and efficient" to forest management, where such an interpretation is contrary to the plain meaning of the word "necessary," the express language of the provision at issue, and other language in the provision. Greenhalgh v. Columbia County, 54 Or LUBA 626 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Findings concluding that a proposed dwelling will not significantly increase fire hazards in a forest zone are not necessarily adequate to also show that the dwelling will not significantly increase fire suppression costs or risks to fire suppression personnel. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. A hearings officer errs in concluding, based on expert testimony that isolated dwellings force firefighters to choose either to abandon such homes or to devote insufficient resources to defend them, that the proposed isolated dwelling will not significantly increase fire suppression costs or risks to fire suppression personnel because firefighters would simply abandon the dwelling. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Remand is necessary where the applicant's forest consultant recommends vegetation removal as necessary to ensure compliance with approval criteria for a large tract forest dwelling, but the hearings officer does not adopt a condition of approval to that effect or explain why such measures are not necessary to ensure compliance with approval criteria. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Under a code standard requiring that a forest dwelling be located at a site that minimizes the risks associated with wildfire, remand is necessary where the opponents' expert testified that the preferred site is isolated and will incur significantly more risk and cost to firefighters over alternative sites, there is no rebuttal of that testimony, and the findings do not state a sufficient basis to reject that testimony. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where the purpose of code standards for siting a large tract forest dwelling is to identify a site that minimizes the loss of forest lands to non-forest uses, it is appropriate to favor sites that are already developed for non-forest uses over undeveloped sites, because developed sites do not require additional loss of forest lands to forest uses. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 53 Or LUBA 290 (2007).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where no county approval was required to create parcels of more than 20 acres in a transitional timber zone if the parcel was to be used for forest use and the question is whether a parcel that was created 16 years ago was created for forest use, the fact that the parcel was used only for growing trees for 16 years is sufficient to show the parcel was created for forest use and it does not matter that no trees were harvested during that 16-year period. Neal v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 248 (2006).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. The broad statutory definition of "owner" under statutory lot- of-record provisions, which includes certain relatives of the fee title owner as the owner, does not apply in determining whether parcels are part of the same "tract" for purposes of approving a forest template dwelling. Neal v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 248 (2006).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Forest restocking requirements imposed by OAR 660-006-0029 do not constitute approval criteria that determine whether a dwelling may be approved on property zoned for forest use. Hodge Oregon Properties, LLC v. Lincoln County, 46 Or LUBA 290 (2004).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where the local code neither requires the proposed conditional use to be the sole use of the entire subject parcel nor prohibits approval of a nonforest conditional use on a portion of a parcel on which a forest dwelling is located, a prior local decision approving a forest dwelling on the subject parcel does not prevent subsequent approval of a conditional use permit for a proposed nonforest use on a portion of that parcel. Spiering v. Yamhill County, 25 Or LUBA 695 (1993).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. A determination that an onsite dwelling is essential to carrying out the proposed forest management operation, supported by adequate findings and substantial evidence, demonstrates compliance with a local standard requiring that a forest management dwelling be "necessary for * * * a permitted forest use." DLCD v. Coos County, 25 Or LUBA 158 (1993).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. The "necessary for and accessory to" test for approval of forest dwellings is a significant limitation on the approval of permits for construction of single-family dwellings on lands planned and zoned for forest use. Further, the necessary and accessory test is not satisfied simply because a proposed forest dwelling is convenient for, or will enhance the cost effectiveness of, the forest use of a forest parcel. Barnett v. Clatsop County, 23 Or LUBA 595 (1992).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where the findings supporting a local government decision approving a forest dwelling under the "necessary for and accessory to test" fail to explain why living on-site is required for performance of the identified forest management duties, the findings are inadequate to establish that the proposed forest dwelling is "necessary." Barnett v. Clatsop County, 23 Or LUBA 595 (1992).

31.3.3 Permits – Particular Uses – Forest Dwellings. Where a local government interprets the phrase "necessary for and accessory to" in the local code as requiring only a showing that a proposed dwelling is convenient to the continuation of the resource use of the property, such interpretation is incorrect. Tipperman v. Union County, 22 Or LUBA 775 (1992).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A county fails to correctly apply the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) where it concludes that there are only a few farm or forest uses in the area but does not identify and discuss each farm or forest use, where it does not describe the operations on each of the surrounding properties devoted to farm or forest use, where it does not identify evidence of the unmitigated impacts of the proposed nonfarm use, and where it concludes that such impacts will be reduced but does not identify evidence that significant impacts are avoided. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," an interpretation by the local government that it need not consider the impact of the proposed use on property values and neighbor peace of mind is not inconsistent with the provision's express language or underlying policies. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a local code provision provides that issuance of a conditional use permit (CUP) requires a determination that "[t]he proposed use is or may be made compatible with existing adjacent permitted uses and other uses permitted in the underlying zone," a local government decision granting a CUP is not supported by substantial evidence where it does not identify and describe all of the existing and permitted uses on adjacent properties and where it fails to analyze or measure the extent of the potential impacts of the proposed use and instead proceeds straight to mitigation measures. Currie v. Douglas County, 79 Or LUBA 585 (2019).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. How to (1) plan and zone an inventoried significant mineral and aggregate resource site, and (2) plan and zone any adjoining areas that may be needed for processing or buffers or to otherwise mitigate identified conflicts are separate questions from what property is properly included on a comprehensive plan Statewide Planning Goal 5 inventory of significant aggregate sites. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The OAR 660-023-0180(1)(b) requirement to minimize conflicts does not require an absolute guarantee that a proposed mining operation will never violate Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) standards. A local government does not err by finding that DEQ noise standards will be met, based on the applicant's sound study, and by imposing a condition of approval that mining be monitored for noise in the future and any changes in mining be made in the future to fully comply with DEQ noise standards, without requiring that mining cease until the mine fully complies with DEQ noise standards. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 340-225-0040 and OAR 340-225-0050 modeling requirements to determine whether a proposed mining operation will comply with ambient air quality and new source air particulate standards are not mere procedural requirements an applicant is free to ignore. The applicant and local government must either perform the required modeling or demonstrate that the modeling is unnecessary to demonstrate the proposed mining will comply with the air particulate standards. Save TV Butte v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 22 (2018).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county development ordinance requires that all permits and approval for an allowed primary use must be obtained before any accessory use may be established, the county errs by approving a proposal to process aggregate material as an accessory use where the primary use, aggregate mining, is not proposed or approved. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 214 (2016).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county identifies three related reasons why introduction of inconsistent uses in an area is justified, but the petitioner challenges the findings and evidentiary support for only one reason, the failure to challenge the remaining two reasons is not a basis to reject petitioner's challenge, where the three reasons are not stated as independent alternatives, and the challenged reason appears to underpins the other two reasons. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-0180(7) requires that a local government conduct an ESEE analysis to determine whether to allow, limit or prevent new conflicting uses within the impact area of a Goal 5 resource. Where a petitioner raised general issues of compliance with OAR 660-023-0180(7) during the proceedings below, but in its findings the county declined to conduct an ESEE analysis to determine whether to allow, limit or prevent new conflicting uses, on appeal to LUBA the petitioner may challenge the county's finding that it need not conduct an ESEE analysis. The petitioner is not required to anticipate that the county will adopt findings concluding that no ESEE analysis is required. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Nothing in OAR 660-023-0180(7), which requires that a local government conduct an ESEE analysis to determine whether to allow, limit or prevent new conflicting uses within the impact area of a Goal 5 mining resource, allows a county to postpone the ESEE analysis to a future land use proceeding after it has approved the comprehensive plan and zoning changes to allow the mining use that triggers application of OAR 660-023-0180(7). Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Absent a land use regulation or other applicable law that requires a county to address compliance with state or federal archeological and cultural preservation laws in approving an application for a mining use, or to impose conditions requiring compliance with such laws if archeological or cultural sites are discovered during mining, the county does not err in failing to adopt such findings or impose such a condition. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A finding that mining will not conflict with deer and elk winter range on the subject property, because resident deer and elk will adjust to noise from mining and truck traffic on the property, is insufficient to address issues raised regarding impacts of truck traffic on deer and elk migration routes off the property, including the increased potential for collisions between trucks and deer and elk migrating across the county road. Rogue Advocates v. Josephine County, 72 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A city is not required to defer to a permit applicant's characterization of its proposal to remove up to 500,000 cubic yards of rock from a five-acre site as mere site preparation that is necessary for a possible future proposal for residential development. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A development ordinance that links the terms "mining" and "quarrying" suggests the term "mining" should not be limited to removal of minerals that exclude rock, where dictionary definitions of "quarrying" frequently define that term to include rock removal. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a development code states that "minerals" include three general categories: solids, liquids, and gases, but these general categories are followed by specific examples: "coal and ores," "crude petroleum" and "natural gases," the rule of statutory construction ejusdem generis lends some support for interpreting the word "minerals" to be a narrow category of precious and/or valuable substances, as opposed to mere rock or aggregate. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a development code definition of the term "excavation" separately lists removal of "minerals" and "rock" as possible examples of "excavation," that suggests "minerals" and "rock" are different things and that "minerals" do not include "rock." S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a development code definition of "surface mining" duplicates a statute that defines "surface mining" to include mining of "minerals," without expressly incorporating the broad statutory definition of "minerals" or the statutory exceptions to that broad definition of "minerals" the development code definition of "surface mining" lends some support to the position that the enactors of the development code intended the word "minerals" to have a more narrow meaning than the statutory definition of that term. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. One possible inference when a development code definition of "surface mining" duplicates a statute that defines "surface mining" to include mining of "minerals," is that the enactors of the development code intended the word "minerals" to have its statutory meaning, even if the enactors did not expressly incorporate the broad statutory definition of "minerals" or the statutory exceptions to that broad definition of "minerals" into the development code. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. There is nothing inherently inappropriate about a local government distinguishing between acceptable excavations that are necessary for development and excavations that are of a nature and extent that constitutes mining. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. While dictionaries are not always a reliable way to determine the intended meaning of an undefined term like "minerals," where the development codes expressly directs that undefined terms "have the normal dictionary meaning" it is appropriate to rely on dictionary definitions to interpret the word "minerals" to include basalt rock. S. St. Helens LLC v. City of St. Helens, 71 Or LUBA 30 (2015).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where applicable land use regulations require that a proposal to modify a previously approved conditional use must be "consistent" with previously approved conditional use, and the proposal would eliminate the previously approved composting operation and make minor changes to the previously approved topsoil mining operation, the modified conditional use is correctly viewed as "consistent" with the previously approved conditional use. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Remand is necessary where a conditional use permit approval standard requires a comparison of the adverse impacts of the proposed mining use on abutting properties with the impacts of development permitted outright on the abutting properties, but the local government findings compare only the impacts of proposed and existing mining and do not consider the impacts of uses permitted outright. Dion v. Baker County, 70 Or LUBA 438 (2014).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Remand is necessary where the decision (1) approves a two-year intensification of a mining operation and (2) modifies extraction limits to extend the life of the mining operation beyond the initial two-year period, but the only evidence regarding compliance with an approval standard requiring that the existing county road system be "adequate to accommodate the proposed use" addresses only the initial two-year period, not long-term impacts on the adequacy of the county road system. Dion v. Baker County, 70 Or LUBA 438 (2014).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A local government does not exceed its jurisdiction in attempting to determine whether the Department of State Lands or Department of Geology and Mineral Industries has jurisdiction to issue a state permit required for a riparian mining operation, so that the local government can find compliance with local standards and impose conditions requiring the applicant to obtain a permit from the appropriate agency. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Absent countervailing evidence, a letter from an applicant's engineer relating the site visit and verbal agreement of representatives from the Department of State Lands (DSL) and Department of Geology and Mineral Industries (DOGAMI) that DOGAMI and not DSL has jurisdiction over a proposed riparian mining operation is substantial evidence a decision maker could rely upon to conclude that DOGAMI has jurisdiction over the operation. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where there is uncertainty regarding the exact location of the jurisdictional line between the Department of State Lands (DSL) and Department of Geology and Mineral Industries (DOGAMI), but agency representatives agree that a proposed mining area is upland of the jurisdictional line and therefore subject to DOGAMI's jurisdiction, and as a precaution the county imposes a condition requiring that the applicant obtain any permits required by either DSL or DOGAMI, any uncertainty regarding the location of the jurisdictional line does not undermine the county's finding that DOGAMI has jurisdiction. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The lack of evidence in the record regarding depth or location of contaminated groundwater on a mining site and the possibility that groundwater might enter the adjacent river is not a basis to reverse or remand under a code provision requiring consideration of impacts on conflicting uses within 250 feet of the property, where the only conflicting use identified is a city water intake located 3,500 feet upstream of the mining site beyond the head of tide, and the petitioner cites no evidence or argument suggesting how contaminated groundwater from the site could migrate upstream above the head of tide to impact the municipal water intake. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where an applicant for a mining operation submits sufficient information to allow the local government to determine that a local water quality standard is satisfied, but the local government for extra assurance also requires the applicant to obtain a state agency water quality permit, the applicant is not required to submit its state agency application materials to the local government for review under the local approval standard. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a local government's Goal 5 Program to Achieve the Goal for a particular mineral and aggregate site requires "ongoing incremental reclamation (subject to [Department of Geology and Mineral Industries] review and approval)" the local government likely could interpret that requirement to allow it to write a condition requiring "ongoing incremental reclamation" but expressly providing that DOGAMI is free to determine whether "ongoing incremental reclamation" is possible or desirable and that DOGAMI may modify or waive that requirement altogether in its permitting process as DOGAMI sees fit. However, the county cannot simply abandon the requirement for "ongoing incremental reclamation" by claiming it lacks expertise in reclamation and does not understand the meaning of that requirement. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a zoning ordinance expressly prohibits a county from issuing a use permit as a precondition of commencing mining until the applicant secures a state agency approval for a reclamation plan, the local government's failure to include such a requirement in the conditions attached to its conditional use and site plan approval decision is harmless error. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Conditions of approval are not too vague under the Court of Appeals' reasoning in Sisters Forest Planning Committee v. Deschutes Cty., 198 Or App 311, 108 P3d 1175 (2005), where the conditions of approval are not any more vague than many of the standards they were imposed to address. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a zoning ordinance requires a mining permit applicant to demonstrate that a proposed mining operation can meet certain state standards and a state standard prohibits mining "without taking reasonable precautions to prevent particulate matter from becoming airborne," and a local government interprets that state standard to require that the applicant successfully prevent all particulate matter from becoming airborne, the local government erroneously interprets the state standard. The state standard only requires that the applicant take reasonable precautions; it does not require the elimination of all airborne particulate matter. Hoffman v. Deschutes County, 61 Or LUBA 173 (2010).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A condition requiring that the applicant for mining restrict rock blasting for up to three days after being notified of Native American cultural or religious visits to a nearby site is sufficient to ensure that noise from blasting will not conflict with such visits. Walker v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 488 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A county's failure to first determine the degree of adverse effects of blasting-generated dust on a nearby residence before conducting its ESEE analysis, as required by OAR 660-023-0180(5)(d)(A), is not reversible error, where the county's ESEE analysis finds that a condition of approval restricting blasting times to periods when the wind blows away from the residence will minimize or eliminate adverse impacts on the residence. That finding, if supported by the record, means that the county did not need to conduct an ESEE analysis at all with respect to impacts of dust on the residence. Walker v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 488 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A proposed aggregate resource site is significant if it meets any one of the criteria at subsections (a) through (c) of OAR 660-023-0180(3). Delta Property Company v. Lane County, 58 Or LUBA 409 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Even if an aggregate resource site is found to be "significant" under OAR 660-023-0180(3)(a) or (b), OAR 660-023-0180(3)(d) dictates that such aggregate resource sites are not "significant," within the meaning of OAR 660-023-0180(3), if (1) more than 35 percent of the site's soils are rated Class I by the Natural Resource and Conservation Service or (2) more than 35 percent of the site's soils are rated Class II or a combination of Class I and II by the Natural Resource and Conservation Service and the average thickness of the aggregate layer does not exceed specified minimums in the rule. Delta Property Company v. Lane County, 58 Or LUBA 409 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. If a mineral and aggregate site is found to be significant under OAR 660-023-0180(3), then local governments must determine whether mining will be allowed. That in turn requires a number of additional determinations regarding: (1) an impact area, (2) conflicts, and (3) whether conflicts can be minimized. OAR 660-023-0180(5)(a) through (c). If all identified conflicts can be minimized, mining must be allowed. OAR 660-023-0180(5)(c). If all identified conflicts cannot be minimized, the local government must then determine the economic, social, environmental, and energy consequences of allowing mining notwithstanding that the conflicts cannot be minimized. OAR 660-023-0180(5)(d). Delta Property Company v. Lane County, 58 Or LUBA 409 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where OAR 660-023-0180(3)(d)(B) applies, and the requisite average thickness of the aggregate layer is not shown to be present, an aggregate resource site is not "significant," within the meaning of OAR 660-023-0180(3). Delta Property Company v. Lane County, 58 Or LUBA 409 (2009).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A finding that a proposed aggregate site may have a large basalt outcrop in the middle of the site is not supported by substantial evidence, where the only evidence supporting the finding is data from an off-site well and that finding is inconsistent with a deep boring that is near the center of the site and between the center of the site and the off-site well that the finding relied on. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. To qualify as a "significant" aggregate resource site under OAR 660-023-0180(3)(d)(B)(ii), "the average thickness of the aggregate layer within the mining area" must exceed 25 feet. Where a county's findings suggest the county may have erroneously concluded that boulders should not be considered in determining whether the requisite 25-foot-thick layer is present on a proposed aggregate resource site, remand is necessary so that the county can either (1) adopt findings under OAR 660-0023-0180(3) that do not discount aggregate significance based on the possible presence of boulders or (2) explain why the presence of boulders properly affects the determination of significance under OAR 660-0023-0180(3). Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where an applicant seeking to establish that a proposed mining site qualifies as a significant aggregate resource site does not argue to the county that opponents' data from off-site wells is consistent with data from the applicant's on-site wells or that the data from the off-site wells is unreliable because it was not collected under the supervision of a geologist, it is not unreasonable for the county to rely on the opponents' evidence to conclude that the two on-site borings were not sufficient to establish that a 117-acre mining site qualifies as a significant aggregate resource site. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Two 25-foot-deep test pits that show an overburden of several feet on top of 20+ feet of aggregate material do not establish that there is an aggregate layer of more than 25 feet and they do not establish that the aggregate layer that is present on the site is less than 25 feet deep. The 25-foot-deep pit can only confirm the geology of the 25 feet below the surface where the test pit was dug. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where LUBA determines that three county findings regarding the significance of an aggregate site are not supported by substantial evidence, are inadequately explained, or fail to appreciate the significance of certain evidence in the record, remand is required where LUBA cannot assume the findings were minor or unimportant parts of the county's ultimate decision that the applicant failed to demonstrate that the aggregate site qualifies as "significant," under OAR 660-023-0180(3). Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 601 (2008).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Specific code provisions that require imposition of a surface mining overlay zone on property within one-half mile of the mining site, which are intended to protect the site from adverse uses, control over general code provisions requiring that owners of property being rezoned sign the application. The purpose of the overlay zone would be frustrated if nearby property owners could effectively veto a mining operation by refusing to sign the application. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. While an astronomer's testimony regarding the impact of dust on an observatory's telescopes is substantial evidence from which a reasonable decision maker could conclude that dust from an open-pit mining operation would significantly conflict with the observatory, the county could nonetheless rely on the distance between the site and the observatory and proposed measures to control dust to conclude that the mine would not significantly conflict with the observatory. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Reliance on Goal 5 zoning to protect habitat is an insufficient basis to conclude that there will be no "significant potential conflicts" with the habitat, where the findings fail to address evidence and testimony that mining will disrupt grouse flight patterns over the mining site to the Goal 5 protected habitat sites. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Findings excluding a cattle ranch four miles from the mining site from the impact area are inadequate, where the findings fail to address testimony that the ranch owns allotment land within one-half mile of the site and mining noise and impacts will displace cattle from the allotment to deeded land, increasing costs. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Under OAR 660-023-0180(5)(b), conflicts with residential uses "due to noise, dust, or other discharges" must be considered, even if those conflicts turn on "quality of life" or similar intangible values. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The Goal 5 rule does not require a mining applicant to survey a buffer area to determine if there are unknown archeological sites within the buffer, when those sites are not inventoried Goal 5 resources. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where testimony indicates that tribal members conduct religious and cultural ceremonies near ancient pictograms identified on the county's Goal 5 inventory, the county must evaluate whether such visits are "existing" uses for purposes of OAR 660-023-0180(5)(b)(A) and if so evaluate alleged conflicts between proposed surface mining and those uses. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. For purposes of identifying conflicts with agricultural uses within the impact area under the second step of the Goal 5 process at OAR 660-023-0180(5)(b)(E), the rule is not concerned with the relative economic significance of the agricultural use, and the county errs in declining to evaluate impacts on grazing in the area simply because that grazing is limited in scope or economic importance. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Findings that address impacts of a mine's groundwater well on the regional aquifer are inadequate to address testimony that the mining pit itself will de-water perched aquifers in the area. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Remand is necessary where the county's ESEE findings evaluate impacts of dust from daily mining activities on nearby residences, but fail to evaluate dust generated by blasting or determine whether such impacts may be minimized or reduced. Walker v. Deschutes County, 55 Or LUBA 93 (2007).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where there are unchallenged findings that an aggregate mine presents no actual risk of contamination to groundwater wells, a county is not obligated to adopt findings addressing the possibility that potential users of groundwater wells may perceive a risk of contamination. The mere perception of a risk is too tenuous and indirect to constitute a "negative impact" that must be analyzed under OAR 660-016-0005 and 660-016-0010. Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Under a local code provision that requires evaluation of the traffic impacts caused by "development of the property" being rezoned, in rezoning land to allow for a new aggregate mine the local government is not required to evaluate the cumulative traffic impacts of the new mine along with other mines the applicant operates. Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A governing body's interpretation of a code provision defining the study area for an aggregate mine, to exclude haul roads used to transport finished aggregate material off-site, is consistent with the text of the code provision and is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Remand is necessary where the local government's approval of an asphalt batch plant fails to address issues raised regarding the impact of emissions on especially sensitive crops grown nearby. Rickreall Community Water Assoc. v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 76 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county denies an application for a mineral and aggregate zoning overlay because the applicant failed to supply a certificate that the mine would not result in an increase in flood elevations, the county's decision must identify the legal requirement that the certificate be submitted at the time the zoning overlay is approved. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A local government reasonably viewed an engineer as a qualified expert, where the person had a degree in agricultural engineering and several engineering certifications, participated actively in the local proceedings regarding a mineral and aggregate overlay and presented models to predict performance of mining plans, and challenged assumptions of the applicant's experts. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The testimony of experts in assessing the risk of turbid water discharges from proposed aggregate mining in a river's floodplain and the risk of avulsion is likely to be critical. Experts must collect and analyze the data and draw scientific conclusions to assess that risk and ultimately the issue will likely be which experts the decision maker finds more believable. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where there is conflicting expert testimony regarding the location of a river channel migration zone and the probability that the river channel might migrate to capture a proposed floodplain mining site causing river turbidity, the county's decision to believe the larger channel migration zone should apply is supported by substantial evidence. Westside Rock v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 264 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. An acoustic engineer's statement that the procedures followed in conducting a noise study for an aggregate mine were "generally consistent" with procedures required by state administrative rule is sufficient to demonstrate compliance with the rule, particularly where the petitioners do not identify any material difference between the procedures followed and those required the rule. Ray v. Josephine County, 51 Or LUBA 443 (2006).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A finding that a proposed mine will have adverse effects on the livability, value and enjoyment of residential uses within the impact area might play some role in the required considerations under OAR 660-023-0180, but that finding is not, in and of itself, either a proper consideration under OAR 660-023-0180 or a sufficient basis for denying the requested permit. Hellberg v. Morrow County, 49 Or LUBA 423 (2005).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A county's obligation under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(c) to consider reasonable measures to minimize conflicts associated with mining and its obligation under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(d) to consider economic, social, environmental and energy consequences of allowing, limiting or not allowing mining are "findings" obligations, and they do not place an obligation on the county to produce evidence regarding an application for mining. Hellberg v. Morrow County, 49 Or LUBA 423 (2005).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a local government has repealed its Goal 5 inventory of aggregate sites, the owner of EFU-zoned property listed on the repealed inventory is not entitled to a conditional use permit to mine the site under ORS 215.298(2). Copeland Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Jackson County, 46 Or LUBA 653 (2004).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The lack of specific evidence on whether aggregate samples tested by a laboratory were "representative," as required by OAR 660-

023-0180(3)(a), does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the samples came from an existing quarry and there is no suggestion in the record that the sample was not representative or that the quality of rock in the existing quarry was not uniform. Bryant v. Umatilla County, 45 Or LUBA 653 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Notwithstanding that OAR 660-023-0180(3)(a) requires that aggregate samples meet ODOT specifications for sodium sulfate soundness, where it is undisputed that ODOT in fact has not promulgated any such specifications, the failure of the applicant to test aggregate samples for sodium sulfate soundness does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Bryant v. Umatilla County, 45 Or LUBA 653 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-00180(4) establishes different requirements for evaluating conflicts between mining and agricultural practices and between mining and other uses. Therefore, a finding that proposed mining activities conflicts with nonagricultural uses will not be significant because air quality and traffic standards will be met does not necessarily establish that those conflicts will not either force a significant change in accepted agricultural practices or significantly increase the cost of those agricultural practices. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The standard for reviewing conflicts between mining and accepted agricultural practices set out in OAR 660-023-0180(4)(c) is limited to "farm uses," as that term is defined in ORS 215.203(2). Uses identified as non-farm uses permitted under ORS 215.213(1) are not farm uses or agricultural practices that must be evaluated under that standard. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where an applicant identifies groundwater as a "discharge" to be considered as a conflict pursuant to OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(A), that applicant may not argue on appeal to LUBA that (1) groundwater is not a "discharge" within the meaning of that rule; or (2) that the impact of mining on groundwater may only be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(D) if the mining site is located within a critical groundwater area and is designated as such on the county's Goal 5 inventory of significant Goal 5 sites. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-0180(4) does not change an applicant's evidentiary burden to demonstrate that measures proposed to minimize of the impacts of mining are reasonable, practical and achievable. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A county's finding that proposed mining activities are not minimized sufficiently to avoid conflicts with identified riparian resources is not adequate, where the riparian area is located near water courses that will receive water diverted from mining cells and the county adopted other findings that mining will not affect identified wetlands that are located between the riparian area and presumably would be more susceptible to fluctuations in water levels than the riparian areas. Eugene Sand and Gravel, Inc. v. Lane County, 44 Or LUBA 50 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The conflicts analysis that is mandated by OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(B) is limited to local roads that are used for access and egress. Where a proposed aggregate mine will use a state highway for access and egress, there are no road conflicts to be considered under the rule. Friends of the Applegate v. Josephine County, 44 Or LUBA 786 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Goal 6 does not require that a local government anticipate and precisely duplicate state and federal environmental permitting requirements in approving a post-acknowledgment plan amendment for an aggregate mine. The local government is only required to establish that there is a reasonable expectation that the proposed mine will be able to comply with the applicable state and federal environmental quality standards. Friends of the Applegate v. Josephine County, 44 Or LUBA 786 (2003).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A conditional use permit standard for aggregate extraction requiring that the applicant submit "sufficient information to allow the county to set standards" regarding the location, quality and quantity of resource available allows but does not obligate the county to set such standards in approving the permit. A local government's interpretation to that effect is consistent with the express language of the standard and is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1) or Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992). Jorgensen v. Union County, 37 Or LUBA 738 (2000).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. ORS 215.286 does not require a guarantee that aggregate mining on land zoned for exclusive farm use will cause no adverse impacts on the water table on surrounding lands. Jorgensen v. Union County, 37 Or LUBA 738 (2000).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county approves aggregate mining in an airport overlay zone under a standard that allows water impoundments that do not significantly increase bird strike hazards, but the county does not address another local standard that appears to flatly prohibit such impoundments, LUBA will remand the decision to the county to resolve the apparent conflict between the two standards. Jorgensen v. Union County, 37 Or LUBA 738 (2000).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Remand is appropriate where the local government approves an aggregate mine that appears to impact an inventoried Goal 5 groundwater resource without addressing issues raised below regarding whether the proposed mine complies with local provisions that were adopted to protect Goal 5 resources. Jorgensen v. Union County, 37 Or LUBA 738 (2000).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A local government is not obligated to accept evidence that ODOT approved access onto a state highway as sufficient to satisfy a county criterion that the proposed quarry operation not impose an undue burden on public improvements, which include public roads. Wild Rose Ranch Enterprises v. Benton County, 37 Or LUBA 368 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-0180, which governs comprehensive plan amendments for mineral and aggregate resources, establishes the procedures required to comply with Goal 5 but does not obviate the requirement to address other statewide planning goals. Turner Community Association v. Marion County, 37 Or LUBA 324 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. If a county has not yet amended its comprehensive plan and land use regulations to comply with OAR 660-023-0180, OAR 660-023-0180(7) requires that the county directly apply the substantive requirements and procedures of OAR 660-023-0180 to consideration of a post-acknowledgment plan amendment concerning mining authorization. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(F), which allows the county to consider land use conflicts with a proposed mine if such conflicts must be considered under a county mining ordinance adopted pursuant to ORS 517.780, does not permit a county to apply its comprehensive plan and land use regulations as decisional criteria for the proposed mine, notwithstanding a general provision in the mining ordinance that requires compliance with the county comprehensive plan and land use regulations. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A conflict or inconsistency with a comprehensive plan or land use regulation provision is not the kind of conflict that may be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b). The conflicts that may considered under the rule include conflicts between land uses. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where access to a mining site is via a "local road," OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(B) allows a county to consider conflicts with that local road. However, where access to a mining site is via an arterial highway there are no local roads used for access and egress to the mining site and OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b)(B) does not permit the county to consider conflicts with other roads. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A local government may not expand the 1,500-foot impact area required by OAR 660-023-0180(4)(a) based on potential conflicts that exceed the scope of conflicts that may be considered under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b). Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. OAR 660-023-0180(4)(d) directs that a county proceed to "determine the ESEE consequences of either allowing, limiting, or not allowing mining at the site," only where conflicts with a mining site are properly identified under OAR 660-023-0180(4)(b) and there are not "reasonable and practical measures" that would minimize those conflicts. Morse Bros., Inc. v. Columbia County, 37 Or LUBA 85 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. That a type of nonfarm use is listed in ORS 215.283(2) authorizes a county to allow such uses in an EFU zone, but carries no implication that a particular use is consistent with the purpose of the EFU zone as a matter of law.

ORS 215.283(2) does not prohibit the county from applying a local criterion that requires a proposal to mine high-value agricultural topsoil in an EFU zone not seriously interfere with the purpose of that zone. MacHugh v. Benton County, 37 Or LUBA 65 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Even assuming that a county cannot categorically prohibit all mining operations in the EFU zone, the county can apply a local standard requiring that conditional uses not seriously interfere with the purpose of the zone to deny a proposal to mine high-value agricultural topsoil, where the county's application of its standard is limited to mining operations that permanently remove agricultural topsoil. MacHugh v. Benton County, 37 Or LUBA 65 (1999).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a comprehensive plan does not provide for a proposed expansion of a mining site, a conditional use permit is insufficient to permit the expansion. In that circumstance, OAR 660-023-0180 requires a post-acknowledgment plan amendment and Goal 5 analysis. Trademark Construction, Inc. v. Marion County, 34 Or LUBA 202 (1998).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Evidence of stockpiled rock in an otherwise unused and unmaintained quarry does not constitute an ongoing quarry operation, but supports a conclusion that the site has been discontinued or interrupted for the purposes of ORS 215.130. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Because abandonment is established through an active intent to discontinue the use, petitioner's lease of a quarry site to an unrelated business is evidence of intent to abandon the site as a quarry. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. A decision to list a site on a plan aggregate resources inventory as a "1B" site simply indicates the possible existence of an aggregate resource site. Such a decision, of itself, neither plans for nor regulates the development of aggregate resources and, therefore, OAR 660-16-030(1) does not apply. O'Rourke v. Union County, 29 Or LUBA 303 (1995).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county decision adds a mineral and aggregate overlay zone to the site of a pre-existing conditional use asphalt batch plant within two miles of a planted vineyard, but does not expand or alter either the operation of or area subject to the conditional use permit, and the batch plant could continue to operate regardless of the challenged decision, the continuation of the batch plant is not prohibited by ORS 215.301. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. That an existing conditional use asphalt batch plant could be a permitted use under a county's mineral and aggregate overlay zone does not require that the county incorporate the conditional use into a decision approving application of the overlay zone to an area including the existing conditional use or that the county re-approve the conditional use as part of the decision applying the overlay zone. Mission Bottom Assoc. v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 281 (1995).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a comprehensive plan map amendment to allow a proposed concrete batch plant will result in all aggregate and concrete trucks entering the subject property via a road that provides the sole access to certain existing dwellings, Goal 12 requires the local government to demonstrate the amendment will result in use of the road being safe and adequate. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a finding that the gravel extraction rate at a proposed site will not change from historic rates is not supported by substantial evidence, and the finding appears to play a significant role in the local government's finding of compliance with a code "compatibility" requirement, the challenged decision approving a conditional use permit for a gravel operation is not supported by substantial evidence. Mazeski v. Wasco County, 28 Or LUBA 159 (1994).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. That a DOGAMI permit was not obtained does not establish that at the time a quarrying operation became nonconforming, it was removing up to 5,000 cubic yards of rock per year (the level of activity at which a DOGAMI permit is required). Mazeski v. City of Mosier, 27 Or LUBA 100 (1994).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where a county failed to interpret ORS 215.213(2)(d)(C) as allowing an aggregate processing facility that conducts part of the processing on-site but completes the process of making aggregate into asphalt or Portland cement off-site, and the party wishing to assign the county's interpretive failure as error did not appeal the county's decision to LUBA or file a cross-petition for review, LUBA will not consider the interpretive question. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 238 (1993).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. ORS 215.213(2)(d)(D) authorizes the processing of mineral resources other than aggregate. Therefore, that statute does not authorize an aggregate processing facility, notwithstanding that the final processing of aggregate into asphalt or Portland cement occurs off-site. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 238 (1993).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Under ORS 517.780(1), where a county surface mining ordinance in effect on July 1, 1972 has been amended, but not repealed, the county's surface mining ordinance and amendments thereto are not subject to the fee limitations established by ORS 517.780(4) and 517.800. Oregon City Leasing, Inc. v. Columbia County, 25 Or LUBA 129 (1993).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. All provisions of the act that created ORS 215.301 must be related to uses allowed in EFU zones. Therefore, ORS 215.301 applies only to asphalt plants sited in EFU zones, not to an application to site an asphalt plant in an industrial zone. O'Mara v. Douglas County, 25 Or LUBA 25 (1993).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where determining whether an existing quarry qualifies as a nonconforming use under applicable city code provisions requires a city to determine whether the existing quarry lawfully existed at the time the existing zoning was last amended and whether the use has been discontinued for a year, the nonconforming use determination involves the exercise of significant legal and factual judgment and is a "permit" as that term is used in ORS 227.160(2). Hood River Sand v. City of Mosier, 24 Or LUBA 381 (1993).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. The requirement of ORS 215.298(2) that permits for mining of aggregate on EFU-zoned land only be issued for sites included on an inventory in an acknowledged comprehensive plan became effective October 3, 1989 and does not apply to a pending application submitted prior to that date. Clark v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 220 (1990).

31.3.4 Permits – Particular Uses – Mineral and Aggregate. Where 40 acres which produce only sparse forage of little value for grazing are generally unsuitable for grazing by themselves, but have historically been used for grazing in conjunction with the adjoining 400 acres, the adjoining 40 acres are not "generally unsuitable for farm use" within the meaning of ORS 215.213(3), 215.283(3) and county legislation implementing those statutes. Clark v. Jackson County, 19 Or LUBA 220 (1990).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Any permits for residential development on resource land that were issued prior to the effective date of HB 2106 (2019) are eligible for the five one-year extensions provided in ORS 215.417(2) (2019) only if, on the effective date of that legislation, those permits were still in the initial four-year period of validity or the one two-year extension period provided in ORS 215.417 (2017). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 279 (2020).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.441 does not provide an independent basis to approve a dwelling within a church on property zoned EFU, and, where a local code provision provides that "[e]xisting churches may be maintained, enhanced or expanded on the same tract," a construction of that provision to independently allow a residential use of a church as an enhancement to the church impermissibly conflicts with ORS 215.203, ORS 215.283, and ORS 215.441. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 80 Or LUBA 183 (2019).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A replacement dwelling allowed under ORS 215.213(1)(q) must be located on a lawful unit of land. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 415 (2019).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) authorize local governments to approve forest template dwellings if at least three dwellings existed within a specified 160-acre area and those dwellings continue to exist at the time forest template dwelling approval is requested. But neither the statute nor the rule defines the key term "dwelling" and neither the statute nor the rule explicitly addresses whether a long abandoned, derelict structure may qualify as a "dwelling," for purposes of qualifying for a forest template dwelling. West v. Multnomah County, 70 Or LUBA 235 (2014).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) authorize local governments to approve forest template dwellings if at least three dwellings existed within a specified 160-acre area and those dwellings continue to exist at the time forest template dwelling approval is requested. A hearings officer's interpretation of the word "dwelling" in local laws adopted to implement ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) such that a former dwelling that has been vacant for many years and is in a state of disrepair that would preclude use as a residence does not qualify as a "dwelling" for purposes of satisfying ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) is more consistent with the underlying purpose of the statute and rule. That underlying purpose is to allow forest template dwellings in circumstances where there is existing limited residential development on forest lands, and the hearings officer's interpretation is more consistent with that underlying purpose than interpreting the word "dwelling" to include long abandoned structures, no matter how derelict and uninhabitable as a dwelling in its current condition. West v. Multnomah County, 70 Or LUBA 235 (2014).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) authorize local governments to approve forest template dwellings if at least three dwellings existed within a specified 160-acre area and those dwellings continue to exist at the time forest template dwelling approval is requested. Where the record supports a hearings officer's finding that a dwelling that was constructed in 1906 has been unoccupied for many years prior to an application for approval of a forest template dwelling, the hearings officer correctly found that the 1906 dwelling was a nonconforming use in the county's forest zone that was first applied long after the 1906 dwelling was constructed. And the hearings officer correctly found that under local laws adopted to implement ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3), the forest template dwelling applicant must establish that the right to continue residential use of the 1906 dwelling was not lost through interruption or abandonment for two years or more before the 1906 dwelling could be counted as a dwelling that "continues to exist" at the time the application for approval of a forest template dwelling was filed. West v. Multnomah County, 70 Or LUBA 235 (2014).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that connecting a dwelling to a rural sewer service district's existing system constitutes either the establishment of a "new community sewer system" or a "new extension of a sewer system from within an urban growth boundary." Purtzer v. Jackson County, 67 Or LUBA 205 (2013).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. When a previous approval for a partition required that the parcels not be used for residential purposes unless legal access was provided to the parcels, a current application for a lot of record dwelling cannot be approved unless the proposed dwelling satisfies the access standards that applied at the time of the partition or satisfies current standards. The fact that the applicant has an easement for residential use does not mean that the easement satisfies the local government standards for legal access. Estremado v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 148 (2010).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A reasonable person could infer from photographs that show the front and two sides of a dwelling that the pictured dwelling has "intact exterior walls and roof structure," as required by ORS 215.283(1)(s)(A) for approval of a replacement dwelling in an exclusive farm use zone. Hegele v. Crook County, 56 Or LUBA 156 (2008).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where the evidence shows that a house had a kitchen sink, toilet and bathing facilities that were connected to a pipe that exited the house and traveled underground to a holding and disposal tank of some sort, that evidence is sufficient to establish that the dwelling had indoor plumbing that was connected to "a sanitary waste disposal system," as required by ORS 215.283(1)(s)(B) for approval of a replacement dwelling in an exclusive farm use zone. ORS 215.283(1)(s)(B) does not require that the applicant establish that the required "sanitary waste disposal system" qualifies as a "subsurface sewage disposal system," as defined by ORS 454.605(13). Hegele v. Crook County, 56 Or LUBA 156 (2008).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Under ORS 215.283(1)(s)(A) and (B), a county may approve a replacement dwelling only if the dwelling that is to be replaced "[h]as intact walls and roof structure" and "[h]as indoor plumbing." Although ORS 215.283(1)(s)(A) and (B) can be interpreted to require that the dwelling that is to be replaced must remain intact until the county decision approving the replacement dwelling becomes final, the statute does not have to be interpreted in that way, since ORS 215.283(1)(s)(E)(i) requires that the dwelling to be replaced must ultimately be removed. Hegele v. Crook County, 56 Or LUBA 156 (2008).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a local code allows a non-farm dwelling only on land that is not predominantly composed of Class I through Class VI soils, and the property is composed predominantly of Class VI soils, a local government errs in finding that an application complies with that code provision. Ott v. Lake County, 54 Or LUBA 502 (2007).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. In determining whether a property is generally unsuitable for the production of farm crops and livestock or merchantable tree species, a county's conclusion that any historic agricultural use on the property before that time does not provide a substantial hurdle is supported by substantial evidence where the county chooses to rely on an expert's opinion that proposed nonfarm parcels have not been used for agricultural operation in the past 20 years. Peterson v. Crook County, 52 Or LUBA 160 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where the record reflects that 10 acres of irrigation rights were removed from two 20-acre parcels because (1) irrigating with that water was extremely inefficient, (2) the nonfarm parcels consist of 85 percent bare ground, and (3) moving the irrigation rights back would provide no benefit, county's findings that returning irrigation rights to the property would not render the nonfarm parcels generally suitable for the production of farm crops or livestock is supported by substantial evidence. Peterson v. Crook County, 52 Or LUBA 160 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where the record reflects that at least 75 percent of the parcels proposed for nonfarm dwellings are incapable of supporting grazing, the county is not required to specifically consider whether neighboring ranchers could use the proposed nonfarm parcels in conjunction with other ranch land. Peterson v. Crook County, 52 Or LUBA 160 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where two parcels are divided by a fee interest in a strip of land owned by the county for use as a public roadway, the two parcels are not contiguous and are not part of the same "tract." In that circumstance, where one of the parcels already contains a dwelling, the approval of a forest template dwelling on the other parcel does not violate ORS 215.750(4)(d), which prohibits the approval of a forest template dwelling on a "tract" that already includes a dwelling. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a strip of land was transferred in fee title to the county for roadway purposes, the resulting units of land lying on either side of that strip do not violate the requirement in ORS 92.014 (1955) that "[n]o person shall create a street or way for the purpose of partitioning a parcel of land without the approval of the agency or body authorized to give approval of plans for subdivision," where the record does not indicate that the roadway was created "for the purpose of partitioning land." Accordingly, the county does not err in determining that one of those resulting units of land is a lawfully created "parcel," and complies with the requirement in ORS 215.705(1)(a) that the lot or parcel on which a forest template dwelling is proposed was lawfully created. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where local code criteria applicable to approval of a forest template dwelling do not include any reference to local floodplain regulations, and those floodplain regulations appear to regulate the actual construction and placement of structures within a floodplain zone, and are more properly addressed at the time a building permit is issued, the county does not err in failing to adopt findings addressing those floodplain regulations in approving a forest template dwelling. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where the local code fire siting standards require that secondary fuel breaks (i.e., a fuel break extending 130 feet in all directions around structures) "or their equivalent" apply to new residences, the county does not err in determining that secondary fuel breaks are not required in the riparian setback area, where the findings adopted in support of the riparian vegetation setback regulations acknowledge that riparian vegetation provides a sufficient natural barrier against the spread of fire. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Findings that the subject property is generally unsuitable for the production of farm crops and livestock or merchantable tree species are inadequate where the findings are based on the presence of rock outcroppings and shallow soils, but the findings do not indicate the percentage of the property covered by rock outcroppings and shallow soils. Peterson v. Crook County, 49 Or LUBA 223 (2005).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a property had water rights that the applicant transferred to other property, the county must consider the possibility of transferring those rights back to the property and the potential capability of the soils if the water rights were transferred back in determining whether the subject property satisfies the "generally unsuitable" standard under ORS 215.263(5). Peterson v. Crook County, 49 Or LUBA 223 (2005).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Under ORS 215.705(4), an application for a dwelling in a mixed farm/forest zone must comply with the siting standards appropriate for the predominant use of the tract on January 1, 1993. A showing that no farm use of the property, as that term is defined in ORS 215.203(2), was occurring on the tract as of January 1, 1993, does not mean that, by default, the property was predominantly in forest use on that date. Gambee v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 420 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.705(4) requires that a county must determine whether farm or forest uses predominated on a "tract" on January 1, 1993. However, the configuration of the tract is considered as it exists as of the time an application for a dwelling is submitted. Once the scope of the tract is identified, the inquiry turns to whether farm or forest uses predominated on that tract on January 1, 1993. Gambee v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 420 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. In considering which of two uses, farm or forest, predominate on a tract as of January 1, 1993, a county may consider more than the number of acres devoted to farm or forest use to determine predominant use. However, those considerations must flow from the use that was made of the tract on January 1, 1993. Thus, income from farm and forest uses and the amount of activity directed at those uses may be considered, but historic uses and soil capability may not. Gambee v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 420 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Portions of a tract that are used for nonfarm or nonforest activities have no relevance to the inquiry under ORS 215.705(4), which requires a county to determine whether farm or forest uses predominated on a tract as of January 1, 1993. If only a small portion of the property can reasonably be considered to be in farm or forest use, the county need only consider that portion in its determination of predominant use. Gambee v. Yamhill County, 38 Or LUBA 420 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. In challenging a denial on evidentiary grounds, petitioner must demonstrate that the county's reliance on one method to determine the center of a parcel, rather than an alternative method, is either contrary to law or is so unreasonable that only petitioner's alternative can be believed as a matter of law. Linker v. Multnomah County, 38 Or LUBA 84 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a statute or a county code does not define "center" or specify a procedure for determining the "center of the subject tract," the local government can choose any reasonable method to locate the center of the tract. Linker v. Multnomah County, 38 Or LUBA 84 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A local government's method of determining the center of a lot or parcel does not have to be mathematically precise, so long as it is sufficiently accurate that a reasonable decision maker could have relied on it. Linker v. Multnomah County, 38 Or LUBA 84 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A parcel that lies wholly outside the 160-acre template required to site a nonforest dwelling under ORS 215.750 may not be counted as a qualifying parcel, even if that parcel is part of a tract, some part of which lies inside the template. Smith v. Jackson County, 37 Or LUBA 779 (2000).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Petitioners fail to establish compliance with all mandatory approval criteria for a special medical hardship permit allowing a temporary mobile home on their property in a forest zone where they fail to present any evidence indicating that no reasonable housing alternatives exist that could meet one petitioner's needs for special medical attention. Lopatin v. Clackamas County, 32 Or LUBA 158 (1996).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. In approving a nonfarm dwelling under OAR 660-33-130(4)(c), analysis is required regarding whether the parcel can be sold, leased or otherwise put to profitable agricultural use, unless the county first finds that a parcel is generally unsuitable for farm use, regardless of size. Moore v. Coos County, 31 Or LUBA 347 (1996).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. To establish that a nonfarm dwelling will not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern in the area, the county must (1) select an appropriate area for consideration; (2) examine the types of uses existing in the selected area; and (3) determine that the proposed nonfarm use will not materially alter the stability of the existing uses in the selected area. Thomas v. Wasco County, 30 Or LUBA 302 (1996).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A county may interpret a zoning ordinance to regulate the establishment of nonforest dwellings more stringently than is required under ORS 215.750. Dilworth v. Clackamas County, 30 Or LUBA 279 (1996).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.236(2) requires that farm assessment disqualifications be filed within 120 days of approval of a nonfarm dwelling permit only when the subject property is assessed for farm use at the time of approval. A county's decision to modify a condition of approval requiring disqualification from farm assessment within 120 days after approval does not violate ORS 215.236(2) when the subject property was not assessed for farm use at the time of approval. Wakeman v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. How petitioners believe a property should have been assessed for property taxation before approval of a nonfarm dwelling permit is not relevant in a subsequent land use proceeding. Wakeman v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A local decision erroneously concludes a previous local decision did not grant conditional use approval for a nonfarm dwelling where (1) the previous decision states it approves a nonfarm dwelling, and (2) the local government treated the previous application as requesting nonfarm dwelling approval. Rodriguez v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 50 (1993).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a previous local government decision approved a nonfarm dwelling, the local government cannot require the proposed nonfarm dwelling to be re-reviewed against the same standards. Rodriguez v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 50 (1993).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where a "generally unsuitable" approval standard for nonforest dwellings established by an LCDC enforcement order provides that land with certain soil types is presumed not to be "generally unsuitable," unless findings explain why "other factors" make the land generally unsuitable, it is reasonable to interpret such "other factors" to be limited to the physical characteristics listed in the first part of the approval standard. DLCD v. Klamath County, 25 Or LUBA 355 (1993).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where an approval standard requires that a proposed nonforest dwelling "not interfere seriously with the accepted forestry practices on adjacent lands," a local government must first determine what those accepted forestry practices are. Statements that "logging practices" which have occurred on adjacent properties are "logging" or "salvage logging" are not adequate descriptions of accepted forestry practices. DLCD v. Klamath County, 25 Or LUBA 355 (1993).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. ORS 215.283(3) applies to the "establishment" of a nonfarm dwelling in an EFU zone. In this context, "establishment" refers to the legal establishment of a nonfarm residential use, not merely to the construction of a nonfarm dwelling. DLCD v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 32 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A code standard requiring that a proposed nonfarm/nonforest dwelling in a farm/forest zone not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern of the area, requires findings (1) identifying an area for consideration, (2) identifying the farm and forest practices occurring in the identified area, and (3) explaining of how the proposal will affect those practices. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 492 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. A code requirement that a proposed nonresource dwelling not be incompatible or interfere with adjacent farm and forest uses requires findings (1) identifying an area zoned for farm and forest uses, (2) determining what farm and forest uses occur within that identified area, and (3) evaluating whether the proposed nonresource dwelling will be "incompatible" or will "interfere" with those practices. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 492 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Evidence that soils on a particular parcel are not particularly good for farming does not clearly support a determination that a proposed nonresource dwelling will not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern of the area, or be incompatible or interfere with adjacent farm or forest uses. Veach v. Wasco County, 23 Or LUBA 492 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Forestlands containing soils that are below the national average for timber productivity are nevertheless suitable for timber production where the soils have a timber productivity rating which applicable law establishes as presumptively suitable for timber production. DLCD v. Klamath County, 23 Or LUBA 264 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Pine beetle infestation does not render land generally unsuitable for timber production where it is not established that such an infestation represents a permanent or long-term limitation on the timber productivity of the property. DLCD v. Klamath County, 23 Or LUBA 264 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. The small size of a lot does not render the lot unsuitable for timber production where the lot is part of a larger parcel and adjoins other larger forest parcels with which the lot could be managed for forest purposes. DLCD v. Klamath County, 23 Or LUBA 264 (1992).

31.3.5 Permits – Particular Uses – Nonresource Dwellings. Where the evidence in the record establishes (1) the soils on the subject property are suitable for the production of forest and farm products, (2) the subject property has been logged, and (3) other parcels in the area are suitable for the production of forest products or currently are used for the production of Christmas trees, there is substantial evidence that the subject property is not generally unsuitable for the production of farm and forest products. Ralston v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 573 (1992).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. That two applicants for conditional use permits for two solar facilities are contemporaneously seeking partition approval to create two 320-acre parcels from the same parent tract for the proposed facilities does not establish that the proposed facilities will not be on a "single tract," for purposes of OAR 660-033-0130(38)(f), where there is no evidence, findings, or conditions that such partitions have or will become final and that the two 320-acre parcels have been or will be conveyed, by deed, to third parties. ODFW v. Lake County, 81 Or LUBA 300 (2020).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A condition of approval requiring an applicant for a conditional use permit for a solar facility to continue working privately with ODFW to agree on a wildlife habitat mitigation plan, outside a public participatory process, and return to the county for approval of the mitigation plan only if the applicant is unable to reach agreement with ODFW, is not sufficient to establish compliance with OAR 660-033-0130(38)(j)(G) for the reasons stated in Gould v. Deschutes County, 216 Or App 150, 171 P3d 1017 (2007), where it does not require a subsequent county proceeding on the mitigation plan and where it does not specify that the subsequent proceeding will be infused with the same participatory rights as the initial conditional use permit proceeding. ODFW v. Lake County, 81 Or LUBA 300 (2020).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. Where the record contains evidence that the fire safety measures required for a proposed solar facility exceed those required for an existing Christmas tree farm and extensive observations of fires involving solar panels but no evidence of incidents of injury to fire suppression personnel from electrified solar panels, a conclusion that the solar facility will not "significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) is supported by substantial evidence, even though electrical equipment is present on a solar facility and not present on a Christmas tree farm. York v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 20 (2020).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A condition of approval requiring an applicant that has applied to site a solar facility in an area currently used for growing Christmas trees to offer a fire safety training course to the local fire district is inadequate to establish that "[t]he proposed use will not * * * significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) and local code provisions implementing that rule. Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. An approximately 80-acre photovoltaic solar power generation facility is not "industrial development" for purposes of OAR 660-004-0022(3)(c). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 521 (2019).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A county finding that wind turbines are a conditional use in a commercial zone is not reversible error, even though wind turbines are not listed as a conditional use in the zone, where the balance of the decision clearly demonstrates the county in fact utilized its authority to approve uses that are similar to listed permitted and conditional uses in the zone to approve the wind turbines. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. Where findings identify an applicable conditional use standard that requires that conditional uses must not impair permitted uses on surrounding property, but the decision includes no findings of fact or findings explaining why the decision maker believed proposed wind turbines satisfied that standard, remand is required for adequate findings. Burgermeister v. Tillamook County, 73 Or LUBA 291 (2016).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A code provision that requires the applicant for a wind energy facility to obtain the signature of residential landowners consenting to reducing a two-mile setback between the facility and residences violates the Delegation Clause, Article I, section 21, of the Oregon Constitution, because the signature requirement effectively allows neighbors to "veto" the application, for any or no reason, and without appeal or review. Iberdrola Renewables v. Umatilla County, 67 Or LUBA 149 (2013).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. State law that generally makes EFSC the sole authority to determine what constitutes the "applicable substantive criteria" when EFSC evaluates an application for a wind power generation facility preempts a county code provision that purports to dictate the county code requirements that will be included in the "applicable substantive criteria" applied in EFSC proceedings. Iberdrola Renewables v. Umatilla County, 67 Or LUBA 149 (2013).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A county ordinance that allows a private residential landowner or a city council to unilaterally "waive" a two-mile setback from wind towers to a lesser distance, potentially to a zero setback, violates the Article I, section 21, delegation clause of the Oregon Constitution, because it authorizes an entity other than the county to determine whether there is a setback at all and if so the extent of that setback. Cosner v. Umatilla County, 65 Or LUBA 9 (2012).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. A county ordinance that allows a private residential landowner or a city council to "waive" a two-mile setback from wind towers and substitute a lesser or no setback violates the Due Process Clause of the U.S. Constitution, because it grants wind tower project neighbors the arbitrary and standardless power to determine whether and to what extent there is a setback for wind tower development. Cosner v. Umatilla County, 65 Or LUBA 9 (2012).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. Under DEQ's noise regulations a wind energy generation facility may add 10 decibels to the background ambient noise level. In determining whether the facility violates that noise standard the operator may assume that the background ambient noise level is 26 decibels or actually measure the background ambient noise level and the operator's selection of the assumed 26 decibel background ambient noise level at one measuring location and time does not preclude the operator from selecting actual measured background ambient noise level at other measurement locations and times. Mingo v. Morrow County, 63 Or LUBA 357 (2011).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. Ancillary local government decisions pertaining to the siting of energy generating facilities that might otherwise fall under the definition of land use decisions subject to LUBA's jurisdiction are nevertheless subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Oregon Energy Facility Siting Council, with direct review by the Oregon Supreme Court. Thomas v. City of Turner, 42 Or LUBA 39 (2002).

31.3.6 Permits – Particular Uses – Power Generators. OAR 660-06-025(4)(i) allows power generation facilities on forestlands without a Goal 4 exception, provided such facilities do not remove more than 10 acres of land from resource use. OAR 660-33-130(23) includes similar provisions for power generation facilities on agricultural lands without a Goal 3 exception, but requires that the power generation facilities not remove more than 20 acres of land from resource use. DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. Where a prior decision approved a plan amendment and zone change for the subject property and included a condition of approval limiting the type of future development to a "retail shopping center" and the size of future development to a certain square footage of gross leasable area, but where the prior decision approved no specific development, voluntary descriptions, statements, or representations made by the applicant during the prior proceeding regarding the particular store with which the shopping center would be developed are not binding on the applicant in a subsequent site plan review proceeding unless they were memorialized in conditions of approval for the prior decision. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. LUBA will sustain a city council interpretation of a 1991 planning commission site plan decision to approve both a 70,000-square-foot retail store and a 30,000-square-foot "future expansion" area, notwithstanding a condition that refers only to approval of the retail store, where the site plan depicts both improvements, the 1991 decision approves the "site plan" without restriction, and the record indicates that the planning commission intended to approve both improvements. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. LUBA will sustain a city council interpretation of a site plan condition of approval to impose no limits on the type merchandise sold at a retail store that is allowed outright in the applicable zone, where the condition authorizes sale of "general merchandise, to include" listed examples, and the fairest reading of the condition is that the list of examples is illustrative, not exclusive. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. A site plan decision that approves (1) a building and (2) a "future expansion" of that same building is a single building, not separate phases or components of a multi-phase development, for purposes of determining whether there is a vested right to construct the expansion. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. A governing body's interpretation of a design review criterion requiring that the "bulk and scale" of a proposed retail supercenter be "compatible" with surrounding buildings as necessitating a comparison of the size of the proposed buildings and surrounding buildings—and not just visual compatibility—is consistent with the text of the criterion and not reversible under ORS 197.829(1)(a). Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Hood River County, 47 Or LUBA 256 (2004).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. A finding that sales of non-construction related materials at a home improvement store, such as house plants, barbeques, etc., are incidental and subordinate to the primary use of "Construction Sales and Services" is supported by substantial evidence, where the testimony cited by petitioners takes a broader view of what constitutes non-construction related material that the local decision maker and in any case fails to establish that the sales of such non-construction related materials is so predominant as to make such sales the principal use. Heilman v. City of Corvallis, 47 Or LUBA 305 (2004).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. A traffic study concluding that there is adequate vehicular access to a shopping mall is substantial evidence supporting a finding of "adequate access and traffic control," notwithstanding that the study did not consider or quantify internal store-to-store vehicular traffic, where there is no evidence that such internal traffic is significant. Graham Oil Co. v. City of North Bend, 44 Or LUBA 18 (2003).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. A local government decision that a shopping center may be allowed in a particular zone under code "similar use" provisions must (1) express an interpretation of the "similar use" provisions that is adequate for LUBA review, (2) actually apply the interpretation adopted, and (3) explain how the decision is consistent with that interpretation. Loud v. City of Cottage Grove, 26 Or LUBA 152 (1993).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. Where a local code imposes limitations on "shopping complexes," a local government approving a commercial use may not simply conclude that that those limitations do not apply, where the issue of the applicability of the shopping complex limitations is raised during local proceedings. O'Neal v. Deschutes County, 26 Or LUBA 126 (1993).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. Where a prior city decision approving a PUD preliminary development plan for a shopping center does not clearly identify the particular commercial uses it approves, but describes the applicant's proposal and states that the proposed uses are approved, submittal of a site plan proposing an entirely different mixture of commercial uses constitutes more than a minor modification of the approved development plan. Owen Development Group, Inc. v. City of Gearhart, 25 Or LUBA 88 (1993).

31.3.7 Permits – Particular Uses – Shopping Centers. To show a public need for a 10-acre "community shopping center," of which the property proposed to be annexed would be a part, the city's findings must establish a nexus between the stated "need" to have additional retail businesses within the city and to stop retail leakage to a neighboring city, and the "need" for a "community shopping center" requiring a 10-acre vacant retail zoned site within the city. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The fact that a zoning ordinance specifically permits low-impact public utility facilities in the subject property's base zone and specifically permits high-impact public utility facilities in other base zones does not compel the conclusion that high-impact facilities are prohibited on the subject property where the subject property's overlay zone and the comprehensive plan specifically provide for the development of high-impact facilities on the subject property. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A finding that tree removal is permissible to prevent "interference with utility services" under one local tree felling criterion does not compel a conclusion that the applicant's tree felling plan retains mature vegetation and healthy trees "to the maximum extent practicable" under another criterion. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government protect significant clusters of trees and shrubs where the comprehensive plan does not prescribe the exact location of the substation and line and, instead, provides a general location and contemplates that exact locations will be determined through subsequent land use actions, including site plan review. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government avoid development of unsuitable areas, including wetlands and riparian areas, where the comprehensive plan provides a general location for the substation and does not specify that the substation must be sited in a wetland area. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where the county planning director processed a similar use determination under the county's Type II review to determine whether an electrical transmission line is allowed in a particular zone, the board of county commissioners reviewed the director's similar use determination in a consolidated appeal under a Type III process, and petitioners argue that the county erred by not providing an intermediate decision by a decisionmaker other than the county governing body, that alleged procedural error provides no basis for reversal or remand because that alleged error does not prejudice petitioner's substantial rights. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a county determines an electrical transmission line is a "similar use" authorized in a particular zone pursuant to the county's "similar use determination" process, which allows a similar use "[w]here a proposed use is not specifically identified by [the code], or [the code] is unclear as to whether the use is allowed in a particular zone," petitioners' argument that the county may make a similar use determination only if the proposed use is not specifically identified anywhere in the county's code is without merit. A similar use determination is not necessary or appropriate where the use is specifically permitted or prohibited in the subject zone. In adopting the similar use determination process, the county contemplated instances where a use is specifically identified as an allowed use in some zones but not specifically identified as an allowed use in the subject zone. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where petitioners argue that the county made inadequate findings that a proposed electrical transmission project is consistent with general use priorities for estuary zones because the county did not address certain code provisions addressing estuary zones, LUBA is not required to remand the decision to the county for it to interpret its local code provisions in the first instance; LUBA may make its own determination of whether the local government decision is correct. ORS 197.829(2). Where the county determined that the code provision in question is a general priority statement, which does not constitute mandatory approval criteria, LUBA will uphold the county's decision where the provision provides an inclusive list of general use priorities for estuarine resources and value, and where, in the alternative, the county addressed those impacts to the estuarine resources and values in other applicable parts of the county's code. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where the county makes a finding that an electrical transmission project "will not force a significant change in, or significantly increase the cost of, accepted farming or forest practices on agriculture or forest lands," and "forest practices" are defined pursuant to the Oregon Forest Practices Act, petitioners' argument that the proposed transmission line will remove 36 acres from forest production is not sufficient to explain why the development will result in "a significant change in * * * forest practices * * * on * * * forest lands." OAR 660-006-0025(5). OAR 660-006-0025(5) contemplates the approval of limited non-forest uses on forest land, including the removal of some forest land from production to accommodate a use that is allowed as a conditional use on forest land, including clearing a 100-foot right-of-way with 25 feet of clearance from the ground to the lines, for the purpose of constructing electric transmission lines on forest lands. Tilla-Bay Farms, Inc. v. Tillamook County, 79 Or LUBA 235 (2019).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A county is not required to apply the federal "least intrusive" standard under the Telecommunications Act of 1996 to a permit request under the county's zoning ordinance, where the county's zoning ordinance does not impose that standard. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas Cty., 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009), the Court of Appeals held that Ballot Measure 49, which was approved to replace previously approved Ballot Measure 37, must be given effect and replaces Ballot Measure 37 which would otherwise apply to a particular permit application, notwithstanding the ORS 215.427(3)(a) goal post statute that requires that a permit application be subject to the standards in effect when the permit application was filed. Pete's Mountain case of conflicting statutes—Ballot Measure 49 conflicted with and applied in place of the goal post statute. The holding in Pete's Mountain does not mean that new county cell tower regulations apply to a permit application that was submitted before the new cell tower regulations were adopted. In that circumstance the goal post statute applies and the new cell tower regulations do not apply, because there is no statutory conflict. Rawson v. Hood River County, 75 Or LUBA 200 (2017).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A board of commissioners correctly interprets a zoning standard that requires that a "project's" public benefits outweigh expected adverse impacts to (1) limit consideration to the pipeline for which county permit approval is sought and (2) exclude any public benefits that may be generated by the LNG terminal that would be located in, and require the separate approval of, a city located in the county. The permit applicant's position that the county should consider the benefits of the LNG terminal but not the LNG terminal's expected adverse impacts is incorrect, because "project" cannot mean one thing when considering benefits and something else when considering expected adverse impacts. Oregon Pipeline Company v. Clatsop County, 71 Or LUBA 246 (2015).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A utility facility authorized in an EFU zone under ORS 215.283(1)(c) is not limited to facilities that provide utility services to local or county residents, but includes a natural gas transmission line that connects an interstate natural gas pipeline to an export terminal. McLaughlin v. Douglas County, 70 Or LUBA 314 (2014).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. LUBA will reject an argument that a county erred in failing to deny a proposed natural gas transmission line allowed as a utility facility in an EFU zone under ORS 215.283(1)(c) based on comprehensive plan language that the petitioner argues limits utility facilities to those that serve county residents, because even if the county's comprehensive plan is interpreted to limit utility facilities, application of those limits to deny a use allowed outright under ORS 215.283(1) would exceed the county's authority, under the reasoning in Brentmar v. Jackson County, 321 Or 481, 900 P2d 1030 (1995). McLaughlin v. Douglas County, 70 Or LUBA 314 (2014).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a county's decision modifies the alignment of a portion of a transmission pipeline that was approved in 2009, the county's findings need not address challenges raised by a landowner regarding impacts of a different portion of the pipeline, the alignment of which is not modified. Because the modification decision approves no modification of that portion of the pipeline, such challenges are collateral attacks on the 2009 decision. McLaughlin v. Douglas County, 70 Or LUBA 314 (2014).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.283(1)(c), "[u]tility facilities necessary for public service" are permitted in EFU zones. ORS 215.283(1)(c) operates in conjunction with ORS 215.275(1), which provides that the utility facilities authorized by ORS 215.283(1)(c) are "necessary for public service if the facility must be sited in an exclusive farm use zone in order to provide the service," and ORS 215.275(2), which sets out the alternatives analysis that must be used to demonstrate that a proposed utility facility is the type of utility facility authorized by ORS 215.283(1)(c) and 215.275(1). WKN Chopin LLC v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 1 (2012).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Transmission towers over 200 feet in height are allowed under subsection (2) of ORS 215.283. ORS 215.283(2)(m). Transmission towers that are not taller than 200 feet are allowable as "utility facilities necessary for public service" under subsection (1) of ORS 215.283. ORS 215.283(1)(c); 215.275. WKN Chopin LLC v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 1 (2012).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.275, an applicant proposing to site a utility facility on EFU zoned land must consider alternatives that do not utilize EFU-zoned land. Such an applicant need not consider alternatives that do utilize EFU-zoned land and need not establish that there are not other EFU-zoned alternatives that would have fewer adverse impacts on the county's EFU zone. WKN Chopin LLC v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 1 (2012).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The general legislative farmland preservation policies set out in the statutory EFU zone play no role in applying the alternatives analysis required for utility facilities necessary for public service under ORS 215.275. WKN Chopin LLC v. Umatilla County, 66 Or LUBA 1 (2012).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. LUBA will reject an argument that the alternative site study for a transmission tower proposed in an EFU zone erred in rejecting an alternative site in a light industrial area, where the petitioner cites to no evidence that the industrial area has a vacant location of the size necessary to prevent damage to other structures if the tower collapsed. Hamilton v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 156 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.275, the alternative sites analysis for a utility facility proposed on EFU land evaluates alternative sites on land that is zoned other than EFU. The analysis is not required to evaluate alternative EFU-zoned sites. Hamilton v. Jackson County, 63 Or LUBA 156 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where the county code requires the signature of all owners of the property, and to ensure compliance with respect to a proposed pipeline crossing multiple properties the county imposes a condition requiring that the approval becomes effective only when the utility provider supplies all required signatures, an ambiguity in the condition regarding whether all signatures of all property owners are required for the approval to become effective is not a basis to remand the decision, where it is reasonably clear from the condition and findings that the county intended that all signatures of all owners be obtained before the approval becomes effective and building permits for any part of the pipeline can be obtained. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. OAR 660-006-0025(4)(q) authorizes a 50-foot right-of-way for gas pipelines in forest zones. It is not inconsistent with OAR 660-006-0025(4)(q), and is expressly authorized by ORS 772.510(3), for a utility provider to obtain a temporary construction easement for stockpiling, storage, etc., in addition to the 50-foot permanent right-of-way authorized under the rule. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A finding that impacts of a proposed underwater pipeline on aquatic species will be "temporary and insignificant" is consistent with the Goal 16 obligation to "protect" estuarine resources. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where the applicant's expert assumed that a particular species of native oyster is not found near a pipeline crossing, but opponents raised the issue below, based on a 2009 scientific article, that that species of oyster has recently repopulated the crossing area and may be impacted by the pipeline, the findings do not address that issue, and LUBA cannot tell from the record or findings whether additional measures may be necessary to protect the native oysters beyond those in place to protect other aquatic species, remand is necessary for more adequate findings. Citizens Against LNG v. Coos County, 63 Or LUBA 162 (2011).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. That there is conflicting evidence in the record regarding whether an existing cell tower has capacity for co-locating the applicant's cellular antennas is not a basis for reversal or remand, where the decisionmaker could reasonably conclude based on substantial evidence in the record that the existing tower does not have capacity. Oberdorfer v. Deschutes County, 62 Or LUBA 296 (2010).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a local government approves a cell tower based on the demonstrated coverage needs of a particular cellular provider, a finding suggesting that the tower could also serve the needs of another provider who did not submit evidence of coverage needs is an extraneous finding, and at most harmless error. Oberdorfer v. Deschutes County, 62 Or LUBA 296 (2010).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. An applicant for approval of a cell tower may rely on letters from a school district director of communications and facilities and a special district property manager to establish that school district and special district property is not available as a site for a proposed cell tower. The applicant need not inquire beyond the districts' professional staff or contact the governing boards of the school district and special district. McLaughlin v. City of Springfield, 59 Or LUBA 275 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where an applicant for approval of a cell tower is required by local law to make a good faith effort to locate the cell tower on a site where the cell tower is allowed outright or with only site plan review, before seeking approval of a site that requires a discretionary land use permit, the applicant is obligated to make a reasonable effort to locate a feasible site that does not require a discretionary land use permit and to consider any other potential sites that are identified with reasonable specificity by other parties. McLaughlin v. City of Springfield, 59 Or LUBA 275 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A hearings officer does not err by relying on a cell tower applicant's engineer's testimony that a suggested alternative site would be too close to the applicant's existing cell towers, and would cause interference with those towers, as a basis for rejecting the alternative site as a feasible alternative. McLaughlin v. City of Springfield, 59 Or LUBA 275 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Utility facilities that are necessary for public service are a permitted use on EFU-zoned land. However, reasonable non-EFU-zoned alternative sites must be considered, and only if one or more of the factors listed at ORS 215.275(2) make the non-EFU-zoned sites infeasible can the utility facility be developed on EFU-zoned land. Getz v. Deschutes County, 58 Or LUBA 559 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. To comply with ORS 215.275(2), before approval for a utility facility on EFU-zoned land may be granted, an applicant must (1) make a reasonable effort to identify reasonable non-EFU-zoned sites, (2) consider any reasonable non-EFU zoned sites that are identified by other parties and (3) demonstrate that all identified non-EFU-zoned alternative sites are not feasible based on one or more of the factors set out in ORS 215.275(2). Where an applicant generally describes how alternative sites were selected, opponents may not fail to suggest any additional alternative non-EFU-zoned sites and on appeal of a decision approving the utility facility argue that the applicant's failure to provide a more detailed explanation for how the applicant selected alternative sites provides a basis for remand. Getz v. Deschutes County, 58 Or LUBA 559 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. It is not error for an applicant for approval of a utility facility on EFU-zoned land to change the focus of its analysis of whether alternative non-EFU-zoned sites are a feasible alternative, so long as the analysis that is ultimately accepted by the local government is legally defensible. Getz v. Deschutes County, 58 Or LUBA 559 (2009).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. An unappealed LUBA decision holding that a county cannot deny a proposed cell tower for noncompliance with county site design standards necessarily resolves the issue of whether the county can apply the site design standards at all, even in approving the tower. Seeberger v. Yamhill County, 56 Or LUBA 656 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where there is no evidence in the record that a proposed cell tower will have any impact on farm or forest practices, a county may simply find that, and need not conduct a pro forma analysis of impacts on farm and forest practices. Seeberger v. Yamhill County, 56 Or LUBA 656 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. LUBA will remand a decision approving a broadcast tower that relies in part on a "safe harbor" approach the hearings officer adopted in a different permit proceeding, where LUBA has remanded that other permit decision to resolve an issue under that approach but the county has taken no action on remand and the challenged decision does not resolve the issue. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. LUBA will remand a decision approving a broadcast tower that requires an above-ground water storage tank but does not require that the tank be screened as required by site design approval criteria. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A local government is not obligated to impose a condition of approval requiring that a broadcast tower operator comply with federal radio frequency exposure limitations that the applicant must comply with in any event. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Absent some basis in the city code, a city does not have the authority to approve or deny a broadcast tower application based on the terms of the current lease agreement between the tower owner and the property owner. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A federal statute prohibiting local governments from prohibiting the provision of wireless telephone service does not authorize local governments to condition approval of a broadcast tower to require filters to reduce radio frequency interference with nearby wireless facilities. Even if a local code provision authorized such a condition, federal law would preempt the local government from applying it. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A hearings officer may rely on undisputed expert testimony that compliance with federal radio frequency exposure limits depends on whether non-employees at the site are aware of occupational exposure levels and have the ability to remove themselves from the site, combined with the fact that the site is fenced and signed to warn of occupational exposure levels, to conclude that a proposed broadcast tower complies with federal exposure limits. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A county cannot apply local site design standards to deny a proposed cellular tower in an exclusive farm use zone, a permitted use under ORS 215.283(1), because as explained in Brentmar v. Jackson County, 321 Or 481, 900 P2d 1030 (1995), state law generally prohibits local governments from imposing approval criteria on ORS 215.283(1) uses other than those authorized by statute. T-Mobile USA v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 83 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A county errs in denying a proposed cellular tower under ORS 215.275 for failure to evaluate opponents' claims that the tower could be located on alternative sites on non-agricultural land, when none of the alternative sites were identified with sufficient specificity to allow evaluation. T-Mobile USA v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 83 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. ORS 215.283(1) and 215.275 do not permit a county to deny an application to site a proposed cellular tower in an exclusive farm use zone simply because there is already some existing cellular service in the area. A proposed cellular communication facility may be justified based on a need to improve existing service. T-Mobile USA v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 83 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a zoning ordinance has chapters for individual zones that list some uses that are "permitted" and list other uses that require conditional use approval, and in a separate chapter lists uses that are "permitted in all zones," those uses are permitted without a conditional use permit. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a zoning district requires conditional use approval for structures that are more than 30 feet tall, absent a separate zoning provision that calls for a different conclusion, a 70-foot cellular tower would require conditional use approval. But where a separate chapter of the zoning code both authorizes cellular towers in all zones as a "permitted" use and expressly provides that such towers may exceed the height limits otherwise imposed by the zoning ordinance, a cellular tower does not require conditional use approval. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A hearings officer's findings that a proposed cellular tower complies with a siting standard that requires the tower to minimize its effect on scenic values are adequate, where the findings note the developed nature of the butte where the cellular tower would be located and demonstrate that the hearings officer was persuaded that the standard was met by the applicant's proposal to shorten the tower from 100 feet to 70 feet and to offer alternative designs that would make the tower look more like its surroundings. Skyliner Summit at Broken Top v. City of Bend, 54 Or LUBA 316 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In determining whether a proposed cell tower is compatible with surrounding uses, a county does not err by taking into account the number of surrounding residences and the residential density. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In applying a compatibility standard, a county may take into consideration the effect that existing trees will have in screening views of a proposed cell tower from adjoining properties, notwithstanding that there are no trees on the cell tower property itself and few trees to the west and north of the property. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In applying a compatibility standard, a county does not err by taking into account the screening that will be produced by a condition that requires the applicant for a cell tower to plant vegetation and trees, even though the vegetation and trees will not completely screen the tower for many years, if ever. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In applying a compatibility standard, a county does not err by taking into account the effect that requiring a cell tower to be painted green may have in visually blending the tower with nearby trees, even though painting the tower green will have little or no effect on blocked views of a nearby bay. Clark v. Coos County, 53 Or LUBA 325 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The preservation of local zoning authority provided in the Federal Communications Act does not extend to other federal laws if such local authority is preempted under such laws. U.S. Cellular v. Klamath County, 53 Or LUBA 442 (2007)

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Federal law preempts a local determination that a proposed cellular communications facility is unsafe where the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has issued a "Determination of No Hazard" under FAA rules. U.S. Cellular v. Klamath County, 53 Or LUBA 442 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. An undefined and subjective "public benefit" criterion need not be interpreted in conjunction with a tower sharing criterion to require that a tower applicant demonstrate a current market need for a tower, as opposed to a future market need. Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A broadcast tower approval criterion that requires a decision maker to determine whether identified "public benefits outweigh any impacts which cannot be mitigated" is subjective. In assessing a findings and evidentiary challenge to a decision maker's weighing of public benefits, the question is whether that weighing is (1) inadequately explained (necessitating a remand for additional findings) or (2) unreasonable (and therefore not supported by substantial evidence). Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A broadcast tower approval criterion that limits total emission levels is not implicated by a request to remove a prior condition of approval to allow an existing tower to remain in place, where no additional emitting antenna are to be added to the tower by the request and all existing antenna were subject to the total emission limit criterion when they were placed on the tower. Belluschi v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 455 (2007).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A code standard allowing an increased or reduced setback for cellular towers based on considerations such as topography, etc., that increase or reduce off-site impacts need not be interpreted to include an implicit "no net increase" in off-site impacts standard. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A hearings officer errs in interpreting a code standard that allows a reduced setback for cellular towers based on listed considerations that increase or reduce off-site impacts, to allow a reduced setback as long as the applicant has minimized off-site impacts "to the extent possible" given the dimensional constraints of the property, where considerations such as the shape of the property and whether the applicant has minimized off-site impacts to the extent possible are not among the permissible considerations. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. While a code standard that allows a reduced setback for cellular towers based on listed considerations that increase or reduce off-site impacts does not require that the hearings officer assign equal weight to each of the listed considerations, it also does not allow the hearings officer to assign conclusive weight to one consideration while ignoring others. Where some considerations point toward increasing the setback, and others point to reduction, the hearings officer must adopt findings addressing all relevant considerations and explaining what weight is given to each and why weighing of all the circumstances supports the ultimate conclusion. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A code standard requiring site design review where "proposed development" involves "projects with multiple principal structures on one tract" does not apply to a proposal for a cellular tower on a parcel already developed with a dwelling, because the application does not propose more than one principal structure. Tollefson v. Jackson County, 51 Or LUBA 790 (2006).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Federal law preempts local zoning conditions of approval that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. It does not matter whether conditions that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference are imposed under general zoning conditional use criteria or local regulations that were adopted to regulate radio frequency interference directly. It is the purpose for imposing the condition that is important, and if the condition is imposed to regulate radio frequency interference, it is preempted by federal law. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Radio towers over 200 feet tall are allowed in exclusive farm use zones under ORS 215.283(2)(m) or ORS 215.438. Neither of those statutes requires that such radio towers must be allowed outright. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Although there is language in the Oregon Supreme Court's decision in Brentmar v. Jackson County, 321 Or 481, 496, 900 P2d 1030 (1995), that suggests otherwise, the public utility facilities authorized by ORS 215.283(1)(d) are not allowed "as of right," in the exclusive farm use zone, as that term is generally used in zoning parlance. The Supreme Court used that term as a shorthand description for uses that are not subject to additional county regulation rather than as a description of a use that is not subject to discretionary review, as shown by the fact that ORS 215.283(1)(d) itself subjects public facilities in exclusive farm use zones to discretionary review. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Federal law does not preempt local laws that regulate the visual and aesthetic impact of radio towers and the antennas placed on those towers. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a city is required to apply discretionary criteria in issuing a temporary approval decision, and that temporary approval decision is the only effective city decision that authorizes a broadcast tower and sets the stage for issuance of building permits to construct the tower, that temporary approval decision constitutes "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land" and is therefore a "permit," within the meaning of ORS 227.160(2). The city must either provide a public hearing before issuing an ORS

227.160(2) permit, or provide the opportunity for a local de novo appeal of that permit decision after it is issued. Curl v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 530 (2005).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Whether a local government decision is a "final" decision is primarily governed by the form of the decision and whether all local appeals have been exhausted. That an otherwise final temporary decision may ultimately expire or be replaced by another decision does not mean that the temporary decision is not a final decision subject to appeal to LUBA. Curl v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 530 (2005).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In adopting ORS 215.275, the legislature struck a particular balance between the siting of utility facilities in EFU zones and the statutory policy to preserve farmland for farm uses. Once that balance is struck, however, the county's task is to apply the terms of the statute. Nothing in ORS 215.275 requires direct consideration of agricultural land preservation policies, external to the statute, in applying its terms, or "balancing" the technical difficulty of alternatives against farmland preservation. Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.275, a utility provider and the local government are not required to consider under ORS 215.275(2) any alternative that requires a different type of facility or that would not meet the essential features of the chosen facility, as defined by the utility provider. However, the utility provider and local government must consider under ORS 215.275(2) an alternative that appears to satisfy the applicant's defined objectives, even if the alternative is a facility in a non-EFU location that requires a different component design than the preferred EFU location. Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. In addressing consideration of land costs in comparing "utility facilities that are not substantially similar," ORS 215.275(3) implies that the scope of "reasonable alternatives" that must be considered under ORS 215.275(2) includes non-EFU-zoned sites with conditions that may require at least some design modifications to the facility. However, nothing in the statute requires that a utility provider consider alternatives that cannot satisfy the provider's defined objectives in providing the public service. Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A utility provider need not consider and disqualify as "reasonable alternatives" under ORS 215.275(2) alternatives that require reassessment of its fundamental technology or its business plan, or that involve sites or facilities that would fail to provide public services to the desired coverage area. Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a telecommunications provider defines as one of its objectives building its own wireless tower in order to lease space to other providers, any alternative such as collocation on existing telephone poles will not satisfy at least one of the provider's defined objectives, and therefore need not be considered and disqualified as a "reasonable alternative" under ORS 215.275(2). Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. ORS 215.275 does not require a utility provider to consider and disqualify as "reasonable alternatives" non-EFU locations on which the proposed utility facility would require a variance from applicable zoning standards. Such lands are either not "reasonable alternatives" or simply not "available" under ORS 215.275(2)(c), as a matter of law. Sprint PCS v. Washington County, 42 Or LUBA 512 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a city code provision regarding the siting of a telecommunication tower does not require a showing that a particular tower height at a specific location is the only way an applicant for the telecommunication tower can achieve its coverage objectives, a city decision that does not require an alternatives analysis is not inadequate, in the absence of evidence that feasible alternatives exist. Johnson v. City of Eugene, 42 Or LUBA 353 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Findings demonstrating that a proposed wireless communication tower must be sited in an EFU zone in order to provide service are inadequate where the findings fail to identify or describe any alternative non-EFU sites, including five specific sites suggested by petitioner. Central Klamath County CAT v. Klamath County, 41 Or LUBA 524 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A proposed communication tower may be subject to code provisions governing "transmission and receiving towers," even though it is county-owned and thus also arguably falls within a broad category of "municipal uses" allowed in the zone. Where a regulatory scheme lists as permitted uses in a zone both a general category of uses and a specific category of uses, with different sets of requirements, and the proposed use fits within the specific category, the specific category and its requirements apply exclusively. Luedtke v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 493 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. LUBA will decline to interpret a local provision in the first instance, to determine whether a proposed radio communication tower is a "radio and television transmission and receiving" tower and therefore subject to a special setback, where viewed in context the meaning and apparent purpose of the provision is subject to considerable doubt. Luedtke v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 493 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.275, an applicant who wishes to site a utility facility on EFU-zoned land must show that it is infeasible to locate the facility on land that is not zoned EFU. City of Albany v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 38, 46 (2001). Findings that the site selected for a cellular communication tower is the best of the alternatives that were considered are inadequate to show that the non-EFU-zoned alternatives that were not selected are infeasible locations for the tower. Harshman v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 330 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where two alternative non-EFU-zoned sites for a cellular communication tower that were not considered by the applicant are identified at the evidentiary hearing, a county may not grant approval for the tower on an EFUzoned site without showing that use of those sites is infeasible or explaining why those sites need not be considered. Harshman v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 330 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where reasonable persons could disagree about whether cellular tower mitigation measures will be sufficient, petitioners fail to demonstrate error in a hearings officer's findings that "native vegetation," the "flush-mounted antennae" and the proposed color scheme for a proposed cellular communication tower will diminish the visual impact of the tower so that the tower will be "relatively unobtrusive" and therefore meet the applicable mitigation requirements. Harshman v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 330 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a local "compatibility" standard is extremely subjective and reasonable persons could draw different conclusions from the record about whether a proposed 90-foot cellular tower would be compatible with its mixed residential and commercial surroundings, a hearings official's decision that the tower would be compatible will not be reversed on appeal simply because petitioners would reach the opposite conclusion. Knight v. City of Eugene, 41 Or LUBA 279 (2002).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Collocation of cellular telecommunication facilities is not a reasonable alternative to constructing a new telecommunications tower on EFU-zoned property, where the applicant's siting requirements include constructing a facility where space will be leased to other telecommunication providers and collocation with existing towers will not meet that requirement. Jordan v. Douglas County, 40 Or LUBA 192 (2001).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where a permit application identifies ORS 215.275 as a criterion applicable to the county's decision approving a cellular communications tower on EFU-zoned land and proposes findings of compliance with the statute, the issue of compliance with the statute was raised below and the county's failure to address the statute can be assigned as error, notwithstanding petitioners' failure to raise that issue below. Central Klamath County CAT v. Klamath County, 40 Or LUBA 129 (2001).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Evidence that a proposed cellular communications tower on EFU land is within an optimal area for telecommunication coverage is insufficient to allow LUBA to conclude, under ORS 197.835(11)(b), that the record "clearly supports" a finding of compliance with ORS 215.275, which requires that the local government consider reasonable alternatives to siting the tower on EFU-zoned land. Central Klamath County CAT v. Klamath County, 40 Or LUBA 129 (2001).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Transmission towers that are less than 200 feet in height may only be approved on EFU-zoned land, under ORS 215.283(1)(d), where it is established that it is not feasible to locate the tower on non-EFU-zoned lands. Dierking v. Clackamas County, 38 Or LUBA 106 (2000).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Transmission towers that are more than 200 feet in height may be approved under ORS 215.283(2)(L) on EFU-zoned land, subject to the approval criteria set out at ORS 215.296 and any locally adopted approval criteria. It is not necessary to establish that it is not feasible to locate such transmission towers on non-EFU-zoned lands. Dierking v. Clackamas County, 38 Or LUBA 106 (2000).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. The utility cabinets that house the equipment that is needed to operate a wireless communication tower are properly viewed as part of the communication tower, rather than as a separate utility facility that must be separately approved. Dierking v. Clackamas County, 38 Or LUBA 106 (2000).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. A land use decision maker commits no error by failing to require that an applicant for approval of a transmission tower justify the proposed height of the tower, where the relevant statutes impose different approval criteria depending on the height of the tower but do not require that the proposed tower height be justified. Dierking v. Clackamas County, 38 Or LUBA 106 (2000).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Subsequent changes in county ordinances do not affect an energy facility for which a site certificate has been approved by EFSC. Under ORS 469.400(5), a county is required to issue the "appropriate permits" for such an energy facility, regardless of whether a subsequent change in county ordinances makes the "appropriate permit" a type different from that which was appropriate when the site certificate was approved. McDole v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 500 (1992).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Under ORS 215.283(1)(d) and 215.283(2)(L), transmission towers are allowable in EFU zones as "[u]tility facilities necessary for public service." Such towers may be allowed outright under ORS 215.283(1)(d), if they do not exceed 200 feet in height. Such towers may be allowed under ORS 215.283(2)(L), subject to the standards set forth at ORS 215.296(1), if they are over 200 feet in height. Harris v. Polk County, 23 Or LUBA 152 (1992).

31.3.8 Permits – Particular Uses – Transmission Towers/Lines. Where the local code explicitly provides that antennae are usually required to be above roof level, and the only function a tower serves is to elevate antennae sufficiently above roof level so they may receive and transmit signals in conjunction with ground-based processing equipment, the tower falls within the code exemption from building height requirements for "appurtenances usually required to be placed above the roof level." Greenlees v. Yamhill County, 22 Or LUBA 604 (1992).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony from an adjacent hay farmer regarding the need for weekly litter patrols to prevent trash entering farm soils or destroying farm equipment, based in part on a condition of approval that requires a second litter fence between the working face of the landfill and adjacent hay fields, where there is no dispute that the existing litter fence is somewhat effective at reducing the volume of wind-blown trash that escapes the landfill, and the second litter fence will reduce that volume further. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A local government can impose conditions of approval to ensure compliance with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard that require the applicant to assume the cost or burden of performing actions on nearby farms necessary to prevent a significant change in accepted farming practices on those farms or significant increase in costs on those farms. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony from an adjacent hay farmer regarding the need for weekly litter patrols year-round to prevent trash entering farm soils or destroying farm equipment, based in part on a condition of approval that requires the landfill operator to provide, pay for, or reimburse the farmer for litter patrols prior to harvest, even if the condition does not entirely eliminate the need for litter patrols at non-harvest times. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A local government could reasonably conclude that a landfill expansion complies with the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/cost" standard, notwithstanding testimony that the existing intermittent falconry program simply displaces nuisance birds onto nearby farms, based on conditions of approval that require a more intensive falconry program and implementation of integrated techniques recommended by a wildlife biologist to discourage nuisance birds from remaining in the area. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A condition requiring the landfill operator to buy at market prices the entire crop of berries and cherries produced by a nearby farmer concerned with nuisance bird impacts on her crop is sufficient to reduce to insignificance the alleged adverse impacts of the landfill on the farmer's farm practices. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A farmer's reasonable apprehension about losing direct sale customers due to odor impacts of a landfill could lead the farmer to make changes in accepted farming practices or significantly increase the cost of farming practices; however, customer perceptions are not farm practices, and the feared or actual loss of direct sales customers alone, without any associated change or increased costs, is not a sufficient basis to conclude that the ORS 215.296(1) "significant change/costs" standard is violated. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A local government could reasonably conclude that speculative concerns regarding the possibility of transmitting avian flu to nearby chicken farms via dead birds buried at a proposed landfill are adequately addressed by statutory and regulatory requirements intended to protect against that possibility. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. The applicant has the burden to demonstrate that individual insignificant impacts under ORS 215.296(1) are not cumulatively significant, and a local government cannot shift that burden to farmer/opponents to a proposed landfill, by finding that the farmer/opponents failed to explain how multiple impacts are cumulatively significant. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. OAR 660-033-0130(18)(a) authorizes expansion of "[e]xisting facilities wholly within a farm use zone," but does not expressly require that the facility existed wholly within a farm use zone in 1996, on the date the rule language was adopted. As written, the rule includes no such temporal qualification, and would allow expansion of a facility that currently exists wholly within a farm use zone, but that did not in 1996. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. ORS 215.283(2)(k) allows a solid waste disposal facility on EFU-zoned land for which a DEQ permit has been granted. Where the record shows that a currently operating facility proposed for expansion had a DEQ permit that has been extended, but does not include a copy of the current DEQ permit, remand is not necessary to remedy that evidentiary defect where the petitioner offers no reason to believe that the landfill is operating without a current permit, and the county imposed a condition requiring the applicant to provide a copy of the current permit prior to undertaking any expansion. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A county errs in applying a rigorous "compelling evidence" standard to evaluate testimony from farmers located more than one mile from a proposed landfill, regarding impacts of the landfill operation on their farm costs and practices. Nothing in ORS 215.296(1) suggests that a county can apply different evidentiary standards on different parties based on the geographic distance to the proposed non-farm use. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A county errs in discounting the testimony of farmer/opponents that a landfill operation causes significant changes or significant costs to their farm practices, for failure to quantify or specify the degree of impacts. While the county is free to give more weight to testimony that is quantified or more detailed over less quantified or detailed testimony, requiring opponents to quantify or specify the degree of impacts, while not requiring similar quantification or specification from the applicant, who has the burden of proof, effectively shifts the burden of proof to the opponents. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A county errs in placing "great weight" on a longitudinal study offered by the applicant to demonstrate that the proposed expansion of a landfill will not cause significant change/increase costs to surrounding farm practices, by showing that farm uses on surrounding lands have remained stable and even expanded under the impacts of the existing landfill. Farm use may have remained stable despite significant changes or significant increases in costs to farm practices, or indeed because such changes have allowed farm operations to continue despite the impacts of the landfill. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A finding that the amount of trash that escapes a landfill onto adjoining farm land is not "significant" in volume is not sufficient to demonstrate that the changes the farmer made to avoid trash damaging equipment and crops does not reflect a significant change or increased cost for purposes of ORS 215.296(1). The question is whether the changes are significant, not whether the impacts or volume of trash is significant. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. The apparent success of a change in farming practices in mitigating or preventing lost revenue from impacts of landfill operations on surrounding farmland does not demonstrate that the change itself is not a significant change in farm practices, for purposes of ORS 215.296(1). Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. That a pheasant raising operation may be a recently established farm practice on farm land adjacent to a proposed landfill does not mean that the operation is a "hobby" or noncommercial farm use such that the county need not evaluate alleged impacts from the landfill operation on the pheasant raising operation. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. To establish compliance with ORS 215.296(1), the applicant may initially survey farm uses on surrounding lands, and identify in general terms accepted farming practices associated with those farm uses. Remand is necessary where the initial survey identifies a farm stand adjacent to a proposed landfill, but does not identify, even in general terms, any accepted practices associated with the farm stand. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where it is undisputed that direct sales of agricultural products is an accepted farm practice, a county must address allegations that odor and visual impacts from a proposed landfill adversely impact direct sales of agricultural products, for purposes of establishing compliance with ORS 215.296(1), even if the alleged adverse impacts are based on customers' perceptions regarding landfill impacts. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 72 Or LUBA 341 (2015).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A 1980 reasons exception and comprehensive plan and zoning amendment to allow for a waste disposal facility "authorizes" subsequent expansions of that landfill within the rezoned area for purposes of the exclusion to LUBA's jurisdiction at ORS 197.015(10)(b)(H)(i), where the 1980 decision specifically contemplated that the facility would expand incrementally over time, with filled disposal cells capped and reclaimed, while the active landfill operation moves on to new disposal cells. McPhillips Farm Inc. v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 355 (2012).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. LUBA will affirm a planning director's interpretation that site design review standards do not apply to a proposed landfill expansion because the expansion was authorized in a 1980 decision that pre-dated the site design review standards, where nothing in the code compels application of the site design review standards to an already authorized landfill expansion. McPhillips Farm Inc. v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 355 (2012).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A reasonable person could conclude, based on evidence that commercial farms near existing landfills are viable agricultural operations, that a text amendment allowing existing landfills to expand their geographic scope will not have additional impacts on nearby farm uses, and is consistent with a comprehensive plan policy providing that proposed rural development shall not substantially conflict with farm and forest uses. Waste Not of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 65 Or LUBA 142 (2012).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. ORS 215.283(2)(k) restricts a solid waste disposal facility from being "established" prior to Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) permitting, but does not prohibit local government approval of a facility that is conditioned on receipt of the DEQ permit prior to establishment or building of the facility. Crocker v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 317 (2010).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Under ORS 215.283(2)(k), buildings "necessary" for the operation of a waste disposal facility are permitted. Where the findings are insufficient, but the record includes evidence which clearly establishes that proposed buildings are "necessary," and no contrary evidence in the record is cited, LUBA will affirm the conclusion that the proposed buildings are "necessary." Crocker v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 317 (2010).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A finding that a proposed solid waste disposal operation will have "no significant effect" on farm or forest uses is not sufficient to also demonstrate that the operation will have "no adverse effect." While the two standards are similar, they are not the same, and separate findings are required. Crocker v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 317 (2010).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A facility where fruit process water is trucked to a lagoon, stored and later used to irrigate a hay crop is not properly viewed as a "utility facility," within the meaning of 215.213(1)(d) and ORS 215.283(1)(d), simply because aerators are employed in the lagoon to control odors. Farrell v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 1 (2001).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A Land Use Compatibility Statement requirement that a proposal to apply process water from a fruit processing operation to EFU-zoned land must "comply with all applicable local land use requirements" requires at a minimum that the county determine whether the proposal is a farm use and whether it is a utility facility. These determinations require the exercise of sufficient discretion that the county's decision is both a "land use decision" and a "permit," as those terms are defined by statute. Farrell v. Jackson County, 39 Or LUBA 149 (2000).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where industrial effluent is applied to poplar trees in an exclusive farm use zone so that heavy metals and nitrogen compounds in the effluent will bind to the soil and be taken up into the poplar trees, rather than being deposited into a creek, the proposed use is properly viewed as an extension of the city's sewerage treatment system and thus as a "utility facility," within the meaning of ORS 215.283(1)(d). Cox v. Polk County, 39 Or LUBA 1 (2000).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A proposed use of land may be both a "farm use" and a "utility facility," and where it qualifies as both, the proposed use must meet the approval criteria for both farm uses and utility facilities. Cox v. Polk County, 39 Or LUBA 1 (2000).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. The scope of the "solid waste disposal facility" subject to county regulation under ORS 215.283(2)(j) is coextensive with the scope of the facility for which DEQ grants a permit pursuant to ORS 459.245. Where the DEQ permit issued pursuant to ORS 459.245 governs only the septic treatment ponds on the subject property and does not govern the land application of treated wastes on adjacent parcels, the "solid waste disposal facility" subject to compliance with the county's conditional use criteria does not include those adjacent parcels. Wilbur Residents v. Douglas County, 37 Or LUBA 156 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. ORS 215.283(2)(j) authorizes a county to allow infrastructure such as equipment, facilities or buildings necessary for the operation of a solid waste disposal facility, but does not require a county to consider or approve off-site infrastructure that is not necessary for that facility. An adjacent farm parcel on which treated waste from the facility will be applied as fertilizer and for irrigation purposes is not "necessary" for the operation of the facility, and thus is not subject to the county's regulation under ORS 215.283(2)(j). Wilbur Residents v. Douglas County, 37 Or LUBA 156 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A decision that disposal of sewage effluent by applying it to farm land constitutes a "utility facility necessary for public service" within the meaning of ORS 215.283(1)(d) requires the exercise of policy or legal judgment and for that reason the decision does not qualify for the exception to the statutory definition of land use decision provided by ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) for certain ministerial decisions. Friends of the Creek v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 562 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A decision that disposal of sewage effluent by applying it to farm land constitutes a "farm use" within the meaning of ORS 215.203 requires the exercise of policy or legal judgment and for that reason the decision does not qualify for the exception to the statutory definition of "land use decision" provided by ORS

197.015(10)(b)(A) for certain ministerial decisions. Friends of the Creek v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 562 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A decision authorizing construction of facilities necessary to apply sewage effluent to farm land constitutes the approval of a "proposed development of land" and thus is a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.215.402(4) if the decision involves the exercise of discretion. Friends of the Creek v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 562 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A decision that a proposal to transport treated effluent to an EFU-zoned parcel and apply that effluent to poplar trees constitutes a "farm use" within the meaning of ORS 215.283(1)(d) requires the exercise of policy or legal judgment and for that reason the decision does not qualify for the exception to the statutory definition of land use decision provided by ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) for certain ministerial decisions. Friends of Clean Living v. Polk County, 36 Or LUBA 544 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. A decision authorizing construction of a lagoon on EFU-zoned land to store treated effluent constitutes the approval of a "proposed development of land" and thus constitutes a "permit" within the meaning of ORS 215.402(4) if the decision involves the exercise of discretion. Friends of Clean Living v. Polk County, 36 Or LUBA 544 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where a city interprets its zoning ordinance as requiring that a "recycling center" have the "primary purpose" of extracting recyclables from a waste stream, but not requiring that any particular percentage of the waste stream will be recycled, the city's conclusion that a proposed facility is a "recycling center" is supported by substantial evidence, notwithstanding the absence of evidence quantifying the percentage of recyclables in the waste stream. Sequoia Park Condo. Assoc. v. City of Beaverton, 36 Or LUBA 317 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Substantial evidence supports a city's finding that the primary purpose of a proposed facility is to recover recyclables from a waste stream, where there is evidence that the most significant function and justification of the proposed facility is to recover recyclables, notwithstanding that the proposed facility might also serve or facilitate other economic purposes. Sequoia Park Condo. Assoc. v. City of Beaverton, 36 Or LUBA 317 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. That a proposed use meets the definition of a "materials recovery facility" at OAR 340-093-0030(57) is neither relevant nor controlling in determining whether the local government correctly categorized the proposed use as a "recycling center" under its development ordinance, where the development ordinance was not adopted to implement the rule. Sequoia Park Condo. Assoc. v. City of Beaverton, 36 Or LUBA 317 (1999).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. The city was clearly correct in classifying a proposed recycling processing center as a "waste and/or recycling transfer operation" which is an allowed conditional use under local ordinance. Canby Quality of Life Committee v. City of Canby, 30 Or LUBA 166 (1995).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where petitioner appealed a planning director determination that a solid waste transfer station is an outright permitted use in a particular zone, the city was neither required nor authorized to expand the scope of the local appeal hearing to include consideration of whether a solid waste transfer station is also an appropriate use in that zone. Pend-Air Citizen's Comm. v. City of Pendleton, 29 Or LUBA 362 (1995).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Evidence that a solid waste transfer station may conflict with neighboring residential uses is not relevant to the issue of whether a solid waste transfer station is an outright permitted use in a particular zone. Pend-Air Citizen's Comm. v. City of Pendleton, 29 Or LUBA 362 (1995).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where a local code allows recycling and other incidental uses, LUBA will defer to a local government interpretation of the code as allowing a recycling facility that accepts waste material including both solid waste and recyclable material, where approximately 70 percent of the material accepted will be recycled and approximately 30 percent will be disposed of at a landfill. Linebarger v. City of The Dalles, 24 Or LUBA 91 (1992).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where there is uncontradicted evidence that up to 70 percent of the waste material to be accepted at a proposed recycling facility will be recycled, and that some recycling facilities accept material that includes both solid waste that cannot be recycled as well as recyclable material, a local government's finding that the solid waste transfer component of the proposed facility is "customarily incidental" to the recycling component of the facility is supported by substantial evidence in the record. Linebarger v. City of The Dalles, 24 Or LUBA 91 (1992).

31.3.9 Permits – Particular Uses – Waste Disposal Facilities. Where the evidence identified in the record concerning the acreage required to be included in a landfill site due to factors such as rights-of-way, buffers, setbacks, longer lifespan, need to accommodate waste from outside the county, etc. is unclear, LUBA may not, pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(b), overlook the county's failure to adopt findings justifying the number of acres included in a goal exception for the landfill. Dyke v. Clatsop County, 18 Or LUBA 787 (1990).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to be on-site during events to assist with general coordination, parking, and other activities, and where conditions of approval make the applicant responsible for operational matters such as maintaining the event calendar to comply with limits on the number of events as well as monitoring noise and sign removal, substantial evidence exists to support a conclusion that the applicant will "operate[]" the home occupation, within the meaning of ORS 215.448(1)(a), even where they plan to have no full-time employees and to allow customers to hire their own contractors, as necessary. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU explains how events can be conducted with no more than five employees on-site at one time by scheduling activities, preparing food off-site, utilizing buffet-style service, and planning and making arrangements in advance, and where a condition of approval limits the home occupation to no more than five employees on-site, substantial evidence exists to support a conclusion that the applicant will "employ on site no more than five full-time or part-time persons," within the meaning of ORS 215.448(1)(b), even given the complex planning and implementation that a 300-guest wedding entails. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to renovate an existing barn by adding restrooms and "Brides and Grooms rooms" and by eliminating horse stalls, substantial evidence does not exist to support a conclusion that the renovated barn would "otherwise be allowed in the zone," for purposes of ORS 215.448(3). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an applicant for a CUP to host events as a home occupation on land zoned EFU plans to construct a new, free-standing restroom building with septic system capacity to serve 300 people per event, substantial evidence does not exist to support a conclusion that the new restroom building would be accessory to or customarily associated with an existing dwelling on EFU land. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 664 (2020).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where certain activities are allowed as accessory to a home occupation use, they may not be allowed through a Type I process (i.e., ministerial review of an application based on clear and objective standards and criteria) that does not provide the review that is required by ORS 215.448(1) and (4). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an applicant proposes to bifurcate a proposed business development into two segments, one to be approved as a conditional use, and another to be approved as a home occupation, to avoid application of permit standards that would otherwise prohibit the business use viewed as a whole, both sets of permit requirements potentially apply to any components of the segmented use that are shared or overlap. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. An argument that the hearings officer failed to address a statutory home occupation standard requiring that the home occupation be operated "substantially" within a dwelling or accessory structure provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the county has adopted and applied a more rigorous home occupation standard that prohibits external evidence of the home occupation, except for signs and limited vehicle parking. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where in order to avoid code prohibitions on "external evidence" of a home occupation an applicant attempts to authorize all outdoor processing associated with a log home manufacturing business under a conditional use permit for the primary processing of forest products, and all indoor processing associated with the business as part of a home occupation, any activities that use shared equipment, vehicles or employees, such as transporting logs from the outdoor primary processing site to the indoor secondary processing site, are not authorized exclusively under the primary processing permit, but are also subject to the prohibition on external evidence required of the home occupation permit. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. The primary processing of logs pursuant to a conditional use permit for the primary processing of forest products is not itself subject to home occupation standards, even if the logs are later transported to a structure on the property for secondary processing under a home occupation permit. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. All on-site vehicle use associated with a proposed home occupation is subject to code limitations on the number and weight of vehicles, even if the vehicles are also associated with other uses allowed or conditionally allowed on the property. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A hearings officer does not err in requiring the applicant for a home occupation to demonstrate that the home occupation is "clearly subordinate" to residential use of the property, where the code defines home occupation to include only commercial uses that are clearly subordinate to residential use of the property, and the definition functions to disqualify home occupations that do not meet the definition. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. In determining whether a home occupation is "clearly subordinate" to residential use of the property, a hearings officer must consider all activities associated with the home occupation, including vehicle parking and usage on the property. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Remand is necessary where the hearings officer concludes that a portion of a proposed log home manufacturing facility operating as a home occupation is "clearly subordinate" to residential use of the property, but without identifying what features or elements of the home occupation and residential uses are compared or considered in determining whether the home occupation is clearly subordinate to the residential use. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A reasonable decision-maker could rely upon a diesel fume test conducted by the applicant to determine whether diesel fumes are detectable at the property line, combined with a condition of approval limiting idling and operation within 60 feet of the property line, to conclude that a "no fume detection" home occupation standard is met, notwithstanding conflicting anecdotal testimony from the neighbors across the road that they can sometimes detect diesel fumes. Jacobs v. Clackamas County, 73 Or LUBA 262 (2016).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A code provision requiring that a home occupation shall not utilize over 600 square feet of floor area cannot plausibly be interpreted to limit only the square feet physically occupied by a truck or trailer as part of a home occupation to perform maintenance work on trucks and trailers. Because the home occupation activity is the maintenance and not the storage of trucks and trailers, any interpretation that ignores the square footage necessary for employees to perform maintenance tasks is not consistent with the text of the code provision. Stevens v. City of Island City, 71 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A finding that a proposed truck maintenance home occupation will comply with a 600-square-foot floor area limitation is inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, where the findings do not address how much floor area employees will use in performing maintenance tasks, and there is no evidence in the record supporting a finding that the physical area occupied by trucks, tools, storage, and the area needed to perform maintenance tasks will occupy no more than 600 square feet. Stevens v. City of Island City, 71 Or LUBA 275 (2015).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Remand is required where city code limits a home occupation to 600 square feet in size in an accessory structure, the undisputed evidence is that the home occupation will occupy more than 600 square feet, but the city's decision simply imposes a condition of approval limiting the home occupation to 600 square feet. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the applicant for a home occupation fails to provide information regarding the location of office functions and equipment, and the code limits the entire home occupation to a 600-square-foot space that is already fully occupied by other functions, remand is necessary for the city to address the issue and impose any conditions necessary to ensure that office functions on the site comply with the code. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A petitioner's mere disagreement with a city's conclusion that, as conditioned, a commercial truck repair home occupation located in an accessory structure is secondary to residential use of the property does not establish that the city's conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the code limits a home occupation to one employee, and the applicant proposes one full-time mechanic to maintain the applicant's commercial trucking fleet, but proposes no way for the applicant's drivers to bring and retrieve trucks for maintenance without violating the one-employee rule, remand is required for the city to address the issue and impose any necessary conditions. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Remand is required where the code prohibits use of noisy equipment as part of a home occupation, but the decision authorizes diesel truck start up and dispatch at night based on the presence of masking noise from nearby industrial uses, but does not explain how truck noise can be masked at night when nearby industrial uses are not active. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A home occupation standard requiring that conditions of approval be "readily administered by City staff" is met, where the city imposed 10 conditions of approval that are reasonably clear and objective and that primarily involve outdoor activities that can be readily observed and verified. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. In approving a wedding venue and event business in a forest zone under a code provision that allows, on a "temporary" basis, uses otherwise not allowable in the applicable zone, a county must consider whether the proposed use is properly characterized as a "home occupation," which is an allowed conditional use in the forest zone, subject to restrictions. If the proposed is properly characterized as a home occupation allowable in the forest zone, then the code does not allow the county to issue a temporary use permit for that use. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A county does not improperly substitute a condition of approval for a finding that the proposed home occupation will be conducted "primarily in buildings," where the county finds based on testimony below that the home occupation will be conducted primarily in buildings and the county imposes a condition of approval that no more than 20 percent of any home occupation event may be conducted outside a building. Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. ORS 215.448(1) requires that a home occupation "shall employ on the site no more than five full-time or part-time persons." Because the statute does not specify the time of measurement, it is possible to interpret the ORS 215.448(1) five employee limit to apply "at any one time." Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a county zoning ordinance requires that any violation of the county's development ordinance must be corrected before a permit for new development on the property can be approved, a county's interpretation that the correction requirement is triggered only if the county enforcement officer finds there is a violation, and is not triggered by mere allegations of violations, is plausible and must be sustained under Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 266, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. ORS 215.448(1) authorizes counties to approve home occupations but requires that home occupations in EFU, forest and mixed farm and forest zones must be "operated substantially in * * * the [d]welling * * * or buildings normally associated with uses permitted in the zone in which the property is located." As used in ORS 215.448(1), buildings must be an enclosed structure of some type, and activities that occur in open-sided structures such as gazebos and pavilions are essentially out-of-doors activities for purposes of ORS 215.448(1). Green v. Douglas County, 63 Or LUBA 200 (2011).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. In amending ORS 215.448(1) in 1995 to authorize home occupations to include vehicle parking and to be operated "substantially" in a residence or buildings the legislature was concerned with four cases where permits for home occupations had been rejected because they included outdoor parking and other outdoor activities. In attempting to understand what the legislature meant by "substantially," it is appropriate to assume the legislature intended that those four home occupations, which included limited outdoor activity, would have been approvable under the amended statute. Green v. Douglas County, 63 Or LUBA 200 (2011).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Under the ORS 215.448(1)(c) requirement that a home occupation be operated "substantially" in the dwelling or a building on the property, the home occupation must be conducted in the residence or buildings "to a large degree," "in the main," or as the "main part," compared to the portion of the home occupation conducted outside. In other words, the home occupation must be "largely" or "mainly" operated in the dwelling or buildings. Green v. Douglas County, 63 Or LUBA 200 (2011).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. ORS 215.448(1)(b) requires that a home occupation employ no more than five full-time or part-time persons. For purposes of applying that statutory limit, persons who are hired to assist in producing weddings and other events at an event-site home occupation must be counted in applying the ORS 215.448(1)(b) five person limit, and it does not matter whether the persons who are employed to produce the events are hired by the residents of the property or by those who attend events at the property. Green v. Douglas County, 63 Or LUBA 200 (2011).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. When a local code provision prevents the filing of substantially similar applications after the denial of a previous application, a home occupation permit application that proposes the same general construction contracting activity as the first application is nonetheless not substantially similar to the first application when it significantly reduces the scope and intensity of the proposed use. Henkel v. Clackamas County, 56 Or LUBA 495 (2008).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Under ORS 215.448(1) and the local code provision implementing that statute, a log home kit manufacturing facility is not a home occupation where the majority of the business activities in connection with the business, including the construction, dismantling, and transport of the homes are not conducted in the dwelling or in any structure normally associated with uses in an EFU zone. Ott v. Lake County, 54 Or LUBA 502 (2007).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the definition of "home occupation" in the local code includes a business activity that is conducted in a dwelling or accessory building normally associated with the primary uses allowed in the underlying zone, a local government need not determine whether the proposed business is normally associated with the permitted uses allowed in the zone. Watts v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 166 (2006).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the local noise standard applicable to home occupations provides that the proposed home occupation "shall not create noise that, when measured off the subject property, exceeds the greater of 60 dba or the ambient noise level," the hearings officer errs in interpreting that provision to allow noise spikes in excess of 60 dba. Watts v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 166 (2006).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A hearings officer's determination that it is feasible for a proposed home occupation to comply with local code criteria prohibiting the creation of vibration, glare, fumes or odors detectable to normal sensory perception off the subject property with a condition relocating the parking area for diesel vehicles away from abutting properties and limiting idling time of diesel vehicles to 10 minutes is not supported by substantial evidence, where the evidence relied upon is a conclusory statement in a planning staff memorandum that fumes and odors could be eliminated by limiting idling time and providing a sufficient buffer. Watts v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 166 (2006).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a local home occupation standard prohibits external evidence of a home occupation, an interpretation of that standard that allows a vehicle related to the home occupation to traverse the subject property to access an accessory structure in which the vehicle will be stored is reasonable. Watts v. Clackamas County, 51 Or LUBA 166 (2006).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A local government interpretation of its own code that allows home occupations to exhibit some characteristics of a business does not violate ORS 197.829(1) when the local government code expressly allows for up to five employees, on-premises signage, and on-premises parking. Stewart v. Coos County, 45 Or LUBA 525 (2003).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A condition of approval of a home occupation permit for a bed and breakfast inn that prohibits continued operation of a special events business as part of that home occupation does not violate the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, simply because some of those special events might be religious in nature or because one of the owners of the home occupation is an ordained minister and might perform weddings that might be scheduled by the special events business. Cookman v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 630 (2003).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. It is within a city council's discretion to interpret its zoning ordinance to allow commercial-sized greenhouses as outright permitted uses in a residential zone and to allow a related home occupation florist business as a conditional use without considering the impacts that may be associated with the greenhouses. Latta v. City of Joseph, 39 Or LUBA 318 (2001).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A city council does not commit reversible error by imposing a condition that requires that a parking lot for a home occupation be accessed from an alley, notwithstanding that the zoning ordinance defines "alley" as a street that provides secondary access to property. Latta v. City of Joseph, 39 Or LUBA 318 (2001).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where an issue was raised below concerning whether a proposed bed and breakfast facility violated a plan policy regulating commercial development and is not addressed in a hearings officer's decision and the policy itself and related plan and land use regulation provisions are unclear whether the policy applies, LUBA will remand the decision. Hatfield v. City of Portland, 37 Or LUBA 664 (2000).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a county prohibits the refiling of a new or substantially similar application until two years after a final decision denying an application; the decision maker determines that a second application, filed less than a year after the first, was "substantially similar" because it involved the same use on the same property and the changes in the facts supporting the application were otherwise insufficient to demonstrate that the application is different; and the decision maker points to evidence in the record to support his conclusions, that decision is supported by substantial evidence. Munn v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the statute authorizing counties to permit home occupations is amended to remove the limitation that the home occupation be conducted entirely within a dwelling or accessory building, but the county's home occupation ordinance still reflects the former statute, the county is not required to apply its home occupation ordinance consistently with the stricter requirements of the former statute and case law interpreting that statute. Greer v. Josephine County, 37 Or LUBA 261 (1999).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A county exceeds its interpretational discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark v. Jackson County where it interprets an ordinance prohibiting home occupations that require alteration of a structure in a manner that changes the character of the structure under the Uniform Building Code, to allow such home occupations as long as the structure is altered to conform to the Uniform Building Code. Greer v. Josephine County, 37 Or LUBA 261 (1999).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. It is reasonable and correct to interpret a code provision requiring that "vehicle to be repaired shall be located within an enclosed building" to require that repaired vehicles remain within an enclosed building until they are removed from the property. Gibbons v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 210 (1998).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. It is reasonable and correct to consider vehicles used to pick up and drop off customers who have vehicles waiting to be repaired as "vehicles associated with" an auto repair home occupation. Gibbons v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 210 (1998).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where petitioner's home occupation includes the movement and storage of vehicles on the subject property, that activity is external evidence of the business for purposes of a local ordinance based on ORS 215.448 that limits allowable external evidence of a home occupation, even though such activity is incidental to the primary business activity. Sheldon Fire & Rescue, Inc. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 474 (1998).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a local ordinance limits external evidence of a home occupation to one small sign, a hearings officer may reasonably interpret the ordinance to mean that the storage and movement of vehicles on the subject property is external evidence of the business, and therefore prohibited. Sheldon Fire & Rescue, Inc. v. Washington County, 34 Or LUBA 474 (1998).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A local governing body is not entitled to interpretive deference under ORS 197.829 and Clark v. Jackson County when interpreting statutory requirements for home occupations. Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a business is actually carried out as more than one separate and distinct part, any such part could be approved as a home occupation provided such part of the business complies with the requirements of ORS 215.448(1). Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. For purposes of qualifying as a home occupation, the storage of paving materials, vehicles and equipment is not properly viewed as a part of a paving business that is separate and distinct from the daily use of such paving materials, vehicles and equipment in the business operation. Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. In addressing the ORS 215.448(1)(c) requirement that a proposed home occupation "will not interfere with existing uses on nearby land or with other uses permitted in the zone in which the property is located," the local government must identify the uses permitted in the applicable zone. Holsheimer v. Columbia County, 28 Or LUBA 279 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where LUBA remands a local government decision granting a home occupation permit, the permit expires on the date the decision is remanded. Under a local code requirement limiting home occupation permits to one year, the year is measured from the date of a decision on remand granting the permit, not the date of the original permit decision. Wuester v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 314 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Regardless of whether the local decision maker imposed a condition requiring satisfaction of DEQ noise standards, DEQ noise standards are not approval criteria for an auto repair home occupation permit, where the local code does not make DEQ noise standards applicable approval criteria. Wuester v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 314 (1994).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a code approval standard for home occupations in a resource zone requires that a home occupation be "situated upon generally unsuitable land for the production of farm and forest products," the local government may interpret the standard to require that the entire property on which the home occupation is proposed to be located be "generally unsuitable." Smith v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 568 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. ORS 215.448(1) is an enabling statute that both authorizes local governments to approve home occupations and places limits on that authorization. A local government may not authorize home occupations that violate those statutory limitations. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Under ORS 215.448(1)(c), home occupations may not be conducted outside the dwelling and other buildings normally associated with permitted uses in the zone. ORS 215.448(1)(c) does not provide for a de minimis exception to that requirement. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the challenged decision authorizes a home occupation in an existing structure, the ORS 215.448(3) prohibition against authorizing construction of a structure that would not otherwise be allowed in the zone could not be violated. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Under ORS 215.448(1)(c), home occupations must be operated in dwellings or other buildings normally associated with uses permitted in the applicable zone. Where the county adopts no findings addressing this requirement, the decision must be remanded for findings of compliance with the requirement. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A condition of approval requiring that not more than 1000 square feet of an existing structure be partitioned for use in conjunction with a home occupation is sufficient to assure compliance with a local code provision requiring that home occupations occupy no more than 1000 square feet of an accessory building. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a county interprets a forest zone requirement that nonforest uses be located on generally unsuitable land for production of farm or forest products as requiring consideration of the suitability of the entire parcel, the county exercises its interpretive discretion to the fullest in interpreting a home occupation approval standard that incorporates the nonforest use standard by reference, as requiring consideration of only the land under the existing building where the home occupation will be located. Weuster v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 425 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where a local government determines an application for a home occupation on a parcel adjoining another parcel on which an earlier application for the same home occupation was denied, is an application for a "substantially similar" use, LUBA will defer to that interpretation of the local code requirement that an application may not be "substantially similar" to a previously denied application. Roozenboom v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 433 (1993).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A local code requirement that a home occupation be "operated in" a dwelling or other buildings normally associated with the dwelling is not satisfied by the parking of repossessed vehicles outside of the dwelling until such vehicles are either loaded on trucks for disposal or driven away. Stevenson v. Douglas County, 23 Or LUBA 227 (1992).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. A local code provision allowing a "resident" of a dwelling to conduct a home occupation does not require that such "resident" also be the owner of the dwelling in which the home occupation is to be conducted. Tarbell v. Jefferson County, 21 Or LUBA 294 (1991).

31.3.10 Permits – Particular Uses – Home Occupations. Where the local code provides that a property owner may file a conditional use application, a property owner has standing to file an application for approval of a home occupation, even though the property owner does not propose to reside in the dwelling and conduct the home occupation. Tarbell v. Jefferson County, 21 Or LUBA 294 (1991).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The fact that a tentative plan for a destination resort proposes a different pace of development than the final master plan, such as by sub-phasing development, does not materially affect the findings of fact on which the final master plan approval was based so as to constitute a "substantial change" to the final master plan, thereby requiring a new application, where neither the final master plan nor applicable regulations require that all development authorized in the first phase of the final master plan occurs at the same time. Gould v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 561 (2019).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the final master plan for a destination resort includes a mitigation plan requiring the applicant to replace the water consumed by the resort with a quantity and quality of water that will maintain fish habitat in an impacted stream, the fact that the tentative plan for one phase of development modifies the timing, but not the overall amount, of the mitigation water required to be provided does not materially affect the findings of fact on which the final master plan approval was based so as to constitute a "substantial change" to the final master plan, thereby requiring a new application, where there is no evidence that such modification will impact the efficacy of mitigation and there is evidence that such modification will result in more gradual, spread out impacts. Gould v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 561 (2019).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a local code provision requires applicants for destination resorts to demonstrate that "[a]ny negative impact on fish and wildlife resources will be completely mitigated so that there is no net loss or net degradation of the resource," where a proposed resort's consumptive use of groundwater is anticipated to impact the quantity and quality of water in an offsite stream, and where the applicant's final master plan includes a mitigation plan requiring the applicant to replace the water consumed by the resort with a quantity and quality of water that will maintain fish habitat in the stream, the local government may not impose a condition of approval allowing the applicant to demonstrate that the source of the mitigation water provides the requisite quantity and quality of water at a later date without review or input by interested persons. Gould v. Deschutes County, 79 Or LUBA 561 (2019).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.435(5)(b) defines overnight lodgings, which are required at destination resorts. The overnight lodgings described in the first sentence of ORS 197.435(5)(b) are owned by the destination resort, whereas the "individually owned units" described in the second sentence of ORS 197.435(5)(b) are overnight lodgings that are not owned by the destination resort. Neither the resort-owned overnight lodgings authorized by the first sentence nor the individually owned overnight lodgings authorized by the second sentence must be "separately" owned. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 76 Or LUBA 6 (2017).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. To qualify as a "separate rentable unit for overnight lodging" within the meaning of ORS 197.445(4), which requires a minimum number of overnight lodging units at destination resorts, a bedroom in an individually (privately) owned cabin with its own bathroom and lockable interior and exterior doors must actually be a "separate unit." The fact that the bedroom may be a "separately rentable accommodation" as described in the first sentence of ORS 197.435(5)(b)'s definition of "overnight lodgings" is irrelevant, since the first sentence of ORS 197.435(5)(b) governs overnight lodgings that are owned by the destination resort, not individually (privately) owned overnight lodgings. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 76 Or LUBA 6 (2017).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The Goal 8 (Recreation Needs) adoption history shows the purpose of the second sentence of ORS 197.435(5)(b), which authorizes individually owned overnight lodging units at destination resorts, was to allow individually owned homes to be counted as overnight lodging units in very limited circumstances. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 76 Or LUBA 6 (2017).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The purpose of the destination resort statutes is to ensure that the statutory minimum number of overnight lodging units is actually available to tourists seeking to use destination resort facilities and that the maximum 2.5 residences to each overnight lodging unit ratio is preserved. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 76 Or LUBA 6 (2017).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a hearings officer finds that the only evidence on a key legal issue regarding required mitigation for the impacts of a destination resort was presented by permit opponents, but the record makes it clear that the applicant also submitted conflicting evidence on that legal issue, remand is required. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a hearings officer's finding takes inconsistent positions regarding the nature of the legal issue to be resolved in proceedings following a LUBA remand of a permit approval for a destination resort, a second remand is required. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a destination resort has received both conceptual and final master plan approval, and the final master plan approval decision was remanded, the county may again grant final master plan approval, even though the conceptual master plan approval decision has become void due to the passage of time, where the initial final master plan approval decision effectively incorporated and displaced the conceptual master plan approval decision with regard to the only legal issues remaining on remand. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a petitioner's challenge to a hearings officer's finding that a mitigation plan submitted in support of a request for approval of a destination resort is specific enough for review relies almost entirely on reasoning that LUBA adopted in remanding a prior county decision, and that LUBA reasoning was effectively rejected or qualified by the Court of Appeals in an appeal of LUBA's first decision, petitioner's challenge to the hearings officer's finding in the second appeal provides no basis for reversal or remand. Central Land And Cattle Company v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A code limitation that "[a]ny substantial change to the approved plan will require a new application" does not require a new application for a destination resort whose original owners declared bankruptcy and were replaced by new owners. The code limitation is directed at changes in the approved plan, not at changes in the owners. Central Land and Cattle Company, LLC v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 326 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Notwithstanding that the destination resort statutes at ORS 197.435 to 197.467 do not expressly authorize expansion of an existing destination resort, the statutes expressly allow destination resorts to be developed in phases, and therefore a proposal to expand an existing resort by adding the equivalent of a second phase that otherwise complies with all applicable approval criteria is consistent with the destination resort statutes. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the applicant for a proposal to expand an existing destination resort relies upon "lockoff rooms" in the existing resort in combination with new lockoff rooms to satisfy the statutory requirement to provide at least 150 overnight lodging units, at a ratio of residential to lodging units that does not exceed 2.5 to 1, a petitioner's challenge to that proposal is not a collateral attack against the existing resort. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Lockoff rooms, individual bedrooms in a single-family dwelling, are not "individually owned units" for purposes of the destination resort statute at ORS 197.435(5)(b), because individual bedrooms in a dwelling are not "individually owned." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Renting individual bedrooms in a house, with common areas and kitchen facilities, does not qualify as providing "overnight lodgings" required in a destination resort, because renting individual rooms in a house is similar to providing accommodations in dormitory rooms, and ORS 197.435(5)(b) provides that "dormitory rooms and similar accommodations do not qualify as "overnight lodgings." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A finding that is ambiguous regarding whether a restaurant and meeting area in a destination resort each provide 100 seats, as required by local code, is not a basis for reversal or remand, where all the evidence in the record indicates that the two facilities each provide 100 seats, and the petitioner cites no contrary evidence. Under these circumstances, LUBA will affirm that portion of the decision notwithstanding inadequate findings, because the evidence in the record "clearly supports" a finding that the 100-seat requirement is met. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A general argument raised below that the applicant to expand a destination resort failed to provide a comprehensive wildlife management plan does not provide fair notice of specific issues raised on appeal regarding noncompliance with code standards that require "no net loss" of wildlife resources and imposition of a conservation easement. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where there is conflicting evidence regarding a subjective code standard requiring a finding that a destination resort expansion is "integral" to the remainder of the resort, LUBA will decline to use its authority under ORS

197.835(11)(b) to affirm a decision notwithstanding inadequate findings, based on evidence that "clearly supports" the decision. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 540 (2016).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, and the governing body does not distinguish between conditions based on their importance or the level of difficulty in exercising those conditions, a finding that 19 of 42 conditions have been "fully complied with" is not adequate to establish that the 42 conditions have been "substantially exercised." Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, the governing body may not dismiss the significance of the applicant's failure to exercise 22 of 42 conditions because those conditions required the applicant to secure additional permits as the failure of a "contingency" to occur. The conditions were written in a manner that required the applicant to secure the permits to exercise the condition, such that they were a necessary step to exercise the condition, and the significance of the applicant's failure to secure the permits may not be dismissed entirely as a failure of a "contingency." Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a destination resort conceptual master plan approval becomes void under applicable land use regulations if conditions of approval are not "substantially exercised" within two years, and the process and complexity of destination resort final master plan approval makes it difficult to do so within two years, the solution is to amend county land use regulations so as not to subject conceptual master plan approval to the two-year deadline or to write conceptual master plan approval conditions so that they can be exercised without first securing final master plan approval. The solution is not to take the position that the two-year deadline to "substantially exercise" the conditions of approval should not be applied, where the county land use regulations as currently written clearly make the two-year deadline applicable. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the county's land use regulations require the county to find that the failure of an applicant to fully comply with any conditions of conceptual master plan approval within two years is not the "fault of the applicant," LUBA will defer to a board of commissioner's finding that the complexity of the proposal and the complexity of the county's destination resort review process relieves the applicant of any fault in fully complying with the conceptual master plan conditions of approval. Gould v. Deschutes County, 71 Or LUBA 78 (2015).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Nothing in the definition of "tract" in ORS 197.435(7) or any other statute or rule requires a map that shows in totality the locations of an applicant's land ownership within the county for purposes of satisfying the last sentence of ORS 197.435(7), the destination resort "30% Rule." Root v. Klamath County, 68 Or LUBA 124 (2013).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.455(2), the map of lands eligible for destination resort siting that is adopted pursuant to the mapping criteria at ORS 197.455(1) is the "sole basis" for determining whether land is eligible for resort siting, and those mapping criteria are not revisited at the time of destination resort siting. Nonetheless, three of the ORS 197.455(1) mapping criteria include prohibitions and exceptions focused on the specifics of resort development that are difficult to meaningfully address at the mapping stage. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 66 Or LUBA 192 (2012).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Nothing in the destination resort statutes prohibits a county from placing a site that is classified Fire Regime Condition Class 3 on its map of lands eligible for destination resort siting, as long as conditions or similar restrictions are imposed as part of the mapping decision that effectively ensure that prior to resort development the county has adopted a wildfire protection plan consistent with ORS 197.455(1)(f). Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 66 Or LUBA 192 (2012).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the county adds a site to its map of lands eligible for destination resort siting, concludes based on site-specific traffic studies that destination resort development will significantly affect nearby transportation facilities within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0060, identifies the transportation improvements needed to ensure that allowed land uses are consistent with the performance standards of affected facilities, and requires the destination resort applicant to provide those improvements prior to development, the county has not deferred a determination of compliance with OAR 660-012-0060, but instead complied with the rule. That the county prudently imposed conditions requiring a second analysis and requiring additional improvements if needed at the time of development does not constitute an impermissible deferral of compliance with OAR 660-012-0060. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 66 Or LUBA 192 (2012).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. In concluding that a decision adding a site to the county's map of lands eligible for destination resort development complies with the Transportation Planning Rule, the county may "adopt" measures demonstrating that allowed land uses are consistent with the performance standard of affected transportation facilities within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0060(2)(a) by adopting conditions requiring that the destination resort applicant pay for and provide transportation improvements prior to resort development, and need not require that the improvements be in place on the date the county adds the site to its map of eligible lands. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 66 Or LUBA 192 (2012).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The requirement at ORS 197.460(4) that an applicant for destination resort siting provide a traffic study that includes measures to mitigate a proportionate share of adverse impacts on transportation facilities is different from, and does not replace, the obligation to evaluate transportation impacts under OAR 660-012-0060 in amending the comprehensive plan map of lands eligible for destination resort siting. While a county might err if it relied entirely on ORS 197.460(4) to ensure compliance with OAR 660-012-0060, there is no error in citing ORS 197.460(4) as an additional basis to conclude that OAR 660-012-0060 is satisfied. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 66 Or LUBA 192 (2012).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Subsection (2) of ORS 197.455 requires that counties adopt a comprehensive plan map to identify lands within the county that are eligible for destination resort siting, and requires that the map "shall be the sole basis for determining whether tracts of land are eligible for destination resort siting." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.455(1), the following types of land may not be included on a county's comprehensive plan map showing lands eligible for destination resort siting: (1) lands within 24 miles of large city urban growth boundaries, (2) a site with 50 or more contiguous acres of unique or prime farmland, (3) a site within 3 miles of a high value crop area, (4) land that is predominantly Cubic Foot Site Class I or 2 forestlands, (5) land in the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area, and (6) areas that have been identified as especially sensitive big game habitat. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Lands that are shown on a county Destination Resort Eligible Lands Map are simply eligible for approval of a destination resort, and being included on the map carries with it no guarantee that a destination resort can be approved on the site. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. After a proposed destination resort site is included on a county's comprehensive plan map showing eligible sites, to complete the process and receive county approval for a destination resort, a proposed destination resort must meet the destination resort approval standards set out at ORS 197.445 and other statutory standards. Under the ORS 197.445 approval standards, a destination resort must: (1) be located on a site of 160 acres or more, (2) leave 50 percent of the site dedicated to open space, (3) commit to spend at least seven million dollars on recreation facilities and visitor accommodations, (4) meet certain requirements for visitor-oriented accommodations, and (5) limit commercial uses. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Although the legislature does not use the term "tract" in ORS 197.455(1), which sets out areas and sites that must be excluded from a county map showing lands that are eligible for destination resort siting, the mapping process dictated by ORS 197.455(1) effectively requires that a county examine "tracts," as ORS 197.435(7) defines that term (i.e., lots, parcels, and contiguous lots and parcels in common ownership), and exclude any tract if more than 30 percent of the tract lies within one or more of the "areas" listed at ORS 197.455(1)(a) through (e). Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.445 does not require that a proposed destination resort must be sited on a single tract. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Although counties may regulate destination resorts more strictly than they are regulated by ORS 197.445 and 197.455 and related statutes, counties may not adopt destination resort regulations that would allow a county to approve destination resort proposals that do not comply with the statutes governing mapping of eligible lands for and approval of destination resorts. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.455 imposes no minimum tract size standard for excluding land from a county's comprehensive plan map showing lands eligible for destination resort siting. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Although ORS 197.445(4)(b)(B) requires that at least 50 units of overnight lodging be built before lots or residential units in a destination resort can be sold, and therefore might preclude approval of a destination resort that includes a previously platted and developed subdivision, there is no statutory requirement that previously platted subdivisions be excluded from a county's comprehensive plan map showing lands eligible for destination resort siting. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Although amendments to county standards for mapping sites that are eligible for destination resort siting are comprehensive plan amendments, and therefore potentially could result in significant affects on transportation facilities that could implicate OAR 660-012-0060, altering the standards for adding sites to the map in the future has no impact on transportation facilities. It is the future map amendments themselves that might significantly affect a transportation facility and implicate OAR 660-012-0060, and a county must consider OAR 660-012-0060 at the time those comprehensive plan amendments are adopted in the future. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 123 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. If a county has within its boundaries some of the lands described in ORS 197.455(1)(a) through (e), the county must ensure that no tracts that include such ineligible lands are included on the map of eligible lands, since ORS 197.455(2) makes the map the "sole basis for determining whether tracts of land are eligible for destination resort siting." Root v. Klamath County, 63 Or LUBA 230 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A map adopted by the county does not provide an adequate factual base under Goal 2 for a decision to amend the county's destination resort map where it is not possible to tell by looking at the map where the boundaries of the included properties are located, and the list of properties included in the record identifies properties as entire sections of land within townships and ranges, or numbered parcels within sections, ranges, and townships but the map does not include any section numbers or locations. Root v. Klamath County, 63 Or LUBA 230 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Nothing in ORS 197.455(2) obligates the county to re-evaluate or re-qualify lands that have previously been included on the map of eligible lands by virtue of a final, unappealed land use decision, and to remove any of those previously included lands from the map of eligible lands if they are required to be excluded under ORS 197.455(1)(a) to (e). Root v. Klamath County, 63 Or LUBA 230 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A local government errs in concluding that it is not required to apply Statewide Planning Goal 5 to a post acknowledgement plan amendment (PAPA) that adds lands to the county's map of lands eligible for a destination resort by relying on an ESEE analysis that was completed and adopted 16 years prior to the proposed PAPA and that does not include any analysis of the new lands proposed for inclusion on the destination resort map. Root v. Klamath County, 63 Or LUBA 230 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where it is not clear under a county's code that the planning commission proceeding on a final master plan application for a destination resort will necessarily be conducted as an ORS 197.763 quasi-judicial hearing with notice, the final master plan proceedings appear to be ministerial under the code, and nothing in the tentative master plan approval requires hearing and notice, the county errs in deferring discretionary tentative master plan approval standards to the proceedings on the application for final master plan approval without ensuring that those proceedings will infused with the same participatory rights as the tentative master plan approval. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A destination resort approval standard requiring that "adverse effects on surrounding lands are to be avoided first and minimized if avoidance is not possible" clearly gives priority to avoiding adverse affects. Remand is necessary where the applicant demonstrated and the county considered only whether adverse effects of the destination resort on an adjoining wildlife refuge can be minimized, and the county failed to consider whether adverse effects can be avoided. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Well reports generated when wells were dug decades ago are substantial evidence that a reasonable decision maker could rely upon to conclude that the wells can supply sufficient water for a proposed destination resort, where there is no countervailing evidence in the record, and the county addresses the possibility that the well reports are no longer accurate by imposing a condition requiring prior to final master plan approval that the applicant conduct pump tests and, if necessary, dig new wells, to ensure sufficient water. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where in approving a destination resort in coastal shorelands that is dependent on groundwater the county addresses a number of comprehensive plan policies implementing Goal 17, but does not address a potentially applicable plan policy in the plan Goal 17 element that requires the county take measures to protect groundwater, remand is necessary for the county to either address the policy or explain why it is not applicable. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.640 as amended in 2010 requires that the applicant for a destination resort submit an economic impacts analysis of the proposed development, where the resort is sited within 10 miles of an urban growth boundary. Although the statute does not tell counties what to do with that economic impacts analysis, the analysis must consider the potential negative economic impacts of the resort, if any, and cannot simply describe the anticipated positive impacts of the resort. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.455(2) requires that counties adopt a comprehensive plan map that shows lands that are eligible for destination resort siting, and excludes lands identified in ORS 197.455(1)(a) through (e), and ORS 197.455(2) provides that that comprehensive plan map is to be "the sole basis for determining whether tracts of land are eligible for destination resort siting pursuant to ORS 197.435 to 197.467." A county is not required to determine at the time decisions are made regarding individual applications for destination resort approval whether the proposal includes any of the prohibited lands identified in ORS 197.455(1)(a) through (e), if the adopted comprehensive plan map shows that the proposed lands are eligible for destination resort siting. Eder v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 204 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where petitioner assigns error under OAR 660-012-0060, arguing that the county inadequately mitigated for the traffic impacts of a proposed destination resort, but petitioner neither assigns error to the county's finding that the destination resort will not "significantly affect" the transportation facilities within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0060 nor challenges the legal reasoning that the county adopted in support of that finding, LUBA will deny the assignment of error. Eder v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 204 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a petitioner assigns error to a county's failure to require an applicant for destination resort approval to pay the required $20,000 application fee, but the record shows that (1) the applicant paid the required $20,000 application fee for a previous application for destination resort approval that was withdrawn and replaced by the destination resort application on appeal and (2) the county applied the prior application fee to the second application for destination resort approval, petitioner's assignment of error will be denied. Eder v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 204 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A self-contained development providing visitor-oriented accommodations and developed recreational facilities, including a golf course, that a county previously approved as a "destination resort" under Goal 8 is a "destination resort" as that term is used in Goal 8 and under ORS 197.435 through 197.467. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The standards for approving a destination resort under Goal 8 and ORS 197.435 through 197.467 function as a "safe harbor" that allows local governments to approve resorts that meet minimum standards, without the necessity of adopting exceptions to Goals 11 and 14. However, the statutory process is not the only means of approving a destination resort, and counties continue to have the option of approving a destination resort subject to exceptions to Goals 3, 4, 11 and 14. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A county may rely on the reasons that justified a Goal 4 exception earlier approved by the county and Land Conservation and Development Commission (LCDC) for a proposed destination resort to justify reasons exceptions to Goals 11 and 14, where the record supports the county's finding that the Goal 4 reasons are still valid and the Goals 11 and 14 exceptions merely implement and complete the earlier county and LCDC approval. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Because Goal 11 and Goal 14 serve congruent policy objectives, the reasons sufficient to justify a Goal 14 exception for a destination resort may also be sufficient to justify an exception to Goal 11 to authorize a community sewer system to serve the destination resort. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the county and the Land Conservation and Development Commission previously approved a Goal 4 exception for a destination resort under conditions requiring specified on-site accommodations and facilities, and the county imposed an overlay zone to ensure that the resort includes those on-site accommodations and facilities, in later adopting a reasons exception to Goal 14 to complete the proposed resort the county can consider those required accommodations and facilities to be essential characteristics of the proposed use, for purposes of the alternative sites analysis required under OAR 660-014-0040(3)(a). In that circumstance, the county does not err in concluding that alternative sites within urban growth boundaries cannot reasonably accommodate the proposed use. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Remand is necessary where the local government adopts exceptions to Statewide Planning Goals 11 and 14 to approve a destination resort, but fails to address comprehensive plan transportation policies that appear to implement Statewide Planning Goal 12 (Transportation), for which the local government did not adopt an exception, and the decision fails to explain why those policies are either satisfied or not applicable. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A county errs in failing to address whether a mitigation plan for a destination resort is consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies governing wildlife protection, and instead finding that issues raised regarding compliance with those policies will be addressed by requiring the applicant to obtain approval of the plan from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. Friends of Marion County v. Marion County, 59 Or LUBA 323 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.455(2), counties are to adopt a map showing areas that are eligible for destination resorts. ORS 197.455(2) prohibits amending that map more frequently than once each 30 months. An ordinance that was adopted to repeal and replace a destination resort map 22 months after the map was amended to make additional property eligible for destination resorts violates ORS 197.455(2). Remington Ranch, LLC v. Crook County, 59 Or LUBA 361 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. In applying a destination resort approval standard that requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," a county may allow an applicant to utilize data developed in approval of a nearby destination resort that utilized seven indicator species to estimate the nature and extent of the damage that must be fully mitigated. A reasonable person would rely on such data unless opposing data is submitted to show the analysis that relies on indicator species missed or inadequately addressed some aspect of the wildlife resource. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a destination resort approval standard requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," an assignment of error that a county erred by applying that standard to allow one species to be replaced by another provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the applicant's approach to demonstrating compliance with the "no net loss of wildlife" standard does not in fact propose to replace existing species with other species and proposes to fully mitigate all expected damage to wildlife habitat. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. In applying a destination resort approval standard that requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife," a county does not err by focusing on wildlife habitat rather than the wildlife itself. In developing a destination resort, wildlife itself is generally not purposefully harmed; the harm is caused through destruction or damage to the wildlife habitat. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A mitigation plan that is submitted to comply with a destination resort approval standard that requires that destination resorts employ mitigation measures to ensure "no net loss of wildlife" is inadequate where that mitigation plan proposes off-site mitigation and the location of the 4,501 acres that provide the needed mitigation, the nature of the habitat on those 4,501 acres, and the particular mix of mitigation measures that will be employed on those 4,501 acres are all unknown. Those details must be supplied at a stage where opponents still have a meaningful opportunity to challenge the adequacy of the proposed mitigation plan. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a county hearings officer's findings show she was persuaded that additional mitigation measures were necessary to address thermal impacts of destination resort groundwater use on a nearby cool water creek, the hearings officer's decision to accept the applicant's proposal to provide additional mitigation by reducing surface withdrawal from that cool water creek is inadequate where there was opposition testimony that the proposed mitigation would not mitigate the thermal impact. While there may be a simple answer to the opposition testimony, where that answer is missing in the record and the hearings officer's decision does not address that opposition testimony, the decision must be remanded. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where the record includes conflicting believable evidence about whether an applicant's assumption that 90 percent of the groundwater withdrawn for use by a destination resort will be returned to the subsurface hydrologic system and the county hearings officer findings recognize the conflicting evidence but choose to rely on the applicant's expert's position, which had been accepted by the Oregon Water Resources Department, the hearings officer's findings on that question are supported by substantial evidence. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. In applying a destination resort conceptual master plan condition of approval that requires that the final master plan "specify all recreational facilities," a county does not err by approving a final master plan that lists proposed recreational facilities but makes it clear that not all of the proposed recreational facilities necessarily will be built. While the condition could be interpreted to require more certainty and specificity, it need not be interpreted to require more certainty and specificity than was provided by the list of proposed recreation facilities. Gould v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 435 (2009).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The requirement that destination resorts be limited to lands that are located "in a setting with high natural amenities" appears in the ORS 197.445 criteria that apply to individual destination resort applications, not the ORS 197.455 standards that identify lands that are potentially eligible for destination resort siting. A county is not required to find that all lands that it maps as potentially eligible for destination resort siting provide "a setting with high natural amenities." Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.445(4), destination resorts must provide at least 150 units of "overnight lodging." ORS 197.435(5)(b) defines "overnight lodging" as "permanent, separately rentable accommodations that are not available for residential use" and then provides a nonexclusive list of examples that qualify as overnight lodging and a list of examples that do not qualify as overnight lodging. A land use regulation that expands on the list of examples that qualify as overnight lodging does not necessarily run afoul of the ORS 197.435(5)(b) definition. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.445(4), destination resorts must provide at least 150 units of "overnight lodging." Where a zoning ordinance that was adopted to implement ORS 197.445(4) is ambiguous, such that the zoning ordinance could be interpreted to be inconsistent with ORS 197.445(4) or consistent with ORS 197.445(4), the county would be required to interpret the zoning ordinance to be consistent with ORS 197.445(4). Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.445(5) limits commercial uses to "types and levels of use necessary to meet the needs of visitors" to destination resorts. A zoning ordinance that allows "commercial and entertainment" uses in destination resorts is likely consistent with ORS 197.445(5) since entertainment uses are likely to be commercial uses. But if an entertainment use were proposed that was not a commercial use, the county would be obligated to interpret the term entertainment consistently with ORS 197.445(5) and deny the proposed entertainment use. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a zoning ordinance amendment that potentially allowed more individual lots or units in a destination resort than permitted under applicable statutes at the time the zoning ordinance amendment was adopted, the decision need not be remanded where the statute was subsequently amended to allow the number of individual lots or units authorized by the zoning ordinance amendment. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.445(1) requires a minimum site size of 160 acres for destination resorts. A zoning ordinance that allows internal rights-of-way to be included in determining whether a proposed destination resort complies with the ORS 197.445(1) 160-acre minimum site size does not violate the statute, because ORS 197.445(1) does not expressly require that rights-of-way be excluded when computing site size and even if the statute did require that rights-of-way be excluded, the statutory requirement would have to be satisfied. Johnson v. Jefferson County, 56 Or LUBA 72 (2008).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A hearings officer's failure to address arguments that the applicant should improve transportation facilities affected by a proposed destination resort provides no basis for reversal or remand, where a prior development agreement and two earlier development approvals conclusively established the type and extent of transportation improvements the applicant is obligated to make in developing the resort, and the petitioners cite no authority for the hearings officer to require different improvements in approving a subdivision within that resort. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A subdivision approval standard requiring preservation of natural features that is written to apply to circumstances where there have been no previous efforts to identify natural features plays a more limited role where the subdivision application is preceded by two final, binding land use decisions that have already largely determined which natural features will be preserved and which will be lost to development. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. By statute, the ratio of residential units to overnight lodging units may not exceed 2:1. A county is not free to ignore inconsistencies or errors in a destination resort conceptual master plan regarding the statutorily required 2:1 ratio, and assume that the final master plan will correct those errors. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Because ORS 197.445(4)(b)(B) requires that the first 50 units of the required 150 units of overnight lodging in a destination resort be constructed before sales may close on individually owned lots or residential units, a county code standard that was adopted to implement the statute that allows those first 50 units to be financially assured rather than constructed is inconsistent with the statute and the statute controls. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A county is not required to separately approve two villages that make up a single destination resort, even though the properties where the two villages would be constructed only touch corners in two places, the properties are topographically separated and the properties are connected by roadways that must travel onto adjoining properties. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The legal requirement that a destination resort have "direct access" onto an arterial or collector road is satisfied by one such access and a destination resort may have additional accesses that are not "direct." Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Roadways that cross exclusive farm use zoned land to connect two villages in a destination resort are properly viewed as "[a]ccessory transportation improvements for a use that is allowed" in the exclusive farm use zone, within the meaning of OAR 660-012-0065(3)(a). Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where there is no dispute that a road that would be needed to provide access to a destination resort could be constructed across BLM land, the applicant need only demonstrate that securing the needed right-of-way from BLM is not precluded as a matter of law. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. An erroneous assumption in a traffic study that was submitted in support of an application for approval of a destination resort provides no basis for reversal or remand where the error had no effect on the validity of the traffic study. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a petitioner argues that the traffic study that was submitted in support of an application for approval of a destination resort should have examined a larger area, but cites no legal standard that would require consideration of a larger area, petitioner's argument provides no basis for remand. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Approval of a destination resort requires a finding that negative impacts on fish and wildlife resources will be "completely mitigated." A finding that it is feasible to satisfy that requirement is sufficient where such impacts are identified, methods for mitigating such impacts on-site and off-site are identified, refinements to those methods are developed with the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife and the federal Bureau of Land Management, and both agencies indicate that those refined methods will succeed. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. An applicant for destination resort approval must demonstrate that there will be adequate water available to serve the proposed destination resort. An applicant's demonstration that there is no legal barrier to securing the needed permits to withdraw groundwater to serve the destination resort is sufficient. The applicant need not secure the mitigation credits that ultimately will be needed prior to conceptual master plan approval. Gould v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 205 (2007).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Even if intersection improvements that are required in approving a destination resort will maintain acceptable levels of service on nearby roads and key intersections, it does not necessarily follow that there will not be conflicts between the increased levels of traffic the proposed destination resort will generate on these roads and agricultural traffic (including livestock and large slow-moving agricultural vehicles) seeking to negotiate these same roads. However, where the relevant approval standard only requires "reasonable compatibility," and the testimony on both sides of the seriousness of the conflicts from such traffic is speculative, LUBA cannot say the county was unreasonable in finding the destination resort will be "reasonably compatible" with nearby farm use and farm traffic. Burke v. Crook County, 48 Or LUBA 23 (2004).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Oregon Laws 1993, chapter 590, section 6, allows counties to avoid implementing statutory changes to the destination resort requirements until no later than their next periodic review. Even if a county has not concluded its next periodic review, it cannot substantially amend its pre-1993 destination resort regulations without implementing those changes. Stevens v. Jackson County, 47 Or LUBA 381 (2004).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Without some explanation or evidence regarding how 100 proposed time share units, with separate "lock-out" suites, will be marketed and made available for overnight lodging, the application fails to assure that the proposed destination resort will offer at least 150 separate rentable units for overnight lodging, as required by ORS 197.445(4). Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A finding that a proposed destination resort is located in a setting with "high natural amenities" as required by ORS 197.445 is inadequate and not supported by substantial evidence, where neither the county's decision nor the record identifies or describes any high natural amenities near the proposed resort. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Because ORS 197.445 provides that a destination resort may provide for individually owned lots or units, and does not prohibit location of a major destination resort near a highway, the fact that a proposed resort offers 200 single-family lots and is located near a highway does not convert the proposal into something other than a destination resort, if it otherwise complies with all applicable statutory and local requirements. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. ORS 197.467 requires imposition of a conservation easement to protect Goal 5-designated resources on the site of a proposed destination resort, and that requirement is not obviated by the fact that the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife has indicated that it will not require a conservation easement. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A county errs in interpreting a one dwelling per 40 acres density standard intended to protect Goal 5 wildlife habitat to be satisfied if the average dwelling density over a 1.2-million-acre area of the county does not exceed the standard, where the county's interpretation gives the standard no regulatory effect until over 28,000 dwellings are built in the area, and is inconsistent with the purpose of the standard to protect wildlife habitat. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. A local standard imposing a one-dwelling-per-40-acres density limitation on Goal 5-protected wildlife habitat must be construed in a way that is consistent with its purpose and context to allow no more than one dwelling per 40 acres on the subject property. As applied to a destination resort, such a standard may effectively prohibit a resort that proposes 200 single-family residential lots in a 500-acre area. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Facilities such as an "internet café," a "music festival stage," a lounge and dance area, and facilities intended to benefit permanent residents do not qualify as "developed recreational facilities" for purposes of statutes requiring a minimum expense on recreational facilities in order to qualify as a destination resort. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 44 Or LUBA 745 (2003).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Whether certain persons are "applicants" for destination resort preliminary development plan approval, as defined in the local code, requires an interpretation by the local governing body in the first instance. Skrepetos v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 193 (1995).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Findings which do not identify the ways a destination resort preliminary development plan is different from the previously approved conceptual site plan, the magnitude of such differences or why the local government believes the differences are minor, are not adequate to establish compliance with a code standard requiring the preliminary development plan to conform to the conceptual site plan and alterations, if any, to be minor in nature. Skrepetos v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 193 (1995).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under the requirement of ORS 197.455(2) and Goal 8(1)(b) that a destination resort not be located on a "site" with 50 or more contiguous acres of prime farmland, the "site" does not include adjacent property purchased by the applicants as a source of water rights, that will neither be designated for nor used as part of the proposed destination resort. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Where a county adopts a plan map designating land within three miles of the county's borders as available for destination resort siting, without determining whether such land is within three miles of high-value crop areas located in a neighboring county, the county has failed to comply with the requirement of ORS 197.455 and Goal 8 that land within three miles of high-value crop areas not be available for destination resort use. Alliance for Resp. Land Use v. Deschutes County, 23 Or LUBA 476 (1992).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Use of a process, established by county plan and ordinance provisions, which allows a county to refine its mapping of areas where destination resorts are permitted, with regard to prime farmland, through determination of compliance with the statutory and goal siting criteria on a case-by-case basis, is not precluded by the destination resort statute. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Under ORS 197.445(2), Goal 8(1)(b) and plan criteria that a destination resort not be approved "on a site with 50 or more contiguous acres of * * * prime farmland identified and mapped by the United States Soil Conservation Service [SCS]," a county must rely on the SCS's identification of prime farmlands. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. In addressing the statutory, goal and plan "prime farmland" criterion, a county is not required to rely on published SCS county soil maps and inventories, but rather may rely on other up to date, site-specific SCS identification and mapping of prime farmlands. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. The requirement to comply with ordinance criteria applicable to the resolution/conceptual site plan stage of the destination resort review process cannot be avoided by deferring those determinations to the preliminary development plan stage of the review process, through restatement of the first stage approval criteria as conditions of approval for the second stage. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.3.12 Permits – Particular Uses – Destination Resorts. Compliance with a criterion that "adequate sewer [and] water * * * services will be provided" to serve a proposed destination resort requires identification of an available method for providing adequate sewage disposal and domestic water service to the proposed development that is reasonably certain to comply with applicable standards and produce the desired result. Foland v. Jackson County, 18 Or LUBA 731 (1990).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Hallways that are intended for human transit rather than human occupancy need not be counted toward the limit prescribed by OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) on structures with a "design capacity" no greater than 100 people. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 73 Or LUBA 52 (2016).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. A local government's determination of the design capacity of a locker room that is based on the number of lockers and projected number of golfers using the locker room lockers at one time is supported by substantial evidence in the record where the applicant's architect provides testimony to support the determination. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 73 Or LUBA 52 (2016).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) excludes structures that are not "enclosed structures" from the required maximum "design capacity" calculation and a county's exclusion of outdoor decks and patios that are not enclosed is consistent with the express language of the rule. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 73 Or LUBA 52 (2016).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. OAR 660-033-0130(20)(a)'s description of a regular 18-hole golf course permitted as a conditional use on EFU-zoned land, as "generally characterized by a site of about 120 to 150 acres of land," does not impose a strict upper limit of 150 acres. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) prohibits certain enclosed structures, including a clubhouse associated with a golf course, with a "design capacity" greater than 100 people, if located within three miles of an urban growth boundary. "Design capacity" denotes the capacity for human occupation that a structure is designed for, not the number of people anticipated to use the structure at any one time. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. "Design capacity" as used in OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a), which limits the design capacity of certain structures on EFU-zoned land within three miles of an urban growth boundary, is not the same concept as "maximum occupancy" as that term is used for purposes of fire and safety codes in issuing a building permit for structures. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Structures or portions of a structure that are not intended for human occupancy need not be counted toward the limit prescribed by OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) on structures with a "design capacity" no greater than 100 people. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Establishing that the "design capacity" of a structure does not exceed the 100-person limit prescribed in OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) will likely require the testimony of an architect or designer, together with any necessary calculations or explanations regarding the designed capacity of the structure. Remand is necessary where the applicant proposes a 10,000-square-foot golf clubhouse structure with restaurant, lounge, pro shop, etc., but provides no design or other evidence regarding the designed capacity of the clubhouse, other than testimony that the applicant expects no more than 50 golfers to use the clubhouse at any one time. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Notwithstanding that the record includes no evidence quantifying how much water would be transferred between a ranch and a proposed golf course, a county's finding that the water transfer will not significantly change or increase the cost of farming practices on the ranch is supported by substantial evidence, where the ranch manager testifies that in exchange for transferring water, the applicant will improve the ranch's irrigation system, and the ranch anticipates no change in the amount of irrigation water available or irrigation practices. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 71 Or LUBA 297 (2015).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Petitioners' argument that a proposed golf course expansion violates Goal 14 because it constitutes an expansion of an urban use onto rural EFU-zoned land provides no basis for reversal or remand, because Goal 14 does not apply to a permit to expand a use allowed in an EFU zone. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the county approves a golf course expansion without adopting findings addressing a comprehensive plan provision that prohibits approval of urban uses outside urban growth boundaries, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt findings addressing whether the subject golf course is "urban" and whether the proposed expansion of the golf course is consistent with the comprehensive plan provision. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where a code provision requires an applicant for expansion of a golf course on EFU-zoned land to demonstrate that alternative urban sites are not available and an applicant applies to expand an existing golf course, a hearings officer's interpretation of the provision as limiting the requisite alternative site analysis to locations where the existing golf course can expand is reasonable and correct. DLCD v. Jackson County, 36 Or LUBA 88 (1999).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Expansion of a golf course is not permitted under OAR 660-33-130(18) exception unless the existing facilities are within the same zone as the proposed expansion. DLCD v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 302 (1997).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Limitations in OAR 660-33-120 and 660-33-130 are consistent with ORS 215.283 provision allowing golf courses on exclusive farm use land. DLCD v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 302 (1997).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. The county properly approved a conditional use permit for a golf course and recreational vehicle campground where it determined the feasibility of compliance with an applicable approval standard and imposed a condition to ensure that compliance. Just v. Linn County, 32 Or LUBA 325 (1997).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the county interprets "high value farm land" for purposes of its ordinance to mean "predominantly high value farm land," and concludes that because the subject property consists of predominantly non-high value farmland, a golf course is permitted as a conditional use, LUBA will defer to the county's interpretation of its own code. Just v. Linn County, 32 Or LUBA 325 (1997).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Because LUBA's review is limited to the record of an appealed decision, LUBA cannot rely on a determination in another case that a proposed golf course is not a commercial use to support a determination, in the case on appeal, that a proposed golf driving range is not a commercial use. Moore v. Clackamas County, 29 Or LUBA 372 (1995).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Findings that an orchard's accepted farming practices have not been significantly affected by trespassing golf balls are supported by substantial evidence where the evidence shows no orchard employees have been hit by golf balls, tree buffers are effective in deflecting golf balls and petitioner's testimony was discredited by video tape of petitioner collecting golf balls on the golf course property. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 28 Or LUBA 362 (1994).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where there is conflicting evidence concerning the effectiveness of a condition requiring golf course closures during spraying operations to avoid significant effects on or cost increases in such spraying, a finding that the condition has been effective is supported by substantial evidence. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 28 Or LUBA 362 (1994).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the aerial spray applicator formerly used by an orchard will not spray orchards surrounded by a golf course and the only sprayer who will charges 2000 dollars more to do so, the county's findings must explain why this cost increase, viewed cumulatively with any other cost increases attributable to the golf course, is not significant. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 28 Or LUBA 362 (1994).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where an EFU zone allows "golf courses" as a conditional use, it must incorporate the definition of "golf course" in OAR 660-33-130(20) or specify that the rule definition applies. DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where there is no definition of the term "golf course" in the local code, the plain and ordinary meaning of that term as it is defined in the dictionary applies, and a driving range is not the equivalent of a golf course. DLCD v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 338 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where there is evidence in the local government record that the number of golf balls claimed to have landed in adjoining orchards is exaggerated, a decision approving a golf course and imposing a condition requiring the planting of trees to contain golf balls on-site and installation of a fence and screen to prevent golfers and golf balls from entering adjoining orchard property, is supported by substantial evidence. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the aerial application of chemicals on an orchard adjoining a proposed golf course will be rendered more difficult, although possible, in that at least one aerial sprayer indicates he would be willing to spray the affected orchard, and the decision approving the golf course requires the operator to close the golf course to facilitate such spraying, there is substantial evidence in the record that the golf course will not force a significant change in or significantly increase the cost of aerial spraying of the adjoining orchard. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. A decision that a golf course will not significantly change or increase the cost of ground spraying of an adjoining orchard is supported by substantial evidence, where there is conflicting evidence concerning the magnitude of ground spraying drift expected to travel onto adjoining properties, and the decision imposes a condition requiring that the golf course operator provide monitors to prevent golfers from coming into contact with ground spray drift. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 24 Or LUBA 271 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the purposes of a county's commercial zones are to provide for retail-oriented needs in areas characterized by good transportation services, and such needs and services are not identified with a particular proposed golf course, the county's interpretation of its own ordinance that the golf course is not a commercial use is not inconsistent with express language of the local ordinance or the ordinance's apparent purpose or policy and will be affirmed. West v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 558 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. In determining whether a proposed golf course on EFU-zoned land satisfies local standards requiring that the golf course be compatible with and not seriously interfere with farm uses, the local government must identify the farm uses in the area and explain how the proposal will be compatible, and not seriously interfere, with the identified farm uses. Kaye v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 452 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where there is expert evidence in the record that traffic systems in the area are inadequate to serve a proposed golf course, and only conclusory evidence to the contrary, a local government's finding of compliance with a code standard requiring adequate rural facilities to serve the proposed use is not supported by substantial evidence in the record. Kaye v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 452 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. A local government must determine compliance with a code standard requiring that a proposed golf course will have no significant adverse impact on wildlife. The local government may not leave a determination of compliance with a code approval standard to a state agency. Kaye v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 452 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where golf courses are listed as conditionally permitted uses in an EFU zoning district, and an applicable code standard requires that proposed golf courses comply with applicable comprehensive plan policies, a county must balance applicable plan policies, and may not focus on particular plan policies to the exclusion of others. Wells v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 402 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where a code standard requires a determination that there is a demonstrated need for a proposed golf course "which outweighs the need for, or benefits of, the existing or potential farm or forest use," the county correctly applied that standard by determining even though there is a need for more golf courses in the county, the value of the property for farmland outweighs that need. Barber v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 71 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Where the evidence establishes a reasonable farmer would not significantly change the manner in which the farm is managed due to a proposed golf course, and the opponents' evidence shows only that there is a remote possibility that there could be some impacts from such proposed golf course, the county's determinations that the proposed golf course will not seriously interfere with, force a significant change in, or significantly increase the cost of accepting farming practices in the area, are supported by substantial evidence. Washington Co. Farm Bureau v. Washington County, 22 Or LUBA 540 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Under ORS 215.296(1), the burden is on the applicant to show a proposed golf center will force no significant change in accepted farming practices or their cost, and on the county to so find. Berg v. Linn County, 22 Or LUBA 507 (1992).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Although the EFU zoning statutes do not establish specific approval standards for golf courses in EFU zones, ORS 215.296(1) establishes standards applicable to nonfarm uses in EFU zones generally, and requires that approval of such uses not force a significant change in, or significantly increase the cost of, accepted farm or forest practices on surrounding lands. Von Lubken v. Hood River County, 22 Or LUBA 307 (1991).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. The correct way to resolve a conflict between code provisions that (1) specifically allow approval of golf courses in an EFU zone as a conditional use, but (2) establish approval standards for golf courses which make it impossible to ever approve a golf course in the exclusive farm use zone, is to conclude that the approval standards making approval an impossibility were not intended to govern approval of golf courses. Waker Assoc., Inc. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 233 (1991).

31.3.13 Permits – Particular Uses – Golf Courses. Findings of compliance with a standard that a proposed golf course will not "force a significant change in," or "significantly increase the cost of," accepted farm or forest practices on surrounding lands do not necessarily satisfy a standard that the proposed golf course will not "interfere seriously" with accepted farming practices. Washington Co. Farm Bureau v. Washington Co., 21 Or LUBA 51 (1991).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Although it is not clear a proposed "parsonage," which is a portion of a church to include a bedroom, kitchen and bathroom for use by the church's pastor, must be evaluated and approved or denied under the criteria that apply to a nonfarm dwelling under the county's land use ordinance implementing ORS 215.284, those land use standards require the exercise of discretion in approving the development of land. Further, it is possible, even probable, that any application for a proposed residential use associated with a church must be evaluated under the standards at ORS 215.441, and accordingly the county must process such an application according to its procedures that apply to permits. Wetherell v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 33 (2018).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. ORS 215.441, which provides that if county zoning allows a church or other nonresidential place of worship, the county shall also allow certain accessory uses, is not an independent authorization of churches in any county zone, and does not extend any protections to churches proposed for zones where churches are not allowed. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. LUBA will decline to render an advisory interpretation of ORS 215.441, which extends certain protections to a "church or other nonresidential place of worship" in county zones allowing such uses, where LUBA concludes that the applicable Wildlife Area (WA) overlay zone does not allow churches at all, and thus there is no need to resolve the parties' dispute regarding whether locating a proposed church within an existing dwelling results in a "nonresidential place of worship." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A hearings officer Misconstrues the text and context of the county Wildlife Area overlay zone, which allows uses that are "permitted outright" and "permitted conditionally" in the underlying zone, by concluding that a church is a use "permitted outright" based solely on the fact that ORS 215.283(1) allows churches on lands zoned for exclusive farm use (EFU), when the question is whether churches are "permitted outright" in the county EFU zone, which does not list churches under the category of uses "permitted outright." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Notwithstanding that uses listed in ORS 215.283(1), including churches, are generally allowed on lands zoned for exclusive farm use free of locally imposed restrictions, other state statutes and administrative rules can impose restrictions. Because ORS 215.441 and OAR 660-033-0130 impose restrictions on churches in EFU zones that require or authorize a county to undertake discretionary reviews of proposed churches, it is not accurate to characterize churches as uses "permitted outright" in a county EFU zone. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. LUBA will reject an interpretation of a county Wildlife Area overlay zone, which implements Statewide Planning Goal 5 to protect winter range in part by prohibiting new churches in winter range, to the effect that the WA overlay zone prohibits churches in winter range areas only where the underlying base zone categorizes churches as a conditional use, but that interpretation would allow churches in winter range areas if the underlying base zone categorizes churches as something other than a conditional use, given that conflicts between churches and winter range are the same whether churches are categorized as permitted or conditional uses. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A hearings officer Misconstrues the text and context of a county's Wildlife Area (WA) overlay zone, in concluding that prohibitions on certain new uses, including churches, in winter range areas are limited exclusively to areas where the underlying base zone categorizes such uses as conditional uses, where other provisions of the WA overlay zone make it clear that the prohibition on new uses in winter range is not limited to uses categorized as conditional uses in the underlying base zone. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. LUBA will reject arguments that applying a county prohibition on churches in deer winter range would cause the county to violate the "equal terms" provision of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), because the county has allegedly allowed wedding event venues and similar uses on nearby properties, where the applicant does not argue or demonstrate that nearby properties are also subject to winter range restrictions or otherwise similarly zoned and situated as the subject property. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 284 (2017).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. ORS 215.441(1) requires a two-step analysis. The first step requires that a county determine whether its zoning ordinance allows a "church, synagogue, temple, mosque, chapel, meeting house or other nonresidential place of worship" on property. The words "or other nonresidential place of worship" were the legislature's attempt to recognize that the words "church, synagogue, temple, mosque, chapel, meeting house" might not adequately describe all religions' places of worship. Catholic Diocese of Baker v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 157 (2009).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. ORS 215.441(1) requires a two-step analysis. The second step requires that counties allow "activities customarily associated with the practices of the religious activity." The words "the practices of the religious activity" in ORS 215.441(1) do not encompass religious or other activities that a particular religion may engage in, if those activities are not customary at the "church, synagogue, temple, mosque, chapel, meeting house or other nonresidential place of worship" that is identified in step one. Catholic Diocese of Baker v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 157 (2009).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A church office that would house administrative functions for a 17-county diocese, as well as some religious functions, is not a "church, synagogue, temple, mosque, chapel, meeting house or other nonresidential place of worship," within the meaning of ORS 215.441(1). Catholic Diocese of Baker v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 157 (2009).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where the record does not establish that it is customary for a Catholic Church to locate its diocesan offices next to a rural retreat center and chapel, ORS 215.441(1) does not require that a county approve an application for approval of such offices in an EFU zone. Catholic Diocese of Baker v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 157 (2009).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A county's refusal to approve a diocesan office building next to a rural retreat center and chapel on EFU-zoned land does not result in a "substantial burden" on "religious exercise," within the meaning of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act. Catholic Diocese of Baker v. Crook County, 60 Or LUBA 157 (2009).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where LUBA affirms a county's decision that a proposed church will require a reasons exception and, in dicta, rejects the applicant's claim under the equal terms provision of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), that dicta does not preclude the applicant from challenging the county's subsequent denial of the applicant's request for a reasons exception as being inconsistent with the RLUIPA equal terms provision. Young v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 64 (2008).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. For purposes of the equal terms provision of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, an "assembly" is a place where groups or individuals dedicated to similar social, educational or recreational purposes meet to pursue those interests, and includes golf courses, and private or public parks. Young v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 64 (2008).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The legal question under the equal terms provision of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) is whether the applicable zoning scheme allows religious assemblies on less equal terms than non-religious assemblies, with respect to the regulatory objective. That question is primarily resolved by examining the text of the applicable zoning scheme, and a claimant under RLUIPA is not generally required to produce traffic studies or other evidence comparing the adverse impacts of religious and non-religious assemblies. Young v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 64 (2008).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. While the state may have a compelling interest in preserving agricultural land and the integrity of urban growth boundaries, that interest does not justify an administrative rule that prohibits churches on agricultural land within three miles of an urban growth boundary while allowing golf courses and similar non-religious assemblies that appear to impact the state interest to the same degree. Therefore, the rule prohibition on churches on agricultural land within three miles of an urban growth boundary is inconsistent with the equal terms provision of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act. Young v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 64 (2008).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A county does not violate the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) by requiring that an applicant for a church on exclusive farm use land within three miles of an urban growth boundary apply for a statewide planning goal exception as required by OAR 660-033-0130. The exceptions process does not in itself impose a substantial burden on a person's religious exercise and does not constitute unfair delay. Young v. Jackson County, 49 Or LUBA 327 (2005).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The term "existing facilities" in OAR 660-033-0130 is limited to a facility that will continue in the same use. The rule does not allow an existing residence to be converted to a church merely because it is an existing facility. Young v. Jackson County, 49 Or LUBA 327 (2005).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. An argument that unspecified land use regulations and siting standards must be complied with prior to approving a church on EFU-zoned lands is insufficient to apprise the decision maker that petitioner believes that the county must consider an exception to the administrative rule prohibition on churches on high-value farmland before considering whether that prohibition is inconsistent with federal law. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Even assuming that an administrative rule prohibition on churches on high-value farmland violates the federal Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), nothing in RLUIPA requires that the local government must go further and relieve the applicant from the obligation to comply with other land use standards that apply to uses allowed in the zone and that do not impose a "substantial burden" on religious exercise. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Because Congress intended the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) to subject land use regulations to at least the same level of scrutiny as would apply under the Free Exercise Clause of the U.S. Constitution, analysis of whether an administrative rule prohibition on churches on high-value farmland violates RLUIPA is also dispositive of the same claim under the Free Exercise Clause. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Prohibiting uses that are inconsistent with agriculture on high-value farmland, such as churches, while allowing agricultural-supportive structures and uses on high-value farmland, such as barns, wineries and farm stands, is rationally related to the policy of preserving high-value farmland for agricultural use, and neither treats religious assemblies on unequal terms with nonreligious assemblies nor discriminates against assemblies on the basis of religion in violation of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Prohibiting establishment of new uses on high-value farmland, such as churches or golf courses, while allowing expansion of existing churches or golf courses on high-value farmland does not treat religious assemblies on unequal terms with nonreligious assemblies or discriminate against assemblies on the basis of religion in violation of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. An administrative rule that prohibits new churches and schools on land within three miles of an urban growth boundary (UGB), while allowing community centers "operated primarily by and for residents of the local rural community" within three miles of a UGB, does not violate the "equal terms" and nondiscrimination clauses of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), where the membership of the proposed church is primarily composed of people who reside within the UGB. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) does not require local governments to provide for churches in all zones within its jurisdiction, or prohibit local governments from excluding churches from some zoning districts. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Whether a zoning prohibition on churches imposes a "substantial burden" on religious exercise under the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) depends on whether the jurisdiction's zoning scheme as a whole fails to provide adequate opportunity to site a church within the jurisdiction. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The actual financial circumstances of a religious assembly, its financial ability to acquire land zoned for a church, and the existence of market-based constraints that apply equally to religious and non-religious land users, have no bearing on whether exclusion of churches in some zones within a jurisdiction imposes a "substantial burden" on religious exercise under the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Evidence that a church is unable to acquire land with desired characteristics at a desirable price within an urban growth boundary is insufficient as a matter of law to demonstrate that an administrative rule prohibiting churches on high-value farmland owned by the church imposes a "substantial burden" on the church's free exercise rights, under the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 375 (2004).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Given the subjectivity of criteria requiring that (1) the subject property be of adequate size to allow for "aesthetic design treatment," (2) the proposed building be "compatible" in scale and mass with adjoining structures, and (3) the site plan provide for "adequate" buffers, the testimony of residential neighbors that a proposed church on a 3.85-acre parcel fails to comply with these criteria is adequate to support the city's finding of noncompliance. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Conclusory testimony by an acoustic engineer that a proposed church will not violate "maximum allowable noise levels" is insufficient to show compliance as a matter of law with code standards that require a demonstration that proposed uses will not exceed specific decibel levels within a specified distance from adjoining residential uses. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Subjective, discretionary conditional use and design review criteria are precisely the type of land use regulations that Congress intended to regulate, as applied to religious practices and institutions, in enacting the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). Although such standards may be "generally applicable" in the sense that they apply broadly to a number of secular and non-secular uses, their application to approve or deny a proposed church requires an "individualized assessment" and thus is subject to RLUIPA. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Application of discretionary design review criteria to proposed religious buildings involves the "proposed use" of land within the meaning of, and is thus subject to, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), where the local government may deny a proposed church if the applicant fails to demonstrate compliance with such design review criteria. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A city's denial of a proposed church based on highly discretionary conditional use and design review standards constitutes imposition of a "substantial burden" on religious exercise within the meaning of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), at least where the city's land use scheme does not include zones where a church is allowed outright without an "individualized assessment," or where the record fails to show that there are more suitable sites in the city where the proposed church would likely be approved. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The regulatory effect of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) is not limited to prohibiting discrimination against religious institutions. Rather, Congress intended RLUIPA to require local governments to treat development proposals for buildings intended for religious exercise more favorably, if necessary, than other development proposals. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where the petitioner demonstrates that denial of a proposed church imposes a "substantial burden" on religious exercise under Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), the burden of persuasion shifts to the local government to show that denial is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest. That showing is not made where the record indicates that the proposed church might satisfy local regulations with imposition of reasonable conditions of approval. Corporation Presiding Bishop v. City of West Linn, 45 Or LUBA 77 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A hearings officer does not err in evaluating the adequacy of the "approach" to an intersection, rather than individual turning movements in the intersection, where the applicable code provisions do not specify a particular method for evaluating intersection adequacy, and that method is consistent with the highway capacity manual and county highways standards cited by the code provisions. Noble v. Clackamas County, 45 Or LUBA 366 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Substantial evidence supports a hearings officer's conclusion that only five percent of traffic generated by a proposed church would turn south at an affected intersection, and that traffic counts performed in February are indicative of summer peak traffic loads, where it is undisputed that few if any church members reside south of the intersection, and the applicant's traffic engineer testified that the affected intersection is not subject to seasonal fluctuations in traffic levels. Noble v. Clackamas County, 45 Or LUBA 366 (2003).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Absent a criterion requiring that the city consider the height of an existing church in approving the height of a proposed addition to that church, the height of the existing structure has no bearing on the city's decision. That the city calculated the height of the proposed addition based in part on the grade elevation of the existing structure does not compel the city to consider the height of the existing structure in approving the proposed addition. Sattler v. City of Beaverton, 41 Or LUBA 106 (2001).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. The OAR 660-033-0130(18) requirement that expansions of existing nonfarm uses on high-value soils must be limited to the "same tract" prohibits expansion of a church septic system onto a different tract, and the fact that DEQ rules permit such cross-boundary septic system expansions in certain circumstances does not modify or obviate the obligation to comply with OAR 660-033-0130(18). Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A church-owned parcel and an adjoining parcel on which the church owns an easement are not within the "same tract" for purposes of OAR 660-033-0130(18), which limits expansion of existing nonfarm uses on high-value soils to the "same tract." To constitute a "tract," the parcels must be in the same ownership, and the easement is legally insufficient to establish an identity of ownership in the two parcels. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. An unsupported assurance by the applicant's attorney that the entire septic system necessary to support a proposed church expansion can be located on a church-owned parcel is not substantial evidence supporting a finding to that effect, where all the other evidence in the record regarding the feasibility of the septic system assumes that part of it will be located on an adjoining parcel. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A finding that a proposed church expansion doubling the capacity of the church will not have greater adverse traffic impacts is inadequate, where the finding relies solely on the church's current plan to consolidate multiple daily services into a single service, and fails to explain why concentrating traffic from multiple services will not result in greater impacts or to address the possibility that future growth in church membership associated with the expansion may require additional services. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Without findings explaining why, for purposes of a conditional use approval, a 13,660-square-foot church 33 feet high is "essentially the same size and height" as a "12,000 +/-"-square-foot church 29 feet high, LUBA cannot affirm that it is. Southeast Neighbors United v. Deschutes County, 32 Or LUBA 227 (1996).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Churches are not inherently urban in nature. A church that does not require urban services, serves a primarily rural congregation, and is used for religious services and educational programs is not an urban use requiring an exception from Goal 14. Cox v. Yamhill County, 29 Or LUBA 263 (1995).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. OAR 660-33-130(3) precludes approval of churches or public or private schools on agricultural lands "within 3 miles of an urban growth boundary." DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where an EFU zone includes two provisions allowing churches and schools, and one of those provisions includes the OAR 660-33-130(3) restriction against approving churches and schools within three miles of an urban growth boundary but the other provision does not, LUBA will not assume the county will apply the provision that lacks the three-mile limitation as though it includes the three-mile limitation. DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where a church is proposed to be located in an EFU zone, and a county code provision requires that there be "no other feasible location" for the proposed use that satisfies a code standard requiring that certain nonfarm uses in the EFU zone be located on land "generally unsuitable" for farm use, the county may interpret the code provision to require that there be no other feasible location for the propose church in the EFU zone that is generally unsuitable for agricultural production. Simmons v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 647 (1993).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where a county code provision requires that there be no other "feasible location" for a proposed church, and the challenged decision establishes that there is a present need for the proposed church, the county is within its discretion to interpret "feasible location" not to include sites that are not currently available for sale. Simmons v. Marion County, 25 Or LUBA 647 (1993).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Under the EFU zoning statute, counties may allow churches as outright permitted uses. However, where a particular EFU zone requires case-by-case findings that proposed nonfarm uses, including churches, will be compatible with farm uses and consistent with state Agricultural Land Use Policies, such findings must be made. Avgeris v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 124 (1992).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. A finding that a proposed Buddhist temple complies with a code requirement that "the nature of the use requires a rural setting * * * even though the use may not provide primarily for the needs of rural residents" will be sustained, where there is substantial evidence in the record of a long standing tradition of locating temples serving a particular lineage of Buddhism in rural locations, and that intermediate and advanced techniques of that religion requiring a rural setting will be practiced at the proposed temple. Avgeris v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 124 (1992).

31.3.14 Permits – Particular Uses – Churches. Where the record shows that a proposed church will not require urban services and will be located within a designated rural service center, adjacent to existing commercial and public uses, and is otherwise surrounded by large parcels in commercial farm use, a determination that the proposed church will not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern in the area is supported by substantial evidence Simmons v. Marion County, 22 Or LUBA 759 (1992).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. With regard to school structures on non-high-value farmland that existed prior to adoption of LCDC's three-mile rule, OAR 660-033-0130(2)(c) provides that such schools may be "maintained, enhanced or expanded on the same tract subject to other requirements of law, but enclosed existing structures within a farm use zone within three miles of an urban growth boundary may not be expanded beyond the requirements of this rule." The "requirements of this rule" in OAR 660-033-0130(2)(c) is a reference to the OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) requirement that the design capacity of enclosed structures be no "greater than 100 people," and the OAR 660-033-0130(2)(b) requirement that enclosed structures be spaced "no less than one-half mile" apart. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 227 (2017).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. HB 3099, now codified at ORS 215.135, was adopted in 2009 to address legislative concerns about the new HB 3099 requirement that schools on EFU-zoned land must be "primarily for residents of the rural area in which the school is located" and perhaps concerns about new local criteria that might be adopted and applied to such existing schools. But there is nothing in the legislative history of HB 3099 that suggests it was also concerned with LCDC's three-mile rule at OAR 660-033-0130(2), adopted in 1993. ORS 215.135 and its parallel administrative rule at OAR 660-033-0130(18)(b) to (c) were not adopted to excuse existing schools from complying with LCDC's three-mile rule. To the extent the text of OAR 660-033-0130(2)(c) is ambiguous, the legislative history confirms that LCDC intended the OAR 660-033-0130(2)(a) 100-person design limit and the OAR 660-033-0130(2)(b) "no less than one-half mile" spacing requirement to apply to expansion of such existing structures. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 227 (2017).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Where in 2005 an applicant receives discretionary permit approval for three school buildings, and initiates the development action within the initial two-year period set forth in OAR 660-033-0140(1) by constructing two school buildings, but fails to seek extension of the permit or obtain building permits for the third building until seven years after the two-year period expired, long after the school use became a nonconforming use, the applicant can no longer rely on the 2005 approval to authorize issuance of building permits for the third building. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 299 (2016).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Substantial evidence supports a finding that a proposed high school will not increase traffic through an affected intersection during the peak morning hour, notwithstanding failure of the traffic study to take certain trips into account, where the decision imposes conditions that effectively eliminate the possibility of those trips impacting the intersection. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. A reasonable person could conclude that a combination of conditions requiring that most classes begin outside the peak morning hour and prohibiting drop-offs during the peak morning hour is sufficient to ensure that drop-offs associated with a proposed high school will not impact a failing intersection during the peak morning hour. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Draft transportation and parking demand plans for a proposed school are substantial evidence supporting a finding of compliance with a "safe streets" approval standard, notwithstanding that the conditions of approval require that the school submit and city staff approve final plans in which the city might impose additional or different terms. Friends of Collins View v. City of Portland, 41 Or LUBA 261 (2002).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Contextual statutory references to "public schools," "private schools" and "schools" indicate that the legislature intended the scope of "public or private schools" allowed in the EFU zone under ORS 215.283(1)(a) to include schools for elementary and secondary education, but not adult career schools. Warburton v. Harney County, 39 Or LUBA 398 (2001).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Where the scope of "public or private schools" allowed in the EFU zone under ORS 215.283(1)(a) could be plausibly construed to include only schools for elementary and secondary education, or more broadly to include any kind of use that has an educational component, the statute should be interpreted not to include uses that would subvert the goal of preserving land for agriculture. Warburton v. Harney County, 39 Or LUBA 398 (2001).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. A county provision requiring that schools outside urban growth boundaries be "scaled to serve the rural population" is not unconstitutionally vague where a reasonable applicant would understand that to comply with that provision, the applicant must submit evidence that the school is no larger than needed to serve the anticipated number of rural students. Christian Life Center v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 200 (1999).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. A county provision requiring that schools outside urban growth boundaries be "scaled to serve the rural population" does not infringe directly on religious practices, and thus is not subject to strict scrutiny, absent a showing that the proposed parochial school must exist on the same rural property as its supporting church for members to exercise their rights to free exercise of religion and their right to direct their children's education. Christian Life Center v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 200 (1999).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. The Free Exercise Clause does not require an exemption from a county zoning ordinance that prohibits urban-sized schools on rural land, where the county has a strong interest in maintaining the boundaries between rural and urban uses, and the ordinance imposes only the minimal burden on religious practice of requiring the applicant to build a smaller parochial school than desired or locate the school on property within the nearby urban growth boundary. Christian Life Center v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 200 (1999).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. OAR 660-33-130(3) precludes approval of churches or public or private schools on agricultural lands "within 3 miles of an urban growth boundary." DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Where an EFU zone includes two provisions allowing churches and schools, and one of those provisions includes the OAR 660-33-130(3) restriction against approving churches and schools within three miles of an urban growth boundary but the other provision does not, LUBA will not assume the county will apply the provision that lacks the three-mile limitation as though it includes the three-mile limitation. DLCD v. Douglas County, 28 Or LUBA 242 (1994).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Findings which identify a lack of evidence concerning road capacity and evidence concerning traffic congestion during weekend events at existing uses and a proposed agricultural/horticultural school complex are adequate to explain why a decision maker concluded the applicant failed to carry its burden concerning a code "minimal adverse impact" standard. Brentmar v. Jackson County, 27 Or LUBA 453 (1994).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. A local government interpretation of its comprehensive plan and zoning code, that approval of a school at a particular site requires compliance with a plan policy concerning schools, is not so wrong as to be reversible under ORS 197.829, notwithstanding that the relevant zoning district lists schools as a permitted use at the subject site. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Where "private school" is listed as a conditional use in a particular zone, but the challenged decision does not interpret the code definitions of "private school" and "commercial school," or explain why application of those definitions to the facts leads to the conclusion that the proposed school is a "private school," LUBA must remand the challenged decision to the county to adopt the required interpretation in the first instance. Eppich v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 498 (1994).

31.3.15 Permits – Particular Uses – Schools. Where a local code provision implementing ORS 215.283(1)(a) lists schools "including all buildings essential to the operation of a school" as a conditional use in an EFU zone, and the local government fails to interpret and apply the quoted provision in approving a conditional use permit for a school, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret its code provision in the first instance. Eppich v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 498 (1994).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Where a county's code defines "recreational vehicle" (RVs) as a temporary dwelling unit intended for vacation, emergency or recreational use, but that cannot be used for permanent residential use, the county errs in interpreting the provisions of a forest zone, which allows as a conditional use "recreational vehicles" without any express durational limits, to allow an RV to be used as a permanent residence, because that interpretation gives no effect to the categorical exclusions in the code definition of "recreational vehicle." Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 77 Or LUBA 192 (2018).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. That county staff have in the past approved recreational vehicles as permanent residential dwellings does not provide a basis to interpret the county code to allow recreational vehicles to be used as permanent residential dwellings, where the county code definition of "recreational vehicle" prohibits their use as permanent residential dwellings. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Tillamook County, 77 Or LUBA 192 (2018).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. A condition that purports to impose system development charges as a condition of approving conversion of a mobile home park to a manufactured dwelling subdivision is prohibited by ORS 92.845(1)(b), unless it falls within some exception to that statute. D & B Home Investments v. City of Donald, 51 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. ORS 92.845(1)(c) allows local governments to impose system development charges on conversion of a mobile home park to a manufactured dwelling subdivision only when such charges are "based on the prior approval" of the park. Where the prior park approval did not impose system development charges, ORS 92.845(1)(c) does not apply. D & B Home Investments v. City of Donald, 51 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Pursuant to ORS 197.480(5), a local government can apply clear and objective criteria for the placement and design of manufactured home parks. A local provision requiring that each home in manufactured home parks be within 500 feet of a fire hydrant capable of providing a defined minimum flow is a clear and objective criterion. Doob v. Josephine County, 39 Or LUBA 276 (2001).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. That a local government has neither conducted the inventory and needs analysis required by ORS 197.480 nor made a determination of needed housing with respect to manufactured home parks does not prohibit the local government from approving a manufactured home park, or waive the local government's obligation to comply with ORS 197.480. Doob v. Josephine County, 39 Or LUBA 276 (2001).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Subjective conditional use criteria designed to balance or mitigate the impacts of development on property or the adjoining community are not "clear and objective criteria and standards" that can be applied to approve or deny manufactured dwelling parks under ORS 197.480(5). Multi/Tech Engineering v. Josephine County, 37 Or LUBA 314 (1999).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Where a county fails to implement ORS 197.480 to designate residential areas in which manufactured dwelling parks can be located as allowed uses subject only to clear and objective criteria, and the county's ordinance subjects all manufactured dwelling parks to subjective conditional use criteria, the county cannot apply those criteria to approve or deny a manufactured dwelling park. Multi/Tech Engineering v. Josephine County, 37 Or LUBA 314 (1999).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Petitioners fail to establish compliance with all mandatory approval criteria for a special medical hardship permit allowing a temporary mobile home on their property in a forest zone where they fail to present any evidence indicating that no reasonable housing alternatives exist that could meet one petitioner's needs for special medical attention. Lopatin v. Clackamas County, 32 Or LUBA 158 (1996).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Where a local code requires a "recreation/open space area" as part of a mobile home park, it is reasonable for the local government to interpret "recreation/open space area" to include wetlands. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. Where the code regulates mobile home parks and RV facilities as separate and distinct uses, any nonconforming use determination that the subject property was used as both a mobile home park and an RV facility at the time restrictive zoning was applied must include determinations regarding the extent the property was used for each use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. It is unreasonable for a local hearings officer to interpret a code provision prohibiting "unit enlargements or expansions" of existing mobile home parks unless they are "made to conform substantially with all requirements for new construction" as inherently inapplicable to any proposed alteration of a nonconforming mobile home park, because such an interpretation would make this code provision a nullity. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. A hearings officer's interpretation of a conditional use permit for a "tourist park" as not allowing placement of mobile homes within the approved "tourist park," as that term is defined by the local code, is reasonable and correct. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. That state agencies may recognize and regulate "combination parks" which include both recreational vehicles and mobile homes occupied on a long-term basis does not mean a local government must adopt comprehensive plan and zoning provisions allowing such combination parks. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

31.3.16 Permits – Particular Uses – Manufactured Homes. ORS 197.307(5)(d) expresses an alternative standard that is satisfied if the exterior materials of a manufactured home either (1) are similar those commonly used on dwellings in the community, or (2) are comparable to those used on surrounding dwellings. Because local governments cannot adopt standards more restrictive than those set out in ORS 197.307(5), a city cannot interpret a local regulation implementing ORS

197.307(5)(d) as allowing it to require, in a particular instance, that a manufactured home must satisfy the second alternative. Brewster v. City of Keizer, 27 Or LUBA 432 (1994).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. ORS 197.770, which provides that existing firearms training facilities may continue, is silent regarding the expansion of an existing firearms training facility. Because the statute is silent on expansion, it does not prohibit expansion, if expansion is otherwise authorized and consistent with other applicable law. H.T. Rea Farming Corp. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 125 (2015).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. Where a local government implements OAR 660-033-0120, Table 1, and OAR 660-033-0130(2)(c), by adopting land use regulations that expressly authorize the expansion of all of the "Parks/Public/Quasi-Public" uses listed in Table 1 except an ORS 197.770 existing firearms training facility in an EFU zone, the unmistakable conclusion is that the local government deliberately chose not to allow expansion of a firearms training facility in the EFU zone. H.T. Rea Farming Corp. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 125 (2015).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. Where a local government implements OAR 660-033-0130(2)(c) by adopting land use regulations that expressly authorize the expansion of a number of uses in the EFU zone, but did not amend its regulations to provide for expansion of an ORS 197.770 firearms training facility in the EFU zone, the local government must apply its EFU zone regulations as adopted, and cannot directly apply the administrative rule to approve the expansion of an ORS 197.770 firearms training facility that its EFU zone does not authorize. H.T. Rea Farming Corp. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 125 (2015).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. ORS 197.770 provides that any firearms training facility in existence on September 9, 1995 may continue operating until the facility is no longer used as a firearms training facility. However, the statute is silent as to how to determine when a facility is "no longer used" as a firearms training facility or how long that use may be discontinued before the facility loses the protection of the statute. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. A determination that a firearms training facility has not lost the protection of ORS 197.770 requires evaluation of the actual use of the facility following September 9, 1995. Mere intent or capability to use the facility as a qualifying facility is insufficient to prevent loss of the statute's protection in the absence of actual use. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. Like the statutes governing nonconforming uses, ORS 197.770 does not specify what period of discontinued use as a firearms training facility disqualifies a facility from protection under the statute, but instead leaves it to the local government to determine. Where the local government's regulations provide a period of discontinuance for nonconforming uses but not a specific period for firearms training facilities, LUBA will assume the nonconforming use period of discontinuance applies. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. A qualifying firearms training facility under ORS 197.770 must provide courses and certificates required by one of three types of specified organizations. Training and certificates required by other types of organizations do not qualify. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

31.3.17 Permits – Particular Uses – Firearms Training Facilities. Absent a clear expression of intent to the contrary, LUBA will not infer legislative intent to retroactively legalize uses or structures that were unlawful when first commenced or constructed. Because there is no suggestion in ORS 197.770 that the legislature intended to legalize or protect unlawful or unauthorized "firearms training facilities" that existed on September 9, 1995, such facilities or unlawful expansions to such facilities are not protected by the statute. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. Under 2010 legislation, wineries authorized by ORS 215.283(1)(n) and 215.452 may offer "[s]ervices directly related to the sale and promotion of wine," and host "private events." ORS 215.452 limits "gross income from the sale of incidental items and services" to "25 percent of the gross income from the retail sale on-site of wine produced in conjunction with the winery." Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. The legislature in 2010 enacted amendments to ORS 215.452, which governs wineries that are a permitted use under ORS 215.283(1)(n), and those amendments failed to adopt a proposal to expressly preserve statutory authority to approve wineries under ORS 215.283(2)(a) as "commercial activities that are in conjunction with farm use." However, LUBA will not infer from that failure a legislative intent to eliminate ORS 215.283(2)(a) as basis for winery approval on EFU-zoned land, where it was common practice before 2010 to approve wineries under ORS 215.283(2)(a) as "commercial activities that are in conjunction with farm use" and the 2010 legislative history suggests that the legislature did not intended to eliminate that common practice. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. Approval of wineries under ORS 215.283(2)(a) as "commercial activities that are in conjunction with farm use" and approval of wineries under ORS 215.283(1)(n) and 215.452, which specifically authorize "wineries" on EFU-zoned land, are alternative ways to seek approval for a winery. Approval under ORS 215.283(2)(a) for expansions to an existing winery that was originally approved under ORS 215.283(1)(n) and 215.452 that are not permitted under ORS 215.452, has the legal effect of converting ORS 215.283(1)(n) and 215.452 winery into an ORS 215.283(2)(a) winery. Therefore the expanded winery as a whole must comply with the limits imposed on ORS 215.283(2)(a) wineries. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. ORS 215.283(1)(r) authorizes "processing of farm crops" as a permitted use in EFU zones. While a winery that only produces wine from wine grapes might qualify for approval under ORS 215.283(1)(r), a winery that includes a tasting room and hosts numerous events at the winery to promote sale of wine is more than "processing of farm crops" and must be approved under ORS 215.283(1)(n), which authorizes wineries that are limited in accordance with ORS 215.452 and 215.453 or under ORS 215.283(2)(a), which authorizes "commercial activities that are in conjunction with farm use." Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. A winery that is authorized to hold up to 44 public or private events annually to promote and sell wine produced at the winery and to prepare and serve meals at those events, but must limit sale of incidental items and services at the events and winery to no more than "25 percent of the gross income from the on-site sale of wine produced in conjunction with the winery," is permissible under the Supreme Court's and Court of Appeals' decisions in Craven v. Jackson County, because the events, food service and sale of incidental items and services are properly viewed as "incidental" and "secondary" to the winery. However, such a winery is approaching the point where the events, food service and sale of incidental items and services can no longer be said to be "incidental" and "secondary" to the winery. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. A winery that was initially approved as a permitted use under ORS 215.283(1)(n) and 215.452 was not required to consider its impact on farm and forest practices on nearby lands because ORS 215.296(1)(a) and (b) do not apply to such permitted use wineries. However, if that winery is to be expanded later in ways that are not allowed under ORS 215.452, as a "commercial activit[y] that [is] in conjunction with farm use" under ORS 215.283(2)(a), the expanded winery must comply with ORS 215.296(1)(a) and (b), which apply to "commercial activities that are in conjunction with farm use." In that circumstance ORS 215.296(1)(a) and (b) apply to the entire winery as expanded, not just the later approved expansion. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.18 Permits – Particular Uses – Wineries. Petitioners' challenge to a winery expansion presents no basis for remand under the ORS 215.296(1)(a) and (b) significant change/increase standard, where the county's findings can be read to identify "spraying pesticides, burning fence lines and plowing fields" as accepted farming practices that might be impacted by an expanded winery operation, the county imposes a 200-foot buffer setback requirement on the winery and requires a recorded acknowledgement by the winery owner that nearby farms have a right to continue their accepted farming practices even if they impact the winery, and petitioners offer no direct challenge to the adequacy of those measure to avoid significant changes in or increases in the cost of accepted farming practices. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 212 (2012).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. The ORS 215.283(1)(o) authorization for farm stands authorizes structures that are designed and used for the sale of farm products and livestock, and also authorizes those structures to be used for "sale of retail incidental items and fee-based activity to promote sale of farm crops or livestock." The EFU statute is correctly interpreted also to authorize farm stand activities to be conducted outside the authorized structures. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. A farm stand permit that authorizes up to 22 al fresco dinners for up to 75 diners each year is inconsistent with the express prohibition in ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) against farm stand structures for banquets. Although the statute and rule are expressly directed at "structures for banquets," the prohibition extends to such large and frequent al fresco dinners, which fall within the meaning of "banquets," as that term is used in the statute and rule, and the prohibition extends to outdoor banquets. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) authorize the "sale of retail incidental items and fee-based activity to promote the sale of farm crops or livestock" inside structures that are "designed and used for sale of farm crops and livestock," but they do not authorize structures that are specifically designed and used for retail sales and fee-based promotional activity. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. A county's condition of approval that farm stand "wholesale sales" be separately accounted and not included in applying the ORS 215.283(1)(o) requirement that "sale of retail incidental items and fee-based activity to promote sale of farm crops or livestock" not exceed "25 percent of the total annual sales of the farm stand," while an imperfect way to ensure that farm stand sales are not inflated with nonfarm stand sales to inflate the permissible sales from retail and fee-based activity, is a permissible condition under the statute. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. Where a county has authority to impose conditions of approval, a condition that requires a sworn annual report that demonstrates that a farm stand complied with the 25 percent limit on the percentage of sales from a farm stand that are attributable to retail and promotional activity, and that records be kept that confirm the accuracy of the report, is permissible under ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23). Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. A farm stand permit that (1) authorizes "small-scale gatherings such as birthdays, picnics, and similar activities" and (2) requires that such gatherings "shall promote the farm stand and contemporaneous crops sold in the farm stand" does not exceed the ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) authority for farm stands. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. A farm stand permit that authorizes multiple food carts to sell a variety of prepared food at up to 24 events per year cannot be characterized as "incidental retail sales," and exceeds the authority granted by ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23). Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) do not categorically prohibit food carts in all circumstances. If a permit authorizing a farm stand appropriately limited food carts so that they could be characterized as "incidental retail sales," they could be authorized at a farm stand. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) do not prohibit all concessions at farm stands. The statute and rule only prohibit "large concessions." Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

31.3.19 Permits – Particular Uses – Farm Stands. A decision whether to approve an application for a "farm stand" necessarily requires the exercise of discretion to determine whether a proposed use is a "farm stand," i.e. a structure designed and used for the sale of agricultural products grown on the farm operation, including the sale of retail incidental items and "fee-based activities" to promote the sale of agricultural products sold at the stand and to determine whether the proposed use does not include structures designed for activity other than the sale of agricultural products. Keith v. Washington County, 66 Or LUBA 80 (2012).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where an applicant generally argued below that the local government could apply only clear and objective standards, and where the applicant more specifically argued that the local government could not apply certain local safety standards regulating roads and connectivity because the term "safety" is subjective and undefined in the local code, argued that the local government could not apply certain ODOT standards referenced in the local safety standards because they are undefined and not clear and objective, and opposed a proposed ODOT condition of approval as not clear and objective, LUBA will conclude that an argument that the local government erred by refusing to analyze whether the applicable criteria are "clear and objective" under ORS 197.307(4) was sufficiently raised for purposes of ORS 197.835(3), ORS 197.195(3)(c)(B), and ORS 197.763(1). Buffalo-Bend Associates, LLC v. Clackamas County, 81 Or LUBA 66 (2020).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. That different decision-makers rely on different rationales and reach different conclusions about why a standard is met does not require a conclusion that the standard is not "clear" for purposes of ORS 197.307(4). Arthur C. Piculell Living Trust v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 492 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. ORS 197.307(4) requires the standards and conditions that apply to needed housing to be both "clear" and "objective." Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139, 157-58 (1998), aff'd, 158 Or App 1, 970 P2d 685 (1999). Arthur C. Piculell Living Trust v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 492 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Failing to address future hypothetical changes to land use regulations does not render a condition unclear for purposes of ORS 197.307(4). Arthur C. Piculell Living Trust v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 492 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. That the disjunctive word "or" can be, in some circumstances, an inclusive connector and, in others, an exclusive connector, depending on its context, does not make a standard unclear for purposes of ORS 197.307(4), especially where the purpose of the standard indicates that the standard employs the word "or" as a connector in its more ordinary, exclusive, "either/or" usage. Arthur C. Piculell Living Trust v. City of Eugene, 80 Or LUBA 492 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where a cross-petitioner seeks a remedy not available to it by statute, it is an obstacle to LUBA's review of the cross-assignment of error. LUBA lacks authority to affirm in part, and reverse in part a local government's approval of cross-petitioner's project application. ORS 197.835(1). Even assuming that the city erred by applying Willamette Greenway standards to cross-petitioner's housing project application, because they are not "clear and objective," the city's decision approving the development could not be reversed because it is not "prohibited as a matter of law." If LUBA agreed with cross-petitioners, the correct disposition would be remand, except that remand was not requested and would have no effect on the city's decision approving the application. In such a situation, LUBA will consider the request a contingent cross-assignment of error. Hulme v. City of Eugene, 79 Or LUBA 218 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where a petitioner argues that the local government erred under ORS 197.307(4) in applying ambiguous standards to an application to develop housing, and where an intervenor offers a traffic impact assessment (TIA) from a prior land use application that is not included in the local record to establish that the petitioner knew the local government would require compliance with the ambiguous standard, LUBA will deny a motion to take the TIA as evidence not in the record where the intervenor fails to explain how the evidence relates to any basis for LUBA to take additional evidence under OAR 661-010-0045(1) and since the facts that the TIA is offered to prove are not critical to the resolution of the appeal, as required under OAR 661-010-0045(2)(a). Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 1058 (2019).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. ORS 197.307(4) provides in relevant part that "a local government may adopt and apply only clear and objective standards, conditions and procedures regulating the development of needed housing on buildable land described in subsection (3) of [ORS 197.307]." Warren v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 295 (2017).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where the hearings officer did not determine whether property is "buildable land" as defined in ORS 197.295, and the Buildable Lands Inventory (BLI) adopted by Metro that identifies lands on the BLI is not in the record of the proceeding before the county and does not provide an obvious answer to the question of whether all or part of the property is on the BLI, LUBA will remand the decision for further findings on the buildable land issue. Warren v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 295 (2017).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where the applicable version of the needed housing statute at ORS 197.303(1)(2001) identified "needed housing" as (1) housing on land that is included on the city's buildable lands inventory, and (2) housing types listed in ORS 197.303(1)(a) through (e) (2001), which includes "government assisted housing" as defined in (1)(b), petitioner's proposed Controlled Income Rent housing qualifies as "needed housing" because it is a "government assisted housing" project. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 75 Or LUBA 109 (2017).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. A condition of approval that allows an applicant to pipe a portion of a creek required to extend sanitary sewer lines under a creek "only if it can demonstrate the necessity of doing so with a licensed engineering analysis as the only feasible means to connect wastewater service in this location" in order to locate Controlled Income Rent housing units, common areas, and infrastructure on property violates ORS 197.307(6)(2001)'s prohibition against applying special conditions that are not "clear and objective" to needed housing. Wiper v. City of Eugene, 75 Or LUBA 109 (2017).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. LUBA will reject a proposed interpretation of a city code site review provision that would broadly apply to all proposed needed housing, including single-family dwellings, and result in imposition of discretionary standards and lengthy procedures that could easily have the effect of discouraging needed housing, contrary to ORS 197.307(4), where there is an alternative interpretation that harmonizes the relevant text and context and does not force the city's code into conflict with ORS 197.307(4). McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing Where a city's code offers a path for developers to qualify proposed housing as "needed housing," in order to obtain waiver of certain standards that would otherwise apply, LUBA will similarly interpret a related code provision requiring that site review provisions be applied when "the application proposes needed housing," to the effect that the site review provisions apply only if the applicant seeks to qualify the proposed housing as "needed housing." McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. A code standard that requires an applicant for needed housing to demonstrate that "[t]he street layout of the proposed PUD shall disperse motor vehicle traffic onto more than one public local street * * *" is not a "clear and objective standard" as required by ORS 197.307(4), because the term "disperse" could have different meanings and depending on which meaning the city chooses to apply, a proposed PUD could fail to meet the standard. Accordingly, the standard may not be applied to an application for needed housing. Walter v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 356 (2016).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Where the purpose of a standard is clear from the text of the standard, that standard is more likely to be a "clear and objective" standard within the meaning of ORS 197.307(4). Walter v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 356 (2016).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. LUBA will reject a petitioner's attempt to manufacture an interpretation of a standard that applies to needed housing under which all development would be precluded and then complain that the standard is not clear and objective and may not be applied to needed housing when the city interprets the standard in the only way it can be reasonably applied and rejects the petitioner's interpretation. Walter v. City of Eugene, 73 Or LUBA 356 (2016).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. ORS 197.307(4) requires a local government to apply only clear and objective conditions to proposed needed housing on buildable land. Conditions subject to ORS 197.307(4) include conditions imposed in earlier land use decisions that still govern development of buildable land. Accordingly, a local government may apply a condition of an earlier land use decision to needed housing on buildable land only if the condition is clear and objective. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. A condition that prohibits the location of an assisted living facility within 135 feet of a property line is ambiguous and requires interpretation to determine whether the condition also prohibits the location of multi-family residential development within the 135-foot setback. Accordingly, the condition is not "clear and objective," and pursuant to ORS 197.307(4) cannot be applied to deny proposed development of needed housing. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. Under ORS 197.307(6), a local government may impose unclear, subjective or discretionary standards and conditions on needed housing only if it offers an alternative path that allows needed housing subject only to clear and objective standards and conditions. It is not consistent with ORS 197.307(6) for a local government to require an applicant for needed housing to either (1) demonstrate that needed housing is consistent with an unclear and subjective condition of a 1981 development approval, or (2) apply under discretionary standards to modify the 1981 development approval to eliminate the unclear and subjective condition. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. A local government may not require an applicant for needed housing to seek approval under discretionary standards to modify a condition of approval that was imposed on the subject property in an earlier decision approving planned development, unless the condition was imposed on development of needed housing and the predecessor-in-interest chose the discretionary planned development path in lieu of an alternate path for needed housing subject only to clear and objective standards and conditions, consistent with the two-track framework embodied in ORS 197.307(6). Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. ORS 197.307(7) authorizes a local government to impose "special conditions" on needed housing. However, pursuant to ORS 197.307(4), any "special conditions" imposed on needed housing must be clear and objective. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

31.3.20 Permits – Particular Uses – Needed Housing. A street design standard stating that "cul-de-sacs should not serve more than 18 dwelling units" is not a clear and objective approval standard that can be applied to approve or deny needed housing for purposes of ORS 197.307(4), where in order to apply the standard to deny proposed housing accessed by an existing cul-de-sac the local government had to interpret the street design standard to determine (1) whether it applied at all to the proposed needed housing, and (2) whether it imposes a mandatory approval standard. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. When the purpose of a condition is to set a baseline to measure traffic impact throughout multiple phases of the development consistent with the "trip cap" imposed to meet Transportation Planning Rule, at OAR 660-012-0060 requirements without mitigation, a hearings officer does not err in concluding that the standards are to be interpreted based on the use of the same version of the Institute of Transportation Engineers Trip Generation Manual (ITE Manual). Additionally, the ITE Manual is a professional treatise that sets out methods for making evidentiary judgments regarding the traffic impacts of development, but it is not part of the city's acknowledged comprehensive plan or land use regulations, and therefore is not itself "standards and criteria" for purposes of ORS 227.178(3)(a) or 227.173(1), at least as applied in the present circumstance, thus compliance with the trip cap be determined by consistent applications of the same ITE Manual codes used to establish the trip cap. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 63 (2018).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. LUBA will affirm as correct a city planning commission's interpretation that a city code provision that prohibits "grading" on portions of a site that contains steep slopes does not prohibit all development activities that disturb soil, where the city's code does not define the terms "grading" and "excavating," but does define "development" as including both "grading" and "excavating" as separate terms. LUBA will affirm the city planning commission's conclusion that the grading prohibition is not violated by a PUD site plan that requires digging holes to install support posts for cantilevered dwellings and digging and refilling trenches to install water lines in areas containing steep slopes because those activities constitute excavation and not grading. Fairmount Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 418 (2018).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the city's code provides that development application materials "shall reflect that consideration has been given to [tree] preservation," the city does not err in finding that the code requirement is met when the applicant's submissions demonstrate that consideration was given to tree preservation through a tree survey and site design that preserves trees within a stand on slopes greater than 25 percent, contains yard sizes that decrease critical root zone impacts, and preserves trees between and around homes. Those application materials reflect that consideration was given to tree preservation even though some high and moderate priority trees must be removed to develop streets, utilities and building pads, and preservation of trees on residential lots would be left to the discretion of future lot owners. The code does not require the actual preservation of trees; instead, the code requires a project applicant to consider tree preservation and submit evidence to demonstrate that such consideration occurred. Fairmount Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 418 (2018).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Extension and improvement of a residential access road over an existing public right-of-way is not subject to a city code section that requires streets that are "dedicated to the public by the applicant * * * conform" with adopted street right-of-way maps. A proposed improvement of a type of street that is not depicted on the city's adopted street right-of-way map does not fail to "conform" with that map. Fairmount Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 418 (2018).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of the phrase "designated common area" as used in a plan policy governing a resort community zone to mean something different than a definition of "common area" in an unrelated section of the comprehensive plan that cross-references the definition of "common property" as used in the Oregon Planned Communities Act at ORS 94.550(7), where the latter definition was adopted at a different time and to serve a different purpose than the plan policy governing the resort community zone. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 407 (2017).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a major modification of a PUD may not be approved under local law if it would result in a "substantially new proposal," the previously approved 10-phase, 30-acre mixed-use development that includes an 82-unit senior assisted and independent living facility must be compared with a 10-phase, 30-acre mixed-use development that substitutes a smaller senior and assisted living facility for the 82-unit senior assisted and independent living facility. In applying the "substantially new proposal" standard, it is not appropriate to limit the comparison to the 82-unit senior assisted and independent living facility and the smaller senior and assisted living facility. Pinnacle Alliance Group, LLC v. City of Sisters, 73 Or LUBA 169 (2016).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A one-half-acre size requirement threshold for requiring PUD approval is not a mere application requirement that can be overlooked to require PUD approval for proposals of less than one-half acre. Even if the city intended to delete that threshold for PUD proposals near transit stations, where the threshold clearly applies it cannot be overlooked to give effect to an intent that is inconsistent with the text of the zoning ordinance. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a development code requires that PUD applicants prepare a "land use analysis" that establishes that specified minimum and maximum development levels in a particular zoning district will be met when all of the properties in that zoning district are developed, LUBA will not assume that without explicit direction about how to go about preparing such a "land use analysis," PUD applicants will be unable to do so. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A local government does not err in failing to impose a condition of approval ensuring that the final planned unit development plan contains senior housing consistent with the approved tentative plan, where the tentative plan includes such housing and an ordinance requires that the final plan can only be approved if it is "substantially consistent" with the tentative plan. NE Medford Neighborhood Coalition v. City of Medford, 53 Or LUBA 277 (2007).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the "Decision" section of a land use decision expressly grants only "planned unit development subdivision plan" approval, but the decision read as a whole clearly also grants the zoning map amendment that was included in the planned unit development and subdivision plan application, LUBA will interpret the decision to grant all three of the requested approvals. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where an application for city subdivision approval includes a request for planned unit development approval that allows the property to be divided in ways that the property could not be divided without planned unit development approval, the decision granting planned unit development subdivision approval is a land use decision, not a limited land use decision. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A city may not accept a revised planned unit development plan the day before an appeal without providing the local parties an opportunity to review and respond to the revised plan. Baker v. City of Garibaldi, 49 Or LUBA 437 (2005).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A nonbinding preliminary PUD approval is equivalent to a tentative decision following a pre-application conference or review, and therefore does not trigger the statutory requirement under ORS 227.175(3) for a public hearing or the right of local appeal to challenge a permit decision rendered without a prior public hearing. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. ORS 227.175 sets forth certain minimum procedural requirements for processing permit applications, but does not prohibit or regulate informal, nonbinding proceedings for preliminary approvals of PUDs that may precede the public hearing(s) required by statute. Neighbors for Sensible Dev. v. City of Sweet Home, 40 Or LUBA 21 (2001).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A planned unit development (PUD) condition of approval that requires a future variance for a long cul-de-sac does not constitute an improper deferral of decision making to a later stage where the applicable variance procedures will provide substantially the same full opportunity for public involvement that would have been provided had the variance been adopted prior to or as part of the challenged PUD decision. Dept. of Transportation v. City of Eugene, 38 Or LUBA 814 (2000).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Challenges that are directed at a previously approved preliminary plat for a planned unit development in an appeal of final plat approval are an impermissible collateral attack on the prior decision. Bauer v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 715 (2000).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a local government approves a preliminary planned unit development application based on findings of current compliance with applicable criteria, an argument that the local government impermissibly deferred findings of compliance with applicable criteria to a second stage of review where notice and hearing requirements are not observed is more appropriately framed as an inquiry into whether the findings of current compliance are adequate and supported by substantial evidence. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A city commission is within its interpretative discretion under ORS 197.829 to determine that a requirement that planned unit development within a natural hazards zone be consistent with applicable comprehensive plan policies is satisfied by a demonstration of compliance with ordinance standards implementing those comprehensive plan policies. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Absent local provisions to the contrary, only the preliminary plat approval, and not the entire record of the preliminary plat approval, is part of a final PUD plan record. Santiam Properties v. City of Stayton, 35 Or LUBA 790 (1998).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Geotechnical studies are appropriately included in the record where reference to these studies in the final PUD plan approval order indicates that they were considered by the final decision maker. Santiam Properties v. City of Stayton, 35 Or LUBA 790 (1998).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. When the only decision appealed is a decision changing the required sequence of PUD phases, and the assignments of error provide no basis for reversing or remanding that decision, the decision will be affirmed. LUBA will reject assignments of error that challenge other related decisions that were not appealed. Claus v. City of Sherwood, 35 Or LUBA 120 (1998).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. The deadline for submitting a final plat is a "review procedure" rather than an "informational" or "other [subdivision] requirement" for purposes of choosing whether the two-year deadline imposed on subdivisions or the three-year deadline imposed on PUDs applies, where petitioner does not explain why the two-year time limit is informational or substantive and interpreting the requirement as being substantive would be inconsistent with the code's purpose of allowing concurrent processing of the final subdivision and PUD plans. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A code provision that requires that final subdivision and PUD plans be submitted within three years after preliminary approval is granted does not require that the versions of the final subdivision and PUD plans that are ultimately approved be submitted before the three-year deadline. Provided the subdivision and PUD plans are submitted before the deadline, the plans may be modified after the deadline in response to city review or public input. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a code contains both a provision governing the expiration of quasi-judicial land use approvals generally and a provision specifically governing the expiration of planned development approvals, the local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark in interpreting the code to mean the expiration of planned development approvals is governed only by the specific code provision. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. If a code includes provisions for extending planned development approvals and for requesting changes in approved final development plans, the local governing body is within its discretion under ORS 197.829 and Clark in interpreting these provisions together to mean if a change in an approved final development plan is requested before the original approval expires, the approval does not expire while the modification application is being processed, and a separate extension application is not necessary. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A code provision requiring that certain applications for changes to an approved planned development (PD) final development plan "shall be processed in the same manner as for a new PD" must be interpreted consistently with ORS 227.178(3) to mean that any standard which would be applicable to a new application for PD approval is applicable to such applications for changes to approved PDs. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 29 Or LUBA 90 (1995).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the record shows the local government conducted the proceeding leading to the challenged decision modifying an approved PUD as a separate permit proceeding initiated by a separate PUD modification application, under OAR 661-10-025(1)(b), the record includes only those items that were placed before the local decision maker during the course of the proceedings initiated by the modification application. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 28 Or LUBA 775 (1994).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a decision approving a planned development states in one place that it grants detailed development plan approval, but it is clear from the decision and findings as a whole that it grants conceptual development plan approval, the single erroneous reference is a harmless error and provides no basis for reversal or remand. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 27 Or LUBA 243 (1994).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where petitioners argue a city cannot approve an amendment to a PUD development plan on remand from LUBA, because the underlying development plan approval expired after LUBA remanded the initial city decision approving the amendment, petitioners did not waive this issue. The issue was not ripe to be raised at the time of the city's initial proceedings on the amendment or during petitioners' first appeal to LUBA. Gage v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 449 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A letter sent by the planning director to the applicant, four months before a city decision granting PUD final development plan approval, does not constitute a final, appealable city decision with regard to the duration of the subsequent PUD final development plan approval. Gage v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 449 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the planning commission delegated to the city manager authority to grant extensions of PUD overall development plan approval, and neither the planning commission's decision nor the city manager's decision exercising that authority was appealed, LUBA will not consider arguments that the planning commission improperly delegated authority to the city manager in an appeal of a subsequent city decision granting final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A local code may provide a PUD process in which an approved PUD overall development plan, rather than the comprehensive plan standards applied in approving the overall development plan, governs final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. As long as comprehensive plan issues relating to the impact of an entire PUD on internal and external roadways were addressed in approving an overall development plan, under applicable local code provisions particular questions concerning those issues that were not raised in granting overall development plan approval may not be raised during final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where a prior city decision approving a PUD preliminary development plan for a shopping center does not clearly identify the particular commercial uses it approves, but describes the applicant's proposal and states that the proposed uses are approved, submittal of a site plan proposing an entirely different mixture of commercial uses constitutes more than a minor modification of the approved development plan. Owen Development Group, Inc. v. City of Gearhart, 25 Or LUBA 88 (1993).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the local code establishes a "two-step" process for approving PUDs which requires that (1) preliminary development plan approval be granted only if the PUD will fulfill all applicable code requirements, and (2) final development plan approval be granted if the final plan complies with the preliminary plan and any conditions imposed thereon, the local government has created a PUD master plan approval process which governs all further aspects of the PUD development process. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. A two-stage approval procedure for planned unit developments, with an initial determination of feasibility required for preliminary (first stage) approval, serves two competing public policies—the public policy that inordinate expense not be incurred prior to preliminary approval and the public policy favoring avoidance of the inordinate expense that would result where final approval must be denied because the project is ultimately determined to be unfeasible. Bartels v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 303 (1990).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Under code provisions for two stage approval of planned unit developments, the finding of "feasibility" required for first stage approval requires a finding that solutions to problems posed by the project are "possible, likely, and reasonably certain to succeed." Provided the required finding of "feasibility" is made at the first stage, where public hearings are provided, resolution of precise solutions and technical matters may occur as part of second stage approval without additional public hearings. Bartels v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 303 (1990).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the local code requires that a PUD application include a landscaping plan, and the landscaping plan is not available anywhere in the record and is necessary for the city to adequately address compliance with an applicable approval standard, the omission of the plan is not a harmless or procedural error. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

32.1 Planned Unit Developments – Procedures. Where the local code provides for the approval of an overall PUD development plan and allows approved PUDs to be developed in phases, and the local government addresses the public services impacts of an entire PUD and finds relevant plan policies satisfied in approving such an overall PUD plan, the local government is not required to readdress plan public services policies in subsequent approval of a development phase, provided the requested phase approval is consistent with the type and intensity of development in the approved overall PUD plan. Hoffman v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 64 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where an applicant proposes a planned development, and where a local code provision requires the local government to "seek to determine that the development * * * will not create a drainage or pollution problem outside the planned area," the local government errs by not adopting findings determining whether the construction of a road extension that is proposed as part of and that would provide access to the planned development will create a drainage or pollution problem outside the planned area. Lundeen v. City of Waldport, 80 Or LUBA 450 (2019).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the county approves an amendment to a planned development approval for a resort, golf course and aerial challenge course, and petitioner argues the county improperly construed the applicable provisions of the county's code, but petitioner has not ultimately challenged the board of county commissioners' interpretation, or otherwise explained why LUBA is not required to affirm that interpretation under ORS 197.829(1), petitioner has provided no basis for reversal or remand. Carkulis v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 610 (2019).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. When the purpose of a condition is to set a baseline to measure traffic impact throughout multiple phases of the development consistent with the "trip cap" imposed to meet Transportation Planning Rule, at OAR 660-012-0060 requirements without mitigation, a hearings officer does not err in concluding that the standards are to be interpreted based on the use of the same version of the Institute of Transportation Engineers Trip Generation Manual (ITE Manual). Additionally, the ITE Manual is a professional treatise that sets out methods for making evidentiary judgments regarding the traffic impacts of development, but it is not part of the city's acknowledged comprehensive plan or land use regulations, and therefore is not itself "standards and criteria" for purposes of ORS 227.178(3)(a) or 227.173(1), at least as applied in the present circumstance, thus compliance with the trip cap be determined by consistent applications of the same ITE Manual codes used to establish the trip cap. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 63 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. When the city has a general track for requesting planned unit development (PUD) approval and a clear and objective track for requesting PUD approval, the city is not required to demonstrate that the applicant is able to gain approval for some development on the subject property under its needed housing track. ORS 197.307(6)(a) requires only that the city allow the applicant the "option of proceeding" under the needed housing track, and does not require a guarantee or demonstration of any kind that development is likely to be approved under the clear and objective approval standards in the needed housing track. Dreyer v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 391 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. When petitioners do not seek relief from any conditions imposed or any aspect of the city's planned unit development (PUD) approval under the general track and LUBA's only option is to affirm, reverse, or remand, the petitioners are asking LUBA to issue what is essentially an advisory opinion regarding the present case. LUBA lacks express statutory or cited judicial authority to issue an advisory opinion on the legal matters presented in the petition and issuing such an advisory opinion would be contrary to one of the express statutory purposes of LUBA's review: that our review should be consistent with "sound principles governing judicial review." ORS 197.805. Dreyer v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 391 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Pursuant to Gutoski v. Lane County, 155 Or App 369, 963 P2d 145 (1998), where a planning commission initially finds a proposal complies with a planned unit development (PUD) approval standard without requiring transportation improvements, but on remand based on a different evidentiary record finds that some improvements are necessary to ensure compliance with the PUD approval standard, drawing a different conclusion based on a different evidentiary record does not mean that the planning commission changed its interpretation of the PUD approval standard. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A condition of approval requiring the applicant to "improve" an existing street to provide 20 feet of "paving" is not ambiguous regarding whether the required improvements include only pavement or also include sidewalks, etc., where the city's finding that the condition is "roughly proportional" to the impacts of the proposed planned unit development clearly indicate that the required improvements include only paving. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A condition of planned unit development (PUD) approval that requires the applicant to obtain a city engineer's public works permit to improve the pavement of a city street does not represent a deferral of findings of compliance with a PUD approval standard requiring that the PUD be supported by a "safe and adequate transportation system," where the public works permit process will not evaluate compliance with the PUD approval standard, but consider only compliance with whatever standards apply to a city engineer public works permit. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A planned unit development (PUD) standard requiring that the applicant submit a traffic impact analysis if pedestrian or bicyclist safety is a "concern by the city that is documented" refers to documented safety concerns that predate the PUD approval process. The "document[s]" referred to cannot be interpreted to mean the findings that the city adopts in approving the PUD. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Findings that a 20-foot paved width is necessary to provide a "safe and adequate" transportation system for purposes of one planned unit development (PUD) standard do not conflict with findings addressing a differently worded standard that a 14-foot paved width is sufficient to ensure that the PUD is not an "impediment to emergency response." Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A reasonable person could conclude, based on expert testimony, that the 14-foot paved width of the only access street is sufficient to ensure compliance with a planned unit development (PUD) approval standard requiring that the PUD is not an "impediment to emergency response," where there is evidence that with adjoining paved or graveled parking areas to allow opposing traffic to pull over, the access street could allow emergency vehicle access in the same manner as a "queuing street," notwithstanding that the access street does not possess all the characteristics of a queuing street. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A hearings officer errs in interpreting a condition of approval for a multi-phase planned unit development (PUD), which requires that the applicant for final phase approval submit a traffic study to determine if additional improvements are necessary to comply with the Transportation Planning Rule, to effectively supersede a different condition of approval applicable to all phases of the PUD that limits maximum development on the site to produce no more than a specified number of vehicle trips, where the two conditions can instead be interpreted to give effect to both. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 76 Or LUBA 187 (2017).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will reject an argument that, without a master plan map, a local government cannot determine exactly how many lots exist within the master plan area or whether existing development exceeds a maximum number of dwelling units imposed in the master plan, where the county adopted findings identifying how many dwellings currently exist within the master plan area, and the petitioner fails to challenge those findings. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local government does not violate the "goalpost" rule at ORS 215.427(3)(a) when it applies a 1983 master plan to govern development within the master planned community, consistent with a code provision providing that a master plan stays in effect until repealed, and rejects arguments that the master plan had been impliedly repealed, notwithstanding that the local government had not previously applied the master plan as a source of development standards. Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A city errs in requiring an applicant seeking to create four lots within a planned unit development (PUD) as contemplated by the PUD approval to file an application to "modify" the PUD, where the proposed subdivision proposes no modification to the PUD. Tokarski v. City of Salem, 74 Or LUBA 124 (2016).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. An applicant may file an application to modify a planned unit development (PUD), while also objecting to the need to file a PUD modification application, without thereby waiving the objection. Recovery House VI v. City of Eugene, 150 Or App 382, 946 P2d 242 (1997). Tokarski v. City of Salem, 74 Or LUBA 124 (2016).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will affirm a city council's interpretation of provisions of the city code's planned development chapter to apply to a lot with portions that contain steep slopes that, under the city's subdivision ordinance, make the lot developable at a lesser density than the zoning allows, where the city council's interpretation of the planned development chapter is not inconsistent with one of the purposes of the planned development chapter to provide the city with flexibility to consider proposals that "cannot be obtained through traditional lot-by-lot subdivision," and is not inconsistent with the express language of the planned development chapter. Harrison v. City of Cannon Beach, 72 Or LUBA 182 (2015).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Findings are inadequate to explain why a tentative planned unit development (PUD) and subdivision will not be a significant risk to public health and safety, where evidence in the record demonstrates that the portions of the property that will be developed with roads, parking lots, and sewer, water and electrical lines contain loose soils. In that circumstance, where the findings do not conclude that the public health and safety standard does not apply to roads, parking lots, and sewer, electrical and water lines, and there is no finding that these aspects of the proposed PUD and subdivision can be constructed on those loose soils without causing unreasonable or significant public health and safety concerns, the findings are inadequate. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 67 Or LUBA 33 (2013).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a development code requires that PUD applicants prepare a "land use analysis" that establishes that specified minimum and maximum development levels in a particular zoning district will be met when all of the properties in that zoning district are developed, LUBA will not assume that without explicit direction about how to go about preparing such a "land use analysis," PUD applicants will be unable to do so. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A PUD master plan map that is adopted as part of an amendment to an existing PUD Master Plan that imposed a 200-foot setback in a subarea of the PUD does not eliminate that 200-foot setback simply because the amended PUD master plan map does not show the 200-foot setback, where all of the PUD master plan maps that show the entire PUD also do not show the 200-foot setback and the entire basis for the 200-foot setback is found in text and maps that apply only to one subarea of the PUD. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. An amendment to a PUD Master Plan does not eliminate a 200-foot setback that applies in one subarea of the PUD, where the amendment makes no mention of the 200-foot setback or the subarea of the PUD where the 200-foot setback applies. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. ORS 227.173(1), which requires that city decisions on applications for permits be based on standards and criteria in the city's development ordinance, does not mandate that a PUD Master Plan also include "standards and criteria," as those words are used in ORS 227.173(1). Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Whether language in a PUD Master Plan constitutes a mandatory requirement that will apply in approving future specific development within the PUD will depend on the text and context of the PUD Master Plan language and the nature of the future proposal. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A zoning ordinance PUD Master Plan modification criterion that requires that the modification not have significant additional impacts on surrounding properties applies at the time the PUD Master Plan is modified, and the required finding that the modification will not have such impacts must be made at the time the PUD is modified and that finding cannot be deferred to a later date even though the precise nature of development may be better known at that later date. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where PUD modifications are subject to "the applicable criteria used for the initial approval," a city hearings officer errs in concluding that only the criteria that are specifically mentioned in the initial approval decision apply. Just because criteria are not specifically mentioned in the initial approval decision findings does not mean the unmentioned criteria were not "used" in granting the initial approval. Athletic Club of Bend v. City of Bend, 63 Or LUBA 467 (2011).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A county does not err in interpreting a standard that requires a finding that property have landscape features "whose preservation requires planned development rather than conventional lot-by-lot development" to require a comparison between planned development and conventional lot-by-lot development, instead of a comparison between proposed planned development and the existing development on the property. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Notwithstanding code language that appears to describe zero lot line dwellings as conditionally permitted uses, where the underlying zone clearly provides that zero lot line dwellings are permitted uses in that zone and not conditional uses, such dwellings may be approved without applying conditional use standards. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A code provision stating that where a planned development standard and the underlying zone conflict, the planned development standard controls does not resolve conflicts between planned development standards and other code provisions that are not part of the underlying zone. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A county does not err in interpreting a planned development standard requiring that at least 50 percent of the development be open space "retained for common use by owners and residents of the development" to refer to both commonly owned open space and privately owned open space. Saddle Butte Residents' Association v. Douglas County, 56 Or LUBA 269 (2008).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local government interpretation that construes a local code requirement for open space that requires either "open space" or "outdoor recreation area" in a manner that requires both open space and outdoor recreation area is not entitled to deference under ORS 197.829(1). Bridge Street Partners v. City of Lafayette, 56 Or LUBA 387 (2008).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will affirm a city council's interpretation of a planned unit development standard authorizing septic tanks for individual lots where it is "impractical" to connect the development to the city sewer system, to govern only circumstances requiring permanent septic tank installations, not temporary septic tanks to be used until the city system is upgraded, followed by mandatory connection to the city system. Coquille Citizens for Resp. Growth v. City of Coquille, 55 Or LUBA 155 (2007).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will affirm a local government's interpretation of a planned unit development (PUD) standard prohibiting "clear-cutting" of trees, that trees that must be removed for siting individual dwellings will be evaluated at the time of building permit application, not as part of the PUD approval, where the standard does not explicitly require evaluation of trees removed for dwellings, and it is impossible to determine at the time of PUD approval which trees must be removed for dwellings. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Whether language in a purpose statement of a land use regulation functions as an approval criterion or imposes additional affirmative duties on the local government in approving or denying proposed development depends on the text and context of that language. A prohibition in a recreational commercial zone purpose statement on "traditional residential uses" unless such uses are "necessary to support the primary recreationally-oriented uses" imposes an affirmative obligation on the local government in approving residential development in the zone. Concerned Homeowners v. City of Creswell, 52 Or LUBA 620 (2006).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the county code allows modification of any standards applied to a planned unit development, the county may modify any such standards, even city street width standards that are applied pursuant to county code. Didzun v. Lincoln County, 51 Or LUBA 19 (2006).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A county code provision that allows "modification" of any standard applied to a planned unit development allows modification not only of numerical standards such as street width, but also modification of standards that prohibit certain features, such as double frontage lots. Didzun v. Lincoln County, 51 Or LUBA 19 (2006).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation allowing residential units within a "recreational planned unit development," notwithstanding that "residential uses" are prohibited in the underlying zone, where the zone nonetheless allows a recreational planned unit development, and the code definition of that term includes residential units as a core component. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a city's Master Plan Development District simply allows the uses that are permitted in certain other districts, the city erroneously interprets its code to allow those uses without the minimum lot size, minimum lot width, limit on building coverage, front or rear setback requirements or building height or any other standards or regulations that are applied to those uses in the other zoning districts. Those limitations from the other zoning districts apply unless the city applies the Master Plan Development District provision that allows the city to apply alternative standards in certain circumstances. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. The requirements of OAR 660-012-0060 only apply to amendments "to functional plans, acknowledged comprehensive plans and land use regulations." Where a city took separate actions to approve a master plan of development and to amend its comprehensive plan to conform to the master plan of development and petitioners only appealed the master plan of development approval decision to LUBA, the requirements of OAR 660-012-0060 did not apply to the only decision that was before LUBA in that appeal. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where an applicant's expert and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service disagree about the adequacy of the expert's survey of endangered western lilies on the site of a proposed development, LUBA will defer to the city's choice to believe the applicant's expert. While the United States Fish and Wildlife Service may ultimately prevail in future federal permitting proceedings, a city's choice between conflicting testimony at the city's master plan of development approval stage presents no basis for reversal or remand. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local government is within its discretion under ORS 197.829(1) to interpret a planned unit development regulation requiring protection of "public safety" on sites with natural hazards "through clustering of development" on that portion of the site suitable for development as not requiring consideration of off-site impacts of proposed development. Dinges v. City of Oregon City, 49 Or LUBA 376 (2005).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A city code that requires planned development proposals to preserve trees "to the greatest degree possible" does not require that the applicant fundamentally change the nature of the application to maximize tree preservation. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A city may not interpret a code exception for tree cutting permits to exempt a subdivision from a separate local code requirement for a tree protection plan, where the exemption for tree cutting permits has nothing to do with the separate tree protection plan requirement. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A city does not err by interpreting a code requirement that 20 percent of the site for a planned development be landscaped to allow an applicant to include areas of the site that will be included in common open space and left in their natural state. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local planned unit development (PUD) requirement that development preserve "significant on-site resources" and "worthwhile natural features" does not impose an absolute requirement that significant vegetation and other natural resources must be preserved in all cases. A local government does not commit error by balancing such preservation requirements with other code requirements and explaining why in some cases the preservation requirement is sacrificed to achieve other code requirements. Dept. of Transportation v. City of Eugene, 38 Or LUBA 814 (2000).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. When the local government cannot show that a comprehensive plan policy requiring site-specific soil surveys and geologic studies when potential geologic problems exist is couched in mandatory terms and absent some indication that it has been fully implemented in the zoning code, the policy is decisional criteria for development applications. Highland Condominium Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 37 Or LUBA 13 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A finding that a proposed planned unit development will "reduce" site disturbance is inadequate to demonstrate compliance with a standard that requires that the proposed development shall be designed to avoid unnecessary site disturbance. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will not exercise its authority under ORS 197.835(11)(b) to affirm a decision notwithstanding inadequate findings, where the local government fails to adopt findings of compliance with a criterion requiring that planned unit development be designed to minimize the number and size of cuts and fills, and it is not obvious from evidence in the record that the PUD design minimizes cuts and fills. Salo v. City of Oregon City, 36 Or LUBA 415 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a local code provision requires that a proposed planned unit development employ progressive site designs that reduce major alterations of the site and the project by its nature does not require any major alterations to the site, the local provision is satisfied without a further finding that the project employs a progressive site design. Hard Rock Enterprises v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 106 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the applicant for a planned unit development proposes to use an area to satisfy both open space and water quality facility requirements, and petitioner and a staff report raise concerns below that the proposed open space fails to comply with approval standards because it is unusable for any purpose other than for drainage, the county must adopt findings addressing that issue. Hard Rock Enterprises v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 106 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a local government's modification of standards applicable to a planned unit development rests on independent alternative grounds, petitioner's demonstration of error in one alternative ground provides no basis to reverse or remand the challenged decision where petitioner fails to challenge the other alternative ground. Hard Rock Enterprises v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 106 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A requirement that off-street parking be located "on or within 100 feet of the site of the primary use" is satisfied where the proposed off-street parking is not associated with individual dwellings within a proposed planned unit development, but is additional parking associated with the project as a whole. In that circumstance, the "site of the primary use" is the project as a whole, and the additional off-street parking need not be located within 100 feet of each individual dwelling. Hard Rock Enterprises v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 106 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a PUD condition of approval requires that certain issues be resolved prior to preliminary plat approval of Phase 7 of the PUD, LUBA will affirm as reasonable and correct a city's interpretation of that condition to allow Phase 7A to be approved in advance of Phase 7B without resolving those issues. Claus v. City of Sherwood, 35 Or LUBA 437 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will not consider arguments that a city erred in approving a modified PUD Master Plan, where the LUBA appeal challenges a preliminary plat decision that is subject to the previously approved PUD Master Plan and petitioner does not appeal a separate city decision that modifies the PUD Master Plan. Claus v. City of Sherwood, 35 Or LUBA 437 (1999).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where preliminary subdivision and PUD approval is not modified, approval of the final subdivision and PUD plans is governed by the standard in effect when the application for preliminary approval was submitted. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A code requirement that deeds to property in a PUD shall stipulate that no "private structure of any type" shall be constructed in common areas does not apply to and does not prohibit construction of drainfields by the "developer" in common areas. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a code requires that the final subdivision and PUD plans be in "substantial conformance" with the preliminary approval and the city interprets the "substantial conformance" requirement by analogizing to the distinction drawn in the code between "major" subdivision/PUD amendments, which must be approved quasi-judicially, and "minor" amendments, which may be approved administratively, the city's interpretation will be upheld. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will not defer to city's interpretation that a city code requirement for "usable outdoor recreation space * * * for the shared or common use of all the residents" is satisfied by balconies or by private patios and decks, where the code requires that such balconies, patios and decks be "designed to provide privacy." Dodds v. City of West Linn, 33 Or LUBA 470 (1997).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A zoning ordinance provision that states land use districts may "float" within the boundaries of a proposed planned development can be interpreted to mean that such districts may be dissolved and totally reconfigured, with densities reallocated. Huntzicker v. Washington County, 30 Or LUBA 397 (1996).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Allowing both the reconfiguration of zoning districts and density transfers is consistent with the concept of "floating zones," which are intended to promote flexibility in master planning. Huntzicker v. Washington County, 30 Or LUBA 397 (1996).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. The provisions of ORS 358.920 to 358.950 and 97.740 to 97.760 concerning excavation of archaeological sites are not approval standards a local government must address in approving a planned development, so long as the local government does not approve the planned development in a way that obviates the applicant's responsibility to comply with those statues, without demonstrating (1) the statutes do not apply to the excavation or construction that may be carried out under the challenged decision, or (2) the statutory requirements have been met. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation of a code requirement, that a PUD tentative plan covering a portion of property under single ownership be accompanied by a statement proving the entire property can be developed and used in accord with code standards, as requiring that the PUD not render the remainder of the property undevelopable. McGowan v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 9 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. That a proposed partition of land within a PUD may violate private covenants, conditions and restrictions, provides no basis for reversal or remand of a challenged land use decision. Long v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 132 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Local code provisions which simply allow increased density for controlled income and rent housing do not eliminate the requirement that such housing comply with other requirements of the local code. Langford v. City of Eugene, 26 Or LUBA 60 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Findings supporting approval of a PUD that determine there are solutions available to various landslide, drainage and related problems affecting the subject property, and that those solutions are possible, likely and reasonably certain to succeed, are adequate to establish that the local government did not improperly defer compliance with relevant PUD standards. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 601 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Determining compatibility is inherently subjective. Where there is conflicting believable evidence concerning a proposed PUD's compatibility with the surrounding neighborhood, LUBA will not disturb the local government's determination that the height of the proposed buildings is compatible with the surrounding neighborhood. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 601 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a code chapter prohibiting vegetation disturbance in certain areas allows activities authorized by a land use decision made before the effective date of the chapter, the local government may interpret the code to allow activities authorized under a newly amended PUD development plan, if those same activities where authorized under an original PUD development plan approved prior to the effective date of the code chapter. Gage v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 449 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a local code allows approval of a rural planned development (RPD) "in conjunction with" a land division, and establishes comprehensive standards for RPDs, including standards for lot line adjustments in an approved RPD, the local government's interpretation of a code provision allowing revisions to an approved land division as giving it authority to approve lot line adjustments in an approved RPD which are not otherwise allowable under the RPD provisions, is clearly wrong. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local code may provide a PUD process in which an approved PUD overall development plan, rather than the comprehensive plan standards applied in approving the overall development plan, governs final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. As long as comprehensive plan issues relating to the impact of an entire PUD on internal and external roadways were addressed in approving an overall development plan, under applicable local code provisions particular questions concerning those issues that were not raised in granting overall development plan approval may not be raised during final PUD approval. Westlake Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Lake Oswego, 25 Or LUBA 145 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Local government interpretations that particular PUD approval standards apply only at one stage of a multi-stage approval process will be sustained where the relevant code language supports that construction. However, LUBA will reject arguments that a local code should be interpreted in that manner, where the challenged decision does not interpret and apply the local code in that way and the local government's interpretation and application of its code is not clearly wrong. DLCD v. Crook County, 25 Or LUBA 98 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the challenged decision includes only a conclusory statement that detailed code criteria for PUD development plans are satisfied, and neither the decision itself nor the respondents' briefs explain how other findings addressing other code standards are adequate to demonstrate compliance with the PUD development plan criteria, LUBA cannot conclude the PUD development plan criteria are either satisfied or inapplicable to the subject proposal. Davenport v. City of Tigard, 25 Or LUBA 67 (1993).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a code provides that changes having significant impacts are major PUD amendments, and lists categories of changes that might result in significant impacts, whether a proposed amendment falls within a category on the list is not in itself determinative of whether the amendment is major. Because the categories are not independent bases for identifying a major amendment, a determination that a proposed PUD amendment is not major need not be supported by findings addressing each category. Gage v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 47 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a county code contains a general PUD provision stating that individual lot size in PUDs is unrestricted, but is subsequently amended to include a prohibition against "flexible lot size developments" in a particular zone, the code is correctly interpreted to prohibit PUDs which would create individual lots smaller than the minimum lot size required by that particular zone. Niedermeyer v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 380 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local code requirement for findings of preliminary PUD or subdivision plan feasibility does not require the kind of certainty or supporting evidence that may ultimately be required for approval of final construction plans. Bartels v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 182 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a local government elects to limit the length of cul-de-sac streets, it may also establish how the length of such streets is to be measured. However, where no particular method of measuring the length of cul-de-sac streets is specified in its land use regulations, the local government must determine length applying the regulations as they are written and applying the plain and ordinary meaning of the operative term "length." Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Under applicable city land use regulation definitions and general understanding the length of a cul-de-sac street is measured to the end of whatever turnaround is provided; not to the point at which the right-of-way widens to accommodate the turnaround. Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A comprehensive plan standard establishing a minimum building site requirement of one acre is not inconsistent with plan and code requirements that subdivision lots in a zoning district allowing development at a density of one unit per five acres be clustered to provide not less than 30 percent common open space. Such a plan standard simply sets a minimum area requirement for each clustered lot. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. It is possible to interpret a comprehensive plan standard requiring that "the minimum percentage of common open space shall be 30 percent, excluding roads and property under water," as requiring that the exclusion apply only to the lands subject to the open space requirement, (2) only to the lands that may be used to satisfy the open space requirement, or (3) to both. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local code definition of common open space as space to be "used, maintained and enjoyed by the owners and occupants of the individual building units" does not require that for all common open space the owners and occupants have physical access to "use" such common open space. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. A local code provision which establishes minimum requirements for what must be included in a PUD preliminary development plan application does not establish or modify the approval standards for such plans set forth elsewhere in the code. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the height limitation for the underlying zone is a standard applicable to approval of a PUD preliminary development plan, under ORS 227.178(3) the preliminary development plan must comply with the building height limitation in effect when the preliminary development plan application was first submitted. Gilson v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 343 (1991).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the language employed in the purpose statement of a code PUD chapter evidences only what the local government intends the consequences of application of the specific provisions of that PUD chapter to be, the purpose statement does not establish independent approval standards for individual PUD applications. White v. City of Oregon City, 20 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Under code provisions for two-stage approval of planned unit developments, the finding of "feasibility" required for first stage approval requires a finding that solutions to problems posed by the project are "possible, likely, and reasonably certain to succeed." Provided the required finding of "feasibility" is made at the first stage, where public hearings are provided, resolution of precise solutions and technical matters may occur as part of second-stage approval without additional public hearings. Bartels v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 303 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the record of the local proceedings includes expert testimony identifying potential road and utility construction and fill problems and suggesting ways in which those problems may be resolved, the testimony is adequate to support a local government's findings that those aspects of a proposed planned unit development are "feasible." Bartels v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 303 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a planned unit development is proposed on a site with steep slopes and unstable soils, unexplained expressions of confidence by experts concerning the feasibility of proposed residential construction are not sufficient to constitute substantial evidence supporting a finding that the proposed residential development is "feasible." This is particularly the case where the expert study primarily relied upon by the local government expressly states it does not address feasibility of residential construction. Bartels v. City of Portland, 20 Or LUBA 303 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the local plan requires that the increased density and smaller lots allowed in a PUD be offset by the provision of "useable open space," such open space must benefit the entire PUD, and cannot consist of the oversize private front and rear yards of the larger lots. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where a local government requires property designated as a significant natural area on its Goal 5 inventory to be developed through its PUD process, and a comprehensive plan provision requires PUD development proposals "to address preservation of wildlife habitat and natural vegetation," the local government has made an OAR 660-16-010(3)(c) "limit conflicting uses" decision, and a decision approving a PUD on such property must be supported by findings demonstrating how wildlife habitat and natural vegetation will be preserved. Schryver v. City of Hillsboro, 20 Or LUBA 90 (1990).

32.2 Planned Unit Developments – Standards. Where the local code provides for the approval of an overall PUD development plan and allows approved PUDs to be developed in phases, and the local government addresses the public services impacts of an entire PUD and finds relevant plan policies satisfied in approving such an overall PUD plan, the local government is not required to readdress plan public services policies in subsequent approval of a development phase, provided the requested phase approval is consistent with the type and intensity of development in the approved overall PUD plan. Hoffman v. City of Lake Oswego, 20 Or LUBA 64 (1990).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Federal Public Lands Survey System (PLSS) surveys did not create discrete units of land for development purposes. Urstadt v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 118 (2020).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The purpose of the federal Public Lands Survey System (PLSS) was to facilitate the identification of specific areas of property so that they could be easily referenced in conveyance documents; accordingly, PLSS surveys did not create discrete legal parcels for development purposes simply by showing 40-acre Government Lots (GLots) or other boundary lines. Kuether v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 133 (2020).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Lots depicted on an unrecorded survey filed with the county surveyor's office are not lawful units of land under ORS 92.010(3)(a)(B) where (1) the survey was not subject to the relevant subdivision ordinance because the ordinance defined "subdivide land" as "to partition a parcel of land into four or more parcels of less than five acres each for the purpose of transfer of ownership or building development" and only one of the depicted lots was less than five acres in size, and, (2) when the depicted lots were subsequently conveyed as separate units of land, they did not comply with the applicable minimum parcel size for the creation of new parcels. Kuether v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 133 (2020).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where separate applications to partition two parcels under a single ownership into three parcels each receive final approval in the same calendar year, the resultant units of land are not "lawfully created" where state statute requires that divisions of "an area or tract of land into four or more lots within a calendar year when such area or tract of land exists as a unit or contiguous units of land under a single ownership" receive subdivision approval. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 65 (2019).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Traffic performance standards in the local government's transportation system plan (TSP) are not approval criteria applicable to a limited land use decision that were incorporated pursuant to ORS 197.195(1), where the applicable criteria either do not refer to the TSP at all or where they only generally "incorporate[] by reference the city's public facility master plans, including plans for domestic water, sanitary sewer, storm drainage, parks, and transportation." Oster v. City of Silverton, 79 Or LUBA 447 (2019).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. When a lot is an unplatted remainder of a subdivision and is not depicted at all on the approved subdivision plat, its current configuration may have resulted from the subdivision but that does not indicate that the county approved the creation of the lot by applying subdivision approval standards. On remand, the hearings officer needs to determine if the lot was approved by applying subdivision standards. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 164 (2018).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A county does not err in failing to process an application to vacate a public easement as a modification of a condition of approval for the subdivision in which the easement is located, where the easement was not required as a condition of subdivision approval, but instead stemmed from a private agreement between the developer and others. Neighbors for Smart Growth v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 319 (2017).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the text of a county comprehensive plan policy limits redevelopment of areas developed as golf courses or designated open space or common area within a resort, but includes no language prohibiting redevelopment of other areas within the resort, interpreting the policy to implicitly prohibit new residential development anywhere within the resort would impermissibly insert what has been omitted pursuant to ORS 174.010, and may not survive even the deferential review required under ORS 197.829(1) and Siporen v. City of Medford, 349 Or 247, 243 P3d 776 (2010). Kine v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 419 (2017).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the city code requires a "Type III" procedure for a land division that includes four or more lots, but defines "lots" to exclude "tracts," the city correctly rejects arguments that a division that creates three lots and two open space tracts must be processed under the "Type III" procedure. Frewing v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 59 (2016).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA will reject arguments that a hearings officer committed procedural error in not returning a subdivision application to the neighborhood association for additional review based on minor changes that staff requested to the subdivision plat, where the petitioner identifies nothing in the city code that requires additional review by the neighborhood association when the subdivision plat is amended during the proceedings before the hearings officer. Frewing v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 59 (2016).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Arguments that future construction of a potential pedestrian trail within a subdivision tract will violate applicable environmental review standards are not a basis to reverse or remand the subdivision decision that creates the tract, where the subdivision decision before LUBA does not approve the pedestrian trail or conduct environmental review, but defers those determinations to a future application for environmental review, when and if the applicant proposes to construct the pedestrian trail. Frewing v. City of Portland, 74 Or LUBA 59 (2016).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city errs in requiring an applicant seeking to create four lots within a planned unit development (PUD) as contemplated by the PUD approval to file an application to "modify" the PUD, where the proposed subdivision proposes no modification to the PUD. Tokarski v. City of Salem, 74 Or LUBA 124 (2016).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 92.040 requires local governments to apply to development of subdivision lots only those approval standards in effect when the subdivision application was filed. Where a prior subdivision decision approved a flag lot under standards that contemplated locating development in the flag portion of the lot, a local government errs in applying post-subdivision standards that would force all development of the lot to be located in the pole portion of the flagpole, and effectively make the lot undevelopable. Group B, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 72 Or LUBA 74 (2015).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Because it is common for a multi-phased tentative subdivision approval to include conditions of approval that apply only to certain phases of development, it is incumbent on a petitioner to raise at the local proceeding any issues involving a legal standard that requires either (1) independent approval of a particular phase of development or (2) the conditioning of construction of an earlier phase of development on fulfillment of conditions applicable to a subsequent phase. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A petitioner does not establish that a hearings officer erred in failing to condition approval of the first phase of a multi-phase development on completion of the second phase, where the petitioner does not identify any code standard or condition governing Phase I that will be violated if Phase II is not completed. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local code provides that "Significant Natural Areas" are a subset of "Significant Natural Resources," a hearings officer does not err in failing to find that a proposed subdivision complies with a local code section that only applies to "Significant Natural Areas," absent a demonstration that the area in question is not only a "Significant Natural Resource," but also a "Significant Natural Area." Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local code provision authorizing a private street if the street is "not needed to provide access to other properties in the area" is not violated by a required pedestrian/bicycle connection between the proposed private street and offsite transit facilities, because "other properties in the area" does not refer to transit facilities in a public right-of-way. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a hearings officer provides two independent bases to approve a private street and a petitioner wishes to challenge both bases, it is improper for the petitioner to challenge one of the bases in a footnote to an assignment of error that challenges the other basis for approving the private street. LUBA generally does not consider arguments in footnotes that set out a different legal theory than that presented in the assignment of error itself. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. While a 4.4 units per acre maximum density standard may limit the number of lots that would otherwise be possible with a 5,000-square-foot minimum lot size without the maximum density standard, the minimum lot size and maximum density standards are not inconsistent. Therefore, there would be no textual inconsistency in interpreting the development code to impose a maximum density standard. Greller v. City of Newberg, 70 Or LUBA 499 (2014).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The procedure provided by ORS 92.234, which allows local governments to revise, replat, or eliminate undeveloped subdivisions through local ordinance, is not the exclusive process for "vacating" existing property lines for purposes of ORS 92.017. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A partition or replat that has the effect of eliminating pre-existing property lines is a "specific process" for "vacating" property lines for both parcels and lots, for purposes of ORS 92.017. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Even if it is legally possible to intentionally create a discrete parcel that consists entirely of nested, discrete lots or parcels without vacating those nested lots or parcels, LUBA will affirm a local government finding that a partition plat that creates a new parcel without depicting any nested lot lines has the effect of vacating the pre-existing lots, where there is nothing on the partition plat, description, or narrative that suggests an intent to preserve the pre-existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. An approved partition plat creating new parcels need not bisect the property lines of pre-existing lots to "vacate" those lots for purposes of ORS 92.017. Even if the boundaries of the new parcels follow the property lines of some pre-existing lots, the partition plat can have the effect of vacating or consolidating the pre-existing lots included within the newly established parcels. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A property line adjustment cannot create new parcels. Where a property line adjustment depicts with dashed lines the interior property lines of lots vacated by a prior partition, the subsequent property line adjustment does not have the legal effect of re-establishing the prior existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. For purposes of attorney fees under the "probable cause" standard in ORS 197.830(15)(b), no reasonable attorney would argue on appeal that a decision that reduces minimum residential density in a proposed five-lot subdivision violates a code provision that expressly authorizes reducing minimum residential density, without presenting some challenge to findings that address the code provision and conclude that reducing the density complies with the code provision. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 63 Or LUBA 522 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. For purposes of attorney fees under the "probable cause" standard in ORS 197.830(15)(b), a reasonable attorney could argue that a Metro code provision mandating a minimum residential density is violated by a decision that approves less than the minimum density, where the Metro code provision directly applies on its face to city subdivision decisions, but is no longer applicable due to the effect of other Metro code provisions and the city's implementation of the Metro minimum residential density requirement. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 63 Or LUBA 522 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a petitioner notes a code provision below requiring that subdivisions comply with lot size and dimensions requirements, but does not argue that including internal roads in the calculation of lot size violates the five-acre minimum lot size, the issue of how internal roads affect calculation of lot size is not raised with the specificity required by ORS 197.763(1) and is waived. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 182 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A reasonable person could conclude from the plat of a neighboring subdivision showing a spur road ending in turnaround bordering the common property line with the proposed subdivision, and a notation that the roads are intended to "benefit this plat," that the spur road is not intended to be a connecting road between the two subdivisions. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 182 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A code provision requiring the "continuation" of existing streets in adjoining subdivisions is not properly interpreted to require that connections be made to internal roads in the adjoining subdivision, where such a connection would have to cross existing platted residential lots. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 182 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. An argument raised below that the application fails to address a general code section that includes a sub-section requiring that private roads be vested in a homeowner's association is insufficient to raise with the specificity required by ORS 197.763(1) the issue of whether proposed private roads located on easements must have the underlying fee vested in the homeowner's association. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 182 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Attorney fees under ORS 197.830(15)(b) are not warranted where the petitioner argued that the county was required under its code to provide for continuation of existing streets in adjoining subdivisions and reasonable persons could disagree, based on the plat of the adjoining subdivision that showed a street apparently stubbed to the common property line, whether the code provision required that street to be continued into the proposed subdivision. Burness v. Douglas County, 62 Or LUBA 555 (2011).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Under ORS 92.100(7), a city decision that approves or withholds approval of a final subdivision plat is not a land use decision or limited land use decision and is not reviewable by LUBA. Calvary Construction v. City of Glendale, 61 Or LUBA 50 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 92.040(2) provides that "only those local government laws * * * that are in effect at the time of [subdivision] application shall govern subsequent construction on the property * * *." A local government does not violate ORS 92.040(2) by applying access standards that were adopted after a subdivision was recorded to deny a request for direct driveway access onto an arterial road adjoining one of the subdivision lots where the proposed driveway would be constructed in part "off" the property and the approved master plan showed access to the lot from an internal local roadway. Athletic Club of Bend, Inc. v. City of Bend, 61 Or LUBA 349 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. When approving a subdivision where approval criteria must be applied in a proceeding where the public has participatory rights, a city may defer findings on a required approval criterion to a later proceeding, so long as that later proceeding is one in which the public has participatory rights. Boucot v. City of Corvallis, 61 Or LUBA 459 (2010).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Approving or denying a tentative subdivision plat within an urban growth boundary is a limited land use decision and therefore not a "permit" decision. Because the ORS 227.175(10)(a) directive that local appeal issues not be limited to those issues identified in the notice of appeal only applies to permit decisions, that statute does not apply to decisions involving the approval or denial of subdivisions. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 59 Or LUBA 23 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Even when an applicant forfeits the right to process a subdivision application under the limited land use provisions of a local code and processes the application under the procedures for permits, the decision approving or denying the subdivision is still a limited land use decision and the provisions of ORS 227.175(10)(a) do not apply. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 59 Or LUBA 23 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Absent a compelling reason to do so, LUBA will not overrule its holding in Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992), that the ORS 92.017 prohibition on consolidating discrete lots and parcels does not prohibit a local government from adopting regulations that limit development of contiguous, substandard-size lots and parcels and effectively consolidate them for development purposes. Thomas v. Wasco County, 58 Or LUBA 452 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A code provision stating that when it appears that the area of a proposed partition is to be ultimately divided into four or more lots or parcels the code provisions pertaining to subdivisions apply simply authorizes the city to apply subdivision procedures and standards to a partition application, and does not itself constitute "standard" or "criteria" under which the city could deny the partition application. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a city discovers late in a proceeding on a partition application that its code may require application of certain subdivision approval standards, the city should identify any applicable subdivision standards and give the applicant the opportunity to demonstrate compliance with them, even if that would require the city to make its decision after the statutory deadline for taking final action on the application has passed. However, it is inconsistent with ORS 227.178(3) for the city to summarily deny the partition and effectively force the applicant to submit a new application, where that denial is not based on any applicable standard or criteria. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Reversal is not warranted under ORS 197.835(10)(a)(A) where a city denies a partition application three weeks prior to expiration of the 120-day deadline based on the city's belief that the proposed partition must be processed as a subdivision, where the city mistakenly believed that its only option was to deny the application and effectively require the applicant to submit a new application, but there is no indication in the record that the city denied the application to avoid the 120-day rule. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A preliminary subdivision plat approval decision that post-dates a vested rights determination under Measure 49 is a land use decision subject to LUBA's review and is not a decision concerning the "nature and extent of [just] compensation" under Measure 49. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where applicable subdivision regulations provide that a subdivision applicant need not demonstrate a water supply is present to serve the proposed subdivision so long as the average lot size is equal to or larger than five acres, a county does not err by approving a proposal to subdivide a 217-acre parcel into a 92-acre lot and other lots that range between two acres and six acres in size, because the average lot size is equal to or greater than five acres. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. If subdivision applicants actually waived their right to submit a subdivision application without a hydrogeology review, they likely could not submit a subdivision application with the hydrogeology review and later insist that the application be considered without a hydrogeology review when the hydrogeology review or other evidence showed that a more detailed hydrogeology study is needed. But where the subdivision applicants did not waive that right, they are not barred from taking the position that a hydrogeology review is not required, simply because they voluntarily submitted one. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A zoning regulation that neither authorizes nor prohibits road construction in exclusive farm use zones provides no basis for reversal or remand of a decision that approves a subdivision of exclusive farm use zoned land, pursuant to Ballot Measure 37 waivers, where that subdivision will require the construction of some roads. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a city "overrides" code provisions requiring that a subdivision developer construct sidewalks without identifying a basis in the city's code or comprehensive plan to waive or vary the sidewalk requirement, LUBA will remand the decision for the city to adopt findings explaining what authority allows the city to override the sidewalk requirement. Soares v. City of Corvallis, 56 Or LUBA 551 (2008).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A county subdivision approval standard requiring that there is "an adequate quantity and quality of water to support the proposed use" is not preempted by state regulations and is a standard that the county must address in approving a subdivision application. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the preliminary subdivision plat approval appears to defer a determination of compliance with a discretionary subdivision approval standard to the final plat decision, but does not explain why the standard does not apply at the time of preliminary plat approval, LUBA will remand the decision to the county to determine when the standard applies and, if it applies at the time of final plat approval, whether the proceedings that govern final plat approval are consistent with the county's statutory obligation to address discretionary land use standards as part of a public process that affords notice and opportunity for public input. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A hearings officer's failure to address arguments that the applicant should improve transportation facilities affected by a proposed destination resort provides no basis for reversal or remand, where a prior development agreement and two earlier development approvals conclusively established the type and extent of transportation improvements the applicant is obligated to make in developing the resort, and the petitioners cite no authority for the hearings officer to require different improvements in approving a subdivision within that resort. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The applicant's failure to provide a survey of individual trees on property to be subdivided is not a basis for reversal or remand, where the applicable approval standards do not require preservation of individual trees, and the information necessary to show compliance with those standards need not include that level of detail. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where subdivision approval criteria require consideration of competing goals or factors, such as contributing to orderly development and preserving natural features, it is permissible and even necessary to conduct a weighing or balancing process between development and preservation of natural features. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A subdivision approval standard requiring preservation of natural features that is written to apply to circumstances where there have been no previous efforts to identify natural features plays a more limited role where the subdivision application is preceded by two final, binding land use decisions that have already largely determined which natural features will be preserved and which will be lost to development. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a city's land use code defines the term "lot" but excludes a lot from that definition if "[t]he lot as originally platted is no longer whole and consists of individual property remnants," all remnants, large and small, are considered remnants and are no longer within the definition of "lot." Jackson v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 138 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Absent some expression of intent in a deed that separately listed lots or parcels are to be merged into a single unit of land, the listing of multiple lots or parcels in a single paragraph or a single sentence of a deed does not operate to merge those lots or parcels into a single unit of land. The lots retain their separate identify following the transfer. Jackson v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 138 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. When the definitions of the relevant terms set out in ORS chapter 92 are read together, whether a division of land creates "parcels" or "lots" depends the number units of land that one or more divisions of land in a single year produce. If the division or divisions produce four or more units of land, they are lots; if they produce three of fewer, they are parcels. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Applying the contextual analysis that is required by Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), adh'd to as modified on recons, 179 Or App 409, 40 P3d 532 (2002), even though ORS 215.750(1) does not expressly state that the references in that statute to "lots" are limited to lawfully created lots, and even though the relevant definitions in ORS 92.010 do not expressly require that a lot must be a lawfully created lot, if those statutes are read in context with ORS 92.012, 92.018(1), 92.025(1) and ORS 215.010(1)(a), it is sufficiently clear that when the legislature used the term "lot" in ORS 215.750(1) it did not mean to include unlawfully created lots. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. County authority to approve forest template dwellings derives from ORS 215.750(1). In exercising the authority granted by ORS 215.750(1), a county may not apply a county definition of "lot" to recognize lots that could not be recognized under ORS 215.750(1). The county may not set a lower standard for approving forest template dwellings under county legislation than the standard that is set by ORS 215.750. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA will reverse a county decision that approves a rural subdivision in a forest zone following a county Ballot Measure 37 waiver, where the owner has not obtained a waiver of applicable state regulations. The county has no authority to approve development inconsistent with state regulations, unless and until the state waives those regulations. DLCD v. Jackson County, 53 Or LUBA 580 (2007).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Under a preliminary subdivision approval standard requiring a finding, based on the preliminary grading plan, that it is feasible for the final grading plan to comply with code standards governing final grading plans, a finding to that effect is not a deferral of findings of compliance with the standards governing final grading plans. Angius v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 222 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Absent some authority to the contrary, in approving a preliminary grading plan the local government is not required to determine what procedures will govern consideration of the final grading plan. Where the decision approving the preliminary grading plan does not determine and is not required to determine the procedures that govern the final grading plan, LUBA will reject arguments that the local government erred in failing to impose conditions requiring the county to provide notice and opportunity to request a hearing in considering the final grading plan. Angius v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 222 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A hearings officer's findings are sufficient to explain why a proposed subdivision complies with criteria that require preserving existing natural drainage channels where those findings explain that drainage within the historic drainage area has largely been diverted and there is no evidence that more than a de minimis flow of drainage will cross a shallow swale on the property to be subdivided. Kyle v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 399 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where LUBA remands a preliminary subdivision plat approval to the local government to address an issue, the local government may limit the hearing on remand to that issue, and need not address as part of the remand hearing other issues raised by petitioner regarding whether detailed development plans required by the preliminary plat approval are inconsistent with the approved conceptual plans approved. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 518 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A petitioner fails to demonstrate that the decision maker is biased or improperly influenced to approve a subdivision by the possibility that the developer may donate open space land to the city, where the decision maker twice voted to approve the subdivision prior to learning that the developer and staff had discussed donation. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 518 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where neither the local government nor LUBA has jurisdiction to resolve the legality of a condition requiring necessary facilities to be constructed prior to obtaining final approval of a two-step subdivision approval process, the local government may (1) adopt findings establishing that fulfillment of the condition of approval is not precluded as a matter of law, and (2) ensure that the condition will be fulfilled prior to final subdivision approval or actual development. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA need not resolve the parties' legal dispute over whether a condition of subdivision approval requiring construction of a street through a neighboring development is consistent with conditions, covenants and restrictions governing that neighboring development, where only the circuit court has jurisdiction to finally resolve that dispute, and the local government has adequately established an alternative basis to impose the condition regardless of how that legal dispute is resolved. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 223.930(1) does not require that a city, rather than a subdivision developer, construct public street improvements, in order to exercise its condemnation authority to acquire the street right-of-way. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA will reject a petitioner's challenge to a condition of subdivision approval requiring construction of a public street in a neighboring subdivision notwithstanding that the street may violate covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) governing that neighboring subdivision, where the city adequately demonstrates that it has statutory authority to condemn the land and construct the street notwithstanding the CC&Rs, and the city adequately ensures that the condition requiring construction of the street will be fulfilled prior to final development approval. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Absent some authority to the contrary, a local government need not approve a property line adjustment necessary to effect a proposed subdivision prior to or contemporaneously with adopting the preliminary subdivision approval. A finding that it is feasible to obtain a property line adjustment, combined with a condition requiring that the adjustment be obtained prior to final subdivision approval, is sufficient. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A hearings official does not improperly substitute state agency permit approval criteria for a local subdivision drainage criterion, where she denies subdivision approval based on a finding that the applicant failed to demonstrate that proposed drywells that would be needed for adequate drainage could be approved by the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality or that there were alternative methods of drainage if the drywells could not be approved. Weiskind v. City of Eugene, 52 Or LUBA 753 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A condition that purports to impose system development charges as a condition of approving conversion of a mobile home park to a manufactured dwelling subdivision is prohibited by ORS 92.845(1)(b), unless it falls within some exception to that statute. D & B Home Investments v. City of Donald, 51 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 92.845(1)(c) allows local governments to impose system development charges on conversion of a mobile home park to a manufactured dwelling subdivision only when such charges are "based on the prior approval" of the park. Where the prior park approval did not impose system development charges, ORS 92.845(1)(c) does not apply. D & B Home Investments v. City of Donald, 51 Or LUBA 1 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city does not err in interpreting a code provision requiring that a subdivision plat provide access "that will allow its development in accordance" with the code to not require that the applicant provide additional access to a parcel that is already developed consistent with applicable zoning. The code does not require the applicant to provide access to allow for potential redevelopment of developed parcels. Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 51 OR LUBA 56 (2006).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where it appears that providing access to phase 1 of a proposed subdivision is feasible, but the tentative plat application does not show how access will be provided, a hearings officer does not err in imposing a condition of final plat approval requiring that the applicant provide a specific plan for access to phase 1. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. In order to "incorporate" a comprehensive plan standard into a local government's land use regulations within the meaning of ORS 197.195(1) and thus apply that plan standard to a limited land use decision as an approval criterion, the local government must at least amend its land use regulation to identify specific plan policies or provisions that apply to a limited land use decision as approval criteria. A code requirement to "comply with the comprehensive plan" is insufficient to incorporate any comprehensive plan standard under ORS 197.195(1). Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A general code standard requiring streets to be improved with curbs and other facilities "if required" is not properly interpreted to require curbs for a private street, where the specific standards governing private streets do not require curbs. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A hearings officer errs in approving a cul-de-sac under subdivision criteria that allow a cul-de-sac only where existing development on adjacent property prevents a street connection and a connected street pattern is not possible, where (1) the "existing development" is on the same property being subdivided, (2) there is evidence that a street connection is possible, and (3) there are no findings explaining why a street connection is not possible. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the approved tentative plat does not propose curbs on a private street, but the hearings officer's findings suggest that curbs will be provided to direct storm water to catch basins and there is expert testimony that curbs are necessary to direct storm water to catch basins, remand is necessary to address whether the decision requires curbs and, if not, how storm water will be directed to catch basins. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the decision approves a cul-de-sac that may be longer than 600 feet, depending on how the "block" is measured, remand is necessary to explain how the blocks created by the cul-de-sac comply with a subdivision approval standard prohibiting blocks longer than 600 feet as measured between the centerline of "through cross streets." Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A subdivision approval standard that requires a subdivision street layout must "best balance needs for economy, safety, efficiency and environmental compatibility" does not require that one or more alternative street layouts necessarily must be evaluated in all cases. Doob v. City of Grants Pass, 48 Or LUBA 245 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A decision that allows modifications to an existing berm intended to protect a neighboring subdivision from sight and smells of the city sewage treatment plant is consistent with that subdivision's conditions of approval, where the conditions do not require a berm of any particular size, shape or height, and the decision allows only modifications that do not degrade the function of the berm. Cove at Brookings Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Brookings, 47 Or LUBA 1 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. City planning staff cannot informally modify or void two earlier final, written decisions issued pursuant to code-required procedures that altered the deadlines for filing a final plat approval application. At a minimum, modification or revocation of those final, written decisions to restore the original deadline must be accomplished by a final, written decision. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 47 Or LUBA 282 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A final, written decision that effectively, if implicitly, restores the original deadline for filing the final subdivision plat application, and then extends that deadline, is properly viewed as a modification or revocation of an earlier decision that places the tentative plat approval on inactive status, subject to a different final plat application deadline. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 47 Or LUBA 282 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The ORS 197.763(6)(b) right to request that a hearing be continued must be exercised prior to the close of the initial evidentiary hearing. Where the initial evidentiary hearing was held before the planning commission, a party has no right under ORS 197.763(6)(b) to request a continuance in a subsequent hearing before the city council, notwithstanding that the planning commission was evenly divided and could not reach a majority vote to approve or to deny an application for subdivision approval. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local government's findings explain that a subdivision applicant's plan for achieving visual clearance is adequate and that the applicant is negotiating with the adjoining property owner to secure the easement that will be necessary to implement that plan and is confident that the easement can be secured, the local government does not err by failing to require that the applicant obtain the easement prior to preliminary plan approval and failing to find that it is feasible for the applicant to secure the easement. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where property is zoned for minimum lot sizes of five acres, with smaller lots to be allowed when services become available, approval of a five-acre-lot subdivision is not a de facto zone change. Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a challenged decision approving a subdivision does not purport to adopt a zone change, grant a variance or grant conditional use approval, the county's failure to grant such approvals, even if required, does not convert the decision from a "limited land use decision" into a "land use decision." Nez Perce Tribe v. Wallowa County, 47 Or LUBA 419 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A finding that a proposed dead-end street can exceed the code maximum grade because there are no turning movements on the street is inadequate, where the finding fails to take into account turning movements at the intersection of the local street and the nearest public road, where the grade also exceeds the maximum. McCulloh v. City of Jacksonville, 46 Or LUBA 267 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Even if city adoption of the Uniform Fire Code (UFC) makes the UFC standards applicable approval standards, ORS 368.039(1) authorizes the city to adopt standards that supersede UFC requirements. McCulloh v. City of Jacksonville, 46 Or LUBA 267 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the local code requires that any "features explicitly included" in a subdivision application must comply with applicable development standards, a city errs in declining to consider whether existing houses and a proposed shared driveway easement shown on a subdivision application comply with applicable development standards. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 227.175(10)(a)(E)(ii), which was adopted in response to the Court of Appeals' decision in Johns v. City of Lincoln City, 146 Or App 594, 933 P2d 978 (1997), and specifically provides that a de novo appeal of a permit decision under 227.175(10)(a) may not be limited to issues raised in the local notice of appeal, does not apply to appeals of limited land use decisions. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the definition of "lot width" in a local code is written with regularly shaped lots in mind, and city's interpretation and application of that definition to an irregularly shaped lot produces a lot width that is no stranger than the lot width that is produced by petitioner's interpretation and application of that definition, LUBA will defer to the city's interpretation. McKeown v. City of Eugene, 46 Or LUBA 494 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Proposed creation of 39 condominium units does not constitute a "subdivision" under a code definition that implements the Oregon Subdivision and Series Partition Control Law at ORS 92.305 to 92.495, which in relevant part defines "subdivision" to exclude property interests created pursuant to the Oregon Condominium statute. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where there is conflicting believable expert testimony regarding the efficacy of a subdivision applicant's proposed measures to ensure that construction of a road near large trees with intertwined roots can be accomplished without so damaging the roots that the trees will die, LUBA will defer to the city's choice of which expert to believe. Miller v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 536 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city does not err in approving a subdivision applicant's tree protection plan with a condition that the applicant provide the city arborist with construction documents so that the arborist can determine whether additional trees must be removed. While that condition could be viewed as an improper deferral of a finding concerning the adequacy of the tree protection plan, it does not do so where the condition does not specify that the tree protection plan may be revised without additional public hearings and the condition simply creates a more structured approach for computing the mitigation that would be required in any event without the condition. Miller v. City of Tigard, 46 Or LUBA 536 (2004).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. There is no inconsistency in a city council subdivision approval decision that (1) refuses to delay approval or require setbacks for a possible future freeway, (2) requires elimination of a proposed subdivision access to the existing roadway that might be displaced by the possible future freeway, and (3) eliminates a planning commission requirement for pedestrian access to the roadway that might be displaced by the possible future freeway where (a) the possible future freeway is not yet included in the city's comprehensive plan, (b) the decision to eliminate the proposed roadway connection is based on an Oregon Department of Transportation policy that would preclude approval of the roadway connection, and (c) a code provision excuses pedestrian connections where they are found to be "infeasible or inappropriate" and the city council adopts an unchallenged finding that the pedestrian connection is "not necessary." Baida v. City of Medford, 44 Or LUBA 473 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Although LUBA might be required to defer to a city interpretation of a subdivision criterion that requires that a proposed subdivision provide access to adjoining property as not applying where an adjoining property currently has access that it may lose in the future through condemnation, LUBA will not assume the criterion does not apply where the challenged decision does not adopt that interpretation. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 44 Or LUBA 493 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a decision approving a subdivision that finds it is infeasible to extend a road from the proposed subdivision to an adjoining property and a petitioner at LUBA argues that the finding is not supported by substantial evidence, LUBA will remand where the respondent cites no evidence that supports the finding. McFall v. City of Sherwood, 44 Or LUBA 493 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city council decision approving a subdivision with modifications for required road access must be remanded where it is unclear which documents if any the city council adopted as part of its decision, and the city council decision includes no findings explaining the modification, or reducing the required road access to a condition of approval. petitioner's appeal is sufficient to allege prejudice to petitioner's substantial rights. Shaffer v. City of Happy Valley, 44 Or LUBA 536 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The record does not "clearly support" a finding that petitioner's property is undevelopable, relieving a subdivision applicant of the obligation to provide access to petitioner's property, where the record includes conflicting expert testimony on that point, and the city's decision can be read to agree with petitioner's evidence that his property is developable petitioner's appeal is sufficient to allege prejudice to petitioner's substantial rights. Shaffer v. City of Happy Valley, 44 Or LUBA 536 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where no code, statute or condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval requires that the city resolve an issue regarding an alleged encroachment before granting final subdivision plat approval, the city's failure to resolve such issues do not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Jordan v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 586 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. An apparent discrepancy between the sidewalks depicted on the site plan submitted for design review approval and the sidewalk depicted on the approved final subdivision plat does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the design review decision did not address sidewalks or approve a particular sidewalk design. Jordan v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 586 (2003).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A finding that a 1973 deed satisfied then existing subdivision regulations so as to legalize a parcel that was described in the 1973 deed is inadequate, where the finding does not address the terms of the subdivision ordinance nor explain why property described in a deed constitutes a "replat" or "resubdivision," as those terms are used in the subdivision ordinance. Palaske v. Clackamas County, 43 Or LUBA 202 (2002).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Under a standard requiring that a proposed subdivision not create a "significant hazard to life or property," a city may require evidence that development of property subject to flooding not present a significant flood hazard. That the subject is not mapped as a floodway on the city's hazard maps and therefore not subject to the city's flood hazard regulations does not mean that the city cannot address flood hazards under other applicable criteria. Starks Landing, Inc. v. City of Rivergrove, 43 Or LUBA 237 (2002).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city has authority under ORS 92.040 and 92.180 to review and approve subdivision plats. Where a city requires an application for a subdivision replat to show revised easements and applies its land use regulations to approve the replat, the city's decision is a land use decision or limited land use decision subject to LUBA's review. Haber v. City of Gates, 39 Or LUBA 137 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA owes no deference to a city's decision requiring replat of a previously approved subdivision to modify private easements where it is clear that the city's decision was based solely on the provisions of ORS chapter 92, notwithstanding that the city subsequently applied local code provisions to determine the relevant approval criteria for the replat and how those approval criteria should be applied. Haber v. City of Gates, 39 Or LUBA 137 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 92.185 provides a specific requirement that public easements within a recorded plat must be reconfigured by replatting. However, the express reference in that statute to "public easements" and the absence of an express reference to "private easements" make it clear that reconfiguration of private easements within an existing subdivision plat does not require a replat under ORS 92.185. Haber v. City of Gates, 39 Or LUBA 137 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a condition of approval for preliminary plat approval does not require the condition to be fulfilled as a condition of final plat approval, whether or not the condition is satisfied is a matter of post-approval enforcement rather than a basis to find the final plat not in conformance with the preliminary plat approval. Bauer v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 715 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Petitioner fails to establish error in approving a subdivision without environmental review required for development in an environmental zone, where the applicant proposes no development in an environmental zone and the only impact on an off-site environmental zone is the release of storm water at predevelopment rates. Bauer v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 432 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Required findings that a variance is "necessary" due to "special conditions or circumstances peculiar to the property" are inadequate, where the findings are equivocal about whether the problems identified are present and fail to explain why the cited problems could not be eliminated by redesigning the proposed subdivision or by eliminating one or more lots. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 37 Or LUBA 521 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city's findings of compliance with a variance criterion that requires that the variance be "necessary for the proper development of the subdivision and the preservation of property rights and values," are inadequate where the findings do not identify any "property rights" or "property values" that would be threatened by the required 60-foot right-of-way or why the proposed subdivision could not be designed to accommodate the required 60-foot right-of-way. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 37 Or LUBA 521 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's choice between conflicting expert testimony where a reasonable person could conclude, based on the testimony of applicant's expert, that a proposed intersection provides a sight distance exceeding that required by the code, notwithstanding the contrary testimony of opponents' engineer. Mitchell v. Washington County, 37 Or LUBA 452 (2000).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A decision approving a subdivision pursuant to county comprehensive plan and land use regulations is a land use decision under ORS 197.015(10)(a). That a subdivision approval decision is conditioned on construction of road access for the subdivision does not convert that decision or any part of the decision into the type of transportation facility decision that is excluded from the statutory definition of "land use decision" by ORS 197.015(10)(b)(D). Warrick v. Josephine County, 36 Or LUBA 81 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The property that is the "subject of the notice," within the meaning of ORS 197.763(2)(a), depends on the proposal being considered. Where an applicant for subdivision approval proposes construction of a right-of-way across a parcel that adjoins the parcel to be subdivided, the notice must be given to the properties within the distances specified by ORS 197.763(2)(a) from both the adjoining parcel and the subdivided parcel. Warrick v. Josephine County, 36 Or LUBA 81 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where subdivision approval criteria do not require that the city determine whether a particular access route would be the "primary" access route, the city's failure to adopt such a finding and a lack of substantial evidence that the particular access route would be the primary access route provides no basis for reversal or remand. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. There is no applicable legal standard that requires a city to have a reasonable basis for refusing to impose a requested condition of approval that a subdivision access road be blocked to all but emergency travel. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city does not err by failing to require that a subdivision access road be improved to particular city standards, where the applicable city criterion merely requires that the subdivision provide "paved" access. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where LUBA concludes on review that a local decision approving a proposed subdivision cannot be corrected unless the subdivision is first revised by modifying the original application or submitting a new application, reversal rather than remand is appropriate. Angius v. Washington County, 35 Or LUBA 462 (1999).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 92.040(2) limits a city's authority to apply new land use regulations to construction of subdivisions approved after September 9, 1995. However, in considering an appeal of a city decision adopting new land use regulations, LUBA will not assume the city intends to apply those regulations in a way that is prohibited by ORS 92.040(2). Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139 (1998).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 227.178(3) provides that the standards and criteria that are in effect when a subdivision application is submitted govern approval of the subdivision application, but ORS 227.178(3) does not limit a local government's authority to adopt construction or development standards that apply after the subdivision is approved. Rogue Valley Assoc. of Realtors v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 139 (1998).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A code provision that requires that final subdivision and PUD plans be submitted within three years after preliminary approval is granted does not require that the versions of the final subdivision and PUD plans that are ultimately approved be submitted before the three-year deadline. Provided the subdivision and PUD plans are submitted before the deadline, the plans may be modified after the deadline in response to city review or public input. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a code requires that the final subdivision and PUD plans be in "substantial conformance" with the preliminary approval and the city interprets the "substantial conformance" requirement by analogizing to the distinction drawn in the code between "major" subdivision/PUD amendments, which must be approved quasi-judicially, and "minor" amendments, which may be approved administratively, the city's interpretation will be upheld. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city's denial of an application to develop a legally transferable lot has no bearing on the city's obligation to recognize that lot as legally transferable under ORS 92.017. Eagle Point Development v. City of Shady Cove, 33 Or LUBA 509 (1997).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. That a parcel may be separately transferable under ORS 92.017 does not determine whether the parcel may be separately developed. Eagle Point Development v. City of Shady Cove, 33 Or LUBA 509 (1997).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. In determining whether a previous local decision vacated lot lines, LUBA considers only what the record establishes the county did in that previous decision, not what the county should have done. Koo v. Polk County, 33 Or LUBA 487 (1997).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the city makes a determination that it is feasible to comply with a local code standard requiring that each lot in a proposed subdivision be buildable, it may defer addressing engineering details to a later date. Brown v. City of Ontario, 33 Or LUBA 180 (1997).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a condition of approval requires that the developer shall provide a "turnaround" at the end of a platted street, and the existence of the turnaround will bring the street within the definition of a cul-de-sac under local code, the city's tentative plat approval must be remanded where it does not satisfy the applicable local criteria for a cul-de-sac. Wicks-Snodgrass v. City of Reedsport, 32 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Local government approval of a subdivision tentative plan, with a condition that prior to final plat approval the plan be reconfigured to provide only one access point from the subdivision onto adjoining roads, a change advocated in an alternative plan submitted by neighbors, does not constitute approval of a new subdivision application. Carter v. Umatilla County, 29 Or LUBA 181 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. If a local government's comprehensive plan and land use regulations are acknowledged as being in compliance with the statewide planning goals, and the challenged decision approving a residential subdivision does not amend the local government's plan or land use regulations, the statewide planning goals to do not apply to the challenged decision. McCrary v. City of Talent, 29 Or LUBA 110 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local governing body in considering an appeal of a planning commission decision approving a subdivision may not shift the burden of proof from the applicant to the opponents of the subdivision. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local governing body acts within its interpretive authority in construing a comprehensive plan provision employing nonmandatory language as not imposing a mandatory approval criterion for approval of a subdivision. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local governing body acts within its interpretive authority in construing a code provision stating local street design and construction cost provisions apply "unless otherwise approved in the tentative development plan," as allowing the local government to waive those local street standards when granting tentative subdivision plan approval. Andrews v. City of Prineville, 28 Or LUBA 653 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A hearings officer's interpretation of the local code is incorrect where the hearings officer determines a private easement that will be generally used by members of the public and occupants of a proposed subdivision, is not an "area to be dedicated for new roads" to serve the proposed subdivision. Ellison v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 521 (1995).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the local code creates a process for the submittal and review of an applicant's "development impact statement" (DIS) as part of preliminary subdivision plat approval, the local governing body has considerable discretion in interpreting the role of the DIS process and must determine, in the first instance, whether the DIS content requirements are mere requests for information or impose substantive approval standards. ONRC v. City of Oregon City, 28 Or LUBA 263 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. If a city council decision approving a subdivision does not explain how the city interprets relevant comprehensive plan and code provisions to allow a 40-foot street right-of-way, the decision must be remanded for the city council to interpret the local provisions in the first instance. Woodstock Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 146 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local government does not exceed its authority under a code section authorizing it to control "the nature and scale of development" by prohibiting development of two lots, as configured in a proposed seven-lot subdivision. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Even if a local code provision requiring that six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision be dedicated for open space is properly interpreted as a minimum rather than a maximum requirement, a decision requiring dedication of much more than six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision must be remanded so that the local government may adopt findings explaining that interpretation and showing the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard is satisfied. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A decision approving a tentative subdivision plat for land within an urban growth boundary is a "limited land use decision." ORS 197.015(12)(a). Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where an application for subdivision tentative plan approval does not contain information on the location of driveways and easements required by the code, but petitioners fail to establish the missing information is relevant to any applicable approval standard, the error is harmless and does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Barrick v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Code provisions which allow a local government to impose conditions of approval "reasonably calculated to fulfill public needs," and to require right-of-way dedication and road improvements, authorize the local government to require modification of a proposed subdivision plat to eliminate a one-foot "spite strip" separating a new street serving the subdivision from the adjoining property. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The Statewide Planning Goals are not directly applicable to a local government decision that approves a subdivision without amending the local government's acknowledged comprehensive plan. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a proposed subdivision will add traffic to an abutting arterial street, although direct access to the subdivision will be provided by local streets, a local government approval condition requiring that the developer construct sidewalks, storm sewers and other frontage improvements along the portion of the arterial abutting the subdivision is reasonably related to the impacts of the proposed subdivision and is not an unconstitutional taking. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. ORS 215.263 authorizes counties to approve partitions creating new parcels for farm uses and nonfarm uses in EFU zones. However, ORS 215.263 does not authorize subdivision of land zoned for exclusive farm use. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Marion County, 27 Or LUBA 303 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where one part of a comprehensive plan states it is implemented through legislative acts, but another part states that subdivisions must be in conformance with the plan and the code expressly states all subdivision decisions must be consistent with the plan, it is not contrary to the express words, purpose or policy of either the code or the plan for the city to apply certain plan housing policies to a subdivision application. Shelter Resources, Inc. v. City of Cannon Beach, 27 Or LUBA 229 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A letter by a city planning director concerning the application of code provisions relevant to the validity of tentative plan approvals and approval of final plats, for certain subdivisions within an urban growth boundary, is a limited land use decision. Forest Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 215 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a city has created a two-stage (tentative plan and final plat) approval process for subdivision applications, under ORS 227.178(3), both subdivision tentative plan and final plat approvals must be based on the "standards and criteria" in effect when the subdivision application is initially filed. Forest Park Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 215 (1994).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where petitioners contend certain information required by the local code "prior to the approval of subdivisions" must be in the record at the time of tentative plat approval, and the challenged tentative plat approval decision does not interpret the local code with regard to at what stage of the subdivision approval process the required information must be submitted to the county, LUBA must remand the decision for the local government to interpret its code in the first instance. Cummings v. Tillamook County, 26 OR LUBA 139 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local government order granting subdivision preliminary plat approval defers a determination of compliance with a particular approval standard, and also allows final plat approval to occur in phases, the local government may interpret that order as allowing it to grant final plat approval for a phase, so long as each lot in the phase for which final plat approval is sought has been found to comply with the deferred standard. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local government may interpret a local subdivision approval standard requiring that each lot have "an adequate quantity and quality of water to support the proposed use of the land" as not requiring consideration of the impacts of providing water to the subdivision lots on the water supplies of adjacent properties. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where the applicant submits a drainage plan for a proposed subdivision to a local government, and the local government relies on that drainage plan in determining compliance with a local drainage standard in its order granting subdivision approval, the drainage plan is effectively made part of the approved subdivision plat. In these circumstances, it is not necessary for the local government to adopt a separate condition of approval requiring compliance with the drainage plan. Perry v. Yamhill County, 26 Or LUBA 73 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A variance criterion requiring that there be no reasonably practical alternatives to granting the variance is met where the local government finds the subdivision roadway necessitating the variance is needed for compliance with the comprehensive plan, and petitioners do not challenge that finding. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Although Goal 11 requires that local governments include schools in comprehensive plan provisions for public facilities and services, there is no legal requirement that subdivision approval decisions include a determination that schools are adequate, unless the acknowledged comprehensive plan or land use regulations impose such a requirement. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A comprehensive plan policy requiring cooperative efforts among neighboring jurisdictions concerning public facilities and services, with no mention of schools, does not provide a basis for reversing or remanding a decision approving a subdivision despite allegedly inadequate schools. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. An erroneous finding that the local government cannot impose a condition of subdivision approval requiring measures to mitigate off-site traffic impacts, provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the local government adopts superseding findings explaining why it believes such measures are not warranted and the local government's authority to require such measures is permissive rather than mandatory. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a challenged decision grants subdivision approval, petitioner's challenge to a finding that the property is located in two residential zones provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioner makes no attempt to explain why the zoning of the property is critical to the decision and both zones impose the same minimum lot area. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a challenged decision simply expresses a conclusion that the county court has discretion to act on a subdivision application without that application having first been acted on by the county planning commission, but does not identify the source of that discretion or interpret apparently relevant code provisions, the basis for the challenged decision is not sufficiently articulated for review, and the challenged decision must be remanded. Larson v. Wallowa County, 25 Or LUBA 537 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. That an existing garage violates lot line setback requirements provides no basis for denial of a requested subdivision of the adjoining property to be served by a private roadway running along the lot line in front of the existing garage. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Arguments that a proposed subdivision roadway alignment violates a Fire Bureau policy provides no basis for reversal or remand of the subdivision approval decision, where the Fire Bureau policy is not a mandatory subdivision approval standard. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A comprehensive plan policy directed at how a city expends funds for public facilities and services is not an approval standard applicable to approval of individual subdivision requests. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. In the absence of a code provision to the contrary, a local government is not required to allow modifications to a subdivision application to enable its approval. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 25 Or LUBA 327 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where local subdivision approval standards adopted pursuant to ORS 92.044(1) specifically provide that a subdivision application may be approved with modifications, the local government may accept a modified application for subdivision approval following submittal of the initial application without requiring that the entire approval process be repeated. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Although ORS 92.010 to 92.190 do not specifically envision a subdivision approval process that combines approval of a subdivision and a lot line adjustment, neither do those statutes prohibit such a process. Absent such a prohibition, a local government commits no error in following such a combined process. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local government's subdivision approval standards limit the length of cul-de-sac streets, as measured from through-traffic streets, and it is reasonable to interpret the limitation as being measured from either existing through-traffic streets or both existing and proposed through-traffic streets, LUBA will defer to the local government's selection of the latter interpretation. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A school district letter rating schools as adequate to serve a proposed subdivision is adequate to demonstrate compliance with a code requirement for documentation of school facility adequacy, notwithstanding a subsequent letter from the school district raising questions about the earlier rating, where the executive director of school district facilities expressly reaffirms the earlier rating of the schools as adequate. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local government interpretation of a local code provision that prohibits direct access to major collectors by commercial, industrial and institutional uses with more than 150 feet of frontage as not applying to proposed residential subdivisions with more than 150 feet of frontage is reasonable. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The text of ORS 92.017, and its legislative history, make it clear that the functions of ORS 92.017 are (1) to prevent local governments from refusing to recognize lawful divisions of land such that lots and parcels could not be sold to third parties, and (2) to establish that the property lines established by such land divisions remain inviolate, absent the employment of a specific process to eliminate such property lines. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Nothing in either the text of ORS 92.017 or its legislative history suggests that all lawfully created lots and parcels must be recognized by local government as being separately developable. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local government determines that lots of less than one acre are not permissible under the density provisions of the applicable zoning district, it is error for it to approve a subdivision preliminary plat that includes lots smaller than one acre. Larson v. Wallowa County, 23 Or LUBA 527 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local code requirement for findings of preliminary PUD or subdivision plan feasibility does not require the kind of certainty or supporting evidence that may ultimately be required for approval of final construction plans. Bartels v. City of Portland, 23 Or LUBA 182 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a subdivision ordinance provision limiting the length of blocks states that exceptions to the limitation may be granted where justified by topography or location of adjoining streets, a variance need not be granted to allow a block in excess of the length specified in the subdivision ordinance. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Although a local government may not be oblivious to costs in satisfying its obligation to find that required subdivision improvements are feasible, it is not required to conduct an economic feasibility analysis. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Nothing in ORS 92.044, 92.205, or 92.285 prevents a local government from imposing zoning restrictions on the uses that may occur within previously platted subdivisions. Alexiou v. Curry County, 22 Or LUBA 639 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A comprehensive plan standard establishing a minimum building site requirement of one acre is not inconsistent with plan and code requirements that subdivision lots in a zoning district allowing development at a density of one unit per five acres be clustered to provide not less than 30 percent common open space. Such a plan standard simply sets a minimum area requirement for each clustered lot. Reed v. Clatsop County, 22 Or LUBA 548 (1992).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A code provision that developers "may be required to participate financially in improving [off-site] roadways sufficient to accommodate traffic generated by the development" applies to both improvement of existing off-site roads and construction of new off-site roads, and is directly applicable to the local government's imposition of a condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval requiring the subdivider to pay for construction of an off-site road. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 360 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local code requires a determination of compliance with applicable ordinance requirements at the time of subdivision outline plan approval and that the final plat be approved if it is "in substantial conformance with the outline plan," a petitioner may not fail to appeal the decision granting outline plan approval and thereafter, in an appeal of the final plan approval, challenge the subdivision's compliance with plan and code provisions found to be satisfied at the time of outline plan approval. Sandler v. City of Ashland, 21 Or LUBA 483 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a condition of subdivision outline plan approval requiring that driveway slopes not exceed 15 percent does not specify when the condition must be met, and the local code requires approval of the final plat if it is "in substantial conformance with the outline plan," the local government need not find the condition is or can be met at the time of final plat approval. Sandler v. City of Ashland, 21 Or LUBA 483 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local code standard provides blocks may not exceed 1,000 feet unless topography or location of adjoining streets justifies an exception, and an issue is raised during the local proceedings concerning a proposed block in excess of 1,000 feet, the local government must adopt findings explaining why a block in excess of 1,000 feet is justified. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. The evidence submitted in support of a request for tentative subdivision plan approval must be adequate to permit the local government to find (1) the applicable standards are met, or (2) it is feasible to meet such standards. Where the latter approach is appropriate, final technical solutions to development of the subdivision may be arrived at later without additional public hearings. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where a local government's findings concede that a tentative plan does not comply with applicable lot-grading standards, the local government may not defer further consideration of the lot-grading standards to the final plat approval stage. The local government must either require that the tentative plan be revised to comply with the lot-grading standards or adopt findings explaining why the standards may be exceeded under local code provisions allowing such deviations. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Although a local government need not, under applicable code provisions, require a complete hydrologic analysis and storm drainage plan before granting tentative subdivision plan approval, it must adopt findings supported by substantial evidence that the general storm drainage plan proposed is feasible before granting approval. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 21 Or LUBA 260 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Where governing land use standards are not amended or modified, the circuit court, not LUBA, has jurisdiction to determine whether an urban subdivision or partition decision violates applicable approval standards. Sully v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 428 (1991).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A local government commits harmless error by mischaracterizing and reviewing a "major partition" as though it were a "subdivision," as those terms are defined in the city's code, where petitioner fails to identify any approval criteria which impose different standards on major partitions and subdivisions. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. A city may rely on ORS 92.090(3), which states that a subdivision or partition may not be approved unless streets are "dedicated without any reservation," to require immediate, rather than future, dedication of required rights-of-way. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. To demonstrate county denial of lot of record status exceeds the authority granted under ORS 92.017, petitioner must establish an alleged lot or parcel was lawfully created and, therefore, is within the scope of ORS 92.017. Atkins v. Deschutes County, 19 Or LUBA 84 (1990).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. Under ORS 92.100(1), a board of county commissioners' role in signing a final subdivision plat prior to recording is simply to determine that the plat is in proper form for recording and, therefore, county approval of a final subdivision plat pursuant to ORS 92.100(1) is not a statutory test land use decision. Elliott v. Lane County, 18 Or LUBA 871 (1990).

33.1 Land Divisions – Subdivisions. No purpose would be served by recognizing county approval of a final plat for a subdivision within city limits for recording as a "significant impact" test land use decision, when the same impacts are inherent in one or more city approvals which are statutory land use decisions. Elliott v. Lane County, 18 Or LUBA 871 (1990).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A county's reliance on an uncodified, "fact-dependent," "longstanding county policy" to conclude that the transfer of an illegally partitioned property to the owners of contiguous property constitutes a "de facto property line adjustment," eliminating the illegally partitioned property as a separate unit of land, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 656 (2020).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Under Schultz v. City of Grants Pass, 131 Or App 220, 884 P2d 569 (1994), where property can be physically developed without further land use review, i.e., with uses that are allowed outright, then some level of exactions could be appropriate at the partition stage, even if physical development is not part of the partition application; however, where nothing in the local code or elsewhere requires the local government to impose exactions at the partition stage, the local government's decision not to exact provides no basis for remand. Dressel v. City of Tigard, 81 Or LUBA 208 (2020).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Under ORS 215.780(2)(e)(A), in determining whether to approve the creation of a forest-zoned parcel that is less than the 80-acre minimum parcel size, the county may consider only the parcel that is the subject of the partition application, not a tax lot or other property that the subject parcel was adjacent to but not part of on November 4, 1993. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 19 (2019).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Arguments that a city decision approving a partition affects "livability of [an] existing house" and that the city ignored "impact on the neighborhood" provide no basis for reversal or remand where none of the criteria applicable to land divisions require the city to consider "privacy or livability" in determining whether to approve the land division. Bohan v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 263 (2019).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. An unlawful division of land creates two unlawful units of land rather than an unlawful unit of land and a lawful remainder. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 415 (2019).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where separate applications to partition two parcels under a single ownership into three parcels each receive final approval in the same calendar year, the resultant units of land are not "lawfully created" where state statute requires that divisions of "an area or tract of land into four or more lots within a calendar year when such area or tract of land exists as a unit or contiguous units of land under a single ownership" receive subdivision approval. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 65 (2019).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. When a lot is an unplatted remainder of a subdivision and is not depicted at all on the approved subdivision plat, its current configuration may have resulted from the subdivision but that does not indicate that the county approved the creation of the lot by applying subdivision approval standards. On remand, the hearings officer needs to determine if the lot was approved by applying subdivision standards. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 164 (2018).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. ORS 92.190(3) embodies a requirement that, where local governments choose to provide an alternative procedure for property line adjustments other than using replat procedures, that alternative procedure must include local government approval of some kind. However, ORS 197.190(3) does not specify any particular procedures or form of approval, and does not necessarily require that final approval be obtained prior to recordation of the adjustment deeds. Given the absence of more specific statutory requirements a county does not err in verifying property as a legal lot, notwithstanding that the property lines were adopted in 2007 without prior county approval, where following recordation of the deeds, the county preliminarily verified the adjustments as lawful and issued a final approval in 2017 when the property owner applied for, and the county approved, a development permit. This process, although partially post-hoc, is consistent with ORS 92.190(3). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, legislatively overruled the holding in Phillips v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 194, aff'd, 213 Or App 498, 162 P3d 338 (2007), which provided that it was unlawful to adjust property boundaries in a way that results in parcels that fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, authorizes property line adjustments of substandard size lots and parcels, even if the resulting lots or parcels continue to fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, section 6 made that legislation retroactive to "property line adjustments approved before, on or after the effective date of this 2008 Act." Therefore, Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12 applies to a property line adjustment that took place in 2007, because the property line adjustment was "approved * * * before, on or after" the effective date of the 2008 Act. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. LUBA will affirm a finding that a 1985 quitclaim deed of a portion of a river meander channel from the state to an adjoining property owner represented a property line adjustment, rather than the unlawful creation of a new discrete parcel, where the petitioner identifies no statutory or local authority compelling the conclusion that the 1985 deed had the legal effect of creating a new parcel. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 473 (2017).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. LUBA will affirm a governing body's interpretation of its lot of record provisions, to the effect that "partitioning" (one of the ways in which a parcel can be created to qualify as a lot of record) includes units of land created as undescribed remainders of a parent parcel divided by deed, at a time when county approval was not required to create a parcel by deed, where that interpretation is plausible and not inconsistent with the text and context of the lot of record provision. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 328 (2017).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A county does not err in examining the deed that originally created the subject parcel, or the deeds in the chain of title that conveyed and shaped the parcel between its creation and its current configuration, in determining whether the parcel is a "lot of record," defined under county code to include parcels created by deed prior to county partition laws, notwithstanding that circuit courts generally have the final say in the interpretation of ambiguous deeds or determining the grantor's intent. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 328 (2017).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a hearings officer approved a partition subject to a condition of approval requiring the developer to record, prior to the sale of any parcels, an agreement to maintain a common tract, but the condition does not identify the necessary parties to the agreement, a county does not err in interpreting the condition to be satisfied by allowing the county to enter into separate agreements with the owners of the common tract to ensure maintenance of the tract. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a local code provision provides that minimum lot width may be reduced if "[o]n balance, the proposed lots will have dimensions that are consistent with the purpose of this section," it is remandable error where the local code provides for nine purposes to be considered, but the decision maker considers only some of the nine purposes, and concludes without explanation, that "on balance, the applicant has not demonstrated that the proposal is consistent with the purpose of the lot dimension regulations." In this context, such findings are inadequate because an "on balance" determination requires the city to adopt findings explaining how it balances the different purposes. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a local code provision requires a determination that "[o]n balance, the proposed lots will have dimensions that are consistent with the purpose of this section," and the section provides for nine purposes to be considered, a city may be able to assign greater or lesser significance to a particular purpose based on direction from the city's code, comprehensive plan or other land use document. But a city errs to the extent that it interprets the "on balance" determination to allow denial based solely on a finding of inconsistency with one or two of the nine purposes, without considering consistency with all of the purposes. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a local code provision regulating minimum lot size requires a determination of whether a proposal is consistent with purposes of the code section, and an applicable code section is intended to ensure that "[e]ach lot has enough room for a reasonably-sized attached or detached house[,]" a finding that the applicants have not demonstrated that "each parcel has enough room for a reasonably sized detached house[,]" is conclusory, because it fails to explain what constitutes a "reasonably-sized" house. Sage Equities, LLC v. City of Portland, 72 Or LUBA 163 (2015).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A county decision that approves an application to partition a 41-acre parcel located within a deer winter range overlay zone into two approximately 20-acre parcel, where the minimum parcel size for properties located in the deer winter range overlay zone is 80 acres, is "prohibited as a matter of law" under OAR 661-010-0071(1)(c). ODFW v. Klamath County, 66 Or LUBA 92 (2012).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A hearings officer errs in determining that a local code provision that requires that each parcel created by a partition is "suitable for the use intended considering access" is satisfied by a demonstration of satisfaction with a separate code provision that requires each parcel to have "legal access" to a public road, where the two criteria pose different questions. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 63 Or LUBA 288 (2011).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A partition or replat that has the effect of eliminating pre-existing property lines is a "specific process" for "vacating" property lines for both parcels and lots, for purposes of ORS 92.017. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Even if it is legally possible to intentionally create a discrete parcel that consists entirely of nested, discrete lots or parcels without vacating those nested lots or parcels, LUBA will affirm a local government finding that a partition plat that creates a new parcel without depicting any nested lot lines has the effect of vacating the pre-existing lots, where there is nothing on the partition plat, description, or narrative that suggests an intent to preserve the pre-existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. An approved partition plat creating new parcels need not bisect the property lines of pre-existing lots to "vacate" those lots for purposes of ORS 92.017. Even if the boundaries of the new parcels follow the property lines of some pre-existing lots, the partition plat can have the effect of vacating or consolidating the pre-existing lots included within the newly established parcels. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A joint application for a conditional use permit by owners of illegally divided parcels cannot rectify an illegal partition under a local code provision that prohibits the approval of permits unless "the violation can be rectified as part of the proposed development," at least where the local government does not purport to validate unlawfully created parcels, pursuant to ORS 92.176. Olstedt v. Clatsop County, 62 Or LUBA 131 (2010).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a maximum setback shown on a preliminary plat was not required by law but rather was voluntarily agreed to by the property owner as an accommodation to the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife prior to its and the county's adoption of a setback requirement to protect wildlife habitat, and there is no evidence that the setback was to be measured in any particular way from the county road, a county need not require that the setback be measured in precisely the way shown on the plat. In that circumstance, the county may look at the underlying purpose for the setback and not require that the setback be measured solely from a short segment of the partitioned property's county road frontage. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 62 Or LUBA 165 (2010).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a road improvement condition is imposed on a two-phase subdivision and the county subsequently approves phase I without the required road improvement and approves a partition in place of phase II without requiring compliance with the road improvement condition, the road improvement condition may not be extended to apply to a partition of one of the parcels in the partition that was approved in place of phase II of the subdivision. MEK Properties, LLC v. Coos County, 61 Or LUBA 360 (2010).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A county's concerns that the roads that will be needed to provide access to the parcels that will be created by a series of partitions are not sufficient to authorize the county to condition final partition plat approval on the applicant agreeing to construct those roads and provide financial guarantees to construct those road, where the county code distinguishes between partitioners and subdividers and requires that subdividers construct or guarantee construction of roads prior to final plat approval. Sperber v. Coos County, 60 Or LUBA 44 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a county approves an application for partition approval but imposes conditions of approval and LUBA determines that the county lacks authority to impose the conditions of approval, remand is appropriate so that the county can reapprove the partition without the disputed conditions of approval. Sperber v. Coos County, 60 Or LUBA 44 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Absent a compelling reason to do so, LUBA will not overrule its holding in Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992), that the ORS 92.017 prohibition on consolidating discrete lots and parcels does not prohibit a local government from adopting regulations that limit development of contiguous, substandard-size lots and parcels and effectively consolidate them for development purposes. Thomas v. Wasco County, 58 Or LUBA 452 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a city denies a partition application based on a code provision that was not listed as an approval standard in the notice of hearing and not discussed until late in the hearing, the petitioner's failure to raise issues below regarding application of that code provision does not preclude petitioner from challenging denial under that code provision before LUBA. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A code provision stating that when it appears that the area of a proposed partition is to be ultimately divided into four or more lots or parcels the code provisions pertaining to subdivisions apply simply authorizes the city to apply subdivision procedures and standards to a partition application, and does not itself constitute "standard" or "criteria" under which the city could deny the partition application. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a city discovers late in a proceeding on a partition application that its code may require application of certain subdivision approval standards, the city should identify any applicable subdivision standards and give the applicant the opportunity to demonstrate compliance with them, even if that would require the city to make its decision after the statutory deadline for taking final action on the application has passed. However, it is inconsistent with ORS 227.178(3) for the city to summarily deny the partition and effectively force the applicant to submit a new application, where that denial is not based on any applicable standard or criteria. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Reversal is not warranted under ORS 197.835(10)(a)(A) where a city denies a partition application three weeks prior to expiration of the 120-day deadline based on the city's belief that the proposed partition must be processed as a subdivision, where the city mistakenly believed that its only option was to deny the application and effectively require the applicant to submit a new application, but there is no indication in the record that the city denied the application to avoid the 120-day rule. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Reversal is warranted under ORS 197.835(10)(a)(B) where a city denies a partition application based on a code provision that is not an approval standard and that does not authorize denial of the application, and where no other code provision cited by the city provides a basis for denial. Denial under such circumstances is "outside the range of discretion allowed the local government under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances." Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Under ORS 215.010(1), when the word "parcel" is used in ORS chapter 215, the parcel must be a lawfully created parcel, in the sense that the parcel's date of creation either predated any applicable laws governing partitions or the parcel was created in compliance with those laws. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. When the definitions of the relevant terms set out in ORS chapter 92 are read together, whether a division of land creates "parcels" or "lots" depends the number units of land that one or more divisions of land in a single year produce. If the division or divisions produce four or more units of land, they are lots; if they produce three of fewer, they are parcels. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Applying the contextual analysis that is required by Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), adh'd to as modified on recons, 179 Or App 409, 40 P3d 532 (2002), even though ORS 215.750(1) does not expressly state that the references in that statute to "lots" are limited to lawfully created lots, and even though the relevant definitions in ORS 92.010 do not expressly require that a lot must be a lawfully created lot, if those statutes are read in context with ORS 92.012, 92.018(1), 92.025(1) and ORS 215.010(1)(a), it is sufficiently clear that when the legislature used the term "lot" in ORS 215.750(1) it did not mean to include unlawfully created lots. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. County authority to approve forest template dwellings derives from ORS 215.750(1). In exercising the authority granted by ORS 215.750(1), a county may not apply a county definition of "lot" to recognize lots that could not be recognized under ORS 215.750(1). The county may not set a lower standard for approving forest template dwellings under county legislation than the standard that is set by ORS 215.750. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Even if a local government could recognize partial parcel annexations as sufficient to legally divide a parcel, where a local lot of record code definition does not recognize partial parcel annexation as sufficient to legally divide the annexed portion of a parcel from the portion of a parcel that is not annexed, the annexation does not have the effect of dividing the parcel. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. The County Assessor's assignment of a new tax lot number to the part of a 5.45-acre parcel that was annexed, while retaining the prior tax lot number for the part of the 5.45-parcel that was not annexed, is not sufficient to divide the 5.45-acre parcel into two different parcels. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where 3.63 acres of a 5.45-acre parcel are located outside a city and are conveyed improperly by deed to a new owner, the original owner's subsequent recording of a final plat for the 1.82 acres inside the city, which were retained by the original owner, does not have the effect of legally creating a 3.63-acre parcel. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Absent some demonstration that recording a partition plat with the county clerk requires the application of statewide planning goals, comprehensive plan policies or implementing regulations, a county clerk's act of recording a signed partition plat is not a land use decision or a limited land use decision. Hammer v. Clackamas County, 45 Or LUBA 32 (2003).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A city's application of general land division standards to a proposed minor partition provides no basis for reversal or remand, where it is clear from the context of the provision that applications for minor partitions must satisfy more than just those requirements that apply to minor partitions alone. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 45 Or LUBA 458 (2003).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. An earlier city decision that permitted access from a two-acre parcel via a 20-foot wide easement does not bar the city from requiring a 50-foot wide easement for two parcels subsequently created from that two-acre parcel. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 45 Or LUBA 458 (2003).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A city approval of a partition that creates three parcels does not constitute a "contract" that is breached when the city requires that additional access be provided for parcels created from one of those three parcels. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 45 Or LUBA 458 (2003).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A local ordinance that requires an applicant for a partition to improve the entire 3,500-foot length of a private road providing access to the property, including widening existing easements across private property and improving the road to full county road standards, is a possessory exaction requiring off-site improvements and is therefore subject to the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). Dudek v. Umatilla County, 42 Or LUBA 427 (2002).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A city's failure to respond to issues raised below regarding whether the "street frontage" of a flag lot is the same as its "front building line" provides no basis for remand, where it is clear under the city's land division ordinance that "street frontage" and "front building line" are not the same. Webb v. City of Bandon, 39 Or LUBA 584 (2001).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. An ambiguous assertion that a driveway providing access to a proposed flag lot does not qualify as a street is insufficient to raise an issue that the proposed minor partition creates a street and therefore must be approved as a major partition and comply with the criteria applicable to major partitions. Webb v. City of Bandon, 39 Or LUBA 584 (2001).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Only those impacts that reasonably flow from the approval granted may be considered when imposing exactions to ameliorate those impacts. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. During its review of a proposed partition, a city may consider the impact that future dwellings may have on public infrastructure, where the partition approval is the last land use decision necessary to establish dwellings on the resulting parcels. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. An ordinance allowing a county to revoke otherwise final and unreviewable partition approvals is a "retroactive ordinance" within the meaning of ORS 92.285. Church v. Grant County, 37 Or LUBA 646 (2000).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Before 1973, ORS 92.014 subjected the creation of streets or ways to county approval only when the street or way was created for the purpose of partitioning land. Creation of a 60-foot-wide parcel to provide access across a parent parcel to a separate, pre-existing parcel in different ownership is not "for the purpose of partitioning land" and thus did not require county approval under ORS 92.014. Tarjoto v. Lane County, 36 Or LUBA 645 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a county approves an application that creates a new parcel, that approval is a partition as defined by ORS 92.010 notwithstanding that the county also approved a lot line adjustment involving the parent parcel in the same proceeding. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. The legal effect of a "partition," as defined at ORS 92.010, is to create new parcels as of the date the partition plat is approved. The parcels resulting from a partition are thus "created" as of the date the plat is approved, for purposes of the nonfarm dwelling provisions of OAR 660-033-0130 and ORS 215.284. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. The definition of "Date of Creation" at OAR 660-033-0020(4) expands the circumstances in which parcels are "created" for purposes of siting a nonfarm dwelling to include lot line adjustments or similar reconfigurations that have the effect of qualifying the parcel for a dwelling. The definition does not impliedly narrow the set of circumstances that create a parcel to include only those events that have the effect of qualifying a parcel for a dwelling. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A partition, as defined by ORS 92.010, is not a "reconfiguration" of the boundaries of a parcel within the meaning of OAR 660-033-0020(4) because the legal effect of partition is to create new parcels. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a local land division ordinance mandates that the size of proposed parcels be greater than or equal to the size of the typical commercial agricultural enterprise in the area, a local government misconstrues that ordinance by requiring only that the size of the proposed parcel be similar to the size of other parcels in the area. Wood v. Crook County, 36 Or LUBA 143 (1999).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where an existing parcel is divided into three new parcels with one of the new parcels containing an existing house, the new parcel containing the house is not properly considered an existing parcel simply because it contains the existing house. Sunningdale-Case Heights Assoc. v. Washington Co., 34 Or LUBA 549 (1998).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A property line adjustment is limited to relocation of common property lines. Where a decision reconfigures property lines so that entire parcels are moved and property lines that are not common are moved, the decision does not approve a property line adjustment. Goddard v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 402 (1998).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A decision that relocates property lines that are not common to abutting properties reconfigures the property in a manner that violates the definition of "property line adjustment" at ORS 92.010(11) and the statutory distinction between a property line adjustment and replat, and such action is prohibited as a matter of law. Goddard v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 402 (1998).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. To establish implied acceptance of a road dedication: (1) the partition plat must include a dedication, and (2) parcels must have been sold with reference to the partition plat containing the dedication. Where petitioner fails to establish either the plat dedication or sales with reference to the partition plat dedication, there is no implied dedication. Petersen v. Yamhill County, 33 Or LUBA 584 (1997).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a hearings officer's interpretation that the county's street frontage requirement mandates street frontages be on a public road or street is contrary to the plain language of the county's zoning ordinance, a denial of a partition based solely on that interpretation will be reversed. Miller v. Clackamas County, 31 Or LUBA 104 (1996).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where a county has never made a decision to partition a parcel, the county's approval of a lot line adjustment, which is premised on the assumption that a partition has occurred, must be reversed. Higgins v. Marion County, 30 Or LUBA 426 (1996).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Both the applicable county ordinance and ORS chapter 92 indicate reliance on plat recording as the event which establishes the finality and permanence of a land division. Petree v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 449 (1995).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Unless prohibited by a local ordinance, a property owner may apply for a second partition of land during the same calendar year as a first partition involving the same land is recorded. ORS chapter 92 is satisfied by a condition delaying tentative approval of the second partition to the following calendar year. Petree v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 449 (1995).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. ORS 215.428(3), which states that approval or denial of an application shall be based upon the standards and criteria that were applicable at the time the application was first submitted, does not require a local government processing a partition application to proceed as if factual circumstances existing at the time of application remain unchanged. Petree v. Marion County, 29 Or LUBA 449 (1995).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. If a local government approves a proposed partition with conditions requiring exactions, the local government must ensure that the requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 2319-20, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994), for "individualized determination[s] that the required dedication is related both in nature and extent to the impact of the proposed development" is satisfied. Neuman v. Benton County, 29 Or LUBA 172 (1995).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where the local code requires a local government to make a particular determination in acting on a partition application, the local government does not lack authority to make that determination. Hilderbrand v. Marion County, 28 Or LUBA 703 (1995).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Identifying the area to be considered and the overall land use pattern of that area are prerequisites to determining whether a proposed partition satisfies a code requirement that it "not materially alter the stability of the land use pattern of the area." McNamara v. Union County, 28 Or LUBA 396 (1994).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A local government may not defer determinations of compliance with approval standards applicable to partition approval to the building permit approval stage. Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Local government denial of proposed partitions because the ability of the school district to provide the level of school services required by certain plan policies has not been established does not constitute the imposition of a development moratorium prohibited by ORS 195.110(8). Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where an approval standard for partitioning timber zoned property into nonresource parcels requires that the subject property be "generally unsuitable land for the production of farm or forest products," and petitioner does not challenge a county determination that the subject property is generally suitable for farm use, that determination provides an independent basis for affirming the county's decision to deny the partition. Newsome v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 578 (1994).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. ORS 215.263 authorizes counties to approve partitions creating new parcels for farm uses and nonfarm uses in EFU zones. However, ORS 215.263 does not authorize subdivision of land zoned for exclusive farm use. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Marion County, 27 Or LUBA 303 (1994).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A condition of partition approval requiring consolidation of existing driveways into a single driveway to address comprehensive plan and local code policies concerning traffic safety is justified, even though the property is developed and new development is not proposed as part of the partition request, where the property could be developed more intensively in the future. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A condition of partition approval requiring that three existing driveways presently serving property to be partitioned be consolidated into a single driveway does not "take" a cognizable property interest, within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution or Article I, section 18, of the Oregon Constitution. Such a condition simply requires that a property owner exercise the property right of access differently. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where there is a reasonable relationship between the development potential of a parcel to be divided and the impacts reasonably attributable to the divided parcel on the one hand, and the city's need to respond to legitimate traffic concerns on the other, and it would be more difficult to address such concerns when there are three parcels rather than a single parcel, notwithstanding the lack of current plans to develop the property further, a condition requiring consolidation of existing driveways is appropriate. Kostenborder v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 440 (1993).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. LUBA will not reverse or remand a local government decision refusing to issue a building permit for a structure to be placed on a parcel unlawfully divided, pursuant to a local code requirement that no building permit may be issued if the parcel of land on which a structure is to be placed or used is in violation of any local ordinance. Woosley v. Marion County, 24 Or LUBA 231 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Findings that a parcel is "an ideal size for a small roadside parcel" are inadequate to demonstrate compliance with a local code standard requiring that a parcel be no larger than necessary to accommodate the proposed use. DLCD v. Curry County, 24 Or LUBA 200 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A lot line adjustment is not a partition and cannot create additional units of land. ORS 92.015(7)(b). McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. The text of ORS 92.017, and its legislative history, make it clear that the functions of ORS 92.017 are (1) to prevent local governments from refusing to recognize lawful divisions of land such that lots and parcels could not be sold to third parties, and (2) to establish that the property lines established by such land divisions remain inviolate, absent the employment of a specific process to eliminate such property lines. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Nothing in either the text of ORS 92.017 or its legislative history suggests that all lawfully created lots and parcels must be recognized by local government as being separately developable. Kishpaugh v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 164 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where county regulations establish different approval standards for major and minor partitions, a county's error in treating an application as being for a minor partition, rather than for a major partition, is not harmless. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 24 Or LUBA 58 (1992).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. Where governing land use standards are not amended or modified, the circuit court, not LUBA, has jurisdiction to determine whether an urban subdivision or partition decision violates applicable approval standards. Sully v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 428 (1991).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. While a decision to approve a zone change does not approve a "permit," within the meaning of ORS 227.160(2), a decision which approves both a variance and a minor partition does approve a "permit." Harvard Medical Park, Ltd. v. City of Roseburg, 19 Or LUBA 555 (1990).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A local government commits harmless error by mischaracterizing and reviewing a "major partition" as though it were a "subdivision," as those terms are defined in the city's code, where petitioner fails to identify any approval criteria which impose different standards on major partitions and subdivisions. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A city may rely on ORS 92.090(3), which states that a subdivision or partition may not be approved unless streets are "dedicated without any reservation," to require immediate, rather than future, dedication of required rights of way. Vestibular Disorders Consult. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 94 (1990).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. To demonstrate county denial of lot of record status exceeds the authority granted under ORS 92.017, petitioner must establish an alleged lot or parcel was lawfully created and, therefore, is within the scope of ORS 92.017. Atkins v. Deschutes County, 19 Or LUBA 84 (1990).

33.2 Land Divisions – Partitions. A county does not misapply its Lot of Record ordinance by failing to recognize units of land which (1) were not created under zoning regulations regulating partitions, (2) were not created pursuant to partition proceedings conducted under ORS Chapter 105, and (3) do not constitute a "partition" as that term is defined in ORS 92.010, as parcels created by partition. Atkins v. Deschutes County, 19 Or LUBA 84 (1990).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A county's reliance on an uncodified, "fact-dependent," "longstanding county policy" to conclude that the transfer of an illegally partitioned property to the owners of contiguous property constitutes a "de facto property line adjustment," eliminating the illegally partitioned property as a separate unit of land, violates the codification requirement at ORS 215.416(8)(a). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 656 (2020).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Even where a transfer of property met the definition of a "property line adjustment" under ORS 92.010(11) (1999), such transfer did not effectuate a property line adjustment where the deed did not contain the information required by ORS 92.190(4) (1999). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 656 (2020).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Remand is necessary where petitioners argue that a boundary line adjustment application is governed by a county ordinance addressing the "Sale or Transfer of Land to an Adjacent Owner * * *," under the section on nonconforming uses that apply to "Designated Resource Areas," where the subject parcels are designated for agricultural and forest uses and are zoned exclusive farm use – grazing (FG) and where respondents filed no response brief. Because there is no local interpretation of the applicability of the ordinance, LUBA will remand the decision for the county to interpret the ordinance in the first instance. Friends of Douglas County v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 11 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where the county found a boundary line adjustment application is in compliance with a county ordinance that requires that the "resulting parcel sizes do not change the existing land use" because before and after the boundary line adjustment there was one parcel conforming and one parcel non-conforming in size, LUBA will remand the decision. On remand, the county shall consider petitioners' argument and adopt any necessary findings regarding petitioners' argument that the ordinance could be interpreted to require the county to consider whether the "existing land use pattern" is changed when the subject parcel—that was previously deemed "generally unsuitable" for farm use due to its size and soil composition—qualifies for a nonfarm dwelling as a result of the boundary line adjustment because the parcel was expanded to include agricultural soils in a manner that possibly renders the resulting parcel suitable for farm use. Friends of Douglas County v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 11 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Although the county's approval of the boundary line adjustment for the siting of a nonfarm dwelling could effectively undercut the factual predicate for compliance with a statutory-based standard pursuant to ORS 215.263(4) designed to minimize loss of productive resource lands in exclusive farm use zones to non-resource uses, where petitioner has not cited anything in the county ordinance that constitutes an approval standard for a post-partition boundary line adjustment, even if the adjustment undercuts a factual predicate for the partition approval, this argument provides no basis for reversal or remand. Friends of Douglas County v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 11 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Approving a boundary line adjustment to a parcel under applicable standards does not "collaterally attack" a previous land partition decision that originally created the subject parcel under different standards, even assuming the adjusted parcel after the boundary line adjustment would not comply with the partition standards that were applied earlier when the parcel was created. Friends of Douglas County v. Douglas County, 78 Or LUBA 11 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. When a lot is an unplatted remainder of a subdivision and is not depicted at all on the approved subdivision plat, its current configuration may have resulted from the subdivision but that does not indicate that the county approved the creation of the lot by applying subdivision approval standards. On remand, the hearings officer needs to determine if the lot was approved by applying subdivision standards. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 164 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. ORS 92.190(3) embodies a requirement that, where local governments choose to provide an alternative procedure for property line adjustments other than using replat procedures, that alternative procedure must include local government approval of some kind. However, ORS 197.190(3) does not specify any particular procedures or form of approval, and does not necessarily require that final approval be obtained prior to recordation of the adjustment deeds. Given the absence of more specific statutory requirements a county does not err in verifying property as a legal lot, notwithstanding that the property lines were adopted in 2007 without prior county approval, where following recordation of the deeds, the county preliminarily verified the adjustments as lawful and issued a final approval in 2017 when the property owner applied for, and the county approved, a development permit. This process, although partially post-hoc, is consistent with ORS 92.190(3). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, legislatively overruled the holding in Phillips v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 194, aff'd, 213 Or App 498, 162 P3d 338 (2007), which provided that it was unlawful to adjust property boundaries in a way that results in parcels that fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, authorizes property line adjustments of substandard size lots and parcels, even if the resulting lots or parcels continue to fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, section 6 made that legislation retroactive to "property line adjustments approved before, on or after the effective date of this 2008 Act." Therefore, Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12 applies to a property line adjustment that took place in 2007, because the property line adjustment was "approved * * * before, on or after" the effective date of the 2008 Act. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. LUBA may take official notice of a county legal lot verification decision involving the same property at issue in an appeal of a county decision approving property line adjustments, for the limited purpose of resolving a dispute regarding LUBA's scope of review over the county decision approving property line adjustments. Sarett v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 308 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. An appeal of a 2014 decision approving seven property line adjustments is not a "collateral attack" on a subsequent and unappealed 2017 decision verifying four of the seven properties adjusted as lawfully created lots, where the 2017 decision did not purport to approve the configuration or boundaries adjusted in the 2014 decision, but simply determined that four of the parcels at issue were lawfully created. Sarett v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 308 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Deeds that transferred title for property that is the subject of some but not all of the property line adjustments that are the subject matter of the challenged decision, but that nevertheless post-date the decision, were not "placed before" the planner who approved the property line adjustments within the meaning of OAR 661-010-0025(1)(b), where the deeds were not actually provided to the planner prior to the decision. Simply because other deeds that also post-date the decision were included in the record, possibly erroneously, does not mean the remainder of the post-decision deeds must also be included in the record. Sarett v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 470 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Absent a motion to take evidence outside the record pursuant to OAR 660-010-0045, LUBA has no basis for considering diagrams that illustrate an entire series of property line adjustments that are the subject matter of the challenged decision, but that nevertheless contain hand-drawn lines, text, and other information which indicate at least some of the notations post-date the decision, and therefore the diagrams could not have been "placed before" the planner who approved the property line adjustments. Sarett v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 470 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where petitioner offers some additional deeds and diagrams from a 2017 legal lot verification proceeding, in a challenge to a 2016 application for multiple property line adjustments, LUBA may not consider the additional post-decision deeds and diagrams where the parties agree that the 2016 application approved more than a single property line adjustment, and thus the deeds and diagrams do not offer anything material as to a "disputed factual allegation in the parties' briefs" pursuant to OAR 661-010-0045(1). Sarett v. Lane County, 76 Or LUBA 485 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. After 2005 statutory amendments, ORS chapter 92 does not preclude approving multiple property line adjustments in a single decision, provided the adjusted property lines are common property lines between abutting, existing properties. Bowerman v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 86 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A property line adjustment decision may not approve multiple property line adjustments, where the latter property line adjustments adjust property lines between parcels that were the subject of one of the earlier property line adjustments. To approve a property line adjustment and then approve an additional property line adjustment for one of the adjusted properties, the statutorily required conveyance to complete the first property line adjustment must first be recorded. Bowerman v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 86 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where four pre-1993 parcels are combined through property line adjustments to meet a local minimum parcel size standard, under OAR 660-033-0020(4) the date the property line adjustments created the new combined parcel is the new "date of creation." Where that new date of creation post-dates 1993, a county decision approving a nonfarm dwelling on the combined parcel does not comply with the ORS 215.284(2)(c) requirement that a nonfarm dwelling must "be sited on a lot or parcel created before January 1, 1993." Central Oregon Landwatch v. Crook County, 75 Or LUBA 186 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's interpretation of a code provision allowing a property line adjustment that does not result in a non-buildable parcel being made buildable as concerning only parcels that are not buildable due to an inability to meet required setbacks, regardless of whether the applicant in fact intends to build on the property, where nothing in the code provision requires the applicant to demonstrate or the county to determine the intended use of the property. Lowell v. Jackson County, 75 Or LUBA 251 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Remand is necessary where a code provision allows a property line adjustment as long as the adjustment does not result in an unbuildable parcel being made buildable, but the record includes no evidence regarding whether the adjusted parcel had one or more buildable sites prior to the adjustment, and the findings on that point are conclusory and not supported by substantial evidence. Lowell v. Jackson County, 75 Or LUBA 251 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. LUBA will affirm a finding that a 1985 quitclaim deed of a portion of a river meander channel from the state to an adjoining property owner represented a property line adjustment, rather than the unlawful creation of a new discrete parcel, where the petitioner identifies no statutory or local authority compelling the conclusion that the 1985 deed had the legal effect of creating a new parcel. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 473 (2017).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A long-expired 1983 property line adjustment decision that required the consolidation of parcels, but that was never implemented by deeds actually consolidating the parcels, had no legal effect on the configuration of the parcels involved. Grimstad v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 360 (2016).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Petitioner's appeal of a decision approving several property line adjustments is not rendered moot by the applicant's reapplication for approval of the property line adjustments, where the decision on the reapplication is not yet final and the applicant could withdraw that reapplication at any time. Bowerman v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 644 (2016).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. An appeal of a decision granting property line adjustments that was rendered without providing notice and an opportunity for a local appeal is not rendered moot by a reapplication followed by notice and an opportunity for appeal, where petitioner's petition for review is not limited to assigning error to the failure to provide notice and an opportunity for local appeal and also assigns error to the substance of the property line adjustment decision. Bowerman v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 644 (2016).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where an application for property line adjustments is appealed to LUBA, while that appeal is pending at LUBA the local government lacks jurisdiction to accept a reapplication for those property line adjustments and render a modified decision on the application. Bowerman v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 644 (2016).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. In determining that four applications to adjust the property lines of five properties, four of which are part of a platted subdivision, could be approved as property line adjustments rather than as a replat of a recorded subdivision, the county interpreted its land use regulations and exercised legal judgment, and therefore the challenged decision is not subject to the ministerial exception at ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A). Balsly v. Benton County, 73 Or LUBA 287 (2016).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. In approving a property line adjustment between two EFU-zoned parcels to facilitate a proposed farm dwelling, under a standard that requires that the adjusted parcel "qualifies for a homesite," a county may rely on a concurrent county decision approving a farm dwelling on the adjusted parcel to conclude that the "qualifies for a homesite" standard is met, and need not require farm income evidence or adopt findings as part of the adjustment decision that again demonstrate that the adjusted parcel qualifies for a farm dwelling. Louks v. Jackson County, 65 Or LUBA 58 (2012).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that a county standard requiring a showing that the proposed "use" will not force a significant change in farm or forest practices or significantly increase costs of farm and forest practices does not apply to a property line adjustment, where the county standard applies to "uses" listed in the county's EFU zone, and property line adjustments are not listed as a use. Louks v. Jackson County, 65 Or LUBA 58 (2012).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A county code section that provides general standards for "adjustments" does not provide additional standards for a property line adjustment, where the relevant text and context indicates that "adjustment" as used in that code section means an adjustment or variance to a minimum lot size or similar standard, not a property line adjustment that requires no variance. Louks v. Jackson County, 65 Or LUBA 58 (2012).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot line adjustments. A property line adjustment cannot create new parcels. Where a property line adjustment depicts with dashed lines the interior property lines of lots vacated by a prior partition, the subsequent property line adjustment does not have the legal effect of re-establishing the prior existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A challenge to a property line adjustment that results in 106-acre and 23-acre parcels based on a compatibility standard provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the compatibility standard is really a compatibility "objective," and the objective only applies where a resulting parcel is five acres or less. Lulay v. Linn County, 60 Or LUBA 432 (2010).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. An argument that a decision approving a boundary line adjustment under an acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations violates Goal 4 provides no basis for reversal, where petitioner offers no legal theory for why Goal 4 applies to such a decision. Generally, unless a land use decision adopts new or amended comprehensive plan or land use regulation provisions, a post-acknowledgement land use decision is governed by the acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations and need not apply the statewide planning goals directly. Lulay v. Linn County, 60 Or LUBA 432 (2010).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Oregon Laws 2008, Chapter 12, Section 2(b) does not compel a county to deny a proposed property line adjustment that results in substandard sized parcels where the original parcels did not meet the minimum parcel size, the resulting parcels do not meet the minimum parcel size, and no new parcels are created, even if one of the resulting parcels contains two different zoning designations. Just v. Linn County, 59 Or LUBA 112 (2009).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Notwithstanding LUBA's contrary conclusion in Warf v. Coos County, 43 Or LUBA 460 (2003), based on pre-2005 statutory language, after 2005 amendments to OAR 92.010(11), a local government may in a single decision approve more than one property line adjustment. Kipfer v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 436 (2009).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. The ORS 92.010(7) definition of "partition land" excludes property line adjustments "where the existing unit of land reduced in size by the adjustment complies with any applicable zoning ordinance." A property line adjustment where the parcel or lot that is reduced in size by the property line adjustment fails to comply with the minimum lot or parcel size established by the zoning ordinance is therefore a partition rather than a property line adjustment. Phillips v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 194 (2007).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A decision that merely relocates or eliminates a common property line between abutting properties is not a "permit" decision as that term is defined in ORS 227.160(2) and 215.402(4), even if the decision involves the exercise of discretion. South v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 362 (2007).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A decision that relocates or eliminates a common boundary between two properties does not involve the "proposed development of land" and thus is not a "permit" as that term is defined in ORS 227.160(2) and 215.402(4). The statutory requirements for notice and hearing that govern "permit" decisions do not apply to a property line adjustment decision. South v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 362 (2007).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Absent some code provision or law to the contrary, a local government need not determine that a lot was "legally created" in order to determine that the lot qualifies as a "lot of record" as that term is used in the code. South v. City of Portland, 53 Or LUBA 362 (2007).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Absent some authority to the contrary, a local government need not approve a property line adjustment necessary to effect a proposed subdivision prior to or contemporaneously with adopting the preliminary subdivision approval. A finding that it is feasible to obtain a property line adjustment, combined with a condition requiring that the adjustment be obtained prior to final subdivision approval, is sufficient. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A hearings officer does not err in determining that specific provisions governing property line adjustments of undersize lots in agricultural zones apply to an agriculturally zoned portion of a split-zoned parcel, rather than general provisions governing property line adjustments requiring that adjusted lots satisfy the minimum parcel size. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A code standard prohibiting a property line adjustment on agricultural land where the adjustment is used to qualify a lot or parcel for the siting of a dwelling does not preclude an adjustment that would effectively separate a split-zoned parcel to allow residential development on the non-agriculturally zoned portion of the parcel, where the adjustment will not qualify the agricultural portion of the parcel for a dwelling. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Reversal, not remand, is the appropriate remedy where a challenged property line adjustment purports to reconfigure the lot lines of three adjacent lots of an existing subdivision to create two lots out of the pre-existing three lots, and the reconfiguration cannot be achieved through a single property line adjustment or through serial adjustments. Borton v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 478 (2006).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where code standards for a lot line adjustment require submission of deeds, a survey drawing, proof that taxes are paid, and verification that the city has accepted any water or sewer line construction, and the petitioner fails to identify anything about those standards that requires interpretation or the exercise of policy or legal judgment, a decision approving a lot line adjustment under those standards is not a "land use decision" as defined at ORS 197.015(10). Jewett v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 16 (2004).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A concern that a property line adjustment may facilitate future development of a 33-acre parcel and a 64-acre parcel does not render a decision approving the adjustment a "significant impact" land use decision, where the petitioner fails to demonstrate that the adjustment would allow a different kind or intensity of development, change the land use status quo of the area, or create an actual, qualitatively or quantitatively significant impact on present or future land uses. Jewett v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 16 (2004).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Under ORS 92.017, a lawfully created lot or parcel remains a discrete lot or parcel, unless the lot lines are vacated or the lot or parcel is further divided. Consolidation of several lots into one tax lot does not consolidate or affect the discrete existence of those lots. Therefore, no process of "lot segregation" is necessary in order to adjust property boundaries within a tax lot that is composed of several discrete lots or parcels. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Absent some statute or code authority, a local government cannot recognize the existence of only one internal lot line within a four-lot tract and move that lot line around within the tract in a manner that crosses or ignores the still existing lot lines of other discrete lots in the tract. A decision with that effect is arguably a "partition" or "replat" as those terms are defined in ORS chapter 92, and does not qualify as a "property line adjustment." South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A decision that approves a "property line adjustment" as that term is defined in ORS chapter 92 will usually fall within the ministerial exception to LUBA's jurisdiction. However, determining whether a particular lot configuration in fact qualifies as property line adjustment, as opposed to something else such as a partition or replat, may require interpretation and exercise of legal judgment. If so, the decision does not fall within the ministerial exception, and is subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. LUBA will reverse rather than remand a decision approving a property line adjustment, where the decision erroneously approves something other than a property line adjustment, and the decision and respondent offer no theory as to how the city could lawfully do what the decision purports to do. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. City approval of an adjustment to a maximum lot size requirement in advance of a lot line relocation that would create an oversized lot, rather than contemporaneously with that lot line relocation, provides no basis for remand, where nothing in the city's code requires that the adjustment and lot line relocation be approved contemporaneously. South v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 558 (2004).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A city commits no error by processing a lot line adjustment as a quasi-judicial land use matter before the planning commission rather than as a ministerial matter before the planning department, where the lot line adjustment decision requires that the city exercise significant legal and factual judgment. Smith v. City of St. Paul, 45 Or LUBA 281 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Even if a city erroneously applied its zoning ordinance standards for lots or parcels to an applicant's request for a lot line adjustment, that error provides no basis for reversal or remand where the city's decision to deny the lot line adjustment request was not based on those standards. Smith v. City of St. Paul, 45 Or LUBA 281 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. As defined by ORS 92.010(11), a property line adjustment is limited to relocating one common property line between two abutting properties. Warf v. Coos County, 43 Or LUBA 460 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Property line adjustments are limited to property lines separating existing lots or parcels; property line adjustments may not be approved for hypothetical lots or parcels that do not yet separately exist as lots or parcels. Warf v. Coos County, 43 Or LUBA 460 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Serial property line adjustments may be approved to reconfigure existing parcels. Warf v. Coos County, 43 Or LUBA 460 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Absent seeking approval of a replat or new partition plat, applicants who seek to achieve complex reconfigurations of existing parcels must seek and receive separate approvals for each of the property line adjustments that are needed to achieve the reconfiguration and must implement each of those approved property line adjustments before seeking approval of additional adjustments of an approved property line adjustment. Warf v. Coos County, 43 Or LUBA 460 (2003).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where county road standards that apply when new lots are created by major partition or subdivision do not by their terms apply where lot lines are adjusted, the board of county commissioners is nevertheless within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), where it interprets separate code requirements for lot line adjustments as requiring that those county road standards be applied when providing access to lots for which lot lines have been adjusted. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 41 Or LUBA 476 (2002).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. The illegality of previous lot line adjustments affecting land proposed for rezoning does not provide a basis for remand, where the adjustments do not affect the number of parcels or other required calculations under the applicable rezoning criteria, and those criteria do not otherwise require consideration of the legality of previous lot line adjustments. Maxwell v. Lane County, 39 Or LUBA 556 (2001).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where a city code requires that a lot line adjustment may be approved only if adequate public facilities are available to serve the resulting parcels and the proposal is compatible with the comprehensive plan, the city errs in interpreting the code to limit its consideration to the lot line adjustment itself and not the uses proposed on the adjusted lots. Mountain West Investment v. City of Silverton, 39 Or LUBA 507 (2001).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A local government does not err in determining that a complicated land sale transaction that reconfigured the boundaries of several parcels was a property line adjustment rather than a partition, where five separate parcels existed before and after the transaction and a property line adjustment is a more plausible explanation of the transaction than a combination of partition and merger. Tarjoto v. Lane County, 36 Or LUBA 645 (1999).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Property line adjustments are not limited to adjustments in the boundaries of lots or parcels created by subdivision or partition plat, but also include adjustments in the boundaries of parcels created by metes and bounds conveyance. Tarjoto v. Lane County, 36 Or LUBA 645 (1999).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where a county approves an application that creates a new parcel, that approval is a partition as defined by ORS 92.010 notwithstanding that the county also approved a lot line adjustment involving the parent parcel in the same proceeding. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. The definition of "Date of Creation" at OAR 660-033-0020(4) expands the circumstances in which parcels are "created" for purposes of siting a nonfarm dwelling to include lot line adjustments or similar reconfigurations that have the effect of qualifying the parcel for a dwelling. The definition does not impliedly narrow the set of circumstances that create a parcel to include only those events that have the effect of qualifying a parcel for a dwelling. Hartmann v. Washington County, 36 Or LUBA 442 (1999).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A property line adjustment decision is a land use decision where complex factual and legal circumstances of the case require the exercise of legal judgment. Goddard v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 402 (1998).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A decision that relocates property lines that are not common to abutting properties reconfigures the property in a manner that violates the definition of "property line adjustment" at ORS 92.010(11) and the statutory distinction between a property line adjustment and replat, and such action is prohibited as a matter of law. Goddard v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 402 (1998).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A property line adjustment is limited to relocation of common property lines. Where a decision reconfigures property lines so that entire parcels are moved and property lines that are not common are moved, the decision does not approve a property line adjustment. Goddard v. Jackson County, 34 Or LUBA 402 (1998).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. The adjustment of a property line between existing parcels is not a "partition," where property is taken from one parcel and added to another. Tarjoto v. Lane County, 34 Or LUBA 124 (1998).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where a petitioner challenges a county's authority to process an application for a lot line adjustment on the basis that there has never been a legal determination that the property consists of more than one parcel, such a challenge is an impermissible collateral attack on an earlier determination, if such a determination has been made. However, where the record does not reflect that any legal determination has been made, petitioner may challenge the county's authority to proceed with a lot line adjustment on the premise that the property consists of two parcels. Higgins v. Marion County, 30 Or LUBA 426 (1996).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where a county has never made a decision to partition a parcel, the county's approval of a lot line adjustment, which is premised on the assumption that a partition has occurred, must be reversed. Higgins v. Marion County, 30 Or LUBA 426 (1996).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. The definition of "farm use" in ORS 215.203 is not an independent approval criterion for a lot line adjustment in an exclusive farm use zone. Wissusik v. Yamhill County, 27 Or LUBA 94 (1994).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where a local code allows approval of a rural planned development (RPD) "in conjunction with" a land division, and establishes comprehensive standards for RPDs, including standards for lot line adjustments in an approved RPD, the local government's interpretation of a code provision allowing revisions to an approved land division as giving it authority to approve lot line adjustments in an approved RPD which are not otherwise allowable under the RPD provisions, is clearly wrong. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Although ORS 92.010 to 92.190 do not specifically envision a subdivision approval process that combines approval of a subdivision and a lot line adjustment, neither do those statutes prohibit such a process. Absent such a prohibition, a local government commits no error in following such a combined process. Miller v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 169 (1993).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. Where nothing in the caption, findings or decision itself suggests that the challenged decision approves a lot line adjustment, a lot line adjustment was not approved. Barker v. City of Cannon Beach, 24 Or LUBA 221 (1992).

33.3 Land Divisions – Lot Line Adjustments. A lot line adjustment is not a partition and cannot create additional units of land. ORS 92.015(7)(b). McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Federal Public Lands Survey System (PLSS) surveys did not create discrete units of land for development purposes. Urstadt v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 118 (2020).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The purpose of the federal Public Lands Survey System (PLSS) was to facilitate the identification of specific areas of property so that they could be easily referenced in conveyance documents; accordingly, PLSS surveys did not create discrete legal parcels for development purposes simply by showing 40-acre Government Lots (GLots) or other boundary lines. Kuether v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 133 (2020).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Lots depicted on an unrecorded survey filed with the county surveyor's office are not lawful units of land under ORS 92.010(3)(a)(B) where (1) the survey was not subject to the relevant subdivision ordinance because the ordinance defined "subdivide land" as "to partition a parcel of land into four or more parcels of less than five acres each for the purpose of transfer of ownership or building development" and only one of the depicted lots was less than five acres in size, and, (2) when the depicted lots were subsequently conveyed as separate units of land, they did not comply with the applicable minimum parcel size for the creation of new parcels. Kuether v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 133 (2020).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Arguments that a city decision approving a partition affects "livability of [an] existing house" and that the city ignored "impact on the neighborhood" provide no basis for reversal or remand where none of the criteria applicable to land divisions require the city to consider "privacy or livability" in determining whether to approve the land division. Bohan v. City of Portland, 80 Or LUBA 263 (2019).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. An unlawful division of land creates two unlawful units of land rather than an unlawful unit of land and a lawful remainder. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 415 (2019).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where separate applications to partition two parcels under a single ownership into three parcels each receive final approval in the same calendar year, the resultant units of land are not "lawfully created" where state statute requires that divisions of "an area or tract of land into four or more lots within a calendar year when such area or tract of land exists as a unit or contiguous units of land under a single ownership" receive subdivision approval. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 65 (2019).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally If the law at the time that land was divided required local government approval, and the local government in fact approved the land division, then any procedural or substantive errors the local government might have made in issuing that approval are not a basis to conclude that the unit of land is not a lawful lot or parcel. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 65 (2019).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a parcel is lawfully created, but later divided unlawfully under ORS 215.750(1)(a), a county may rely on the parcel as it existed prior to the unlawful division in determining whether a unit of land qualifies for a forest template dwelling on January

1, 2003. Under ORS 92.017, such parcel "remain[s] discrete" unless it is "further divided, as provided by law." Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 79 Or LUBA 111 (2019).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. When a lot is an unplatted remainder of a subdivision and is not depicted at all on the approved subdivision plat, its current configuration may have resulted from the subdivision but that does not indicate that the county approved the creation of the lot by applying subdivision approval standards. On remand, the hearings officer needs to determine if the lot was approved by applying subdivision standards. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 78 Or LUBA 164 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A legal lot verification decision cannot itself result in the creation of a unit of land. At most, a legal lot verification decision would recognize that a unit of land was lawfully created by some other process or event. Wolcott v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 165 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where the last paragraph of a legal lot verification decision states that it is a "preliminary" decision and that the "decision" on whether the property is a legal lot will be made when a development permit is approved, the legal lot verification decision is not a final, binding decision that determines that the property is a lawfully created lot. Wolcott v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 165 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 92.176 provides in certain circumstances for validation of illegally created lots or parcels. Where a parcel is validated under ORS 92.176, an adjoining parcel that was also illegally created is not thereby validated as a lawful "remainder" parcel. The adjoining parcel must itself be separately validated under ORS 92.176. Wolcott v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 165 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 197.830(6) is a statute of ultimate repose, providing that appeal periods to LUBA may not exceed either a three-year or 10-year period, depending on whether notice of the final decision is required but not provided. However, ORS 197.830(6) cannot be applied to require a county in 2016 to recognize property as a lawfully created parcel pursuant to a 2003 legal lot verification decision, on the theory that the 2003 decision was a "final," unappealed, and now unappealable decision under ORS 197.830(6), where the 2003 decision itself states that it was only a "preliminary" decision. Because only final decisions can be appealed to LUBA, the statute of ultimate repose is inapplicable. Wolcott v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 165 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 92.190(3) embodies a requirement that, where local governments choose to provide an alternative procedure for property line adjustments other than using replat procedures, that alternative procedure must include local government approval of some kind. However, ORS 197.190(3) does not specify any particular procedures or form of approval, and does not necessarily require that final approval be obtained prior to recordation of the adjustment deeds. Given the absence of more specific statutory requirements a county does not err in verifying property as a legal lot, notwithstanding that the property lines were adopted in 2007 without prior county approval, where following recordation of the deeds, the county preliminarily verified the adjustments as lawful and issued a final approval in 2017 when the property owner applied for, and the county approved, a development permit. This process, although partially post-hoc, is consistent with ORS 92.190(3). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, legislatively overruled the holding in Phillips v. Polk County, 53 Or LUBA 194, aff'd, 213 Or App 498, 162 P3d 338 (2007), which provided that it was unlawful to adjust property boundaries in a way that results in parcels that fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, authorizes property line adjustments of substandard size lots and parcels, even if the resulting lots or parcels continue to fail to comply with applicable minimum parcel sizes. Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12, section 6 made that legislation retroactive to "property line adjustments approved before, on or after the effective date of this 2008 Act." Therefore, Oregon Laws 2008, chapter 12 applies to a property line adjustment that took place in 2007, because the property line adjustment was "approved * * * before, on or after" the effective date of the 2008 Act. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 486 (2018).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A hearings officer's erroneous statement that a portion of a meander channel that the State of Oregon quitclaimed to an adjoining property owner in 1985 was "in existence" prior to 1985 is harmless error, where the remainder of the hearings officer's findings make it clear that he was not finding that the quitclaimed portion of land existed as a discrete and lawful unit of land prior to 1985, but that the meander channel as a whole existed as, or as part of, a discrete unit of land owned by the state since statehood in 1859. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 473 (2017).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A one-half-acre size requirement threshold for requiring PUD approval is not a mere application requirement that can be overlooked to require PUD approval for proposals of less than one-half acre. Even if the city intended to delete that threshold for PUD proposals near transit stations, where the threshold clearly applies it cannot be overlooked to give effect to an intent that is inconsistent with the text of the zoning ordinance. Mintz v. City of Beaverton, 66 Or LUBA 118 (2012).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The procedure provided by ORS 92.234, which allows local governments to revise, replat, or eliminate undeveloped subdivisions through local ordinance, is not the exclusive process for "vacating" existing property lines for purposes of ORS 92.017. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A partition or replat that has the effect of eliminating pre-existing property lines is a "specific process" for "vacating" property lines for both parcels and lots, for purposes of ORS 92.017. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Even if it is legally possible to intentionally create a discrete parcel that consists entirely of nested, discrete lots or parcels without vacating those nested lots or parcels, LUBA will affirm a local government finding that a partition plat that creates a new parcel without depicting any nested lot lines has the effect of vacating the pre-existing lots, where there is nothing on the partition plat, description, or narrative that suggests an intent to preserve the pre-existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. An approved partition plat creating new parcels need not bisect the property lines of pre-existing lots to "vacate" those lots for purposes of ORS 92.017. Even if the boundaries of the new parcels follow the property lines of some pre-existing lots, the partition plat can have the effect of vacating or consolidating the pre-existing lots included within the newly established parcels. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A property line adjustment cannot create new parcels. Where a property line adjustment depicts with dashed lines the interior property lines of lots vacated by a prior partition, the subsequent property line adjustment does not have the legal effect of re-establishing the prior existing lots. Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Co. v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 393 (2011).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992), where an approval criterion requires a determination that property is a legal or lawfully created parcel, the relevant question is whether any local government approvals required at the time were obtained, not whether the local government correctly applied the applicable approval criteria to create the property. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), where the applicable criteria expressly or implicitly require a determination that a unit of land proposed for development is a legal or lawfully created "parcel" under code definitions that set out several ways to create a "parcel," the relevant question is whether the unit of land was in fact created in one of the ways set out in the definition, not whether substantive or procedural errors might have been made in the process of creating the parcel. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under a code provision defining a lot or parcel as (1) a unit of land created by partition or subdivision, or (2) a unit of land under single ownership, which complies with all applicable laws at the time the lot or parcel was created, the phrase "complies with all applicable laws" modifies the immediately preceding phrase, units of land created by means other than partition or subdivision, and does not require a determination that a parcel created by partition complies with all applicable laws at the time it was created. Brodersen v. City of Ashland, 62 Or LUBA 329 (2010).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. When approving a subdivision where approval criteria must be applied in a proceeding where the public has participatory rights, a city may defer findings on a required approval criterion to a later proceeding, so long as that later proceeding is one in which the public has participatory rights. Boucot v. City of Corvallis, 61 Or LUBA 459 (2010).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 374.310(3), which prohibits denying reasonable access from property adjoining a public road, is not applicable where a property has access to a public road and the county is not denying the applicant for a three-parcel partition access from that public road. Pelz v. Clackamas County, 59 Or LUBA 219 (2009).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A division of land that creates an EFU-zoned parcel that is smaller than the 80-acre minimum set forth in ORS 215.780(1) violates that statute, and the land division is prohibited as a matter of law. Jouvenat v. Douglas County, 58 Or LUBA 378 (2009).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 92.010 to 92.190 address the creation of new lots or parcels; there is no explicit prohibition in those statutes preventing a local government from making a determination regarding the legal or illegal status of lots or parcels that were not created in conformance with applicable county laws and regulations at the time they were initially created. Porter v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 635 (2008).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A comprehensive plan policy that directs a county to "adopt large lot zoning to protect rural, agricultural and forest areas," does not apply directly to an application to subdivide rural agricultural land. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a city's land use code defines the term "lot" but excludes a lot from that definition if "[t]he lot as originally platted is no longer whole and consists of individual property remnants," all remnants, large and small, are considered remnants and are no longer within the definition of "lot." Jackson v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 138 (2007).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Absent some expression of intent in a deed that separately listed lots or parcels are to be merged into a single unit of land, the listing of multiple lots or parcels in a single paragraph or a single sentence of a deed does not operate to merge those lots or parcels into a single unit of land. The lots retain their separate identify following the transfer. Jackson v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 138 (2007).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 92.100(7), which provides that a decision approving a final subdivision or partition plat is not a land use decision or limited land use decision, effectively removes such decisions from LUBA's jurisdiction. Nothing in the text or legislative history of ORS 92.100(7) suggests that the exclusion applies only to nondiscretionary final subdivision or partition plat decisions. Wagon Trail Ranch v. Klamath County, 54 Or LUBA 654 (2007).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), adh'd to as modified on recons, 179 Or App 409, 40 P3d 532 (2002), if directly applicable legislation expressly requires that an analysis of existing lots or parcels must be limited to an analysis of legally created lots or parcels, then it follows that only lawfully created lots or parcels can be considered. However, even if the directly applicable legislation does not expressly require that lots or parcels have been legally created, that requirement may be found in related enactments and the legislative context in which the directly applicable legislation appears. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under ORS 215.010(1), when the word "parcel" is used in ORS chapter 215, the parcel must be a lawfully created parcel, in the sense that the parcel's date of creation either predated any applicable laws governing partitions or the parcel was created in compliance with those laws. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. When the definitions of the relevant terms set out in ORS chapter 92 are read together, whether a division of land creates "parcels" or "lots" depends the number units of land that one or more divisions of land in a single year produce. If the division or divisions produce four or more units of land, they are lots; if they produce three of fewer, they are parcels. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Applying the contextual analysis that is required by Maxwell v. Lane County, 178 Or App 210, 35 P3d 1128 (2001), adh'd to as modified on recons, 179 Or App 409, 40 P3d 532 (2002), even though ORS 215.750(1) does not expressly state that the references in that statute to "lots" are limited to lawfully created lots, and even though the relevant definitions in ORS 92.010 do not expressly require that a lot must be a lawfully created lot, if those statutes are read in context with ORS 92.012, 92.018(1), 92.025(1) and ORS 215.010(1)(a), it is sufficiently clear that when the legislature used the term "lot" in ORS 215.750(1) it did not mean to include unlawfully created lots. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. County authority to approve forest template dwellings derives from ORS 215.750(1). In exercising the authority granted by ORS 215.750(1), a county may not apply a county definition of "lot" to recognize lots that could not be recognized under ORS 215.750(1). The county may not set a lower standard for approving forest template dwellings under county legislation than the standard that is set by ORS 215.750. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 53 Or LUBA 4 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where the "Decision" section of a land use decision expressly grants only "planned unit development subdivision plan" approval, but the decision read as a whole clearly also grants the zoning map amendment that was included in the planned unit development and subdivision plan application, LUBA will interpret the decision to grant all three of the requested approvals. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where an application for city subdivision approval includes a request for planned unit development approval that allows the property to be divided in ways that the property could not be divided without planned unit development approval, the decision granting planned unit development subdivision approval is a land use decision, not a limited land use decision. Wasserburg v. City of Dunes City, 52 Or LUBA 70 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. As a general rule there is no reason why a local government could not interpret an "orderly development" land division criterion to impose a more stringent standard than Oregon Department of Transportation's standard that the performance of failing intersections not be worsened by a proposal. However, where such an interpretation appears to be inconsistent with other city criteria and those apparent inconsistencies are not addressed in the decision maker's findings, LUBA will reject the interpretation as incorrect. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Bend, 52 Or LUBA 261 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a local code provision is expressly directed at building permits and a hearing officer finds that the provision does not apply to a request for subdivision approval, and petitioners do not assign error to those findings, petitioners' assignment of error that the hearings officer should have applied the provision in approving the subdivision will be denied. Bickford v. City of Tigard, 52 Or LUBA 301 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a hearings officer finds that a proposed subdivision complies with all approval criteria and imposes a condition of subdivision approval that requires preparation of a habitat enhancement plan at a later date, but says nothing about what procedures will be required to review and approve the habitat enhancement plan, opponent's arguments that a public hearing will be required to review and approve the habitat enhancement plan are premature. Kyle v. Washington County, 52 Or LUBA 399 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The dedication of a mere easement or right to use a strip of land for roadway purposes is not sufficient to divide land. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a strip of land was transferred in fee title to the county for roadway purposes, the resulting units of land lying on either side of that strip do not violate the requirement in ORS 92.014 (1955) that "[n]o person shall create a street or way for the purpose of partitioning a parcel of land without the approval of the agency or body authorized to give approval of plans for subdivision," where the record does not indicate that the roadway was created "for the purpose of partitioning land." Accordingly, the county does not err in determining that one of those resulting units of land is a lawfully created "parcel," and complies with the requirement in ORS 215.705(1)(a) that the lot or parcel on which a forest template dwelling is proposed was lawfully created. Lovinger v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 29 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where all parties believed that a two-variance subdivision proposal was before the planning commission, the planning commission voted to approve the two-variance subdivision, but the planning commission's final written decision approved a prior, withdrawn three-variance subdivision proposal with a slightly different lot configuration, remand is required so that the city can adopt a written decision that approves the two-variance subdivision that the planning commission intended to approve. Lockwood v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 334 (2006).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. For land use planning purposes "tracts" rather than "lots" or "parcels" may be the required unit of analysis if the relevant law so specifies. However, a legal requirement to consider "tracts" does not mean that the individual "lots" or "parcels" that make up those tracts lose their separate legal identity. Just v. Lane County, 50 Or LUBA 399 (2005).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Even if a local government could recognize partial parcel annexations as sufficient to legally divide a parcel, where a local lot of record code definition does not recognize partial parcel annexation as sufficient to legally divide the annexed portion of a parcel from the portion of a parcel that is not annexed, the annexation does not have the effect of dividing the parcel. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The County Assessor's assignment of a new tax lot number to the part of a 5.45-acre parcel that was annexed, while retaining the prior tax lot number for the part of the 5.45-parcel that was not annexed, is not sufficient to divide the 5.45-acre parcel into two different parcels. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where 3.63 acres of a 5.45-acre parcel are located outside a city and are conveyed improperly by deed to a new owner, the original owner's subsequent recording of a final plat for the 1.82 acres inside the city, which were retained by the original owner, does not have the effect of legally creating a 3.63-acre parcel. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under ORS 92.017, a lawfully created lot or parcel remains a discrete lot or parcel, unless the lot lines are vacated or the lot or parcel is further divided. Consolidation of several lots into one tax lot does not consolidate or affect the discrete existence of those lots. Therefore, no process of "lot segregation" is necessary in order to adjust property boundaries within a tax lot that is composed of several discrete lots or parcels. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Absent some statute or code authority, a local government cannot recognize the existence of only one internal lot line within a four-lot tract and move that lot line around within the tract in a manner that crosses or ignores the still existing lot lines of other discrete lots in the tract. A decision with that effect is arguably a "partition" or "replat" as those terms are defined in ORS chapter 92, and does not qualify as a "property line adjustment." South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A decision that approves a "property line adjustment" as that term is defined in ORS chapter 92 will usually fall within the ministerial exception to LUBA's jurisdiction. However, determining whether a particular lot configuration in fact qualifies as property line adjustment, as opposed to something else such as a partition or replat, may require interpretation and exercise of legal judgment. If so, the decision does not fall within the ministerial exception, and is subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. South v. City of Portland, 48 Or LUBA 555 (2005).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A county's decision to accept a deed for a road easement is a land use decision, where the county has adopted procedures as part of its subdivision regulations that require the county to apply standards in those regulations and its zoning ordinance in accepting land for use as county roads. Niederhof v. Deschutes County, 48 Or LUBA 626 (2004).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a county has not yet adopted land division regulations that apply to minor partitions, a minor partition nevertheless requires prior county approval of a variance under the zoning ordinance where one of the parcels created by the minor partition does not comply with the minimum parcel size that is required under the zoning ordinance. DeBoer v. Jackson County, 46 Or LUBA 24 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. In applying a standard that requires that development within 100 feet of a wetland minimize wildlife impacts, a county commits no error in finding that it is uncertain whether there are wetlands present and imposing a condition of approval that the subdivision applicant prepare a wetlands study and demonstrate that the standard is satisfied in a subsequent quasi-judicial administrative review before final plat approval. Willhite v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 340 (2004).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where the text of a local code standard does not require that an applicant establish that a proposed subdivision will not adversely affect nearby wells and does not require a finding that the applicant will be able to secure state agency approvals for its water supply, the local government is within its interpretative discretion under OAR 197.829(1) in interpreting that standard not to impose those obligations. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local government's failure to adopt findings addressing the potential impacts a subdivision will have on nearby wells and whether the applicant will be able to secure required state permits for its water supply could only provide a basis for remand by LUBA if there is some legal requirement that the local government adopt such findings. Paddock v. Yamhill County, 45 Or LUBA 39 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 215.263(7), which provides for the division of land resulting from lien foreclosure, does not authorize a county to "legalize" an existing but illegally created parcel that happens to be subject to foreclosure after its illegal creation. Perkins v. Umatilla County, 45 Or LUBA 445 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Even assuming that a parcel formed without required local government approval has not been "created" in any meaningful sense, the legislature did not intend ORS 215.263(7), which provides for division of land resulting from lien foreclosure, to authorize counties to effectively legalize such parcels for development. Perkins v. Umatilla County, 45 Or LUBA 445 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Vacation of a right-of-way attaches the portion of the vacated right-of-way between the centerline and adjoining parcels to those adjoining parcels. Such vacations do not create new, separate parcels between the former centerline and the adjoining parcels. Smith v. City of St. Paul, 45 Or LUBA 281 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where the property description in a deed fails to reference an adjoining vacated right-of-way, the deed nevertheless conveys the previously vacated right-of-way between the former centerline and the adjoining property that is described in the deed. Smith v. City of St. Paul, 45 Or LUBA 281 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where county code requires that "all owners" sign a subdivision application, a conclusion that that standard is met is supported by substantial evidence where the record includes a certificate signed by the applicant certifying that the applicant owns the property and other documents in the record name the applicant as the grantee or as a representative of the owner. Neketin v. Washington County, 45 Or LUBA 495 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. While statutory provisions governing land partitions were adopted in October 1973, they were not self-executing; the statutory requirements for land partitions did not apply to individual applications to partition land until after local governments adopted ordinances that implemented those statutory requirements. Palaske v. Clackamas County, 43 Or LUBA 202 (2002).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a hearings officer concludes that a local code provision setting out seven potential methods of creating a parcel applies in determining whether a parcel was lawfully created, the hearings officer is obligated to consider each of the arguably applicable methods, notwithstanding that the applicant below did not specifically raise issues regarding which of the arguably applicable methods applies. DeBoer v. Jackson County, 43 Or LUBA 219 (2002).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. ORS 197.175 requires that land use decisions comply with the applicable comprehensive plan. However, whether a particular plan provision is an approval criterion for a particular quasi-judicial land division application depends on the language of the comprehensive plan and its implementing regulations, with appropriate deference to any explicit or implicit interpretations of the comprehensive plan and implementing regulations by the local government. Donivan v. City of La Grande, 43 Or LUBA 477 (2003).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 118 Or App 543, 848 P2d 624 (1993), the county need not inquire into the legality of parcels subject to a rezoning application, where the applicable rezoning criteria do not expressly require a "lawfully created parcel" or a "legal parcel," or impose a similar requirement of legality. Maxwell v. Lane County, 39 Or LUBA 556 (2001).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local code provision allowing lots or parcels that "were conveyed by one deed and were subsequently consolidated" to be recreated does not set forth a specific process for vacating property boundaries, as contemplated by ORS 92.017. Therefore, that provision does not operate to consolidate several parcels that were conveyed in a single deed into a single parcel, absent some further process to vacate property lines. Smith v. Jackson County, 37 Or LUBA 779 (2000).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where an existing parcel is divided into three new parcels with one of the new parcels containing an existing house, the new parcel containing the house is not properly considered an existing parcel simply because it contains the existing house. Sunningdale-Case Heights Assoc. v. Washington Co., 34 Or LUBA 549 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The deadline for submitting a final plat is a "review procedure" rather than an "informational" or "other [subdivision] requirement" for purposes of choosing whether the two-year deadline imposed on subdivisions or the three-year deadline imposed on PUDs applies, where petitioner does not explain why the two-year time limit is informational or substantive and interpreting the requirement as being substantive would be inconsistent with the code's purpose of allowing concurrent processing of the final subdivision and PUD plans. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where preliminary subdivision and PUD approval is not modified, approval of the final subdivision and PUD plans is governed by the standard in effect when the application for preliminary approval was submitted. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A code requirement that deeds to property in a PUD shall stipulate that no "private structure of any type" shall be constructed in common areas does not apply to and does not prohibit construction of drainfields by the "developer" in common areas. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A code requirement that each lot in a subdivision be approved with provisions for sewage disposal is reasonably interpreted as not applying to lots that are not to be developed. Rochlin v. City of Portland, 34 Or LUBA 379 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where the same person owns separate, adjoining parcels but the property line separating those parcels is not vacated, the two parcels remain separate and distinct parcels under ORS 92.017. Tarjoto v. Lane County, 34 Or LUBA 124 (1998).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. To establish implied acceptance of a road dedication: (1) the partition plat must include a dedication, and (2) parcels must have been sold with reference to the partition plat containing the dedication. Where petitioner fails to establish either the plat dedication or sales with reference to the partition plat dedication, there is no implied dedication. Petersen v. Yamhill County, 33 Or LUBA 584 (1997).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Unless a specific process is followed to eliminate lot lines, under ORS 92.107 lots remain discrete lots. Koo v. Polk County, 33 Or LUBA 487 (1997).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local government acts within its interpretational discretion in construing local code provisions that treat "contiguous" parcels in "common ownership" as a single unit of land as not including parcels in common ownership which meet only at a common corner and share no common sides. Tognoli v. Crook County, 28 Or LUBA 527 (1995).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local government commits error by approving a modified partition application after the local evidentiary hearing is closed and refusing petitioner an opportunity to comment on the modified application before approving it. Tognoli v. Crook County, 28 Or LUBA 527 (1995).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. The legal effect of recording an approved plat showing 50- and 60-acre parcels, originally created by deed, as a single 110-acre parcel is to vacate the line dividing the 50- and 60-acre parcels. Van Veldhuizen v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 468 (1994).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Allegations that a local code provision consolidating commonly owned parcels conflicts with ORS 92.017, which provides that a lawfully created lot or parcel shall remain a discrete lot or parcel, are rendered moot and provide no basis for reversal or remand, where the parcels in question were combined in an approved and recorded plat. Van Veldhuizen v. Marion County, 26 Or LUBA 468 (1994).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. It is appropriate for a local government to interpret its code definition of the term "lot" consistently with ORS 92.017, so that individual legally established lots are recognized as such and may be individually conveyed, even though they are substandard under existing zoning regulations and are in common ownership with adjoining substandard lots. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Although ORS 92.017 requires that legally established lots continue to be recognized as individual, separately transferable lots, even where subsequent changes in land use regulations make those lots nonconforming, a local government may impose land use regulations requiring that two or more of such nonconforming lots be combined for development purposes. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local government interpretation of a code "lot of record" provision as allowing legally created but now substandard lots to be separately developed if adjoining lots are held in separate ownership or if the lots were shown on a plat of record prior to the date the relevant zoning requirements took effect is reasonable, and LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. That a challenged decision granting subdivision approval fails to demonstrate feasibility of compliance with an approval condition requiring that a subdivision street provide "no worse" access to an adjoining property than is currently provided to that adjoining property provides no basis for reversal or remand, where assuring "no worse" access is not required by any applicable approval standard. Day v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 468 (1993).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a local code allows approval of a rural planned development (RPD) "in conjunction with" a land division, and establishes comprehensive standards for RPDs, including standards for lot line adjustments in an approved RPD, the local government's interpretation of a code provision allowing revisions to an approved land division as giving it authority to approve lot line adjustments in an approved RPD which are not otherwise allowable under the RPD provisions, is clearly wrong. Reusser v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 252 (1993).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a parcel was created by deed, at a time when the local government interpreted its partitioning regulations to be inapplicable to parcels created in that manner, the local government may subsequently determine that a permit application complies with a code requirement that a proposed use be on a "parcel," without reexamining the applicability of its partitioning regulations when the parcel was created. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 24 Or LUBA 187 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Neither ORS 215.130 nor 215.215 authorizes the creation of new parcels for nonconforming uses. DLCD v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 32 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A local government is not required to allow use of existing roadways to provide access for newly created parcels, if those roadways do not also comply with the standards governing roadways providing access to newly created residential parcels. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. That a recently constructed roadway stream crossing was built to create a pond to satisfy fire district requirements for stored water provides no basis for requiring that a county approve use of such a roadway to provide access to newly created parcels. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a local government elects to limit the length of cul-de-sac streets, it may also establish how the length of such streets is to be measured. However, where no particular method of measuring the length of cul-de-sac streets is specified in its land use regulations, the local government must determine length applying the regulations as they are written and applying the plain and ordinary meaning of the operative term "length." Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Under applicable city land use regulation definitions and general understanding the length of a cul-de-sac street is measured to the end of whatever turnaround is provided; not to the point at which the right-of-way widens to accommodate the turnaround. Sully v. City of Ashland, 23 Or LUBA 25 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A subdivision ordinance standard requiring that cut and fill slopes not exceed one foot vertically to two feet horizontally "unless physical conditions demonstrate the propriety of other standards" allows two means of compliance. The local government may find either that the 2-to-1 slope limit will be met, or that physical conditions make a different slope standard proper. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a local government finds that a subdivision slope limitation will be satisfied, but the evidence in the record is that the required slope will be exceeded, the finding is not supported by substantial evidence in the record. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. A zoning ordinance lot dimension requirement that lots in a particular zone be a certain width "at the front building line" is applicable to the creation of an undeveloped lot. Ward v. City of Lake Oswego, 21 Or LUBA 470 (1991).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where a code provision is specifically amended to provide that the amended code provision does not apply to "minor land divisions," LUBA will not apply that code provision to "minor land divisions" even though such divisions may also satisfy the unamended definitions of subdivision or partition, to which the amended code provision continues to apply. Nicolai v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 142 (1990).

33.4 Land Divisions – Generally. Where an amended code provides discretionary criteria for approval of minor land divisions, it is error for the code to fail to require or provide for notice and hearing before the local government makes a final decision concerning a proposed minor land division. Nicolai v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 142 (1990).

34. Variances. Where a local code provision authorizes the adoption of refinement plans for areas not less than 40 acres in size, where another local code provision authorizes an adjustment of a development standard if the purpose underlying the standard is "equally or better met" by the proposed development, where the 40-acre standard is intended to avoid piecemeal development, where an applicant proposes a 14-acre refinement plan for an area adjacent to an existing refinement plan area, and where the proposed and existing refinement plan areas will be under common ownership and have physically connected elements, a local government does not err in concluding that the 14-acre refinement plan "equally or better" meets the 40-acre standard and, therefore, may be granted an adjustment. Mumper v. City of Salem, 81 Or LUBA 152 (2020).

34. Variances. Findings are inadequate to explain how a proposed adjustment to the minimum lot size to allow a duplex on a corner lot will not "allow an increase in density in the [applicable] zone" under a local code provision where the findings merely conclude that the adjustment "does not result in an increase in density associated with the proposed use of the development site." Hunt v. City of the Dalles, 79 Or LUBA 265 (2019).

34. Variances. While a variance should not be used as a substitute for rezoning, a local government does not err in granting a variance without a showing that strict application of the zoning ordinance would cause "practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships because of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions affecting the applicant's property" in a zone which the local code specifically exempts from that standard. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

34. Variances. Where the only variable between multiple Urban Growth Area-Urban Growth Management (UGA-UGM) zones is lot size, and where a county code provision provides that "[t]he density of one UGA-UGM zoning district is not interchangeable with the density of another UGA-UGM zoning district without prior review and approval by the affected city and * * * County," an interpretation by the county that the provision applies to zone changes of the subject property or changes to the underlying density of the zone in which the subject property is located, but that it does not apply to lot size variances, is inconsistent with the express language of the provision. In such cases, where the local code does not define "density" and the dictionary defines "density" as the quantity or number per unit of area, LUBA will make its own determination that a lot size variance in a UGA-UGM zone may qualify as an "interchange[]" with the density of another UGA-UGM zone, thereby requiring city review and approval. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

34. Variances. Where a local code provision provides that "[a]pproval of [a] variance is limited to the minimum necessary to permit otherwise normal development of the property for the proposed use," an interpretation by the local government that the provision means a variance may be approved if it permits development consistent with the surrounding land use pattern and the uses permitted in the underlying zone, and that it does not mean a variance may only be approved if it is necessary to permit development that is allowed in the zone, is not inconsistent with the language of the code or the purposes or policies underpinning the provision. City of Albany v. Linn County, 79 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

34. Variances. LUBA will reject a county's interpretation of its code—that a code provision which sets forth approval criteria regarding an application for a variance to the minimum lot size requirements within the county's urban growth area may not apply to the county's decision because it only applies to decisions made by the county's planning director but not to decisions made by the planning commission or board of county commissioners—that was made for the first time in its response brief, because that interpretation is not reflected in the decision and is therefore not an interpretation by the local government. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

34. Variances. Where the county approved a proposed variance to the 20-acre minimum lot size for two one-acre parcels, pursuant to a county code provision that provides that the county planning director may approve a variance for a proposed project if the city does not object to the variance, LUBA will reverse the county's decision as "prohibited as a matter of law" pursuant to OAR 661-010-0071(c) where the county approved the variance as "consistent with the * * * city's comprehensive plan," but the city objected to the proposed variance because of the proposal's inconsistency with the city's comprehensive plan. City of Albany v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 1 (2018).

34. Variances. A hearings officer's finding that concentrating dwelling units on one area of a property is solely attributable to a density transfer provision is not entirely accurate where modifications (variances) are needed to construct a multi-family structure that is taller and closer to the front lot line than would be permitted in the zone. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

34. Variances. Where a prior version of the zoning ordinance only allowed modifications for setback and height standards, and the zoning ordinance was amended to allow a general category of standards, that lends some support to the local government's position that the general category of standards includes setback and height standards. Patel v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 349 (2018).

34. Variances. Where a municipal code requires that the "front lot line" of a corner lot "must" be considered the narrower street frontage "except when [city staff] determine[] topographical or access problems make such a designation impractical," the city's decision was not supported by substantial evidence in the record pursuant to ORS 197.835(9)(a)(C) when it determined that the lack of sidewalks on the narrower frontage, and the absence of a door on the side of the house facing the narrower frontage were "access problems" that made designating the narrower street frontage the front lot line "impractical." McMonagle v. City of Ashland, 76 Or LUBA 1 (2017).

34. Variances. Where a standard requires public street connections at intervals of no more than 660 feet but authorizes variances where certain conditions exist, a finding that sight distance and existing development might preclude the required extension may be an adequate basis for granting a variance, but those conditions are not a basis for simply overlooking the street interval standard. Martin v. City of Tigard, 76 Or LUBA 85 (2017).

34. Variances. That a county commissioners' interpretation of a code variance standard is arguably inconsistent with language found on the county's variance application form does not demonstrate that the commissioners' interpretation is inconsistent with the express language, purpose or policy underlying the standard, under ORS 197.829(1). Neil v. Columbia County, 74 Or LUBA 442 (2016).

34. Variances. LUBA will affirm a county's finding that a high-voltage line that effectively divides a property into thirds is a condition "unique to the property" justifying a variance to a minimum parcel size, where there is no argument or evidence that nearby properties are similarly divided by the high-voltage line. Neil v. Columbia County, 74 Or LUBA 442 (2016).

34. Variances. A county is not bound to interpret its local variance standards in the same manner as traditional variance standards, and can plausibly interpret its "extraordinary hardship" standard to include considerations beyond the physical characteristics of the subject property. Neil v. Columbia County, 74 Or LUBA 442 (2016).

34. Variances. A city council's interpretation that the "work" portion of live/work units will "equally or better" meet a plan purpose of achieving a compact commercial core than would a commercial use, because the work area is an office or commercial use in fact if not name, is plausible and a basis for granting an exception to a code standard that would otherwise prohibit ground floor residential development. A petitioner must do more that speculate that work portion of a live/work unit will not be put to office or commercial use. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

34. Variances. Where a city council concludes that a proposed development that includes live/work units and an associated library and gym would be at least as supportive of a plan purpose of creating a high-density retail commercial core as a design that complied with a code "no ground floor residential" standard, by including a parking lot instead, that interpretation is plausible and a sufficient basis for granting an exception to the code "no ground floor residential" standard. LO 138 LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 71 Or LUBA 195 (2015).

34. Variances. A local government errs in denying a request for a variance for failure to comply with an "adverse impacts" standard that permits the local government to require that adverse impacts be avoided and mitigated and only allows the local government to deny the variance implication based on adverse impacts in two specified circumstances that the city council found not to be present. Parkview Terrace Development LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 70 Or LUBA 37 (2014).

34. Variances. LUBA will reject an argument that a hearings officer errs in approving a variance from a 22-foot street width standard to allow an 18-foot width because the narrower width does not provide the same level of access as the required width, where the variance criteria do not require the varied road width to provide the same level of access. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 278 (2014).

34. Variances. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that the applicant for a road width variance had exhausted all practical methods to construct the road to code-required width, where the evidence shows that only one of several adjoining landowners was willing to sell the right-of-way necessary for the code-required width. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 278 (2014).

34. Variances. Where an adjustment (variance) criterion requires that an adjustment must equally or better meet the purpose of the regulation to be adjusted, granting a height adjustment to allow a house to be 30 feet tall rather than limited to 23 feet in height is not justified by aligning the front façade of the proposed house with houses that are set back further from the street than other houses. The shared dwelling alignment is unrelated to whether the height adjustment equally or better serves the purpose of the height limit and that shared alignment does nothing to explain how allowing a 30-foot residence next to a 23-foot residence equally or better meets the purpose of the height limit. L'Heureux v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 90 (2013).

34. Variances. Where an adjustment (variance) criterion requires that an adjustment must equally or better meet the purpose of the regulation to be adjusted and the purpose of the regulation to be adjusted is to promote a reasonable building scale and relationship of one residence to another, a city erroneously grants a height adjustment based on a finding that the additional height would not be perceptible to a pedestrian on the street. The focus of the purpose is on the adjoining residences, not pedestrians on the street. L'Heureux v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 90 (2013).

34. Variances. A city errs in relying on a large front setback to satisfy a mitigation criterion for granting a height variance to allow a residence to exceed the height limit where that large front setback may make the house look shorter to a pedestrian on the street, but it is the impact of the height adjustment on adjacent residences that must be mitigated. L'Heureux v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 90 (2013).

34. Variances. Where a variance standard requires that the applicant demonstrate that the "hardship was not created by the person requesting the variance," and an issue is raised below that no "hardship" exists in reducing the number of required bicycle parking spaces, the decision maker must adopt findings identifying the hardship to the extent necessary to apply the variance criteria. CRAW v. City of Warrenton, 67 Or LUBA 263 (2013).

34. Variances. A county does not err in concluding that the skewed alignment of an existing foundation is not a "physical characteristic of [an] existing improvement * * * that is not typical of the area" that requires the county to grant a variance to allow an applicant to build an addition within setbacks, where a smaller addition could be built outside of the setbacks. Nordlund v. Clackamas County, 65 Or LUBA 67 (2012).

34. Variances. A county does not err in concluding that a .23-acre lot in a zoning district with a 5-acre minimum lot size is not a "physical characteristic of the land * * * that [is] not typical of the area" that requires a variance to setbacks, where evidence in the record shows that lots within the same subdivision are substandard sized lots similar to the applicant's lot. Nordlund v. Clackamas County, 65 Or LUBA 67 (2012).

34. Variances. A city variance "hardship" criterion requires that an applicant demonstrate that there is something about the "nature of the requested use, lot size or shape, topography, sensitive lands, or other similar circumstances related to the property" such that the applicant would suffer a "hardship" if the city required that the requested development comply with the special setback. Zirker v. City of Bend, 59 Or LUBA 1 (2009).

34. Variances. A variance criterion that requires the applicant to demonstrate that a hardship exists that is "peculiar to the nature of the requested use, lot size or shape, topography * * * or other similar circumstances related to the property" is not satisfied where the property to be developed is flat and has no significant development constraints. Development on nearby properties and substandard roadway improvements have no effect on the applicant's ability to develop such property in compliance with a setback requirement. Zirker v. City of Bend, 59 Or LUBA 1 (2009).

34. Variances. Where a variance may be granted "only if a required improvement is not feasible due to topographic constraints," a variance to city requirements that additional right-of-way be dedicated and roadway improvements be made is not warranted for a flat lot with no significant development constraints. That the existing substandard roadway is sufficient and development on adjoining properties is located close to the exiting roadway may mean such dedication and improvement will serve no useful purpose, but it does not make such dedication and improvement infeasible. Zirker v. City of Bend, 59 Or LUBA 1 (2009).

34. Variances. A city errs by approving a variance to subdivision standards under its general zoning variance criteria, where a separate city ordinance provides variance standards for subdivisions, and the city's decision offers no reviewable interpretation or explanation why the subdivision variance standards do not apply. Holbrook v. City of Rockaway Beach, 58 Or LUBA 179 (2009).

34. Variances. Where the "rough proportionality" test in Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d (1994), applies, it can function as a kind of variance, providing a basis under which a local government may choose not to exact property as a condition of development approval that it would otherwise be entitled to exact under its land use regulations, as an alternative to compensating the landowner for the taking. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

34. Variances. Even if the Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d (1994), "rough proportionality" test does not apply to exactions not requiring the dedication of a property interest, where a county road standard includes a provision prohibiting the county from requiring road improvements that are not "roughly proportional" to the impact of the proposed development on public facilities and services, the county may apply its local rough proportionality test in determining whether to grant requested variances from county road standards. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

34. Variances. Where an applicant seeks variances from road improvement standards, a county does not err in granting the variances based in part or whole on a county road standard that prohibits the county from requiring road improvements that are not "roughly proportional" to the impact of the proposed development on public facilities and services. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

34. Variances. A county does not err in concluding that requiring a development applicant to improve a substandard local street to full collector street standards is not roughly proportional to the impacts of a proposed Liquified Natural Gas terminal and therefore granting variances to some collector street standards, where in operation the terminal would produce only 150 daily trips, which combined with the existing 50 daily trips would fall below the threshold traffic range for a collector street. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

34. Variances. Where LUBA has affirmed a county's determination to waive certain road improvement standards under a local code provision prohibiting the county from requiring road improvements that are not roughly proportional to the impact of proposed development, any error the county may have made in also granting variances to those road improvement standards under general variance standards is harmless error. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

34. Variances. Requiring the applicant to construct 28-foot-wide roads rather than granting a variance for 12-foot roads does not impose an unnecessary hardship merely because the wider roads create an additional $300,000 cost. Sperber v. Coos County, 58 Or LUBA 588 (2009).

34. Variances. While steep terrain can be an exceptional or extraordinary circumstance which does not apply to other properties that may justify a variance, a local government may find that such terrain is not sufficient to justify a variance when surrounding properties also have steep terrain. Sperber v. Coos County, 58 Or LUBA 588 (2009).

34. Variances. A city is not required to interpret traditional variance language ("practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship") in accordance with the traditional strict meaning of that language, particularly when that language is not used as part of the city's variance code but instead was borrowed from the variance context to be used as a test for expanding nonconforming uses. Azore Enterprises, LLC v. City of Hillsboro, 56 Or LUBA 422 (2008).

34. Variances. Failure to provide views of the river and access to public spaces is not an unnecessary hardship to the city justifying a variance. While a development that would provide river views and access to the river could be considered a benefit to the city, the inability to obtain such a benefit does not constitutes suffering or privation. Stricklin v. City of Astoria, 56 Or LUBA 535 (2008).

34. Variances. An applicant's desire for a more creative design than that which could be built without a variance does not fall within the plain, ordinary, or natural meaning of unnecessary hardship. Stricklin v. City of Astoria, 56 Or LUBA 535 (2008).

34. Variances. Where the section of the zoning ordinance governing adjustments includes a purpose statement followed by adjustment approval criteria and a separate zoning section specifically states that the specified approval criteria for land use reviews establish "the bounds for the issues that must be addressed by the applicant," a city is not obligated to adopt findings to explain why a requested adjustment is consistent with the adjustment chapter purpose statement. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

34. Variances. In applying an adjustment criterion that requires the city to find "granting the adjustment will equally or better meet the purpose of the regulation to be modified," a city does not err in finding that criterion is met where the purpose of the criterion recognizes that off-street parking may not be needed where property is in close proximity to transit and the property for which an adjustment to off-street parking requirements is requested is located in close proximity to three transit streets with frequent service and a bikeway and Flexcar locations. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

34. Variances. A city does not err in finding that a proposed adjustment to allow development of a residence without off-street parking complies with an adjustment approval criterion that requires that "the proposal will not significantly detract from the livability or appearance of the residential area," where there was conflicting evidence about the availability of on-street parking in the area and parking congestion is only one factor in assessing livability. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

34. Variances. In finding that a proposed adjustment to allow residential development without off-street parking satisfies an approval standard that requires that the "impacts from the adjustment are mitigated to the extent practical," a city does not err by relying on the proximity of the site to transit streets and the elimination of possible curb cuts that would be needed to provide off-street parking and would eliminate existing on-street parking. Pearman v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 570 (2008).

34. Variances. Absent some code requirement to the contrary, a variance application for a third story addition on an existing structure need not justify a variance for an existing external stairwell that will not be expanded or altered in any way. McConnell v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 280 (2007).

34. Variances. The existence of conflicting evidence in the record regarding whether an existing structure within a setback is 7.5 feet or one foot from the property boundary is not a basis for remand, as long as the city's choice between the conflicting evidence is one a reasonable person could make. McConnell v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 280 (2007).

34. Variances. Where county authority to grant a variance is limited to circumstances "where it can be shown that owing to special and unusual circumstances related to a specific lot, strict application of this chapter would cause an undue or unnecessary hardship," the county must find that granting the hardship is necessary to avoid a hardship, notwithstanding that a separate section of the county's code that sets out the "circumstances" in which the county can grant a variance does not mention the word "hardship." Friends of Umatilla County v. Umatilla County, 55 Or LUBA 330 (2007).

34. Variances. That it may be prohibitively expensive to establish a 160-acre vineyard is not a hardship that warrants a variance to a county's 160-acre minimum parcel size in its EFU zone, where the property is currently planted in winter wheat and could remain in wheat production. Friends of Umatilla County v. Umatilla County, 55 Or LUBA 330 (2007).

34. Variances. Variances are extraordinary remedies and are not a substitute for amending a zoning ordinance to achieve desired legislative ends. A zoning ordinance amendment, rather than case-by-case variances, is the appropriate way to allow EFU-zoned lands to be divided into smaller parcels than allowed under a county's existing EFU zoning. Friends of Umatilla County v. Umatilla County, 55 Or LUBA 330 (2007).

34. Variances. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation of code variance and off-street parking standards, to the effect that a potential off-street parking site that would otherwise satisfy the code off-street parking standard need not be considered, because it would require patrons of a proposed restaurant to cross a four-lane highway with no crosswalks or pedestrian facilities. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. Findings concluding that a total variance from a code requirement to provide 10 off-street parking spaces is the "minimum necessary to alleviate the hardship" are inadequate, where the findings fail to address whether an adjacent site could provide at least some of the required 10 parking spaces. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. A reasonable person could rely on evidence that there are 25 on-street parking spaces in the area that are only partially occupied during peak hours, to conclude that parking in the area is adequate, and thus that a variance to off-street parking requirements will not be "materially detrimental" to the purpose of the off-street parking requirement. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. A code variance criterion requiring a finding that the "hardship is not self-imposed" does not require the variance applicant to demonstrate that there are no other properties that could be acquired that would allow the proposed development without a variance. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. A comprehensive plan goal that the city should "promote, on an equitable basis, the highest level of services the citizens will support" is too general and nonmandatory to function as an approval criterion for a permit application seeking a variance to off-street parking requirements. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. A comprehensive plan policy requiring the city to designate areas for public off-street parking facilities is not an applicable approval criterion with respect to an application for a variance to private off-street parking facilities. Grant v. City of Depoe Bay, 53 Or LUBA 214 (2007).

34. Variances. LUBA will affirm a city council interpretation that a "self-created hardship" exists for purpose of obtaining a variance to a street access standard, where the applicant has taken actions in the past that are inconsistent with the expectation of obtaining future access, by consolidating the subject property with an adjoining lot that already has access. Krishchenko v. City of Canby, 53 Or LUBA 232 (2007).

34. Variances. Even if a city were partly responsible for reducing access options to a parcel for which a variance is sought, by selling adjoining property that might have provided alternate access, that partial responsibility does not compel the city to grant the variance, where the applicant initially created the hardship by consolidating the subject parcel with property that already has access. Krishchenko v. City of Canby, 53 Or LUBA 232 (2007).

34. Variances. Where a city adjustment committee lacks authority to consider a legal issue, the adjustment committee does not err by failing to address that legal issue in its findings, even though petitioners raised the legal issue below. O'Brien v. City of Portland, 52 Or LUBA 113 (2006).

34. Variances. A local government interpretation that an applicant who sought a zone change that resulted in increased setback requirements did not create a "self-imposed" hardship when the zone change was imposed as a condition of approval of an earlier lot line adjustment decision is not inconsistent with the express language, purpose, or policy of the local ordinance. Sommer v. Josephine County, 52 Or LUBA 209 (2006).

34. Variances. When an approval criterion requires that the property for which a variance is sought must have circumstances that do not apply to "other properties in the same vicinity or land use district," the findings must address whether the circumstances which allegedly support a variance exist on other properties in the same vicinity or land use district. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 51 Or LUBA 194 (2006).

34. Variances. A variance to a local code provision that limits the size of accessory structures to 1,000 square feet to allow a 2,100-square-foot accessory structure is not "reasonably necessary" to permit development for an otherwise lawful use where an accessory structure that complies with a 1,000-square-foot size limitation could have been constructed on the subject property. Spooner v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 237 (2006).

34. Variances. Where an accessory structure that complies with a 1,000-square-foot size limitation could be built on the subject property, the "special conditions" cited by the city to justify a variance to that requirement, i.e., the unusually large size of the property and excessive slopes, do not create the unreasonable hardship or practical difficulty that "can be most effectively relieved by the variance," as required by the local variance criteria. Spooner v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 237 (2006).

34. Variances. Where a variance criterion allows a variance if topography makes strict compliance with the lot depth requirement an unreasonable hardship and the city's findings granting the variance for four lots do not explain why a proposed roadway could not be relocated slightly to make four lots comply with the lot depth requirement, remand is required. Lockwood v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 334 (2006).

34. Variances. Where a city's findings explain that the roadway required by a city's transportation system plan to satisfy connectivity objectives must traverse very steep slopes and the applicant's geologic experts' recommendation that cuts and fills be minimized leads to roads that exceed the city's 12 percent maximum grade, those findings are sufficient to demonstrate compliance with a "special conditions inherent in the property" variance standard. Lockwood v. City of Salem, 51 Or LUBA 334 (2006).

34. Variances. A county is within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) when it interprets a zoning ordinance prohibition on variances to relieve "willful or accidental violation" of the zoning ordinance not to apply where planning staff were responsible for the violation. Doyle v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 402 (2006).

34. Variances. A county is within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) when it interprets a zoning ordinance provision that allows variances to relieve "practical difficulty and unnecessary hardship" that would otherwise result from "the location of existing structures" on the property to apply where the practical difficulty and unnecessary hardship would be the cost and effort that would be required to remove or move structures that were sited based on erroneous advice from planning staff. Doyle v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 402 (2006).

34. Variances. A county is within its interpretive discretion under ORS 197.829(1) where it interprets a variance criterion that there must be "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions * * * which do not apply to other properties" to be met where (1) structures were sited in violation of zoning setbacks based on erroneous advice from planning staff and (2) such erroneous advice is exceedingly rare. Doyle v. Coos County, 51 Or LUBA 402 (2006).

34. Variances. LUBA will reject a petitioner's challenge to a city decision granting variances to a cul-de-sac length limit and limit on the number of houses that may be served by a cul-de-sac, where the city's findings explain (1) the competing benefits and drawbacks in limiting the length of cul-de-sacs and why the city concluded that the cul-de-sac could safely exceed 200 feet given the existing street system and surrounding traffic facilities and (2) why allowing the cul-de-sac to serve three more houses than otherwise allowed under the code would not cause a detriment to public health, safety and welfare. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 50 Or LUBA 226 (2005).

34. Variances. Where an interpretation of an ambiguous code standard that bars variances in some circumstances is needed to explain why the local government believes that standard did not bar an approved variance, and the appealed decision does not include either an express or implied interpretation of the code standard, remand is required. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

34. Variances. If a local government wishes to interpret and apply traditional variance standards differently than those standards have traditionally been interpreted and applied, it must articulate an interpretation of those standards that is sufficient for review. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

34. Variances. A local government adequately explains why allowing a variance to permit dwelling that encroaches into a roadway easement setback is not "detrimental to the public health, safety or welfare," where the local government finds: (1) a gate on the easement already limits the width of vehicles that can travel on the easement, (2) large vehicles can cross the easement notwithstanding the encroachment, (3) the structures are 15 feet outside the edge of the easement, and (4) there is room within the easement to widen the existing roadway to accommodate wider vehicles. Doyle v. Coos County, 49 Or LUBA 574 (2005).

34. Variances. Where notice of the hearing on an application for a variance from required setback lists as an approval criterion the code provision from which applicants seek the variance, the code provision does not thereby become an applicable approval criterion, and the county's failure to adopt findings addressing it is not a basis for reversal or remand. Papadopoulos v. Benton County, 48 Or LUBA 600 (2005).

34. Variances. In granting a variance from a code prohibition against developing in wetlands to approve roads across the wetlands, where a variance standard requires the city to find that the public need that the roads would serve outweighs the potential adverse impacts of developing the wetlands, the city errs in failing to adopt findings that respond to arguments raised by opponents that there are alternative roadway alignments that would serve the identified public need without crossing wetlands. Linstromberg v. City of Veneta, 47 Or LUBA 99 (2004).

34. Variances. A city's findings that a city "hardship" variance criterion is satisfied where denying the variance would force a subdivision applicant to develop far more of the property with roads, resulting in a loss of approvable lots, is adequate to support its decision to grant variances to city cul-de-sac requirements. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

34. Variances. A city's findings that a variance to allow a curb-tight sidewalk is justified to minimize fill and wetland impacts are inadequate, where the city's findings do not explain why denial of the requested variance would result in a "hardship" for the applicant. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

34. Variances. City approval of an adjustment to a maximum lot size requirement in advance of a lot line relocation that would create an oversized lot, rather than contemporaneously with that lot line relocation, provides no basis for remand, where nothing in the city's code requires that the adjustment and lot line relocation be approved contemporaneously. South v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 558 (2004).

34. Variances. Where approval of an adjustment to create an oversize tract of land must not significantly detract from the livability or appearance of the residential area, a city commits no error in limiting its analysis to the oversize tract and declining to consider the possible impacts of developing another proposed tract that does not require a maximum lot size adjustment. South v. City of Portland, 46 Or LUBA 558 (2004).

34. Variances. A local government could permissibly interpret local code to allow variance to minimum lot size standard where general variance standards were met. Walker v. Josephine County, 46 Or LUBA 777 (2004).

34. Variances. A parcel that does not meet minimum lot size standards for partition due to prior property line adjustment does not create a hardship that arises out of the land, but rather a hardship that arises because of the minimum lot size standard. Walker v. Josephine County, 46 Or LUBA 777 (2004).

34. Variances. A property owner's decision to agree to a property line adjustment that reduced the size of the property below the 10 acres needed to partition the property cannot be viewed as anything other than self-imposed. Walker v. Josephine County, 46 Or LUBA 777 (2004).

34. Variances. A city commits no error in denying a request for a fence height variance based on the application as submitted, without taking into account changes to the fence that the applicant stated he was willing to make, where the applicant was invited to submit an amended application and declined to do so. Finkle v. City of Portland, 44 Or LUBA 484 (2003).

34. Variances. A city governing body's interpretation of a variance criterion, which requires variances to "conform to the comprehensive plan," to be satisfied where a requested lot depth variance does not violate any identified comprehensive plan policy will be sustained on appeal, where no identified comprehensive plan policies expressly discourage or encourage lot depth variances. Lord v. City of Oregon City, 43 Or LUBA 361 (2002).

34. Variances. Where a local variance provision imposes on the applicant the burden of establishing the nonexistence of alternatives to the variance, the local government errs in interpreting its code to impose on opponents the burden of establishing the existence, costs and consequences of alternatives. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

34. Variances. A code interpretation to the effect that the county need not consider lesser height variances if the proposed additional height poses no conflicts with views is inconsistent with code language that (1) requires consideration of lesser or no variances, and (2) contains no exception for variances that do not pose conflicts with views. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

34. Variances. A code interpretation that limits the scope of alternative height variances that must be considered to those that provide the applicant with the same 35-foot height limitation allowed in a different regulatory zone is an impermissible amendment in the guise of interpretation, where the interpretation changes a rigorous alternatives analysis into a pro forma exercise and eliminates a regulatory distinction between zoning districts. Stahl v. Tillamook County, 43 Or LUBA 518 (2003).

34. Variances. A 1995 decision denying a request for a variance to build a house that exceeds zoning height limits by 6.5 feet does not constitute a decision approving construction of a house that is 6.5 feet shorter. An appeal challenging a subsequent building permit that approves construction of a house that is reduced in height is not a collateral attack on the 1995 variance decision and will not be dismissed as untimely filed. Tirumali v. City of Portland, 40 Or LUBA 565 (2001).

34. Variances. A stipulated agreement entered into by a variance applicant in a prior circuit court proceeding is not an exceptional or extraordinary circumstance over which the applicant has no control. Georgeff v. Curry County, 40 Or LUBA 101 (2001).

34. Variances. The granting of a variance to a particular standard does not, in itself, demonstrate material detriment to the purpose or objective of that standard. Georgeff v. Curry County, 40 Or LUBA 101 (2001).

34. Variances. Findings that a proposed road width variance will not be materially detrimental to other property owners in the area are not supported by substantial evidence when they are based on a comparison to other substandard roads rather than the effect of the proposed variance itself. Georgeff v. Curry County, 40 Or LUBA 101 (2001).

34. Variances. As the "extraordinary circumstances" variance criterion has traditionally been interpreted and applied, erroneous advice to a property owner about the approval criteria that might apply to a partition request in the future would not be sufficient to constitute extraordinary circumstances affecting the property. Reagan v. City of Oregon City, 39 Or LUBA 672 (2001).

34. Variances. Where a city governing body expressly interprets a traditional "extraordinary circumstances" variance criterion as being met in a circumstance where it traditionally would not be satisfied, that interpretation must nevertheless be affirmed under ORS 197.829(1) if the city governing body's interpretation is not inconsistent with the "express language" or the "purpose" of the variance criterion. Reagan v. City of Oregon City, 39 Or LUBA 672 (2001).

34. Variances. Where a variance criterion provides that a variance is not available where the applicant's circumstances "merely constitute a monetary hardship or inconvenience," the applicants inability to create a second lot out of an existing lot without the variance would appear to "merely constitute a monetary hardship or inconvenience," absent a contrary interpretation of that criterion by the local governing body. Reagan v. City of Oregon City, 39 Or LUBA 672 (2001).

34. Variances. When a variance approval is based on a specific finding that the proposed use is permitted in the underlying zone, the variance approval establishes a time frame for constructing the proposed use, and when the applicant applies for the building permit within the allotted time, the city is obligated by ORS 227.178(3) to apply the same "standards and criteria" that were applicable at the time the variance application was submitted. Gagnier v. City of Gladstone, 38 Or LUBA 858 (2000).

34. Variances. Where a variance criterion provides that the use of a structure may not change as a result of a variance, an interpretation that a variance may nevertheless be granted to convert a storage shed to a medical hardship dwelling is clearly wrong. Puma v. Linn County, 38 Or LUBA 762 (2000).

34. Variances. Where one of the factors that must be considered in determining whether a variance is "necessary to prevent a hardship to the applicant" is whether the alleged hardship was created by the applicant, and the applicant's difficulty in constructing a shed in accordance with city setback requirements is attributable to the locations that were selected by the applicant for his house, garden, septic field and landscaping, the self-created hardship factor does not support a finding that a variance is necessary to prevent a hardship. Roberts v. City of Gearhart, 38 Or LUBA 407 (2000).

34. Variances. Where the factors that must be considered in determining whether a variance is "necessary to prevent a hardship to the applicant" include the "physical circumstances related to the property," and whether the hardship is self-created, the physical circumstances factor does not support a finding that the variance is necessary to avoid a hardship where the lot is flat, rectangular and similar to other lots in the area and the "trees, shrubs, garden area and small structures" on the property were all sited by the applicant. Roberts v. City of Gearhart, 38 Or LUBA 407 (2000).

34. Variances. Even under the deferential standard of review required by Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), city interpretation of a variance criterion that requires that a variance be "necessary to prevent a hardship to the applicant" as being met because without the variance the applicant will be unable to construct as much storage as he would like to have on the property at his preferred location on the lot is erroneous. Roberts v. City of Gearhart, 38 Or LUBA 407 (2000).

34. Variances. The "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances" standard is a demanding traditional variance standard. Under ORS 197.829(1) and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992), a city may be able to interpret that standard in a more lenient manner than the courts and LUBA have, but the city must articulate that interpretation in its decision. Bates v. City of Cascade Locks, 38 Or LUBA 349 (2000).

34. Variances. LUBA and appellate court cases reviewing decisions involving traditional variance standards are of little or no assistance in considering a challenge to a decision that applies differently worded variance criteria, where petitioner makes no attempt to explain why those cases are relevant notwithstanding that the criteria are worded differently. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 37 Or LUBA 521 (2000).

34. Variances. Required findings that a variance is "necessary" due to "special conditions or circumstances peculiar to the property" are inadequate, where the findings are equivocal about whether the problems identified are present and fail to explain why the cited problems could not be eliminated by redesigning the proposed subdivision or by eliminating one or more lots. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 37 Or LUBA 521 (2000).

34. Variances. A city's findings of compliance with a variance criterion that requires that the variance be "necessary for the proper development of the subdivision and the preservation of property rights and values," are inadequate where the findings do not identify any "property rights" or "property values" that would be threatened by the required 60-foot right-of-way or why the proposed subdivision could not be designed to accommodate the required 60-foot right-of-way. Robinson v. City of Silverton, 37 Or LUBA 521 (2000).

34. Variances. Where the zoning ordinance allows a variance from its standards when those standards create a hardship due to one or more defined conditions, a hearing officer errs in requiring the applicant to demonstrate hardship in addition to those stated in the defined conditions. Kelley v. Clackamas County, 35 Or LUBA 215 (1998).

34. Variances. The law of the case doctrine does not bar petitioner from arguing that the city's action on remand from LUBA so altered the proposed development that the city must revisit a variance granted in the original decision. Dodds v. City of West Linn, 35 Or LUBA 101 (1998).

34. Variances. A decision on remand that increases a variance from a maximum lot coverage standard is not inconsistent with the initial variance approval, where the initial decision did not specify the variance allowed from the maximum lot coverage. Dodds v. City of West Linn, 35 Or LUBA 101 (1998).

34. Variances. Where petitioner did not specifically raise the issue of compliance with the Fair Housing Act (FHA) in the proceedings below, statements that his clients are disabled and that the property needs to be identified for emergency response services are not sufficient under ORS 197.763 to raise an issue that denial of the requested variance would constitute a failure to make a "reasonable accommodation" under the FHA. Andrusko v. Clackamas County, 34 Or LUBA 493 (1998).

34. Variances. A finding that an "exceptional circumstances" variance criterion is met because an existing substandard road cannot be improved to comply with the road standard without expanding the right-of-way is conclusory and inadequate. Elder v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 276 (1997).

34. Variances. Findings of compliance with a variance criterion requiring that the variance be consistent with "the purposes" of the zoning ordinance, are inadequate where the findings fail to identify or discuss any of the three potentially applicable purpose sections in the zoning ordinance. Elder v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 276 (1997).

34. Variances. A finding that an unlawful partition occurred prior to the date the variance applicant took title to the property is not adequate to demonstrate that the hardship is not "self-created," where the county provides no interpretation of the term "self-created hardship" and the variance applicant knew the property had been unlawfully partitioned. Elder v. Douglas County, 33 Or LUBA 276 (1997).

34. Variances. Where a city's interpretation of a variance criterion is not inconsistent with the purpose and policy of the applicable chapter of the local code, as stated in that chapter's intent and purpose statement, the city's interpretation is not indefensible. Shaffer v. City of Salem, 33 Or LUBA 57 (1997).

34. Variances. Where a challenged decision does not discuss why granting a variance is the most effective method to relieve the special conditions of parcel size and shape, the findings do not establish that the variance meets local code requirements that special conditions apply to the subject property that "can be most effectively relieved by a variance." Shaffer v. City of Salem, 33 Or LUBA 57 (1997).

34. Variances. Where the city's comprehensive plan expressly requires that new subdivisions shall have sidewalks, the city may not use the variance procedures of its subdivision ordinance in order to grant an exception to the comprehensive plan sidewalk requirement. Wicks-Snodgrass v. City of Reedsport, 32 Or LUBA 292 (1997).

34. Variances. Neither the age nor the physical condition of a property owner (or his family) can justify a variance. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. When a residential use is established on the subject property and the existing residence may be expanded without a variance, a requested height variance is not necessary under any colorable interpretation of the standard "necessary to accommodate a use or accessory use on the parcel which can be reasonably expected to occur within the zone or vicinity." DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. Development that has not occurred and that will be governed by the limitations of the applicable zone cannot be used to justify a variance on the basis that the property owner seeking the variance will otherwise be precluded from the enjoyment of substantial property rights enjoyed by the majority of landowners in the vicinity. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. When a house already exists on the subject property, the fact it cannot be enlarged in precisely the manner desired by the property owner does not render the property incapable of reasonable economic use without a variance. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. The county's interpretation of the "incapable of reasonable economic use" variance standard to mean "incapable of the property's highest and best use under its zoning and of an intensity of use consistent with other similarly situated properties" is clearly wrong. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. Under Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 836 P2d 710 (1992) and ORS 197.829(1), LUBA must defer to local government interpretations of traditional variance standards, including those made without reference to traditional strict interpretations. DeBardelaben v. Tillamook County, 31 Or LUBA 131 (1996).

34. Variances. The commencement of proceedings to amend a local code provision cannot justify a variance; a variance cannot be granted without reference to variance standards existing at the time the application is submitted. Krieger v. Wallowa County, 31 Or LUBA 96 (1996).

34. Variances. Where a city's variance criteria include a "self-imposed hardship" provision, which requires that the hardship necessitating the variance not result from actions of the applicant or the previous owner, and the restriction from which petitioner seeks a variance is the result of an agreement entered into by the previous owner, the city can find that petitioner did not satisfy the "self-imposed hardship" provision. Gionet v. City of Tualatin, 30 Or LUBA 96 (1995).

34. Variances. That a subdivision may have detrimental effects on adjacent property does not compel a finding that the variance which makes the subdivision possible will itself have such detrimental effects. Williams v. City of Philomath, 30 Or LUBA 5 (1995).

34. Variances. Even under the highly deferential review standard imposed by ORS 197.829 and Clark v. Jackson County, 313 Or 508, 514-15, 836 P2d 710 (1992), a local governing body cannot interpret an "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances * * * which do not apply generally to other properties in the same vicinity" variance standard to include any circumstance that does not apply uniformly to all, or nearly all, properties in the vicinity. Wicks v. City of Reedsport, 29 Or LUBA 8 (1995).

34. Variances. There can be no possible rational dispute that an adjustment changing the number of parking spaces required for a proposed development does not violate a code prohibition against adjustments that are "exception[s] to the procedural steps of a procedure or to change assigned procedures." Champion v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 618 (1995).

34. Variances. LUBA will defer to a governing body's interpretation of a traditional local code "unnecessary hardship" variance standard, where the governing body determines that so long as some beneficial use of the subject property could be established, the unnecessary hardship standard is not satisfied. Duck Delivery Produce v. Deschutes County, 28 Or LUBA 614 (1995).

34. Variances. A city council's interpretation of a city code "unreasonable hardships or practical difficulties" variance standard, as requiring that it be "extremely difficult" to use the subject property for a proposed concrete operation without the requested variance, is not clearly wrong and, therefore, must be affirmed. Salem Golf Club v. City of Salem, 28 Or LUBA 561 (1995).

34. Variances. Although the substance of particular objections by neighbors may lead to a conclusion that one or more local code adjustment criteria are violated, the fact that one or more neighbors object has no legal significance. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

34. Variances. Petitioners' allegations that an applicant cannot simultaneously seek the benefit of two separate local code provisions allowing deviations from code height and setback requirements provide no basis for reversal or remand, where nothing in the code precludes seeking approval under both provisions. Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

34. Variances. To govern deviations from local code standards, a local government may adopt approval standards for "adjustments" which are less stringent than the standards typically adopted for "variances." Edwards v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 262 (1994).

34. Variances. Even if petitioner has constitutional defenses against an action by a local government to enforce its code fence height limitation, that does not provide an independent basis upon which to compel the local government to grant a variance to its code fence height limitation. Stern v. City of Portland, 26 Or LUBA 544 (1994).

34. Variances. Where a local government has not adopted traditional, strict variance standards, it may interpret a variance approval standard requiring a variance to be "the minimum variance necessary to make reasonable use of the property" as requiring that (1) the proposed use be a reasonable use of the subject property, and (2) the requested variance be the minimum necessary to allow the proposed use. Friends of Bryant Woods Park v. Lake Oswego, 26 Or LUBA 185 (1993).

34. Variances. Where a zoning ordinance variance provision includes three alternative standards for granting variances, and petitioner challenges the city's findings concerning only the traditional "unreasonable hardship" standard, petitioner's challenge provides no basis for reversal or remand where the city found all three variance standards were met. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

34. Variances. A variance criterion requiring that there be no reasonably practical alternatives to granting the variance is met where the local government finds the subdivision roadway necessitating the variance is needed for compliance with the comprehensive plan, and petitioners do not challenge that finding. Eola-Glen Neighborhood Assoc. v. City of Salem, 25 Or LUBA 672 (1993).

34. Variances. Where a local government denies a setback variance to allow a deck on the side of a dwelling, and petitioners cite no evidence in the record establishing that having such a deck on the dwelling is more than a personal preference or amenity, petitioners fail to show the evidence in the record establishes, as a matter of law, that enforcement of the setback requirement will cause "practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship." Thomas v. City of Rockaway Beach, 24 Or LUBA 532 (1993).

34. Variances. The code provision that was in effect when the application for a variance was filed, and which states a variance "shall become void after the expiration of one (1) year if no substantial construction has taken place," must be interpreted and applied when the local government determines whether a previously approved variance remains valid. Todd v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 289 (1992).

34. Variances. A local code standard for variance approval requiring it be established that without the requested variance the applicant would not have a reasonable use of his property, is not satisfied by establishing that in the absence of variance approval the applicant cannot make the maximum use of his property possible under applicable density regulations. Roberts v. City of Lake Oswego, 23 Or LUBA 302 (1992).

34. Variances. Where topographic conditions make it difficult, but not impossible, to both comply with required setbacks and maintain optimal transmission tower elevation, variance standards requiring a demonstration of "practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships" and "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions" are not satisfied. Harris v. Polk County, 23 Or LUBA 152 (1992).

34. Variances. Where a subdivision ordinance provision limiting the length of blocks states that exceptions to the limitation may be granted where justified by topography or location of adjoining streets, a variance need not be granted to allow a block in excess of the length specified in the subdivision ordinance. Southwood Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Philomath, 22 Or LUBA 742 (1992).

34. Variances. Where a local government approved a height variance in 1977, but at that time had no code provision authorizing density transfers or a master plan approval process, the 1977 height variance approval does not also authorize a density transfer or give master plan approval. Terraces Condo Assoc. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 151 (1991).

34. Variances. A code requirement that a variance be "necessary for the preservation of a property right of the applicant substantially the same as owners of other property in the same zone or vicinity possess" authorizes approval of a variance only when necessary to establish a use allowed by the applicable zoning regulations. Schmaltz v. City of Hood River, 22 Or LUBA 115 (1991).

34. Variances. Where one code variance approval standard requires that a variance be "the minimum variance which would alleviate the hardship," and a second such standard requires that a variance be "necessary for the preservation of a property right of the applicant substantially the same as owners of other property in the same zone or vicinity possess," the "hardship" referred to in the first standard is correctly interpreted to be the deprivation of a "property right" possessed by other property owners, referred to in the second standard. Schmaltz v. City of Hood River, 22 Or LUBA 115 (1991).

34. Variances. A local code variance approval standard that a variance must be necessary to modify the impact of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances applicable to the subject property, is not satisfied by findings that local government would rather preserve a particular view and a treed area on a parcel, than adhere to code height restrictions. Hawkins v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 65 (1991).

34. Variances. Where a local code makes it clear that it does not intend to impose traditional stringent variance standards, LUBA will give effect to the more permissive variance standards specified in the code. Wentland v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 15 (1991).

34. Variances. The traditional "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions" variance standard, like the traditional "practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships" variance standard, is a demanding one. A variance from code open-space requirements is not "required to modify the impacts of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions" in order to allow a facility to accommodate 60 clients rather than the 46 clients that could be accommodated without a variance to the code open-space requirements. Wentland v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 15 (1991).

34. Variances. A code requirement that an applicant for an "extraordinary exception" for a boathouse demonstrate "an extraordinary and unreasonable hardship which can be relieved only by allowing the intensification of use" is a stringent standard traditionally applied to requests for variances. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

34. Variances. That the applicant's boat may be a tempting target for vandals, there is a maintenance problem due to nearby trees and there is a lack of available covered moorage space do not demonstrate "an extraordinary, unnecessary and unreasonable hardship," as that requirement has been interpreted by appellate courts and LUBA. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

34. Variances. An applicant is not entitled to extraordinary exception approval for a boathouse simply because boathouses may have been approved for nearby property owners. Boldt v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 40 (1991).

34. Variances. While a decision to approve a zone change does not approve a "permit," within the meaning of ORS 227.160(2), a decision which approves both a variance and a minor partition does approve a "permit." Harvard Medical Park, Ltd. v. City of Roseburg, 19 Or LUBA 555 (1990).

34. Variances. Findings showing a parcel is close to an urban growth boundary, has road access, has residences nearby and includes areas with steep slopes and poor drainage are inadequate to show the property is affected by unique conditions not generally applicable to other properties. DLCD v. Columbia County, 19 Or LUBA 125 (1990).

34. Variances. Where a zoning district is designed to protect small parcels for farm and forest use that are impacted by adverse physical features and other limiting factors, and the county's findings establish only that the property is small, includes soils that are marginal for farm and forest purposes and is impacted by steep slopes and poor drainage, the findings establish that the property is appropriately zoned, not that a variance from that zone's minimum lot size is warranted. DLCD v. Columbia County, 19 Or LUBA 125 (1990).

34. Variances. Where findings explain that an alternative pathway would ultimately make possible a safe pedestrian connection to a controlled intersection, whereas the pathway that would otherwise be required by the code would encourage dangerous street crossings, the findings are adequate to demonstrate an "adjustment" to allow the alternative pathway is consistent with plan policies, as required by the city code. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

34. Variances. Where an existing plaza fully satisfies a code requirement for at least one plaza in excess of five percent of the area of the block, no "adjustment" was required to grant a requested development approval which includes a plaza of less than five percent of the block's area. Because no "adjustment" was required, even if the findings explaining the justification for the "adjustment" are inadequate, they provide no basis for remand. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

34. Variances. The fact that property is regulated in ways that reduce the amount of land that may be developed does not, by itself, justify a variance under traditional "practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships" and "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions" variance standards. Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

34. Variances. The loss of 22 out of 155 possible parking spaces due to topographic constraints is insufficient, as a matter of law, to constitute a "practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship" or "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances." Corbett/Terwilliger Neigh. Assoc. v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 1 (1990).

34. Variance. An ordinance variance standard that there be "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions * * * which do not apply generally to other properties in the same zone" requires a strict interpretation, that the "exceptional or extraordinary circumstances "must arise out of the land itself. Cope v. Cannon Beach, 15 Or LUBA 546 (1986).

34. Variance. That the subject lots are the only lots in the vicinity which fail to meet an ordinance access requirement does not describe conditions inherent in the land which constitute exceptional or extraordinary circumstances justifying a variance from that access requirement. Cope v. Cannon Beach, 15 Or LUBA 546 (1986).

34. Variance. Circumstances which do not affect a lot's ability to comply with an ordinance access requirement do not constitute exceptional or extraordinary circumstances justifying a variance from that access requirement. Cope v. Cannon Beach, 15 Or LUBA 546 (1986).

34. Variance. That lots were previously excepted from an ordinance minimum lot size requirement cannot be a basis for granting a variance from an ordinance development restriction unrelated to lot size. Cope v. Cannon Beach, 15 Or LUBA 546 (1986).

34. Variance. Where city ordinance provides that variances "ordinarily" should not be granted if the special circumstances upon which the applicant relies are a result of actions of the applicant, owner or previous owner, the city may approve a variance even where the exceptional circumstances relied upon are self-created. Cope v. Cannon Beach, 15 Or LUBA 546 (1986).

35. Moratoria. A city's denial of an application for development of a road does not fall within the definition of a moratorium and is allowed under ORS 197.524(2), where the city concluded the application was not consistent with the applicable code provisions and petitioner has not had prior permit applications denied. GPA 1, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 73 Or LUBA 339 (2016).

35. Moratoria. A county fails to demonstrate a "compelling need" under ORS 197.520(3)(a)(C) for a moratorium where the county takes the position that zoning regulations can address the irrevocable public harms that the county has identified. Administrative convenience for the county in avoiding duplicative amendments to its zoning regulations is not a sufficient justification to delay or avoid the normal planning process for planning and zoning land uses. Kovash v. Columbia County, 72 Or LUBA 132 (2015).

35. Moratoria. In reviewing a moratorium decision, pursuant to ORS 197.540(4) LUBA's scope of review is limited to determining whether the moratorium complies with the requirements of ORS 197.505 to 197.530. Kovash v. Columbia County, 72 Or LUBA 132 (2015).

35. Moratoria. The single-subject requirement of Article IV, section 20, of the Oregon Constitution limits every legislative act to one subject and renders the act void with respect to any subject embraced in the legislation that is not expressed in the title. ORS 197.522, which was adopted as part of an act the subject of which is "moratorium on land development," runs afoul of the single-subject requirement to the extent it is interpreted to apply to development permits outside the context of a declared or de facto moratorium. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

35. Moratoria. Where a decision concerning a subdivision was not adopted in the context of a moratorium or a de facto moratorium, a hearings official was not obligated under ORS 197.522 to consider whether the subdivision could be made approvable through imposition of reasonable conditions of approval. Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

35. Moratoria. A local government is not obligated under ORS 197.522 to utilize a rough sketch of a possible subdivision configuration to impose conditions to grant subdivision approval where the sketch would only permit approval of a speculative subdivision that is only potentially consistent with other subdivision approval criteria. Konrady v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 466 (2009).

35. Moratoria. Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 218 Or App 548, 180 P3d 87 (2008), when a local government purports to amend an already adopted moratorium while adopting an extension to that moratorium, the purported extension is invalid as a matter of law. Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 447 (2008).

35. Moratoria. An ordinance that clearly states that it is extending an already adopted moratorium is an extension of the original moratorium, not the adoption of a new moratorium. Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 56 Or LUBA 447 (2008).

35. Moratoria. A decision that falls within the exception at ORS 197.524(2)—for delay or stopping of the issuance of permits because they are inconsistent with the local government's comprehensive plan or land use regulations—is not an impermissible de facto moratorium subject to the requirements of ORS 197.524(1). Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

35. Moratoria. A decision that denies a site review application because streets serving the property do not meet the level of adequacy specified in the city's land use regulations falls within the exception at ORS 197.524(2) and is not a de facto moratorium. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

35. Moratoria. Even if ORS 197.522 applies outside the context of a moratorium to require the city to approve development that can be made consistent with applicable criteria through reasonable conditions, the statute places on the applicant the burden of proposing reasonable conditions. A proposed condition requiring petitioner to share the cost of future signalization of an intersection if future conditions warrant is not sufficient to ensure that the development is consistent with a standard requiring that affected intersections function at or above a minimum level of service. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

35. Moratoria. In reviewing a challenge to a moratorium, LUBA's scope of review is limited to determining whether the moratorium was adopted in violation of ORS 197.505 to 197.530. Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 487 (2007).

35. Moratoria. A local government adequately identifies the public facilities on which a moratorium is based by relying on an adopted transportation system plan that encompasses the moratorium area, even if some of those facilities are also within the jurisdiction of the Oregon Department of Transportation. Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 487 (2007).

35. Moratoria. A moratorium that is limited to certain zoning districts that have significant development and redevelopment potential and that, if developed, would exacerbate a shortage in a transportation facility meets the requirements of ORS 197.520(2)(b). Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 487 (2007).

35. Moratoria. Where a moratorium contains exemptions for several types of property and developments that the evidence shows will affect the transportation facility, that is a de facto "program for allocating * * * remaining public facility capacity" under ORS 197.520(2)(c). Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 487 (2007).

35. Moratoria. Where a property owner proposes a modification to language contained in an exemption to a moratorium ordinance and that modification appears to accommodate economic development without exacerbating the existing shortage of the transportation facility as required by ORS 197.520(2)(c), the city is required to explain in its findings why that proposed modification was rejected. Thunderbird Hotels, LLC v. City of Portland, 54 Or LUBA 487 (2007).

35. Moratoria. A city decision to deny a request for annexation and subdivision approvals, based solely on a city's refusal to consider annexation requests until its buildable lands inventory can be updated, constitutes a moratorium, as that term is defined in ORS 197.505(1). Benchmark Enterprises v. City of Stayton, 36 Or LUBA 433 (1999).

35. Moratoria. ORS 197.540 grants LUBA review authority over any moratorium, including any extension of a moratorium under ORS 197.530(2), and LUBA may invalidate any improperly extended moratorium. Manning v. City of St. Paul, 33 Or LUBA 193 (1997).

35. Moratoria. LUBA's authority to review and invalidate an improperly extended moratorium does not include authority to invalidate the initial adoption of a moratorium, where initial adoption was not appealed to LUBA within 21 days after the initial adoption became final. Manning v. City of St. Paul, 33 Or LUBA 193 (1997).

35. Moratoria. Petitioner cannot challenge a moratorium extension by asserting that the city lacked substantial evidence to justify the initial moratorium; the relevant question is whether the record includes substantial evidence to support the moratorium extension. Manning v. City of St. Paul, 33 Or LUBA 193 (1997).

35. Moratoria. A local agency's policy requiring evidence of a current building permit prior to water meter installation is not a moratorium on development because the policy does not delay or deny proposed development. Marvin v. Eugene Water and Electric Board, 32 Or LUBA 189 (1996).

35. Moratoria. The city's finding that its comprehensive plan contemplates a rationing of building permits through a traffic management ordinance does not satisfy inquiry into whether that rationing violates the state moratorium statute. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. A pattern of delay in the issuance of building permits is sufficient to constitute a pattern of delay under the statutory definition of moratorium. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. The fact that a city, in prior years, had an acknowledged ordinance rationing building permits does not excuse the city from seeking acknowledgement of a new rationing ordinance or from complying with the state moratorium statute. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. Although ordinances implementing acknowledged comprehensive plan provisions need not be separately acknowledged for goal compliance, such ordinances must comply with the state moratorium statute. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. "Deemed acknowledgment" under ORS 197.615 does not satisfy ORS 197.505 requirement that local ordinances establishing a moratorium be acknowledged under ORS 197.251. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. An action engaged in or practice in accordance with an acknowledged comprehensive plan provision or implementing ordinance must be justified by an acknowledged provision that fully sets forth the essential structure, form and requirements for such action or practice. Home Builders Assoc. v. City of Wilsonville, 30 Or LUBA 246 (1995).

35. Moratoria. Local government denial of proposed partitions because the ability of the school district to provide the level of school services required by certain plan policies has not been established does not constitute the imposition of a development moratorium prohibited by ORS 195.110(8). Beck v. City of Happy Valley, 27 Or LUBA 631 (1994).

35. Moratoria. The moratoria subject to ORS 197.505 to 197.540 are, by definition, limited geographically to "urban or urbanizable land." Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 592 (1992).

35. Moratoria. Land use decisions which allow urban intensity use of rural land convert such land to "urban uses" but do not convert such land to "urban or urbanizable land," subject to the limitations imposed on moratoria in ORS 197.505 to 197.540. Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 592 (1992).

35. Moratoria. The moratorium findings requirement of ORS 197.520(2)(c) that "housing needs [be] accommodated as much as possible in any program for allocating any remaining key facility capacity" is not met by findings which simply establish that there are more residential lots available for development than can be served by the sewerage system. Western Pacific Development v. City of Brookings, 21 Or LUBA 445 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Where a moratorium is adopted and most of the remaining sewerage system capacity is allocated either (1) without any limitation on use by nonresidential users, or (2) according to the proportion of land zoned residential, commercial and industrial, the requirement of ORS 197.520(2)(c) that "housing needs [be] accommodated as much as possible in any program for allocating any remaining key facility capacity" is not met. Western Pacific Development v. City of Brookings, 21 Or LUBA 445 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Under ORS 197.520(2)(a), findings which conclude that a certain portion of remaining sewerage system capacity is "already committed to development" based on an intergovernmental agreement to allocate connections to a sanitary district and to a tract subject to a local improvement district, but which fail to explain why such capacity is committed due to development, are inadequate. Western Pacific Development v. City of Brookings, 21 Or LUBA 445 (1991).

35. Moratoria. In reviewing a moratorium decision, LUBA's scope of review is limited to determining whether the moratorium complies with the requirements of ORS 197.505 to 197.530. Western Pacific Development v. City of Brookings, 21 Or LUBA 445 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Statements that petitioners' interests in developing their property are substantially impaired by local government adoption of a corrective program which will not correct the problem justifying a previously adopted moratorium, and will create a situation in which there is no foreseeable end to that moratorium, are adequate to allege petitioners have interests which are substantially affected by the adopted corrective program. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 214 (1991).

35. Moratoria. The adoption of a "corrective program," subsequent to adoption of a key facilities moratorium pursuant to ORS 197.520(1) and (2), is governed solely by ORS 197.530. The only substantive standard imposed by ORS 197.530 is that the corrective program "seek to correct the problem creating the moratorium." Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 214 (1991).

35. Moratoria. A local government corrective program "seeks to correct the problem creating the moratorium," as required by ORS 197.530, if it demonstrates "a good faith initial attempt to begin to solve the problem" justifying a previously adopted key facilities moratorium. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 214 (1991).

35. Moratoria. A corrective program adopted after adoption of a key facilities moratorium may include, as a first step, development and adoption of a key facilities master plan to guide subsequent corrective measures. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 214 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Allegations that (1) petitioners have ownership interests in land which is subject to an adopted moratorium on new construction, and (2) the moratorium prevents petitioners from developing such land for purposes for which it is zoned, are sufficient to demonstrate that petitioners' interests are substantially affected by the moratorium and, therefore, petitioners have standing to appeal the adoption of the moratorium to LUBA. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. In reviewing a local government decision adopting a moratorium, LUBA's scope of review is limited to determining whether the moratorium was adopted in violation of ORS 197.505 to 197.530. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. A moratorium adopted pursuant to ORS 197.520(2) to prevent a shortage of water supply "key facilities" does not have to be based on an inadequate source of water. Water treatment, storage and distribution facilities are essential to a water supply system and, therefore, are also "key facilities" as that term is used in ORS 197.520(2). Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Neither a local government's adoption of prior moratoria nor the intent of individual residents testifying in support of the challenged moratorium provides a basis for finding the challenged moratorium was adopted in violation of ORS 197.505 to 197.530. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Uncontradicted engineering reports showing a water system's existing storage capacity is less than the required minimum water storage capacity for such a system constitute substantial evidence supporting the local government's determination that there is a current need beyond existing water storage capacity. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. The requirement of ORS 197.520(2)(c) that housing needs be accommodated as much as possible in any program for allocating any remaining key facility capacity is inapplicable where a moratorium is based on a finding that existing key facilities are inadequate to meet current needs, as there is no remaining key facility capacity. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Where a current shortage of key facilities is demonstrated, there is no requirement in ORS 197.505 to 197.530 that a local government must demonstrate it has exhausted all possible alternatives before adopting a moratorium pursuant to ORS 197.520(2). Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. A local government may demonstrate the "need to prevent a shortage of key facilities" required by ORS 197.520(2) by relying on accepted minimum water system capacity standards to demonstrate that (1) its water system currently does not have adequate capacity to serve existing needs, and (2) any additional construction would result in further exceeding the water system's capacity, posing a greater danger to the health, safety and welfare of local residents. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 21 Or LUBA 149 (1991).

35. Moratoria. Where a local government conducts the proceeding culminating in the adoption of a corrective program under ORS 197.530 as a separate proceeding, not as a continuation of a proceeding leading to the adoption of a moratorium under ORS 197.520, the record of the decision to adopt a corrective program does not include the record of the decision to adopt a moratorium, unless the moratorium record was placed before the decision maker during the corrective program proceeding. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 20 Or LUBA 565 (1991).

35. Moratoria. "Appearance" is not a requirement for standing to appeal the adoption of a moratorium or corrective program to LUBA. Schatz v. City of Jacksonville, 20 Or LUBA 565 (1991).

35. Moratoria. ORS 197.520(3) limits a local government's obligation to collect evidence in support of its decision to declare a moratorium to information that is "reasonably available," as opposed to more detailed evidence that may be unreasonably difficult, expensive or time consuming to generate or collect. Davis v. City of Bandon, 20 Or LUBA 159 (1990).

35. Moratoria. Local government findings in support of a moratorium which neither refer to limitations imposed on residential development under the applicable land use regulations, nor explain why any residential development in accordance with existing land use regulations necessarily will result in irrevocable public harm, are insufficient to explain why existing land use regulations are inadequate to "prevent irrevocable public harm from residential development," as required by ORS 197.520(3)(a). Davis v. City of Bandon, 20 Or LUBA 159 (1990).

35. Moratoria. The "irrevocable public harm" referred to in ORS 197.520(3)(a) can be demonstrated by showing (1) the adverse effect residential development would likely have on the local government's ultimate goal of public purchase of the subject property for development of a park and interpretive center, and (2) the unusual suitability of the property for such purposes. Davis v. City of Bandon, 20 Or LUBA 159 (1990).

35. Moratoria. Findings that suggest the kinds of planning measures being considered, state additional staff has been hired to prepare needed regulatory changes and conclude the needed changes can be prepared and adopted while the challenged moratorium is in effect, are adequate to demonstrate that "sufficient resources are available to complete the development of needed [regulatory] changes" while the moratorium is in effect, as required by ORS 197.520(3)(e). Davis v. City of Bandon, 20 Or LUBA 159 (1990).

35. Moratoria. A local government decision that continues the development limitations imposed by a previous moratorium with almost no changes has "extended" the moratorium, within the meaning of ORS 197.520(4). Davis v. City of Bandon, 20 Or LUBA 159 (1990).

35. Moratoria. Under ORS 197.540, which limits LUBA's scope of review in appeals of moratoria, LUBA reviews a moratorium based on the record made during the local proceedings, and invalidates the moratorium if the local government failed to adopt findings, supported by substantial evidence, demonstrating that the relevant standards in ORS 197.520(2) and (3) are satisfied. Davis v. City of Bandon, 19 Or LUBA 327 (1990).

35. Moratoria. While the ORS 197.520(3) "compelling need" standard for adoption of a moratorium "not based on a shortage of key facilities" is stringent, the proper focus of LUBA's review is on the requirements of the statute, particularly the findings required by ORS 197.520(3)(a) through (e). Davis v. City of Bandon, 19 Or LUBA 327 (1990).

35. Moratoria. Unless the nature and magnitude of the threatened public harm is sufficient to allow the determinations required by ORS 197.520(3) to be made, damage to or even loss of a resource subject to the protection of one or more statewide planning goals does not justify a moratorium under ORS 197.520(3). Davis v. City of Bandon, 19 Or LUBA 327 (1990).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. While changes in local market conditions affecting supply and demand may be responsible for long-term fluctuations inherent in the fruit processing industry for purposes of rebutting a presumption that a particular nonconforming fruit processing use has been abandoned, a county does not err in concluding that the particular use has been abandoned where the operator cites no evidence that any reductions in processing over the relevant period of years were actually the result of changes in market supply or demand similarly affecting all local fruit processors. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. While conditional use standards are not directly applicable in determining the nature and extent of a nonconforming use, in conducting a nonconforming use verification, it is not error, and, in fact, it may be necessary, to contrast the nature and extent of the nonconforming use with the restrictions and regulations that would otherwise apply to determine which discrete aspects or components of the use are conforming and cannot thereafter become nonconforming without seeking approval for an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a county code provision provides that a nonconforming use may not be resumed if there is a "discontinuance" for a period greater than one year, the county board of commissioners does not err in interpreting the undefined term "discontinuance" by resorting to the dictionary definition and in applying that interpretation to conclude that a property owner who is actively pursuing permits to complete repairs and upgrades that are required for health and safety reasons, and who is actively responding to appeals of those permits, has not discontinued a nonconforming use. Such an interpretation and application of the term "discontinuance" in the county code provision is not contrary to the term "interruption" in ORS 215.130(7)(a). Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a nonconforming use verification verifies a "mobile home park" commercial enterprise as the nonconforming use, vacancy of individual spaces in the entirety of the mobile home park business does not lead to a discontinuance of the lawful nonconforming use status of those spaces. Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. An applicant need not necessarily submit evidence of physical or visible changes to the land in order to demonstrate the existence or establishment of a nonconforming use before the relevant date, and nothing in ORS 215.130 authorizes a county to reject verification of a nonconforming use that was established prior to adoption of contrary zoning because the county deems the size or scope of the use to be too small. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The scope of a nonconforming use is confined to the uses that occur on the subject property; off-site activities, i.e., those that occur on other properties, such as leaving the property to purchase supplies or inputs for the nonconforming use, play no role in verifying the existence, nature, etc. of the nonconforming use on the subject property and are not subject to analysis or regulation as part of the nonconforming use. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A local government does not err by (1) treating the activities of bringing automobiles purchased off-site onto the subject property and storing them on-site until such time as they are repaired and then sold not as a separate and distinct land use but, instead, as the stockpiling and storage of raw inputs that are the first step in the larger nonconforming auto yard use operation or (2) concluding that a temporary hiatus in that first step, while the operator relies on existing stockpiles of automobiles to continue the nonconforming use, does not mean that the first step or any part of the nonconforming use has been discontinued. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where an applicant has conducted both festival-related uses and non-festival-related park and campground uses on property zoned Rural Residential and Impacted Forest, where the festival-related uses are verified nonconforming uses, and where the applicant applies for a special use permit to legalize the non-festival-related park and campground uses, LUBA will affirm the county's interpretation that its nonconforming use provisions do not apply to the special use permit application where the county expressly explains that the special use permit does not authorize festival-related uses and where the petitioners identify no law preventing the county from issuing permits that have the effect of legalizing special uses that have been occurring independent of a preexisting nonconforming uses. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. When an opponent provides evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption under ORS 215.130(10)(a) regarding the existence, continuity, nature and extent of the proposed nonconforming use, the applicant has the burden of demonstrating that the use proposed for verification has existed and continued in its current nature and extent from the date the use became nonconforming, or 20 years prior to the date of application, whichever date is applicable. Morgan v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 188 (2018).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(11) prohibits a challenge to the lawful establishment element of a nonconforming use which would compel the applicant to submit evidence regarding the nature and extent of the use during periods that are more than 20 years prior to the date of application. A hearings officer cannot adopt findings based on impermissible evidence. Morgan v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 188 (2018).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A hearings officer's decision that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to grow up to 18 marijuana plants for medical purposes under the Oregon Medical Marijuana Act is supported by substantial evidence in the record, and LUBA will reject an assignment of error that argues that the hearings officer's decision is not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record, where (1) the record includes copies of at least twelve cards issued by the Oregon Health Authority (OHA), administrator of the medical marijuana program, some of which are expired, duplicates, or outside of the relevant consideration dates; (2) the hearings officer relied on some of those OHA cards to reach his conclusion about the number of plants allowed; (3) the hearings officer adopted eight pages of findings explaining his decision and his understanding of the evidence; and (4) petitioner fails to challenge those findings or explain why the evidence supports his application. Feetham v. Jackson County, 77 Or LUBA 296 (2018).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The ORS 215.130(5) requirement that a use protected as a nonconforming use be a "lawful use" at the time contrary zoning is applied refers not only to whether the use complies with state or local land use laws, but also concerns whether the use complies with state, federal, or local non-land use laws, regulations or licensing requirements that are either (1) integrally related to zoning or land use or (2) for some other reason must be satisfied for a use to be "lawful." Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The ORS 215.130(5) "lawful use" requirement cannot be concerned only with whether the use complied with zoning and land use regulations at the time the use became nonconforming, because for uses that predate a local government's first application of zoning or land use regulations that would render the "lawful use" inquiry a nullity. Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a statute applicable at the time an "auto yard" use became nonconforming required the operator to obtain a Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) dealer license prior to selling cars, subject to criminal penalties, and it is undisputed that the operator failed to obtain a DMV license prior to the use becoming nonconforming, the use was not a "lawful use" within the meaning of ORS 215.130(5). Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where petitioner's assignment of error in an appeal of a county decision denying his request that the county reconsider a previously denied application for verification of a nonconforming use is directed at the merits of the original decision that denied his application for verification of a nonconforming use, rather than the merits of the subsequent county decision that denied petitioner's request to reconsider the same application that had earlier been denied, the assignment of error provides no basis for reversal or remand where the decision whether to reconsider the original decision is governed by different criteria than the original denial decision. Kartavykh v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 518 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a development code permits an applicant to resubmit the same application for verification of a nonconforming use less than two years after it was denied if the denial decision was based on a material mistake of fact, a hearings officer does not misconstrue the code in concluding that a denial decision that is based on conflicting evidence is not the same thing as a decision that is based on a material mistake of fact. Kartavykh v. Clackamas County, 74 Or LUBA 518 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. In attempting to determine the scope and nature of a concrete batch plant nonconforming use, a hearings officer does not err by failing to infer that the concrete batch plant operated at least between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 5 p.m. based solely on evidence that the batch plant supplied construction work. While that might be a permissible inference, it is not an inference that is required by the fact that the concrete batch plant supplied construction sites when it was in operation. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a hearings officer does not take the position that his inability to verify the nature and extent of certain aspects of a prior concrete batch plant makes it impossible to determine whether an application to alter that prior nonconforming concrete batch plant will result in a more intensive use or result in greater adverse impact on the surrounding neighborhood, but intervenor does not file a cross-petition for review to assign error to that aspect of the hearings officer's decision, LUBA will not consider whether that position could provide an independent basis for denying the requested alteration. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. It is likely that the Court of Appeals would not require that a land use hearings officer ruling on a request to alter a nonconforming use must apply the legal principle stated in Parks v. Tillamook Co. Comm./Spliid, 11 Or App 177, 196-97, 501 P2d 85 (1972), that nonconforming uses are disfavored and subject to strict scrutiny under state law. However, where it does not appear that the Parks principle played any role in the hearings officer's decision, the hearings officer's citation to Parks provides no basis for reversal or remand. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where an assignment of error itself can be read to allege that a hearings officer committed a particular analytical error in reviewing an application to alter a nonconforming use, but the arguments that are put forth in support of the assignment of error have nothing to do with that arguable analytical error, petitioners fail to adequately state and develop a challenge to the analytical error. In that circumstance, LUBA will limit its review to the arguments petitioners actually present. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where there is conflicting believable evidence regarding whether a proposal to replace a concrete batch plant with an asphalt batch plant would present a greater risk of explosions and damage to surrounding properties, a hearings officer's conclusion that the asphalt batch plant poses a greater risk of explosions and damage is supported by substantial evidence. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A hearings officer does not err in finding that a 1991 decision verifying a landfill as a lawful nonconforming use did not include a composting facility within the scope of verification for the landfill, where the 1991 decision does not mention composting or a composting facility, and the application to verify the landfill does not mention composting or seek to include a composting facility with the scope of verification. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A county errs in granting a floodplain development permit for an existing asphalt batch plant before first responding to LUBA's remand of an earlier county decision declaring the scope and nature of asphalt batch plant that qualifies as a nonconforming use. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 163 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a 30-foot setback requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a land use code off-street parking requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where LUBA concludes that applicable local nonconforming use law might not regulate a change from one conforming use to another conforming use in a nonconforming structure, but no party challenges a hearings officer's conclusion that local nonconforming use law does regulate such a change of use, LUBA will consider petitioner's challenge to the adequacy of the hearings officer's findings that an existing structure qualifies as a nonconforming use and that the proposal may be approved as an alteration of a nonconforming use. However, LUBA will not preclude the hearings officer from considering on remand whether the nonconforming use regulations apply in that circumstance. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. In applying a local nonconforming use standard that requires that a change in nonconforming use must have "no greater adverse impact to the neighborhood," a hearings officer errs in comparing the expected adverse impacts of the changed nonconforming use with the adverse impacts of other uses that are allowed in the zoning district. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A hearings officer's decision to recognize an existing structure as a nonconforming structure and to approve a new school use of that structure as an alteration of a nonconforming use, where there was no prior notice that the local government's nonconforming use regulations would be applied, constitutes a procedural error that prejudiced petitioner's substantial rights. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A local government correctly construes its local code as not requiring an applicant for a plan amendment and zone change that would have the effect of legalizing some uses of the property to demonstrate compliance with code provisions governing nonconforming uses. Ooten v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 338 (2014).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 197.015(10)(b)(H)(i) excludes from the definition of "land use decision" land use compatibility statements determining that a prior local government land use decision authorized a use that "encompasses" the proposed state agency action. However, that exclusion is not met where the proposed state agency action is to expand the septic system for a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park, and the prior local government decision merely verified a portion of the nonconforming use, but that verification did not authorize or "encompass" the proposed septic expansion. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Nothing in the current language of ORS 215.130, governing non-conforming uses, prohibits a local government from authorizing an expansion of a lawful nonconforming use onto an adjacent property. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A city correctly interprets its development code to permit a change of use, without requiring that the nonconforming development on the site be brought into conformance with current development code standards, where the land use code expressly distinguishes between nonconforming uses and nonconforming development and the permit applicant proposed no change in the nonconforming development, only a change from one permitted use to another permitted use. Nielsen v. City of Gresham, 66 Or LUBA 24 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A city does not err in finding that an existing development qualifies as a protected nonconforming development in the process of a permit proceeding, notwithstanding that no application specifically requesting approval as a nonconforming development was before the city, where there was no dispute that the development qualified as nonconforming development and the evidentiary record supports the city's finding. Nielsen v. City of Gresham, 66 Or LUBA 24 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a landfill is a permitted use in a Public Works zone subject to site design review, the portion of an existing landfill that was approved prior to the requirement for site design review is not a non-conforming use simply because it did not receive site design review, and therefore a proposed expansion of that landfill does not require review and approval as an alteration to a non-conforming use. McPhillips Farm Inc. v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 355 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49 (2007), a property owner may complete construction of a use that was authorized under a previously issued Ballot Measure 37 (2004) waiver, if the property owner can establish that he or she has a common law vested right to complete construction of a use that was authorized under a Ballot Measure 37 waiver. Under ORS 195.318(1), LUBA would likely not have jurisdiction to review a vested right determination under Subsection 5(3) of Measure 49, however, where the property owner claims to have a vested right based on a previously issued building permit, not a Ballot Measure 37 waiver, LUBA has review jurisdiction over a county decision that the property owner does not have a vested right under the building permit. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Fountain Village Development Co. v. Multnomah Cty., 176 Or App 213, 224, 31 P3d 458 (2001), statutory and local government regulations that specify that nonconforming use rights are lost if the nonconforming use is abandoned, interrupted or discontinued for the requisite period of time also apply to vested rights, which are properly viewed as inchoate nonconforming uses. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Oregon Department of Environmental Quality documents about the number of recreational vehicle (RV) sites authorized to be connected to an RV park's septic system and the number of mobile homes on-site in the mid-1990s are sufficient to rebut a presumption under ORS 215.130(10)(a), based on more recent evidence, that the larger number of RV sites that are currently connected to the septic system and the larger number of mobile homes currently on the site were present when the RV Park first became nonconforming in 1980. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a hearings officer's finding that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to a recreational vehicle (RV) park fails to extend that nonconforming use right to a number of dry RV spaces (spaces that are not connected to the RV park septic system) that the evidence the hearings officer relies on shows were in existence shortly before the RV park became nonconforming, remand is required for the hearings officer to better explain his decision regarding the dry RV spaces. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a hearings officer finds that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to continue a recreational vehicle park in an area of the county where RV parks are now prohibited, but must bring all those RV sites into full compliance with current county regulations concerning RV site standards and occupancy, but the evidence the hearings officer relies on to make his nonconforming use finding indicates that some of those sites were used for periods of time that exceed current occupancy standards and did not fully comply with current RV site standards at the time they became nonconforming, remand is required so that the hearings officer can consider whether the applicant may have a nonconforming use right to continue to use any such sites without having to bring them into compliance with the current RV park standards. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The good faith Holmes factor considering whether a landowner acted in good faith in making expenditures prior to a change in zoning is intended to discourage the landowner from racing to establish the basis for a non-conforming use, after the landowner receives notice of the change in zoning, and is not concerned with actions taken after the use becomes non-conforming. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. When in reviewing an application to expand a nonconforming campground to permit installation of 13 new park model recreational vehicle (RV) units, a hearings officer also concludes that 22 park model RV units previously installed pursuant to county building permits require goal exceptions to be lawful, that conclusion is non-binding dictum and does not provide a basis for remand, where the decision does not purport to revoke or invalidate the building permits, or impose any conditions or make binding determinations with respect to the 22 previously installed RV units. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. An ordinance that applies a new Airport zone to an existing airport that is a nonconforming use in the former industrial zone may "significantly affect" nearby transportation facilities within the meaning of the Transportation Planning Rule (TPR), where under the former industrial zone it would be difficult to expand the nonconforming use airport and under the new zone an airport is an outright permitted use that can be easily expanded or intensified. Barnes v. City of Hillsboro, 61 Or LUBA 375 (2010).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(5) applies where an "enactment or amendment of any zoning ordinance or regulation" has occurred that places the "lawful use of any building, structure or land" into doubt. Where there is no allegation that the enactment or amendment of any zoning ordinance or regulation has occurred that has created a question as to the lawful status of an existing manufactured dwelling under a previous permit, ORS 215.130(5) does not apply. Just v. Linn County, 59 Or LUBA 233 (2009).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that residential use of recreational vehicles (RV) at an RV park is not a lawful part of the nonconforming use, where the applicant submitted evidence that residential RV use occurred during the 10-year period preceding the 2007 application, but evidence from the 20-year period preceding the application establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that residential use did not begin until 1990, thereby rebutting the presumption established under ORS 215.130(10)(a) based on the 10-year period preceding the application. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(11), which prohibits a county from requiring a nonconforming use application to prove the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of the use for a period exceeding 20 years from the date of application, affects the evidentiary burden not only with respect to continuity but also "nature and extent." As a practical matter, any expansions or alterations that occurred more than 20 years prior to the date of application are part of the "nature and extent" of the use, even if such expansions or alterations were made without required approvals. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A 1990 site plan that depicts areas with existing RV spaces and areas where RV spaces were to be abandoned is sufficient to rebut by a preponderance of the evidence that a number of the current RV spaces at a nonconforming RV park did not exist in 1990, and are therefore not a lawful part of the nonconforming use. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a code provision prohibits development approval for property that is not in full compliance with all code requirements and prior approvals, unless the approval results in the property coming into full compliance, a hearings officer does not err in interpreting the code to require the applicant to apply for all permits and approvals necessary to correct all code or permit violations as part of the development application, and to reject as insufficient the applicant's willingness to seek future permit approvals. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a city's code conditionally permits cellular antennae on existing buildings, a city decision that denies a request for conditional use approval to site cellular antennae on an existing water tower simply because the water tower is an existing nonconforming structure will be remanded, where there is no language in the city's code that would permit such a limitation and the city provides no explanation for reading such a limitation into its code. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where a city's code distinguishes between nonconforming uses and nonconforming structures and extinguishes the right to reinstate nonconforming uses that are discontinued but allows nonconforming structures to remain in place even though their use may be discontinued, a city errs in finding that ceasing to use a water tower as part of the city's water system had the effect extinguishing the legal right of the water tower to remain in place as a legal but nonconforming structure. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A resolution that adopts a revised franchise agreement between the county and a landfill operator does not constitute a de facto nonconforming use determination subject to LUBA's jurisdiction, where the resolution makes no determination whatsoever about the lawfulness or status of the landfill. Kamp v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 717 (2007).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a city's code distinguishes between nonconforming uses and nonconforming structures and extinguishes the right to reinstate nonconforming uses that are discontinued but allows nonconforming structures to remain in place even though their use may be discontinued, a city errs in finding that ceasing to use a water tower as part of the city's water system had the effect extinguishing the legal right of the water tower to remain in place as a legal but nonconforming structure. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A planning staff decision that a proposed crematory expansion to a nonconforming mortuary use is an outright permitted use in a residential zone will be remanded, where the decision does not explain the basis for that conclusion and the city's code appears to prohibit expansions of nonconforming uses. Hallowell v. City of Independence, 53 Or LUBA 165 (2006).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Like the statutes governing nonconforming uses, ORS 197.770 does not specify what period of discontinued use as a firearms training facility disqualifies a facility from protection under the statute, but instead leaves it to the local government to determine. Where the local government's regulations provide a period of discontinuance for nonconforming uses but not a specific period for firearms training facilities, LUBA will assume the nonconforming use period of discontinuance applies. Citizens for Responsibility v. Lane County, 51 Or LUBA 588 (2006).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(10)(a) authorizes counties to adopt a procedure whereby an applicant may limit its proof of the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of an alleged nonconforming use to the 10 years that precede the application. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The rebuttable presumption that is authorized by ORS 215.130(10)(a) applies to both parts of the inquiry that is necessary under ORS 215.130(5) to verify a nonconforming use, i.e., that the use existed on that date and that its existence was lawful. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. When a nonconforming use application does not distinguish between commercial and noncommercial use of a nonconforming go-cart track, and the evidence submitted also does not make such a distinction, a decision maker does not err in considering both commercial and noncommercial use of the go-cart track in determining the scope of the nonconforming use. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 101 (2003).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The ORS 215.130(5) requirement that local governments allow alterations to a nonconforming use "necessary to comply with any lawful requirement for alteration in the use" applies to circumstances where a regulatory agency or similar authority requires changes to a nonconforming use in order to continue the use, not to circumstances where the operator of the nonconforming use is subject to general, open-ended statutory or regulatory obligations. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A 1962 order from the Public Utility Commission granting a public utility its service area and statutes generally requiring that public utilities provide safe and reliable electrical service within their service areas do not constitute "lawful requirements for alteration of the use" under ORS 215.130(5) sufficient to mandate county approval of proposed alterations to upgrade the capacity of a nonconforming electrical transmission line. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. An appeal of a county decision verifying a nonconforming use is not necessarily moot simply because the subject property is annexed into a city after the appeal to LUBA is filed. Although city annexation means that the county loses jurisdiction over the subject property, annexation does not affect the validity of the county decision, and LUBA's review of the county decision will continue to have a practical effect on the parties. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(5) through (11) recognizes (1) "alterations" to a nonconforming use, (2) maintenance of existing structures associated with the use in good repair, and (3) restoration or replacement of a nonconforming use made necessary by fire or other casualty. The statute does not include an implicit fourth category of changes to nonconforming uses that reduce adverse impacts from that use. Such changes are "alterations" that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Maintenance of existing structures associated with a nonconforming use in good repair under ORS 215.130(5) includes incremental replacement of structural components, at least where the structure as a whole is not substantively replaced and the installed components are similar in function to those replaced. Such incremental replacements are not alterations that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. In determining that an applicant failed to carry his burden to demonstrate that a proposed home occupation would be carried out inside a building and in a manner that would not unreasonably interfere with other uses, the county did not err by considering existing and past conditions on the property. Hick v. Marion County, 43 Or LUBA 483 (2003).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A city does not err by applying its more stringent nonconforming use criteria to a portion of a property located within city limits and concluding that a nonconforming use on city property has been lost, notwithstanding a county decision that the portion of the property lying outside of city limits retains its nonconforming use status based on the application of county nonconforming use standards. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 41 Or LUBA 73 (2001).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Statutory nonconforming use provisions at ORS 215.130 do not prohibit rezoning land to allow uses that would not be allowed to continue as nonconforming uses. Nor is the statute violated or undermined by the county's consideration of a history of illegal commercial uses, in applying a plan provision that allows land that has an "historical commitment" to commercial uses to be rezoned for commercial use. Huff v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 264 (2001).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. ORS 215.130(10) and (11) authorize a county to adopt a process to document a preexisting nonconforming use, within certain parameters. The statute does not prohibit persons other than the proponent of the nonconforming use from providing evidence regarding the existence of the nonconforming use. Besseling v. Douglas County, 39 Or LUBA 410 (2001).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A vested right based upon substantial expenditures toward construction of a building is properly viewed as an inchoate nonconforming use, not as a distinct entitlement immune from all limitations applicable to nonconforming uses. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Vested rights, like nonconforming use rights, may be lost where the holder fails to diligently exercise those rights, i.e., the holder must continue development of the nonconforming use and not abandon or discontinue efforts to complete development. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The rebuttable presumption provided by ORS 215.130(10)(a) creates the possibility of verifying the lawful creation and continued existence of a nonconforming use by proving the continued existence of the use for the past 10 years only. However, once the presumption has been rebutted, the applicant must show the use existed at the time of zoning and has continued, uninterrupted, since that date. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Nothing in ORS 215.130(10)(a) requires that the rebuttable presumption provided by that statute can only be rebutted by "clear and convincing" evidence. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The rebuttable presumption provided by ORS 215.130(10)(a) does not shift the applicant's ultimate burden of proof to demonstrate compliance with all applicable approval criteria. Where a party produces sufficient evidence of the continued existence of a nonconforming use for the prior 10-year period, the statute then shifts the burden of going forward with countering evidence to the county or any party opposing the nonconforming use. When sufficient evidence is produced showing that the nonconforming use was interrupted during some period, the applicant may no longer rely on the presumption with regard to that period of interruption. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where provisions allowing enforcement of the city's ordinance only specifically authorize judicial remedies, the city's interpretation of the enforcement provisions as allowing the city to conduct quasi-judicial proceedings to determine nonconforming use status is inconsistent with the terms of that provision and not entitled to deference under Goose Hollow Foothills League v. City of Portland, 117 Or App 211, 843 P2d 992 (1992), or ORS 197.829(1). Dept. of Transportation v. City of Mosier, 35 Or LUBA 701 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. LUBA owes no deference to a county's interpretation of ORS 215.130, governing nonconforming uses, or ordinance provisions that implement the statute. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where LUBA determined in an earlier appeal of the county's approval of a nonconforming use that the nonconforming use was not established by a prior county decision approving site design review for that use, the law of the case doctrine prohibits the county, on remand, from revisiting the issue decided by LUBA. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Principles of res judicata do not prohibit petitioner from raising issues before LUBA regarding the nonconforming use status of a proposed dog kennel, even if those issues could have been raised in an earlier, unappealed county decision approving site design review for the kennel, because the nonconforming use status of the proposed use was not at issue during the site design review proceedings. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. A county is not equitably estopped from denying the nonconforming use status of a dog kennel because of the applicant's reliance on a previous county decision approving site design for a dog kennel. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Demonstrating that one nonconforming use was legally established on a property does not automatically authorize other uses in the same use category that may subsequently have been established on the property. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. That a use is authorized under a zoning ordinance or granted building or zoning permits does not, alone, shield the use from later-adopted zoning ordinance amendments that prohibit the use or impose a requirement for additional permits. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. So long as a nonconforming use has not been abandoned or discontinued, as provided by local ordinance, the nonconforming use has a right to continue, regardless of whether it complies with local regulations that would govern a new, conforming use. Nehoda v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 251 (1995).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The protected right to continue a nonconforming use is a right to continue the nature and extent of use that existed at the time the use became nonconforming. The proponents of a nonconforming use have the burden of producing evidence from which a local government can make an adequate determination of the nature and extent of the nonconforming use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where applicants wish to establish the scope of a nonconforming use, they have the burden of producing evidence from which the local decision maker can determine the scope of the nonconforming use. If applicants present nonspecific information, they run the risk that reasonable people, including the local decision maker, will disagree with them concerning the scope of the nonconforming use. Warner v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 82 (1993).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where the challenged decision characterizes an alleged nonconforming use as a "reprographics, blueprint and printing business," and petitioner does not challenge that characterization in his petition for review, petitioner may not challenge the characterization for the first time in post oral argument memoranda. Rhine v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 557 (1993).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. The statutory provisions set out at ORS 215.130 governing regulation of nonconforming uses apply to counties, not to cities. Hood River Sand v. City of Mosier, 24 Or LUBA 381 (1993).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Neither ORS 215.130 nor 215.215 authorizes the creation of new parcels for nonconforming uses. DLCD v. Columbia County, 24 Or LUBA 32 (1992).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Because a nonconforming use is tied to the land on which it was lawfully established, it essentially belongs to the property owner, and there is no inherent reason why a tenant, with the permission of the property owner, may not apply to the local government for permission to expand the nonconforming use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. In reviewing a local government decision concerning a nonconforming use, LUBA may consider a letter which was not submitted to the decision maker during the local proceedings leading to adoption of the initial decision, but was submitted to and considered by the decision maker during reconsideration proceedings. Warner v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 220 (1991).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Where the local code distinguishes between, and imposes different criteria on, nonconforming uses and nonconforming structures, a change from one conforming use to another conforming use need not comply with the criteria applicable to changes in nonconforming uses, even though the existing structure may be nonconforming. Tarbell v. Jefferson County, 21 Or LUBA 294 (1991).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Whether a proposed dwelling (1) is permitted outright in an EFU zone, (2) is "accessory" to an underlying nonconforming use, and (3) complies with ORS 215.296(1), are determinations which require "interpretation or the exercise of factual, policy or legal judgment" within the meaning of ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) and (C). Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 481 (1990).

36.1 Nonconforming Uses – Generally. Since the reference in ORS 215.130(5) to the right to continue a lawful use after "the enactment or amendment of any zoning ordinance or regulation" refers to county regulations, ORS 215.130(5) does not apply to the continuation of nonconforming uses within cities. Goodman v. City of Portland, 19 Or LUBA 289 (1990).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A local government does not err by (1) treating the activities of bringing automobiles purchased off-site onto the subject property and storing them on-site until such time as they are repaired and then sold not as a separate and distinct land use but, instead, as the stockpiling and storage of raw inputs that are the first step in the larger nonconforming auto yard use operation or (2) concluding that a temporary hiatus in that first step, while the operator relies on existing stockpiles of automobiles to continue the nonconforming use, does not mean that the first step or any part of the nonconforming use has been discontinued. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The ORS 215.130(5) requirement that a use protected as a nonconforming use be a "lawful use" at the time contrary zoning is applied refers not only to whether the use complies with state or local land use laws, but also concerns whether the use complies with state, federal, or local non-land use laws, regulations or licensing requirements that are either (1) integrally related to zoning or land use or (2) for some other reason must be satisfied for a use to be "lawful." Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The ORS 215.130(5) "lawful use" requirement cannot be concerned only with whether the use complied with zoning and land use regulations at the time the use became nonconforming, because for uses that predate a local government's first application of zoning or land use regulations that would render the "lawful use" inquiry a nullity. Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Where a statute applicable at the time an "auto yard" use became nonconforming required the operator to obtain a Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) dealer license prior to selling cars, subject to criminal penalties, and it is undisputed that the operator failed to obtain a DMV license prior to the use becoming nonconforming, the use was not a "lawful use" within the meaning of ORS 215.130(5). Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. An asphalt batch plant that received a conditional use permit under the conditional use permit criteria that applied at the time the plant was approved is not a nonconforming use, and the local code provisions that govern discontinuance of a nonconforming use do not apply to an application that seeks a comprehensive plan text and zoning map amendment to add additional property that is adjacent to the conditional use to the county's inventory of significant aggregate sites. Pioneer Asphalt, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 71 Or LUBA 65 (2015).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Where a landfill is a permitted use in a Public Works zone subject to site design review, the portion of an existing landfill that was approved prior to the requirement for site design review is not a non-conforming use simply because it did not receive site design review, and therefore a proposed expansion of that landfill does not require review and approval as an alteration to a non-conforming use. McPhillips Farm Inc. v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 355 (2012).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A use that was established in contravention of any existing land use laws and therefore did not exist "lawfully" at the time the law changed is not saved by ORS 215.130(5), simply because it existed when the zoning or other regulation was first enacted or later amended. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. ORS 215.130(10)(a) authorizes counties to adopt a procedure whereby an applicant may limit its proof of the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of an alleged nonconforming use to the 10 years that precede the application. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The rebuttable presumption that is authorized by ORS 215.130(10)(a) applies to both parts of the inquiry that is necessary under ORS 215.130(5) to verify a nonconforming use, i.e., that the use existed on that date and that its existence was lawful. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Because ORS 215.130(11) does not unambiguously prohibit a county from requiring proof that a use was a lawful use when it came into existence more than 20 years ago or that it existed when the land use laws changed to prohibit the use, it is appropriate to consider legislative history of that statute. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The legislative history of ORS 215.130(11) makes clear that the statute operates to apply a 20-year proof limitation to any requirement of proof of existence as an element of continuity but it does not apply the 20-year limitation to any requirement of proof of existence, as an element of lawfulness at the time the use became nonconforming. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A county's determination that the nature and extent of a nonconforming dog kennel is a function of the kennel's capacity rather than its actual use is inconsistent with ORS 215.130(5), which defines the nature of the nonconforming use as a matter of how the structure is used, not the nature of the structure itself. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The nature and scope of a nonconforming use is governed only by the actual use of the subject property when the use became nonconforming, not by the use that would have been authorized under applicable regulations. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Where the county code defines "nonconforming use" to mean a use that was legally established prior to adoption of any code provision "with which the * * * use does not comply," the county may properly determine that a mobile home is no longer a nonconforming use because its owners obtained approval of a temporary permit, making use of the mobile home as a residence lawful under county zoning regulations. Morris v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 438 (1994).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Where a county code does not allow new dwellings as a permitted use in a particular zone, but allows "maintenance, repair or replacement of existing dwellings" as a permitted use in that zone, lawfully established existing dwellings are not nonconforming uses in that zone. Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. ORS 215.130(5) and (9) provide a limited authorization for counties to approve the expansion of nonconforming uses which, by definition, are contrary to provisions of county plans and land use regulations and, therefore, must be construed narrowly. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A use is "lawful," in the sense that term is used in ORS 215.130(5), and therefore eligible to be considered a nonconforming use when zoning or land use regulations change, only if it complies with applicable zoning and other land use regulations on the date they are changed. Where zoning and land use regulations do not themselves require that a structure be maintained in conformance with all building and fire code requirements, that a building may not have conformed in all respects with the building code and fire code does not mean the use is "unlawful," and therefore ineligible for the protections accorded by ORS 215.130(5). Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. That a nonconforming use is inconsistent with comprehensive plan provisions that did not exist or apply on the date the use became nonconforming provides no basis for reversal or remand, because ORS 215.130(5) provides the use may continue notwithstanding such inconsistency. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. Under Polk County v. Martin, 292 Or 69, 636 P2d 952 (1981), a sporadic and intermittent use may qualify as a nonconforming use and may continue to operate as a sporadic and intermittent use. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A use that existed lawfully prior to enactment of restrictive regulations, and which may therefore be continued after such regulations become effective, although it does not comply with the applicable restrictions, is termed a nonconforming use. Schmaltz v. City of Hood River, 22 Or LUBA 115 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. A nonconforming use is by definition a use that is contrary to provisions of a local government's comprehensive plan and land use regulations. Scott v. Josephine County, 22 Or LUBA 82 (1991).

36.2 Nonconforming Uses – Definition. The nature and extent of the lawful use in existence at the time the use became nonconforming are the reference points for determining the scope of permissible continued use. The proponent of a nonconforming use bears the burden of establishing whether the nonconforming use was lawfully established. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. While conditional use standards are not directly applicable in determining the nature and extent of a nonconforming use, in conducting a nonconforming use verification, it is not error, and, in fact, it may be necessary, to contrast the nature and extent of the nonconforming use with the restrictions and regulations that would otherwise apply to determine which discrete aspects or components of the use are conforming and cannot thereafter become nonconforming without seeking approval for an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a nonconforming use verification verifies a "mobile home park" commercial enterprise as the nonconforming use, vacancy of individual spaces in the entirety of the mobile home park business does not lead to a discontinuance of the lawful nonconforming use status of those spaces. Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. An applicant need not necessarily submit evidence of physical or visible changes to the land in order to demonstrate the existence or establishment of a nonconforming use before the relevant date, and nothing in ORS 215.130 authorizes a county to reject verification of a nonconforming use that was established prior to adoption of contrary zoning because the county deems the size or scope of the use to be too small. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The scope of a nonconforming use is confined to the uses that occur on the subject property; off-site activities, i.e., those that occur on other properties, such as leaving the property to purchase supplies or inputs for the nonconforming use, play no role in verifying the existence, nature, etc. of the nonconforming use on the subject property and are not subject to analysis or regulation as part of the nonconforming use. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When an opponent provides evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption under ORS 215.130(10)(a) regarding the existence, continuity, nature and extent of the proposed nonconforming use, the applicant has the burden of demonstrating that the use proposed for verification has existed and continued in its current nature and extent from the date the use became nonconforming, or 20 years prior to the date of application, whichever date is applicable. Morgan v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 188 (2018).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. ORS 215.130(11) prohibits a challenge to the lawful establishment element of a nonconforming use which would compel the applicant to submit evidence regarding the nature and extent of the use during periods that are more than 20 years prior to the date of application. A hearings officer cannot adopt findings based on impermissible evidence. Morgan v. Jackson County, 78 Or LUBA 188 (2018).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The ORS 215.130(5) requirement that a use protected as a nonconforming use be a "lawful use" at the time contrary zoning is applied refers not only to whether the use complies with state or local land use laws, but also concerns whether the use complies with state, federal, or local non-land use laws, regulations or licensing requirements that are either (1) integrally related to zoning or land use or (2) for some other reason must be satisfied for a use to be "lawful." Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The ORS 215.130(5) "lawful use" requirement cannot be concerned only with whether the use complied with zoning and land use regulations at the time the use became nonconforming, because for uses that predate a local government's first application of zoning or land use regulations that would render the "lawful use" inquiry a nullity. Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a statute applicable at the time an "auto yard" use became nonconforming required the operator to obtain a Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) dealer license prior to selling cars, subject to criminal penalties, and it is undisputed that the operator failed to obtain a DMV license prior to the use becoming nonconforming, the use was not a "lawful use" within the meaning of ORS 215.130(5). Morgan v. Jackson County, 76 Or LUBA 170 (2017).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a hearings officer does not take the position that his inability to verify the nature and extent of certain aspects of a prior concrete batch plant makes it impossible to determine whether an application to alter that prior nonconforming concrete batch plant will result in a more intensive use or result in greater adverse impact on the surrounding neighborhood, but intervenor does not file a cross-petition for review to assign error to that aspect of the hearings officer's decision, LUBA will not consider whether that position could provide an independent basis for denying the requested alteration. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A hearings officer's error in identifying 1984 instead of 1962 as the date a composting operation became nonconforming, for purposes of verifying the lawful existence of the proposed nonconforming use, is harmless error, where the hearings officer concluded, based on substantial evidence, that a composting operation did not exist at all on the property until 1990. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A hearings officer's error in identifying 1984 instead of 1962 as the date a composting operation became nonconforming did not prejudice the applicant's substantial rights to present evidence regarding the lawful existence of the use prior to the date the use became nonconforming. Any remand to correct the erroneous citation to 1984 would focus on the correct date of nonconformity, 1962, and the applicant had a full opportunity to present evidence that the operation lawfully existed in 1962. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A reasonable decision-maker could infer from the lack of any mention of composting on the subject property in any contemporaneous documentation prior to the 1990s that composting did not occur on the property prior to the period, notwithstanding conflicting testimony from the applicant that composting occurred prior to 1962, the date a composting facility became nonconforming on the property. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A hearings officer does not err in finding that a 1991 decision verifying a landfill as a lawful nonconforming use did not include a composting facility within the scope of verification for the landfill, where the 1991 decision does not mention composting or a composting facility, and the application to verify the landfill does not mention composting or seek to include a composting facility with the scope of verification. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A declaration in a 2011 franchise authorization that a composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use is not binding or controlling in a later proceeding on a land use application filed to determine whether the composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use, where the applicant agreed in a subsequent 2014 franchise agreement to file a nonconforming use verification application to demonstrate that the composting facility is a lawful land use. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Issuance of a Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) permit to operate a composting facility does not preempt a county from later concluding, in an application to verify whether the composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use, that the facility is not lawful nonconforming use, where the DEQ permit was issued based on a franchise authorization decision that was on appeal and that did not definitely resolve the issue of whether the composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Because a vested right is a species of nonconforming use, the general principles of nonconforming use (including discontinuance) apply to vested rights determinations, at least in counties subject to ORS 215.130. Under ORS 215.130, to determine whether a nonconforming use or vested right to complete a nonconforming has been lost through discontinuance, the local government must look back in time. Depending on the facts, it is possible that a nonconforming use or vested right could be lost through discontinuance prior to the date that the applicant seeks verification of the nonconforming use or vested right. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hood River, 72 Or LUBA 1 (2015).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. LUBA will deny a motion to take evidence outside the record, intended to establish that a nonconforming compost facility was operating on the property in 1984 when the property was zoned EFU, where the basis for the motion to take evidence is an argument that the hearings officer committed a "procedural irregularity" not shown in the record in finding that the date the EFU zone was applied is the relevant date for determining whether the nonconforming use was in existence. If the hearings officer erred in determining the relevant date that contrary zoning was applied, that error might provide a basis for remand, but would not constitute a "procedural irregularity" not shown in the record that would allow the movant to submit new evidence to LUBA intended to establish that the use existed in 1984. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 72 Or LUBA 443 (2015).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where findings explain that a 1996 flood destroyed some county permit records, but staff testifies that the flood did not destroy older building permit records because the older records were stored above the flood damage area, substantial evidence exists to support the finding that the county permit records are complete through that period, as well as the inference that the absence of a building permit for a second dwelling means that the dwelling was constructed without a building permit approval, and therefore was not lawfully established. Macfarlane v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 126 (2014).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A county errs in granting a floodplain development permit for an existing asphalt batch plant before first responding to LUBA's remand of an earlier county decision declaring the scope and nature of asphalt batch plant that qualifies as a nonconforming use. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 163 (2014).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A 1996 decision verifying a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park is properly understood to also verify all portions of the existing septic system that supports the park, even those portions that extend onto an adjoining parcel, where the 1996 decision clearly intended to verify the park's septic system, and there is no indication that the decision intended to verify only the portion of the septic system on the same parcel as the nonconforming use. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Oregon Department of Environmental Quality documents about the number of recreational vehicle (RV) sites authorized to be connected to an RV park's septic system and the number of mobile homes on-site in the mid-1990s are sufficient to rebut a presumption under ORS 215.130(10)(a), based on more recent evidence, that the larger number of RV sites that are currently connected to the septic system and the larger number of mobile homes currently on the site were present when the RV Park first became nonconforming in 1980. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a hearings officer's finding that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to a recreational vehicle (RV) park fails to extend that nonconforming use right to a number of dry RV spaces (spaces that are not connected to the RV park septic system) that the evidence the hearings officer relies on shows were in existence shortly before the RV park became nonconforming, remand is required for the hearings officer to better explain his decision regarding the dry RV spaces. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a hearings officer finds that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to continue a recreational vehicle park in an area of the county where RV parks are now prohibited, but must bring all those RV sites into full compliance with current county regulations concerning RV site standards and occupancy, but the evidence the hearings officer relies on to make his nonconforming use finding indicates that some of those sites were used for periods of time that exceed current occupancy standards and did not fully comply with current RV site standards at the time they became nonconforming, remand is required so that the hearings officer can consider whether the applicant may have a nonconforming use right to continue to use any such sites without having to bring them into compliance with the current RV park standards. Resources Northwest Inc. v. Clatsop County, 65 Or LUBA 313 (2012).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The good faith Holmes factor considering whether a landowner acted in good faith in making expenditures prior to a change in zoning is intended to discourage the landowner from racing to establish the basis for a non-conforming use, after the landowner receives notice of the change in zoning, and is not concerned with actions taken after the use becomes non-conforming. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A use that was established in contravention of any existing land use laws and therefore did not exist "lawfully" at the time the law changed is not saved by ORS 215.130(5), simply because it existed when the zoning or other regulation was first enacted or later amended. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. ORS 215.130(10)(a) authorizes counties to adopt a procedure whereby an applicant may limit its proof of the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of an alleged nonconforming use to the 10 years that precede the application. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The rebuttable presumption that is authorized by ORS 215.130(10)(a) applies to both parts of the inquiry that is necessary under ORS 215.130(5) to verify a nonconforming use, i.e., that the use existed on that date and that its existence was lawful. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Because ORS 215.130(11) does not unambiguously prohibit a county from requiring proof that a use was a lawful use when it came into existence more than 20 years ago or that it existed when the land use laws changed to prohibit the use, it is appropriate to consider legislative history of that statute. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The legislative history of ORS 215.130(11) makes clear that the statute operates to apply a 20-year proof limitation to any requirement of proof of existence as an element of continuity but it does not apply the 20-year limitation to any requirement of proof of existence, as an element of lawfulness at the time the use became nonconforming. Aguilar v. Washington County, 49 Or LUBA 364 (2005).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When a nonconforming use application does not distinguish between commercial and noncommercial use of a nonconforming go-cart track, and the evidence submitted also does not make such a distinction, a decision maker does not err in considering both commercial and noncommercial use of the go-cart track in determining the scope of the nonconforming use. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 46 Or LUBA 101 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. An argument that a county must verify the existence of alleged nonconforming uses, with specific reference to the location of certain structures within a setback, in the course of approving a site plan to expand an existing tourist facility, is insufficient to raise issues regarding (1) the alleged need to follow a separate procedure for verifying nonconforming uses and (2) alleged nonconforming commercial activities on the property. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 46 Or LUBA 509 (2004).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Minor relocations of nonconforming electrical transmission line poles that do not alter the nature or geographic extent of the line are not "alterations" for purposes of a code provision that requires the applicant for verification of a nonconforming use to demonstrate that alterations made since the date the use became nonconforming complied with applicable criteria. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a distribution line was added to a nonconforming electrical transmission line, the hearings officer must consider whether that additional line is an "alteration" of the nonconforming use, under a code provision that requires the applicant for verification of a nonconforming use to demonstrate that alterations made since the date the use became nonconforming complied with applicable criteria. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A decision verifying the scope and intensity of a nonconforming racetrack operation is not supported by substantial evidence, where no party identifies supporting evidence in the record, and the decision's recitation of facts indicates that the use as verified exceeds the scope and intensity of the racetrack on the date it became nonconforming in at least some particulars. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Combining two smaller service areas on the subject property into one larger service area does not constitute an alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use, absent evidence that the combined area significantly exceeds the total geographic extent or intensity of the former separate areas. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Tearing a structure down to the foundations and rebuilding it does not constitute maintaining an "existing structure" in "good repair" for purposes of verifying a nonconforming structure unde r ORS 215.130(5), even if a few original timbers are reused. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Noise from a nonconforming racetrack use is an adverse impact of that use, not part of the use itself. Reductions in noise due to technological improvements since the time the racetrack became nonconforming cannot be applied to offset increases in the intensity of racetrack operations, for purposes of verifying the scope and intensity of the nonconforming use at the time it became nonconforming. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. ORS 215.130(5) through (11) recognizes (1) "alterations" to a nonconforming use, (2) maintenance of existing structures associated with the use in good repair, and (3) restoration or replacement of a nonconforming use made necessary by fire or other casualty. The statute does not include an implicit fourth category of changes to nonconforming uses that reduce adverse impacts from that use. Such changes are "alterations" that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Maintenance of existing structures associated with a nonconforming use in good repair under ORS 215.130(5) includes incremental replacement of structural components, at least where the structure as a whole is not substantively replaced and the installed components are similar in function to those replaced. Such incremental replacements are not alterations that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A decision that analyzes numerous aspects of a proposed alteration of a nonconforming use compared to the historic use of the property is sufficient to establish the scope and nature of the nonconforming use where the petitioner does not challenge that analysis. Ankarberg v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 504 (2002).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The 20-year look-back provision of ORS 215.130(11) limits the time period for which an applicant must prove the continuous operation of a nonconforming use to no more than 20 years before the date of application. Any evidence of abandonment or discontinuance that may have occurred more than 20 years before the date of application is irrelevant. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 507 (2001).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A presumption that the intensity of a nonconforming use at the time the use became nonconforming is the same as the intensity of the use in the 10 years preceding the nonconforming use verification proceeding is rebutted where a preponderance of the evidence shows that the nonconforming use at the time the use became nonconforming was significantly less intense. Hal's Construction, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 616 (2001).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The burden of proof to show the legitimacy of a nonconforming use rests with the party asserting the existence of the use. LUBA will not substitute its judgment for that of the local decision maker where a reasonable person could find a beach house is not a valid nonconforming use. Crook v. Curry County, 38 Or LUBA 677 (2000).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Even though the city initiated the enforcement proceedings that gave rise to the issue of a nonconforming use, the burden of proving the existence of a nonconforming use will fall on the party asserting it. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When considering whether a nonconforming use right was lost because the nonconforming use was discontinued, the city must consider the entirety of the nonconforming use rather than only the small portion of the nonconforming use that is located within the city limits. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When determining the existence of a nonconforming use on land that lies partially within city limits, the city must apply the statutes and regulations applicable to the county for that portion of property lying outside the city limits. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The nature and extent of the nonconforming use do not depend on whether the entity performing the activity is a landowner, permittee or licensee, but rather on the nature and extent of the nonconforming activities themselves. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The rebuttable presumption provided by ORS 215.130(10)(a) creates the possibility of verifying the lawful creation and continued existence of a nonconforming use by proving the continued existence of the use for the past 10 years only. However, once the presumption has been rebutted, the applicant must show the use existed at the time of zoning and has continued, uninterrupted, since that date. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A county's determination that the nature and extent of a nonconforming dog kennel is a function of the kennel's capacity rather than its actual use is inconsistent with ORS 215.130(5), which defines the nature of the nonconforming use as a matter of how the structure is used, not the nature of the structure itself. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A property owner may not decrease the scope and intensity of a nonconforming use to minimal levels for 20 years, and then resume the nonconforming use at the scope and intensity that existed at the time it became nonconforming, absent evidence that fluctuations in scope and intensity are a product of seasonal or other business changes rather than a decrease in scope and intensity for other reasons that remained relatively constant for a long period of time. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A county is not equitably estopped from denying the nonconforming use status of a dog kennel because of the applicant's reliance on a previous county decision approving site design for a dog kennel. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Demonstrating that one nonconforming use was legally established on a property does not automatically authorize other uses in the same use category that may subsequently have been established on the property. River City Disposal v. City of Portland, 35 Or LUBA 360 (1998).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A local government's decision regarding the scope of an alleged nonconforming use is supported by substantial evidence, where the evidence the local government relies on is credible, and the opposing evidence does not so undermine the evidence relied upon as to render the local government's reliance on supporting evidence unreasonable. Aman v. City of Tigard, 35 Or LUBA 353 (1998).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a hearings officer's decision on a previous application for design review on the subject property determined that no nonconforming use existed, but specifically left the door open for intervenors to establish such a legal use, the hearings officer in a subsequent proceeding is not bound by the earlier determination. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Although it may be more difficult in most cases to establish the nature and extent of a nonconforming use that existed years ago, the requirement is not reduced in proportion to the difficulty one has in satisfying it. Fraley v. Deschutes County, 32 Or LUBA 27 (1996).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The proponent of a nonconforming use carries the burden to demonstrate the use was lawfully established and continued without interruption. Fraley v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 566 (1996).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The city's affirmation of the status of an existing use as a nonconforming use requires the application of the city's zoning ordinance and is therefore a land use decision over which LUBA has jurisdiction. Smith v. City of Phoenix, 31 Or LUBA 358 (1996).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the city's zoning code requires a structure or use be lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted, the city may not find an existing use to be nonconforming until it determines, based on substantial evidence, that the use was lawfully existing at the time the ordinance making it nonconforming was adopted. Smith v. City of Phoenix, 31 Or LUBA 358 (1996).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A local government decision that states it "reflects the historic use of" the subject property, and imposes certain limitations on the operation of a nonconforming use on that property, is not the equivalent of a determination regarding the nature and extent of the use existing on the property when restrictive zoning was first applied. Suydam v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 273 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Identifying a nonconforming use as a "variety of commercial enterprises," without identifying the nature and extent of the particular commercial enterprise that existed on the subject property at the time restrictive zoning was applied, is not an adequate determination regarding the nature and extent of the nonconforming use. Suydam v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 273 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where, during a local government proceeding regarding the existence of a nonconforming use, specific issues were raised concerning whether a complete or partial interruption or abandonment of any nonconforming use of the subject property had occurred, findings that simply state use of the property has not been interrupted or abandoned are impermissibly conclusory. Suydam v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 273 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The actual use of the subject property when restrictive regulations were applied determines the extent of the protected nonconforming use right, not the owner's intent in purchasing the property. Any alteration in the nature or extent of the nonconforming use must satisfy applicable statutory and local standards for the alteration of a nonconforming use. Nehoda v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 251 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When determining whether a nonconforming use exists, a local government's findings must determine whether the use of the subject property existing when restrictive regulations were applied was lawfully established, and the nature and extent of such use. Nehoda v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 251 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the current uses of property are different from those described and approved by an earlier local decision determining the existence of a nonconforming use on the property, in that the applicant added a number of log trucks to his business and began hauling logs for others for hire, the city correctly determined the new activities are not allowed by or within the scope of the earlier decision. Larson v. City of Warrenton, 29 Or LUBA 86 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the local code gives the planning director authority to make an initial determination on the existence of a nonconforming use, that the planning director made a previous determination on the existence of the nonconforming use does not mean he lacks authority to adopt a subsequent determination, pursuant to an agreement of the parties. Huiras v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 667 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a local government's zoning ordinance establishes a process for administrative actions to determine the existence of nonconforming uses, and another local ordinance gives a compliance hearings officer jurisdiction over complaints regarding violations of the zoning ordinance, it is reasonable and correct to interpret these ordinances to require that the existence of a nonconforming use be determined through an administrative action, not raised as a defense in a compliance proceeding. Watson v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 602 (1995).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. In determining whether to approve a proposed use as an alteration of a nonconforming use, where the local government has not previously determined that a nonconforming use exists, the local government must determine (1) whether the use was lawfully established when restrictive zoning was first applied; (2) the nature and extent of such use when it became nonconforming; (3) whether the use has been discontinued or abandoned; and (4) whether any proposed alteration of the nonconforming use complies with standards governing alterations of nonconforming uses. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A code definition of "nonconforming use," together with a code provision that a "nonconforming use may be continued," embody the standards applicable to determining the existence of a protected nonconforming use sufficiently to satisfy ORS 215.416(8). A county may consider relevant legal principles concerning the existence of nonconforming uses set out in the opinions of LUBA and the Oregon appellate courts, without having to adopt such principles as county regulations. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The protected right to continue a nonconforming use is a right to continue the nature and extent of use that existed at the time the use became nonconforming. The proponents of a nonconforming use have the burden of producing evidence from which a local government can make an adequate determination of the nature and extent of the nonconforming use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a local government determines a nonconforming use of the subject property exists together with approving an alteration of that nonconforming use, the local government's description of the nature and extent of the nonconforming use must be specific enough to provide an adequate basis for determining which aspects of the proposal constitute an alteration of the nonconforming use and for comparing the impacts of the proposal to the impacts of the nonconforming use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the code regulates mobile home parks and RV facilities as separate and distinct uses, any nonconforming use determination that the subject property was used as both a mobile home park and an RV facility at the time restrictive zoning was applied must include determinations regarding the extent the property was used for each use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Past use of property adjacent to the subject property as part of a nonconforming use would not establish a right to continue, on the subject property, the part of the nonconforming use that was located on other property. Where such issue is raised during local proceedings to determine the nature and extent of the nonconforming use of the subject property, it must be addressed in the local government's findings. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A local government generally must make four inquiries in determining if an existing use has a right to continue as a nonconforming use. Did the use lawfully exist when restrictive zoning was first applied? What was the nature and extent of the use when it became nonconforming? Has the use since been discontinued or abandoned? If the nature and extent of the present use represents an alteration of that in existence when the use became nonconforming, does the alteration comply with the standards governing alteration of nonconforming uses? Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the code does not specifically require that the county hearings officer make the initial interpretation concerning whether a nonconforming use exists and the nature and extent of that nonconforming use at the time restrictive zoning was applied, the board of commissioners is not clearly wrong in interpreting the code to grant the planning director authority to make such initial determinations. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The burden of showing an alleged nonconforming use was lawfully established at the time it became nonconforming rests with the proponent. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. At a minimum, a county's determination of the scope and nature of a nonconforming use must be precise enough to avoid improperly limiting the right to continue that use or improperly allowing an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use without subjecting the alteration or expansion to any standards which restrict alterations or expansions. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The nature and scope of a nonconforming use is governed only by the actual use of the subject property when the use became nonconforming, not by the use that would have been authorized under applicable regulations. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where applicable rules regulating personal use airports would have allowed far more flights than the evidentiary record shows historically occurred at an airstrip when it became nonconforming, the county cannot use the administrative rule definitions as a surrogate descriptor of the nature and scope of the use at the time it became nonconforming. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a code standard for determining nonconforming use status requires that the use "would have been allowed" under the zoning applicable when the use became nonconforming, it is reasonable and correct to interpret the code standard to require that at the time the use became nonconforming, it complied with an applicable code provision prohibiting objectionable off-site impacts. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the city code established no process or procedure for city determinations of compliance with a provision prohibiting permitted uses from having objectionable off-site impacts, the city cannot interpret a code nonconforming use standard to require that a city determination of compliance with the impacts provision was obtained before the use became nonconforming. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. When a local government determines a use is a nonconforming use, it must establish the parameters of the nonconforming use. Any changes in the nonconforming use after it became nonconforming, are governed by the code provisions controlling changes of nonconforming uses, not by former code performance standards applicable to the use before it became nonconforming. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the county code defines "nonconforming use" to mean a use that was legally established prior to adoption of any code provision "with which the * * * use does not comply," the county may properly determine that a mobile home is no longer a nonconforming use because its owners obtained approval of a temporary permit, making use of the mobile home as a residence lawful under county zoning regulations. Morris v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 438 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A county can establish procedures for determinations concerning nonconforming uses as part of its zoning ordinance and, if it does so, can require parties to seek a determination regarding the existence or expansion of a nonconforming use through such zoning ordinance procedures, rather than allowing such issues to be initially determined in the county's code enforcement process. Watson v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 164 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where petitioners questioned how much of the subject property was utilized for rock quarrying purposes and how much rock was quarried during the relevant period of time, during local proceedings to determine whether a rock quarry qualifies as a nonconforming use, this is adequate to enable a reasonable decision maker to understand issues were raised concerning the size and scope of quarrying activities and the adequacy of the evidence relating to those issues. Mazeski v. City of Mosier, 27 Or LUBA 100 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A determination that a nonconforming quarry occupied five acres at the time it became nonconforming is not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record where the only evidence cited by the parties as establishing the size of the quarry operation at the relevant time is an undated aerial photograph. Mazeski v. City of Mosier, 27 Or LUBA 100 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. That a DOGAMI permit was not obtained does not establish that at the time a quarrying operation became nonconforming, it was removing up to 5,000 cubic yards of rock per year (the level of activity at which a DOGAMI permit is required). Mazeski v. City of Mosier, 27 Or LUBA 100 (1994).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Evidence that a person may have intended to maintain the nonconforming residential use of the subject property does not, alone, establish a nonconforming residential use. Cemper v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 486 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. It is appropriate for a local government to interpret its code definition of the term "lot" consistently with ORS 92.017, so that individual legally established lots are recognized as such and may be individually conveyed, even though they are substandard under existing zoning regulations and are in common ownership with adjoining substandard lots. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the evidence in the record is insufficient to establish a zoning inspector's representation concerning nonconforming use status was made with knowledge of the material facts that present and certain past commercial uses of the subject property occurred without required local government approvals, the local government is not estopped from denying petitioners' application for the establishment of a nonconforming use. Pesznecker v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 463 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a local government correctly determines that a parking lot is a nonconforming use, and was not automatically made an approved conditional use under applicable code provisions, it commits no error in failing to apply plan and code provisions that would apply to expansion of the parking lot if it were correctly viewed as a conditional use. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

336.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where applicants wish to establish the scope of a nonconforming use, they have the burden of producing evidence from which the local decision maker can determine the scope of the nonconforming use. If applicants present nonspecific information, they run the risk that reasonable people, including the local decision maker, will disagree with them concerning the scope of the nonconforming use. Warner v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 82 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the local decision maker determines the existence of a nonconforming personal use airport, but the evidence concerning the scope of that nonconforming use is nonspecific, LUBA will affirm the local decision maker's determination that the scope of the nonconforming use amounts to no more than one four-hour flight per year from such airport. Warner v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 82 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a local government determines that a recreational cattle roping use was lawfully established on the date restrictive zoning was applied, because it constituted a farm use allowed outright by the subject zone, LUBA will defer to that interpretation so long as it is not clearly contrary to the express words, policy or context of the ordinance. Smith v. Lane County, 25 Or LUBA 1 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the characterization of an alleged nonconforming use is the primary issue during the local proceedings, to preserve for eventual appeal to LUBA the issue of whether the alleged nonconforming use includes sales of equipment, a petitioner must do more than state in passing during the local proceedings that he maintained equipment he had a right to sell. Rhine v. City of Portland, 24 Or LUBA 557 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where determining whether an existing quarry qualifies as a nonconforming use under applicable city code provisions requires a city to determine whether the existing quarry lawfully existed at the time the existing zoning was last amended and whether the use has been discontinued for a year, the nonconforming use determination involves the exercise of significant legal and factual judgment and is a "permit" as that term is used in ORS 227.160(2). Hood River Sand v. City of Mosier, 24 Or LUBA 381 (1993).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where storage is part of a lawful nonconforming use, and such storage use continues after other business operations which may be connected with the storage use cease, in the absence of the discontinuation of the storage use, such storage use may itself be a nonconforming use. Hendgen v. Clackamas County, 24 Or LUBA 355 (1992).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. It is the nature and extent of the prior lawfully established use which determines the boundaries of permissible continued nonconforming use after the application of a restrictive zoning ordinance. Hendgen v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 285 (1992).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. In determining whether a nonconforming use has been established, the decision of the Supreme Court in Polk County v. Martin requires a local government to (1) ascertain the scope and nature of the use occurring on the property at the time restrictive zoning was applied, and (2) determine whether those uses were lawful at the time the restrictive zoning was imposed. Thereafter, those uses may be continued at the level established, unless interrupted or abandoned. Warner v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 220 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where, at the time of the imposition of restrictive zoning, there was a lawful intermittent airport use of property, it is incorrect for a local government to conclude such use cannot constitute a nonconforming use because it was recreational, intermittent and did not involve the investment of substantial sums of money. Warner v. Clackamas County, 22 Or LUBA 220 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A use is "lawful," in the sense that term is used in ORS 215.130(5), and therefore eligible to be considered a nonconforming use when zoning or land use regulations change, only if it complies with applicable zoning and other land use regulations on the date they are changed. Where zoning and land use regulations do not themselves require that a structure be maintained in conformance with all building and fire code requirements, that a building may not have conformed in all respects with the building code and fire code does not mean the use is "unlawful," and therefore ineligible for the protections accorded by ORS 215.130(5). Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Under Polk County v. Martin, 292 Or 69, 636 P2d 952 (1981), a sporadic and intermittent use may qualify as a nonconforming use and may continue to operate as a sporadic and intermittent use. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Evidence submitted by an applicant regarding the nature and scope of activities occurring on his property during a particular period of time can constitute substantial evidence, unless other evidence in the record so undermines his evidence that a reasonable person would not rely upon it. Smith v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 228 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the applicant for a nonconforming use determination represents that current use of the subject property is substantially identical to the scope of the use existing at the time of imposition of restrictive zoning, opponents' evidence of events occurring on subject property after restrictive zoning was imposed is relevant to show the current use is more intense than the use of the property on the date the use became nonconforming. Smith v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 228 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the applicant for a nonconforming use determination presents evidence that is inconsistent and vague, such evidence is not substantial evidence to establish the existence of a nonconforming use. Smith v. Lane County, 21 Or LUBA 228 (1991).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where a county adopted no findings, and the parties fail to identify evidence clearly supporting a determination that there was a nonconforming park use occurring on the subject parcel when the restrictive zoning was imposed, the county erred in determining a lawful nonconforming park use of the parcel exists. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The proponent of a nonconforming use bears the burden of proving that the nonconforming use was lawfully established. J and D Fertilizers v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 44 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. In order to overturn a county determination that a nonconforming use does not exist on evidentiary grounds, it is not sufficient for petitioner to show there is substantial evidence in the record to support its position, rather the evidence must be such that a reasonable trier of fact could only say petitioner's evidence should be believed. J and D Fertilizers v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 44 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where testimony in support of the existence of a nonconforming use is nonspecific with regard to the dates, nature and extent of the alleged use, LUBA will not conclude that a reasonable trier of fact could only find that this evidence is adequate to establish the existence of a nonconforming use. J and D Fertilizers v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 44 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Where the issue of the existence of a nonconforming use was raised below, and the appealed local government order states a position on that issue adverse to petitioners, the order includes a decision on the merits of the nonconforming use issue presented. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. The nature and extent of the lawful use in existence at the time the use became nonconforming are the reference points for determining the scope of permissible continued use. The proponent of a nonconforming use bears the burden of establishing whether the nonconforming use was lawfully established. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. Neither the fact of a particular kind of property tax assessment nor that petitioners had paid taxes on the basis of a particular kind of property tax assessment, of itself, establishes that petitioners have demonstrated a nonconforming residential use of the subject property that has not been discontinued. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.3 Nonconforming Uses – Determination of Existence. A zoning clearance approval that requires determinations on whether a proposed use is incidental and subordinate to an existing use, and whether and the extent to which an existing use is a lawful nonconforming use, requires interpretation and the exercise of judgment within the meaning of ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) and (C) and, therefore, is a "permit" under ORS 215.402(4). Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 481 (1990).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. While changes in local market conditions affecting supply and demand may be responsible for long-term fluctuations inherent in the fruit processing industry for purposes of rebutting a presumption that a particular nonconforming fruit processing use has been abandoned, a county does not err in concluding that the particular use has been abandoned where the operator cites no evidence that any reductions in processing over the relevant period of years were actually the result of changes in market supply or demand similarly affecting all local fruit processors. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a county code provision provides that a nonconforming use may not be resumed if there is a "discontinuance" for a period greater than one year, the county board of commissioners does not err in interpreting the undefined term "discontinuance" by resorting to the dictionary definition and in applying that interpretation to conclude that a property owner who is actively pursuing permits to complete repairs and upgrades that are required for health and safety reasons, and who is actively responding to appeals of those permits, has not discontinued a nonconforming use. Such an interpretation and application of the term "discontinuance" in the county code provision is not contrary to the term "interruption" in ORS 215.130(7)(a). Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a nonconforming use verification verifies a "mobile home park" commercial enterprise as the nonconforming use, vacancy of individual spaces in the entirety of the mobile home park business does not lead to a discontinuance of the lawful nonconforming use status of those spaces. Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A local government does not err by (1) treating the activities of bringing automobiles purchased off-site onto the subject property and storing them on-site until such time as they are repaired and then sold not as a separate and distinct land use but, instead, as the stockpiling and storage of raw inputs that are the first step in the larger nonconforming auto yard use operation or (2) concluding that a temporary hiatus in that first step, while the operator relies on existing stockpiles of automobiles to continue the nonconforming use, does not mean that the first step or any part of the nonconforming use has been discontinued. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a county suspends operation of a verified nonconforming use based on notice of noncompliance with DEQ rules, and subsequently lifts that suspension based on notice that corrective actions have been taken, the county is not required to apply land use regulations relating to the discontinuation of nonconforming uses where those land use regulations apply only in the context of an application for development of a nonconforming use or a code enforcement proceeding. Because the county is not required to apply land use regulations, lifting the suspension is not a "land use decision" for purposes of ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A) and LUBA therefore lacks jurisdiction under ORS 197.825(1). Campbell v. Columbia County, 79 Or LUBA 56 (2019).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Like ORS 215.130(5), ORS 215.130(7)(a) imposes statutory standards regarding "interruption or abandonment" of a nonconforming use. But unlike ORS 215.130(5), ORS 215.130(10)(b) expressly delegates to counties the authority to "[e]stablish[] criteria to determine when a use has been interrupted or abandoned under" ORS 215.130(7). Accordingly, the adopted local criteria provide the applicable standards for determining whether a nonconforming use has been "interrupt[ed] or abandon[ed]" as those words are used ORS 215.130(7)(a). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 213 (2018).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Because a vested right is a species of nonconforming use, the general principles of nonconforming use (including discontinuance) apply to vested rights determinations, at least in counties subject to ORS 215.130. Under ORS 215.130, to determine whether a nonconforming use or vested right to complete a nonconforming has been lost through discontinuance, the local government must look back in time. Depending on the facts, it is possible that a nonconforming use or vested right could be lost through discontinuance prior to the date that the applicant seeks verification of the nonconforming use or vested right. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hood River, 72 Or LUBA 1 (2015).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3) authorize local governments to approve forest template dwellings if at least three dwellings existed within a specified 160-acre area and those dwellings continue to exist at the time forest template dwelling approval is requested. Where the record supports a hearings officer's finding that a dwelling that was constructed in 1906 has been unoccupied for many years prior to an application for approval of a forest template dwelling, the hearings officer correctly found that the 1906 dwelling was a nonconforming use in the county's forest zone that was first applied long after the 1906 dwelling was constructed. And the hearings officer correctly found that under local laws adopted to implement ORS 215.750 and OAR 660-006-0027(3), the forest template dwelling applicant must establish that the right to continue residential use of the 1906 dwelling was not lost through interruption or abandonment for two years or more before the 1906 dwelling could be counted as a dwelling that "continues to exist" at the time the application for approval of a forest template dwelling was filed. West v. Multnomah County, 70 Or LUBA 235 (2014).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Fountain Village Development Co. v. Multnomah Cty., 176 Or App 213, 224, 31 P3d 458 (2001), statutory and local government regulations that specify that nonconforming use rights are lost if the nonconforming use is abandoned, interrupted or discontinued for the requisite period of time also apply to vested rights, which are properly viewed as inchoate nonconforming uses. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. While the maintenance activities that are actually taken to maintain a nonconforming use could have some indirect bearing on whether a property owner has abandoned, discontinued or interrupted a nonconforming use, it does not follow that any maintenance of a nonconforming use will be sufficient to establish that the property owner has not abandoned, discontinued or interrupted a nonconforming use. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. The right that the holder of a vested right has is the right to continue "construction" of a proposed use until construction of that proposed use is complete and the vested right (an inchoate nonconforming use) is converted to a nonconforming use that is fully established. It is the continued "construction" of an inchoate nonconforming use that must not be abandoned, discontinued or interrupted for more than the time specified for nonconforming uses, to avoid losing a vested right to continue construction of that vested right. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a county finds that a property owner discontinued construction of a house for at least one year during a 30-year period, even if the property owner is given the benefit of the doubt in his contentions that over that 30-year period at unspecified times he repaired concrete scaling and did some plumbing work, framing, grading and road construction, the county's finding is supported by substantial evidence where other evidence shows there was almost no construction activity during that 30-year period. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. To preserve an issue under the particular terms of a superseded ordinance governing nonconforming uses, it is insufficient to make general arguments that the right to expand the nonconforming use had been lost through abandonment or discontinuance. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A petitioner adequately raises the issue of whether a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use was lost through discontinuance based on common law and local code provisions, notwithstanding that most of petitioner's arguments below were based on a statute that applies only to counties, where the petitioner's discontinuance argument was not limited to the statute, and the applicant understood petitioner to be raising discontinuance under other authorities and responded to the issue. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Remand is necessary where a city concludes that an applicant has a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use, but the city fails to resolve issues fairly raised below regarding whether the vested right has been lost through discontinuance under the common law cases that the city's vested right conclusion rests upon, or through the city's nonconforming use code. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. ORS 215.130(11), which prohibits a county from requiring a nonconforming use application to prove the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of the use for a period exceeding 20 years from the date of application, affects the evidentiary burden not only with respect to continuity but also "nature and extent." As a practical matter, any expansions or alterations that occurred more than 20 years prior to the date of application are part of the "nature and extent" of the use, even if such expansions or alterations were made without required approvals. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where LUBA concludes that the evidence in the local government record regarding whether use of a nonconforming dwelling was abandoned for more than one year was "hardly overwhelming" but was nevertheless such that a reasonable decision maker could either find that the use was discontinued or find that the use was not discontinued, the hearings officer's finding that the nonconforming use was discontinued is supported by substantial evidence. Bradley v. Washington County, 47 Or LUBA 11 (2004).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where the evidence concerning whether a dwelling had been abandoned or interrupted before 1995 is conflicting and the hearings officer relies heavily on photographs of the dwelling that he mistakenly believed were taken in 1995 rather than years later to conclude that use of the dwelling use was abandoned or interrupted for more than one-year before 1995, the hearings officer's decision is not supported by substantial evidence and must be remanded so that the hearings officer can render a decision with a correct understanding of the date the photographs were taken. Bradley v. Washington County, 44 Or LUBA 36 (2003).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A hearings officer's finding that use of a nonconforming dwelling was "abandoned" for more than one year without requiring proof that there was intent to relinquish a known right provides no independent basis for remand where the hearings officer also found that use of the dwelling was discontinued for more than one year. A local discontinuance standard, like the statutory nonconforming use "interruption" standard, does not require proof of intent to relinquish a known right. Bradley v. Washington County, 44 Or LUBA 36 (2003).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A county hearings officer did not err in determining that a nonconforming wrecking yard business was discontinued where the evidence showed that (1) the last lessee operating the wrecking yard business ceased all business operations on the property for more than a year; (2) only incidental files and vehicle parts were left on the property after the lessee ceased operations; and (3) vehicles that were abandoned in front of the locked gates on the property and were later pulled onto the property by the property owner were not part of an inventory used to reactivate the wrecking yard business. Cory v. Clackamas County, 44 Or LUBA 733 (2003).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Once restoration or replacement of a nonconforming use is begun, ORS 215.130(7)(a) requires that restoration or replacement not be interrupted for a period of more than one year. Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a nonconforming clubhouse is destroyed by fire and restoration or replacement is commenced within 10 years is periodic fundraising activity to complete the restoration, the right to restore or replace the nonconforming clubhouse is lost under ORS 215.130(7)(a). Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A prior local government decision that a nonconforming use had not been discontinued may constitute substantial evidence in support of a subsequent land use decision that, as of the date of the prior decision, the nonconforming use had not been discontinued. Ankarberg v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 504 (2002).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A city does not err by applying its more stringent nonconforming use criteria to a portion of a property located within city limits and concluding that a nonconforming use on city property has been lost, notwithstanding a county decision that the portion of the property lying outside of city limits retains its nonconforming use status based on the application of county nonconforming use standards. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 41 Or LUBA 73 (2001).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. The 20-year look-back provision of ORS 215.130(11) limits the time period for which an applicant must prove the continuous operation of a nonconforming use to no more than 20 years before the date of application. Any evidence of abandonment or discontinuance that may have occurred more than 20 years before the date of application is irrelevant. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 507 (2001).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Statutory provisions governing nonconforming uses at ORS 215.130 also govern vested rights, including the delegation of authority to counties to establish criteria under which such rights have been interrupted or abandoned. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Abandonment of a vested right, like abandonment of a nonconforming use, requires evidence of intent to relinquish a known right. Where the only evidence relevant to intent shows that the landowner maintained the uncompleted structure during the relevant period, the county errs in determining that the landowner has abandoned the right to complete and use the structure. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where the county views a vested right to be discontinued under its code if there is discontinuance of substantial effort to finish the development for any reason for more than two years, evidence that the landowner maintained an uncompleted structure but made no effort to finish the structure for three years was sufficient to support a finding of discontinuance. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. When considering whether a nonconforming use right was lost because the nonconforming use was discontinued, the city must consider the entirety of the nonconforming use rather than only the small portion of the nonconforming use that is located within the city limits. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. When determining the existence of a nonconforming use on land that lies partially within city limits, the city must apply the statutes and regulations applicable to the county for that portion of property lying outside the city limits. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. The nature and extent of the nonconforming use do not depend on whether the entity performing the activity is a landowner, permittee or licensee, but rather on the nature and extent of the nonconforming activities themselves. ODOT v. City of Mosier, 36 Or LUBA 666 (1999).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. The rebuttable presumption provided by ORS 215.130(10)(a) creates the possibility of verifying the lawful creation and continued existence of a nonconforming use by proving the continued existence of the use for the past 10 years only. However, once the presumption has been rebutted, the applicant must show the use existed at the time of zoning and has continued, uninterrupted, since that date. Lawrence v. Clackamas County, 36 Or LUBA 273 (1999).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Evidence of stockpiled rock in an otherwise unused and unmaintained quarry does not constitute an ongoing quarry operation, but supports a conclusion that the site has been discontinued or interrupted for the purposes of ORS 215.130. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Because abandonment is established through an active intent to discontinue the use, petitioner's lease of a quarry site to an unrelated business is evidence of intent to abandon the site as a quarry. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. To demonstrate a nonconforming use was not interrupted under ORS 215.130, the evidence must establish that the business was operational on an ongoing basis. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A decision denying a requested nonconforming use determination is supported by substantial evidence, where the applicant's evidence had gaps and inconsistencies and the opponent's evidence was uniform. Tigard Sand and Gravel v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 124 (1997).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. LUBA will remand the county's expansion of a nonconforming use where the county fails to make the requisite findings regarding the level of intensity of use that existed when the use became nonconforming, and the level of intensity that has continued, uninterrupted, since that time. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where the county's interpretation of a local ordinance regarding nonconforming uses allows an abandoned nonconforming dog kennel use to be reinstated, that interpretation violates OAR 660-33-120, which prohibits new kennels on high-value farmland. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. That a nonconforming use was interrupted or abandoned during a period when the subject property was in receivership has no bearing on whether it may be resumed. Fraley v. Deschutes County, 31 Or LUBA 566 (1996).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where, during a local government proceeding regarding the existence of a nonconforming use, specific issues were raised concerning whether a complete or partial interruption or abandonment of any nonconforming use of the subject property had occurred, findings that simply state use of the property has not been interrupted or abandoned are impermissibly conclusory. Suydam v. Deschutes County, 29 Or LUBA 273 (1995).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. So long as a nonconforming use has not been abandoned or discontinued, as provided by local ordinance, the nonconforming use has a right to continue, regardless of whether it complies with local regulations that would govern a new, conforming use. Nehoda v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 251 (1995).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. In determining whether to approve a proposed use as an alteration of a nonconforming use, where the local government has not previously determined that a nonconforming use exists, the local government must determine (1) whether the use was lawfully established when restrictive zoning was first applied; (2) the nature and extent of such use when it became nonconforming; (3) whether the use has been discontinued or abandoned; and (4) whether any proposed alteration of the nonconforming use complies with standards governing alterations of nonconforming uses. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A local government generally must make four inquiries in determining if an existing use has a right to continue as a nonconforming use. Did the use lawfully exist when restrictive zoning was first applied? What was the nature and extent of the use when it became nonconforming? Has the use since been discontinued or abandoned? If the nature and extent of the present use represents an alteration of that in existence when the use became nonconforming, does the alteration comply with the standards governing alteration of nonconforming uses? Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a county and a property owner agree the owner will not conduct a disputed nonconforming use until the issue is resolved through appropriate county proceedings, and the agreement specifically provides the owner's nonconforming use rights will not be lost as a result of complying with the agreement, nonuse pursuant to that agreement cannot extinguish the nonconforming use. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where the local code provides that nonconforming use rights are lost if the site of a nonconforming use is "vacant" for two continuous years, and also provides that words used in the code have their normal dictionary meaning, the local government may interpret "vacant" to mean "free from activity" consistent with the nonconforming use rights, but cannot embellish that definition by adding a requirement for the absence of "a bona fide effort to provide goods and services for profit." Rhine v. City of Portland, 27 Or LUBA 86 (1994).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. A local government determination that occasionally staying on the subject property in a travel trailer is not residential use of the property for purposes of determining whether a nonconforming residential use has been "discontinued," is not a clearly wrong interpretation of the code, and LUBA will defer to it. Cemper v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 486 (1993).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a nonconforming use is a business, and that business ceases operations during bankruptcy proceedings for more than the period of time specified in the local code for discontinuance of a nonconforming use and is liquidated by the bankruptcy trustee, the nonconforming use is lost. Hendgen v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 285 (1992).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where a nonconforming use is significantly reduced in scope by relocating significant aspects of the use to another location for two years, the relocation represents a partial interruption or discontinuance of the nonconforming use, and the property owner may not, five years later, unilaterally resume the nonconforming use at its former scope and intensity. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Where the local code provides that a nonconforming use cannot be resumed if it has been "discontinued" for more than a specified period of time, a nonconforming use is lost if not used for that period of time, regardless of whether the use was "abandoned" or there was a subjective intent to continue the use at sometime in the future. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.4 Nonconforming Uses – Abandonment/Interruption. Neither the fact of a particular kind of property tax assessment nor that petitioners had paid taxes on the basis of a particular kind of property tax assessment, of itself, establishes that petitioners have demonstrated a nonconforming residential use of the subject property which has not been discontinued. Sabin v. Clackamas County, 20 Or LUBA 23 (1990).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. While conditional use standards are not directly applicable in determining the nature and extent of a nonconforming use, in conducting a nonconforming use verification, it is not error, and, in fact, it may be necessary, to contrast the nature and extent of the nonconforming use with the restrictions and regulations that would otherwise apply to determine which discrete aspects or components of the use are conforming and cannot thereafter become nonconforming without seeking approval for an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where an applicant has conducted both festival-related uses and non-festival-related park and campground uses on property zoned Rural Residential and Impacted Forest, where the festival-related uses are verified nonconforming uses, and where the applicant applies for a special use permit to legalize the non-festival-related park and campground uses, LUBA will affirm the county's interpretation that its nonconforming use provisions do not apply to the special use permit application where the county expressly explains that the special use permit does not authorize festival-related uses and where the petitioners identify no law preventing the county from issuing permits that have the effect of legalizing special uses that have been occurring independent of a preexisting nonconforming uses. Klein v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 287 (2019).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. An alteration to a nonconforming use is, in essence, a permissible continuation of the original nonconforming use. The alteration analysis under ORS 215.130(9) requires a comparison between the proposed alteration and the original nonconforming use, to which the right to continue is attached, and subsequent lawful alterations. Underwood v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 542 (2019).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. While a circuit court has exclusive authority to modify a 1976 decree recognizing a vested right to development, where in 2013 the applicant seeks county approval to alter or expand that vested right and the county enters into a stipulation with the applicant approving the proposed alteration or expansion, that the circuit court agrees to modify the 1976 decree to reflect the stipulation does not change the fact that the stipulation itself is an alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use, and hence a land use decision subject to LUBA's exclusive jurisdiction. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 38 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A stipulation entered into between a vested rights holder and a county that (1) revives a right to construct several buildings that had otherwise expired, (2) authorizes development in a different part of the property than formerly authorized, (3) approves a 200-unit hotel as a previously authorized "lodge with bunkhouse," and (4) declares that all development allowed under the stipulation is allowed notwithstanding county land use regulations to the contrary is, in effect, a decision to approve alterations or expansions to a nonconforming use, and therefore the county must apply the statutory and code standards applicable to alterations and expansions to a nonconforming use. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 38 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. LUBA will remand rather than reverse a county decision that erroneously concludes that a 2005 permit is still valid to authorize issuance of building permits for what is now a nonconforming use, where the applicant originally filed for a vested rights determination, and planning staff originally evaluated the application as one for alteration of a nonconforming use, but those theories were not addressed in the county's final decision. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 299 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where there is conflicting believable evidence regarding whether a proposal to replace a concrete batch plant with an asphalt batch plant would present a greater risk of explosions and damage to surrounding properties, a hearings officer's conclusion that the asphalt batch plant poses a greater risk of explosions and damage is supported by substantial evidence. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a hearings officer concludes that an application for nonconforming use verification does not include a request to approve alterations to the nonconforming use, but the hearings officer also observes that future applications for alterations are unlikely to be approved under the county code standards that apply to alterations, the observation is dicta, and not a basis for reversal or remand. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A stipulation between a county and a property owner to modify the location of development allowed as a vested right and nonconforming use is in all but name an alteration of a nonconforming use, and as such the stipulation concerns the application of land use regulations governing nonconforming uses, and is therefore a "land use decision" as defined at ORS 197.015(10)(a). Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 382 (2016).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. The statutory framework governing nonconforming uses and alteration of those uses makes clear that an alteration of a nonconforming use amounts to a continuation of the use, and therefore cannot be a discontinuance of the same use. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 71 Or LUBA 148 (2015).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. In applying a local nonconforming use standard that requires that a change in nonconforming use must have "no greater adverse impact to the neighborhood," a hearings officer errs in comparing the expected adverse impacts of the changed nonconforming use with the adverse impacts of other uses that are allowed in the zoning district. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A hearings officer's decision to recognize an existing structure as a nonconforming structure and to approve a new school use of that structure as an alteration of a nonconforming use, where there was no prior notice that the local government's nonconforming use regulations would be applied, constitutes a procedural error that prejudiced petitioner's substantial rights. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 197.015(10)(b)(H)(ii) excludes from the definition of "land use decision" any land use compatibility statements determining that the proposed state agency action is "allowed without review" under local comprehensive plan and regulations. However, that exclusion is not met where the proposed state agency action is to expand the septic system for a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park, and the expansion is accomplished by verifying and altering the scope of the nonconforming use, which necessarily requires discretionary review. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Nothing in the current language of ORS 215.130, governing non-conforming uses, prohibits a local government from authorizing an expansion of a lawful nonconforming use onto an adjacent property. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 215.130(5) provides that a county shall approve an alteration of a nonconforming use that is necessary to comply with any lawful requirement for alteration in the use, and prohibits counties from conditioning an alteration that is necessary to comply with state or local health or safety requirements. Where the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) threatens enforcement against a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park and requires the park to fix its failing septic system to avoid health hazards, the alteration qualifies as both a "lawful requirement" and "health and safety" type of alterations. That the applicant has some choice in how the required septic improvements are designed does not disqualify the alterations as "lawful requirement" or "health and safety" types of alterations. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A condition of a 1996 decision verifying a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park that prohibits "further expansion" of the park is not intended to prohibit expansion of the septic system that serves the existing approved dwellings, where the number or type of dwellings or uses served by the septic system is not expanded. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A city correctly interprets its development code to permit a change of use, without requiring that the nonconforming development on the site be brought into conformance with current development code standards, where the land use code expressly distinguishes between nonconforming uses and nonconforming development and the permit applicant proposed no change in the nonconforming development, only a change from one permitted use to another permitted use. Nielsen v. City of Gresham, 66 Or LUBA 24 (2012).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. An assignment of error that a decision maker erroneously characterized a nonconforming use application as an application to "change" rather than "expand" the nonconforming use does not provide a basis for reversal or remand, where the local approval criteria for both changes and expansions require a finding of no greater adverse impacts, and petitioner does not challenge findings that the proposed change/expansion results in greater adverse impacts. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. It is harmless error to rely on new evidence that is accepted after the close of the record regarding water quality impacts of a proposed alteration to a nonconforming use, where the hearings officer also denied the proposed alteration based on fire safety impacts, and the petitioner/applicant does not challenge that basis for denial. Campers Cove Resort v. Jackson County, 61 Or LUBA 62 (2010).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that residential use of recreational vehicles (RV) at an RV park is not a lawful part of the nonconforming use, where the applicant submitted evidence that residential RV use occurred during the 10-year period preceding the 2007 application, but evidence from the 20-year period preceding the application establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that residential use did not begin until 1990, thereby rebutting the presumption established under ORS 215.130(10)(a) based on the 10-year period preceding the application. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 215.130(11), which prohibits a county from requiring a nonconforming use application to prove the "existence, continuity, nature and extent" of the use for a period exceeding 20 years from the date of application, affects the evidentiary burden not only with respect to continuity but also "nature and extent." As a practical matter, any expansions or alterations that occurred more than 20 years prior to the date of application are part of the "nature and extent" of the use, even if such expansions or alterations were made without required approvals. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A 1990 site plan that depicts areas with existing RV spaces and areas where RV spaces were to be abandoned is sufficient to rebut by a preponderance of the evidence that a number of the current RV spaces at a nonconforming RV park did not exist in 1990, and are therefore not a lawful part of the nonconforming use. Reeder v. Multnomah County, 59 Or LUBA 240 (2009).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Even if a prior conditional use permit implicitly approved reconstruction of the first floor of an existing building used for a nonconforming use, failure to appeal the prior decision would not necessarily preclude petitioner from arguing on appeal of a subsequent building permit to reconstruct the first floor that the building permit requires nonconforming use review, where the first floor plan authorized in the building permit approval proposes expansions and alterations not depicted on the first floor plan submitted as part of the prior conditional use application. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Merely because some aspects of a proposed expansion/alteration of a nonconforming use are necessary to comply with Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) requirements and thus allowed without nonconforming use review does not mean that other aspects of the proposal that are not related to ADA requirements are exempt from nonconforming use review. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. The ORS 215.130(5) requirement that local governments allow alterations to a nonconforming use "necessary to comply with any lawful requirement for alteration in the use" applies to circumstances where a regulatory agency or similar authority requires changes to a nonconforming use in order to continue the use, not to circumstances where the operator of the nonconforming use is subject to general, open-ended statutory or regulatory obligations. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A 1962 order from the Public Utility Commission granting a public utility its service area and statutes generally requiring that public utilities provide safe and reliable electrical service within their service areas do not constitute "lawful requirements for alteration of the use" under ORS 215.130(5) sufficient to mandate county approval of proposed alterations to upgrade the capacity of a nonconforming electrical transmission line. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Minor relocations of nonconforming electrical transmission line poles that do not alter the nature or geographic extent of the line are not "alterations" for purposes of a code provision that requires the applicant for verification of a nonconforming use to demonstrate that alterations made since the date the use became nonconforming complied with applicable criteria. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a distribution line was added to a nonconforming electrical transmission line, the hearings officer must consider whether that additional line is an "alteration" of the nonconforming use, under a code provision that requires the applicant for verification of a nonconforming use to demonstrate that alterations made since the date the use became nonconforming complied with applicable criteria. Cyrus v. Deschutes County, 46 Or LUBA 703 (2004).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Combining two smaller service areas on the subject property into one larger service area does not constitute an alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use, absent evidence that the combined area significantly exceeds the total geographic extent or intensity of the former separate areas. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Tearing a structure down to the foundations and rebuilding it does not constitute maintaining an "existing structure" in "good repair" for purposes of verifying a nonconforming structure under ORS 215.130(5), even if a few original timbers are reused. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Noise from a nonconforming racetrack use is an adverse impact of that use, not part of the use itself. Reductions in noise due to technological improvements since the time the racetrack became nonconforming cannot be applied to offset increases in the intensity of racetrack operations, for purposes of verifying the scope and intensity of the nonconforming use at the time it became nonconforming. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 215.130(5) through (11) recognizes (1) "alterations" to a nonconforming use, (2) maintenance of existing structures associated with the use in good repair, and (3) restoration or replacement of a nonconforming use made necessary by fire or other casualty. The statute does not include an implicit fourth category of changes to nonconforming uses that reduce adverse impacts from that use. Such changes are "alterations" that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Maintenance of existing structures associated with a nonconforming use in good repair under ORS 215.130(5) includes incremental replacement of structural components, at least where the structure as a whole is not substantively replaced and the installed components are similar in function to those replaced. Such incremental replacements are not alterations that require county review and approval under ORS 215.130(9). Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A decision that analyzes numerous aspects of a proposed alteration of a nonconforming use compared to the historic use of the property is sufficient to establish the scope and nature of the nonconforming use where the petitioner does not challenge that analysis. Ankarberg v. Clackamas County, 41 Or LUBA 504 (2002).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A proposal to reconstruct a 35,987-square-foot fruit processing facility with a 46,856-square-foot facility, with extensive new paving, driveway and septic facilities, is properly regarded as an expansion or alteration rather than replacement of the smaller facility. Hiebenthal v. Polk County, 41 Or LUBA 316 (2002).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A determination by a hearings officer that, based on conflicting testimony and evidence, the impacts from a proposed alteration to a nonconforming use would be greater than the allowed nonconforming use does not allow opponents to "effectively veto" the alteration, where the decision identifies the evidence considered by the hearings officer and articulates the reasons why the hearings officer found certain testimony more credible than other testimony. Hal's Construction, Inc. v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 616 (2001).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. The county may not rely on a previous decision approving design review for a 50-dog kennel to establish the existence of nonconforming use rights for intervenors' current kennel operations. Under ORS 215.130, before the county may grant intervenors an alteration to a nonconforming use, intervenors must satisfy their burden of establishing the existence of that nonconforming use. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 32 Or LUBA 240 (1996).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. The actual use of the subject property when restrictive regulations were applied determines the extent of the protected nonconforming use right, not the owner's intent in purchasing the property. Any alteration in the nature or extent of the nonconforming use must satisfy applicable statutory and local standards for the alteration of a nonconforming use. Nehoda v. Coos County, 29 Or LUBA 251 (1995).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. In determining whether to approve a proposed use as an alteration of a nonconforming use, where the local government has not previously determined that a nonconforming use exists, the local government must determine (1) whether the use was lawfully established when restrictive zoning was first applied; (2) the nature and extent of such use when it became nonconforming; (3) whether the use has been discontinued or abandoned; and (4) whether any proposed alteration of the nonconforming use complies with standards governing alterations of nonconforming uses. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a local government determines a nonconforming use of the subject property exists together with approving an alteration of that nonconforming use, the local government's description of the nature and extent of the nonconforming use must be specific enough to provide an adequate basis for determining which aspects of the proposal constitute an alteration of the nonconforming use and for comparing the impacts of the proposal to the impacts of the nonconforming use. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. It is unreasonable for a local hearings officer to interpret a code provision prohibiting "unit enlargements or expansions" of existing mobile home parks unless they are "made to conform substantially with all requirements for new construction" as inherently inapplicable to any proposed alteration of a nonconforming mobile home park, because such an interpretation would make this code provision a nullity. Tylka v. Clackamas County, 28 Or LUBA 417 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A local government generally must make four inquiries in determining if an existing use has a right to continue as a nonconforming use. Did the use lawfully exist when restrictive zoning was first applied? What was the nature and extent of the use when it became nonconforming? Has the use since been discontinued or abandoned? If the nature and extent of the present use represents an alteration of that in existence when the use became nonconforming, does the alteration comply with the standards governing alteration of nonconforming uses? Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. At a minimum, a county's determination of the scope and nature of a nonconforming use must be precise enough to avoid improperly limiting the right to continue that use or improperly allowing an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use without subjecting the alteration or expansion to any standards which restrict alterations or expansions. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. When a local government determines a use is a nonconforming use, it must establish the parameters of the nonconforming use. Any changes in the nonconforming use after it became nonconforming, are governed by the code provisions controlling changes of nonconforming uses, not by former code performance standards applicable to the use before it became nonconforming. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. It is within a county's authority under ORS 215.130(5), (6) and (9) to adopt code provisions treating "replacement" of a nonconforming structure as a potentially allowable alteration of a nonconforming use, so long as the code requires that the replacement reasonably continues the nonconforming use and has no greater adverse impact on the neighborhood. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 283 (1993).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where petitioners referred several times during local proceedings to a nonconforming parking lot as having only 22 spaces, petitioners did not waive their right to challenge a city decision approving changes in the nonconforming parking lot to allow 32 spaces. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a city decision includes findings suggesting the city thought it was allowing a change in a nonconforming parking lot without increasing the number of parking spaces, and those findings are not supported by substantial evidence, but the decision makes it clear that the city's basis for concluding the criteria governing changes in nonconforming uses were met did not depend on the number of parking spaces when the parking lot first became nonconforming, the decision will be affirmed. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Adding an additional fuel storage facility to an airport fuel farm is a type of alteration which reasonably continues the existing nonconforming fuel farm use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Under ORS 215.130(5) and (9) and similarly worded local regulations, if a proposed alteration (including an expansion) of a nonconforming use is of a type that "reasonably continues" the nonconforming use, it may be allowed so long as it will have no greater adverse impact on the surrounding neighborhood than the existing nonconforming use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 215.130(5) and (9) provide a limited authorization for counties to approve the expansion of nonconforming uses that, by definition, are contrary to provisions of county plans and land use regulations and, therefore, must be construed narrowly. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. That a proposed alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use will increase the potential for fire and explosion constitutes a "greater adverse impact on the neighborhood" within the meaning of ORS 215.130(9). Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Business related changes in the volume or intensity of a use generally do not constitute an impermissible change in a nonconforming use, where such changes are attributable to market growth or fluctuation in business conditions and are not accompanied by changes in the nature of the use or structural alterations. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a nonconforming use is significantly reduced in scope by relocating significant aspects of the use to another location for two years, the relocation represents a partial interruption or discontinuance of the nonconforming use, and the property owner may not, five years later, unilaterally resume the nonconforming use at its former scope and intensity. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where a previous local decision approved alteration of a nonconforming use for only two years, a request to remove that limitation is a request for a new approval for alteration of a nonconforming use, and the local government must apply its code criteria for alteration of a nonconforming use to such a request. Scott v. Josephine County, 22 Or LUBA 82 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. ORS 215.130, and county regulations adopted pursuant thereto, provide limited authorization for counties to approve alterations to nonconforming uses which are contrary to provisions of their comprehensive plans and land use regulations. Therefore, plan policies are not approval standards for alteration of a nonconforming use. Scott v. Josephine County, 22 Or LUBA 82 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. The nature of a city's obligation to adopt findings in support of its approval of a modification of a "nonconforming situation" depends on the scope of the modification approved. Strawn v. City of Albany, 21 Or LUBA 172 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. A city is not required to adopt findings explaining why structural modifications to a "nonconforming situation" are consistent with standards governing such structural modifications, where the disputed structural modifications are neither proposed by the applicant nor approved by the city. Strawn v. City of Albany, 21 Or LUBA 172 (1991).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Expansion of the lawful nonconforming park use of a four-acre parcel to an adjoining 11-acre parcel not already subject to such nonconforming use does not "reasonably continue" the park use of the four-acre parcel and cannot be considered an "alteration" of the existing nonconforming use. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

36.5 Nonconforming Uses – Alteration/Change. Where the local code provides that any change in a nonconforming use which results in emissions having greater adverse impacts constitutes an alteration of such nonconforming use and, therefore, requires a conditional use permit, it is error for the local government to decide that a proposed change to an existing nonconforming use does not require a conditional use permit without finding that the resulting emissions will not have greater adverse impacts. Bloomer v. Baker County, 19 Or LUBA 319 (1990).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. While conditional use standards are not directly applicable in determining the nature and extent of a nonconforming use, in conducting a nonconforming use verification, it is not error, and, in fact, it may be necessary, to contrast the nature and extent of the nonconforming use with the restrictions and regulations that would otherwise apply to determine which discrete aspects or components of the use are conforming and cannot thereafter become nonconforming without seeking approval for an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use. Scenic Fruit Company, LLC v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 360 (2020).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. While a circuit court has exclusive authority to modify a 1976 decree recognizing a vested right to development, where in 2013 the applicant seeks county approval to alter or expand that vested right and the county enters into a stipulation with the applicant approving the proposed alteration or expansion, that the circuit court agrees to modify the 1976 decree to reflect the stipulation does not change the fact that the stipulation itself is an alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use, and hence a land use decision subject to LUBA's exclusive jurisdiction. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 38 (2016).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A stipulation entered into between a vested rights holder and a county that (1) revives a right to construct several buildings that had otherwise expired, (2) authorizes development in a different part of the property than formerly authorized, (3) approves a 200-unit hotel as a previously authorized "lodge with bunkhouse," and (4) declares that all development allowed under the stipulation is allowed notwithstanding county land use regulations to the contrary is, in effect, a decision to approve alterations or expansions to a nonconforming use, and therefore the county must apply the statutory and code standards applicable to alterations and expansions to a nonconforming use. Rogue Advocates v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 38 (2016).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. ORS 197.015(10)(b)(H)(ii) excludes from the definition of "land use decision" any land use compatibility statements determining that the proposed state agency action is "allowed without review" under local comprehensive plan and regulations. However, that exclusion is not met where the proposed state agency action is to expand the septic system for a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park, and the expansion is accomplished by verifying and altering the scope of the nonconforming use, which necessarily requires discretionary review. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Nothing in the current language of ORS 215.130, governing non-conforming uses, prohibits a local government from authorizing an expansion of a lawful nonconforming use onto an adjacent property. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. ORS 215.130(5) provides that a county shall approve an alteration of a nonconforming use that is necessary to comply with any lawful requirement for alteration in the use, and prohibits counties from conditioning an alteration that is necessary to comply with state or local health or safety requirements. Where the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) threatens enforcement against a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park and requires the park to fix its failing septic system to avoid health hazards, the alteration qualifies as both a "lawful requirement" and "health and safety" type of alterations. That the applicant has some choice in how the required septic improvements are designed does not disqualify the alterations as "lawful requirement" or "health and safety" types of alterations. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A condition of a 1996 decision verifying a nonconforming manufactured dwelling park that prohibits "further expansion" of the park is not intended to prohibit expansion of the septic system that serves the existing approved dwellings, where the number or type of dwellings or uses served by the septic system is not expanded. Campbell v. Columbia County, 67 Or LUBA 53 (2013).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. To preserve an issue under the particular terms of a superseded ordinance governing nonconforming uses, it is insufficient to make general arguments that the right to expand the nonconforming use had been lost through abandonment or discontinuance. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A petitioner adequately raises the issue of whether a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use was lost through discontinuance based on common law and local code provisions, notwithstanding that most of petitioner's arguments below were based on a statute that applies only to counties, where the petitioner's discontinuance argument was not limited to the statute, and the applicant understood petitioner to be raising discontinuance under other authorities and responded to the issue. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Remand is necessary where a city concludes that an applicant has a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use, but the city fails to resolve issues fairly raised below regarding whether the vested right has been lost through discontinuance under the common law cases that the city's vested right conclusion rests upon, or through the city's nonconforming use code. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. For purposes of applying the expenditure/project ratio test in Clackamas County v. Holmes, comparing actual expenditures to date to total project cost, it is unnecessary for the applicant to submit evidence of the actual amount of expenditures to construct a 72,000-square-foot retail store or evidence of the cost to complete the expanded 102,000-square-foot store, because by any measure the actual expenditures to date to construct the 72,000-square-foot store would far exceed the expenditures to complete the 102,000-square-foot store. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Even if a prior conditional use permit implicitly approved reconstruction of the first floor of an existing building used for a nonconforming use, failure to appeal the prior decision would not necessarily preclude petitioner from arguing on appeal of a subsequent building permit to reconstruct the first floor that the building permit requires nonconforming use review, where the first floor plan authorized in the building permit approval proposes expansions and alterations not depicted on the first floor plan submitted as part of the prior conditional use application. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Merely because some aspects of a proposed expansion/alteration of a nonconforming use are necessary to comply with Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) requirements and thus allowed without nonconforming use review does not mean that other aspects of the proposal that are not related to ADA requirements are exempt from nonconforming use review. VanSpeybroeck v. Tillamook County, 56 Or LUBA 184 (2008).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A city is not required to interpret traditional variance language ("practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship") in accordance with the traditional strict meaning of that language, particularly when that language is not used as part of the city's variance code but instead was borrowed from the variance context to be used as a test for expanding nonconforming uses. Azore Enterprises, LLC v. City of Hillsboro, 56 Or LUBA 422 (2008).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Findings that there is no practical commercial use of an isolated portion of a parcel, absent expansion of a nonconforming use on the parcel, are sufficient to demonstrate that the expansion is justified based on "practical difficulty" or "unnecessary hardship." Azore Enterprises, LLC v. City of Hillsboro, 56 Or LUBA 422 (2008).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A city is not required to find that the practical difficulty or unnecessary hardship that justifies expansion of a non-conforming use is not "self-inflicted," where nothing in the applicable code provisions requires such a finding. Azore Enterprises, LLC v. City of Hillsboro, 56 Or LUBA 422 (2008).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A planning staff decision that a proposed crematory expansion to a nonconforming mortuary use is an outright permitted use in a residential zone will be remanded, where the decision does not explain the basis for that conclusion and the city's code appears to prohibit expansions of nonconforming uses. Hallowell v. City of Independence, 53 Or LUBA 165 (2006).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Combining two smaller service areas on the subject property into one larger service area does not constitute an alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use, absent evidence that the combined area significantly exceeds the total geographic extent or intensity of the former separate areas. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Noise from a nonconforming racetrack use is an adverse impact of that use, not part of the use itself. Reductions in noise due to technological improvements since the time the racetrack became nonconforming cannot be applied to offset increases in the intensity of racetrack operations, for purposes of verifying the scope and intensity of the nonconforming use at the time it became nonconforming. Leach v. Lane County, 45 Or LUBA 580 (2003).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A proposal to reconstruct a 35,987-square-foot fruit processing facility with a 46,856-square-foot facility, with extensive new paving, driveway and septic facilities, is properly regarded as an expansion or alteration rather than replacement of the smaller facility. Hiebenthal v. Polk County, 41 Or LUBA 316 (2002).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A finding that a proposed church expansion doubling the capacity of the church will not have greater adverse traffic impacts is inadequate, where the finding relies solely on the church's current plan to consolidate multiple daily services into a single service, and fails to explain why concentrating traffic from multiple services will not result in greater impacts or to address the possibility that future growth in church membership associated with the expansion may require additional services. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A code standard requiring that expansion of existing structures be supported by the "same improvements" is not reasonably interpreted to allow expansion only where the original unimproved septic system supports the structure. The standard is more reasonably read to allow expansion supported by an upgraded septic system, as long as it is not a different septic system. Weaver v. Linn County, 40 Or LUBA 203 (2001).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A property owner may not decrease the scope and intensity of a nonconforming use to minimal levels for 20 years, and then resume the nonconforming use at the scope and intensity that existed at the time it became nonconforming, absent evidence that fluctuations in scope and intensity are a product of seasonal or other business changes rather than a decrease in scope and intensity for other reasons that remained relatively constant for a long period of time. Marquam Farms Corp. v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 392 (1999).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. At a minimum, a county's determination of the scope and nature of a nonconforming use must be precise enough to avoid improperly limiting the right to continue that use or improperly allowing an alteration or expansion of the nonconforming use without subjecting the alteration or expansion to any standards that restrict alterations or expansions. Spurgin v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 383 (1994).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. A county can establish procedures for determinations concerning nonconforming uses as part of its zoning ordinance and, if it does so, can require parties to seek a determination regarding the existence or expansion of a nonconforming use through such zoning ordinance procedures, rather than allowing such issues to be initially determined in the county's code enforcement process. Watson v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 164 (1994).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Where a city decision includes findings suggesting the city thought it was allowing a change in a nonconforming parking lot without increasing the number of parking spaces, and those findings are not supported by substantial evidence, but the decision makes it clear that the city's basis for concluding the criteria governing changes in nonconforming uses were met did not depend on the number of parking spaces when the parking lot first became nonconforming, the decision will be affirmed. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. LUBA will defer to a local government's interpretation of its own ordinance, that expansion of a nonconforming use onto property not currently utilized by the nonconforming use is not authorized, where that interpretation is not contrary to the express words or policy of the ordinance. Leopold v. City of Milwaukie, 24 Or LUBA 246 (1992).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Because a nonconforming use is tied to the land on which it was lawfully established, it essentially belongs to the property owner, and there is no inherent reason why a tenant, with the permission of the property owner, may not apply to the local government for permission to expand the nonconforming use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Under ORS 215.130(5) and (9) and similarly worded local regulations, if a proposed alteration (including an expansion) of a nonconforming use is of a type that "reasonably continues" the nonconforming use, it may be allowed so long as it will have no greater adverse impact on the surrounding neighborhood than the existing nonconforming use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Whether a proposed expansion of an existing nonconforming use would have fewer adverse impacts than uses which are permitted in the zoning district is irrelevant to determining compliance with the requirement of ORS 215.130(9) that the proposed expansion will have no greater adverse impact on the surrounding neighborhood than the existing nonconforming use. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. ORS 215.130(5) and (9) provide a limited authorization for counties to approve the expansion of nonconforming uses which, by definition, are contrary to provisions of county plans and land use regulations and, therefore, must be construed narrowly. Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. That a proposed alteration or expansion of a nonconforming use will increase the potential for fire and explosion constitutes a "greater adverse impact on the neighborhood" within the meaning of ORS 215.130(9). Bertea/Aviation, Inc. v. Benton County, 22 Or LUBA 424 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Business related changes in the volume or intensity of a use generally do not constitute an impermissible change in a nonconforming use, where such changes are attributable to market growth or fluctuation in business conditions and are not accompanied by changes in the nature of the use or structural alterations. Coonse v. Crook County, 22 Or LUBA 138 (1991).

36.6 Nonconforming Uses – Expansion. Expansion of the lawful nonconforming park use of a four-acre parcel to an adjoining 11-acre parcel not already subject to such nonconforming use does not "reasonably continue" the park use of the four-acre parcel and cannot be considered an "alteration" of the existing nonconforming use. Komning v. Grant County, 20 Or LUBA 355 (1990).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Where a county code provision provides that a nonconforming use may not be resumed if there is a "discontinuance" for a period greater than one year, the county board of commissioners does not err in interpreting the undefined term "discontinuance" by resorting to the dictionary definition and in applying that interpretation to conclude that a property owner who is actively pursuing permits to complete repairs and upgrades that are required for health and safety reasons, and who is actively responding to appeals of those permits, has not discontinued a nonconforming use. Such an interpretation and application of the term "discontinuance" in the county code provision is not contrary to the term "interruption" in ORS 215.130(7)(a). Campbell v. Columbia County, 81 Or LUBA 385 (2020).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Where a city's zoning ordinance allows damaged nonconforming structures to be restored, the city does not err in interpreting its zoning ordinance not to allow a damaged nonconforming carport to be entirely removed and replaced with a taller bulkier carport that occupies the same footprint as the old carport. Hatton v. City of Eugene, 53 Or LUBA 583 (2007).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Where a nonconforming clubhouse is destroyed by fire and the county requires a replacement structure to include a new septic system, installation of a new septic system is sufficient to commence "restoration" or "replacement" of the nonconforming use, within the meaning of ORS 215.130(6). Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. A building permit is not an absolute requirement for commencing replacement or restoration of a nonconforming use within one year under ORS 215.130(6), where installation of a septic system is sufficient to commence replacement or restoration of a nonconforming clubhouse that was destroyed by fire and the county does not require a building permit to install a septic system. Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Once restoration or replacement of a nonconforming use is begun, ORS 215.130(7)(a) requires that restoration or replacement not be interrupted for a period of more than one year. Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Where a nonconforming clubhouse is destroyed by fire and restoration or replacement is commenced within 10 years is periodic fundraising activity to complete the restoration, the right to restore or replace the nonconforming clubhouse is lost under ORS 215.130(7)(a). Jordan v. Columbia County, 42 Or LUBA 341 (2002).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. A decision that approves the rebuilding of a 13,000-square-foot building with a 15,000-square-foot building in a different location is not a "replacement" of a nonconforming use, as that word is used in ORS 215.130(6), even though the new building will require fewer workers to perform the same tasks that were performed in the smaller building. Hiebenthal v. Polk County, 41 Or LUBA 316 (2002).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Application of a local zoning ordinance to allow a nonconforming use that has been interrupted or abandoned to be resumed, violates ORS 215.130(7) and must be reversed. Moore v. Coos County, 31 Or LUBA 347 (1996).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. It is within a county's authority under ORS 215.130(5), (6) and (9) to adopt code provisions treating "replacement" of a nonconforming structure as a potentially allowable alteration of a nonconforming use, so long as the code requires that the replacement reasonably continues the nonconforming use and has no greater adverse impact on the neighborhood. McKay Creek Valley Assoc. v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 283 (1993).

36.7 Nonconforming Uses – Restoration/Replacement. Where, under the county code, a lawfully established existing dwelling is not a nonconforming use in a particular zone, even though a new dwelling is not a permitted use in that zone, replacement of an existing dwelling is not the replacement of a nonconforming use subject to the restrictions of ORS 215.130(6). Heceta Water District v. Lane County, 24 Or LUBA 402 (1993).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. The scope of a nonconforming use is confined to the uses that occur on the subject property; off-site activities, i.e., those that occur on other properties, such as leaving the property to purchase supplies or inputs for the nonconforming use, play no role in verifying the existence, nature, etc. of the nonconforming use on the subject property and are not subject to analysis or regulation as part of the nonconforming use. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a 30-foot setback requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Even if a structure qualifies as a nonconforming structure with regard to a general 20-foot setback required in the applicable zoning district, that does not obviate a land use code off-street parking requirement for schools, where the use of the structure is to be converted for the first time to a school. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Where LUBA concludes that applicable local nonconforming use law might not regulate a change from one conforming use to another conforming use in a nonconforming structure, but no party challenges a hearings officer's conclusion that local nonconforming use law does regulate such a change of use, LUBA will consider petitioner's challenge to the adequacy of the hearings officer's findings that an existing structure qualifies as a nonconforming use and that the proposal may be approved as an alteration of a nonconforming use. However, LUBA will not preclude the hearings officer from considering on remand whether the nonconforming use regulations apply in that circumstance. Kaimanu v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 217 (2014).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. A city correctly interprets its development code to permit a change of use, without requiring that the nonconforming development on the site be brought into conformance with current development code standards, where the land use code expressly distinguishes between nonconforming uses and nonconforming development and the permit applicant proposed no change in the nonconforming development, only a change from one permitted use to another permitted use. Nielsen v. City of Gresham, 66 Or LUBA 24 (2012).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Where a local government decision appears to authorize a nonconforming use and additional dwelling without notice or findings to support those approvals, LUBA will remand the decision. DLCD v. Curry County, 33 Or LUBA 728 (1997).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. When a local government determines a use is a nonconforming use, it must establish the parameters of the nonconforming use. Any changes in the nonconforming use after it became nonconforming, are governed by the code provisions controlling changes of nonconforming uses, not by former code performance standards applicable to the use before it became nonconforming. Spathas v. City of Portland, 28 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Although ORS 92.017 requires that legally established lots continue to be recognized as individual, separately transferable lots, even where subsequent changes in land use regulations make those lots nonconforming, a local government may impose land use regulations requiring that two or more of such nonconforming lots be combined for development purposes. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. A local government interpretation of a code "lot of record" provision as allowing legally created but now substandard lots to be separately developed if adjoining lots are held in separate ownership or if the lots were shown on a plat of record prior to the date the relevant zoning requirements took effect is reasonable, and LUBA will defer to that interpretation. Campbell v. Multnomah County, 25 Or LUBA 479 (1993).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Where a local government correctly determines that a parking lot is a nonconforming use, and was not automatically made an approved conditional use under applicable code provisions, it commits no error in failing to apply plan and code provisions that would apply to expansion of the parking lot if it were correctly viewed as a conditional use. Glisan Street Assoc., Ltd. v. City of Portland, 25 Or LUBA 116 (1993).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. The statutory provisions set out at ORS 215.130 governing regulation of nonconforming uses apply to counties, not to cities. Hood River Sand v. City of Mosier, 24 Or LUBA 381 (1993).

36.8 Nonconforming Uses – Regulation. Where a challenged ordinance requires discontinuation of a use after expiration of a five-year amortization period, but also allows a property owner to apply for hardship relief if such property owner can substantiate that an investment made exclusively in the nonconforming use cannot be adequately amortized within the five-year period specified by such ordinance, property owners have no basis to contend their property has been taken until they have applied for and been denied the hardship relief. Cope v. City of Cannon Beach, 23 Or LUBA 233 (1992).

37. Vested Rights. Where LUBA concludes that a local government's conclusion that an application did not meet an applicable approval criterion was a valid basis for denial, although any error committed with respect to alternative or independent bases for denial would generally not provide a basis for reversal or remand, remand is nonetheless required where LUBA also concludes that the local government failed to address a threshold argument from the applicant that, if correct, would prevent the local government from applying criteria that would prohibit approval of the application. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

37. Vested Rights. A county decision determining vested rights involves the "discretionary approval of a proposed development of land," and is therefore a "permit" decision under ORS 215.402(4). Such decisions must be processed under procedures consistent with ORS 215.416, regardless of whether a party's request for the "permit" decision is accompanied by requests for non-"permit" decisions, whether the request is labeled or easily identifiable as an "application" for a "permit," or whether the party affirmatively requests the required procedures. Gillette v. Lincoln County, 79 Or LUBA 549 (2019).

37. Vested Rights. LUBA will not resolve assignments of error challenging an alternative theory of approval, vested rights, that the parties argued about below, but which the final decision maker did not consider. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 299 (2016).

37. Vested Rights. LUBA will remand rather than reverse a county decision that erroneously concludes that a 2005 permit is still valid to authorize issuance of building permits for what is now a nonconforming use, where the applicant originally filed for a vested rights determination, and planning staff originally evaluated the application as one for alteration of a nonconforming use, but those theories were not addressed in the county's final decision. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 299 (2016).

37. Vested Rights. Where the applicant for a vested right determination argued below that it had not lost its vested right and argued for an interpretation of the vested rights standard that would result in a conclusion that the vested right had not been discontinued, on appeal to LUBA the applicant has not waived the ability to challenge the interpretation the local government adopted to support its conclusion that the vested right had been discontinued, even if the applicant's specific arguments against that interpretation were not raised below. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hood River, 72 Or LUBA 1 (2015).

37. Vested Rights. Because a vested right is a species of nonconforming use, the general principles of nonconforming use (including discontinuance) apply to vested rights determinations, at least in counties subject to ORS 215.130. Under ORS 215.130, to determine whether a nonconforming use or vested right to complete a nonconforming has been lost through discontinuance, the local government must look back in time. Depending on the facts, it is possible that a nonconforming use or vested right could be lost through discontinuance prior to the date that the applicant seeks verification of the nonconforming use or vested right. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hood River, 72 Or LUBA 1 (2015).

37. Vested Rights. LUBA will affirm a city governing body's code interpretation to the effect that a vested right to complete what will be a nonconforming use is lost through discontinuance, if the applicant makes no effort toward completion of the use during a 12-month period, where that interpretation is consistent with the express language, purpose and policy underlying the code provision. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Hood River, 72 Or LUBA 1 (2015).

37. Vested Rights. Under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49 (2007), a property owner may complete construction of a use that was authorized under a previously issued Ballot Measure 37 (2004) waiver, if the property owner can establish that he or she has a common law vested right to complete construction of a use that was authorized under a Ballot Measure 37 waiver. Under ORS 195.318(1), LUBA would likely not have jurisdiction to review a vested right determination under Subsection 5(3) of Measure 49, however, where the property owner claims to have a vested right based on a previously issued building permit, not a Ballot Measure 37 waiver, LUBA has review jurisdiction over a county decision that the property owner does not have a vested right under the building permit. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

37. Vested Rights. Under the Court of Appeals' decision in Fountain Village Development Co. v. Multnomah Cty., 176 Or App 213, 224, 31 P3d 458 (2001), statutory and local government regulations that specify that nonconforming use rights are lost if the nonconforming use is abandoned, interrupted or discontinued for the requisite period of time also apply to vested rights, which are properly viewed as inchoate nonconforming uses. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

37. Vested Rights. The right that the holder of a vested right has is the right to continue "construction" of a proposed use until construction of that proposed use is complete and the vested right (an inchoate nonconforming use) is converted to a nonconforming use that is fully established. It is the continued "construction" of an inchoate nonconforming use that must not be abandoned, discontinued or interrupted for more than the time specified for nonconforming uses, to avoid losing a vested right to continue construction of that vested right. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

37. Vested Rights. It is not inconsistent with ORS 215.130(5) to interpret the ORS 215.130(5) requirement that a nonconforming use not be abandoned or discontinued for a longer period than specified under local law to apply in the context of a vested right to complete construction of a use to require that "substantial efforts to finish the development" of the use not be abandoned or discontinued for the specified period. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

37. Vested Rights. Where a county finds that a property owner discontinued construction of a house for at least one year during a 30-year period, even if the property owner is given the benefit of the doubt in his contentions that over that 30-year period at unspecified times he repaired concrete scaling and did some plumbing work, framing, grading and road construction, the county's finding is supported by substantial evidence where other evidence shows there was almost no construction activity during that 30-year period. Crosley v. Columbia County, 65 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

37 Vested Rights. A site plan decision that approves (1) a building and (2) a "future expansion" of that same building is a single building, not separate phases or components of a multi-phase development, for purposes of determining whether there is a vested right to construct the expansion. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

37 Vested Rights. To preserve an issue under the particular terms of a superseded ordinance governing nonconforming uses, it is insufficient to make general arguments that the right to expand the nonconforming use had been lost through abandonment or discontinuance. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

37 Vested Rights. A petitioner adequately raises the issue of whether a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use was lost through discontinuance based on common law and local code provisions, notwithstanding that most of petitioner's arguments below were based on a statute that applies only to counties, where the petitioner's discontinuance argument was not limited to the statute, and the applicant understood petitioner to be raising discontinuance under other authorities and responded to the issue. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

37 Vested Rights. Remand is necessary where a city concludes that an applicant has a vested right to construct an expansion of a nonconforming use, but the city fails to resolve issues fairly raised below regarding whether the vested right has been lost through discontinuance under the common law cases that the city's vested right conclusion rests upon, or through the city's nonconforming use code. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

37 Vested Rights. For purposes of applying the expenditure/project ratio test in Clackamas County v. Holmes, comparing actual expenditures to date to total project cost, it is unnecessary for the applicant to submit evidence of the actual amount of expenditures to construct a 72,000-square-foot retail store or evidence of the cost to complete the expanded 102,000-square-foot store, because by any measure the actual expenditures to date to construct the 72,000-square-foot store would far exceed the expenditures to complete the 102,000-square-foot store. Hood River Citizens for a Local Economy v. City of Hood River, 65 Or LUBA 392 (2012).

37. Vested Rights. A preliminary subdivision plat approval decision that post-dates a vested rights determination under Measure 49 is a land use decision subject to LUBA's review and is not a decision concerning the "nature and extent of [just] compensation" under Measure 49. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

37. Vested Rights. Under Clackamas County v. Holmes, 265 Or 193, 197, 508 P2d 190 (1973), and the appellate court cases that have followed and elaborated on Holmes, where a property owner commences development of his or her property at a time when there are no land use laws or at a time when the development is permitted under existing land use laws, that property owner can achieve a right to continue and complete that development, notwithstanding that land use laws that would preclude that development are enacted during the development process and before development is complete. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

37. Vested Rights. A common law vested right under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49 will shield a claimant from land use laws that were waived under Measure 37; but that common law vested right will not shield a claimant from land use laws that were not waived under Measure 37 and therefore remain applicable to the claimant's development. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

37. Vested Rights. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007 had already received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, then they may proceed to complete the development that was begun under Measure 37. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

37. Vested Rights. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007 had not yet received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, they must still obtain any permits or other approvals that are required under land use laws that were not waived by their Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

37. Vested Rights. A vested right based upon substantial expenditures toward construction of a building is properly viewed as an inchoate nonconforming use, not as a distinct entitlement immune from all limitations applicable to nonconforming uses. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

37. Vested Rights. Vested rights, like nonconforming use rights, may be lost where the holder fails to diligently exercise those rights, i.e., the holder must continue development of the nonconforming use and not abandon or discontinue efforts to complete development. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

37. Vested Rights. Statutory provisions governing nonconforming uses at ORS 215.130 also govern vested rights, including the delegation of authority to counties to establish criteria under which such rights have been interrupted or abandoned. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

37. Vested Rights. Abandonment of a vested right, like abandonment of a nonconforming use, requires evidence of intent to relinquish a known right. Where the only evidence relevant to intent shows that the landowner maintained the uncompleted structure during the relevant period, the county errs in determining that the landowner has abandoned the right to complete and use the structure. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

37. Vested Rights. Where the county views a vested right to be discontinued under its code if there is discontinuance of substantial effort to finish the development for any reason for more than two years, evidence that the landowner maintained an uncompleted structure but made no effort to finish the structure for three years was sufficient to support a finding of discontinuance. Fountain Village Dev. Co. v. Multnomah County, 39 Or LUBA 207 (2000).

37. Vested Rights. That a use is authorized under a zoning ordinance or granted building or zoning permits does not, alone, shield the use from later-adopted zoning ordinance amendments that prohibit the use or impose a requirement for additional permits. Rochlin v. Multnomah County, 35 Or LUBA 333 (1998).

37. Vested Rights. The judicial doctrine of vested rights does not apply to development allowed under a conditional use permit, where the permit is approved under an ordinance obligating the user to commence construction within six months or request an extension from the city. Heidgerken v. Marion County, 35 Or LUBA 313 (1998).

37. Vested Rights. Prior to the creation of LUBA, circuit courts had jurisdiction to declare the existence of vested rights to develop land under previously existing land use regulations. DLCD v. Benton County, 27 Or LUBA 49 (1994).

37. Vested Rights. Claim preclusion applies to preclude relitigation of a claim that has been litigated. Where a party's claim of a vested right to residential use of certain property was determined in a circuit court judgment, to which the local government and other parties to the LUBA appeal were also parties, the local government is precluded from making a new determination on that vested right claim, even if it would otherwise have jurisdiction to do so. Joines v. Linn County, 24 Or LUBA 456 (1993).

37. Vested Rights. In the absence of a code requirement to the contrary, a provision in a local code authorizing the development of a parcel to proceed to completion so long as "substantial construction" occurs within a certain period of time does not require the application of a traditional vested rights analysis. Columbia River Television v. Multnomah County, 24 Or LUBA 82 (1992).

37. Vested Rights. Where the issue on appeal is whether petitioner has a vested right to develop property in a manner inconsistent with current zoning regulations, and the resolution of that issue requires the application of city land use regulations from 1973 to the present, the challenged decision is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Terraces Condo Assoc. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 151 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. Where a local government approved a height variance in 1977, but at that time had no code provision authorizing density transfers or a master plan approval process, the 1977 height variance approval does not also authorize a density transfer or give master plan approval. Terraces Condo Assoc. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 151 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. To establish a vested right to construct 150 units on a particular lot, a local government must determine that qualified expenditures were made toward development of that particular lot at a time when the construction of 150 units on that lot did not require approval from such local government, or were made at a time when the required approvals were given. Terraces Condo Assoc. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA

(1991).

37. Vested Rights. The lawful uses protected from newly enacted regulations include those which do not yet exist, but have proceeded towards completion to a significant degree. In such instances, the property owner is said to have a vested right to complete and continue the development. Schmaltz v. City of Hood River, 22 Or LUBA 115 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. Expenditures considered in determining the existence of a vested right must have been made at a time when the proposed development did not require approvals, or at a time when required approvals were given. Lung v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 302 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. Where property owners have not applied for and obtained a required conditional use permit prior to a change to a more restrictive zone, they cannot acquire a vested right to complete development of a use which required conditional use approval under the original zoning. Lung v. Marion County, 21 Or LUBA 302 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. The expenditures considered in determining the existence of a vested right must be made at a time when the proposed development did not require approvals, or at a time when required approvals were given. Where no local partition approval was given prior to the adoption of an ordinance requiring such approval, the only expenditures which may be considered in a vested rights determination are those made before the effective date of such ordinance. Crone v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 102 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. Evidence that at a time when development was allowed, a landowner placed two homes on the parent parcel and obtained two septic, plumbing and well drilling permits for such parcel, at best, establishes that the landowner contemplated creating two parcels from the parent parcel. However, these expenditures are not "substantially and directly" related to further dividing the parent parcel. Crone v. Clackamas County, 21 Or LUBA 102 (1991).

37. Vested Rights. Under Holmes factor (7) ("ratio of expenditures"), a local government is required to identify and compare the total project cost with only those expenditures that are properly considered in determining the existence of a vested right. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Distinguishing those expenditures properly considered in a determination of the "ratio of expenditures" under Holmes factor (7) requires (1) identification of the time at which the expenditures were made, (2) an analysis of whether the expenditures were made in good faith and lawful when made, and (3) a determination regarding whether the expenditures are directly related to the proposed use of the property. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Expenditures considered in determining the existence of a vested right must be made at a time when the proposed development did not require approvals, or at a time when approvals were given. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. After the Oregon Supreme Court issued a decision determining that Goal 14 must be complied with before the existing zoning of the subject property could be considered lawfully applied, any expenditures made in contemplation of dividing and developing the subject property, consistent with the existing zoning, could not properly be considered in a vested rights determination. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. There is no general rule that all expenditures relating to development of land in Oregon, made in furtherance of a vested right, must have been made before promulgation of the Statewide Planning Goals. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. In the absence of findings, or evidence in the record, which establishes that the price paid for purchase of a 10,000-square-foot parcel was a "premium" or an otherwise unreasonable price to pay to enlarge the parent parcel for the division and development which has already occurred, the purchase price for the 10,000-square-foot lot should not be included in the qualified expenditures used to determine existence of a vested right to create additional parcels developable with three residences. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Where the total qualified expenditures are at most 2,480.68 dollars, total development cost is 126,000 dollars, and the ratio of expenditures to cost is, therefore, at most 1:50, this expenditure total and "ratio of expenditures" under Holmes factor (7) are, as a matter of law, insufficient to demonstrate that the amount of expenditures is "substantial," and do not establish the existence of a vested right. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 249 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Under Holmes factor (7) ("ratio of expenditures"), a local government is required to identify and compare the total project cost with only those expenditures which are properly considered in determining the existence of a vested right. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Distinguishing those expenditures properly considered in a determination of the "ratio of expenditures" under Holmes factor (7) requires (1) identification of the time at which the expenditures were made, (2) an analysis of whether the expenditures were made in good faith and lawful when made, and (3) a determination regarding whether the expenditures are directly related to the proposed use of the property. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. Expenditures considered in determining the existence of a vested right must be made at a time when the proposed development did not require approvals, or at a time when approvals were given. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. After the Oregon Supreme Court issued a decision determining that Goal 14 must be complied with before the existing zoning of the subject property could be considered lawfully applied, any expenditures made in contemplation of dividing and developing the subject property, consistent with the existing zoning, could not properly be considered in a vested rights determination. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. There is no general rule that all expenditures relating to development of land in Oregon, made in furtherance of a vested right, must have been made before promulgation of the Statewide Planning Goals. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

37. Vested Rights. In order to determine the "ratio of expenditures" under Holmes factor (7), a local government must adopt a finding concerning total project cost. DLCD v. Curry County, 19 Or LUBA 237 (1990).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Where an acknowledged comprehensive plan addresses matters relevant to a state agency's program, the state agency is not required to demonstrate compliance with the plan and with the goals under ORS 197.180(1). Schaefer v. OAB, 81 Or LUBA 819 (2020).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. The fact that an overlay zone that a county applies to lands adjacent to an airport extends into a city and the existence of an intergovernmental agreement between the county and the city regarding airport planning coordination do not give the city "planning authority" over the airport and, therefore, do not make the city an "affected city or county" for purposes of OAR 738-130-0015(1), OAR 731-015-0015(2), and those SAC programs. Schaefer v. OAB, 81 Or LUBA 819 (2020).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. A state agency SAC program's identification of "activities" that "significantly affect land use" for purposes of the SAC program does not relate to or answer the jurisdictional question of whether LUBA has jurisdiction over a decision because the decision creates "actual, qualitatively or quantitatively significant impact on present or future land uses" under the "significant impacts" test articulated in Peterson v. City of Klamath Falls, 279 Or 249, 566 P2d 1193 (1977). Schaefer v. OAB, 81 Or LUBA 819 (2020).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Land use regulations that set out approval criteria for commercial composting operations and also state "[a]dditionally, these facilities shall be subject to" DEQ and Metro rules simply advise applicants for county approval of commercial composting facilities that there are other legal requirements that must be satisfied before a composting facility can commence operation. That language does not obligate the county to apply DEQ and Metro rules and find the proposed facility complies with those rules. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. In considering an application to modify an existing conditional use permit for a commercial composting facility under county land use regulations, there is no generally applicable principle that a county must in all cases deny the application unless it can find that the composting facility will be able to comply with existing state standards for such facilities. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Where an interchange area management planning effort was a joint Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT)/city effort, in satisfying its OAR 734-051-0155(5)(c) obligation to coordinate with affected property owners ODOT is not required to repeat the public outreach effort that was made before the city adopted the interchange area management plan. Parker Johnstone Wilsonville Honda v. ODOT, 62 Or LUBA 116 (2010).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Oregon Division of State Lands (DSL) cease and desist orders cannot be categorically dismissed as mere attention-getting devices. However, where a DSL cease and desist order indicates the presence of a "threatened violation," rather than a "violation" of state fill and removal laws, the DSL cease and desist order does not establish the presence of a "documented" violation of state fill and removal laws. Kipfer v. Jackson County, 58 Or LUBA 436 (2009).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Under Ashland Drilling Inc. v. Jackson County, 168 Or App 624, 7 P3d 748 (2000), direct county regulation of wells, water quality and water quantity is preempted, but county land use regulations that simply limit land uses based on their impacts on water resources are not preempted. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. ORS 374.310 provides a very broad grant of authority to the Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT) to condition access permits that are "in the best interest of the public for the protection of the highway or road and the traveling public." Under this broad grant of authority, ODOT's actions may have the indirect effect of delaying local government development approvals, but that delay does not impermissibly encroach on a local government's planning authority. Dept. of Transportation v. City of Eugene, 38 Or LUBA 814 (2000).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. LCDC has authority to adopt administrative rules that limit types of nonfarm uses otherwise allowed by statute. Therefore, OAR 660-033-0020(4), which establishes November 4, 1993, as the date a county must use for determining whether a dwelling exists on a tract for purposes of lot-of-record dwelling, is valid, notwithstanding that it prohibits some lot-of-record dwellings otherwise allowed by ORS 215.710. Bruggere v. Clackamas County, 37 Or LUBA 571 (2000).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Under the county's comprehensive plan, ODOT's initiation of eminent domain proceedings gave it the requisite "ownership" interest in property to file an application for a plan amendment regarding the property, and that interest was not affected, for purposes of the plan amendment, by dismissal of the eminent domain proceeding after the agency's application was deemed complete. Schrock Farms, Inc. v. Linn County, 31 Or LUBA 57 (1996).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. The coordination obligation imposed by Statewide Planning Goal 2 (Land Use Planning), and similarly worded local government comprehensive plan provisions, does not require that a local government accede to every concern expressed by a state agency, but does require that a local government adopt findings responding to legitimate concerns expressed by a state agency. ONRC v. City of Seaside, 29 Or LUBA 39 (1995).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. With regard to siting a lot of record dwelling on high-value farmland, a county does not have authority to require that an Oregon Department of Agriculture hearings officer make determinations other than those specified in ORS 215.705(2)(c). DLCD v. Josephine County, 28 Or LUBA 459 (1994).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. That state agencies may recognize and regulate "combination parks" which include both recreational vehicles and mobile homes occupied on a long-term basis does not mean a local government must adopt comprehensive plan and zoning provisions allowing such combination parks. Jones v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 193 (1994).

38.1 State Agencies – Generally. Where a document was originally drafted by state agency staff, but was never adopted by that agency as an administrative rule, and is applicable to a challenged local government decision only because it is incorporated by reference into the local code, under ORS 197.829 LUBA is neither required nor allowed to give deference to an interpretation of that document by an agency staff member. Furler v. Curry County, 27 Or LUBA 546 (1994).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Where a liquefied natural gas terminal requires both county and federal permits, and the county approves the local permit based on findings that rely on the applicant receiving federal permit approval, but the record indicates that applicant has been denied the federal permit at time of the county approval, the county errs in failing to consider whether the applicant is precluded from obtaining the required federal approval. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 76 Or LUBA 346 (2017).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Issuance of a Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) permit to operate a composting facility does not preempt a county from later concluding, in an application to verify whether the composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use, that the facility is not lawful nonconforming use, where the DEQ permit was issued based on a franchise authorization decision that was on appeal and that did not definitely resolve the issue of whether the composting facility is a lawful nonconforming use. Grabhorn v. Washington County, 73 Or LUBA 27 (2016).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Land use regulations that set out approval criteria for commercial composting operations and also state "[a]dditionally, these facilities shall be subject to" DEQ and Metro rules simply advise applicants for county approval of commercial composting facilities that there are other legal requirements that must be satisfied before a composting facility can commence operation. That language does not obligate the county to apply DEQ and Metro rules and find the proposed facility complies with those rules. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. In considering an application to modify an existing conditional use permit for a commercial composting facility under county land use regulations, there is no generally applicable principle that a county must in all cases deny the application unless it can find that the composting facility will be able to comply with existing state standards for such facilities. Tolbert v. Clackamas County, 70 Or LUBA 388 (2014).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Under OAR 660-031-0040 when renewing a state agency permit the agency is not required to make a determination of compliance with the statewide planning goals, unless the renewal involves a substantial modification or intensification of the permitted activity. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Under OAR 660-018-0050(2), the Department of Environmental Quality's state agency coordination rule, a land use compatibility statement (LUCS) is the primary vehicle to ensure that agency permits are consistent with the statewide planning goals. In circumstances where the state agency coordination rules exempt permit renewals from the requirement to obtain a LUCS, the rules also exempt the agency from the requirement to make a determination that the renewed permit complies with the applicable goals. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. In renewing a discharge permit pursuant to the Department of Environmental Quality's state agency coordination rule, the agency is not required to re-evaluate activities allowed under the existing permit; rather, the agency is required to determine only whether the renewed permit involves a substantial modification or intensification of the permitted activity. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. In renewing a discharge permit under the Department of Environmental Quality's state agency coordination rules, nothing in those rules requires the agency to determine that the renewed permit complies with the statewide planning goals in circumstances where it is unclear that such determinations were made regarding the original permit. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. For purposes of state agency coordination programs, substantial intensification of the permitted activity refers to the regulated activity, not increasing complexity or intensification of the regulatory scheme or program. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. A state agency permit renewal decision that concludes, based on substantial evidence, that the renewed permit does not involve a substantial modification to or intensification of the permitted activity, and thus no land use compatibility statement is required from the affected local government, is not a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction under ORS 197.015(11)(a)(B), because it is not an agency decision with respect to which the agency is required to apply the goals. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. In order to satisfy a local code provision that requires compliance with state agency codes, the city must find which state codes contain approval criteria, and also find that as a matter of law, the applicants are not precluded from obtaining such state agency permits. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Although OAR 660-31-035(1), which governs Class A permits, does not require that an affected local government's compatibility determination either be in writing or be supported by written findings in order to be relied upon by a state agency issuing a permit, the absence of a writing raises the question of whether there actually is a local government determination. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Two factors govern whether a local government's determination of compatibility with its acknowledged plan and regulations, made as part of a state agency approval process, is a "final" decision applying the local government's plan and regulations: (1) the state agency must be required by statute, rule or other authority, to assure that the proposal is compatible with the local government plan and regulations; and (2) the state agency must be authorized by statute, rule or other legal authority to rely on the local government's determination. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Petitioner's sole remedy on appeal from a DSL approval of a fill permit, stated in ORS 196.835, is to request a contested case hearing and, if desired, to appeal to the Court of Appeals from the order issued following the hearing. Citizens for Pub. Accountability v. City of Eugene, 31 Or LUBA 395 (1996).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Conditioning approval on the satisfactory outcome of a separate administrative process does not preclude a finding of compliance with a zoning code standard, as long as compliance is found to be feasible and that finding is based on substantial evidence. McArthur v. Lane County, 31 Or LUBA 309 (1996).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. A local government's determination of compatibility with its acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations, made as part of a state agency permit approval process, is a "final" decision applying the local plan and regulations if (1) the state agency is required, by statute, rule or other legal authority, to assure the permit is compatible with the local plan and regulations; and (2) the state agency is authorized to rely on the local government's determination of compatibility. Knee Deep Cattle Company v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 288 (1994).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Where a local government's statements on a state agency permit land use compatibility form identify the code provisions relied on by the local government and explain the basis for the local government's determination that the subject facility is an outright permitted use, the statements constitute written findings which, under OAR 661-31-035(2), entitle a state agency to rely on the local government's compatibility determination. Knee Deep Cattle Company v. Lane County, 28 Or LUBA 288 (1994).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. ORS 517.890 provides that appeals of provisional surface mining permits are governed by the provisions of "ORS 183.310 to 183.550 for appeals from orders in contested cases." Therefore, regardless of whether contested case procedures were observed in all respects during DOGAMI proceedings governed by ORS 183.480(2) and 183.482, jurisdiction to review DOGAMI's decision lies with the court of appeals, not LUBA. Hood River Sand, Gravel & Readi-Mix v. DOGAMI, 25 Or LUBA 668 (1993).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. ORS 196.825(6) explicitly provides that Division of State Lands removal-fill permit decisions are contested case orders and that appeals of such orders are to the court of appeals, pursuant to ORS 183.482. LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review state agency contested case orders. ORS 197.825(2)(d). Stewart v. Division of State Lands, 25 Or LUBA 565 (1993).

38.2 State Agencies – Permits. Where a local government finds that approval criteria will be met if certain conditions are imposed, and those conditions are requirements to obtain state agency permits, a decision approving the subject application simply requires that there be substantial evidence in the record that the applicant is not precluded from obtaining such state agency permits as a matter of law. Bouman v. Jackson County, 23 Or LUBA 628 (1992).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where an acknowledged comprehensive plan addresses matters relevant to a state agency's program, the state agency is not required to demonstrate compliance with the plan and with the goals under ORS 197.180(1). Schaefer v. OAB, 81 Or LUBA 819 (2020).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. The fact that an overlay zone that a county applies to lands adjacent to an airport extends into a city and the existence of an intergovernmental agreement between the county and the city regarding airport planning coordination do not give the city "planning authority" over the airport and, therefore, do not make the city an "affected city or county" for purposes of OAR 738-130-0015(1), OAR 731-015-0015(2), and those SAC programs. Schaefer v. OAB, 81 Or LUBA 819 (2020).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. An appeal of a LUCS for a DEQ permit for a natural gas pipeline is excluded from LUBA's review under ORS 197.015(10)(b)(H)(ii) and (iii) where the LUCS correctly determines that no future land use reviews are required for some portions of the project and that other portions of the project require future land use reviews, and where the LUCS does not purport to approve or deny those reviews. McCaffree v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 32 (2020).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where a local government issues a LUCS for a DEQ permit for a natural gas pipeline, arguments that the local government denied a petitioner an opportunity to argue against the LUCS and that there is a perceived risk of explosion do not establish that the petitioner is "adversely affected" by the LUCS for purposes of ORS 197.830(3) where the petitioner cites no authority for the claim that they had a right to participate in the LUCS decision and where the LUCS does not authorize any development activity. McCaffree v. City of North Bend, 81 Or LUBA 32 (2020).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. The Land Conservation and Development Commission has adopted OAR 660-031-0026, which identifies state agency permits that must be compatible with local land use regulations, and OAR 660-031-0035, which authorizes state agencies to rely on local land use compatibility statements when issuing such permits. Oregon Liquor Control Commission decisions regarding returnable bottle redemption centers are not listed at OAR 660-031-0026, and therefore a local government planner's checkmark on an OLCC form indicating a redemption center is allowed in the applicable zone is not a land use compatibility statement. Glenwood 2006, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 76 Or LUBA 162 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where a previously executed OLCC form with a box checked is not a final, binding land use decision, it was not appealable to LUBA and in granting design review approval for a returnable bottle redemption center, a city may not rely on that OLCC from to establish that a redemption center is a permitted use in the applicable zone. Glenwood 2006, LLC v. City of Beaverton, 76 Or LUBA 162 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A 1997 land use compatibility statement (LUCS) concluding that a dwelling on forest land is compatible with the county's acknowledged comprehensive plan is not a land use decision that "approves" a dwelling on forest land under the applicable land use standards. A LUCS decision, in itself, does not approve development. At most, it informs a state agency that a proposed use can be approved consistent with the county's comprehensive plan and applicable land use regulations. Eng v. Wallowa County, 76 Or LUBA 432 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. LUBA may consider documents outside the record, including copies of earlier land use decisions regarding the subject property, that are useful in resolving a jurisdictional challenge to the appeal of a land use compatibility statement (LUCS), even in the absence of a motion to take evidence under OAR 661-010-0045. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. An accurate and complete response to a state agency request for a land use compatibility statement may require several determinations, including: (1) characterization of the nature and scope of the proposed land use, (2) whether and how local land use regulations categorize and govern the proposed land use, and (3) whether and what local land use reviews are necessary to construct or operate the proposed use. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A land use compatibility statement (LUCS) concluding that a county's land use regulations do not regulate the use of groundwater does not answer the question posed by the state agency's LUCS request, which is whether the county's land use regulations govern the land use to be served by the proposed use of groundwater for which the applicant seeks a state agency permit. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where a land use compatibility statement does not identify the land use to be served by proposed storage of groundwater in two reservoirs, and on appeal the applicant does not identify what land use is served by the groundwater, LUBA cannot resolve the dispute over whether the decision is excluded from LUBA's jurisdiction under ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A), for decisions applying land use regulations that do not require interpretation or the exercise of legal judgment, because it is not clear what land use regulations apply. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where a landowner seeks a state agency permit to store groundwater in two reservoirs recently constructed without county approval, and the state agency requests the county to provide a land use compatibility statement (LUCS) to determine whether the land use served by the groundwater complies with county land use regulations, the scope of the land use to be evaluated under the LUCS includes the legal status of the two reservoirs that the applicant proposes to fill with groundwater. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where on appeal of a land use compatibility statement (LUCS) concluding that no county land use regulations apply to the proposed storage of groundwater in two reservoirs, the applicant fails to demonstrate that the decision is excluded from LUBA's jurisdiction under ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A) (for decisions applying land use regulations that do not require interpretation or the exercise of legal judgment), by arguing that the county's land use regulations should be interpreted to exempt construction of the two reservoirs from county approval. Even if that argument is correct, that the applicable land use regulations require interpretation defeats application of the exclusion at ORS 197.015(10)(b)(A). Bishop v. Deschutes County, 75 Or LUBA 504 (2017).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A county is not obligated to accept an applicant's characterization of its proposed use and scope of use for purposes of issuing a land use compatibility statement. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 72 Or LUBA 103 (2015).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A governing body's code interpretation made in the course of rendering a decision on a request for a land use compatibility statement is subject to the deferential standard of review at ORS 197.829(1). Even without that deferential standard of review, the county correctly concluded that a proposal to store irrigation water in two newly excavated but unapproved reservoirs is not an outright permitted use as the operation of an "existing irrigation system," but rather a use that requires conditional use approval as the "excavation" for "reservoirs" in conjunction with an irrigation system. Bishop v. Deschutes County, 72 Or LUBA 103 (2015).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where an interchange area management planning effort was a joint Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT)/city effort, in satisfying its OAR 734-051-0155(5)(c) obligation to coordinate with affected property owners ODOT is not required to repeat the public outreach effort that was made before the city adopted the interchange area management plan. Parker Johnstone Wilsonville Honda v. ODOT, 62 Or LUBA 116 (2010).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Under OAR 660-018-0050(2), the Department of Environmental Quality's state agency coordination rule, a land use compatibility statement (LUCS) is the primary vehicle to ensure that agency permits are consistent with the statewide planning goals. In circumstances where the state agency coordination rules exempt permit renewals from the requirement to obtain a LUCS, the rules also exempt the agency from the requirement to make a determination that the renewed permit complies with the applicable goals. Tualatin Riverkeepers v. ODEQ, 55 Or LUBA 569 (2008).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A county's statement in a state agency land use compatibility certification of facts about a property's zoning and the status of a subdivision of that property falls under the ORS 197.015(11)(b)(A) exception to the definition of land use decision because the compatibility statement did not require interpretation or the exercise of policy or legal judgment. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 54 Or LUBA 54 (2007).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Whether the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality properly issued a permit in reliance on a local government land use compatibility statement has no bearing on whether that land use compatibility statement is a land use decision as defined in ORS 197.015(11). Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 54 Or LUBA 54 (2007).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A county's certification in a state agency land use compatibility statement that the activities proposed in the related state agency permit application are consistent with all local land use requirements is necessarily a land use decision, as defined in ORS 197.015(11)(a), if it is a final decision and not subject to any of the exceptions set out at ORS 197.015(11)(b). Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 52 Or LUBA 536 (2006).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. An ambiguous finding that is included in a 23-page findings document supporting a subdivision approval decision is not sufficient to provide actual or constructive notice of a prior county decision that approved a land use compatibility statement concerning grading related to that subdivision. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 52 Or LUBA 536 (2006).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Where a county signs a land use compatibility statement certifying that a state agency permit applicant's proposal complies with all applicable local land use regulations, but fails to include any findings to support that certification, LUBA will remand the decision so that the county can adopt the required findings. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 52 Or LUBA 536 (2006).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Under OAR 731-015-0075, an ODOT Class 3 project to improve a highway interchange must comply with any affected local government's comprehensive plan and, if the project does not comply, any comprehensive plan amendments that are necessary to bring the project into compliance must be adopted before ODOT issues its Revised Environmental Assessment for the interchange project. Witham Parts and Equipment Co. v. ODOT, 42 Or LUBA 435 (2002).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. A development code provision that prohibits consideration of a permit application where a federal or state law violation exists on the property does not apply where a permit opponent alleges federal or state law violations but there is no final adjudication by a court or state or federal agency finding that such violations exist. Such a code provision does not require a local government to independently consider such allegations or make its own findings concerning the alleged violations. Farrell v. Jackson County, 41 Or LUBA 1 (2001).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Whether a National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit renewal application qualifies for the exception to the land use compatibility determination requirement recognized by OAR 660-31-040 is an issue properly determined by DEQ, as part of its permit renewal process, not by a local government that is requested to make such a determination. Sparacino v. Klamath County, 18 Or LUBA 804 (1990).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. OAR 660-31-025(2)(c) (use is "allowed by the plan but subject to standards regarding siting, design, construction and/or operation") includes instances where required local reviews are discretionary and could result in denial of the subject use. Sparacino v. Klamath County, 18 Or LUBA 804 (1990).

38.3 State Agencies – Local Gov't Compatibility Determinations. Determining that an activity or use that is the subject of a state agency permit application falls under OAR 660-31-025(2)(c) merely establishes that compatibility with the acknowledged comprehensive plan, as provided in ORS 197.180(10), must be determined. If required local government approvals have not been obtained, the use cannot be determined to be "allowed under the plan" and, therefore, cannot be determined to be compatible with the plan. Sparacino v. Klamath County, 18 Or LUBA 804 (1990).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Under the "island annexation" statute, ORS 222.750, which authorizes a city to annex territory that is not within the city but that is surrounded by the city's boundaries without the affected property owners' consent, a city may include phased annexation effective dates in its annexation proclamation, even if, as a consequence, part of the annexed territory will abut land that is not within the city on the effective date of its annexation. WKL Investments Airport, LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 80 Or LUBA 310 (2019).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a right-of-way vacation process was initiated by a city council and could be abandoned at any time after initiation, the first Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers v. Benton Co. Bd. of Comm., 287 Or 591, 601 P2d 769 (1979), factor, which is whether the process is bound to result in a decision, suggests the decision is legislative rather than quasi-judicial. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a right-of-way vacation decision was bound to "apply preexisting criteria to concrete facts,' the second Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers v. Benton Co. Bd. of Comm., 287 Or 591, 601 P2d 769 (1979), factor suggests the decision is quasi-judicial rather than legislative. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. The third Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers v. Benton Co. Bd. of Comm., 287 Or 591, 601 P2d 769 (1979), factor is whether the action is directed at a closely circumscribed factual situation or a relatively small number of persons. Where a decision vacates a vacant alley right-of-way over a small, 673-square-foot area with a handful of adjoining property owners, the third Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers factor suggests the decision is quasi-judicial rather than legislative. Heitsch v. City of Salem, 65 Or LUBA 187 (2012).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A regional government code provision that requires local government comprehensive plans to include a legal requirement that property be annexed before the property is allowed to urbanize has no bearing on whether a local government may annex property before completing legally required concept planning for the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A city comprehensive plan policy that a concept plan should be adopted to guide zoning does not require that the concept plan be adopted before the property that will be the subject of that concept plan can be annexed. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A city does not err by interpreting a comprehensive plan policy that requires the city to "annex lands to the city through a process that considers the effects on public services" to allow it to defer such consideration to an ongoing but unfinished concept planning process where: (1) the concept plan will precede actual urbanization of the annexed areas, (2) the plan will provide the basis for planning and zoning of annexed areas for urban development, and (3) the concept plan will determine how public facilities are extended to annexed areas as they urbanize. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A city does not err by interpreting a code requirement that "adequacy and availability of public facilities and services" be "considered" as a "factor" in reviewing annexation proposals to allow it to defer needed public facility planning to an ongoing but incomplete concept planning process where: (1) annexation, in and of itself, authorizes no additional urban development of the annexed property, (2) no urban development of the annexed property could be allowed under the zoning that will remain in place following annexation, (3) no urban development would be allowed until the concept plan is adopted to allow urbanization of the annexed area, and (4) the concept plan will be required to address the public facilities and services that will be needed for urbanization of the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. No legal authority supports an assignment of error alleging that filing a tax assessor's form with the tax assessor's office had the legal effect of vacating parcel lines to create a single parcel of land. Chaves v. Jackson County, 56 Or LUBA 643 (2008).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A city decision to defer making a decision about whether a recently enacted statute operates retroactively to invalidate an annexation ordinance while the property owner's appeal of that annexation ordinance is pending before the Court of Appeals is not a final decision, and, because it is not a final decision, it is not a land use decision subject to review by LUBA. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 53 Or LUBA 203 (2007).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. A property owner's request that a city apply a statute to invalidate a previously enacted annexation ordinance is not an application for a boundary change, which would require that the city adopt a land use decision. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 53 Or LUBA 203 (2007).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. ORS 268.347(1) is ambiguous in providing that a metropolitan service district has jurisdiction over boundary changes "within the boundaries of the district," because it is not clear whether the legislature intended that the district has jurisdiction only if the entire territory affected by the boundary changes is within the district, or if the district has jurisdiction if any part of the territory affected by the change is within the district. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Under ORS 268.347(1), a metropolitan service district has jurisdiction over boundary changes "within all territory designated as urban reserves" prior to June 30, 1997, even if the decision establishing those urban reserves was subsequently overturned and the territory affected by the boundary change is no longer designated as an urban reserve. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Absent some textual or contextual reason to conclude otherwise, LUBA will not presume that a special district boundary change regulation listing certain "urban services" is intended to incorporate the distinctions between "urban," "urbanizable" and "rural" lands articulated in 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Curry County, 301 Or 447, 724 P2d 268 (1986). Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Intergovernmental agreements concerning the provision of water service are "agreement[s] for provision of an urban service" for purposes of establishing who is a necessary party to a boundary change under special district regulations, even if those agreements do not qualify as ORS 195.065 urban service agreements. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. While ORS 195.065 envisions that the focus of required urban service agreements will be on providing urban services inside UGBs, nothing in that statute precludes including provisions in the agreement for providing urban services to lands lying just beyond the UGB. That a service agreement includes such provisions does not mean that it does not qualify as an ORS 195.065 urban service agreement, for purposes of establishing who is a necessary party to a boundary change under special district regulations. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. The requirement in ORS 199.462(1) that boundary changes be based on consideration of economic, demographic and sociological trends does not implicitly authorize denial of a proposed water district boundary change for failure to consider whether one provider of water services is preferable to another. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. ORS 268.354(1), which provides that in addition to other statutory requirements "boundary changes within a metropolitan service district are subject to the requirements established by the district," is an adequate statutory grant of authority to allow the district to adopt legislation that delays the effective date of an annexation ordinance while the annexation ordinance is on appeal to the district. City of Happy Valley v. City of Damascus, 51 Or LUBA 141 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a Metro Committee would be required to apply land use standards to approve a city annexation ordinance on appeal, its decision to deny the annexation ordinance is a land use decision subject to review to LUBA, notwithstanding that the denial was based on non-land use standards. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a city annexation ordinance must be reviewed by Metro under its code to determine if the annexation is consistent "with other applicable criteria * * * under state and local law," Metro does not exceed its interpretive discretion by interpreting that requirement to allow it to determine if the city's annexation ordinance is inconsistent with two Oregon Supreme Court decisions concerning annexation. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a review criterion that applies to a city boundary change on review by Metro unambiguously requires that the boundary change must be consistent with agreements between the city and other necessary parties, a memorandum of understanding to which the city is not a party could not provide a basis for Metro to deny the annexation ordinance under that review criterion. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. Where a city is required by the Metro Code to prepare and release a report prior to annexation that describes how the annexation is consistent with agreements that the city is not a party to, but the Metro Code review criteria that govern review of the annexation on appeal do not require that the annexation be consistent with agreements the city is not a party to, Metro may not deny the annexation ordinance based on the city's failure to comply with the report requirement without explaining why that violation of the report requirements has the same status as a violation of one of the review criteria and provides a basis for denial. City of Damascus v. Metro, 51 Or LUBA 210 (2006).

39.1 Boundary Changes – Generally. An acknowledged city code provision that replaces county comprehensive plan and zoning designations with functionally equivalent city comprehensive plan and zoning designations upon annexation may dramatically reduce the city's obligation to address the statewide planning goals when annexing property. But the new city comprehensive plan and zoning designations may not be sufficient to maintain statewide planning goal requirements where special purpose county planning and zoning requirements are repealed by annexation and special purpose city planning and zoning are not made applicable by the annexation. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.2 Boundary Changes – Incorporation/Formation. Where the formation of a People's Utility District (P.U.D.) is for the purpose of providing water service to the same developed area where water service is currently provided by an existing domestic water supply district distribution system, the only significant effect of the creation of the P.U.D., and its potential acquisition of the assets of the water district, is on the manner in which a city wanting to annex and withdraw from the water district territory in the subject area may obtain ownership of the water distribution facilities in that area, not on the present or future uses of land in the area. City of Portland v. Multnomah County, 19 Or LUBA 468 (1990).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.127 prohibits a city from imposing a voter referral requirement on an annexation covered by the statute but does not otherwise restrict the criteria that the city would apply to the annexation. Caldwell Farms, LLC v. City of Corvallis, 81 Or LUBA 348 (2020).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under the "island annexation" statute, ORS 222.750, which authorizes a city to annex territory that is not within the city but that is surrounded by the city's boundaries without the affected property owners' consent, a city may include phased annexation effective dates in its annexation proclamation, even if, as a consequence, part of the annexed territory will abut land that is not within the city on the effective date of its annexation. WKL Investments Airport, LLC v. City of Lake Oswego, 80 Or LUBA 310 (2019).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city councilor's social media communications with constituents regarding an application for an annexation pending before the city council are ex parte communications that must be disclosed under ORS 227.180(3). J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where during deliberations on an application for an annexation under a new state statute, a city councilor mentions a city attorney letter discussing the costs of joining litigation to challenge the statute, the letter is exempt from disclosure as an ex parte communication under ORS 227.180(4), and the city commits no procedural error in failing to include the letter in the record of the annexation proceeding. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where city procedure on an annexation proposal provides a first evidentiary hearing before the planning commission, followed by a second evidentiary hearing before the city council, the planning commission hearing is the "initial evidentiary hearing" for purposes of ORS 197.763(6)(a), which requires the local government to grant a request for a continuance or open record period that is made prior to the conclusion of the initial evidentiary hearing. The local government is not required to grant such a request made at subsequent evidentiary hearings. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A finding that city streets have adequate capacity to accommodate traffic generated on annexed land is not supported by substantial evidence, where the finding cites and relies only upon extra-record street capacity data found in the transportation system plans of three nearby cities, rather than any evidence in the record. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Findings regarding the adequacy of urban services to serve annexed property are inadequate, where the findings cite only hearsay statements from providers, and fail to address issues raised below regarding delayed response times to service the subject property and an engineer's testimony that the electrical system cannot serve the property without impacting other portions of the city. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under an annexation requirement that the city must find that "sufficient planning and engineering data is available" and "all necessary studies and reviews have been completed such that there are no unresolved issues," a city's conclusory finding of compliance is inadequate in the face of detailed and unrebutted testimony that studies are required regarding impacts of proposed development on traffic, pedestrian and bicycle facilities, storm water drainage, flooding, electrical infrastructure, and emergency access. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. It would be inconsistent with sound principles of judicial review, ORS 197.805, for LUBA to resolve a constitutional challenge to the procedure a city uses to approve an annexation, in a direct appeal of the city decision approving the annexation, when the same issue is pending before a circuit court in a writ of mandamus proceeding between the same parties, seeking to compel the city to approve the annexation under a different procedure. J4J Misc PAC v. City of Jefferson, 75 Or LUBA 120 (2017).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city is not obligated to apply city plan and zoning designations to the annexed portion of a county road where the county road did not have a county plan and zoning designation prior to annexation. Altamont Homeowners' Assoc., Inc. v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 126 (2016).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where the challenged decision annexed both a parcel and a portion of a county road, and the notice of public hearing that the city provided described the application for annexation as including only the parcel and did not reference in any way the portion of the county road that was annexed, the notice of public hearing did not reasonably describe the city's final action, and ORS 197.835(4)(b) allows petitioner to raise new issues. Altamont Homeowners' Assoc., Inc. v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 126 (2016).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city errs in approving an annexation request under ORS 222.125 without receiving the written consent of all owners of property in the territory to be annexed. Altamont Homeowners' Assoc., Inc. v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 126 (2016).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The "separated by a right of way" criterion in ORS 222.111(1) does not apply where a city annexes both a parcel and the road connecting the parcel to the city limits. Altamont Homeowners' Assoc., Inc. v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 126 (2016).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The shape of a parcel alone does not demonstrate that the annexation is unreasonable under the "reasonableness" test that was first employed by the Oregon Supreme Court in Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952). Altamont Homeowners' Assoc., Inc. v. City of Happy Valley, 73 Or LUBA 126 (2016).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a local government adopts alternative findings to address disjunctive statutory requirements for annexation, any inconsistency between the alternative findings is not a basis for remand. Oregon Coast Alliance v. City of Brookings, 71 Or LUBA 14 (2015).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.750(5) requires that annexation of "property that is zoned for * * * residential use" must be delayed for at least three years" from the date of approval. Property is zoned for residential use, within the meaning of ORS 222.750(5), if the applicable zone allows residences as a permitted use. Knaupp v. City of Forest Grove, 67 Or LUBA 398 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A zoning ordinance standard that requires that zoning map amendments must be consistent with relevant comprehensive plan policies provides no basis for reversal or remand, where petitioners appealed an annexation ordinance and failed to appeal the ordinance that rezoned the annexed properties. Knaupp v. City of Forest Grove, 67 Or LUBA 398 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city is not required to apply Goal 5 to a decision to annex property, where the annexation decision does not change the county planning and zoning designations of the property and does not make any of the changes specified in OAR 660-023-0250(3)(a) to (c) that would require application of Goal 5. Roads End Water District v. City of Lincoln City, 67 Or LUBA 452 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where petitioner makes no attempt to identify specific or general vacation rental dwelling licensing requirements that might have Goal 9 implications, and any Goal 9 impacts of applying those licensing requirements to annexed property appear to be highly speculative and indirect, LUBA will reject petitioner's argument that it was error for the city to fail to adopt findings addressing Goal 9 to support its legislative annexation decision. Roads End Water District v. City of Lincoln City, 67 Or LUBA 452 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A legislative annexation decision that leaves existing county comprehensive plan and land use regulations in place, including county residential comprehensive plan and zoning map designations, does not implicate Goal 10. Roads End Water District v. City of Lincoln City, 67 Or LUBA 452 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city has made it clear in its comprehensive plan and in dealings over the years with a water district and a sanitary district that as a condition of the city providing city water and sewer services to water and sanitary district customers the properties receiving such services would have to annex to the city in the future, and the districts have no plans to provide water or sewer service to the disputed area, the city's decision to annex and withdraw that territory from the districts was adequately coordinated under Goal 2, although the city and the districts may dispute the desirability of that annexation. Roads End Water District v. City of Lincoln City, 67 Or LUBA 452 (2013).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. General expressions of support or opposition to a proposed annexation are not ex parte contacts within the meaning of ORS 227.180(3), because they include no factual or legal assertions that bear on approval criteria or on any issue material to approval of the annexation that could possibly be rebutted. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.120, which permits cities to dispense with an election on a proposed annexation and instead hold a public hearing, does not require cities to decide, on a case-by-case basis, whether to dispense with an election. It is consistent with the statute for the city to adopt a general resolution providing that the city elects to dispense with all annexation elections and to rely on that resolution to dispense with all future annexation elections. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. While an annexation must be made in compliance with a city's acknowledged comprehensive plan, no statute or administrative rule requires that in annexing territory the city must contemporaneously amend its comprehensive plan map to depict the new city boundaries. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A decision annexing new territory to a city in order to extend city sewer to the new territory is not a "modification" of a project in a public facilities plan for purposes of the Goal 11 rule, and therefore OAR 660-011-0045 does not require an amendment to the public facilities plan, where the annexation decision does not make any modification to existing sewer projects in the plan or make any decisions regarding such projects. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city governing body does not err in interpreting comprehensive plan policies that govern "development" to be inapplicable to a proposal to annex and extend sewer service to fully developed property. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under ORS 222.111(1) a city may annex territory that is (1) contiguous to the city or (2) separated from the city only by a public right-of-way or body of water. Where the city annexes both territory and a public right-of-way that connects the city and the territory, that annexation territory as a whole is "contiguous" to the city and therefore the city need not rely on the "separated by a public right of way" element of ORS 222.111. Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. That an annexation may ultimately lead to a city extending sewer service to urbanizable lands along a different route than contemplated in the city's public facilities plan does not demonstrate that the annexation is "unreasonable" under Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952). Link v. City of Florence, 58 Or LUBA 348 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city readopts an earlier land use decision that authorized an election on a proposed annexation so that the proposed annexation would be sent to the voters for a second time, petitioners are entitled to challenge that readopted land use decision at LUBA, notwithstanding that an earlier LUBA appeal of the first land use decision was dismissed as moot after the voters rejected the annexation proposal. But where the voters reject the proposed annexation at the second election, before LUBA issues its decision on the merits, the second appeal must also be dismissed as moot. Kehoe v. City of Oregon City, 58 Or LUBA 552 (2009).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 197.752(1) does not mandate that all urban services and facilities must be available to a property at the time of annexation. Bowler v. City of Cave Junction, 56 Or LUBA 152 (2008).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A regional government code provision that requires local government comprehensive plans to include a legal requirement that property be annexed before the property is allowed to urbanize has no bearing on whether a local government may annex property before completing legally required concept planning for the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city comprehensive plan policy that a concept plan should be adopted to guide zoning does not require that the concept plan be adopted before the property that will be the subject of that concept plan can be annexed. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city does not err by interpreting a comprehensive plan policy that requires the city to "annex lands to the city through a process that considers the effects on public services" to allow it to defer such consideration to an ongoing but unfinished concept planning process where: (1) the concept plan will precede actual urbanization of the annexed areas, (2) the plan will provide the basis for planning and zoning of annexed areas for urban development, and (3) the concept plan will determine how public facilities are extended to annexed areas as they urbanize. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city does not err by interpreting a code requirement that "adequacy and availability of public facilities and services" be "considered" as a "factor" in reviewing annexation proposals to allow it to defer needed public facility planning to an ongoing but incomplete concept planning process where: (1) annexation, in and of itself, authorizes no additional urban development of the annexed property, (2) no urban development of the annexed property could be allowed under the zoning that will remain in place following annexation, (3) no urban development would be allowed until the concept plan is adopted to allow urbanization of the annexed area, and (4) the concept plan will be required to address the public facilities and services that will be needed for urbanization of the annexed area. Graser-Lindsey v. City of Oregon City, 56 Or LUBA 504 (2008).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city may rezone property prior to annexation, so long as the effective date of the rezoning is delayed until the date the property is annexed. Citizens Against Annexation v. City of Florence, 55 Or LUBA 407 (2007).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The property owner has the burden of proof to establish that it qualifies for the statutory prohibition against nonconsensual annexation provided by Oregon Laws 1987, chapter 737, section 3. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The Oregon Laws 1987, chapter 737, section 3, standard requiring that property have "sewer and water lines paid for and installed by the property owner" is not correctly interpreted to require that the property have a "significant amount" of sewer and water lines paid for and installed by the property owner. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The Oregon Laws 1987, chapter 737, section 3, standard requiring that property have "sewer and water lines paid for and installed by the property owner" is not correctly interpreted to require that the sewer and water lines also be installed off-site. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Oregon Laws 1987, chapter 737, section 3, does not unambiguously provide that lateral sewer and water lines may qualify as "sewer and water lines paid for and installed by the property owner" and thus satisfy one of the law's requirements to qualify for protection from nonconsensual annexation. Therefore, resort to legislative history is appropriate. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The Oregon Laws 1987, chapter 737, section 3, standard requiring that property have "sewer * * * lines paid for and installed by the property owner" is not satisfied where the property owner merely relocated sewer lines that were originally installed and paid for by a special district. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The ORS 222.750 statutory authority for annexing islands of unincorporated land surrounded by cities or water or a combination of cities and water does not require that the entire island be annexed at one time. Leupold & Stevens, Inc. v. City of Beaverton, 51 Or LUBA 65 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where the Metro Code provides that when a necessary party appeals a city boundary change decision to Metro the city boundary change decision is not final until the appeal is resolved, LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review that city boundary change decision while the Metro appeal is pending, because LUBA's review jurisdiction is limited to "final" decisions. City of Happy Valley v. City of Damascus, 51 Or LUBA 141 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under Oregon Supreme Court precedent, a city "institutes" annexation proceedings, and thereby secures jurisdiction to complete that annexation proceeding to the exclusion of other municipal bodies, when it adopts a resolution that sets a date for a public hearing on the proposed annexation. City of Damascus v. City of Happy Valley, 51 Or LUBA 150 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An urban growth management agreement between a city and county that identifies an area of interest for city annexation and provides that the county will not oppose city annexations in that area of interest is not sufficient to "institute" annexation so that other cities that are not a party to the urban growth management agreement would be precluded from instituting annexation within that area of interest. City of Damascus v. City of Happy Valley, 51 Or LUBA 150 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. City voter approval of a measure that waives a city charter requirement for a city vote on annexation proposals for five years in a designated area is not sufficient to "institute" annexation proceedings in that area so that other cities would be precluded from instituting annexation proposals in that same area. City of Damascus v. City of Happy Valley, 51 Or LUBA 150 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. LUBA need not decide whether receipt of petitions and consents to annexation is sufficient to "institute" annexation proceedings, and thereby preclude other cities from attempting to annex those properties until the city receiving the petitions and consents can complete its annexation proceedings, where another city "initiated" annexation proceedings before the petitions and consents were filed with the first city. City of Damascus v. City of Happy Valley, 51 Or LUBA 150 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An acknowledged city code provision that replaces county comprehensive plan and zoning designations with functionally equivalent city comprehensive plan and zoning designations upon annexation may dramatically reduce the city's obligation to address the statewide planning goals when annexing property. But the new city comprehensive plan and zoning designations may not be sufficient to maintain statewide planning goal requirements where special purpose county planning and zoning requirements are repealed by annexation and special purpose city planning and zoning are not made applicable by the annexation. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. There is no overarching "informed consent" requirement under ORS 222.170, as such. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A consent to annexation under ORS 222.120(4) and 222.170 that is obtained by multiple material misrepresentations would be of questionable validity. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city is authorized under agreements with a county and water district to provide planning and water service in certain areas near the city, the city is properly viewed as the provider of those services and can withhold services from properties unless the property owners consent to annexation and sign a contract to that effect under ORS 222.115. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's mistaken understanding of the legal effect of a development code provision upon annexation is not a material misrepresentation of fact or law that would call into question the validity of consents to annexation that were given based on that understanding. Friends of Bull Mountain v. City of Tigard, 51 Or LUBA 759 (2006).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.111 provides two ways to initiate city annexation of contiguous territory. The city's legislative body may initiate annexation on its own motion, and the owner of real property in the territory to be annexed may initiate such annexations. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. With several exceptions, ORS 222.111(5) requires that the city council submit the proposed annexation to (1) the voters of the city and (2) the voters living in the area to be annexed. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Once a city initiates an annexation under ORS 222.111, unless a city's charter requires a vote by city voters on a proposed annexation, the city council may simply dispense with submitting the proposed annexation to the city voters and instead schedule a public hearing on the annexation. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. While an ordinance or resolution that approves an island annexation pursuant to ORS 222.750 is subject to referendum, a prior vote by the city electorate or by the voters in the annexed territory is not required. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.840 to 222.915, which authorize city annexations to abate health hazards, do not require approval of such annexations by city voters or by the voters in the territory to be annexed. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under ORS 222.125, if a double majority consisting of (1) all the owners of land in the territory to be annexed and (2) 50 percent of the electors in that territory consent to a proposal to annex contiguous territory, no election is required in either the city or the territory to be annexed. ORS 222.170(2) authorizes a second type of double majority annexation (majority of electors and majority of landowners in the area to be annexed), under which an election within the territory to be annexed is not necessary. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under ORS 222.170(1), a city may annex contiguous territory without an election in the area to be annexed if a triple majority of "more than half of the owners of land in the territory, who also own more than half of the land in the contiguous territory and of real property therein representing more than half of the assessed value of all real property in the contiguous territory consent in writing to the annexation." Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. There is no right under either the federal or Oregon constitution to vote on questions of incorporation or annexation. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a right to vote in a general election is extended by statute, any classification restricting that franchise on grounds other than residence, age, and citizenship must be shown to serve a compelling state interest. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. In analyzing annexation statutes, if those statutes are viewed as restricting a statutory right to vote, strict scrutiny is generally applied under the Equal Protection Clause; but if those statutes are viewed as merely presenting alternative annexation methods, where some provide for elections and some do not, rational basis scrutiny is generally applied under the Equal Protection Clause. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The more clearly and cleanly statutes that authorize different annexation methods segregate the annexation methods that do not require elections from those that do, the more likely the statutes will not be subject to strict scrutiny as statutes that restrict voting rights. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. When statutes do not make it clear at the time an annexation is initiated whether the annexation will ultimately be subject to an election before the annexation can take effect, or the statutes appear to grant a right to vote on an annexation but also allow the election to be foreclosed at some later point in the annexation process, those statutes are likely to be subject to strict scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause as statutes that restrict voting rights. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The right to an election that ORS 222.111(5) grants is not an absolute right. There is no right to vote in health hazard, double majority, island or triple majority annexations. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Unlike annexation statutes that have been subject to strict scrutiny and found to violate the Equal Protection Clause as an improper restriction on voting rights, the triple majority method of annexation authorized by ORS 222.170(1) does not have the have the legal effect of "nullifying a vote," "preventing an election" or "halting an election." ORS 222.170(1) simply makes an election unnecessary; it does not foreclose an election or prohibit the city from submitting the proposed annexation to the voters in the territory to be annexed, notwithstanding that a triple majority of the property owners in the territory to be annexed consent to the annexation. Morsman v. City of Madras, 50 Or LUBA 1 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city does not misinterpret the term "surrounded" for purposes of determining whether certain annexations qualify as "island" annexations pursuant to ORS 222.750, where the city chooses to annex only part of the unincorporated territory within the island. Costco Wholesale Corporation v. City of Beaverton, 50 Or LUBA 476 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's decision to annex property as an "island" annexation pursuant to ORS 222.750 is supported by substantial evidence although the record does not include ordinances approving previous annexations, or an explanation of how the territories being annexed are "surrounded" under ORS 222.750, where the record includes an annexation map depicting the city limits and the previously annexed properties that create the island. Costco Wholesale Corporation v. City of Beaverton, 50 Or LUBA 476 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's annexation of unincorporated territory within an "island" is reasonable, for purposes of the "reasonableness" test under Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952), where the city has a policy to ultimately annex all of the territory identified in its "urban services area," and the territory to be annexed falls within that urban services area. Costco Wholesale Corporation v. City of Beaverton, 50 Or LUBA 476 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. OAR 660-014-0060 requires that local governments apply acknowledged comprehensive plans and ordinances to annexation decisions in lieu of the statewide planning goals, unless the plan and ordinance do not "control the annexation." A comprehensive plan policy need not be a mandatory approval criterion to "control the annexation" for purposes of OAR 660-014-0060; it is sufficient that the policy provides relevant guidance with respect to annexations. Costco Wholesale Corporation v. City of Beaverton, 50 Or LUBA 476 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where two cities have both adopted ordinances annexing the same property and both of those ordinances have been appealed to LUBA, some jurisdictional uncertainty is unavoidable until those appeals are completed. That temporary uncertainty does not amount to a substantial or unreasonable injury that justifies a stay of the annexation ordinance in one of the LUBA appeals. City of Happy Valley v. City of Damascus, 50 Or LUBA 711 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A finding that annexation is necessary to protect significant natural features on a site under more protective city regulations is a sufficient explanation for why there is a "public need" annexation, notwithstanding a plan policy indicating a preference for infill and redevelopment over annexation. No amount of infill or redevelopment could preserve significant natural features on the site. Mason v. City of Corvallis, 49 Or LUBA 199 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A comprehensive plan policy stating that the city should "work toward" development of vacant lands before annexing additional lands does not mandate anything and therefore is not an approval standard governing an annexation proposal. Kingsley v. City of Sutherlin, 49 Or LUBA 242 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.750, which allows a city to annex an "island" of territory without consent or a vote of the residents or landowners within the island, does not distinguish between classes of persons based on a "suspect" classification, for purposes of Article I, section 20 (Privileges and Immunities), of the Oregon Constitution. Therefore, the statute must be upheld if the differential treatment between persons residing or owning property within such islands and those residing or owning property in other types of unincorporated territory has a "rational basis," i.e., bears some relationship to a legitimate end. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 49 Or LUBA (512).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Reducing jurisdictional confusion and administrative and service inefficiencies created by "islands" of unincorporated territory surrounded by a city are legitimate legislative ends. A statute that makes it easier to incorporate such islands by eliminating the requirement to obtain the consent or electoral majority of residents or landowners within such islands furthers those legislative ends, and therefore the statute survives rational basis scrutiny under Article I, section 20 (Privileges and Immunities), of the Oregon Constitution. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 49 Or LUBA (512).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. It is entirely reasonable for a city to annex territory for which it has assumed, or obligated itself to assume, the responsibility of providing and maintaining urban services, for purposes of the "reasonableness" test under Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952), even if city urban services are no better than the services the county provides. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 49 Or LUBA (512).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Arguments that an "island" annexation under ORS 222.750 must be remanded because the record does not include consents necessary to establish the validity of previous annexations that rendered the subject area an "island" are essentially collateral attacks on annexation decisions not before the Board, and therefore do not provide a basis for reversing or remanding the challenged island annexation. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 49 Or LUBA (512).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. While ORS 222.750 allows a city to annex an "island," defined as unincorporated territory that is surrounded by city limits or city limits and a body of water, it does not require the city to annex all of the island in one decision, and the city's choice to annex only a part of the island does not disqualify the city from proceeding under ORS 222.750. Kane v. City of Beaverton, 49 Or LUBA (512).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A resolution adopted pursuant to ORS 222.111(2) to initiate annexation proceedings that sets a date for an election in the area to be annexed, but dispenses with a separate vote within the city to approve the annexation, is not the city's "final" decision regarding the annexation, and for that reason such a resolution is not a land use decision. Following adoption of such a resolution, ORS 222.120(4) requires that the city provide a public hearing and thereafter the city must adopt an ordinance to declare that the territory is annexed provided a majority of voters in the territory to be annexed approve. City of Happy Valley v. City of Damascus, 49 Or LUBA 553 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Findings that an annexation area is adjacent to a long-developed urban neighborhood with full public services that can be readily extended to the annexed territory area are sufficient to demonstrate compliance with a code criterion requiring that "an adequate level of urban services and infrastructure is available or will be made available in a timely manner." Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 49 Or LUBA 559 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city is not required to demonstrate that annexation of an open space area that includes Goal 5 resources is consistent with Goal 5, where the annexation decision does not rezone the area, amend the plan designation, or otherwise affect the uses allowed in the territory or the protection of open space and natural resources. Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 49 Or LUBA 559 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Arguments that application of a city zoning district to an annexed area will conflict with Goal 12 are misdirected, where the challenged decision merely annexes the area but does not rezone it. Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 49 Or LUBA 559 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's desire to annex an island of unincorporated territory to reduce jurisdictional confusion and to ensure that those who benefit from city services share the cost of such services is sufficient to satisfy the requirement that annexations be "reasonable" and not arbitrary under Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952). Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 49 Or LUBA 559 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under OAR 660-014-0060, which requires that local governments apply acknowledged comprehensive plans and ordinances to annexation decisions in lieu of the statewide planning goals, unless the plan and ordinance do not "control the annexation," whether the plan and ordinances control the annexation depends on whether the plan and ordinances include substantive standards guiding a city's determination whether or not to annex land, not whether the plan and ordinances include procedures specific to annexations. Patterson v. City of Independence, 49 Or LUBA 589 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Which substantive comprehensive plan and ordinance standards that local governments apply to annexation decisions under OAR 660-014-0060 depend in part on the nature of the annexation. The considerations governing annexation of right-of-way will differ from those that govern annexation of a parcel for industrial, commercial or residential uses. Patterson v. City of Independence, 49 Or LUBA 589 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Given the limited nature of a proposed annexation of a city-maintained right-of-way, comprehensive plan policies implementing Goals 12 and 14 that provide general guidance regarding annexation decisions are sufficient to "control the annexation" of the right-of-way for purposes of OAR 660-014-0060, and thus make it unnecessary to apply the goals directly. Patterson v. City of Independence, 49 Or LUBA 589 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Annexation of a small stretch of city-maintained and city-patrolled road that begins and ends within city limits is clearly reasonable under the test in Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952). Patterson v. City of Independence, 49 Or LUBA 589 (2005).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Even if a local government could recognize partial parcel annexations as sufficient to legally divide a parcel, where a local lot of record code definition does not recognize partial parcel annexation as sufficient to legally divide the annexed portion of a parcel from the portion of a parcel that is not annexed, the annexation does not have the effect of dividing the parcel. Masson v. Multnomah County, 48 Or LUBA 100 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city correctly construes a policy that conditions connection to or extension of city water and sewer service upon annexation or consent to annexation not to prohibit the city from requiring consents to annexation in other circumstances. Roads End Sanitary District v. City of Lincoln City, 48 Or LUBA 126 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city-initiated annexation involving an area of 310 acres consisting of 97 parcels that is neither bound to result in a decision, nor an action directed at a closely circumscribed factual situation or relatively small number of persons is a legislative rather than quasi-judicial decision under Strawberry Hill 4 Wheelers v. Washington Co. Bd. of Comm., 287 Or 591, 601 P2d 769 (1979). Cutsforth v. City of Albany, 48 Or LUBA 304 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city does not err in failing to follow comprehensive plan amendment procedures in approving an annexation, where the annexation decision does not amend the city's comprehensive plan. Morsman v. City of Madras, 47 Or LUBA 80 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's improper representation to property owners that they would only be entitled to phased-in city property taxes upon annexation if they signed a consent to annexation is not cured by the city's subsequent decision to extend phased-in property taxation to all property owners in the annexed area, because it cannot be known whether those property owners would have consented to annexation if they knew their right to receive phased-in city property taxation would be unaffected by their decision not to sign a consent to annexation. Morsman v. City of Madras, 47 Or LUBA 80 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Valuable promises to only some property owners of future planning and zoning upon annexation, as inducements to sign consents to annexation, constitute improper quid pro quos affecting the property owners' constitutionally protected right to vote. Morsman v. City of Madras, 47 Or LUBA 80 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A property owner's consent to annex is not affected by a later decision to delete some of the territory proposed for annexation, because consents to annex are consents to annex the property owner's property and are not dependent on annexation of the entire area that was originally proposed. Morsman v. City of Madras, 47 Or LUBA 80 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Findings that address a city requirement that a proposed annexation must be a "natural extension" of city limits are adequate, where the findings explain that the area to be annexed will provide contiguity between existing city boundaries and commercially zoned property located outside city limits that will require annexation and the extension of urban services when they are developed. West Side Rural F.P.D v. City of Hood River, 46 Or LUBA 451 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An amending order that merely corrects a property description included in a prior annexation order does not replace the prior order and therefore petitioners did not have to appeal the amending order rather than the prior order. Miner v. Clatsop County, 46 Or LUBA 467 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A decision to annex property owned by more than 60 property owners and encompassing more than 125 acres is not directed at a "closely circumscribed factual situation" or "a relatively small number of persons," and thus is not subject to notice requirements and hearing procedures prescribed by ORS 197.763 for a quasi-judicial land use decision. Miner v. Clatsop County, 46 Or LUBA 467 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. When a local code defines a "minor boundary change" as an annexation, a local government does not err in processing an annexation request as a "minor" rather than "major" boundary change, regardless of the amount of territory being annexed. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 750 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. When a local code does not require a public hearing, the fact that public officials from other local governments request additional procedures does not obligate a local government to provide additional procedures. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 750 (2004).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Annexation decisions are governed by comprehensive plan annexation criteria or, if no such comprehensive plan criteria have been adopted, by the statewide planning goals. Where a city annexation decision is adopted without applying either its comprehensive plan or the statewide planning goals, the decision must be remanded. Morsman v. City of Madras, 45 Or LUBA 16 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A decision to annex adjacent industrially planned, zoned and developed land that includes the city's airport and sewerage treatment plant is not unreasonable under Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. City of Estacada, 194 Or 145, 241 P2d 1129 (1952). Morsman v. City of Madras, 45 Or LUBA 16 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. If a city makes valuable promises to property owners regarding future planning and zoning of their property that (1) are conditioned on their consent to annexation, and (2) are not extended to all other property owners in the annexed territory, such promises are impermissible under Hussey v. City of Portland, 64 F3d 1260 (9th Cir 1995). Morsman v. City of Madras, 45 Or LUBA 16 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Findings that explain that a property's locational characteristics are ideal to support airport-related light industrial uses and that other properties located within city limits are not as well suited for those uses are adequate to explain why an annexation is consistent with city annexation policies that require a demonstration that the annexation is "needed." Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 162 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Neither Goal 11 nor Goal 14 identifies annexation or application of city zoning as the decision points at which (1) a specific development proposal must be approved and (2) any public service or facility inadequacies at the property must be corrected. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 197.752 and 197.754 concern the provision of public facilities to "urban development" located within urban growth boundaries. Those statutes do not mandate approval of a specific development proposal and provision of all urban services and facilities at the time of annexation and application of city zoning that would allow urban uses. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city annexation policy requires a demonstration that the annexation territory is "needed," findings concluding that the territory to be annexed helps to address a 390-acre deficit in residential land are inadequate, where there is evidence that the city has a net 900-acre surplus of residentially zoned land within its UGB and there is no evidence as to how much of that surplus is currently located within city limits. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city annexation policy requires that a development proposal accompany a request to annex vacant land "unless otherwise approved by the city," and the city has a process where a development proposal may be considered and approved by the city prior to annexation, a city errs in interpreting the annexation policy to allow the city to defer consideration of a development proposal until after the property is annexed. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. LUBA will remand a city's zoning designation decision, where the decision is dependent on the validity of a concurrent annexation decision that LUBA has concluded does not comply with applicable law. Just v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 179 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city may dispense with an annexation election within annexation territory if at least 50 percent of the landowners owning at least 50 percent of the land area and at least 50 percent of the assessed value within annexation territory consent to the annexation. If a public landowner fails to consent or object to an annexation conducted pursuant to ORS 222.170, the city is not required to include that public land in order to satisfy ORS 222.170. Friends of Linn County v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 204 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city does not violate an annexation policy that gives priority status to the annexation of territory that must be serviced by city facilities in order to avoid a potential health hazard, where there is evidence that at least a portion of the annexed territory has a failing septic system, and there is no prohibition against including nonpriority property with a request to annex priority property. Friends of Linn County v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 204 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's findings that a proposed annexation is consistent with applicable annexation policies that require a showing that (1) adequate public facilities are available to serve the property; (2) the proposed annexation is needed; and (3) the annexation will result in a compact growth pattern, are not adequate when they fail to address petitioner's arguments that (1) not all of the needed public facilities have been determined to be available; (2) that the annexation is not needed because there is an abundance of available land within city limits; and (3) the annexation will not result in a compact growth pattern because it will result in a bulge in city limits that is almost entirely surrounded by unincorporated territory. Friends of Linn County v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 204 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. LUBA will defer to a city council interpretation of its zoning ordinance as not requiring a separate zoning amendment application where city zoning is applied to property inside the city's urban growth boundary as part of the annexation process. Barton v. City of Lebanon, 45 Or LUBA 214 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Notices of changes to annexation boundaries that are required to be sent pursuant to ORS 198.730 are properly included in the record in an appeal of that annexation decision to LUBA. Miner v. Clatsop County, 45 Or LUBA 748 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The combined effect of ORS 197.175(1) and OAR 660-001-0300 and 660-001-0310 is to make all city annexation decisions land use decisions. Either (1) the city's comprehensive plan or land use regulations have criteria that govern the annexation, in which case the annexation decision is a land use decision under ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A)(ii) or (iii), or (2) the comprehensive plan and land use regulations do not have criteria that govern annexation decisions, in which case under ORS 197.175(1) and OAR 660-001-0310 the statewide planning goals continue to apply directly and make the annexation decision a land use decision under ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A)(i). Cape v. City of Beaverton, 43 Or LUBA 301 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An annexation must include a land use decision that addresses relevant land use criteria and that land use decision must become final prior to or at the same time as any separate decision that is adopted to make the annexation final. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 43 Or LUBA 301 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where statutory and Metro provisions permit annexation without a public hearing or an election if the owners of all property to be annexed consent to the annexation, and property is annexed pursuant to those provisions without the consent of all property owners, the annexation decision will be remanded. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 43 Or LUBA 301 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A decision that annexes property into city limits using quasi-judicial land use processes set out in the local code for such annexation decisions is reviewable as a quasi-judicial land use decision. West Side Rural F.P.D v. City of Hood River, 43 Or LUBA 546 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city's failure to enter into an urban services agreement with a rural fire protection district prior to annexing property located within the fire district does not violate either Goal 2 or Goal 11. West Side Rural F.P.D v. City of Hood River, 43 Or LUBA 546 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city decision to annex a Y-shaped parcel is not an impermissible "cherry stem" annexation, because the property (1) is contiguous to city limits in two places; (2) is located within the city urban growth boundary, and (3) is developed with an urban street interchange that serves the city and its environs. West Side Rural F.P.D v. City of Hood River, 43 Or LUBA 546 (2003).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where petitioner argues the city erred by approving an expedited annexation while failing to "(1) publish public notice, (2) notify adjacent property owners, (3) post a notice on the properties, (4) notify property owners within created 'service islands,' or (5) notify the community in time for this issue to be included on public agendas to be discussed," but petitioner identifies no legal requirement for any of these kinds of notice, petitioner fails to provide a basis for reversal or remand. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 41 Or LUBA 515 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city provides notice that it will provide a hearing to comment on a proposed expedited annexation if a hearing is requested, and petitioner requested a hearing, the city errs in approving the expedited annexation without providing the requested hearing. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 41 Or LUBA 515 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Notwithstanding a city's procedural error in failing to provide a hearing on a proposed expedited annexation, petitioner's substantial rights were not thereby violated where petitioner was nevertheless allowed to appear before the city council and present his comments before the city council approved the expedited annexation. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 41 Or LUBA 515 (2002).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A code provision allowing the city to annex property as long as conditions imposed in previous decisions adopting annexation agreements are satisfied does not require the city to revisit those previous decisions, nor does it require that the record of the annexation decision contain the studies that supported the previous decisions accepting the annexation agreements. Troy v. City of Grants Pass, 41 Or LUBA 112 (2001).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Reference to "a portion of Sunset Highway" in a notice of proposed annexation decision is likely insufficient to provide reasonable notice of the decision under applicable code and statutory requirements. However, where a petitioner nevertheless was able to determine the nature and scope of the proposal and submit written opposition to the proposal, the petitioner may not successfully assert possible injury to other persons' substantial rights as a basis for reversal or remand. Cape v. City of Beaverton, 40 Or LUBA 78 (2001).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city cannot rely on the existence of its urban growth boundary to provide the "annexation plan" required by Skourtes v. City of Tigard, 250 Or 537, 444 P2d 22 (1968), and ORS 222.175 as necessary for informed consent to annexation. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 39 Or LUBA 377 (2001).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under Skourtes v. City of Tigard, 250 Or 537, 444 P2d 22 (1968), an annexation plan must be provided to parties prior to obtaining their consents to annexation. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 39 Or LUBA 377 (2001).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An annexation decision that includes findings of compliance with local land use standards is a land use decision subject to LUBA review. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. If an annexation decision includes the application of and findings of compliance with local land use regulations, it is a land use decision, notwithstanding that, in the absence of the application of land use standards, a city's discretionary decision to annex property is not a land use decision. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An annexation is a quasi-judicial decision if (1) the initiation of the annexation is bound to result in a decision; (2) the local government is bound to apply pre-existing criteria to concrete facts; and (3) the action is directed at a closely circumscribed factual situation or a relatively small number of persons. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An annexation decision is not a quasi-judicial decision when the initiation of the annexation does not require that the city complete the process, and where the annexation applies to 155 parcels owned by 127 different persons. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The fact that property subject to an annexation is located within an urban growth boundary does not obviate the requirement that the city obtain informed consents to annexation by providing a copy of an annexation plan to those persons from whom consents are solicited. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Consents to annexation pursuant to ORS 222.173 and petitions for annexation are valid only if the consenting parties or signatories to the petition are provided an annexation plan prior to giving their consent. Skourtes v. City of Tigard, 250 Or 537, 444 P2d 22 (1968). Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A local government need not provide an annexation plan to obtain valid, informed consents to annexation with respect to consents given in exchange for the extra-territorial provision of city services. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Residents of annexation territory who signed consents to annexation to obtain city water and sewer services were not coerced into doing so, even though their consents were given because their wells were contaminated and septic tanks were failing. The city did not cause the contamination, nor did the city require the extraterritorial residents to connect to city systems. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Consents to annexation obtained pursuant to ORS 222.115, where the consent is given in exchange for the city's provision of extra-territorial services, are constitutional. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Consents to annexation that are obtained pursuant to ORS 222.115, where the consents are given in exchange for the city's provision of extra-territorial services, are not subject to the one-year limitation on consent under ORS 222.173. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Consents to annexation obtained in exchange for the provision of city services are not valid if they were obtained prior to the enactment of ORS 222.115, the statute authorizing the city to enter into such contracts. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.115 does not prohibit the inclusion of nonconsenting owners into an annexation territory. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Consents to annexation that are obtained pursuant to ORS 222.115 must be recorded before they can be effective against third-party successors in interest. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. When a city's decision to annex territory is also a land use decision, the city must be able to demonstrate that the annexation decision complies with the statutory annexation requirements and is supported by substantial evidence in the record. A failure to demonstrate such compliance requires a remand. Johnson v. City of La Grande, 37 Or LUBA 380 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city decision to deny a request for annexation and subdivision approvals, based solely on a city's refusal to consider annexation requests until its buildable lands inventory can be updated, constitutes a moratorium, as that term is defined in ORS 197.505(1). Benchmark Enterprises v. City of Stayton, 36 Or LUBA 433 (1999).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A 1975 county decision to prohibit access to a street is not automatically nullified by a later city annexation and rezoning of the street. ORS 215.130 does not preclude the city from continuing the access restriction originally imposed by the county. Applegate Estates v. City of Klamath Falls, 35 Or LUBA 112 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 215.130(2) authorizes a city to process and approve a zone change contingent on future annexation to the city. Lodge v. City of West Linn, 35 Or LUBA 42 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where an intergovernmental agreement authorizes a city to grant conditional use and design review approval provided a pre-annexation agreement has been recorded, the city may grant such conditional use and design review approval subject to a condition of actual annexation. Lodge v. City of West Linn, 35 Or LUBA 42 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.170(4) applies only to annexations conducted under ORS 222.170(1) and is not applicable to annexations conducted under ORS 222.125. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.170 does not require that property owners who are also electors submit separate consent forms as property owners and as electors. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A determination of whether an annexation is reasonable requires a case-by-case analysis of several factors, including whether the contiguous territory represents the actual growth of the city beyond its city limits, whether it is valuable by reason of its adaptability for prospective town uses, whether it is needed for the extension of streets or to supply residences or business for city residents, and whether the territory and city will mutually benefit from the annexation. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. The reasonableness test for approval of an annexation has a low threshold and is satisfied by a showing that the territory is suitable for annexation and represents the city's current and future direction for commercial growth. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A comprehensive plan provision that requires a city to jointly review annexation procedures with the county is satisfied where the decision explains that the city's efforts to involve the county in the proceeding, and the county's choice to minimally participate, satisfy the policy. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a local code requires that sewer facilities be "available" as a condition of approval for annexation, the local government's interpretation of the "available" criterion as being met where extension of sewer services is feasible within the current planning period is not clearly wrong. Northwest Aggregates Co. v. City of Scappoose, 34 Or LUBA 498 (1998).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under ORS 12.270, a boundary alteration, initiated and purported to be effective, is conclusively presumed effective one year after the purported effective date, notwithstanding procedural defects in adoption. Carlson v. City of Dunes City, 30 Or LUBA 129 (1995).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.111(1) cannot be interpreted to allow "cherry stem annexations," which annex a road as a means to connect and annex an otherwise noncontiguous parcel to a city, on the basis that such roads "separate" the noncontiguous parcel from the city. DLCD v. City of St. Helens, 29 Or LUBA 485 (1995).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. "Cherry stem annexations," which annex a road as a means to connect and annex an otherwise noncontiguous parcel to a city, frustrate the contiguity requirement of ORS 222.111(1) and are inherently unreasonable. DLCD v. City of St. Helens, 29 Or LUBA 485 (1995).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 222.173(1) imposes a time limit on the effectiveness of certain consents to annexation, (2) provides an exception to the time limit, and (3) makes such consents to annexation public records. Neither ORS 222.173 nor ORS 222.115 authorizes a city to condition provision of sewer service by a provider other than the city on execution of consents to annexation by property owners. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 197.175(2), Goals 11 and 14 and OAR chapter 660, division 11, provide authority for a city and county to adopt a comprehensive plan policy requiring that owners of unincorporated property within an urban growth boundary sign consents to annexation in order to receive sewer service. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Neither ORS 222.173 nor ORS 222.115 purports to preempt local government use of consents to annexation in circumstances other than those identified in ORS 222.173(1). Statements by individual legislators during legislative proceedings leading to adoption of ORS 222.115 expressing general hostility towards involuntary annexation do not establish a legislative intent to preclude city or county legislation concerning consents to annexation. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. City and county ordinances requiring that owners of certain unincorporated property either annex or sign a consent to annexation before receiving sewer connection permits do not improperly infringe on such property owners' statutory right to vote on annexations. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Ordinances requiring consents to annexation as a condition of receiving sewer service do not improperly coerce property owners to give up their right to vote on annexations simply because an objecting property owner may be forced to pay a LID benefit assessment for the cost of extending sewer service that the objecting property owner does not wish to receive. Any such benefit assessments may be challenged on that basis in a proper forum and will either be invalidated or sustained. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city and county may conclude the consequences of allowing sewer service to be provided without first securing consents to annexation outweigh any difficulties requiring such consents to annexation will pose for a sanitary district's use of local improvement districts to pay the cost of providing sewer service. Coordination under Goal 2 does not require that all affected governmental units agree on the proposal. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where LUBA has remanded a city decision annexing certain property, a subsequent city decision amending the comprehensive plan and zoning designations for that property, in reliance on the annexation, exceeds the city's authority. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 256 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Under ORS 197.175(1), city decisions to annex unincorporated territory concern the application of the statewide planning goals and, therefore, satisfy the statutory definition of a "land use decision." Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 80 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. An annexation of contiguous property with the written consent of the property owners, pursuant to ORS 222.125, is subject to the requirement of ORS 197.175(1) that the annexation be determined to be consistent with applicable land use requirements, and the recognized procedural requirements for such quasi-judicial land use decision making. Roloff v. City of Milton-Freewater, 27 Or LUBA 80 (1994).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where a city comprehensive plan expressly recognizes that the county has jurisdiction to issue land use permits prior to annexation of unincorporated areas, the city must annex an unincorporated area before it has jurisdiction to grant land use permits for such unincorporated areas. Recht v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 316 (1993).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. Where property is annexed and it is not clear whether a plan policy and implementing measure governing annexations applies in the particular circumstances, a remand is required so that the local government may either apply the plan policy and implementing measure or explain why it does not apply. Sorte v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 236 (1993).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. ORS 197.752(1) imposes a general planning obligation on local governments; it is not an approval standard directly applicable rezoning or annexation decisions. Sorte v. City of Newport, 26 Or LUBA 236 (1993).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. A city may establish compliance with a code provision which specifically requires a determination of a public need before additional land may be annexed by adopting findings demonstrating that a determination of public need to annex the subject property is supported by relevant plan provisions and explaining why other relevant plan policies not supportive of such a determination may be disregarded. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

39.3 Boundary Changes – Annexation. To show a public need for a 10-acre "community shopping center," of which the property proposed to be annexed would be a part, the city's findings must establish a nexus between the stated "need" to have additional retail businesses within the city and to stop retail leakage to a neighboring city, and the "need" for a "community shopping center" requiring a 10-acre vacant retail zoned site within the city. Neuenschwander v. City of Ashland, 20 Or LUBA 144 (1990).

40. Wetlands. The fact that a substation and transmission line are planned for in the comprehensive plan does not negate a requirement that the local government avoid development of unsuitable areas, including wetlands and riparian areas, where the comprehensive plan provides a general location for the substation and does not specify that the substation must be sited in a wetland area. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

40. Wetlands. A finding of compliance with local water quality protection standards based on a condition of approval that requires the applicant to obtain federal and state environmental permits for its proposed wetland fill/removal is inadequate where the local government does not cite any specific state or federal standards or explain how those standards will ensure that the local water quality protection standards are satisfied. Royal Blue Organics v. City of Springfield, 81 Or LUBA 723 (2020).

40. Wetlands. A condition of approval requiring an applicant to obtain a wetland removal/fill permit from DSL and to provide that permit to a service district with jurisdiction over sewer, water quality, and water quantity prior to conducting any grading work or construction does not violate a local code provision requiring that conditions of approval be "designed to protect the public from potential adverse impacts of the proposed use or development" merely because the condition does not prohibit grading work or construction until any appeals of the DSL permit have concluded. KB Trees, LLC v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 325 (2020).

40. Wetlands. Where a local code provides that "Significant Natural Areas" are a subset of "Significant Natural Resources," a hearings officer does not err in failing to find that a proposed subdivision complies with a local code section that only applies to "Significant Natural Areas," absent a demonstration that the area in question is not only a "Significant Natural Resource," but also a "Significant Natural Area." Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

40. Wetlands. A hearings officer correctly concludes that an isolated wetland is not a "riparian corridor," where the code defines riparian corridor as "an area, adjacent to a water area," and the isolated wetland is not "adjacent to a water area." Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

40. Wetlands. Where the Court of Appeals interpreted similar operative language in a county's code to determine that "riparian zones" are areas adjacent to water areas designated in a community plan, a hearings officer correctly interprets the term "riparian corridor" in that code to apply only to riparian areas that are proximate to designated water areas. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

40. Wetlands. Where a county has an acknowledged Goal 5 program, which includes an acknowledged inventory, and rural wetlands are included in a special category that is not part of that inventory, amendments to the county's ordinance that modify protections to rural wetlands do not change the county's procedures for inventorying Goal 5 resources and do not conflict with Goal 5 because they continue to provide interim protection of resources in a special category. Redland/Viola/Fischer's Mill CPO v. Clackamas County, 33 Or LUBA 152 (1997).

40. Wetlands. City's interpretation of local wetland mitigation policy to "preserve wetland habitat" as allowing replacement of .05 acres of existing wetland with a larger wetland area is not clearly wrong and must be affirmed. Noble v. City of Fairview, 30 Or LUBA 180 (1995).

40. Wetlands. Where a local code requires a "recreation/open space area" as part of a mobile home park, it is reasonable for the local government to interpret "recreation/open space area" to include wetlands. Burghardt v. City of Molalla, 29 Or LUBA 223 (1995).

40. Wetlands. Where post-acknowledgment legislative land use regulation amendments make portions of a county's acknowledged program for wetlands protection inapplicable to rural wetlands, the county must demonstrate, either in the decision or through argument and citations to the record in its brief, that with regard to rural wetlands, the amendments result in a program that complies with Goal 5 and the Goal 5 rule. Redland/Viola/Fischer's Mill CPO v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 560 (1994).

40. Wetlands. If a county implements ORS 215.418(1) by providing in its code that it will notify DSL of "developments" in wetlands identified on the Statewide Wetlands Inventory, it must interpret "developments" consistently with the types of development applications and approvals for which such notice is required by ORS 215.418(1)(a) to (e). Redland/Viola/Fischer's Mill CPO v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 560 (1994).

40. Wetlands. Where the local code prohibits residential, but not commercial or industrial, development in certain wetlands, and includes density transfer provisions for residential developments limited by wetlands, but not for commercial or industrial developments, there is a rational basis to justify the disparate code treatment of residential versus commercial or industrial developments. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 27 Or LUBA 318 (1994).

40. Wetlands. Where petitioner fails to identify applicable legal standards regarding wetlands or explain why the proposal violates such applicable legal standards, petitioner supplies no basis for reversal or remand of the challenged decision. City of Barlow v. Clackamas County, 26 Or LUBA 375 (1994).

40. Wetlands. That an approved wetland mitigation plan includes property that was not within the development application, does not mean that a local government may not rely upon the wetland mitigation plan as a condition of approval of the development application. Choban v. Washington County, 25 Or LUBA 572 (1993).

40. Wetlands. Where a comprehensive plan policy specifically refers to wetlands identified in "future inventorying processes," it is reasonable for the local government to interpret that plan policy as inapplicable to individual permit decisions not involving wetlands identified on the local government's acknowledged plan inventory. Frankton Neigh. Assoc. v. Hood River County, 25 Or LUBA 386 (1993).

40. Wetlands. ORS 197.279(2) establishes the procedures required for adoption of a wetland conservation plan. A local government's failure to adopt a wetland conservation plan, provides no basis for reversal or remand of a challenged decision, because local governments are not required to adopt such plans. Clarke v. City of Hillsboro, 25 Or LUBA 195 (1993).

40. Wetlands. Where the local code includes an exception to the term "wetland" for wetlands created by "human activity as part of an approved development project," and there is no dispute that the subject wetland was created with the knowledge and consent of the local government, it is clearly wrong for the local government to fail to consider whether the wetland is within the local code exception. Annett v. Clackamas County, 25 Or LUBA 111 (1993).

40. Wetlands. Where a local decision maker relies on prior nonspecific and equivocal testimony concerning the location and presence of wetlands, in place of a well documented specific expert study, and adopts no findings explaining that choice, the challenged decision is not supported by substantial evidence. Reeder v. Clackamas County, 23 Or LUBA 583 (1992).

40. Wetlands. A local government decision adopting a proposed wetlands conservation plan for subsequent submittal to the director of Division of State Lands is not a final decision. Blatt v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 510 (1991).

40. Wetlands. An ordinance which adopts a natural resources management plan (NRMP) pursuant to local code provisions is a final decision with regard to adoption of a NRMP, even though the NRMP is also a proposed wetlands conservation plan and is submitted to the DSL for approval as such. Blatt v. City of Portland, 21 Or LUBA 510 (1991).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.010(1) broadly defines "blighted area" to include unproductive land, potentially including vacant, unimproved land. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. The apparent purpose of ORS 457.085(2)(j), which requires that for an urban renewal plan that includes a public building, the urban renewal plan must explain how the building serves or benefits the urban renewal area, is to ensure that cities do not fund public buildings with urban renewal revenues unless those buildings benefit or serve the privately owned portions of the urban renewal area. That purpose is not served by a public building that benefits only the publicly owned property on which the building is located. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Even if it is permissible under ORS Chapter 457 to create an urban renewal area and later add a geographically noncontiguous addition to the original renewal area, where the addition consists entirely of a publicly owned parcel on which a public building is proposed, ORS 457.085(2)(j) requires a finding supported by substantial evidence that the public building serves or benefits at least some portion of the original urban renewal area. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Substantial evidence does not support a city's finding that constructing a new elementary school on a parcel 10 miles from the original urban renewal area will benefit or serve that original urban renewal area, where there is no evidence that the school would serve any current or displaced residents of the renewal area. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS Chapter 457 authorizes cities to use urban renewal revenue to fund construction of public buildings, as long as such buildings benefit or serve the urban renewal area. However, the statute does not require that the public buildings increase economic productivity or increase tax revenues. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. The ORS 457.085(1) requirement that an urban renewal agency provide for public involvement in all stages in the development of an urban renewal plan is not violated when a city council adopts a resolution directing the urban renewal agency to develop a proposed urban renewal plan amendment. That the city council initiated the urban renewal process and ultimately approved the amended plan prepared by the urban renewal agency after a public process does not demonstrate that the city council prejudged the merits or were biased. Friends of Urban Renewal v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 148 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. There is no requirement under ORS 457.095(1) that every single property in a proposed urban renewal area be blighted; it is the area as a whole that must be blighted in one or more of the ways described in ORS 457.010(1). Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. In substantially amending an existing urban renewal area, a local government may be required under some circumstances to demonstrate that the newly proposed urban renewal area, as a whole, is blighted in one of the ways described in ORS 457.010(1). Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. A local government may not automatically rely on its original findings of blight where 10 years have passed since the original urban renewal area plan was adopted and there is no dispute that significant changes within the original plan boundary have occurred during that time period. Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.010(1)(a) requires a conclusion that identified buildings or structures are either "unfit" for their intended purpose or "unsafe to occupy" for those purposes because of the existence of one or more of the listed conditions. That explicit causal element means that the mere existence of one or more conditions listed in ORS 457.010(a)(A) through (E) is not sufficient, in itself, to demonstrate that the area including such buildings is blighted. Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Where a single-story building on a parcel proposed to be added to an urban renewal area could be redeveloped with a six-story building under current regulations, findings that the property is underutilized are sufficient to explain why that constitutes blight under ORS 457.010(1)(h). Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.020 is the declaration of necessity and purpose for the urban renewal statutes and does not provide specific approval criteria or requirements for urban renewal plans or amendments to those plans. Abeel v. City of Portland, 58 Or LUBA 247 (2009).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Where a county adopts a resolution approving an urban renewal plan under ORS 457.105 and in approving the plan finds that the plan conforms to the county's comprehensive plan, the resolution is a land use decision as defined in ORS 197.015(1)(a)(A). Granada Land Co. v. City of Albany, 56 Or LUBA 475 (2008).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.105 does not require a county to take action to approve or disapprove urban renewal plans that are located entirely within incorporated cities. Granada Land Co. v. City of Albany, 56 Or LUBA 475 (2008).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.085 and 457.095 require a local government to allow testimony on a revised draft of a proposed urban renewal plan. Granada Land Co. v. City of Albany, 56 Or LUBA 475 (2008).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.085(5) does not require a local government to re-notice affected taxing districts after a draft urban renewal plan that is initially provided to those taxing districts is revised. Granada Land Co. v. City of Albany, 56 Or LUBA 475 (2008).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. ORS 457.120(1) does not require a new notice to be mailed when a governing body considers revisions to a proposed urban renewal plan that has not yet been adopted. Granada Land Co. v. City of Albany, 56 Or LUBA 475 (2008).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Findings adequate to demonstrate that an urban renewal plan "conforms to the comprehensive plan as a whole" pursuant to ORS 457.095(3) must at least (1) set forth the applicable comprehensive plan provisions and (2) express the local government's judgment as to the relationship between the renewal plan and the pertinent plan provisions. While the phrase "as a whole" in ORS 457.095(3) may allow the local government to balance competing plan policies, it does not allow the local government to address only some policies it identifies as being applicable and, without explanation, fail to address others also identified as applicable. Zimmerman v. Columbia County, 40 Or LUBA 483 (2001).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. A comprehensive plan policy that the county restrict rural industrial development to uses that will not require improvements at public expense is not necessarily inconsistent with adoption of an urban renewal plan that will provide publicly funded improvements to support future rural industrial development, where the policy can be read in context to allow such improvements. In that circumstance, rather than interpret the policy in the first instance, LUBA will remand a decision approving the urban renewal plan to the county to explain why the urban renewal plan conforms to the policy. Zimmerman v. Columbia County, 40 Or LUBA 483 (2001).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. The assumptions underlying the county's revenue projections and its conclusion that an urban renewal plan is "feasible" under ORS 457.095(6) and 457.085(3)(g) must be supported by substantial evidence, i.e., evidence a reasonable person would rely upon. The local government need not demonstrate that projected new development is presently committed and certain to occur. Zimmerman v. Columbia County, 40 Or LUBA 483 (2001).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. A reasonable person could conclude that revenue projections for an urban renewal plan are feasible for purposes of ORS 457.095(6) and 457.085(3)(g), where expert evidence in the record shows that the total debt can be retired if four new industrial developments locate in the industrial park improved under the renewal plan, that three new industrial developments have advanced plans to locate in the park, and that the park, once improved, is likely to attract at least one other new industrial development over the relevant time period. Zimmerman v. Columbia County, 40 Or LUBA 483 (2001).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. In adopting an amendment to an urban renewal plan, a city commits no error in relying on the report adopted two years earlier in support of the original urban renewal plan, where there have been only relatively minor changes in the urban renewal district since the urban renewal plan was originally adopted. Holladay Investors, Ltd. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 90 (1991).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. In amending its urban renewal plan, a city is not required to adopt a financial analysis for an unsubsidized headquarters hotel or find that an unsubsidized headquarters hotel is financially feasible under ORS 457.085(3)(g) and 457.095(6) where (1) the original urban renewal plan included a subsidized headquarters hotel as an authorized project, and (2) the amendment to the urban renewal plan does not presently withdraw authorization for a public subsidy for the headquarters hotel. Holladay Investors, Ltd. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 90 (1991).

41. Urban Renewal Plans. Where a property tax limitation constitutional amendment renders uncertain an urban renewal agency's authority to collect property taxes outside the constitutional limit, an urban renewal agency's conclusion that it has such authority is supported by substantial evidence where that conclusion is based on an opinion of the state attorney general. Holladay Investors, Ltd. v. City of Portland, 22 Or LUBA 90 (1991).

42. Wrecking Certificates. The factors listed in ORS 822.140(3)(a) to (f) are considerations for the adoption of ordinances regulating the siting or expansion of wrecking yards. These factors are not approval standards for applications for local approval of individual Department of Motor Vehicles wrecking certificates. Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

42. Wrecking Certificates. A local governing body's findings that an applicant for a wrecking certificate is not "suitable" under ORS 822.140(2)(a) are inadequate if such findings simply state the applicant owns an unidentified wrecking yard in another jurisdiction that fails to comply with unspecified regulations. Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

42. Wrecking Certificates. A local governing body is required by ORS 197.175(2)(d) to apply applicable provisions of its comprehensive plan and land use regulations in determining whether a wrecking certificate should be approved, notwithstanding that it has not adopted regulations as authorized by ORS 822.140(3). Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

42. Wrecking Certificates. In the absence of a local or other regulation making provisions of ORS chapter 468, pertaining to pollution control, applicable to an application for a wrecking certificate as independent approval standards, that statute does not govern local approval of a wrecking certificate. Bradbury v. City of Independence, 22 Or LUBA 398 (1991).

43. Special Districts. ORS 268.347(1) is ambiguous in providing that a metropolitan service district has jurisdiction over boundary changes "within the boundaries of the district," because it is not clear whether the legislature intended that the district has jurisdiction only if the entire territory affected by the boundary changes is within the district, or if the district has jurisdiction if any part of the territory affected by the change is within the district. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. Under ORS 268.347(1), a metropolitan service district has jurisdiction over boundary changes "within all territory designated as urban reserves" prior to June 30, 1997, even if the decision establishing those urban reserves was subsequently overturned and the territory affected by the boundary change is no longer designated as an urban reserve. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. Absent some textual or contextual reason to conclude otherwise, LUBA will not presume that a special district boundary change regulation listing certain "urban services" is intended to incorporate the distinctions between "urban," "urbanizable" and "rural" lands articulated in 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Curry County, 301 Or 447, 724 P2d 268 (1986). Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. Intergovernmental agreements concerning the provision of water service are "agreement[s] for provision of an urban service" for purposes of establishing who is a necessary party to a boundary change under special district regulations, even if those agreements do not qualify as ORS 195.065 urban service agreements. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. While ORS 195.065 envisions that the focus of required urban service agreements will be on providing urban services inside UGBs, nothing in that statute precludes including provisions in the agreement for providing urban services to lands lying just beyond the UGB. That a service agreement includes such provisions does not mean that it does not qualify as an ORS 195.065 urban service agreement, for purposes of establishing who is a necessary party to a boundary change under special district regulations. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. The requirement in ORS 199.462(1) that boundary changes be based on consideration of economic, demographic and sociological trends does not implicitly authorize denial of a proposed water district boundary change for failure to consider whether one provider of water services is preferable to another. Clackamas River Water v. Metro, 52 Or LUBA 710 (2006).

43. Special Districts. Where a county approves formation of a special district and the county's comprehensive plan is acknowledged, the statewide planning goals do not apply, notwithstanding language in ORS 199.462(1) governing formation of special districts that requires consideration of the statewide planning goals. Kneeland v. Douglas County, 48 Or LUBA 347 (2005).

43. Special Districts. ORS 195.020(1) does not give a special district land use planning responsibilities. Rather, it limits a special district's exercise of its land use planning responsibilities if, in fact, the special district has been given such responsibilities by other legal authority. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 29 Or LUBA 354 (1995).

43. Special Districts. Where petitioner cites no comprehensive plan policies limiting the development allowed in a special district's territory, the development allowed by the plan in the district's territory is determined by the acknowledged plan map designations applied to such land and the local government's acknowledged implementing measures. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 29 Or LUBA 354 (1995).

43. Special Districts. A special district ordinance stating the district will provide service to all existing residences and all residences "hereafter constructed pursuant to a valid [county] building permit" is not inconsistent with the county comprehensive plan, because the county may issue building permits only if such permits are consistent with its acknowledged plan and implementing regulations. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 29 Or LUBA 354 (1995).

43. Special Districts. Where LUBA has affirmed a special district's decision repealing its water allocation program, the district's decision authorizing the provision of domestic water service to property designated and zoned for residential use under an acknowledged county plan and regulations is not a land use decision subject to LUBA review. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 29 Or LUBA 354 (1995).

43. Special Districts. A special district's repeal of a program affecting land use, like its adoption or implementation of such a program, is an "action * * * with respect to programs affecting land use" that must be in accordance with the goals pursuant to ORS 195.020(1) and, therefore, is a land use decision subject to review by LUBA. Churchill v. Neahkahnie Water District, 27 Or LUBA 721 (1994).

43. Special Districts. Where a school district concludes a proposed school site complies with a city's comprehensive plan in a school district proceeding in which the city participates, the city council nevertheless may reach a contrary conclusion concerning the proposed site's compliance with the city comprehensive plan in a subsequent city proceeding. Salem-Keizer School Dist. 24-J v. City of Salem, 27 Or LUBA 351 (1994).

43. Special Districts. A sanitary district's obligation to provide sewer service, and a person's right to receive such sewer service, are subject to county comprehensive plan and land use regulation limitations on the provision of such sewer service. Bear Creek Valley San. Auth. v. City of Medford, 27 Or LUBA 328 (1994).

43. Special Districts. An intergovernmental agreement between a city and a special district relating to city provision of sewage treatment service to the district, which interprets various provisions of the city's comprehensive plan and determines no plan provisions govern the proposal, applies comprehensive plan provisions and, therefore, is a land use decision subject to LUBA review. DLCD v. City of Donald, 27 Or LUBA 208 (1994).

43. Special Districts. Although Goal 2 requires that special district plans and actions related to land use must be consistent with city and county comprehensive plans, the goal does not establish any hierarchy for consistency between city and county plans. City of Portland v. Washington County, 27 Or LUBA 176 (1994).

43. Special Districts. A special district decision that finally determines policy questions concerning how the district will provide sewerage service to an area, where that service will occur, and the level of that service, is an exercise of the district's planning duties and responsibilities under ORS 195.020(1) that must comply with the Statewide Planning Goals and is a land use decision subject to LUBA review. DLCD v. Fargo Interchange Service District, 27 Or LUBA 150 (1994).

43. Special Districts. A school district boundary change under ORS chapter 330 is not a boundary change "as defined in ORS 197.175(1)," to which ORS 197.185(1) requires that the Statewide Planning Goals be applied. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Sherwood Education Dist. 88J, 26 Or LUBA 220 (1993).

43. Special Districts. A school district decision refusing to adjust its boundaries is not an exercise of the school district's planning duties, powers and responsibilities to which ORS 197.185(1) requires that the Statewide Planning Goals be applied, because there is no statutory or other legal requirement that a school district make such decisions as part of its land use planning responsibilities. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Sherwood Education Dist. 88J, 26 Or LUBA 220 (1993).

43. Special Districts. Where the challenged decision simply refuses to change school district boundaries, and petitioner does not demonstrate that any of the impacts it alleges will result from the decision are likely to occur, the challenged decision is not a significant impact test land use decision. J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Sherwood Education Dist. 88J, 26 Or LUBA 220 (1993).

43. Special Districts. Interpreting ORS 198.805(1) and 199.462(1), together with ORS 197.175 and 197.835, establishes that prior to acknowledgment the statewide planning goals are applicable to a county decision to approve formation of a special district under ORS 198.705 to 198.955, but after acknowledgment the acknowledged county comprehensive plan applies. Price v. Clatsop County, 25 Or LUBA 341 (1993).

43. Special Districts. Where a water district has adopted a water allocation program that significantly limits the development of land in the district otherwise allowable under the applicable acknowledged county comprehensive plan and land use regulations, under ORS 197.185(1) a district decision made under such a program is "an action * * * with respect to a program affecting land use" to which the statewide planning goals apply and, therefore, is a "land use decision." Olson v. Neahkahnie Water District, 25 Or LUBA 776 (1993).

43. Special Districts. A special district decision is a "land use decision" subject to LUBA review if it meets either (1) the statutory definition in ORS 197.015(10), or (2) the significant impact test. Keating v. Heceta Water District, 24 Or LUBA 175 (1992).

43. Special Districts. In the absence of an adopted district program regulating the approval of water hookups for land use purposes, a water district action to approve an individual water hookup for a use consistent with the applicable acknowledged county plan and land use regulations is not an "action with respect to a program affecting land use" under ORS 197.185(1), to which the statewide planning goals apply. Keating v. Heceta Water District, 24 Or LUBA 175 (1992).

43. Special Districts. A water district decision authorizing the provision of domestic water service to property designated and zoned for residential use by an acknowledged county plan and land use regulations is not a "significant impact test" land use decision. Keating v. Heceta Water District, 24 Or LUBA 175 (1992).

43. Special Districts. Where a comprehensive plan policy specifically provides for formation of service districts within one of three types of designated rural areas, and there is nothing inconsistent with the language of that policy, its context or its purpose in interpreting it as having nothing to do with service districts in the other two types of rural areas, the local government's interpretation of that policy as not precluding formation of service districts in the other two types of rural areas will be sustained. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

43. Special Districts. Comprehensive plan provisions that govern the circumstances warranting formation of service districts, the permissible scope of sewerage facilities and whether such facilities are to be provided by public or private entities, are correctly interpreted as not prohibiting the formation of service districts to provide sewerage services. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

43. Special Districts. Where a local government decision forming a service district to provide sewerage services discusses, but does not authorize, a particular means of sewage treatment, petitioner's challenge of the decision on the basis that the particular means of treatment violates a plan policy concerning extension of urban services outside UGBs is premature. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

43. Special Districts. The specific reference in ORS 197.175(1) to formation of service districts, and the requirement that such actions comply with the statewide planning goals, do not mean the goals continue to apply to such actions after acknowledgment. After acknowledgment, the standards in the acknowledged comprehensive plan and land use regulations control such actions, unless a plan or land use regulation amendment is adopted or required. DLCD v. Marion County, 23 Or LUBA 619 (1992).

43. Special Districts. Where no cooperative agreement has been entered into by a district and the applicable county pursuant to ORS 197.185(2), pursuant to ORS 197.185(1) the goals continue to apply to the district's actions with respect to programs affecting land use. Adkins v. Heceta Water District, 23 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

43. Special Districts. A domestic water supply district's adoption of water hookup standards which will significantly affect development activity is an action with respect to a program affecting land use to which the statewide planning goals apply under ORS 197.185(1) and, therefore, is a land use decision subject to LUBA review. Adkins v. Heceta Water District, 23 Or LUBA 207 (1992).

43. Special Districts. Where a county has never entered into any cooperative agreements with special districts pursuant to ORS 197.185(2), what such a cooperative agreement might contain is entirely speculative and, therefore, the lack of such an agreement between the county and a district does not render inapplicable the ORS 197.830(6)(b)(B) "appearance" requirement for intervention in an appeal of a district decision. Adkins v. Heceta Water District, 22 Or LUBA 840 (1992).

43. Special Districts. ORS 197.185(1) requires that special districts make land use decisions in accordance with the statewide planning goals, and Goal 2 requires that special district land use decisions be consistent with the relevant county comprehensive plan. Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 592 (1992).

43. Special Districts. A service district is not required to approve sewer and water hookups on a first come, first served basis, where none of the applicable comprehensive plan provisions adopted pursuant to Goal 11 limit the manner in which such hookups must be approved. Price v. Arch Cape Service District, 22 Or LUBA 592 (1992).

44. Marginal Lands. "In-home commercial activities" are not authorized by right in resource zones, even where (1) such activities are accessory to residential uses and would have minimal to no impact on resource lands, (2) such an approach would streamline local permitting by avoiding the conditional use process required for home occupations, and (3) such activities are consistent with a model ordinance prepared by DLCD. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. Where certain activities are allowed as accessory to a home occupation use, they may not be allowed through a Type I process (i.e., ministerial review of an application based on clear and objective standards and criteria) that does not provide the review that is required by ORS 215.448(1) and (4). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. Where local code amendments allow accessory uses and structures in an EFU zone, arguments that (1) the amendments improperly exempt such structures from a local code requirement that steps be taken to minimize adverse impacts on farm and forest uses and (2) the provisions governing such uses are inconsistent with ORS 215.213(3)(b) provide no basis for reversal or remand where the amended code is comparable to the prior code and where the petitioner does not develop any argument explaining why the amendments are substantive instead of technical. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. A marginal lands county is not required to include in its code a requirement to consider the cumulative impacts from existing or potential lot-of-record dwellings in approving dwellings under OAR 660-033-0130(4)(a)(D)(ii) and (iii). Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 80 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. Where a neighbor describes observing, from their living room view, minimal orchard, meadow, and garden-related activity on the property and, other than horses belonging to some of the owners of the property, never seeing any livestock or other animals on the property between 1970 and 2004, and where the neighbor subsequently reiterates that there was no farm use, such as cattle or crops, between 1978 and 1983 and that, during the 1980s, owners of the property kept their show horses on the property, a local government may reasonably conclude that the property was "not managed for three of the five calendar years preceding January 1, 1983, as part of a farm operation that produced $20,000 or more in annual gross income" for purposes of former ORS 197.247(1)(a) (1991), even where the record includes (1) aerial photos from 1979 and 1982, (2) a 1979 permit for a new barn, (3) a 1987 farm dwelling approval, and (4) testimony from other area residents contradicting the neighbor's testimony, where the record does not disclose the proximity of the other area residents' properties to the subject property or whether those area residents had made firsthand observations of the subject property during the relevant statutory period. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. Under former ORS 197.247(1)(b)(A) (1991), an applicant is not required to show that at least 50 percent of the proposed marginal land is made up of lots or parcels that are 20 acres or less in size and that 50 percent of the land within one-quarter mile of the perimeter is made up of lots or parcels that are 20 acres or less in size; rather, the statute requires only one calculation, and an applicant is required to show that at least 50 percent of the proposed marginal land combined with the land within one-quarter mile of the perimeter is made up of lots or parcels that are 20 acres or less in size. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. For purposes of designating marginal lands under former ORS 197.247 (1991), it is not enough for an applicant to provide a list of the allegedly qualifying lots or parcels; the applicant must provide foundational evidence that the lots or parcels are lawful and that lots or parcels that were in common ownership on July 1, 1983, are not overcounted. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. In redesignating and rezoning protected habitat from forest land to marginal land under former ORS 197.247 (1991), a local government errs by excluding adjacent forest land from the impact area under OAR 661-023-0040(3) without establishing that it is not also protected habitat. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. An attorney-land-use-consultant-prepared ESEE analysis including numerous plans, reports, and other documents supporting the redesignation and rezoning of protected habitat from forest land to marginal land under former ORS 197.247 (1991) is not sufficient to rebut expert testimony including (1) a letter authored by an ODFW biologist that generally discusses the cumulative impact of development on habitat and (2) general ODFW guidance related to levels of residential density in areas of peripheral big game habitat absent evidence of the attorney land use consultant's expertise. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 80 Or LUBA 205 (2019).

44. Marginal Lands. The "gross income" test under ORS 197.247(1)(a) requires a finding that the subject property was "not managed during three of the five calendar years preceding January 1, 1983, as part of a farm operation that produced $20,000 or more in annual gross income or a forest operation capable of producing an average, over the growth cycle, of $10,000 in annual gross income[.]" Sworn affidavits may be relied on to demonstrate that the gross income test is satisfied where the county commissioners concluded that the sworn affidavits were credible and where the petitioner has not shown why a sworn affidavit does not constitute substantial evidence. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 258 (2017).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 197.247(1)(b)(B) requires that marginal land must be "located within an area of not less than 240 acres of which at least 60 percent is composed of lots or parcels that are 20 acres or less in size on July 1, 1983[.]" In applying the statute, a county need not determine whether the subject property includes lawfully created "lots" or "parcels." Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 258 (2017).

44. Marginal Lands. In applying the 60 percent "parcelization test" described in ORS 197.247(1)(b)(B), the county's decision that the proposed marginal land was located within an area at least 60 percent of which is composed of "lawfully created parcels" that were 20 acres or less in size on July 1, 1983, is supported by substantial evidence in the record where the record includes copies of assessors' records, deeds and legal lot verifications for the parcels. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 258 (2017).

44. Marginal Lands. A study area that is 680 acres in size is not disqualified under the 197.247(1)(b)(B) "parcelization" portion of the "marginal land" statute, which requires the proposed marginal land be located within an area not less than 240 acres, where the legislative history supports a conclusion that it was the legislature's intent to allow an applicant wide latitude in meeting the test. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 75 Or LUBA 258 (2017).

44. Marginal Lands. OAR 660-006-0010, which requires that a forest land inventory include a mapping of forest site class, applies both to a local government's initial inventory of forest lands and to subsequent county decisions that modify that inventory, such as designating forest land as "marginal lands" under ORS 197.247 (1991). Herring v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 417 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. A county's conclusion that OAR 660-010-0010 does not apply to a decision designating forest land as marginal lands under ORS 197.247 (1991) is harmless error, where the decision is supported by an analysis that is based on objective, empirical measurements of forest productivity consistent with the rule's requirements. Herring v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 417 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. Because the legislature adopted the marginal lands statute in 1983, it is reasonable to assume that the $10,000 threshold in ORS 197.247 (1991) for forest productivity is expressed in 1983 dollars, in which case it is also reasonable to assume that the legislature did not intend to preclude use of 1983 log prices in determining whether the subject property is capable of producing an average of $10,000 in annual gross income over the growth cycle. Herring v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 417 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. LUBA will affirm a county's choice to rely on expert testimony that a 50-year rotation or growth cycle is the predominant forest practice west of the Cascades in applying the forest productivity prong of the marginal lands test, over contrary evidence submitted by non-experts that does not conclusively establish that it is error to use a 50-year growth cycle. Herring v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 417 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. A county's erroneous finding that designating forest land as marginal lands under ORS 197.247 (1991) is not subject to OAR 660-006-0010, which governs the inventory of forest lands, is harmless error, where the county's decision nonetheless complies with the substantive requirements of the rule. Anderson v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 669 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. A county reasonably relies on a forester's opinion that Ponderosa pine is a more valuable species to grow on certain soils than Douglas fir, over conflicting opinions by persons who are not soil or forestry experts. Anderson v. Lane County, 54 Or LUBA 669 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. A local government errs in geographically limiting its inquiry regarding what constitutes a "farm operation" for purposes of ORS 197.247(1)(a) to only lands "adjacent to" or "contiguous with" the property that is the subject of the marginal lands application. Walker v. Lane County, 53 Or LUBA 374 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 197.247(1)(a) and 197.247(5)(1991) allow a county to rely on an assumption of a 50-year growth cycle in calculating the production capability of property. Walker v. Lane County, 53 Or LUBA 374 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. Evidence of actual stocking rates for the property, when taken in conjunction with evidence that actual production was reflective of potential production for the property, is substantial evidence that the property is not capable of generating $10,000 in annual gross income as required by ORS 197.247(1)(a) (1991). Walker v. Lane County, 53 Or LUBA 374 (2007).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 197.247(1)(a) (1991), which allows counties to designate as marginal land property that was not managed during three of the five years preceding January 1, 1983 as part of a forest operation producing an average of $10,000 in annual gross income, implicitly requires that counties use 1983 timber prices in estimating the annual timber revenue derived from the property. Just v. Lane County, 49 Or LUBA 456 (2005).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 197.247(1)(b)(C) requires that counties use the agricultural classification system in use by the Soil Conservation Service on October 15, 1983, in determining whether proposed marginal lands are predominantly composed of Class VI soils. A county is entitled to rely upon a 1987 Soil Conservation Service soil survey that is a product of the classification system in use on October 15, 1983. Just v. Lane County, 49 Or LUBA 456 (2005).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 215.316(1) (1993) expresses a legislative intent to retroactively prohibit counties from designating resource lands as marginal lands, and from adopting plan and code provisions allowing additional nonresource uses on such marginal lands, after January 1, 1993. ORS 215.316(1) (1993) does not express an intent to retroactively prohibit counties that have not designated marginal lands from applying either ORS 215.283 (1991) or the supposedly stricter provisions of 215.213(1) to (3) (1991) to their exclusive farm use zones. 1000 Friends of Oregon v. Marion County, 27 Or LUBA 303 (1994).

44. Marginal Lands. The language in ORS 197.247(1)(a) that "[t]he proposed marginal land was not managed, during three of the five calendar years preceding January 1, 1983 * * *" applies to forest as well as farm operations. DLCD v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 33 (1992).

44. Marginal Lands. ORS 197.247(1)(a) requires a two-part inquiry to determine whether a forest parcel may be designated as "marginal" land. First, a county must determine whether the land was managed as part of a forest operation during three of the five years from 1978 through 1982. Second, a county must determine whether the forest operation in question is "capable of producing an average of 10,000 dollars in annual gross income." DLCD v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 33 (1992).

44. Marginal Lands. Under ORS 197.247(1)(a), in determining whether a forest operation is capable of producing an average of 10,000 dollars in annual gross income over the growth cycle, what occurred on a particular parcel during the 1978-1982 time period is not the sole determinant of the "capability" of the subject parcel to produce trees, because the growth cycle of trees may greatly exceed the specified five-year period. DLCD v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 33 (1992).

44. Marginal Lands. The requirement of ORS 197.247(1)(a) that land be "capable" of producing the specified annual income "over the growth cycle" requires an evaluation of the income potential of the property, assuming the use of reasonable forest management practices over the growth cycle. DLCD v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 33 (1992).

44. Marginal Lands. Under ORS 197.247(1)(a), the classification of the soils on a particular parcel is not dispositive of such parcel's capability to produce income over the growth cycle. DLCD v. Lane County, 23 Or LUBA 33 (1992).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A stipulation in the applicant's application materials to adopt regulations in the future to ensure that a sewer system will not serve rural users is insufficient to demonstrate compliance with OAR 660-011-0060(3)(b) and Goal 11 where the applicant provides no explanation of why the stipulation is enforceable. Jacobus v. Klamath County, 81 Or LUBA 785 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a condition of approval requires the applicant to obtain all necessary state and federal permits, the fact that the applicant, shortly after issuance of the decision, files applications to bypass state and federal permit requirements provides no basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition v. Coos County, 81 Or LUBA 839 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring a subsequent master planning process to determine the type and design of a fence surrounding a proposed nonfarm use in order to prevent "trespass related impacts" to surrounding lands devoted to farm use is not sufficient to satisfy the farm impacts test at ORS 215.296(1) where the condition excludes potential trespass from the "non-general public," such as the applicant's employees and agents, and the condition is not "clear and objective," as required by ORS 215.296(2), where it does not define "trespass related impacts." Schrepel v. Yamhill County, 81 Or LUBA 895 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a condition of approval for a nonfarm dwelling provides that "[t]he proposed dwelling site shall be located as represented by the applicant's written statements and approved site plan" and that "[a]ny deviation from this representation shall require an application for a modification of conditions with the applicable fees subject to the Planning Director's discretion," a hearings official misinterprets that condition by concluding that it provides the director discretion regarding whether a modification application will be required; instead, that condition provides the director discretion to review and issue decisions on modification applications. Matthews v. Lane County, 81 Or LUBA 757 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring an applicant to obtain a wetland removal/fill permit from DSL and to provide that permit to a service district with jurisdiction over sewer, water quality, and water quantity prior to conducting any grading work or construction does not violate a local code provision requiring that conditions of approval be "designed to protect the public from potential adverse impacts of the proposed use or development" merely because the condition does not prohibit grading work or construction until any appeals of the DSL permit have concluded. KB Trees, LLC v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 325 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring the applicant to deploy flaggers at an intersection to inform attendees that parking is unavailable and deny them entry when parking demand exceeds the available capacity is not inadequate merely because it does not duplicate legal requirements that flaggers receive special training and permits. Tarr v. Multnomah County, 81 Or LUBA 242 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a county approves a petitioner's application subject to a condition of approval, where the approval requires that the condition be met prior to the expiration of the approval period, where county counsel subsequently sends the petitioner a letter concluding that the petitioner had not satisfied the condition and, thus, that the approval had expired, and where the petitioner does not assert that the letter involves the application of land use regulations or identify any land use regulation that county counsel applied or should have applied, LUBA will conclude that the letter is not a "land use decision," as defined in ORS 197.015(10)(a)(A), and that LUBA lacks jurisdiction to review it. Schofield v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 143 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a county has approved a petitioner's application for a nonfarm dwelling subject to a condition of approval; where the petitioner has constructed the nonfarm dwelling and related improvements; where the petitioner appeals a subsequent letter from county counsel concluding that the petitioner had not satisfied the condition and, thus, that the approval had expired; and where LUBA concludes that it lacks jurisdiction to review the letter; but where the county or an opponent may commence an enforcement action requiring the petitioner to remove the nonfarm dwelling and related improvements that may involve the county's interpretation of the condition, LUBA will conclude that the issues raised in the appeal are not moot and transfer the appeal to circuit court, rather than dismissing the appeal. Schofield v. Douglas County, 81 Or LUBA 143 (2020).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. In verifying a nonconforming auto yard use, a local government errs in failing to describe the nature and extent of the auto yard use in a way that imposes an upper limit on the number of vehicles stored on-site, consistent with the upper number present at or approximate to the relevant date. Limiting the physical extent of the auto yard use to that which is visible in an aerial photograph from the relevant year and limiting annual sales of vehicles to the approximate number sold in the relevant year are not sufficient to prevent unauthorized expansion or alteration of the nonconforming use where the operator could stockpile more vehicles on-site, for example, by parking them at tighter intervals or stacking them, than were present in the relevant year. Morgan v. Jackson County, 80 Or LUBA 59 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a prior decision approved a plan amendment and zone change for the subject property and included a condition of approval limiting the type of future development to a "retail shopping center" and the size of future development to a certain square footage of gross leasable area, but where the prior decision approved no specific development, voluntary descriptions, statements, or representations made by the applicant during the prior proceeding regarding the particular store with which the shopping center would be developed are not binding on the applicant in a subsequent site plan review proceeding unless they were memorialized in conditions of approval for the prior decision. M & T Partners, Inc. v. City of Salem, 80 Or LUBA 221 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring an applicant that has applied to site a solar facility in an area currently used for growing Christmas trees to offer a fire safety training course to the local fire district is inadequate to establish that "[t]he proposed use will not * * * significantly increase risks to fire suppression personnel" for purposes of OAR 660-006-0025(5)(b) and local code provisions implementing that rule. Chang v. Clackamas County, 80 Or LUBA 321 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Local governments are not required to condition approvals rather than deny noncompliant applications. H2D2 Properties, LLC v. Deschutes County, 80 Or LUBA 528 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a city's code lists a number of "factors" to be considered in approving an annexation, including "[a]dequacy and availability of public facilities and services to service potential development," but the city's code does not require that the city identify how infrastructure will be paid for, or by whom, as part of an annexation decision, and the city's findings suggest the city's capital improvement program (CIP) will be amended prior to development to list the new water main as a public facility, although the city does not intend to rely upon the CIP as a source of funding or authority for the new water main, petitioners have not established a CIP amendment must be required as a condition of approval or that the city otherwise erred in assigning a positive value to this factor in approving the proposed annexation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a city rezones a portion of a property designated mixed use corridor (MUC) on the city's comprehensive plan, from FU-10 (future urban 10-acre) to NC (neighborhood commercial), and petitioners argue that the NC zone is inconsistent with the city's comprehensive plan which directs the city to "[f]ocus transit-oriented, higher intensity, mixed-use development along selected transit corridors," because the subject property is not near a transit corridor, petitioners' premise—that the MUC plan designation is used only where the city intends to promote transit-oriented development along transit corridors—is incorrect. The MUC plan designation is implemented by four commercial zoning districts: one of which is the NC zone, which is not a transit-oriented zone, and is clearly not intended to be placed along transit corridors. Therefore, the city's decision to rezone its property to NC is not inconsistent with the property's MUC comprehensive plan designation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. In determining that a landfill does not "[f]orce a significant change" in accepted farm practices on surrounding lands devoted to farm use under ORS 215.296(1)(a), a county errs in relying on a condition of approval requiring the landfill to install a second fence between the working face of the landfill and an adjacent farm to capture more trash that escapes the landfill before it enters onto the adjacent farm, where there is no quantification in the record of how effective the existing fence is at intercepting landfill trash. Stop the Dump Coalition v. Yamhill County, 79 Or LUBA 459 (2019).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When the purpose of a condition is to set a baseline to measure traffic impact throughout multiple phases of the development consistent with the "trip cap" imposed to meet Transportation Planning Rule, at OAR 660-012-0060 requirements without mitigation, a hearings officer does not err in concluding that the standards are to be interpreted based on the use of the same version of the Institute of Transportation Engineers Trip Generation Manual (ITE Manual). Additionally, the ITE Manual is a professional treatise that sets out methods for making evidentiary judgments regarding the traffic impacts of development, but it is not part of the city's acknowledged comprehensive plan or land use regulations, and therefore is not itself "standards and criteria" for purposes of ORS 227.178(3)(a) or 227.173(1), at least as applied in the present circumstance, thus compliance with the trip cap be determined by consistent applications of the same ITE Manual codes used to establish the trip cap. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 78 Or LUBA 63 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A zone verification is a limited tool and only those issues actually addressed in the zone verification decision are protected from collateral attack. Richardi v. City of Eugene, 89 Or LUBA 299 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. That a county's amended Transportation System Plan (TSP) includes language recommending that the county acquire property to develop a transportation facility does not mean that whatever land use permits are required to actually construct the facility under the local code or state law are thereby waived. The county could choose to approve whatever land use permits are required under law at the same time it approves an amendment to its TSP, but the latter is not a substitute for the former, or vice versa. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A project applicant is not required to file and win a quiet title action in circuit court as a condition precedent to filing the application simply because another party disputes the applicant's title to the property on which the proposed development is to occur. When a party disputes the applicant's title under a legal theory that can only be resolved in circuit court, neither the county nor LUBA is in a position to resolve the legal dispute over whether the applicant/deed owner's title is good. For that reason, the county is also not obligated to adopt findings resolving the title dispute. In circumstances where consent or lack of ownership has a bearing on an approval criteria, we have held that the decision maker may be required to impose conditions to ensure that the required consent is obtained prior to construction. However, where ownership of the subject property is not an approval criterion, we have never held that the applicant has the obligation to quiet title in the subject property where some doubt is raised during the proceedings below as to the legality of that title, or that the decision maker is obliged to adopt findings addressing the likelihood that the applicant will prevail in a quiet title action. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring the applicant to "improve" an existing street to provide 20 feet of "paving" is not ambiguous regarding whether the required improvements include only pavement or also include sidewalks, etc., where the city's finding that the condition is "roughly proportional" to the impacts of the proposed planned unit development clearly indicate that the required improvements include only paving. Conte v. City of Eugene, 77 Or LUBA 69 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A hearings officer errs in failing to include a condition approval limiting mining activities to five acres at any one time and requiring reclamation of each five-acre area prior to mining the next five-acre area, given the importance of the proposed five-acre limit to the hearings officer's conclusion that the mining activities would not have a significant impact on wildlife habitat. Martucci v. Jackson County, 77 Or LUBA 252 (2018).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A hearings officer errs in interpreting a condition of approval for a multi-phase planned unit development (PUD), which requires that the applicant for final phase approval submit a traffic study to determine if additional improvements are necessary to comply with the Transportation Planning Rule, to effectively supersede a different condition of approval applicable to all phases of the PUD that limits maximum development on the site to produce no more than a specified number of vehicle trips, where the two conditions can instead be interpreted to give effect to both. Willamette Oaks LLC v. City of Eugene, 76 Or LUBA 187 (2017).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a city council has clear authority under a development code to impose conditions of approval to address potential land use conflicts and traffic congestion, and the city council appears to fail to impose conditions requested by project opponents because it was advised by county staff that it lacked authority to impose such conditions of approval, remand is required to the city council to consider imposition of any conditions of approval that it finds are warranted to mitigate any such potential land use conflicts or traffic congestion. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city council does not err by failing to impose a condition requiring that a hotel be reduced in height to address potential land use conflicts, where the city council finds a shorter hotel is not needed to avoid potential land use conflicts. Whether a hotel of the height proposed will present land use conflicts with neighboring properties is a subjective determination, and where LUBA concludes the record establishes the city council's decision not to impose a condition was within its discretion, LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges the city council's failure to impose the condition. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A reasonable decision maker could conclude that a 3,050-square-foot Event Center that is marketed to both hotel patrons and to the general public would generate larger events, with far more event attendees, and more traffic and parking demand from off-site than an Event Center that is conditioned to limit the Event Center use to hotel patrons and their guests only. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A county does not err in failing to process an application to vacate a public easement as a modification of a condition of approval for the subdivision in which the easement is located, where the easement was not required as a condition of subdivision approval, but instead stemmed from a private agreement between the developer and others. Neighbors for Smart Growth v. Washington County, 76 Or LUBA 319 (2017).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. LUBA owes no deference to a governing body's interpretation of a condition of approval imposed by a hearings officer in a prior decision, although deference may be required for any code interpretations the governing body adopts in the course of interpreting the condition of approval. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A county decision interpreting a condition of approval to be satisfied by an agreement between the county and only one of two owners of a common tract is not a "collateral attack" on a prior LUBA decision, in which LUBA assumed, but did not decide, that the same condition of approval would be satisfied by an agreement between the two current owners of the common tract. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A circuit court order that requires the two owners of a common tract to enter into an agreement with each other to pay taxes and maintenance costs does not preclude a county from interpreting a partition condition of approval to require one or both tract owners to enter into separate agreements with the county to ensure maintenance of the common tract, or obligate the county to interpret the condition of approval to require the two owners to enter into an agreement with each other. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a hearings officer approved a partition subject to a condition of approval requiring the developer to record, prior to the sale of any parcels, an agreement to maintain a common tract, but the condition does not identify the necessary parties to the agreement, a county does not err in interpreting the condition to be satisfied by allowing the county to enter into separate agreements with the owners of the common tract to ensure maintenance of the tract. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. LUBA will affirm an interpretation of a condition of approval requiring an "agreement" to maintain a common tract, such that the required agreement is not limited to Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions (CC&Rs), where the condition does not expressly limit the agreement to CC&Rs. Kuhn v. Deschutes County, 74 Or LUBA 190 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a hearings official initially expresses concern that use of an accessory structure for monthly gatherings of over 40 people could not be viewed as "accessory" to the residential use of a forest zoned property, but after the applicant proposed to limit those large parties to no more than four per year concluded that the use qualified as "accessory," the hearings official was required to impose a condition of approval to limit the proposed accessory use to no more than four large parties per year. Kaplowitz v. Lane County, 74 Or LUBA 386 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where an applicant obtains from the city a zoning classification decision concluding that a specific type of housing development is an allowed use, but noting that if the use is changed to provide services to persons other than residents of the development, the development must be approved as a conditional use, and the applicant thereafter seeks and the city approves building permits based on the same specific housing development proposed in the zoning classification decision, the city is not required to impose conditions to preclude the applicant from changing the use to one that requires conditional use approval. McCollough v. City of Eugene, 74 Or LUBA 573 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where petitioners concede that a hearings officer was not legally obligated to develop conditions of approval that would make an application for alteration of a nonconforming use approvable, and petitioners proposed no conditions of approval themselves that would have permitted the hearings officer to approve the alteration, petitioners fail to demonstrate error in the hearings officer's decision. Meyer v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 1 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Applicants for quasi-judicial land use permit approval have the burden of proposing any conditions of approval that might be necessary for approval.

Local governments frequently develop and impose conditions of approval that they conclude are necessary to approve such applications, but local governments are not obligated to do so. J. Conser and Sons, LLC v. City of Millersburg, 73 Or LUBA 57 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a local government is relying on a particular development or a particular limitation on development to find a relevant approval standard is satisfied, there must be something in place to ensure the relied upon development or limitation will become a reality. That reality could be achieved through a condition of approval or it could be achieved because the desired development or development limitation is part of the approved proposal. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where there are applications pending for permits to construct the redevelopment that will replace a historic resource that is to be demolished, and a demolition permit to carry out a demolition review approval decision may not be approved until those permits have been issued, the redevelopment that the city relied on to find that demolition review criteria are satisfied is adequately guaranteed. Fernandez v. City of Portland, 73 Or LUBA 107 (2016).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where an ordinance that modified access spacing standards was conditioned so that it would not become effective until a development agreement for construction of roadway improvements specified in the ordinance was executed, execution of a development agreement for improvements that vary significantly from the improvements called for in the ordinance is not sufficient to make the ordinance effective. Space Age Fuel, Inc. v. Umatilla County, 72 Or LUBA 92 (2015).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. An assignment of error that argues that the county erred in failing to impose the same conditions of approval that it imposed more than five years earlier in a decision approving the same proposal that has since become void provides no basis for reversal or remand of the decision, where the petitioner does not identify any requirement in the county code or state law or regulation that obligates the county to carry over previously imposed conditions of approval simply because they were imposed five years earlier. Devin Oil Co., Inc. v. Morrow County, 72 Or LUBA 240 (2015).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Any inadequacy in conditions that are not adopted to ensure compliance with any approval criterion is harmless error and does not provide a basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Truth in Site Coalition v. City of Bend, 71 Or LUBA 348 (2015).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Because it is common for a multi-phased tentative subdivision approval to include conditions of approval that apply only to certain phases of development, it is incumbent on a petitioner to raise at the local proceeding any issues involving a legal standard that requires either (1) independent approval of a particular phase of development or (2) the conditioning of construction of an earlier phase of development on fulfillment of conditions applicable to a subsequent phase. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A petitioner does not establish that a hearings officer erred in failing to condition approval of the first phase of a multi-phase development on completion of the second phase, where the petitioner does not identify any code standard or condition governing Phase I that will be violated if Phase II is not completed. Carver v. Washington County, 70 Or LUBA 23 (2014).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Modifying a condition of approval to change the source of water used for irrigating landscaping does not obligate the local government to also review and approve a landscaping plan as part of the hearing on the modification, where an unmodified condition provides for review and approval of the landscaping plan as an administrative decision to be issued prior to building permits, and the petitioner's argument that review of the landscaping plan will be discretionary and must be made under proceedings providing notice and hearing is a collateral attack on the unmodified condition. Foland v. Jackson County, 70 Or LUBA 247 (2014).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval requiring "substantial compliance" with a detailed list of specific design features for a proposed commemorative garden is adequate to ensure that the purpose of the condition will be met, notwithstanding that "substantial compliance" gives the applicant some latitude in fulfilling the condition. Rushing v. City of Salem, 70 Or LUBA 448 (2014).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Remand is required where city code limits a home occupation to 600 square feet in size in an accessory structure, the undisputed evidence is that the home occupation will occupy more than 600 square feet, but the city's decision simply imposes a condition of approval limiting the home occupation to 600 square feet. Stevens v. City of Island City, 68 Or LUBA 112 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A zone change applicant's voluntary representations regarding the density and number of parking spaces that could be constructed under the new zoning are not binding on that applicant's subsequent design review application that proposes a higher density and fewer parking spaces, where nothing in the zone change criteria required submittal or approval of development plans, and the hearings officer did not consider or rely upon the applicant's voluntary representations in approving the zone change. Sellwood-Moreland Improvement League v. City of Portland, 68 Or LUBA 213 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A county does not err in imposing a condition of approval that requires an applicant for a conditional use airport to obtain approval from the Oregon Department of Aviation, where the decision makes clear that the requirement to obtain ODA approval is not intended as a substitute for analyzing whether the airport is compatible with the surrounding neighborhood. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition that prohibits an airplane from flying at low altitudes over houses or animals is not impermissibly vague when it is read in context with other related conditions that require take offs and landings to occur only over the Santiam River and prohibit take offs and landings over dwellings. Yih v. Linn County, 68 Or LUBA 412 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Even if a county is not required to issue Willamette Greenway approvals at the same time it issues a use permit to retroactively approve a wedding event business within the Greenway, a county must nonetheless impose conditions or other measures sufficient to ensure that required Greenway permits will be obtained. White v. Lane County, 68 Or LUBA 423 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A development code that provides that a permit is void if "conditions of a permit or approval" are not substantially or completely satisfied within two years is properly interpreted to refer to conditions of approval in the permit that are enumerated as such, and the development code need not be interpreted to require substantial or complete construction of other aspects of the development approved under the permit that are not reflected in the conditions of permit approval. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a development code requires that conditions of permit approval be satisfied within two years after the permit approval becomes final to avoid having the permit approval become void, and satisfying those 38 conditions within two years will be difficult because satisfying some of those conditions of approval would require the applicant to first secure additional approval decisions, a hearings officer is not permitted to interpret the code to require that the applicant only satisfy those conditions of approval that do not require additional approval decisions. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a development code requires that permit conditions of approval must be substantially satisfied and that "any failure to fully comply with the conditions is not the fault of the applicant," for a county hearings officer to find that the permit is not void, the hearing hearings officer must be able to find both that all conditions of approval, viewed as a whole, have been substantially exercised and that, for any of the conditions of approval where there has been a failure to fully exercise the condition, the applicant is not at fault. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a development code requires that conditions of permit approval be satisfied within two years after the permit becomes final and provides that the permit approval is void unless the conditions of approval are satisfied "within the time period," a permit opponent's argument that the applicant may not rely on actions that were taken to satisfy the condition before the permit was approved is textually plausible. Nevertheless, where LUBA cannot identify any reason why the enactor of the code would have intended that the actions that satisfied the condition of approval must be duplicated "within the time period," LUBA will not interpret the code to impose such a requirement. Gould v. Deschutes County, 67 Or LUBA 1 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Failure to impose a condition of approval requiring the applicant to modify a settlement agreement with neighbors to allow a second dwelling on a rural residential property is not a basis for remand, where the petitioner fails to establish that the settlement agreement limits the number of dwellings allowed on the property. Purtzer v. Jackson County, 67 Or LUBA 205 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A county does not improperly substitute a condition of approval for a finding that the proposed home occupation will be conducted "primarily in buildings," where the county finds based on testimony below that the home occupation will be conducted primarily in buildings and the county imposes a condition of approval that no more than 20 percent of any home occupation event may be conducted outside a building. Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval that no more than 20 percent of any home occupation event may be conducted outside a building is not impermissibly imprecise, notwithstanding that neighbors and the county may have different understandings regarding how to analyze and apply that 20 percent limitation. Green v. Douglas County, 67 Or LUBA 234 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a county has authority to impose conditions of approval, a condition that requires a sworn annual report that demonstrates that a farm stand complied with the 25 percent limit on the percentage of sales from a farm stand that are attributable to retail and promotional activity, and that records be kept that confirm the accuracy of the report, is permissible under ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23). Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A farm stand permit that authorizes multiple food carts to sell a variety of prepared food at up to 24 events per year cannot be characterized as "incidental retail sales," and exceeds the authority granted by ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23). Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. ORS 215.283(1)(o) and OAR 660-033-0130(23) do not categorically prohibit food carts in all circumstances. If a permit authorizing a farm stand appropriately limited food carts so that they could be characterized as "incidental retail sales," they could be authorized at a farm stand. Greenfield v. Multnomah County, 67 Or LUBA 407 (2013).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where the local government relied on the applicant's proposal to use a retrenching method to determine that dewatering from the mining operation will not affect groundwater levels of nearby wells and therefore not conflict with agricultural irrigation practices, but no condition of approval requires the retrenching method to be used, remand is required in order for the local government to condition its approval on use of the retrenching method. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 291 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition specifying future use of a reclaimed mining site is not inconsistent with OAR 660-023-0180(5)(f), which limits post-mining uses to farm uses under ORS 215.203, uses listed under ORS 215.283(1), and fish and wildlife habitat uses, where the condition requires reclamation for "fish and wildlife habitat" and eventual use "as a public park, if allowed by law." While ORS 215.203 and 215.283(1) do not currently allow public parks, the condition would only call for use as a public park if the statutes are amended to allow such a use. Protect Grand Island Farms v. Yamhill County, 66 Or LUBA 291 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. An argument below that the challenged ordinance should be conditioned to require rededication of vacated rights-of-way as proposed by the applicant is sufficient to raise the issue of whether a condition requiring rededication is necessary to ensure that the rights-of-way are rededicated. Conte v. City of Eugene, 66 Or LUBA 334 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. The failure to impose an express condition requiring that the applicant dedicate a replacement pathway does not warrant remand, where the text of the challenged ordinance states that the applicant will dedicate a replacement pathway, and that text functions as an implicit requirement or condition of approval. Conte v. City of Eugene, 66 Or LUBA 334 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Beck v. City of Tillamook, 313 Or 148, 831 P2d 678 (1992), precludes a petitioner from challenging the terms of a condition imposed on remand that is identical to a condition imposed in the original decision, whose terms were not challenged in the initial appeal to LUBA. That the identical terms were embodied in a nominally "new" condition does not allow the petitioner to advance challenges to the decision on remand that could have been, but were not, advanced in the initial appeal. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where the county's decision on remand and supporting findings state that a condition is imposed requiring the applicant to construct a left-turn lane, a condition to that effect has been adequately imposed, notwithstanding that the county did not expressly amend the list of conditions imposed in its initial decision to include the requirement to construct a left-turn lane. Devin Oil Co. v. Morrow County, 65 Or LUBA 104 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A county is not required to impose a condition prohibiting use of a farm dwelling if the tract on which it is located is no longer used for farm use at a commercial scale. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Harney County, 65 Or LUBA 246 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. On appeal of a planning commission decision, the issue of the city's failure to impose a condition is waived under the reasoning in Miles v. City of Florence, 190 Or App 500 (2003), where the underlying hearings official's decision also failed to impose the disputed condition, and petitioner did not specify that failure as a ground for appeal in the local notice of appeal to the planning commission. Conte v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 326 (2012).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition requiring an aggregate company's trucks to avoid a particular intersection is likely to be effective, where the employer has sufficient authority to require its employees and contract haulers to avoid the intersection and, despite some economic incentives for noncompliance, a reasonable decision maker could rely on the condition to be effective to prevent impacts on the intersection. Setniker v. Polk County, 63 Or LUBA 38 (2011).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. An applicant bears the burden of proof to demonstrate that an application complies with applicable approval standards, and a local government is not required to approve a noncomplying development proposal, even if conditions of approval might be imposed that would render the proposal consistent with the applicable criteria. Wilson v. Washington County, 63 Or LUBA 314 (2011).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Well reports generated when wells were dug decades ago are substantial evidence that a reasonable decision maker could rely upon to conclude that the wells can supply sufficient water for a proposed destination resort, where there is no countervailing evidence in the record, and the county addresses the possibility that the well reports are no longer accurate by imposing a condition requiring prior to final master plan approval that the applicant conduct pump tests and, if necessary, dig new wells, to ensure sufficient water. Oregon Coast Alliance v. Curry County, 63 Or LUBA 324 (2011).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where there is uncertainty regarding the exact location of the jurisdictional line between the Department of State Lands (DSL) and Department of Geology and Mineral Industries (DOGAMI), but agency representatives agree that a proposed mining area is upland of the jurisdictional line and therefore subject to DOGAMI's jurisdiction, and as a precaution the county imposes a condition requiring that the applicant obtain any permits required by either DSL or DOGAMI, any uncertainty regarding the location of the jurisdictional line does not undermine the county's finding that DOGAMI has jurisdiction. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. Curry County, 61 Or LUBA 8 (2010).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A hearings officer does not err in concluding that modifying a condition of approval imposing a 20-year deadline to complete development, to allow an additional three years to complete development, is not "materially inconsistent" with the original condition of approval, where the additional time represents only a 15 percent increase and nothing in the original permit approval suggests that the original 20-year completion deadline was intended to be inflexible. Connecting Eugene v. City of Eugene, 61 Or LUBA 439 (2010).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a local government decides to defer a determination of compliance with an applicable criterion to a later proceeding, the local government cannot escape providing the public processes that would be required if the criterion were applied at the time required by the city's development code by claiming that the deferred criterion is nondiscretionary or clear and objective. Boucot v. City of Corvallis, 60 Or LUBA 57 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When relying on a condition of development under OAR 660-012-0060(2)(e) to approve development that would significantly affect a transportation facility, a local government cannot rely on a suggestion in a letter from ODOT when the suggestion is not reflected as a condition of approval. Walker v. Josephine County, 60 Or LUBA 186 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a petitioner does not challenge a finding that a right-of-way bisects his property into two non-contiguous units of land, a condition of approval requiring a fence along the right-of-way does not violate a local code provision requiring fences to be along the perimeter of lots or parcels. King v. Washington County, 60 Or LUBA 253 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. If a condition of approval was imposed to ensure compliance with all applicable approval criteria, then a decision modifying that condition of approval must explain why that condition is no longer needed to ensure such compliance. Absent such an explanation, the decision must be remanded. Oh v. City of Gold Beach, 60 Or LUBA 356 (2010).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where there is substantial evidence in the record that an applicant is not precluded as a matter of law from obtaining state and federal permits, a local government does not err in finding that an applicable comprehensive plan provision that has the legal effect of requiring the applicant to secure state and federal permits is satisfied by imposing a condition of approval that the applicant secure such permits. Citizens for Responsible Development v. City of The Dalles, 59 Or LUBA 369 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition requiring that the applicant for mining restrict rock blasting for up to three days after being notified of Native American cultural or religious visits to a nearby site is sufficient to ensure that noise from blasting will not conflict with such visits. Walker v. Deschutes County, 59 Or LUBA 488 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a local government avoids finding compliance with an applicable approval criterion by deferring determination of compliance to a later proceeding, while the later proceeding must provide for notice and a hearing, the later stage need not have the identical process that was provided during the earlier stage. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 190 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When an applicable local provision requires that road improvements associated with a partition be constructed or bonded for "before a dwelling may be authorized," the local governments errs by requiring the improvements to be constructed or bonded for as a condition of approval of the partition itself. Sperber v. Coos County, 58 Or LUBA 570 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When an approval criterion requires a partition map to show "other features affecting development," a local government does not misinterpret the applicable law by requiring an applicant to show areas designated as less and least suitable by the comprehensive plan. "Other features affecting development" can encompass physical features themselves as well as comprehensive plan designations based on those features. Sperber v. Coos County, 58 Or LUBA 570 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where LUBA reverses a denial under ORS 197.835(10)(a) and orders the local government to approve the "application," the application includes any (1) applicant-proposed conditions of approval and (2) conditions imposed in an initial decision that the applicant has not objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. However, the "application" does not include conditions of approval that the applicant objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a condition of approval was not imposed to ensure compliance with any approval criterion and the condition of approval is not needed to comply with any current approval criterion, a local government may approve a request to modify the condition of approval. Woodard v. Yamhill County, 56 Or LUBA 141 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city does not err in imposing a condition of approval limiting the size of an accessory structure in circumstances where an applicant submits a site plan that the applicant freely admits is not visually representative of the actual proposed development. Caster v. City of Silverton, 56 Or LUBA 250 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city errs in imposing a condition of approval requiring removal of a structure after a certain specified time period where the existence or removal of that structure is not a relevant issue on review and the applicant does not consent to the condition that the city imposed. Caster v. City of Silverton, 56 Or LUBA 250 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a land use regulation approval standard requires a "minimum of two points of access," a hearings officer errs by approving a permit application without imposing a condition of approval that the second access that is needed to comply with the land use regulation requirement must actually be provided. Central Oregon Landwatch v. Deschutes County, 56 Or LUBA 280 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A warning that subdivision approval could become void in the future if certain owners of the subdivided property who have been granted Ballot Measure 37 waivers cease to own the property is a legally insufficient substitute for a condition of approval that the holders of the needed Ballot Measure 37 waivers must retain their ownership interest until the final plat is recorded. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a county engineer testifies that the applicant may need to acquire "vision easements" if necessary and the county imposes a condition of approval to that effect, the county is not required to adopt a finding that it is "feasible" for the applicant to obtain such easements from neighbors, absent some indication that there is a legal or practical impediment to obtaining the easements. Gardener v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 583 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government is not obligated to impose a condition of approval requiring that a broadcast tower operator comply with federal radio frequency exposure limitations that the applicant must comply with in any event. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Provided local law does not dictate a different result, local governments generally may approve a proposed development of land after providing any required notice and hearings−without finding that the proposal complies with all relevant approval criteria−so long as the local government defers the required findings to a later stage and ensures that a second opportunity for any required notice and public hearing is provided before the required findings are adopted at that later stage. Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 55 Or LUBA 472 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. It may not be appropriate to grant conditional approval while deferring required findings to a subsequent approval stage, even where there will be a full public right to participate in the subsequent approval stage, where the initial decision has the effect of rendering the subsequent review moot or prevents meaningful review. However, where the initial decision has no legal or preclusive effect on the subsequent review, such conditional approval provides no basis for reversal or remand. Meadow Neighborhood Assoc. v. Washington County, 55 Or LUBA 472 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Even if ORS 197.522 applies outside the context of a moratorium to require the city to approve development that can be made consistent with applicable criteria through reasonable conditions, the statute places on the applicant the burden of proposing reasonable conditions. A proposed condition requiring petitioner to share the cost of future signalization of an intersection if future conditions warrant is not sufficient to ensure that the development is consistent with a standard requiring that affected intersections function at or above a minimum level of service. Vista Construction LLC v. City of Grants Pass, 55 Or LUBA 590 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where the Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT) recommends that conditions of approval be imposed requiring the improvements identified in a traffic impact analysis, and the city's decision states that it will impose the conditions but in fact does not, the petitioner may assign error to the city's failure to impose the conditions, notwithstanding that the petitioner raised no issues below regarding the improvements or the conditions, because ODOT adequately raised the issue. Nygaard v. City of Warrenton, 55 Or LUBA 648 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. The absence of explicit conditions of approval mandating that a rezoning applicant construct necessary transportation improvements is not necessarily reversible error, where the local government expressly incorporates the traffic analysis that requires the improvements, and thus the decision itself requires the improvements. However, remand is necessary to adopt conditions of approval where the decision does not purport to incorporate the traffic analysis or require the necessary improvements to be constructed. Nygaard v. City of Warrenton, 55 Or LUBA 648 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Remand is necessary where the rezoning decision relies on conditions of approval to comply with OAR 660-012-0060(4)(b)(B), which requires that the city ensure that necessary transportation improvements are actually funded, but fails to impose any such conditions. Nygaard v. City of Warrenton, 55 Or LUBA 648 (2008).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A finding that it is feasible to incorporate design features into a turn lane to render it safe is an insufficient basis to conclude that the turn lane complies with applicable criteria, where the hearings officer fails to impose any conditions requiring that such design features be used. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. City of Gresham, 54 Or LUBA 16 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a local government finds that an access standards is met and imposes a condition of approval requiring a formal survey of property to ensure that access to a proposed subdivision does not infringe on adjacent property, that is not the same thing as deferring a finding of compliance with that access standard to a later stage of the approval process. Wolfgram v. Douglas County, 54 Or LUBA 54 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Under ORS 197.522 and similarly worded local law requirements, a city is obligated to consider and impose any conditions of approval proposed by the permit application if such conditions would allow the city to approve a conditional use permit application that would otherwise not meet approval criteria. However, under those authorities the city is not obligated to take the initiative to develop such conditions on its own or develop the evidentiary record that might be needed to impose such conditions. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a local government finds that OAR 660-012-0060 is satisfied, the findings adopt and incorporate the applicant's traffic impact analysis (TIA), and the TIA includes mitigation measures, the local government does not err in failing to expressly impose a condition of approval requiring those mitigation measures to be implemented. Hildenbrand v. City of Adair Village, 54 Or LUBA 734 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a city's code does not expressly authorize a city to impose a condition requiring annexation on its decision approving an application to partition unincorporated land, but the code only authorizes the city to approve partitions of unincorporated lands that are subject to an annexation agreement and the city's only other option would be to deny the partition application, the city correctly interprets its code to approve the application with the annexation agreement condition. Wickham v. City of Grants Pass, 53 Or LUBA 261 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government does not err in failing to impose a condition of approval ensuring that the final planned unit development plan contains senior housing consistent with the approved tentative plan, where the tentative plan includes such housing and an ordinance requires that the final plan can only be approved if it is "substantially consistent" with the tentative plan. NE Medford Neighborhood Coalition v. City of Medford, 53 Or LUBA 277 (2007).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where neither the local government nor LUBA has jurisdiction to resolve the legality of a condition requiring necessary facilities to be constructed prior to obtaining final approval of a two-step subdivision approval process, the local government may (1) adopt findings establishing that fulfillment of the condition of approval is not precluded as a matter of law, and (2) ensure that the condition will be fulfilled prior to final subdivision approval or actual development. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. LUBA need not resolve the parties' legal dispute over whether a condition of subdivision approval requiring construction of a street through a neighboring development is consistent with conditions, covenants and restrictions governing that neighboring development, where only the circuit court has jurisdiction to finally resolve that dispute, and the local government has adequately established an alternative basis to impose the condition regardless of how that legal dispute is resolved. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. LUBA will reject a petitioner's challenge to a condition of subdivision approval requiring construction of a public street in a neighboring subdivision notwithstanding that the street may violate covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) governing that neighboring subdivision, where the city adequately demonstrates that it has statutory authority to condemn the land and construct the street notwithstanding the CC&Rs, and the city adequately ensures that the condition requiring construction of the street will be fulfilled prior to final development approval. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 52 Or LUBA 550 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. LUBA will affirm a hearings officer's finding that it is feasible to expand an existing stormwater facility without infringing on the neighboring petitioner's rights to the existing capacity of that facility, where there is no evidence that the expansion will affect the capacity of the existing pond, and the hearings officer imposed conditions sufficient to ensure that the expansion will not infringe on the existing capacity. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A finding that expansion of an existing stormwater facility will improve problems with the existing facility, combined with a condition of approval requiring that the expanded facility not exacerbate existing problems, is sufficient to address concerns raised by petitioner that the expanded facility might exacerbate existing overflow problems. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Absent some authority to the contrary, a local government need not approve a property line adjustment necessary to effect a proposed subdivision prior to or contemporaneously with adopting the preliminary subdivision approval. A finding that it is feasible to obtain a property line adjustment, combined with a condition requiring that the adjustment be obtained prior to final subdivision approval, is sufficient. Bollam v. Clackamas County, 52 Or LUBA 738 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government is not obligated to impose of site plan approval that prohibits a use that is not in fact proposed or approved, simply because it is possible that at some future date the structures authorized by the site plan might be used in a manner prohibited by the code. Friends of the Metolius v. Jefferson County, 51 Or LUBA 188 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. While the fact that a proposed development would be inconsistent with private CC&Rs is not a basis, in and of itself, for reversal or remand, the fact that a condition of approval necessary to meet approval criteria is not feasible because the condition cannot be satisfied because it violates CC&Rs may be a basis for reversal or remand. Butte Conservancy v. City of Gresham, 51 Or LUBA 194 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Remand is necessary to either withdraw a condition of approval requiring fencing around a property or explain what criterion it relates to and what purpose it serves, where the decision approves development in part and denies it in part, and it is not clear whether the condition of approval relates to approved or denied aspects of the proposed development. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a petitioner claims that a sewer provider does not have an easement across his property to reach necessary access to a sewer main, a finding that such an easement does exist, that the easement could be condemned if necessary, and imposition of a condition of approval requiring that the easement be obtained is sufficient to establish that it is feasible to provide sewer service. Stoloff v. City of Portland, 51 Or LUBA 560 (2006).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Nothing in ORS 197.522 prevents a local government from imposing conditions of approval "to make the proposed activity consistent with the plan and applicable regulations." Ghena v. City of Grants Pass, 50 Or LUBA 552 (2005).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where it appears that providing access to phase 1 of a proposed subdivision is feasible, but the tentative plat application does not show how access will be provided, a hearings officer does not err in imposing a condition of final plat approval requiring that the applicant provide a specific plan for access to phase 1. Paterson v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 160 (2005).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city may approve a master plan of development for 1000 dwelling units that could damage wetlands or threaten recovery of endangered western lilies on the site, provided the city imposes a condition of approval that requires the city to revisit the legal requirements to protect the wetlands and western lilies, at the time of detailed development plan approval, when the hydrologic assessment necessary to evaluate each phase of the proposed development against those legal standards will be available. Oregon Shores Cons. Coalition v. City of Brookings, 49 Or LUBA 273 (2005).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. An expert's letter that merely suggests further study, possible future actions, considerations and thoughts, and potential alternatives is too imprecise or hypothetical to provide adequate conditions of approval. Baker v. City of Garibaldi, 49 Or LUBA 437 (2005).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a petitioner challenges findings deferring compliance with applicable approval criteria, that petitioner must: (1) identify the applicable approval criteria; (2) identify the findings that defer consideration of those criteria; and (3) explain how that deferral is inadequate to ensure compliance with the approval criteria. O'Shea v. City of Bend, 49 Or LUBA 498 (2005).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. There is no generally applicable requirement that conditions of approval be stated in clear and objective language, or impose only mandatory, unambiguous, easily enforced obligations. Sisters Forest Planning Comm. v. Deschutes County, 48 Or LUBA 78 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Federal law preempts local zoning conditions of approval that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. It does not matter whether conditions that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference are imposed under general zoning conditional use criteria or local regulations that were adopted to regulate radio frequency interference directly. It is the purpose for imposing the condition that is important, and if the condition is imposed to regulate radio frequency interference, it is preempted by federal law. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Federal law does not preempt local laws that regulate the visual and aesthetic impact of radio towers and the antennas placed on those towers. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A governing body's interpretation that it has authority to modify a condition of preliminary subdivision plat approval under a code standard allowing "minor changes" to an unrecorded subdivision plat is not reversible under ORS 197.829(1). Cove at Brookings Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Brookings, 47 Or LUBA 1 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A decision that allows modifications to an existing berm intended to protect a neighboring subdivision from sight and smells of the city sewage treatment plant is consistent with that subdivision's conditions of approval, where the conditions do not require a berm of any particular size, shape or height, and the decision allows only modifications that do not degrade the function of the berm. Cove at Brookings Homeowners Assoc. v. City of Brookings, 47 Or LUBA 1 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a non-duplicative plat name is a criterion for preliminary plat approval, a city does not err by granting preliminary plat approval without a plat name and imposing a condition of approval that the applicant submit a non-duplicative plat name prior to final plat approval. For such an approval criterion, it is at most harmless error that the city failed to find that it is feasible for the applicant to submit the required non-duplicative plat name. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a local government's findings explain that a subdivision applicant's plan for achieving visual clearance is adequate and that the applicant is negotiating with the adjoining property owner to secure the easement that will be necessary to implement that plan and is confident that the easement can be secured, the local government does not err by failing to require that the applicant obtain the easement prior to preliminary plan approval and failing to find that it is feasible for the applicant to secure the easement. Frewing v. City of Tigard, 47 Or LUBA 331 (2004).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Assuming ORS 197.522 is applicable outside the moratoria context, that statute does not require a local government to develop on its own conditions of approval that would render proposed development compliant with applicable criteria, as an alternative to denial. Rather, the initial burden of proposing conditions to make development consistent with applicable criteria belongs to the applicant. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. ORS 197.522 does not require a local government to reopen the record after reaching a tentative decision to deny a development application, to allow the applicant an opportunity to propose conditions that would allow approval. Rather, the applicant must propose such conditions during the evidentiary proceedings or in making final legal arguments to address concerns raised during the proceedings and ensure compliance with applicable criteria. Oien v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 109 (2003).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where it is not apparent that a county adopted one or more conditions of approval to address the impacts described in ORS 215.296(1), petitioner's argument that the county's conditions of approval are not "clear and objective," as is required by ORS 215.296(2), provides no basis for reversal or remand. Oregon Natural Desert Assoc. v. Grant County, 42 Or LUBA 9 (2002).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a zoning ordinance specifically requires that development proposals be approved through design review at the time a permit is requested for development, a local government is not required to duplicate that mandate through a condition of approval at the time the property is rezoned. Swyter v. Clackamas County, 40 Or LUBA 166 (2001).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a city imposes a condition on development approval and relies on that condition in both its initial approval and its reapproval after withdrawing the decision for reconsideration, a petitioner's failure to raise issues regarding the condition during the evidentiary proceedings on reconsideration precludes petitioner from challenging the adequacy or validity of the condition in a subsequent LUBA appeal of the decision on reconsideration. DLCD v. City of Warrenton, 40 Or LUBA 88 (2001).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval limiting sales of nonfarm-related items in a farm feed store to 10 percent of total sales, rather than the 10 to 20 percent of total sales that the applicant proposed, does not make such a significant change in the permit application that a new application must be required. Barge v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 183 (2000).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a condition of approval for preliminary plat approval does not require the condition to be fulfilled as a condition of final plat approval, whether or not the condition is satisfied is a matter of post-approval enforcement rather than a basis to find the final plat not in conformance with the preliminary plat approval. Bauer v. City of Portland, 38 Or LUBA 715 (2000).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government may find compliance with approval criteria by finding that the proposed means to achieve compliance is feasible, and imposing conditions of approval to ensure that the criteria are met. In the alternative, a local government may defer finding compliance with the criteria, but only by observing statutory notice and hearing requirements when making the deferred finding of compliance. Stockwell v. Benton County, 38 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Testimony from a state reclamationist and a specialist in river mechanics combined with a condition requiring that a future engineering study precede any expansion of the mining area is sufficient to demonstrate feasibility that mining and reclamation will not increase the potential for channel recapture or exacerbate impacts from flooding. Stockwell v. Benton County, 38 Or LUBA 621 (2000).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval that is suggested by the applicant after the close of the evidentiary hearing in a quasi-judicial land use proceeding is not "new evidence," within the meaning of ORS 197.763(6)(e), and there is no legal requirement that parties be given a right to rebut such a proposed condition of approval. Marine Street LLC v. City of Astoria, 37 Or LUBA 587 (2000).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval that the applicant will provide a sanitary sewer capacity study and identify the location and ownership of utility infrastructure and easements does not demonstrate that adequate public utility systems are available or could be extended to service the proposed development as required by local ordinance. Highland Condominium Assoc. v. City of Eugene, 37 Or LUBA 13 (1999).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A finding that a proposed subdivision will be connected to the city's storm drainage system is not supported by substantial evidence, where the proposed drainage system stops short of the city's storm drainage system and a condition of approval requiring paved access to the subdivision is not adequate to ensure that the storm drainage connection will be constructed along with that paved access. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. There is no applicable legal standard that requires a city to have a reasonable basis for refusing to impose a requested condition of approval that a subdivision access road be blocked to all but emergency travel. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A staff recommendation regarding appropriate conditions of approval that is submitted after the close of the evidentiary hearing is not new "evidence" that might, if submitted by one of the parties, trigger an obligation to reopen the record for rebuttal. Hunt v. City of Ashland, 35 Or LUBA 467 (1999).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a PUD condition of approval requires that certain issues be resolved prior to preliminary plat approval of Phase 7 of the PUD, LUBA will affirm as reasonable and correct a city's interpretation of that condition to allow Phase 7A to be approved in advance of Phase 7B without resolving those issues. Claus v. City of Sherwood, 35 Or LUBA 437 (1999).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A condition of approval limiting the hours of operation is supported by substantial evidence where the city council found that loading and unloading of vehicles next to an adjoining residential area during irregular hours would create a nuisance and the Oregon State Police impose a similar limitation on towing of impounded vehicles. Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city may impose a condition requiring annual review of a conditional use approval under a general code provision allowing conditions of approval the city council determines are necessary "to avoid a detrimental impact." Williamson v. City of Arlington, 35 Or LUBA 90 (1998).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. The standard LUBA applies when considering evidentiary challenges to conditions of approval is relatively low. Botham v. Union County, 34 Or LUBA 648 (1998).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. In determining whether a proposed quarry expansion should be approved, the local government must find it is feasible to comply with applicable environmental standards addressing air and water quality and noise. In doing so, it is appropriate to impose conditions of approval and defer responsibility for monitoring compliance to planning and engineering staff at a later stage of development. Sanders v. Yamhill County, 34 Or LUBA 69 (1998).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where an issue is raised below whether a condition imposed in a prior land use decision supplies an applicable approval standard in subsequent land use decisions, the local government must determine whether the condition is an applicable criterion for approval and, if so, whether it is satisfied. Bradbury v. City of Bandon, 33 Or LUBA 664 (1997).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government cannot defer its obligation to make findings of compliance with applicable approval criteria to a state agency. Harcourt v. Marion County, 33 Or LUBA 400 (1997).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government may impose conditions necessary to ensure compliance with applicable water availability criteria only when the findings adequately establish that compliance with those criteria is feasible. Harcourt v. Marion County, 33 Or LUBA 400 (1997).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When compliance with a particular code standard is deferred, a condition to ensure eventual compliance is required even when compliance depends upon the local government rather than the applicant. DLCD v. Tillamook County, 33 Or LUBA 163 (1997).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. To defer making a necessary discretionary determination beyond the date that a UGB amendment becomes final creates a possibility the UGB will be amended before Goal 14 is satisfied. Either (1) a determination that all standards requiring discretion in their application are satisfied must be made prior to the amendment of the UGB itself; or (2) the UGB amendment must be conditioned on making the necessary determination at a time subsequent when the statutory notice and hearing requirements are observed. Concerned Citizens v. Jackson County, 33 Or LUBA 70 (1997).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Without findings explaining why, for purposes of a conditional use approval, a 13,660-square-foot church 33 feet high is "essentially the same size and height" as a "12,000 +/-"-square-foot church 29 feet high, LUBA cannot affirm that it is. Southeast Neighbors United v. Deschutes County, 32 Or LUBA 227 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A city cannot determine there will be compliance with a criterion prohibiting adverse impacts on residential zones by imposing a condition that requires abatement of that adverse impact. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where there is no evidence regarding the nature and scope of a proposed development, the city cannot rely upon conditions of approval in finding compliance with a comprehensive plan policy. Miller v. City of Joseph, 31 Or LUBA 472 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. A local government may find compliance with an applicable criterion by either (1) finding that the criterion is satisfied; or (2) finding that it is feasible to satisfy the criterion and imposing conditions necessary to insure compliance. Thomas v. Wasco County, 30 Or LUBA 302 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Where a county acknowledges an incompatibility between a proposed nonfarm use and surrounding farm uses, it cannot determine that the proposed use satisfies the requirement that it be compatible through the imposition of a condition which will mitigate but not resolve the incompatibility. Thomas v. Wasco County, 30 Or LUBA 302 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Conditions of approval do not substitute for establishing compliance with applicable criteria; before the county can impose conditions of approval, it must first establish that the criteria can be satisfied. Thomas v. Wasco County, 30 Or LUBA 302 (1996).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. The attachment as an exhibit to the city's decision of a plot plan showing 3.95 acres of "open space" does not impose an unstated condition of approval requiring dedication of the open space, when the text of the decision makes clear it does not rely on that aspect of the plot plan. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. If a city relies on the preservation of open space to make a finding that there will be adequate buffering between commercial and residential uses, the city must condition approval on the designation of a specifically described parcel as open space. Marcott Holdings, Inc. v. City of Tigard, 30 Or LUBA 101 (1995).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. When a challenged decision justifies amendments to the city's comprehensive plan and zoning maps by relying on a particular development proposal, approval of the amendments must be conditioned on implementation of that proposal. DLCD v. City of St. Helens, 29 Or LUBA 485 (1995).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Local government approval of a subdivision tentative plan, with a condition that prior to final plat approval the plan be reconfigured to provide only one access point from the subdivision onto adjoining roads, a change advocated in an alternative plan submitted by neighbors, does not constitute approval of a new subdivision application. Carter v. Umatilla County, 29 Or LUBA 181 (1995).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Because the second sentence of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), imposes limitations on a local government's authority to impose conditions on a local permit for a light rail transit facility, the local government has the burden of demonstrating that any conditions that are not required by Tri-Met's "final order" comply with these limitations. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Even if a condition of land use approval is not an "exaction" subject to the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard, conditions of land use approval must support some legitimate planning purpose and must be authorized by the local government's comprehensive plan or land use regulations. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.1 Conditions of Approval – Generally. Aside from the requirement under Dolan v. City of Tigard for an "individualized determination" justifying a condition of approval imposing an exaction, there is no generally applicable requirement that conditions of land use approval be supported by findings that justify imposing the condition. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A condition of approval requiring an applicant to obtain a wetland removal/fill permit from DSL and to provide that permit to a service district with jurisdiction over sewer, water quality, and water quantity prior to conducting any grading work or construction does not violate a local code provision requiring that conditions of approval be "designed to protect the public from potential adverse impacts of the proposed use or development" merely because the condition does not prohibit grading work or construction until any appeals of the DSL permit have concluded. KB Trees, LLC v. Washington County, 81 Or LUBA 325 (2020).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. That a county's amended Transportation System Plan (TSP) includes language recommending that the county acquire property to develop a transportation facility does not mean that whatever land use permits are required to actually construct the facility under the local code or state law are thereby waived. The county could choose to approve whatever land use permits are required under law at the same time it approves an amendment to its TSP, but the latter is not a substitute for the former, or vice versa. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A project applicant is not required to file and win a quiet title action in circuit court as a condition precedent to filing the application simply because another party disputes the applicant's title to the property on which the proposed development is to occur. When a party disputes the applicant's title under a legal theory that can only be resolved in circuit court, neither the county nor LUBA is in a position to resolve the legal dispute over whether the applicant/deed owner's title is good. For that reason, the county is also not obligated to adopt findings resolving the title dispute. In circumstances where consent or lack of ownership has a bearing on an approval criteria, we have held that the decision maker may be required to impose conditions to ensure that the required consent is obtained prior to construction. However, where ownership of the subject property is not an approval criterion, we have never held that the applicant has the obligation to quiet title in the subject property where some doubt is raised during the proceedings below as to the legality of that title, or that the decision maker is obliged to adopt findings addressing the likelihood that the applicant will prevail in a quiet title action. VanDyke v. Yamhill County, 78 Or LUBA 530 (2018).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where a city council has clear authority under a development code to impose conditions of approval to address potential land use conflicts and traffic congestion, and the city council appears to fail to impose conditions requested by project opponents because it was advised by county staff that it lacked authority to impose such conditions of approval, remand is required to the city council to consider imposition of any conditions of approval that it finds are warranted to mitigate any such potential land use conflicts or traffic congestion. Hagan v. City of Grants Pass, 76 Or LUBA 196 (2017).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where the local code allows the local government to impose conditions of approval to ensure that a proposal conforms to applicable development standards, and nothing cited by the petitioner prohibits the local government from approving an application for development subject to conditions of approval or relying on those conditions to find that the proposal, as conditioned, complies with applicable development standards, the petitioner's arguments that the city should not have imposed conditions of approval provide no basis for reversal or remand of the decision. Von Clemm v. City of Portland, 66 Or LUBA 379 (2012).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where the applicant appeals a hearings officer's decision, challenging a condition of approval under a local appeal standard that limits the planning commission's review to the issues raised in the appeal, the planning commission's authority to impose new conditions is limited to conditions necessary to ensure that the application, with the challenged condition eliminated, continues to comply with applicable approval criteria. Treadmill Joint Venture v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 213 (2012).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where the applicant appeals a hearings officer's decision challenging a condition of approval limiting building height, under a local appeal standard that limits the planning commission's review to the issues raised in the appeal, the planning commission errs in imposing a new condition requiring additional setbacks, where the condition requiring additional setback is unrelated to the building height condition. Treadmill Joint Venture v. City of Eugene, 65 Or LUBA 213 (2012).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. When the applicable local code provision allows a hearings officer to impose buffering and screening requirements as determined by the "review authority," that grant of discretion is very broad, and a hearings officer is permitted to impose buffering and screening conditions that apply in analogous situations. King v. Washington County, 60 Or LUBA 253 (2009).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. When a distance buffer and sight-obscuring fence already exist to buffer and screen an industrial use from nearby residential uses, the stated rationale to reduce noise and visual impacts on the residential uses is insufficient to justify a condition of approval requiring a second sight-obscuring fence. King v. Washington County, 60 Or LUBA 253 (2009).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A condition of approval requiring a fence to prevent a use from expanding into the area on the other side of the required fence and reduce noise impacts does not further a legitimate planning objective when the decision already precludes expanding the use beyond the area of the proposed fence, and there is no evidence in the record of noise impacts. King v. Washington County, 60 Or LUBA 253 (2009).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. ORS 227.175(4) allows a city to condition its approval of an application for a zone change consistent with ORS 227.215 or any city legislation. Willamette Oaks, LLC v. City of Eugene, 59 Or LUBA 60 (2009).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where LUBA reverses a denial under ORS 197.835(10)(a) and orders the local government to approve the "application," the application includes any (1) applicant-proposed conditions of approval and (2) conditions imposed in an initial decision that the applicant has not objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. However, the "application" does not include conditions of approval that the applicant objected to or attempted to appeal to the final decision maker. Stewart v. City of Salem, 58 Or LUBA 605 (2009).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Absent some basis in the city code, a city does not have the authority to approve or deny a broadcast tower application based on the terms of the current lease agreement between the tower owner and the property owner. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A federal statute prohibiting local governments from prohibiting the provision of wireless telephone service does not authorize local governments to condition approval of a broadcast tower to require filters to reduce radio frequency interference with nearby wireless facilities. Even if a local code provision authorized such a condition, federal law would preempt the local government from applying it. Curl v. City of Bend, 56 Or LUBA 746 (2008).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where an application to remove a Planned Development Overlay meets all of the applicable criteria, a local government errs in requiring the applicant's property to be rezoned as a condition of approval in approving the application. 7th Street Station LLC v. City of Corvallis, 55 Or LUBA 321 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A hearings officer's failure to address arguments that the applicant should improve transportation facilities affected by a proposed destination resort provides no basis for reversal or remand, where a prior development agreement and two earlier development approvals conclusively established the type and extent of transportation improvements the applicant is obligated to make in developing the resort, and the petitioners cite no authority for the hearings officer to require different improvements in approving a subdivision within that resort. Broken Top Community Assoc. v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 84 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A county code provision that authorizes a county to impose conditions designed to address the adverse impacts of the proposed use or development does not authorize a county to impose conditions to remediate zoning violations on the property that are unrelated to the proposed use or development. Applebee v. Washington County, 54 Or LUBA 364 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Under ORS 197.522 and similarly worded local law requirements, a city is obligated to consider and impose any conditions of approval proposed by the permit application if such conditions would allow the city to approve a conditional use permit application that would otherwise not meet approval criteria. However, under those authorities the city is not obligated to take the initiative to develop such conditions on its own or develop the evidentiary record that might be needed to impose such conditions. Caster v. City of Silverton, 54 Or LUBA 441 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where a local government's only claimed basis for imposing an exaction that requires off-site road improvements is that a subdivision would otherwise violate a code standard regarding street system impacts, and LUBA finds that the local government has not established that the subdivision would violate the code standard, there is also no basis to impose the exaction. PacWest II, Inc. v. City of Madras, 53 Or LUBA 241 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Where a city's code does not expressly authorize a city to impose a condition requiring annexation on its decision approving an application to partition unincorporated land, but the code only authorizes the city to approve partitions of unincorporated lands that are subject to an annexation agreement and the city's only other option would be to deny the partition application, the city correctly interprets its code to approve the application with the annexation agreement condition. Wickham v. City of Grants Pass, 53 Or LUBA 261 (2007).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Federal law preempts local zoning conditions of approval that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. It does not matter whether conditions that are imposed to regulate radio frequency interference are imposed under general zoning conditional use criteria or local regulations that were adopted to regulate radio frequency interference directly. It is the purpose for imposing the condition that is important, and if the condition is imposed to regulate radio frequency interference, it is preempted by federal law. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Federal law does not preempt local laws that regulate the visual and aesthetic impact of radio towers and the antennas placed on those towers. Save Our Skyline v. City of Bend, 48 Or LUBA 192 (2004).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A condition of approval requiring an applicant to acquire adjacent property either by sale or eminent domain does not violate a code provision requiring the signatures of all property owners on an application where the application did not propose use of adjacent property. Kurahashi Partners v. City of Beaverton, 46 Or LUBA 791 (2004).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Even if ORS 197.522 can be read to apply to a city decision to approve a partition and can be read to limit the types of conditions that may be imposed to "reasonable conditions," ORS 197.522 does not place a burden on a local government to demonstrate that its conditions are reasonably necessary to address particular circumstances presented in the proposed partition. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 45 Or LUBA 458 (2003).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Even if ORS 197.522 is applicable to a decision to approve a minor partition, ORS 197.522 does not require a city to modify its minimum right-of-way requirements to respond to arguments that the right-of-way requirements are excessive in a particular case. Martin v. City of Dunes City, 45 Or LUBA 458 (2003).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A condition of approval limiting sales of nonfarm-related items in a farm feed store to 10 percent of total sales, rather than the 10 to 20 percent of total sales that the applicant proposed, does not make such a significant change in the permit application that a new application must be required. Barge v. Clackamas County, 39 Or LUBA 183 (2000).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Conditions of approval requiring Tri-Met to install restrooms and drinking fountains for the westside corridor project are not "reasonable and necessary" within the meaning of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), because those improvements are not required by the final environmental impact statement, and the project can be completed and operate without the required improvements. Tri-County Metro Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 31 Or LUBA 214 (1996).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Conditions of approval requiring Tri-Met to install an enhanced trackway and esplanade for the westside corridor project are not "reasonable and necessary" within the meaning of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), because the project can be completed and operate without the required improvements. Tri-County Metro Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 31 Or LUBA 214 (1996).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Whether or not a local government has authority to design and construct a road owned by another jurisdiction has no bearing on whether the local government can condition development approval upon a finding that the road be able to accommodate a proposed development. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Assignments of error that contend disputed conditions of approval either exceed a local government's authority under, or improperly construe, applicable law, if sustained, provide a basis for reversal or remand of a challenged decision, regardless of whether the challenged decision is a land use decision or limited land use decision. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. If a condition is necessary for consistency with a final order approving a light rail transit (LRT) facility, under Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), a local government is required to impose such a condition in approving a local permit for the LRT facility, and the limitations in the second sentence of that section do not apply. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Because the second sentence of Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), imposes limitations on a local government's authority to impose conditions on a local permit for a light rail transit facility, the local government has the burden of demonstrating that any conditions which are not required by Tri-Met's "final order" comply with these limitations. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Under Oregon Laws 1991, chapter 3, section 7(1)(b), a "necessary" condition is a condition required for a light rail transit project to meet applicable permit criteria in a local government's comprehensive plan or code. However, such a condition cannot be imposed if by itself, or together with other conditions, it would prevent implementation of the approved light rail transit project. Tri-County Metro. Trans. Dist. v. City of Beaverton, 28 Or LUBA 78 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. Even if a condition of land use approval is not an "exaction" subject to the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard, conditions of land use approval must support some legitimate planning purpose and must be authorized by the local government's comprehensive plan or land use regulations. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.2 Conditions of Approval – Authority to Impose. A code section authorizing conditions "requiring design features which minimize environmental impacts * * *" is sufficient authority to impose a condition that an identified wetland be crossed by a bridge rather than a road placed on fill. Where the record includes testimony expressing concern about placing fill in the wetland, the record is sufficient to show such a condition furthers a valid planning purpose. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Under Schultz v. City of Grants Pass, 131 Or App 220, 884 P2d 569 (1994), where property can be physically developed without further land use review, i.e., with uses that are allowed outright, then some level of exactions could be appropriate at the partition stage, even if physical development is not part of the partition application; however, where nothing in the local code or elsewhere requires the local government to impose exactions at the partition stage, the local government's decision not to exact provides no basis for remand. Dressel v. City of Tigard, 81 Or LUBA 208 (2020).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. The Dolan rough proportionality requirement operates as a limit or ceiling on a city's authority to impose exactions. If a proposed exaction is less than the exaction that could be imposed under the Dolan rough proportionality limit, Dolan does not require that the exaction be increased so that it is roughly proportional. Rosenzweig v. City of McMinnville, 66 Or LUBA 164 (2012).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Where the "rough proportionality" test in Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d (1994), applies, it can function as a kind of variance, providing a basis under which a local government may choose not to exact property as a condition of development approval that it would otherwise be entitled to exact under its land use regulations, as an alternative to compensating the landowner for the taking. Columbia Riverkeeper v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 235 (2009).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. An agreement by a property owner to establish a walkway from a vacated street west of the property to an existing street east of the property, in order to provide pedestrian access to a building on the property, does not necessarily constitute a voluntary agreement to deed a public easement for a sidewalk connecting the vacated street with the existing street. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Where a city requires that a property owner grant an easement across its property to provide pedestrian access between a vacated street and an existing street as a condition of development approval, and determines that the easement will satisfy city requirements for connectivity, the city has established a nexus between the exaction and the city's legitimate governmental interest in ensuring adequate transportation connectivity. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. In requiring an easement for a pedestrian walkway as a condition of development approval, a city may consider the impacts that reasonably flow from the approval granted, including the possible use of the walkway by employees of the development to access adjoining streets and by residents of neighboring properties to access the development on foot or by bicycle. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. A city adequately quantifies the impact of a proposed development on the area's bicycle and pedestrian transportation system and establishes that an exaction for a pedestrian walkway across the subject property is roughly proportional to the impact of the development where the city: (1) considers the types of uses in the vicinity and concludes that the walkway is necessary to allow access to a transit stop and other neighborhood amenities; (2) explains that persons working at or patronizing the development would be impeded from accessing a neighborhood attraction to the west of the subject property without the walkway; and (3) explains that the subject property could be developed as six individual lots, with sidewalks required for each, and the decision to combine the lots into one development has impacts on the city's transportation system that the required easement ameliorates. Hallmark Inns v. City of Lake Oswego, 43 Or LUBA 62 (2002).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Incremental impacts on a transportation facility attributable to a proposed development may support an exaction. McClure v. City of Springfield, 39 Or LUBA 329 (2001).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. LUBA will uphold an exaction requiring the dedication of right-of-way where the city's findings demonstrate that the exaction is roughly proportional to the impacts caused by the development, including any benefits the development receives by virtue of the exaction. McClure v. City of Springfield, 39 Or LUBA 329 (2001).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Where a city fails to establish a relationship between vehicular and nonvehicular impacts of a proposed development and a required dedication for sidewalks, the exaction is not supportable under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). McClure v. City of Springfield, 39 Or LUBA 329 (2001).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. A waiver of remonstrance to the formation of a local improvement district is not subject to the analysis required by Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), because it, by itself, does not result in the loss of property. McClure v. City of Springfield, 39 Or LUBA 329 (2001).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Only those impacts that reasonably flow from the approval granted may be considered when imposing exactions to ameliorate those impacts. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. During its review of a proposed partition, a city may consider the impact that future dwellings may have on public infrastructure, where the partition approval is the last land use decision necessary to establish dwellings on the resulting parcels. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. It is appropriate to include some consideration of the benefits to the parcels created by a partition, as well as the impacts from the new parcels, in the rough proportionality analysis required by Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. In reviewing findings adopted to support the imposition of exactions, LUBA first determines if any identified impacts or benefits are not relevant for the purposes of the rough proportionality analysis required by Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). LUBA then looks at whether the remaining findings adequately quantify the benefits to the development or the impacts of the development on public facilities, and whether those findings suffice to demonstrate that the city's exactions are "roughly proportional" to those benefits and impacts. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. The fact that an exaction is required by city ordinance is irrelevant to whether an exaction imposed pursuant to that ordinance is in fact roughly proportional to the impacts of development. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. The fact that a portion of the property subject to dedication for transportation improvements will be used for transportation access whether it is privately or publicly owned is not relevant under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), because that consideration is neither a benefit to the property owner nor an impact of development on the public infrastructure. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Benefits to the larger community resulting from the imposition of exactions, as opposed to specific benefits to the subject property, are not appropriate considerations under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. In some cases, the impacts resulting from the development may be so great, and the exactions imposed so small, that it is readily apparent without additional explanation that the exactions are roughly proportional to the expected impact. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. The impacts resulting from the approval of two residential parcels are not so great as to make it self-evident that the imposition of a 20-foot dedication of right-of-way requirement is roughly proportional to the impacts of the proposed development. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Unless a local government makes some effort to quantify the benefits accruing to a particular development, those benefits will be of limited assistance in applying the rough proportionality analysis required by Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994). McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. If the extent of safety impacts caused by a proposed partition justifies some or all of the city's exactions, the local government may impose those additional conditions that are roughly proportional to the safety impacts caused by the approval. McClure v. City of Springfield, 37 Or LUBA 759 (2000).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. To the extent Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), is applicable to a facial takings challenge to legislative adoption of a local ordinance, petitioner must establish from the face of the challenged ordinance that no set of circumstances exist under which the ordinance can be applied in a constitutional manner. Lincoln City Ch. of Comm. v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 399 (1999).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. The requirement in Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), that the local government establish "rough proportionality" between a proposed exaction and the impacts of development does not mean that the local government must assume the burden of producing the evidence on which the rough proportionality determination is based. Lincoln City Ch. of Comm. v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 399 (1999).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Depending on the facts of the case, a local government's demonstration of rough proportionality required by Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), may require up to three distinct sets of analyses: (1) the extent to which the proposed exaction will benefit the development; (2) the extent to which the proposed exaction will mitigate the development's impacts on the public infrastructure; and (3) whether the benefits and impacts analyzed in (1) and (2), considered together, demonstrate that the proposed exaction is roughly proportional to the impacts of development. Lincoln City Ch. of Comm. v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 399 (1999).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Even assuming Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed 2d 304 (1994), addresses whether the local government must originate the analysis used to demonstrate rough proportionality between a proposed exaction and the impacts of development, an ordinance requiring that an applicant submit a "rough proportionality report" is not facially unconstitutional, where nothing on the face of the ordinance requires the local government to adopt or use in whole or part the conclusions contained therein. Lincoln City Ch. of Comm. v. City of Lincoln City, 36 Or LUBA 399 (1999).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. A condition requiring an applicant for site plan approval for a fast-food restaurant to design street improvements for hundreds of feet beyond the subject property boundaries does not meet the "rough proportionality" test established in Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994). Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Under Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994), and J.C. Reeves Corp. v. Clackamas County, 131 Or App 615, 887 P2d 360 (1994), findings in support of a condition requiring an applicant for site plan approval for a fast-food restaurant to construct certain street and frontage improvements must compare traffic and other effects of development to required improvements. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. When an applicant's own site plan for a fast-food restaurant provides for a nondriving area, the local government's imposition of a condition requiring the nondriving area be retained is not an exaction. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. A condition requiring an applicant to provide a plan for satisfying the local government's storm drainage requirements prior to issuance of a land use permit is not an exaction. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Advisory statements labeled as "conditions" are not exactions. Clark v. City of Albany, 29 Or LUBA 325 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. If a local government approves a proposed partition with conditions requiring exactions, the local government must ensure that the requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard, 512 US 374, 114 S Ct 2309, 2319-20, 129 L Ed2d 304 (1994), for "individualized determination[s] that the required dedication is related both in nature and extent to the impact of the proposed development" is satisfied. Neuman v. Benton County, 29 Or LUBA 172 (1995).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Conditions of land use approval requiring uncompensated dedication of land constitute "exactions." Where a condition of land use approval imposes an exaction, the local government must make an individualized determination that the exaction is roughly proportional in nature and extent to the impact of the proposed development. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.3 Conditions of Approval – Exactions. Even if a local code provision requiring that six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision be dedicated for open space is properly interpreted as a minimum rather than a maximum requirement, a decision requiring dedication of much more than six percent of the gross area of a proposed subdivision must be remanded so that the local government may adopt findings explaining that interpretation and showing the "rough proportionality" requirement of Dolan v. City of Tigard is satisfied. Davis v. City of Bandon, 28 Or LUBA 38 (1994).

45.4 Conditions of Approval – Consents to Annexation. Where a city's code lists a number of "factors" to be considered in approving an annexation, including "[a]dequacy and availability of public facilities and services to service potential development," but the city's code does not require that the city identify how infrastructure will be paid for, or by whom, as part of an annexation decision, and the city's findings suggest the city's capital improvement program (CIP) will be amended prior to development to list the new water main as a public facility, although the city does not intend to rely upon the CIP as a source of funding or authority for the new water main, petitioners have not established a CIP amendment must be required as a condition of approval or that the city otherwise erred in assigning a positive value to this factor in approving the proposed annexation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

45.4 Conditions of Approval – Consents to Annexation. Where a city rezones a portion of a property designated mixed use corridor (MUC) on the city's comprehensive plan, from FU-10 (future urban 10-acre) to NC (neighborhood commercial), and petitioners argue that the NC zone is inconsistent with the city's comprehensive plan which directs the city to "[f]ocus transit-oriented, higher intensity, mixed-use development along selected transit corridors," because the subject property is not near a transit corridor, petitioners' premise—that the MUC plan designation is used only where the city intends to promote transit-oriented development along transit corridors—is incorrect. The MUC plan designation is implemented by four commercial zoning districts: one of which is the NC zone, which is not a transit-oriented zone, and is clearly not intended to be placed along transit corridors. Therefore, the city's decision to rezone its property to NC is not inconsistent with the property's MUC comprehensive plan designation. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

45.4 Conditions of Approval – Consents to Annexation. Petitioners fail to establish that the city erred in concluding that rezoning a property to neighborhood commercial is consistent with Statewide Planning Goal 5 when the rezoning the subject property constitutes a PAPA for purposes of applying Goal 5, which provides that local governments are not required to apply Goal 5 in consideration of a PAPA unless the PAPA affects a Goal 5 resource by allowing new uses that "could be conflicting uses with a particular significant Goal 5 resource site on an acknowledged resource list." The city's PAPA is a very limited one, that in relevant part simply applies the zones implementing the city's comprehensive plan designations that the acknowledged comprehensive plan has already designated for the corresponding uses. Because the challenged PAPA simply implements that acknowledged plan designation choice with the exercise of little or no discretion, the PAPA does not authorize any "new uses" for purposes of OAR 660-023-0250(3) and Goal 5. Renken v. City of Oregon City, 79 Or LUBA 82 (2019).

45.4 Conditions of Approval – Consents to Annexation. Where a city's code does not expressly authorize a city to impose a condition requiring annexation on its decision approving an application to partition unincorporated land, but the code only authorizes the city to approve partitions of unincorporated lands that are subject to an annexation agreement and the city's only other option would be to deny the partition application, the city correctly interprets its code to approve the application with the annexation agreement condition. Wickham v. City of Grants Pass, 53 Or LUBA 261 (2007).

45.5 Conditions of Approval – Waivers of Remonstrance. Where a city code provides that a property owner must, as a condition of permit or partition approval, either provide the improvements or pay into an improvement fund if a street adjoining property without direct access to the street does not have standard full-width improvements, and petitioner argues that the code provision is not applicable to his proposed property partition, LUBA will sustain, in part, petitioner's challenge upon remand from the Court of Appeals, where the arguments on appeal have evolved and it is apparent that remand is necessary for the hearings officer to adopt findings regarding LUBA's underlying conclusion that the hearings officer was correct in concluding that the condition requiring a waiver of remonstrance against a street or stormwater facility improvement was justified under Clark v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 375, 380, aff'd, 144 Or App 192, 924 P2d 877 (1966), and did not constitute a takings. Hill v. City of Portland, 78 Or LUBA 334 (2018).

45.5 Conditions of Approval – Waivers of Remonstrance. A waiver of remonstrance to the formation of a local improvement district (LID) is not subject to the constitutional exaction analysis because it, by itself, does not result in a loss of petitioner's property. Conditions of approval, such as a waiver of remonstrance, may be applied by a local government to ensure that a development proposal conforms to the applicable approval criteria or to ensure the enforcement of other local government regulations. Hill v. City of Portland, 77 Or LUBA 317 (2018).

45.5 Conditions of Approval – Waivers of Remonstrance. Where there is substantial evidence in the record to justify a city's finding that there is a need for a local improvement district and that petitioner's development will both contribute to the need for those improvements and be benefited by them, the city may require petitioner to sign a waiver of remonstrance for future street improvements. Clark v. City of Albany, 31 Or LUBA 375 (1996).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Where a county makes a single decision to approve an outdoor mass gathering as defined in ORS 433.735, that decision is excluded from LUBA's jurisdiction under ORS 197.015(10)(d), even if the decision authorizes access roads and other development and that authorization, but for being embodied in a decision approving an outdoor mass gathering, arguably might constitute a land use decision. Thomas v. Wasco County, 68 Or LUBA 102 (2013).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Even if a hearings officer's assumption that the applicant could legally conduct both an outdoor mass gathering and a smaller gathering during the same three-month period is erroneous, any error is harmless and not a basis to reverse or remand the decision, where a proposal for outdoor gatherings was not part of the application, and the hearings officer's statement was merely dicta, not binding on the parties in any way. Horning v. Washington County, 51 Or LUBA 303 (2006).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Local government decisions authorizing outdoor mass gatherings as defined at ORS 433.735(1) that will last fewer than 120 hours are not subject to local land use regulations and are not land use decisions subject to LUBA review. Landsem Farms v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 611 (2003).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Local government decisions authorizing the large outdoor gatherings defined at ORS 433.763(1) that will last more than 120 hours are subject to local land use regulations and are land use decisions subject to LUBA review. Landsem Farms v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 611 (2003).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Even if ORS 197.015(10)(d) does prohibit county regulation of gatherings of fewer than 3,000 persons on a site, it would only do so if those gatherings occurred no more frequently than once every three months on the site. Cookman v. Marion County, 44 Or LUBA 630 (2003).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. ORS 433.750 completely occupies the field of regulation of outdoor mass gatherings of less than 120 hours' duration. There is no room for more restrictive local regulation of such gatherings. However, ORS 433.735(1) authorizes a county to adopt a more expansive definition of outdoor mass gatherings of less than 120 hours' duration. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Under ORS 433.735(1), a county may define "outdoor mass gatherings" to include gatherings of 500 or more persons for 24 hours' to 120 hours' duration, and may include the time necessary to set up, take down and clean up after a gathering in determining whether a particular gathering is of less than 120 hours' duration. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. ORS 433.750(1) does not allow a county to require that an outdoor mass gathering of less than 120 hours' duration be a permitted use in the applicable zoning district or otherwise subject to zoning regulations. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. ORS 433.750(6) authorizes a county to charge applicants for an outdoor mass gathering permit a fee calculated to reimburse the county only for "reasonably necessary costs in receiving, processing and reviewing applications for [such] permits," not for costs of providing services, such as law enforcement, to the gathering. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. ORS 433.750(6) requires a county to waive payment of an outdoor mass gathering permit fee if it finds that the applicant is unable to reimburse the governing body. A county ordinance adopted to implement ORS 433.750 must provide for an outdoor mass gathering permit fee waiver, in the circumstances described in ORS 433.750(6). Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. ORS 433.735 to 433.770 allow a county to require that an application for an outdoor mass gathering permit be filed at least 60 days before the proposed gathering is to occur. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Under ORS 433.755(1), a county may not require all applicants for an outdoor mass gathering permit to obtain one million dollars of insurance. ORS 433.755(1) requires an individualized determination concerning the insurance risks posed by a particular gathering, with one million dollars being the maximum amount of insurance a county may require. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Under ORS 433.770(1), the only remedy for specific violations of the outdoor mass gathering statute or its implementing local regulations is injunctive relief authorized by a court. Therefore, a county ordinance that purports to authorize the county sheriff to order dispersal of an outdoor mass gathering, if he believes such gathering is not in "compliance with all applicable state and local laws," is overly broad. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Under ORS 433.763(1)(c), a county may subject outdoor mass gatherings of more than 120 hours' duration to conditional use permit land use regulations. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

46. Outdoor Mass Gatherings. Where a challenged county ordinance regulating outdoor mass gatherings of more than 120 hours' duration makes such gatherings subject to comprehensive plan and code provisions, but LUBA cannot determine which plan and code provisions apply to such gatherings, or how any such provisions are satisfied with regard to gatherings of a religious nature, LUBA cannot determine whether the challenged ordinance uses the least restrictive means to achieve a compelling state interest, as required by the Federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993. Fence v. Jackson County, 29 Or LUBA 147 (1995).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. A decision that grants subdivision approval based on Measure 37 waivers after Measure 49 has taken effect must be reversed under Corey v. DLCD, 344 Or 457, 184 P3d 1109 (2008), and Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas County, 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009). Walker v. Josephine County, 60 Or LUBA 333 (2010).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Prior to the passage of Ballot Measure 49 (2007), Ballot Measure 37 (2004) allowed the holder of a waiver to seek approval to develop property in ways that would otherwise be prohibited by law, in lieu of receiving compensation for loss in property value. DLCD v. Jackson County, 59 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Petitioners do not waive their right to argue that a second subdivision approval decision that relies on Ballot Measure 37 waivers and post-dated Ballot Measure 49 was precluded by Ballot Measure 49 by failing to make that argument in their appeal of an earlier subdivision decision that predated Ballot Measure 49. The subject of that earlier appeal was the county's pre-Ballot Measure 49 subdivision approval decision, not the county's post-Ballot Measure 49 subdivision approval decision. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. An issue may be waived so that it cannot be raised in a second appeal regarding the same land use application where the issue is "plainly cognizable." The possibility that a county might adopt a second decision approving a subdivision based on Ballot Measure 37 waivers after Ballot Measure 49 takes effect was not plainly cognizable in a LUBA appeal of an earlier subdivision that pre-dated Ballot Measure 49. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. As a general rule a county may limit its proceedings following a remand to the issues that provided the basis for the LUBA remand. However, a county may not refuse to consider the effect of Ballot Measure 49 on a subdivision applicant's Ballot Measure 37 waivers, where that issue is squarely presented in the second appeal and was not decided and did not need to be decided in the first appeal. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. If an applicant for subdivision approval has a vested right under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49, it is because the applicant satisfies the vested rights criteria set out in Clackamas County v. Holmes, 265 Or 193, 198-99, 508 P2d 190 (1973), not because the proposed subdivision complies with land use laws that were not waived by intervenors Ballot Measure 37 waivers. After Ballot Measure 49 took effect, Ballot Measure 37 waivers are no longer effective. Therefore, until the subdivision applicant receives a vested rights determination, a county decision to grant preliminary subdivision approval must stand on its own, and without a legally effective Ballot Measure 37 waiver such a preliminary subdivision approval decision cannot stand on its own. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007, had already received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, then they may proceed to complete the development that was begun under Measure 37. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007, had not yet received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, they must still obtain any permits or other approvals that are required under land use laws that were not waived by their Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Under ORS 197.352(9) (2005), LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review a challenge to a final state Ballot Measure 37 Order determining the identity of the "owner" of property for purposes of ORS 197.352 (2005). Welch v. Yamhill County, 56 Or LUBA 166 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where a county fails to determine in the decision whether a provision of its local code applies to the proposed subdivision, the county's silence on the matter in the subdivision decision will not be construed as a decision "not to apply" the provision pursuant to ORS 197.352(8)(2005). Welch v. Yamhill County, 56 Or LUBA 166 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. A warning that subdivision approval could become void in the future if certain owners of the subdivided property who have been granted Ballot Measure 37 waivers cease to own the property is a legally insufficient substitute for a condition of approval that the holders of the needed Ballot Measure 37 waivers must retain their ownership interest until the final plat is recorded. Hines v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 333 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. That both the holder of a Ballot Measure 37 waiver and the trustee for her revocable trust signed the subdivision application does not mean that the waiver holder transferred rights granted to her by the waivers to the trust, or that the county erred in granting approval to the trust instead of the waiver holder. Gardener v. Marion County, 56 Or LUBA 583 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. LUBA will not affirm a local government's decision based on a vested rights theory where the county did not address or adopt that theory in its decision. Dunn v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 206 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where a board of county commissioners previously waived a subdivision approval standard under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), that approval standard does not apply to a subsequent proposal to subdivide the property. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where a subdivision approval criterion was waived under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), in a subsequent application for subdivision approval an opponent may not argue for the first time that the waived approval criterion is a public health and safety regulation that cannot be waived under Ballot Measure 37. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Whether the county tax assessor in 1971 applied preferential tax assessment to properties that were zoned to allow for agricultural use has little bearing on whether that zone was an "exclusive farm use" zone subject to the limitations of ORS 215.203(1971). Rather, the text and context of the county's zoning ordinance in 1971 is the best evidence. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

47. 1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. LUBA will affirm a county's determination that the Agriculture-A zone adopted in 1971 was not an "exclusive farm use" zone subject to the limitations of ORS 215.203 (1971), for purposes of determining whether proposed dwellings under a Ballot Measure 37 waiver must be "in conjunction with farm use," where the 1971 ordinance included a separate "exclusive farm use" zone that permitted only the uses allowed under ORS 215.203 (1971), the Agriculture-A zone in contrast permitted a large number of nonfarm uses that bore no relationship to the uses allowed in the statute, and the obvious inference is that the county did not intend the Agriculture-A zone to implement ORS 215.203 (1971). Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. The petitioner's speculation that the Ballot Measure 37 claimants might transfer the property to a third party before the right to complete development allowed to the claimants under the Ballot Measure 37 waiver is perfected not a basis for reversal or remand. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. A county is under no affirmative obligation to inquire into the terms of private contracts between Ballot Measure 37 claimants and third-party developers to ensure that the claimants have not transferred their interest in the property during the pendency of the development application. Where the claimants sign the application as owners and some issue regarding continued ownership arises during the proceedings, the county may rely upon the claimants' representations that they still own the property or on publicly available documents, such as deeds, and need not inquire further. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. LUBA will remand a decision approving a subdivision pursuant to a Ballot Measure 37 waiver where the county fails to address arguments raised below that the subdivision is inconsistent with a 1959 subdivision ordinance that predated the claimants' date of acquisition and that was not waived under the state and local waivers. Reeves v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 452 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. If the Ballot Measure 37 claimant's interest in the property is transferred by sale or by operation of law to a third person not named in the Ballot Measure 37 waiver, any entitlement to development approval based on waivers of regulations granted to the claimant is lost. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. While the probable intent of the "goal-post" statute at ORS 215.427(3)(a) is to prevent local governments from approving or denying a permit based on legislative amendments that post-date the application, the statute is not expressly limited to legislative amendments. The goal-post statute arguably also operates to prevent local governments from approving or denying a permit application based on state or local regulations that were initially waived under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) but later become "applicable" when the claimant dies, the property is transferred, and the right to seek development approval free of the waived regulations is lost. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. The drafters of Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) limited development or use rights to the claimant, and that limitation is a central feature of the measure. LUBA will not presume that the voters intended that limitation to be avoided by operation of the goal-post statute at ORS 215.427(3)(a), which if given full effect would allow the local government to grant development approvals based on ORS 197.352 waivers to persons who are not the claimant. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) and the goal-post statute at ORS 215.427(3)(a) operate together, they come into conflict and cannot both be given full effect. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. In circumstances where the goal-post statute at ORS 215.427(3)(a) conflicts with Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), the latter prevails, because ORS 197.352 is the more specific and later-adopted statute. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where the Ballot Measure 37 claimant dies prior to receiving development approval and the property is transferred by operation of law to his heirs, the county errs in approving development on land no longer owned by the Ballot Measure 37 claimant, pursuant to waivers that grant only the claimant the right to develop the property free of the goals, statutes and rules specified in the waiver. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. A statement in s state waiver under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) that the state authorizes the claimant to use the property for the proposed use, subject to standards in effect on the date of acquisition, is not properly understood to operate as a blanket waiver of all state regulations adopted after the acquisition date, where other sections of the state waiver limit the waiver to the requirements of Goal 3 and related statutes and administrative rules. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Where the state specifically waives only Goal 3 and related statutes and administrative rules, an argument that the state should also have waived Goals 7, 11 and 14 is beyond LUBA's scope of review and must be asserted in a different forum. The only question LUBA may decide is which goals and regulations the state actually waived. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. ORS 197.352(10), which provides that if a claim is not paid within two years, the owner shall be allowed to use the property as permitted at the time the owner acquired the property, does not apply where the state and local government have issued waivers of state and local regulations. Even if ORS 197.325(10) applies in that circumstance, any rights under that subsection are lost when the property is transferred from the claimant's ownership. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. A local government's decision determining that a subdivision application complies with all applicable land use regulations is not a decision under ORS 197.352(9) that is exempt from LUBA's jurisdiction; rather, the decision is a land use decision subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Welch v. Yamhill County, 55 Or LUBA 697 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Farms are part of the "existing commercial agricultural enterprise" as that phrase is used in Goal 3 if they contribute to the overall agricultural economy in the area in a substantial way. Friends of Linn County v. Linn County, 54 Or LUBA 191 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Under ORS 197.352(9), LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review challenges to waivers of land use laws granted to petitioners by the Department of Land Conservation and Development or by the local government. Friends of Linn County v. Linn County, 54 Or LUBA 191 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. Nothing in the language of ORS 197.352(8) requires a local government to condition approval of a partition application that is submitted following a Ballot Measure 37 waiver on the continued ownership of the subject property by the Ballot Measure 37 claimant. Friends of Linn County v. Linn County, 54 Or LUBA 191 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. OAR 660-041-0030, which requires notice to the Department of Land Conservation and Development (DLCD) of an application for or decision on a permit pursuant to a Ballot Measure 37 waiver, is not inconsistent with ORS 197.763(2)(c), which requires a local government if requested by the applicant to notify DLCD of a hearing on a land use application. DLCD v. Deschutes County, 54 Or LUBA 799 (2007).

47.1 Ballot Measure 37 – Generally. LUBA will reverse a county decision that approves a rural subdivision in a forest zone following a county Ballot Measure 37 waiver, where the owner has not obtained a waiver of applicable state regulations. The county has no authority to approve development inconsistent with state regulations, unless and until the state waives those regulations. DLCD v. Jackson County, 53 Or LUBA 580 (2007).

47.2 Ballot Measure 37 – Local Waivers. A Ballot Measure 37 waiver is not a "license" and the remedies that are available to certain license holders are not available to Ballot Measure 37 claimants. Ballot Measure 37 claimants are limited to the remedies set out in Ballot Measure 49. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

47.2 Ballot Measure 37 – Local Waivers. Where a board of county commissioners previously waived a subdivision approval standard under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), that approval standard does not apply to a subsequent proposal to subdivide the property. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

47.2 Ballot Measure 37 – Local Waivers. Where a subdivision approval criterion was waived under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352), in a subsequent application for subdivision approval an opponent may not argue for the first time that the waived approval criterion is a public health and safety regulation that cannot be waived under Ballot Measure 37. Pete's Mtn. Home Owners Assoc. v. Clackamas County, 55 Or LUBA 287 (2007).

47.3 Ballot Measure 37 – State Waivers. A Ballot Measure 37 waiver is not a "license" and the remedies that are available to certain license holders are not available to Ballot Measure 37 claimants. Ballot Measure 37 claimants are limited to the remedies set out in Ballot Measure 49. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

47.3 Ballot Measure 37 – State Waivers. Where the Ballot Measure 37 claimant dies prior to receiving development approval and the property is transferred by operation of law to his heirs, the county errs in approving development on land no longer owned by the Ballot Measure 37 claimant, pursuant to waivers that grant only the claimant the right to develop the property free of the goals, statutes and rules specified in the waiver. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.3 Ballot Measure 37 – State Waivers. A statement in s state waiver under Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) that the state authorizes the claimant to use the property for the proposed use, subject to standards in effect on the date of acquisition, is not properly understood to operate as a blanket waiver of all state regulations adopted after the acquisition date, where other sections of the state waiver limit the waiver to the requirements of Goal 3 and related statutes and administrative rules. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.3 Ballot Measure 37 – State Waivers. Where the state specifically waives only Goal 3 and related statutes and administrative rules, an argument that the state should also have waived Goals 7, 11 and 14 is beyond LUBA's scope of review and must be asserted in a different forum. The only question LUBA may decide is which goals and regulations the state actually waived. DLCD v. Jefferson County, 55 Or LUBA 625 (2008).

47.3 Ballot Measure 37 (ORS 197.352) — State Waivers. LUBA will reverse a county decision that approves a rural subdivision in a forest zone following a county Ballot Measure 37 waiver, where the owner has not obtained a waiver of applicable state regulations. The county has no authority to approve development inconsistent with state regulations, unless and until the state waives those regulations. DLCD v. Jackson County, 53 Or LUBA 580 (2007).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A decision that approves the adjustment of a property line between two existing parcels that were previously created by partition authorized by a Ballot Measure 49 DLCD Final Order is not a decision "under" Section 11 of Measure 49, because the county did not review the property line adjustment application under the authority of Section 11. Rather, it reviewed the application under the county zoning ordinance criteria applicable to property line adjustments. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 268 (2016).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Section 11(3)(a)(A) of Ballot Measure 49 prohibits the approval of a property line adjustment to adjust the size of a parcel that was created pursuant to a DLCD Final Order if the size of the adjusted parcel exceeds the maximum lot size set out in that section. Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 268 (2016).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. ORS 92.192 (2008) authorizes local governments to approve property line adjustments for undersized parcels in the exclusive farm use zone, while Measure 49, Section 11(3)(a)(A) imposes a maximum parcel size of two acres for certain parcels authorized by Measure 49. ORS 92.192 cannot be used to authorize through a property line adjustment an undersized parcel that exceeds the maximum lot size specified in Section 11(3)(a)(A). Friends of Yamhill County v. Yamhill County, 74 Or LUBA 268 (2016).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. County decisions approving an application to partition a property pursuant to final order issued under Ballot Measure 49 into three parcels and an application for a variance to the county's minimum design standards for private roads for access to the new parcels are decisions "under" Section 11 of Measure 49, where the county's denial of the requested variance to the road access standards would require the county to deny the requested partition to create the parcels authorized by the DLCD Final Order. In that circumstance, LUBA does not have jurisdiction to review either of the decisions. Woodward v. Jackson County, 73 Or LUBA 164 (2016).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A county's partition approval decision based on a DLCD Final Order under Ballot Measure 49 is a decision made "under" Section 11 of Measure 49, and pursuant to ORS 195.318(1) the decision is not a "land use decision" subject to LUBA's jurisdiction. Lenahan v. Wallowa County, 72 Or LUBA 69 (2015).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A county's conclusory finding that a subdivision applicant does not have a vested right to complete a subdivision under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49 provides no basis for reversal or remand, where the county had adopted a decision that reached the same conclusion over one month earlier and that separate decision had not been judicially challenged and was therefore final. Hoffman v. Jefferson County, 60 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A decision that grants subdivision approval based on Measure 37 waivers after Measure 49 has taken effect must be reversed under Corey v. DLCD, 344 Or 457, 184 P3d 1109 (2008), and Pete's Mountain Homeowners Assn. v. Clackamas County, 227 Or App 140, 204 P3d 802, rev den, 346 Or 589 (2009). Walker v. Josephine County, 60 Or LUBA 333 (2010).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Prior to the passage of Ballot Measure 49 (2007), Ballot Measure 37 (2004) allowed the holder of a waiver to seek approval to develop property in ways that would otherwise be prohibited by law, in lieu of receiving compensation for loss in property value. DLCD v. Jackson County, 59 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Under Measure 49, a positive vested rights determination pursuant to subsection 5(3) of Measure 49 now provides the sole basis under Oregon law for a local government to approve a use of a property without having to apply standards and criteria governing the property. DLCD v. Jackson County, 59 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Where the holder of a Measure 37 waiver has not obtained a positive vested rights determination under Measure 49 on the date a local government approves a land use application under which the use would otherwise not be permitted, the local government is obligated to apply the state and local laws that were waived by the Measure 37 waiver in considering the application. DLCD v. Jackson County, 59 Or LUBA 101 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Petitioners do not waive their right to argue that a second subdivision approval decision that relies on Ballot Measure 37 waivers and post-dated Ballot Measure 49 was precluded by Ballot Measure 49 by failing to make that argument in their appeal of an earlier subdivision decision that predated Ballot Measure 49. The subject of that earlier appeal was the county's pre-Ballot Measure 49 subdivision approval decision, not the county's post-Ballot Measure 49 subdivision approval decision. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. An issue may be waived so that it cannot be raised in a second appeal regarding the same land use application where the issue is "plainly cognizable." The possibility that a county might adopt a second decision approving a subdivision based on Ballot Measure 37 waivers after Ballot Measure 49 takes effect was not plainly cognizable in a LUBA appeal of an earlier subdivision that pre-dated Ballot Measure 49. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. As a general rule a county may limit its proceedings following a remand to the issues that provided the basis for the LUBA remand. However, a county may not refuse to consider the effect of Ballot Measure 49 on a subdivision applicant's Ballot Measure 37 waivers, where that issue is squarely presented in the second appeal and was not decided and did not need to be decided in the first appeal. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. If an applicant for subdivision approval has a vested right under Section 5(3) of Ballot Measure 49, it is because the applicant satisfies the vested rights criteria set out in Clackamas County v. Holmes, 265 Or 193, 198-99, 508 P2d 190 (1973), not because the proposed subdivision complies with land use laws that were not waived by intervenors Ballot Measure 37 waivers. After Ballot Measure 49 took effect, Ballot Measure 37 waivers are no longer effective. Therefore, until the subdivision applicant receives a vested rights determination, a county decision to grant preliminary subdivision approval must stand on its own, and without a legally effective Ballot Measure 37 waiver such a preliminary subdivision approval decision cannot stand on its own. Welch v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 29 (2008).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. When Measure 49 took effect, its effectiveness created a great deal of legal uncertainty regarding the continuing legal relevance of Measure 37 waivers, actions that may have been taken under those waivers and decisions that may have been issued pursuant to those waivers. Biggerstaff v. Yamhill County, 58 Or LUBA 476 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A county decision that Measure 49 claimants have a vested right to continue with their effort to subdivide and develop their property is the county's final decision regarding the "nature and extent of [just] compensation" that the claimants will receive under Measure 49. The "nature" of the just compensation is a vested right to continue under the claimant's Measure 37 waiver, rather than under the more limited options available under Oregon Laws 2007, chapter 424, subsection 5(1). The "extent" of that just compensation is specified number of lots and dwellings. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A preliminary subdivision plat approval decision that post-dates a vested rights determination under Measure 49 is a land use decision subject to LUBA's review and is not a decision concerning the "nature and extent of [just] compensation" under Measure 49. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. A common law vested right under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49 will shield a claimant from land use laws that were waived under Measure 37; but that common law vested right will not shield a claimant from land use laws that were not waived under Measure 37 and therefore remain applicable to the claimant's development. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Subsection 5(3) of Measure 49 includes two requirements. First, claimants must comply with their Measure 37 waiver. Second, claimants must establish that they have a common law vested right to the use described in the Measure 37 waiver. Under the first requirement, Measure 37 claimants remain subject to and must comply with any land use laws that were not waived by the Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007, had already received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, then they may proceed to complete the development that was begun under Measure 37. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

48.1 Ballot Measure 49 – Generally. Measure 37 claimants who on December 6, 2007, had not yet received all required permits and approvals under land use laws that remained applicable after his or her Measure 37 waiver decision was issued must seek a vested rights determination under subsection 5(3) of Measure 49. If they are successful in that regard, they must still obtain any permits or other approvals that are required under land use laws that were not waived by their Measure 37 waiver. DLCD v. Clatsop County, 58 Or LUBA 714 (2009).

49. Marijuana Laws. Counties are not prohibited as a matter of law from applying separation buffers to marijuana production facilities in EFU zones. Waveseer of Oregon, LLC v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 583 (2020).

49. Marijuana Laws. A board of county commissioners' broad interpretation of "youth activity center" that could encompass any swimming pool or basketball court where children play is unreasonable under ORS 475B.486. Nehmzow v. Deschutes County, 81 Or LUBA 571 (2020).

49. Marijuana Laws. While a local government's authority to regulate land use and development is generally broad under Oregon law, a local government's authority to regulate land use on exclusive farm use (EFU)-zoned land is governed by state law. Land that is planned and zoned for exclusive farm use must be used exclusively for defined farm uses or limited listed exceptions provided by state law. Production of marijuana is an outright permitted farm use on land zoned EFU. While state law controls permitted uses on farm land and the regulation of marijuana production, local governments may adopt reasonable "time, place, and manner" regulations for marijuana production. MJAI Oregon 5, LLC v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 366 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. A county's decision is "outside the range of discretion allowed the local government under its comprehensive plan and implementing ordinances," pursuant to ORS 197.835(10)(a)(A), where petitioner's application for marijuana production meets a county's clear and objective standards for marijuana production on EFU-zoned land, no evidence was submitted that contradicted petitioner's assertion that it could and would meet the county's marijuana production standards, and the county relied upon factors and considerations in denying petitioner's application that are not contained in the applicable approval criteria. Accordingly, the proper disposition of the county's denial is reversal with an order instructing the county to grant approval of the application. MJAI Oregon 5, LLC v. Linn County, 78 Or LUBA 366 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Where a city adopts an ordinance prohibiting marijuana businesses in the city pursuant to ORS 475B.968(1), the ordinance is not a de facto amendment of the city's land use code provisions governing "agriculture," and therefore is not a "land use" decision. Caudle v. City of Dunes City, 77 Or LUBA 230 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Where a city adopts an ordinance prohibiting marijuana businesses in the city pursuant to ORS 475B.968(1), the city is not required to apply its comprehensive plan provisions or adopt findings addressing those policies. ORS 475B.968 allows the city to enact a prohibition on marijuana businesses and refer that prohibition to the city's electors for approval, and nothing within that broad grant of authority suggests the legislature intended to subject that grant of authority to review for compliance with local governments' comprehensive plans. Caudle v. City of Dunes City, 77 Or LUBA 230 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. When a city adopts an ordinance prohibiting marijuana businesses in the city pursuant to ORS 475B.968(1), the city's decision is not a significant impacts land use decision because any provisions of ORS 475B.968 that arguably could contain what would qualify as standards have no bearing on or relationship to the use of land or to the city's planning and zoning responsibilities. Caudle v. City of Dunes City, 77 Or LUBA 230 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Ballot Measure 56 (codified at ORS 215.503) requires a county to provide advance, individual, written notice by mail of the first hearing on an ordinance to property owners whose property could be "rezoned" by the proposed ordinance. Where an ordinance amending a county's land use and development code "limits" the size of, or in some cases "prohibits" entirely, a use – the growing of cannabis – that was previously allowed in the applicable zone, Measure 56 notice is required. Cossins v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 240 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Ballot Measure 56 (codified at ORS 215.503) contains mandatory language and is specific regarding what is required to be included in the notice of a land use change. Where a county's notice does not: identify the date of the first hearing or even reference a hearing regarding the ordinance, reference any proposed ordinance or identify an ordinance by number, and was not sent at least 20 days but not more than 40 days before the date of the first hearing on the ordinance, the notice is defective. Cossins v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 240 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Where a county failed to provide petitioners adequate Ballot Measure 56 (codified at ORS 215.503) notice of a proposed ordinance that proposed to limit the size of, or in some cases prohibit entirely, a use – the growing of cannabis – that was previously allowed in the applicable zone, causing some petitioners to only be able to participate at the final hearing before the board of county commissioners on the proposed ordinance by submitting written comments prior to the record closing, such last-minute participation at the last of many hearings is not "an adequate opportunity to prepare and submit their case and a full and fair hearing" and therefore "prejudiced the substantial rights" of the petitioners. ORS 197.835(9)(a)(B). Cossins v. Josephine County, 77 Or LUBA 240 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. A hearings officer's decision that an applicant has a nonconforming use right to grow up to 18 marijuana plants for medical purposes under the Oregon Medical Marijuana Act is supported by substantial evidence in the record, and LUBA will reject an assignment of error that argues that the hearings officer's decision is not supported by substantial evidence in the whole record, where (1) the record includes copies of at least twelve cards issued by the Oregon Health Authority (OHA), administrator of the medical marijuana program, some of which are expired, duplicates, or outside of the relevant consideration dates; (2) the hearings officer relied on some of those OHA cards to reach his conclusion about the number of plants allowed; (3) the hearings officer adopted eight pages of findings explaining his decision and his understanding of the evidence; and (4) petitioner fails to challenge those findings or explain why the evidence supports his application. Feetham v. Jackson County, 77 Or LUBA 296 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. Where county code requires a building in which marijuana is grown to be "equipped with an effective odor control system" which must "prevent unreasonable interference of neighbors' use and enjoyment of their property," and the odor control system is deemed permitted only after the applicant submits "a report by a [licensed] mechanical engineer * * * demonstrating that the system will control odor so as not to unreasonably interfere with neighbors' use and enjoyment of their property," a board of county commissioners' conclusion that the application satisfies these requirements is supported by substantial evidence where it relies upon an engineers' report which demonstrates that the applicant's proposed odor control system "will control" odor as designed. The odor control system need not be actually built prior to the project receiving approval. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. LUBA will deny a petitioner's challenges to a county board of commissioners' conclusion that a project application satisfies the county code requirement that "[s]ustained noise" generated from a building in which marijuana is grown "shall not exceed 30 dB(A)," based upon statements made in the applicant's engineers' report where petitioner argues the engineer reports failed to adequately describe the system as built, did not consider site-specific characteristics or address allegations that the odor control systems will generate noise in excess of 30 dB(A), but petitioner failed to point to any evidence in the record that calls into question the engineer's statements that the operation will not produce "sustained" noise that exceeds permissible levels. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. LUBA will deny a petitioner's challenge to a county board of commissioners' conclusion that a marijuana production project applicant had satisfied the requirement to provide proof that water is available to the property by providing a "statement that water is supplied from a public or private water provider," by providing a letter from a private company stating it would supply water to the property where petitioner argues the letter is insufficient because the private water provider does not hold a water right. Based on its plain language, the county code does not require such a statement, but only requires a statement from a "private water provider" that they will provide water for the operation. King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. LUBA will deny petitioner's challenge that the provider of water must have "an authorized source of water under Oregon Water Law" where county code requires an applicant for marijuana production to provide proof that water is available to the property by providing a statement that "water is supplied from a public or private water provider," the county code does not further define "provider of water," and the county imposed a condition of approval requiring "the use of water from any source for marijuana production shall comply with all applicable state statutes and regulations including ORS 537.545 and OAR 690-340-0010." King v. Deschutes County, 77 Or LUBA 339 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. For purposes of determining whether land is agricultural land under OAR 660-033-0020(1)(a)(B), a county's findings are not deficient when they do not address whether marijuana production is a viable farm use or crop on the subject property. The analysis under OAR 660-033-0020, which gives effect to Statewide Planning Goal 3, focuses on the land and its suitability for farm use, not on whether a particular crop can be grown on the site regardless of the qualities of the land. Such an analysis would be entirely removed from an analysis of the agricultural qualities of the land, which is contrary to the plain text of the rule, and therefore a county's failure to adopt findings addressing that issue does not provide a basis for reversal or remand. Landwatch Lane County v. Lane County, 77 Or LUBA 368 (2018).

49. Marijuana Laws. An amendment to the county's zoning ordinance that prohibits marijuana production in a rural residential zone is not "inconsistent with" a provision of the county's comprehensive plan that describes the predominant farm uses in the county and describes small scale agriculture on parcelized lands as one of those farm uses. That general language does not require the county to allow marijuana production on rural residential-zoned land. Diesel v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 286 (2016).

49. Marijuana Laws. LUBA will deny an assignment of error that challenges findings that cite a newly enacted statute as additional support for its decision to prohibit marijuana production in a rural residential zone, where petitioner does not explain why any faulty interpretation of that newly enacted statute compels the conclusion that the county is required by the statute or its comprehensive plan to allow marijuana production in a rural residential zone. Diesel v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 286 (2016).

49. Marijuana Laws. ORS 475B.340(2) and ORS 475.500(2) allow local governments to adopt "reasonable regulations" on marijuana production, processing, and sales. Absent any argument that establishes a protected First Amendment interest in marijuana production, cases that address the reasonableness of restrictions on protected First Amendment activity have no relevance to interpreting the phrase "reasonable regulation" used in ORS 475B.340(2) and ORS 475.500(2). Diesel v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 286 (2016).

49. Marijuana Laws. ORS 475B.340(2) and ORS 475.500(2) allow local governments to adopt "reasonable regulations" on marijuana production, processing, and sales. A county zoning ordinance that prohibits marijuana production in a rural residential zone while allowing marijuana production in an exclusive farm use zone and on lands zoned farm and forest, which together include more than one million acres in the county, is a "reasonable regulation" within the meaning of the statutes. Diesel v. Jackson County, 74 Or LUBA 286 (2016).
